ACTORS and ACTRESSES
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>EDITORS’ NOTE</td>
<td>vii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BOARD OF ADVISERS</td>
<td>ix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTRIBUTORS</td>
<td>xi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIST OF ENTRANTS</td>
<td>xiii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ACTORS AND ACTRESSES</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PICTURE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS</td>
<td>1331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS</td>
<td>1335</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NATIONALITY INDEX</td>
<td>1345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FILM TITLE INDEX</td>
<td>1351</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
This is a revised edition of the 3rd volume of the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers, which also includes Volume 1, Films, Volume 2, Directors, and Volume 4, Writers and Production Artists. The book contains 615 entries, consisting of a brief biography, a complete filmography, a selected bibliography of works by and about the entrant, and a critical essay written by a specialist in the field. There are 68 entrants new to this edition. Most of the entries from the previous edition have been retained here; all entries have updated filmographies and bibliographies; and many entries have updated critical essays. A few of the entrants are also listed in either the Directors or Writers and Production Artists volumes, but their entries in this volume are written from the standpoint of their work as actors. Since film is primarily a visual medium, the majority of entries are illustrated, either by a portrait or by a representative still from the entrant’s body of work.

The selection of entrants is once again based on the recommendations of the advisory board. It was not thought necessary to propose strict criteria for selection: the book is intended to represent the wide range of interests within North American, British, and West European film scholarship and criticism. The eclecticism in both the list of entrants and the critical stances of the different writers emphasizes the multifarious notions of the cinema, and indeed of the various entrants’ role within it.

Thanks are due to the following: Nicolet V. Elert and Michael J. Tyrkus at St. James Press, for their efforts in preparing this collection for publication; Michael Najjar, for his tireless efforts in researching the entries; our advisers, for their wisdom and broad knowledge of international cinema; and our contributors, for their gracious participation. We have necessarily built upon the work of the editors who have preceded us, and we thank them for the strong foundation they created.

A Note on the Entries

Non-English language film titles are given in the original language or a transliteration of it, unless they are better known internationally by their English title. Alternate release titles in the original language(s) are found within parentheses, followed by release titles in English (American then British if there is a difference) and translations. The date of a film is understood to refer to its year of release unless stated otherwise.

In the list of films in each entry, information within parentheses following each film modifies, if necessary, then adds to the subject’s principal function(s). The most common abbreviations used are:

```
an     animator assoc  associate asst   assistant chor   choreographer
d      director
ed     editor
exec   executive mus    music
ph     cinematographer or director of photography pr     producer prod des    production designer ro     role
sc     scenerist or scriptwriter
```

The abbreviation “co-” preceding a function indicates collaboration with one or more persons. Other abbreviations that may be used to clarify the nature of an individual film are “doc”—documentary; “anim”—animation; and “ep”—episode. A name in parentheses following a film title is that of the director. A film title in boldface type indicates that complete coverage of that film may be found in the International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers, Volume 1: Films.
BOARD OF ADVISERS

Jeanine Basinger
Rhona Berenstein
Ronald Bergan
Rui Santana Brito
Robert Burgoyne
Michel Ciment
Lewis Cole
Gary Crowdus
Susan Felleman
Douglas Gomery
Robyn Karney
Philip Kemp
Susan K. Larsen
Gina Marchetti
Audrey T. McCluskey
Ib Monty
Dan Nissen
Susan Oka
Dana Polan
P. Adams Sitney
Anthony Slide
Frank P. Tomasulo
Carole Zucker
CONTRIBUTORS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Authors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Joanne Abrams</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Affron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anthony Ambrogio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph Arkins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cynthia Baron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jeanine Basinger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Baxter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Birgit Beumers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ronald Bowers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pat H. Broeske</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stephen Brophy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ross Care</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constance Clark</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William M. Clements</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elizabeth Coffman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allen Cohen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samantha Cook</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>R. F. Cousins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corey K. Creekmur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alan Dale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gertraud Steiner Daviau</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pamala S. Deane</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jerome Delamater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Derry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria DiBattista</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jay Dickson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Susan M. Doll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raymond Durgnat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rob Edelman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mark W. Estrin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quentin Falk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greg S. Faller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mario Falsetto</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rodney Farnsworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Howard Feinstein</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cynthia Felando</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. S. Fonseca</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexa L. Foreman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anita Gabrosek</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John A. Gallagher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Behroze Gandhy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frances Gateward</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alan Gevinson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tina Gianoulis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>H. M. Glancy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ilene S. Goldman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Douglas Gomery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Justin Gustainsis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patricia King Hanson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stephen L. Hanson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matthew Hays</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Catherine Henry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kyoko Hirano</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guo-Juin Hong</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Horton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel Humphrey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Hutchings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Curtis Hutchinson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dina Iordanova</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stuart M. Kaminsky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robyn Karney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Virginia Keller</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip Kemp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Susan Knobloch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Audrey E. Kupferberg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judah Löwe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip Leibfried</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Donald Liebenson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roy Liebman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Lippe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Janet E. Lorenz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>G. C. Macnab</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frances M. Malpezzi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elaine Mancini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roger Manvell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gina Marchetti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Donald W. McCaffrey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John McCarty</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joe McElhaney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andy Medhurst</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vaclav Merhaut</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph Milicia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andrew Milner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ib Monty</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Mraz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ray Narducy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kim Newman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Martin F. Norden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel O’Brien</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Margaret O’Connor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liam O’Leary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Linda J. Obalil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dayna Oscherwitz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maryann Oshana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kelly Otter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>R. Barton Palmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert J. Pardi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sylvia Paskin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Julian Petley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victoria Price</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria Racheva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nancy Jane Richards</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chris Routledge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David E. Salamie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Sater</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>H. Wayne Schuth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Don M. Short</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ulrike Sieglohr</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles L. P. Silet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anthony Slide</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Claudia Springer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jeff Stafford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Linda J. Stewart</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cindy Lee Stokes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christina Stoyanova</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bob Sullivan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karel Tabery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicholas Thomas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frank Thompson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Doug Tomlinson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lee Tsiantis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andrew Tudor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frank Uhle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blažena Ugrošiková</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fiona Valentine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ravi Vasudevan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Usha Venkatachallam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mark Walker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Walsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James M. Welsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James D. Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Wilson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bill Wine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rob Winning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robin Wood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joanne L. Yeck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carole Zucker</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
LIST OF ENTRANTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bud Abbott and Lou Costello</th>
<th>Humphrey Bogart</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Victoria Abril</td>
<td>Ward Bond</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isabel Adjani</td>
<td>Sergei Bondarchuk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Danny Aiello</td>
<td>Helena Bonham-Carter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anouk Aimée</td>
<td>Sandrine Bonnaire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woody Allen</td>
<td>Ernest Borgnine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June Allyson</td>
<td>Kenneth Branagh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bibi Andersson</td>
<td>Klaus Maria Brandauer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harriet Andersson</td>
<td>Marlon Brando</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dana Andrews</td>
<td>Pierre Brasseur</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Julie Andrews</td>
<td>Walter Brennan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ann-Margret</td>
<td>Jeff Bridges</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roscoe (&quot;Fatty&quot;) Arbuckle</td>
<td>Matthew Broderick</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fanny Ardant</td>
<td>Vlastimil Brodský</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alan Arkin</td>
<td>Charles Bronson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arletty</td>
<td>Mel Brooks</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pedro Armendáriz</td>
<td>Pierce Brosnan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jean Arthur</td>
<td>Yul Brynner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fred Astaire</td>
<td>Jack Buchanan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mary Astor</td>
<td>Horst Buchholz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Attenborough</td>
<td>Geneviève Bujold</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stéphane Audran</td>
<td>Billie Burke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel Auteuil</td>
<td>Ellen Burstyn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lew Ayres</td>
<td>Richard Burton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shabana Azmi</td>
<td>Steve Buscemi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>James Caan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Nicolas Cage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>James Cagney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Michael Caine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Louis Calhern</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cantinflas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Eddie Cantor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Claudia Cardinale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Harry Carey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Carlyle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leslie Caron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Carradine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jim Carrey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Madeleine Carroll</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gino Cervi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jackie Chan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Charles Chaplin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Geraldine Chaplin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cyd Charisse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Soumitra Chatterjee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Nikolai Cherkassov</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Maurice Chevalier</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Julie Christie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Inna Churikova</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Cleese</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Montgomery Clift</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>George Clooney</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Glenn Close</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lee J. Cobb</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>James Coburn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Claudette Colbert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ronald Colman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sean Connery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Eddie Constantine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gary Cooper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jackie Cooper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Kevin Costner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Joseph Cotten</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Broderick Crawford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Joan Crawford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Donald Crisp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bing Crosby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Russell Crowe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tom Cruise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Billy Crystal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Alain Cuny</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jamie Lee Curtis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tony Curtis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cyril Cusack</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Cusack</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Peter Cushing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Willem Dafoe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lil Dagover</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Eva Dahlbeck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Marcel Dalio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Matt Damon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dorothy Dandridge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Daniëlle Darieux</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Marion Davies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bette Davis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Geena Davis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Judy Davis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Doris Day</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Daniel Day-Lewis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>James Dean</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Olivia de Havilland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Alain Delon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dolores Del Rio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Judi Dench</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cathérine Deneuve</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert De Niro</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Gérard Depardieu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Johnny Depp</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bruce Dern</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Danny DeVito</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cameron Diaz</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leonardo DiCaprio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Angie Dickinson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Marlene Dietrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Matt Dillon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Donat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Kirk Douglas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Melvyn Douglas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Michael Douglas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Downey, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Richard Dreyfuss</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Faye Dunaway</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Irene Dunne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jimmy Durante</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Deanna Durbin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dan Duryea</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Duvall</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Clint Eastwood
Denholm Elliott
Aldo Fabrizi
Douglas Fairbanks
Peter Falk
Frances Farmer
Mia Farrow
María Félix
José Ferrer
Edwige Feuillère
Sally Field
W. C. Fields
Joseph Fiennes
Ralph Fiennes
Peter Finch
Albert Finney
Laurence Fishburne
Barry Fitzgerald
Errol Flynn
Henry Fonda
Jane Fonda
Peter Fonda
Joan Fontaine
Glenn Ford
Harrison Ford
Jodie Foster
Morgan Freeman
Pierre Fresnay
Jean Gabin
Clark Gable
Bruno Ganz
Greta Garbo
Ava Gardner
John Garfield
Judy Garland
Greer Garson
Vittorio Gassman
Janet Gaynor
Richard Gere
Mel Gibson
John Gielgud
Annie Girardot
Lillian Gish
Danny Glover
Paulette Goddard
Whoopi Goldberg
Jeff Goldblum
Gong Li
Betty Grable
Gloria Grahame
Farley Granger
Stewart Granger
Cary Grant
Hugh Grant
Sydney Greenstreet
Joan Greenwood
Melanie Griffith
Alec Guinness
Gene Hackman
Tom Hanks
Setsuko Hara
Jean Harlow
Ed Harris
Richard Harris
Rex Harrison
Laurence Harvey
Kazuo Hasegawa
Ethan Hawke
Jack Hawkins
Goldie Hawn
Sterling Hayden
Susan Hayward
Rita Hayworth
Brigitte Helm
Paul Henreid
Audrey Hepburn
Katharine Hepburn
Barbara Hershey
Dustin Hoffman
William Holden
Judy Holliday
Oscar Homolka
Anthony Hopkins
Miriam Hopkins
Dennis Hopper
Bob Hoskins
Leslie Howard
Trevor Howard
Rock Hudson
Holly Hunter
Isabelle Huppert
John Hurt
William Hurt
Anjelica Huston
John Huston
Walter Huston
Pedro Infante
Jeremy Irons
Glenda Jackson
Samuel L. Jackson
Emil Jannings
Celia Johnson
James Earl Jones
Jennifer Jones
Tommy Lee Jones
Erland Josephson
Louis Jourdan
Louis Jouvet
Curd Jürgens
Kyoko Kagawa
Anna Karina
Boris Karloff
Danny Kaye
Buster Keaton
Diane Keaton
Michael Keaton
Harvey Keitel
Gene Kelly
Grace Kelly
Kay Kendall
Arthur Kennedy
Deborah Kerr
Nicole Kidman
Ben Kingsley
Klaus Kinski
Nastassja Kinski
Kevin Kline
Fritz Kortner
Werner Krauss
Kris Kristofferson
Dilip Kumar
Machiko Kyo
Alan Ladd
Marina Ladymina
Veronica Lake
Burt Lancaster
Elsa Lanchester
Martin Landau
Harry Langdon
Jessica Lange
Angela Lansbury
Charles Laughton
Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy
Jean-Pierre Léaud
Bruce Lee
Christopher Lee
Janet Leigh
Jennifer Jason Leigh
Vivien Leigh
Jack Lemmon
Jerry Lewis
Juliette Lewis
Harold Lloyd
Margaret Lockwood
Gina Lolobrigida
Herbert Lom
Carole Lombard
Sophia Loren
Peter Lorre
Myrna Loy
Bela Lugosi
Paul Lukas
Ida Lupino
Shirley MacLaine
Fred MacMurray
Harald Madsen and Carl
Schenstrøm
Anna Magnani
Sergei Makovetski
Karl Malden
John Malkovich
Dorothy Malone
Silvana Mangano
Jean Marais
Fredric March
Dean Martin
Steve Martin
Lee Marvin
Mark Brothers
Giulietta Masina
James Mason
Raymond Massey
Marcello Mastroianni
Walter Matthau
Carmen Maura
Joel McCrea
Frances McDormand
Roddy McDowall
Malcolm McDowell
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Actors</th>
<th>Actresses</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ewan McGregor</td>
<td>Winona Ryder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dorothy McGuire</td>
<td>Chishu Ryu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ian McKellen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Victor McErlagen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Steve McQueen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oleg Men'shikov</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Melina Mercouri</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burgess Meredith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bette Midler</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Toshirou Mifune</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ray Milland</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ann Miller</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Mills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sal Mineo</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liza Minnelli</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miou-Miou</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carmen Miranda</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Helen Mirren</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Mitchum</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marilyn Monroe</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yves Montand</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Montgomery</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Demi Moore</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agnes Moorehead</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nonna Mordyukova</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jeanne Moreau</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michele Morgan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Masayuki Mori</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ivan Mozhiukin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Armin Mueller-Stahl</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul Muni</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eddie Murphy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bill Murray</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alla Nazimova</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patricia Neal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liam Neeson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pola Negri</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sam Neill</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul Newman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jack Nicholson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asta Nielsen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leslie Nielsen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yuri Nikulin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David Niven</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippe Noiret</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nick Nolte</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward Norton</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kim Novak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramon Novarro</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ivor Novello</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan Nowicki</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Warren Oates</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Merle Oberon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Margaret O'Brien</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Donald O'Connor</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maureen O'Hara</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daniel Olbrychski</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gary Oldman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lena Olin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laurence Olivier</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward James Olmos</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lyubov Orlova</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maureen O'Sullivan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter O'Toole</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIST OF ENTRANTS</td>
<td>ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------</td>
<td>-----------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Claire Trevor</td>
<td>Anton Walbrook</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jean-Louis Trintignant</td>
<td>Christopher Walken</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yoko Tsukasa</td>
<td>Robert Walker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kathleen Turner</td>
<td>Eli Wallach</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lana Turner</td>
<td>Denzel Washington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Turturro</td>
<td>Emily Watson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Liv Ullmann</td>
<td>John Wayne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Ustinov</td>
<td>Sigourney Weaver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Clifton Webb</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Paul Wegener</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rudolph Valentino</td>
<td>Tuesday Weld</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alida Valli</td>
<td>Orson Welles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lee Van Cleef</td>
<td>Oskar Werner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Vanel</td>
<td>Mae West</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conrad Veidt</td>
<td>Forest Whitaker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monica Vitti</td>
<td>Pearl White</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rüdiger Vogler</td>
<td>Richard Widmark</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jon Voight</td>
<td>Cornel Wilde</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gian Maria Volonté</td>
<td>Gene Wilder</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Max Von Sydow</td>
<td>Robin Williams</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bruce Willis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Kate Winslet</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Shelley Winters</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anna May Wong</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Natalie Wood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>James Woods</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Joanne Woodward</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fay Wray</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Jane Wyman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Isuzu Yamada</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>So Yamamura</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Oleg Yankovsky</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Michael York</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Susannah York</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Loretta Young</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Young</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mai Zetterling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Zhao Dan</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
ABBOTT, Bud, and Lou COSTELLO

ABBOTT. Nationality: American. Born: William Abbott in Asbury Park, New Jersey, 2 October 1895. Education: Dropped out of school in 1909. Family: Married Betty Smith, 1918, two adopted children. Career: During childhood worked in carnivals, then assistant treasurer of Casino Theater in Brooklyn, treasurer or manager of various theaters throughout the United States; while manager at the National Theater in Detroit, worked vaudeville as straight man to performers such as Harry Steppe and Harry Evanson; 1931—while working as a cashier in a Brooklyn theater, asked to substitute for Costello’s sick straight man, became a comic team; 1960s—unsuccessfully attempted to revive act with new partner Candy Candido; 1966—provided voiceover for cartoon version of The Abbott and Costello Show. Died: 26 February 1959.

From 1931—worked as a team in burlesque (including Minsky’s), minstrel shows, vaudeville and movie houses; 1938—team became known nationally from radio appearances on The Kate Smith Hour; 1939—starred in Broadway review The Streets of Paris, and signed by Universal for first film, One Night in the Tropics; 1941–49—starred in radio show The Abbott and Costello Program for ABC (1941–46) and NBC (1946–49); 1952–53—TV series The Abbott and Costello Show; 1957—both went broke, the team split up.

Films as Actors:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>One Night in the Tropics (Sutherland)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Buck Privates (Rookies) (Lubin); In the Navy (Lubin); Hold That Ghost (Lubin); Keep 'Em Flying (Lubin); Meet the Stars No. 4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Who Done It? (Kenton); Ride 'Em Cowboy (Lubin); Rio Rita (Simon); Pardon My Sarong (Kenton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>It Ain’t Hay (Money for Jam) (Kenton); Hit the Ice (Lamont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>In Society (Yarbrough); Lost in a Harem (Riesner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Here Come the Co-eds (Yarbrough); The Naughty Nineties (Yarbrough); Abbott and Costello in Hollywood (Simon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Little Giant (On the Carpet) (Seiter); The Time of Their Lives (Barton); The Ghost Steps Out (Barton) (Abbott only)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Buck Privates Come Home (Rookies Come Home) (Barton); The Wistful Widow of Wagon Gap (The Wistful Widow) (Barton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>The Noose Hangs High (Barton); Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein (Abbott and Costello Meet the Ghosts) (Barton); Mexican Hayride (Barton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Abbott and Costello Meet the Killer, Boris Karloff (Barton); Africa Screams (Barton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Abbott and Costello in the Foreign Legion (Lamont); The Real McCoy (Abbott only)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Abbott and Costello Meet the Invisible Man (Lamont); Comin’ Round the Mountain (Lamont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Jack and the Beanstalk (Yarbrough); Abbott and Costello Meet Captain Kidd (Lamont); Lost in Alaska (Yarbrough)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Abbott and Costello Go to Mars (Lamont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>Abbott and Costello Meet Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Lamont); Screen Snapshots No. 225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Abbott and Costello Meet the Keystone Cops (Lamont); Abbott and Costello Meet the Mummy (Lamont)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Dance with Me, Henry (Barton)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Abbott (top) and Costello
1959  The 30 Foot Bride of Candy Rock (Miller) (Costello only) 1965  The World of Abbott and Costello (compilation produced by Max Rosenberg and Milton Subotsky)

Publications

On ABBOTT and COSTELLO: books—

Anobile, Richard J., Who’s on First? Verbal and Visual Gems from Thomas, Bob, Bud and Lou: The Abbott and Costello Story, Philadelphia, 1977.
Costello, Chris, and Raymond Strait, Lou’s on First: A Biography,
New York, 1981.
Cox, Stephen, and John Lofflin, The Official Abbott and Costello
Furmanek, Bob, and Ron Palumbo, Abbott and Costello in Holly-
Cox, Stephen, and John Lofflin, The Abbott and Costello Story,
Kansas City, Missouri, 1997.
Miller, Jeffrey S. The Horror Spoofs of Abbott and Costello: A Critical Assessment of the Comedy Team’s Monster Films. Jefferson,

On ABBOTT and COSTELLO: articles—

Barton, Charles, “Abbott and Costello: Wacky Camaraderie,” in Close-Ups: The Movie Star Book, edited by Danny Peary, New Article on Costello, in Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania),
May 1982.
Gifford, Denis, “Abbott and Costello,” in Films and Filming (London), June 1984.
Morlan, D.B., “Slapstick Contributions to WWII Propaganda: The Three Stooges and Abbott and Costello.” Studies in Popular Culture (Louisville, Kentucky), vol. 17, no. 1, 1994.

On ABBOTT and COSTELLO: film—

Bud and Lou, television movie directed by Robert C. Thomp-

* * *

From 1941 to 1951 Abbott and Costello reigned as Hollywood’s top comedy team. Bud Abbott was the tall, mustached straight man;
Lou Costello was the short, roly-poly clown. Signed by Universal in 1939, the team was eventually thrown into a war comedy with the Andrews sisters, Buck Privates. Reportedly this film grossed a then-corporate record of $10 million, and helped vault this pair of burlesque-trained comics onto the list of the top stars in Hollywood. In 1942 Abbott and Costello were more successful than such notables as Clark Gable, Gary Cooper, Bob Hope, Betty Grable, and Spencer Tracy.

When they were discovered by Hollywood in 1939, the pair had already been working together for nearly a decade. They tried and perfected their verbal slapstick routines on thousands of burlesque and vaudeville audiences, taking the best of their material and performing it first to the nation as a whole on radio, and then in the movies. Even on Broadway in Street of Paris, they were “Abbott and Costello,” exchanging funny dialogue in long-established routines.
Their films, consequently, represent almost archival recordings of the long-lost art of burlesque comedy.

During World War II, they made an average of two films per year using a formula from which they rarely varied. The duo invariably were placed in a specific but familiar setting (often the military service) and left to wreak havoc, only interrupted for the required subplot involving a romance between two now long-forgotten Universal contract players. Only rarely did they have much help at the box office. Notable exceptions were the aforementioned Andrews sisters and in Keep ’em Flying, Martha Raye playing twin sisters.

But the box-office returns throughout the World War II era always stayed high; during that period the duo needed little help. As soon as the war was over, however, Abbott and Costello began a steady decline in popularity. Universal then tried a new formula featuring the pair confronted by a ghost or other force of evil. Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein set off a new seven-year cycle which included the duo dueling with Boris Karloff, the Invisible Man, Captain Kidd (portrayed by none other than Charles Laughton), Mr. Hyde, and the Mummy. During this run, Abbott and Costello alternatively journeyed to exotic locales to romp: twice to Africa, and once each to rural Kentucky, Alaska, and the planet Mars.

All of these filmic efforts only served to underscore the flagging popularity of the comic pair, and so it was not surprising that Abbott and Costello turned to the new medium of television in 1951. That year, they made their debut on NBC’s Colgate Comedy Hour, simply repeating an old radio routine. They then decided to create their own half-hour series, The Abbott and Costello Show, for the 1952–53 season. Although the series lasted only one year in prime time, the 52 episodes were then rerun constantly during the rest of 1950s. Once the show moved to independent stations it became a staple; one New York City station is said to have run each episode at least 200 times.

The residuals from the television series helped settle the duo’s final public performance—a bout with the Internal Revenue Service over back-taxes. After Costello’s death, Abbott tried to revive the act with a new partner, Candy Candido, a Costello look-alike. The act failed, but Abbott and Costello live on in their glory through the revival of their movies and shows on cable television.

—Douglas Gomery

ABRIL, Victoria

Nationality: Spanish. Born: Victoria Merida Rojas in Madrid, 14
July 1959. Education: Began studying dance at age eight, focused on ballet at Conservatory of Madrid until age 14. Family: Married Gustavo Lauve, 1976 (divorced 1981); two sons by current companion the cinematographer Gerard de Battista. Career: 1974—host of Spanish TV game show at age 15; 1976—English-language debut in Robin and Marian; 1978—in TV mini-series The Bastard; 1980s—top box-office attraction in Spain; 1990–93—international stardom
Victoria Abril (center) with Josiane Balasko and Alain Chabatin in French Twist

Agent: Sandy Bresler, 15760 Ventura Boulevard, #1730, Encino, CA 91436, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1975 Obsession
1976 Cambio de Sexo (Aranda) (as José María/María José); Robin and Marian (Lester); El Puente (The Lost Weekend) (Bardem) (as Lolita)
1977 Doña Perfecta (Ardavin)
1979 Mater Amatisima (Salgot)
1980 The Girl with the Golden Panties (Aranda) (as Mariana)
1981 Comin’ at Ya! (Baldi) (as Abilene)
1982 Asesinato en el Comité Central (Murder in the Central Committee) (Aranda); J’ai Expouse une Ombre (I Married a Dead Man; I Married a Shadow) (Robin Davis) (as Fifo); La Colmena (The Beehive) (M. Camus)
1983 Le Batard (van Effenterre) (as Betty); Las Bicicletas Son Para el Verano (Bicycles Are for the Summer) (Chavarri); La Lune dans le Caniveau (The Moon in the Gutter) (Beineix) (as Bella)
1984 L’Addition (Amar) (as Patty); Le Voyage (Andrieu) (as Veronique); La Noche Mas Hermosa (The Most Beautiful Night) (Gutiérrez Aragón) (as Elena); Río Abajo (On the Line) (Borau) (as Engracia); Padre Nuestro (Our Father) (Regueiro) (as Cardenala)
1985 L’Addition (The Bill) (Amar) (as Patty); After Darkness (Othenin-Girard) (as Pascale); Rouge Gorge (Zucca); La Hora Bruja (De Arminan) (as Saga)
1986 Tiempo de Silencio (Time of Silence) (Aranda) (as Dorita); Max Mon Amour (Max My Love) (Oshima) (as Maria); Ternosecco (Giancarlo Giannini)
1987 El Lute: Camina o Revienta (Lute: Forge on or Die) (Aranda) (as Consuelo); El Juego Mas Divertido (Martínez-Lazaro) (as Ada Lasa/Sara); El Placer de Matar (The Pleasure of Killing) (Rotaeta); Barrios Altos (Garcia Berlanga)
1988 Baton Rouge (Moleon) (as Ana Alonso); Ada dans La Jungle (Zingg) (as Carmen); Sans Peur et Sans Reproche (Without Fear or Blame) (Jugnot) (as Jeanne)

1989 Si Te Dicen Que Cai (If They Tell You That I Fell) (Aranda) (as Menchu/Ramona/Aurora Nin)

1990 ¡Atame! (Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!) (Almodóvar) (as Marina Osorio); Sandino (Littin); A Solas Contigo (Campoy); Amantes (Lovers: A True Story) (Aranda) (as Luisa)

1991 Une Epoque Formidable (Wonderful Times) (Jugnot) (as Juliette); Tacones Lejanos (High Heels; Talons Lejanos) (Almodóvar) (as Rebecca)

1992 Demasiado Corazon (Campoy)

1993 Intruso (Intruder) (Aranda) (as Luisa)

1994 Kika (Almodóvar) (as Andrea Scarface); Jimmy Hollywood (Levinson) (as Lorraine); Casque Bleu (Blue Helmet) (Jugnot) (as Alicia)

1995 Gazon Maudit (French Twist) (Balasko) (as Loli); Nadie Hablara de Nosotras Cuando Hayamos Muerto (Nobody Will Talk about Us When We’re Dead) (Díaz Janes) (as Gloria)

1996 Libertarias (Aranda) (as Floren); Trois Vies et Une Seule Mort (Raúl Ruiz); French Twist (Balasko) (as Loli)

1998 La Femme du cosmonaute (Monnet) (as Anna)

1999 Entre las piernas (Between Your Legs) (Gómez Pereira) (as Miranda)

Publications

By ABRIL: articles—

On ABRIL: books—

Besas, Peter, Behind the Spanish Lens, Denver, 1985.

On ABRIL: articles—

* * *

For those who only know Victoria Abril from her stunning Almodóvar troika, it may come as a shock that the classically trained dancer has been a working cinema actress since the age of 15. Unsurprisingly, given her background, her physicality and wanton body language are essential components of all her roles. She moves like a panther prowling to a flamenco beat. Burning up the international cinema with a sensuality that is not the by-product of cosmetic enhancement or Hollywood glamour, Abril possesses an animal magnetism that will deepen with the years like the appeal of Moreau, Magnani, or Ava Gardner. Abril attacks her parts with the same natural abandon with which she often sheds her clothes on screen; it is as if she wants no barrier between the reality of her characterization and the audience. You do not just watch an Abril performance, you experience it through your pores.

When you consider her wide range of roles, you realize that her sexuality is a gift of personality, a force of nature that she savvily uses to communicate as an actress. From her first English-language film appearance as the woody diversion for the King of England in Robin and Marian, she has made love to the camera as well as to her on-screen partners. From the mid-seventies, Spanish directors clamored for her services until she became that nation’s top box-office attraction long before Almodóvar tied her up or down. In Cambio de Sexo, she portrayed a transsexual with a virtuosity well beyond the capabilities associated with a 16-year-old actress. In Mater Amatisima, she heartbreakingly enacted the mother of an eight-year-old autistic child despite being only 20 at the time. Despite her ebullient persona, her eyes suggest a familiarity with pain that has enabled her to tackle mature roles from her teenhood. During her ascent to superstardom, she played a free spirit inadvertently entangled in an incestuous affair in The Girl with the Golden Panties, subtly shaded three different whose roles in If They Tell You That I Fell, and limned another prostitute part with uncommon power in On the Line. Moving to France with her lover, cinematographer Gerard de Battista (with whom she has two sons), she spent her Abril in Paris years escaping the scathing reviews meted out for The Moon in the Gutter and impressing American audiences as one of the few causes for celebration in the star-deficient nineties. In the orgasmic film noir, Lovers: A True Story, she unleashed the sexual licentiousness that Hollywood females fatales of yesteryear could only intimate. Although the controversial Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down! played like an awkward blind date between director Almodóvar and his game-for-anything star, High Heels, their next collaboration, showcased Abril’s unique blend of reckless vulnerability and murderously intense passion to dazzling effect. In this combination salute to Lana Turner’s real-life excesses and acidic parody of women’s films, Abril sent up all those resentful daughters of Melodrama who are content to pillory their mothers for their own frustrations. Following up her delicious roast of a television reality-show hostess who would sell her own soul (if she had one) for a scoop in Kika, Abril played sexy second banana to Joe Pesci in Barry Levinson’s unwieldy show biz satire Jimmy Hollywood. Light- ing up a gimmicky script with refreshing candor, she stole the film.

Although Levinson changed his mind about using her as the defense attorney in Disclosure, one hopes American moviemakers will divine the combustibility she could bring to Lotus Land and that her assets will be used more wisely than those of other emigrée casualties such as Lena Olin and Emmanuelle Béart. Whether in drama or comedy, what sets this off-the-wall temptress apart from other Euro-goddesses is that she takes Passion seriously, but not herself. Far beyond her awesome pliability as a screen presence, there is an Abrilian life force that rattles viewers out of complacency and makes every Abril performance seem as if you are discovering her for the very first time.

—Robert J. Pardi

ADJANI, Isabelle

Films as Actress:

- 1969 Le Petit Bougnat (Michel) (as Rose)
- 1972 Faustine et le bel été (Faustine and the Beautiful Summer) (Compasnez) (as Camille); L’École des femmes (Rouleau—for TV) (as Agnes)
- 1974 La Gifle (The Slap) (Pinoteau) (as Isabelle Doulean)
- 1975 L’Histoire d’Adèle H. (The Story of Adèle H.) (Truffaut) (title role)
- 1976 Le Locataire (The Tenant) (Polanski) (as Stella); Barocco (Téchiné) (as Laure)
- 1977 Violette et François (Rouffio) (as Violette)
- 1978 The Driver (Walter Hill) (as the Player)
- 1979 Nosferatu—Phantom der Nacht (Nosferatu—The Vampire) (Herzog) (as Lucy Marker); Les Soeurs Brontë (The Brontë Sisters) (Téchiné) (as Emily)
- 1980 Clara et les chics types (Clara and the Nice Guys) (Monnet) (as Clara)
- 1981 Quartet (Ivy) (as Marya Zelli); Possession (Zulawski) (as Anna/Helen); L’Année prochaine si tout va bien (Next Year If All Goes Well) (Hubert) (as Isabelle)
- 1982 Antonieta (Saura) (title role); Tout feu tout flamme (All Fired Up) (Rappeneau) (as Pauline Valance)
- 1983 L’Été meurtrier (One Deadly Summer) (Jean Becker) (as Eliane/Else); Mortelle randonnée (Deadly Circuit) (Claude Miller) (as Catherine Leiris/Lucie “Marie”)
- 1985 Subway (Besson) (as Helena)
- 1987 Ishtar (Elaine May) (as Shirra Assel)
- 1988 Camille Claudel (Nuytten) (title role, + co-pr)
- 1990 Favorita Del Re (Corti); Fleur de Rubis (Mocky); Lung Ta: Les cavaliers du vent (De Poncheville) (as narrator)
- 1993 Toxic Affair (Espósito) (as Penelope)
- 1994 La Reine Margot (Queen Margot) (Chéreau) (title role)
- 1996 Diabolique (Chechik) (as Mia)
- 1998 Paparazzi (Berberian) (as herself)
- 1999 Passionnément (Nuytten)

Publications

By ADJANI: articles—

Interview with Guy Braucourt, in Ecran (Paris), November 1975.
Interview in Interview (New York), March 1976.
Interview with Holly Milea, in Premiere (New York), March 1996.

On ADJANI: book—

Isabelle Adjani in La Reine Margot
On ADJANI: articles—

Truffaut, François, “Non conosco Isabelle Adjani,” in Filmcritica (Rome), January/February 1976.
Séquences (Montreal), January 1984.
Simmons, Judy, “Isabelle Adjani’s Passion for Camille Claudel,” in Ms. Magazine (New York), July/August 1990.
Gendron, Sylvie, “‘Adjani. La reine Isabellep’” in Séquences (Montréal), July/August 1994.

* * *

In France, Isabelle Adjani has become an emblematic figure—admired, scrutinised, sometimes reviled, the recipient of Best Actress awards and of political abuse. But she’s never achieved stardom outside France, thanks to the mostly forgettable films in which she’s appeared. Of her twenty-odd movies to date, few have anything going for them beyond her performance—and some, not even that.

This is surprising, since Adjani is an intelligent and dedicated actress who chooses her roles with care and works on them with single-minded application. Truffaut, who gave her her first significant screen part in L’histoire d’Adèle H, observed that “she acts as though her life depended on it.” Intensity, the fierce wounded stare of a woman at once independent and painfully vulnerable, is the essence of her screen persona—and, on all the evidence, of Adjani herself. “One acts nothing but oneself,” she concedes, “no matter how fiercely one denies it.”

Adjani looks back wistfully on her work with Truffaut. “I don’t think things can happen so beautifully, so smoothly and with such purity again.” Even so, the film set the pattern for her career in more ways than one. Casting Adjani as Victor Hugo’s daughter Adèle, who pursued an unrequited love beyond the brink of madness, foreshadowed her frequent later roles as solitary obsessives, alienated and victimised by a punitive society. But it also marked the start of her career in more ways than one. Casting Adjani as Victor Hugo’s daughter Adèle, who pursued an unrequited love beyond the brink of madness, foreshadowed her frequent later roles as solitary obsessives, alienated and victimised by a punitive society. But it also marked the start of her career in more ways than one. Casting Adjani as Victor Hugo’s daughter Adèle, who pursued an unrequited love beyond the brink of madness, foreshadowed her frequent later roles as solitary obsessives, alienated and victimised by a punitive society. But it also marked the start of her career in more ways than one. Casting Adjani as Victor Hugo’s daughter Adèle, who pursued an unrequited love beyond the brink of madness, foreshadowed her frequent later roles as solitary obsessives, alienated and victimised by a punitive society. But it also marked the start of her career in more ways than one.

In some ways, Adjani’s exceptional beauty has worked against her. Small and delicate, with large, deep-blue eyes set in an oval face, she has sometimes been reduced to merely decorative roles—the errant socialite of Luc Besson’s modish Subway, or The Player in Walter Hill’s Melvillesque thriller The Driver. (Hill, she claims, “hated my scenes with Ryan O’Neal and cut most of them out.”) In Le Locataire Polanski, with characteristic perversity, tried to neutralise her beauty with thick glasses and a shaggy wig, but only succeeded in smothering her personality.

Adjani’s fragile looks suit her for roles as emotionally or physically exploited women—although neither James Ivory’s Quartet, nor Herzog’s brittle remake of Murnau’s Nosferatu-Phantom her Nacht, offered her scope for much beyond passive suffering. More interesting are the films that explore the darker potential of her wide-eyed gaze, such as Claude Miller’s Mortelle randoënée, where her serial killer, ruthless beneath an appealing facade, captivates even the detective sent to track her down.

This ambiguous combination of tenacity, even toughness, behind an air of childlike vulnerability underlies much of Adjani’s best work. She has never lacked courage, professional or personal, and in a 1986 interview, disgusted by the rise of Le Pen’s racist National Front, proclaimed her own non-French origins. (She was born in Bavaria to a German mother and an Algerian father.) Public reaction was swift and malicious: a rumour swept the country that she was dying of AIDS. Even her appearance on television, alive and in furious health, failed to still the whispers completely.

This ordeal fed powerfully into her playing of Camille Claudel. The film was a cherished personal project: Adjani herself raised the finances, acquired the rights, talked Depardieu into playing Rodin, and persuaded her long-term associate, the cinematographer Bruno Nuytten, to turn first-time director. Adjani closely identified with the brilliant sculptress, destroyed by her affair with the egocentric Rodin and incarcerated in an asylum for her last thirty years. The urgency and fervour of her performance burst through Nuytten’s careful direction, and gained her an Oscar nomination. But in La reine Margot, a blood-soaked costume drama adapted from a Dumas novel, she was swamped by the rampant melodrama and by a grandstanding performance from Virna Lisi as her mother, the scheming Catherine de Medici.

So far, all Adjani’s attempts to launch an international career have misfired: besides The Driver there’s been Elaine May’s megabuck comedy disaster Ishtar, and Diabolique, a botched shot at updating Clouzot’s classic chiller. In France she seems trapped by her persona, by a public regard at once too indulgent and too censorious. Highly regarded by her colleagues—John Malkovich describes her as “a great actress . . . one of those people who really work from a deep sense of woundedness”—Isabelle Adjani has rarely found the scripts, or the directors, to stretch her abilities to the full. Since Diabolique, and the media feeding frenzy over her break-up with Daniel Day-Lewis, she has been involved in just one film, Passonnément, and may be preparing to retire into Garbo-like reclusiveness.

—Philip Kemp

AIELLO, Danny

Hat Award, Theatre World Award, Theatre of Reunion Award, for That Championship Season, Chicago production, 1975; Best Actor Award, L.A. Drama Critics Circle, for Harly Burly, Los Angeles production, 1985; Los Angeles, Boston, and Chicago Film Critics Awards, for Do the Right Thing, 1989; Career Achievement Award, Motion Picture Bookers Club, 1989. Agent: William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A. Address: 4 Thornhill Drive, Ramsey, NJ 07446, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>The Godmother</td>
<td>(Russo)—unreleased</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Bang the Drum Slowly</td>
<td>(Hancock)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Godfather, Part II</td>
<td>(Francis Ford Coppola) as Tony Rosato</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>The Front</td>
<td>(Ritt) as Danny Lattuada; Hooch (Edward Mann); Kojak: Black Thorn (Dubin—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Fingers</td>
<td>(Toback) as Butch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Bloodbrothers (A Father’s Love)</td>
<td>(Mulligan) as Artie; The Last Tenant (Jud Taylor—for TV) as Carl; Lovey: A Circle of Children, Part II (Jud Taylor—for TV) as Bernie Serino</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Defiance</td>
<td>(Flynn) as Carmine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Hide in Plain Sight</td>
<td>(Caan) as Sal Caravello</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Chu Chu and the Philly Flash</td>
<td>(Rich) as Johnson; Fort Apache, the Bronx (Petrue) as Morgan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Amityville II: The Possession</td>
<td>(Damiama); A Question of Honor (Jud Taylor—for TV) as Martelli</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Blood Feast</td>
<td>(Newell—for TV) as Randy Powers; Deathmask (Friedman) (as Mike Gress); Old Enough (Marisa Silver) (as Mr. Bruckner); Once upon a Time in America (Leone) (as Police Chief Aiello)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Key Exchange</td>
<td>(Kellman) as Carabello; The Protector (Glickenhaus) as Danny Garoni; The Purple Rose of Cairo (Woody Allen) as Monk; The Stuff (Cohen) as Vickers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Tales from the Darkside: The Odds</td>
<td>(John Strysik—for TV) as Tommy Vale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Man on Fire</td>
<td>(Absinthe) (Chouraqui) as Conti; Moonstruck (Jewison) as Johnny Cammareri; The Pick-Up Artist (Toback) as Phil; Radio Days (Woody Allen) as Rocco; Daddy (Herzfeld—for TV) as Coach Jacobs; Russicum (The Third Solution; Russicum I Giorini del Diavolo) (Squiteri) (as George Sherman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>White Hot</td>
<td>(Benson) as Charlie Buick; Alone in the Neon Jungle (Command in Hell) (Georg Stanford Brown—for TV) as Chief of Police; Crack in the Mirror (Do It Up) (Benson) as Charlie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>The January Man</td>
<td>(O’Connor) (as Capt. Vincent Alcoa); Do the Right Thing (Spike Lee) (as Sal Frangoni); Making of Do the Right Thing (Bourene—doc) (as himself); Harlem Nights (Eddie Murphy) (as Phil Cantone); The Preppie Murder (Hertzfeld—for TV) as Detective Mike Sheehan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Jacob’s Ladder (Dante’s Inferno)</td>
<td>(Lyne) as Louis; Lost Idol (Shock Troop) (Chalong) (as John Cunningham)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>The Closer</td>
<td>(Logothetis) (as Chester Gran); 29th Street (Gallo) (as Frank Pesce Sr.); Hudson Hawk (Lehmann) as Tommy Five-Tone; Once Around (Hallström) (as Joe Bella)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Mistress</td>
<td>(Primus) as Carmine Rasso; Ruby (Mackenzie) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>The Cemetery Club</td>
<td>(Duke) as Ben Katz; Me and the Kid (Dan Curtis) (as Harry); The Pickle (Adventures of the Flying Pickle) (Mazursky) (as Harry Stone)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Leon (The Cleaner; The Professional)</td>
<td>(Besson) (as Tony, + co-pr); Ready to Wear (Prêt-a-Porter) (Altman) (as Major Hamilton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Lieberman in Love</td>
<td>(Lahti) as Joe Lieberman; The Road Home (He Ain’t Heavy) (Hamilton) Power of Attorney (Himelstein) as Joe Scassi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>City Hall</td>
<td>(Harold Becker) as Frank Anselmo; Two Much (Trueba) (as Gene Paletto); 2 Days in the Valley (Hertzfeld) Mojave Moon (Dowling); Long Road Home; A Brooklyn State of Mind (Rainone) (as Danny Parente)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Unforgotten: Twenty-Five Years After Willowbrook</td>
<td>(Fisher) (as Narrator); The Last Don (Clifford—mini for TV) (as Don Dmenico Clericuzio); Dellaventura (Rosenthal—series for TV) (as Anthony Dellaventura)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Wilbur Falls</td>
<td>(Glantz) as Mal Devereaux; Bring Me the Head of Mavis Davis (Henderson) (as Mr. Rathbone); The Last Don II (Clifford—mini for TV) (as Don Clericuzio)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Mambo Café</td>
<td>(Gonzalez) as Mob Boss</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By AIELLO: articles—

“Everyone’s in The Pickle (and They Relish Their Roles): Danny Aiello Stars as Director Harry Stone, a Victim of Artistic Suicide,” interview with Tom Provenzano, in Drama-Logue, 6–12 May 1993.

On AIELLO: articles—

* * *

In the Hollywood studio era Danny Aiello would have made a respectable living as a character actor representing the tough urban guy from the school of hard knocks. His urban upbringing has a definite bearing on his work in the theater and movies. He is a product of New York and can be considered a New York actor. Many of his films and television productions have a New York setting and theme.

He grew up in a large Italian family, with a father who was missing most of the time; his mother and siblings struggled. He had very little schooling, ran with street gangs, went into the Army, married, and found himself with a family at an early age. During a particularly desperate time in his life he resorted to criminal activity (which he freely admits) in order to pay the rent and feed his family.

He came to acting relatively late, more or less by chance, with virtually no training; even so he was soon working with important directors Francis Ford Coppola, Martin Ritt, and Woody Allen. Over the course of his career to date, his roles have ranged from the vicious insensitive husband of The Purple Rose of Cairo; and the Momma’s Boy, Johnny Cammareri, in Moonstruck, which brought out his comedic abilities. He is quite successful as the lead in The Pickle, a film that may be absurd in its concept, but which shows him with a nasty streak, but also great comic talent as a Hollywood director struggling to overcome a string of flops.

He has also had leading roles as Jack Ruby in Ruby (1992) and Chester Grant in The Closer (1990; a role recreated from the 1976 Broadway play Wheelbarrow Closers), but while these parts share the same characteristics—small-time loser and hood and paid FBI informer in the first; hard-driven, bitter, and nasty man alienated from his family in the second—the films themselves are not successful. In many ways this underlines the dilemma in his acting career. If Aiello has good writers and directors, he can shine; if not, he will fall into a characteristic mold: a loud-mouthed and profane persona with a trademark laugh that is not always pertinent to the action of the film.

His most important film to date, the one that has gained him the most fame and recognition, is Spike Lee’s Do the Right Thing. He is excellent in this film as the embattled Sal Frangoni, holding on to his pizza parlor in an all-black Bedford-Stuyvesant. Some of his best acting occurs in the interchanges between father and sons, and this type of relationship, both in real life and on the screen, has great importance to him. While vituperative, angry, opinionated, and frustrated to the point of violence, he is still able to convey warmth and compassion for the African Americans that he lives with. He says to his bigoted son: “Why is there so much anger in you? I never had trouble with these people. They grew up on my food. I’m very proud of it. Sal’s is here to stay. I’m your father and I love you.” Aiello claims that there is about 85 percent of himself in the film. His wife in real life claims that there is 100 percent.

While this film has been the most important of his career, his most successful films have been the ones in which he portrays a family man, a loving father and husband, working hard to keep his family together. The two films that show him with this wonderful range of acting ability, along with his characteristic hard edges, are 29th Street and Once Around. The essence of Aiello’s acting may well be found in these films; his performances show great depth, compassion, sympathy, and humor. The films are moving and successful in large part because of him—probably due to the opportunity they offer Aiello to act out much of what he lacked as a child when his father was not around, and there was not much love and support from his father for his children. Danny Aiello is making up for those hard times, and being quite successful at it.

—Allen Cohen

AIMÉE, Anouk

Nationality: French. Born: Françoise Sorya Dreyfus in Paris, 27 April 1932, daughter of the actor Henri Dreyfus (performed as Henri Murray, or simply Murray) and Geneviève Sorya (family name Durand). Education: Attended École de la rue Milton, Paris; École de Barbezieux; Pensionnat de Bandol; Institution de Megève; studied dance at Marseilles Opera; studied theater in England, then at Cours Bauer-Therond. Family: Married 1) Edouard Zimmermann, 1949 (divorced); 2) the director Nico Papatakis, 1951 (divorced 1954), daughter: Manuela; 3) Pierre Barouh, 1966 (divorced); 4) the actor
Anouk Aimée

Films as Actress:

1946 La Maison sous la mer (Calef)
1947 La Fleur de l’âge (Carné—unfinished)
1948 Les Amants de Véronne (The Lovers of Verona) (Cayatte) (as Georgia “Juliette” Maglia)
1949 Golden Salamander (Neame) (as Anna)
1951 Conquêtes du froid (Vidal); Noche de tormenta (Nuit d’orage) (de Moyora)
1952 La Bergère et le ramoneur (Grimault) (as voice); The Paris Express (The Man Who Watched Trains Go By) (French)
1953 Ich suche dich (Fischer)
1954 Forever My Heart (Happy Birthday) (Arliss and Knowles)
1955 Contraband Spain (Huntington) (as Elena Vargas); Les mauvaises Rencontres (Astruc)
1956 Nina (Jugert) (as Nina Iwanowa); Stresemann (Braun)
1957 Tous peuvent me tuer (Anyone Can Kill Me) (Decoin); Pot-Bouille (The House of Lovers) (Duvivier); Montparnasse 19 (Modigliani of Montparnasse; The Lovers of Montparnasse) (Jacques Becker) (as Jeanne Hebuterne)
1958 La Tête contre les murs (The Keepers) (Franju); Carve Her Name with Pride (Gilbert)
1959 The Journey (Some of Us May Die) (Litvak) (as Eva); Les Dragueurs (The Chasers; The Young Have No Morals) (Mocky)
1960 La dolce vita (Fellini) (as Maddalena)
1961 Lola (Donna di vita) (Demy) (title role); Le Farceur (The Joker) (de Broca) (as Helene Laroche); L’imprévisito (Lattuada); Quai Notre Dame (Berthier); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (de Sica)
On AIMÉE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), November 1979.

Anouk Aimée made her film debut in 1946 in a small role in the Calef film La Maison sous la mer. Her first starring role was in Marcel Carné’s La Fleur de l’âge, but that film remained unfinished. In effect, then, her first real success was in Cayatte’s love drama Les Amants de Véronne, a loose adaptation of Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet. Critics had reservations about the script, but there was no doubt about the obvious talent of the young actress. She went on to play in Astruc’s Le Rideau cramois et Les Mauvaises Rencontres. Not only her abilities as an actress but also the photogenic qualities of her face, with its fine lines, expression of elation, and suggestive gaze, were used to particular effect in Duvivier’s Pot-Bouille, Becker’s Montparnasse 19, and Franju’s La Tête contre les murs.

But she was not always lucky. In spite of being known outside France (she made films in Spain, Great Britain, and Germany), she did not always work with directors who knew how to make use of her art. Then in the early 1960s she attracted worldwide attention in the title role of Demy’s Lola and particularly in the part of the rich, haughty Maddalena in Fellini’s La dolce vita, in which her aristocratic demeanor provided a telling contrast to the more elemental charms of Anita Ekberg. She appeared again for Fellini in the role of the patient wife in 8½. Aimée remained in Italy during the first half of the 1960s, and made a variety of films for Italian directors which are of varying qualities and genres—among them, Lolià, Le voci bianche, and La stagione del nostro amore.

The greatest success of her career came in 1966, in a film by the then still relatively unknown French director Claude Lelouch, Un Homme et une femme. The young director succeeded in rendering a seemingly banal love story in an unexpected and new way, through his mastery of camera technique and setting the action in the milieu of automobile racing. Yet the tremendous international success it enjoyed (it won both the Grand Prize at the Cannes Film Festival in 1966 and an American Oscar) were undoubtedly due to the excellent performances of the stars, Aimée and Jean-Louis Trintignant.

In her subtle portrayal of the heroine—self-protective, then succumb ing to a new love,Aimée seemed to create a new kind of femme fatale and a characterization she would return to in the future: a woman of sensitivity whose emotions are often kept secret. She has continued to play that woman, with the same moderation and tact but within a growing gamut of different emotions. A good example is Belgian director André Delvaux’s Un Soir, un train in which she plays a Wallon woman who sacrifices herself to her husband, a university professor played by Yves Montand. The complicated relationship between the couple, exacerbated by their different languages and hovering on the boundary between reality and fantasy, ends in painful and tragic misunderstanding. Aimée’s interpretation is perfect.

Publications

By AIMÉE: book—

By AIMÉE: article—

—Karel Tabery
ALLEN, Woody

Nationality: American. Born: Allen Stewart Konigsberg in Brooklyn, New York, 1 December 1935. Education: Attended Midwood High School, Brooklyn; New York University and City College of New York, 1953. Family: Married 1) Harlene Rosen, 1954 (divorced); 2) Louise Lasser, 1965 (divorced); one son and one daughter with the actress Mia Farrow. Career: 1952—started writing for Sid Caesar's show Caesar's Hour, also wrote for the Ed Sullivan Show and the Tonight Show; 1961—having been urged by managers Jack Rollins and Charles Joffe to become a stand-up comedian, debuted at The Duplex, a Greenwich Village nightclub; 1964–65—in TV series That Was the Week That Was; 1966—first play, Don't Drink the Water, opened on Broadway; 1969–70—played the leading role of Allan Felix in his own drama, Play It Again, Sam on Broadway; 1965—film acting debut in What's New, Pussycat?, his own screenplay; 1969—film directing debut in Take the Money and Run. Awards: Sylvania Award, for script of an episode of Caesar's Hour, 1957; Academy Awards for Best Director and Best Original Screenplay, and National Society of Film Critics Award, for Annie Hall, 1977; British Academy Award and New York Film Critics Award, Best Screenplay, for Manhattan, 1979; Academy Award for Best Screenplay, Golden Globe Award, and New York Film Critics Award, for Hannah and Her Sisters, 1987; D. W. Griffith Lifetime Achievement Award, Directors Guild of America, 1996. Agent: Rollins and Joffe, 130 West 57th Street, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1965 What's New, Pussycat? (Clive Donner) (as Victor Shakapopolis, + sc)
1966 What's Up, Tiger Lily? (Tanaguchi—dubbed Japanese film) (as narrator, + pr, co-sc)
1967 Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as Jimmy Bond/Dr. Noah)
1972 Play It Again, Sam (Aspirins for Three) (Ross) (as Allan Felix, + sc)
1976 The Front (Ritt) (as Howard Prince)
1987 King Lear (Godard) (as Mr. Alien)
1991 Scenes from a Mall (Mazursky) (as Nick)
1998 Antz (voice)

Films as Actor, Director, and Scriptwriter:

1969 Take the Money and Run (as Virgil Starkwell, co-sc)
1971 Bananas (as Fielding Mellish, co-sc)
1972 Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to Ask (as Victor/Fabrizio/Fool/Sperm)
1973 Sleeper (as Miles Monroe, co-sc, + mus)
1975 Love and Death (as Boris Dimitrovich Grushenko)
1977 Annie Hall (as Alvy Singer, co-sc)
1978 Interiors (d, sc only)
1979 Manhattan (as Isaac Davis, co-sc)
1980 Stardust Memories (as Sandy Bates)

1982 A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy (as Andrew)
1983 Zelig (as Leonard Zelig)
1984 Broadway Danny Rose (title role)
1985 The Purple Rose of Cairo (d, sc only)
1986 Hannah and Her Sisters (as Mickey)
1987 Radio Days (as narrator; September, d, sc only)
1988 Another Woman (d, sc only)
1989 “Oedipus Wrecks” ep. of New York Stories (as Sheldon Mills); Crimes and Misdemeanors (as Cliff Stern)
1990 Alice (d, sc only)
1992 Shadows and Fog (as Kleinman); Husbands and Wives (as Gabe Roth)
1993 Shadows and Fog (as Kleinman); Husbands and Wives (as Gabe Roth)
1994 Manhattan Murder Mystery (as Larry Lipton, co-sc)
1994 Bullets over Broadway (d, co-sc only); Don’t Drink the Water (for TV)
1995 Mighty Aphrodite (as Lenny Weinrib)
1996 Everyone Says I Love You (as Joe)
1997 Deconstructing Harry (as Harry Block)
1998 Celebrity
1999 Sweet and Lowdown
2000 Small Time Crooks

Other Films:

1969 Don’t Drink the Water (Morris) (sc)
1998 Wild Man Blues (himself)

Publications

By ALLEN: books—

Don’t Drink the Water (play), New York, 1967.
Play It Again, Sam (play), New York, 1969.
Death (one-act play), New York, 1975.
God (one-act play), New York, 1975.
The Floating Light Bulb (play), New York, 1982.
Four Films of Woody Allen (Annie Hall, Interiors, Manhattan, Stardust Memories), New York, 1983.
Central Park West (one-act play), New York, 1995.

By ALLEN: articles—

Interview with Anthony DeCurtis, in Rolling Stone (New York), 16 September 1993.

On ALLEN: books—

On ALLEN: articles—

Gilliatt, Penelope, “Profiles: Guilty, with an Explanation,” in New Yorker, 4 February 1974.

Trow, George W. S., “A Film about a Very Funny Man,” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1977.

White, Armond, “Class Clowns,” in Film Comment (New York), April 1987.

* * *

Approaching his sixties after enacting more than 20 important or leading roles, Woody Allen portrays the middle-aged sports writer Lenny Weinrib in Mighty Aphrodite. This 1995 film reveals some characteristics of his part in a minor role playing opposite Peter Sellers and Peter O’Toole in the 1967 What’s New, Pussy-cat? The dimension of the character and the maturity of Allen’s acting skills, however, proved to be worlds apart from the earlier film. In his first appearance he portrayed a bumbling eccentric, Victor Shakapopolis, a role executed with a narrow range of the comedian’s acting skills. Giving an elaborate interview conducted by Stig Björkman for the book, Woody Allen on Woody Allen, this writer-director-actor claimed that since he was directed by another person, he was allowed to see the results of his acting but never was allowed to redo scenes to correct the faults he saw in his work. The same he claimed was true of the role of the childishy temperamental, girl-chasing Jimmy Bond, a spoof of the famous Bond secret agent series in a film called Casino Royale (1967). Not until he was able to be his own director and writer for the 1969 Take the Money and Run would Allen control his own performance.

Woody Allen’s Mighty Aphrodite still displays the features of the bumbler he created in his initial performance in What’s New, Pussy-cat? This is revealed when he meets a prostitute named Linda Ash, enacted by Mira Sorvino. Her opening conversation with him produces confusion, frustration, and inadequacy—a typical pattern of reaction that Woody established in many of his film characterizations when faced with an aggressive or independent woman. Her sexual vulgarisms and blunt talk about various forms of physical encounters make him squirm. When he acts in such a scene, the audience can almost visualize an aura of perspiration radiating about his body.

Mighty Aphrodite also displays another variation on Woody’s acting talents tied to a stressful situation. As Lenny, the sportswriter in this move, he is threatened by a sadistic thug, Linda Ash’s pimp, because Lenny tries to steer Linda away from prostitution. The wimp Allen had played before in so many of his films can be noticed at this point of the movie, but he gives a twist that reveals his maturity as an actor. Faced with a brute who has him by the throat, Allen covers his fear with bravado as he promises the hulk he can get him tickets for a sporting event. Another feature of the comedian’s use of character traits emerges. When pressed physically or when he wants to influence someone to take action, this nerd will con people. In Mighty Aphrodite, the juxtaposition of a variety of contrasting emotions makes this one of his most deft acting performances.

To understand the acting style of Woody Allen, it should be realized that he was a writer for many television comedians and hosts of talk shows such as Sid Caesar, Art Carney, Carol Channing, Jack Paar, and Garry Moore. His agents urged him to become a performer, and he made his debut as a stand-up comedian in 1961 at the Duplex nightclub in Greenwich Village. After moving to a number of clubs in New York City, he traveled to Chicago and San Francisco. Consequently, his fame as a performer spread throughout the nation. In the early 1960s he continued his writing because he could get more money. According to a Time article (15 February 1963): “He now gets $1,500 for supplying a comedian with a five-minute bit.” His film writing reveals the stand-up comedy influence: the monologue as narration and the one-liner became an intrinsic part of many of his films.

The monologue-narration also relates directly to Allen’s published humorous essays and to his stand-up comedian days and his acting in a number of films. Risible narration exists in Take the Money and Run (1969), Bananas (1971), Love and Death (1975), Annie Hall
Woody Allen’s ability as a stand-up comedian has been transferred to the screen as he plays a character in the comic drama. In Take the Money and Run Woody describes his own inadequacy as a bank robber in the character of Virgil Starkwell. This offscreen commentary is delivered in an offhand, dry manner that makes this comedian’s acting endearing to his fans. Overstatement and understatement may exist in the script, but Allen gives a matter-of-fact delivery to punctuate the absurdity of the situation. The same can be said for the frame narration—especially in the beginning and ending of the film drama—of the award-winning Annie Hall. As Alvy Singer, the comedian rationalizes his struggle in this battle of the sexes.

A more direct use of the stand-up comedian’s role is created when Allen plays the role of Court Jester in Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to Ask (1972). Woody portrays an appointed fool for royalty who fails as he tries his jokes on an audience that does not respond. When one of his weak one-liners falls flat, he says, with a breathy, frustrated voice, “I know you’re out there: I can hear you breathing.’’

One-liners are, of course, the stock-in-trade gimmick for the stand-up comedian. In Mighty Aphrodite, the protagonist, face to face with a towering, amply endowed prostitute, declares whimsically, “At my age, if I made love to you, they’d have to put me on a respirator,’’

Even monologues are sprinkled with one- and two-liners. In Annie Hall’s opening narrative, Allen as Alvy Singer, faces the camera that uses this device. In a vague attempt to look on the bright side of life, when he turns 40 as he develops a bald spot, he uses a set-up line followed by a comic reversal: “I think I’m going to get better as I get older—you know, I think I’m going to be the balding, virile type.’’ Allen’s delivery is low-keyed with a clear-cut self-deprecating agony because he has broken up with his lover, Annie. In the closing remarks of Love and Death, filmed two years earlier, he faces the camera as he used to face an audience as a stand-up comic, and sums up his philosophy of life: “If it turns out there is a God, I don’t think he’s evil. The worst you can say is—he’s an underachiever.’’

It should be noted that the quality of these one- and two-liner examples almost stand on their own because of Allen’s innovative sense of humor. He received an Oscar nomination for acting in 1977 for Annie Hall. In addition, he received two other awards for writing and directing this film. Actresses he has groomed to excel in the cinema art have received kudos from the critics while his talent as an actor appears to be taken for granted. Woody’s low-level intensity of acting not only fits his character, it also complements the characters of the other actors and actresses that play opposite him, to benefit the total production. His sharp timing from one joke to another possibly removes some of the complexities the actor has developed. The self-destructive whimper who is the target of bullies, both male and female, remains the principal focus of the character that Allen enacts with such skill. Often overlooked is the adeptly handled whining con man frequently employed when his faults are the aim of a detractor. Also, as the writer and director of his films, Allen places his protagonist in different plots, settings, and dramatic modes. As an actor he provides variety and nuances as he enacts each role. For example, his Everyone Says I Love You (1996) evolves into a nostalgic, romantic, comic musical, developing a sympathetic variation of his persona and gives Woody a chance to play light humor. By contrast he is comically close to a despicable character in Deconstructing Harry (1997) when he plays a man who receives the wrath of a series of harpies—his former wives. Here Allen, the writer, has given himself a part much darker than his previous work, Everyone Says I Love You. As a counter-punching con man he plays the role more aggressively and a stronger, more laughable portrait is created. In Deconstructing Harry, the dramatic mode moves to dark satire with some surrealistic scenes similar to the Pirandello stage play, Six Characters in Search of an Author. A third dramatic mode, the motion picture cartoon, allows another dimension of Allen’s acting. This is revealed in the 1998 Antz. With a voice-over performance of an abstract ant drawing, his one liner gags take on a sharper, more noticeable quality and show his thespian talent in almost all film modes, even in a cartoon.

Woody Allen remains as no imitator of other comedians. Since he plays a little man plagued by a variety of pretenders and bullies, some evaluators have compared his character and his control of his total work to those qualities of Chaplin’s. “I can’t tell you what I am, but I can tell you what I’m not: Chaplinesque,’’ he is quoted in an entry for World Film Directors. Merely competent as a storyteller, Chaplin was a genius as a director and a master filmmaker in a different way: a titan as actor and director. Allen’s acting, as important as it is to many of his films, remains only distinctive and effective. Time will tell if his acting will be considered by critics to be worthy of a higher rank.

—Donald W. McCaffrey

ALLYSON, June

Nationality: American. Born: Born Ella Geisman, New York City, 7 October 1917. Education: Public Schools in New York City and Pelham, New York, including Theodore Roosevelt High School. Family: Married 1) actor/director Dick Powell, 1945 (died 1963); children: Pamela (adopted) and Richard Keith; 2) Glenn Maxwell, 1963 (divorced 1963, remarried 1966, divorced again); 3) Dr. David Ashrow, 1976. Career: First film appearance in Vitaphone 2-reel Swing for Sale, 1937; role in Broadway’s Best Foot Forward, 1940; signed movie contract with MGM, 1943–53; played Jo March in MGM remake of Little Women, 1949; starred in The Dupont Show with June Allyson (aka The June Allyson Show), 1959–61; hosted That’s Entertainment III, a documentary on MGM musicals, 1994. Awards: Golden Globe Award for Best Motion Picture Actress—Musical/Comedy, for Too Young To Kiss, 1952; awarded Special Jury Prize for Ensemble Acting, Venice Festival, for Executive Suite, 1954; voted Most Popular Female Star, Photoplay Magazine Awards, 1954. Agent: Shapiro-Lichtman-Stein, Inc., 8827 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90212, USA.

Films:

1938 The Knight Is Young (Mack) (as June); The Prisoner of Swing (Mack) (as Princess)

1939 All Girl Review (French) (as Mayor)
June Allyson with Peter Lawford in Little Women

1943  Girl Crazy (Taurog) (specialty appearance); Best Foot Forward (Buzzell) (as Minerva); Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as guest)
1944  Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe) (as Patsy Deyo); Music for Millions (Koster) (as Barbara Ainsworth); Meet the People (Reisner) (as Annie)
1945  The Sailor Takes a Wife (Whorf) (as Mary); Her Highness and the Bellboy (Thorpe) (as Leslie Odell)
1946  Two Sisters from Boston (Koster) (as Martha Canford Chandler); The Secret Heart (Leonard) (as Penny Addams)
1947  High Barbaree (Conway) (as Nancy Frazer); Good News (Walters) (as Connie Lane); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf) (specialty appearance)
1948  The Bride Goes Wild (Taurog) (as Martha Terryton); The Three Musketeers (Sidney) (as Constance Bonacieux); Words and Music (Taurog) (guest star)
1949  Little Women (Leroy) (as Jo March); The Stratton Story (Wood) (as Ethel Stratton)
1950  Right Cross (Sturges) (as Pat O’Malley); The Reformer and the Redhead (Frank/Panama) (as Kathleen Maquire)
1951  Too Young to Kiss (Leonard) (as Cynthia Potter)
1952  The Girl in White (So Bright the Flame) (Sturges) (as Dr. Emily Dunning)
1953  Remains To Be Seen (Weis) (as Jody Revere); Battle Circus (Brooks) (as Lieut. Ruth McGara)
1954  The Glenn Miller Story (Mann) (as Helen Berger Miller); Executive Suite (Wise) (as Mary Belmond Walling); Woman’s World (Negulesco) (as Katie)
1955  The Shrike (Ferrer) (as Ann Downs); The McConnell Story (Tiger in the Sky) (Douglas) (as Pearl “Butch” Brown); Strategic Air Command (Mann) (as Sally Holland)
1956  The Opposite Sex (Miller) (as Kay Hilliard); You Can’t Run Away From It (Powell) (as Ellen “Ellie” Andrews)
1957  My Man Godfrey (Koster) (as Irene Bullock); Interlude (Sirk) (as Helen Banning)
1959  Stranger In My Arms (And Ride a Tiger) (Kautner) (as Christina Beasley)
1963  The Thrill of It All (Jewison) (as Helen Banning)
1971  See the Man Run (The Second Face) (Allen—for TV) (as Helene Spencer)
1972  They Only Kill Their Masters (Goldstone) (as Mrs. Watkins)
1973  Letters From Three Lovers (Erman—for TV) (as Monica)
1974  That's Entertainment! (Haley Jr.) (archival footage)
1977  Curse of the Black Widow (Love Trap) (Curtis—for TV) (as Olga)
1978  Three on a Date (Bixby—for TV) (as Marge Emery); Vegas (High Roller) (Lang—for TV) (as Marilyn’s mother); Black-out (Black-Out in New Y ork) (Matalon) (as Mrs. Grant)
1982  The Kid with the Broken Halo (Martinson—for TV) (as Dorothea Powell)
1985  That's Dancing! (Haley Jr.) (archival footage)
1994  That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen/Sheridan) (as host)

Publications:

By ALLYSON: book—

By ALLYSON: articles—

Interview in Photoplay (London), August, 1985

On ALLYSON: book—

On ALLYSON: articles—

* * *

Before she became June Allyson, Ella Geisman endured a somewhat deprived childhood in The Bronx, New York, before gradually breaking into Broadway musical theater in the late 1930s. Like many Hollywood personalities of the studio era, Allyson, one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer’s most popular stars and biggest box-office draws of the 1940s and early 1950s, received her initial show business experience on the New York stage. At the age of twenty Geisman was cast in the chorus line of a flop Broadway musical, but this led to other parts in more successful productions, including a bit part in the George Abbott-directed collegiate musical, Best Foot Forward. When Best Foot Forward was filmed in 1943, Geisman went to Hollywood with the show, and, as June Allyson, soon found herself with a Hollywood contract, primarily due to the efforts of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer producer Joe Pasternak.

A number of bits in various MGM pictures (including specialty spots in Girl Crazy and Thousands Cheer and the role of Minerva in Best Foot Forward) led to her first starring role in Two Girls and a Sailor, one of the last of the studio’s big black-and-white wartime musical variety extravaganzas in 1944. Allyson was paired with Gloria De Haven as two sisters whose dream is to open up a USO canteen in New York City. Two Girls also featured MGM male juvenile Van Johnson, also from Broadway; for a time Johnson and Allyson enjoyed great popularity as America’s post-war sweethearts. They later starred in 1947’s High Barbaree, an odd and commercially unsuccessful fantasy drama with a World War II setting, and 1948’s slapstick The Bride Goes Wild. Allyson was reunited with Johnson in one of her last MGM films, and one of the few in which she got a change-of-role pace as the sexy female lead, the 1953 film version of the sophisticated Broadway comedy, Remains to Be Seen. Like all of MGM’s contract musical performers the petite charmer with the distinctively husky voice was also groomed for dramatic roles. As early as 1946 she was cast against type as Claudette Colbert’s neurotic daughter in The Secret Heart, a somewhat Freudian melodrama. She was also featured as the treacly sweet Constance (and opposite another MGM musical performer, Gene Kelly) in MGM’s swashbuckling version of The Three Musketeers in 1948, a role Allyson cites as one of her least rewarding.

Though her Little Women suffered in comparison to the classic 1939 George Cukor/Katherine Hepburn version, one of Allyson’s choicest straight roles was in the 1949 MGM re-make. The actress turned in a strong and moving portrayal of Louisa May Alcott’s spunky pre-feminist heroine, Jo March, and the film remains a charming and opulent MGM Technicolor period piece. Allyson’s scene opposite Margaret O’Brien in a rainy attic, as the two discuss Beth’s premonition of an early death, is a peak dramatic moment for both young actresses.

But Allyson’s best MGM picture is another classic college musical, Good News, a re-make released in 1947. Under Charles Walters’ sparkling direction Allyson (as librarian Connie Lane) essays her best singing/dancing/acting role, wistfully doing a solo turn with the touching ballad “Just Imagine,” and providing the film’s exuberant dance finale with co-star Peter Lawford in the rousingly staged “Varsity Drag” number. She also appeared as one of the many guests stars in one of MGM’s musically vivacious but otherwise turgid musical biography films, 1948’s Words and Music. Allegedly based on the lives of songwriters Rodgers and Hart, the film features Allyson performing a charming on-stage version of the team’s “Thou Swell” (from A Connecticut Yankee) with the identical Blackburn twins. She also appeared on the guest star roster of another MGM musical bio cindered, Til the Clouds Roll By, a misfired fantasia on the life of Jerome Kern.

MGM occasionally loaned out its popular star to other studios and Allyson found herself graduating from ingenue roles to a series of disparate parts, among these a role in The Stratton Story in 1949, and in Universal-International’s extremely popular The Glenn Miller Story in which she played opposite James Stewart in the title role in 1954. Her by now predictable wifely duties continued in MGM’s 1954 Executive Suite in which she was William Holden’s supportive spouse, and in The McConnell Story and Strategic Air Command, both in 1955. June’s self-effacing helpmate period peaked in 1956 with one of her intermittent returns to MGM for an ill-advised musical up-date of another celebrated Cukor film, The Women, retitled The Opposite Sex, in which Allyson took on the original Norma Shearer role of the betrayed wife. In revolt to all these good wife roles Allyson went radically against type in Universal’s The Shrike, a rather murky melodrama (directed by and co-starring Jose Ferrer) about a castrating female. She also starred as a straying wife who becomes involved with a symphonic conductor in Douglas Sirk’s Interlude in 1957. Allyson’s last major studio film of the 1950s was another Universal marital melodrama, the Ross Hunter soaper Stranger In My Arms (1959). Allyson once commented: ‘‘I never did feel quite right about the roles I was called upon to portray—the gentle, kind, loving, perfect wife who will stand by her man through ‘anything.’ In real life I’m a poor dressmaker and a terrible cook; in fact, anything but the perfect wife.’’

The 1960s found Allyson moving into a series of intermittent stage performances, but finding greater success with her TV films and guest spots. Her television work included a brief stint with a show of her own, and spots on Burke’s Law and Murder, She Wrote. She made her last theatrical feature appearance in They Only Kill Their Masters in 1972, but was also seen on the big screen as recently as 1994 as the perfect wife. ‘‘I’m a poor dressmaker and a terrible cook; in fact, anything but the perfect wife.’’

Awards: Best Actress (collectively awarded), Cannes Festival, for Brink of Life, 1958; Étoile de Cristal of French Film Academy for Best Actress, for My Sister, My Love, 1965; British Academy Award, Best Foreign Actress, for The Touch, 1971. Address: c/o Royal Dramatic Theatre, Storgatan 1, Stockholm 11444, Sweden.

Films as Actress:

1953  Dum Borr (Stupid Borr) (Poppe)
1954  En natt på Glimmingehus (A Night at Glimminge Castle)
(Wickman); Herr Arnes penningar (Sir Arne’s Treasure)
(Molander)

1955  Sommarnattens leende (Smiles of a Summer Night) (Bergman)
(as actress); Flickan i regnet (Girl in the Rain) (Kjellin);
Staden vid vattnen (Town by the Sea) (Kjellgren) (as narrator)
1956  Sista paret ut (Last Pair Out; Last Couple Out) (Sjöberg) (as Kerstin); Egen ingång (Private Entrance) (Ekman)

1957  Det sjunde inseget (The Seventh Seal) (Bergman) (as Mia);
Smultronstället (Wild Strawberries) (Bergman) (as Sara);
Sommarnöje sökes (A Summer Place Is Wanted) (Ekman)
1958  Nära livet (Brink of Life; So Close to Life) (Bergman) (as Hjordis Pettersson); Du är mitt äventyr (You Are My Adventure) (Olin); Ansiktet (The Face, The Magician) (Bergman) (as Sara)
1959  Den kärta leken (The Love Game) (Fant)

1960  Bröllopsdagen (The Wedding Day) (Fant) (as Sylvia Blom);
Djävulen öga (The Devil’s Eye) (Bergman) (as Britt-Marie)

1961  Karneval (Carnival) (Olsson); Lustgården (The Pleasure Garden) (Kjellin) (as Anna); Nasjilje na Trgu (Square of Violence) (Bercovici) (as Maria)
1962  Ålskarinnan (The Swedish Mistress) (Sjöman) (as girl); Kort är sommaren (Pan; Short Is the Summer) (Henning-Jensen) (as Edvarda Mack)

1964  För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor (All These Women; Now about All These Women) (Bergman) (as Humian); Ön (The Island) (Sjöberg)
1965  Juninatt (June Night) (Liedholm); Syskonbädd 1782 (My Sister, My Love) (Sjöman)

1966  Scusi, tei è favorevole o contrario (Scusi lei è contrario o favorevole) (Sordi); Persona ( Masks) (Bergman) (as Nurse Alma); Duel at Diablo (Ralph Nelson) (as Ellen Grange)
1967  Le Viol (A Question of Rape; Overgreppet) (Doniol-Valcroze) (as Marianne Pescourt)

1968  Flickorna (The Girls) (Zetterling and Hughes); Svarta palmknoror ( Black Palm Trees) (Lindgren)

1969  Storia di una donna (Story of a Woman) (Bercovici) (as Karin Ullman); Una estate in quattro (L’isola) (Vancini); Taenk på ett tal (Think of a Number) (Kjaerulf-Schmidt); En passion (A Passion; The Passion of Anna) (Bergman) (as Eva Vergerus)

1970  The Kremlin Letter (Huston) (as Erika Bök)
1971  Beröringen (The Touch) (Bergman) (as Karin Vergerus);
Ingmar Bergman ( Bjorkman) (as interviewee)
1972  Chelovek s drugoi storoni (The Man from the Other Side) (Yegorov)

1973  Scener ur ett äktenskap (Scenes from a Marriage) (Bergman—for TV, shortened version shown theatrically) (as Katarina); Afskedets timme (The Hour of Parting) (Holst)
1974  La rivale (The Rival; My Husband, His Mistress and I) (Gobbi)
1975  Il pleut sur Santiago (It Is Raining on Santiago) (Soto);
Blondy (Germicide; Vortex) (Gobbi)
1976  En däres försvartal (A Madman’s Defence) (Grede—for TV)
1977  I Never Promised You a Rose Garden (Ingen dans på roser) (Page) (as Dr. Fried)

1978  An Enemy of the People (Schaefer) (as Catherine Stockmann);
Justices (Cayatte); L’Amour en question (Cayatte) (as Catherine Dumas) Bibi Andersson in Persona

1979
The Concorde—Airport ’79 (Airport ’80—The Concorde) (Rich) (as Francine); Twee Vrouwen (Two Women; Twice a Woman; Second Touch) (Sluizer) (as Laura); Barnförbjudet (The Elephant Walk; Not for Children; The Elephant) (Bergenstråhle); Quintet (Altman) (as Ambrosia); A Look at Liv (Norway’s Liv Ullmann; Liv Ullmann’s Norway) (Kaplan—doc)

1980
Marmeladupproret (Marmalade Revolution) (Josephson and Nykvist); Prosperous Times

1981
I rödnar (I Blush) (Sjöman)

1982
Berget på månens baksida (Hjalström)

1983
Exposed (Toback) (as Margaret Carlson); Svarte fugler (Black Crows) (Glomm)

1984
Sista leken (The Last Summer) (Lindström)

1985
Wallenberg: A Hero’s Story (Lamont Johnson—for TV)

1986
Husmenna (Rosma); Pobre Mariposa (Poor Butterfly) (De La Torre) (as Gertrud)

1987
Duéños del silencio (Lemos) (as Swedish ambassador); Svart Gryning (Lemos); Babette’s Gæstebud (Babette’s Feast) (Axel) (as Lady-in-Waiting)

1988
Remando al Viento (Rowing with the Wind) (Suarez)

1989
Fordringsagare (Creditors) (Bohm) (as Tekla)

1992
Una Estacion de paso (Whistle Stop) (Querejeta) (as Lise)

1994
Dromspel (Dreamplay) (Straume) (as Victoria); Il Sogno della farfalla (The Butterfly’s Dream) (Belloccio) (as Mother)

1996
I rollernt tre (Olofson—doc) (as herself)

1998
Achot K’ianah Achot G’dolah (Little Big Sister) (Narrator); Längtans blåa blomma (—for TV, as Mrs. Tidrén)

Publications

By ANDERSSON: article—

On ANDERSSON: books—

On ANDERSSON: articles—

* * *

While still in her teens, Bibi Andersson began making her rounds of the film studios in Sweden; and her first important role was as an extra in a publicity film made by the man who discovered her, Ingmar Bergman. To further her career she took lessons at the Stockholm Drama School, and made her stage debut in a potato cellar that was the best known avant-garde theater in Stockholm in the early 1950s.

Following her theater training which included study at the Royal Dramatic Theater School from 1954–56, and a series of bit parts in films, Andersson made her first memorable screen appearance in a small role in Smiles of a Summer Night, thereby joining the wonderful company of actors who played in Bergman’s films of the 1950s and 1960s.

Like other European-trained actors, Andersson’s work is not an emotionally cathartic experience, but rather an exercise of knowledge and technique, as her versatility proves. Following her role in The Seventh Seal, as the wife in the pair of fairground innocents who survive the destruction of the knight and his family after the apocalypse, she played the hitchhiker in Wild Strawberries, again projecting a youthful helpfulness and innocence. Her portrayal of the unmarried mother in Brink of Life revealed a broader range and won her an award at Cannes (along with Ingrid Thulin for the same film).

With the exception of a role in Now about All These Women, Andersson did not work with Bergman for six years. Their collaboration resumed with her most important film, Persona, in which she established herself as an actress of international stature. This masterpiece owes much to Andersson’s brilliance and is evidence of her greater emotional experience than was apparent in her earlier work. Playing opposite Liv Ullmann as the mute Elisabeth, Andersson was required to carry the dialogue of the film. A mutual transference of personae occurs, signified by the merging of their images on screen. The film required of Andersson an enormous extension of her talent; her submission to the film’s somewhat cruel objectivity attested to Andersson’s dedication—not only to the aims of Bergman’s films but also to the demands made by a role of extraordinary emotional complexity. The characterization did much to erase the rather condescending view of her as a pleasant, lightweight actress, and elevated her to the first rank of Bergman’s ensemble, along with Thulin and Ullmann.

Andersson then made a number of films with other Swedish directors, and worked again with Bergman in a supporting part in The Passion of Anna, in a central role opposite Elliott Gould in The Touch, and in a brief appearance in one episode of Scenes from a Marriage, which would be the last films they made together. In The Touch she turned in a performance that established her, according to one critic, as the warmest and most free-spirited of Bergman’s women, both robust and compassionate.

Through her connection with Bergman, Andersson has been associated with Sweden’s most famous international director, and through her marriage to the director Kjell Grede she has been linked to the New Wave of Swedish film. Interestingly enough she never made a theatrical film with Grede, but did appear in Vilgot Sjöman’s My Sister, My Love, Lars-Magnus Lindgren’s Black Palm Trees, and Mai Zetterling’s The Girls. Like Ullmann and Thulin she has also appeared in a number of international films, usually wasting her talent. In such movies as John Huston’s The Kremlin Letter, Sergio Gobbi’s Blondy, Anthony Page’s I Never Promised You a Rose Garden, George Schaefer’s An Enemy of the People, and Robert Altman’s Quintet, Andersson has not been able to achieve the level of performance attained in the finest of her Swedish films.

Andersson has also performed in numerous stage productions, including her 1973 Broadway debut in Otto Preminger’s Full Circle, After the Fall, Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, and The Night of the Tribades. She performed in Bergman’s 1993 production of Ibsen’s Peer Gynt, and in his 1995 production of Shakespeare’s A Winter’s Tale, both at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. She also directed a play in Stockholm about Strindberg’s women, and a production of Sam Shepard’s True West at the Royal Dramatic Theater of Sweden.

—Charles L. P. Silet, updated by Kelly Otter

ANDERSSON, Harriet

Films as Actress:

1950 Medan staden sover (While the City Sleeps) (Kjellgren); Anderssonskans Kalke (Mrs. Andersson’s Charlie) (Husberg) (as Majken); Motorkavalierer (Cavaliers on the Road) (Ahrlé); Två trappor över gärden (Backyard) (Werner)

1951 Biffen och Bananen (Beef and the Banana) (Husberg); Puck heter jag (My Name Is Puck) (Bauman); Därkapsens hus (House of Folly) (Ekman); Frönskild (Divorced) (Molander) (as applicant)

1952 Sabotage (Jonssson); Ubåt 39 (U-boat 39) (Faustman); Trots (Defiance) (Molander)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Sommaren med Monika (Summer with Monika)</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
<td>(title role); Gycklarnas afton (Sawdust and Tinsel; The Naked Night)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>En lektion i kärlek (A Lesson in Love)</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
<td>(as Nix)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Hoppsan! (Olin); Kvinnodröm (Dreams; Journey into Autumn)</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
<td>(as Doris); Sommarnattens leende (Smiles of a Summer Night)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Sista par ut (The Last Couple Out; Last Pair Out)</td>
<td>Sjöberg</td>
<td>(as Anita)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Symnöve Solbakken</td>
<td>Hellström</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Kvinna i leopard (Woman in Leopardskin; Woman in a Leopardskin Coat)</td>
<td>Jan Molander; Flottans överman (Commander of the Navy)</td>
<td>(Olin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Brott i Paradiset (Crime in Paradise)</td>
<td>Kjellgren; Noc Poslubna (Häätö: En Bröllopssnatt; Wedding Night)</td>
<td>(Blomberg)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Såsom i en spegel (Through a Glass Darkly)</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
<td>(as Karin, the daughter); Barbara (Wisbar)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Siska</td>
<td>Kjellin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Lyckodrömmen (Dream of Happiness)</td>
<td>Abramson; En söndag i september (A Sunday in September)</td>
<td>(Jörn Donner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor (All These Women; Now about All These Women)</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
<td>(as Isolde); Att älska (To Love)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>För vänkaps skull (Just Like Friends; For Friendship)</td>
<td>Abramson; Lianbron (The Vine Bridge; The Vine Garden)</td>
<td>(Nykvist); Här börjar äventyret (Täällä Alkaa Seikkula; Adventure Starts Here)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Ormen (The Serpent)</td>
<td>Abramson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Deadly Affair</td>
<td>Lumet</td>
<td>(as Ann Dobbs); “Han-hon” (“He-She”) ep. of Stimulanta (Jörn Donner)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Jag älskar, du är skar (I Love, You Love)</td>
<td>Björkman; Flickorna (The Girls)</td>
<td>(Zetterling and Hughes) (as Marianne); Kampf um Rom (Fight for Rome)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Kampf um Rom II (Fight for Rome II)</td>
<td>Siodmak</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Anna (Jörn Donner)</td>
<td>(title role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>I havsbandet (The Sea’s Hold; On the Archipelago Boundary)</td>
<td>Lagerkvist—for TV</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Väskningar och rop (Cries and Whispers)</td>
<td>Bergman</td>
<td>(as Agnes)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Bebek (Baby)</td>
<td>Barbro and Karabuda—for TV</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Kallelsen (Nykvist)</td>
<td>(as narrator)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>“Den vita väggen” (“The White Wall”) ep. of Två Kvinnor (Two Women)</td>
<td>Björkman—ep. also shown separately; Monismanien 1995 (Monismania 1995)</td>
<td>(Fant)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1977 Hempas bar (Triumph Tiger ’57; Cry of Triumph) (Thelestam)
1979 Linus eller Tegelhusets hemlighet (Linus) (Sjöman); La sabina (The Sabina) (Borau) (as Monica)
1982 Fanny och Alexander (Fanny and Alexander) (Bergman) (as Justina)
1983 Raskenstam (Raskenstam—The Casanova of Sweden) (Hellström) (as Cecilia Andersson)
1985 De Två Saliga (These Blessed Two) (Bergman—for TV) (as Viveka Burman)
1986 Gösta Berlings Saga (Lagerkvist)
1987 Sommarkväller på Jorden (Lindblom) (as Magda)
1988 Himmel och Helvete (Armred) (as Jasmin)
1990 Blankt Vapen (Nykvist) (as Mama)
1993 Hvoree enn Himmelen (Beyond the Sky) (as Miss Kjaer)
1996 I rollerna tre (Olfson—doc) (as herself)
1997 Emma åklagare (Alfredson, Klänge) (Rebecka); Selma & Johanna-en roadmovie (Magnier) (as Karin)
1998 Pip-Larssons (Dahlman, Lindberg—for TV) (as Fröken Lur); Längtans blåa blomma (Öskarsson—for TV) (as Mrs. Tidrén); Det Sjunde skottet (Aldevinge)
1999 Happy End (Olofson) (as Marja)

Publications

On ANDERSSON: articles—

* * *

Of the many remarkable actresses associated with the work of Ingmar Bergman, Harriet Andersson has been perhaps the most versatile, yet there is a common denominator to all her seemingly diverse characterizations: sensuality (or, in certain cases, its frustration or repression). It is the keynote of the performance that established her as a major Bergman star, in the title role of Summer with Monica: apparently slutish, shallow, and self-centered, the character is redeemed (both for Bergman and for the audience) partly by the film’s graphic account of her squallid, miserable background, but more by her spontaneous, animal-like physicality. In the film’s privileged moment, Bergman abruptly breaks the predominantly naturalistic, sequence-shot treatment of most of the film to isolate her face in close-up. As the background darkens, she stares straight into the camera, at us, defying us to ‘‘cast the first stone.’’ Though the characterizations and contexts are quite different, Andersson’s portrayals of the circus-owner’s mistress in The Naked Night and the pert and experienced maidservant in Smiles of a Summer Night utilize the same basic trait of unashamed and unrepresed sensuality.

It is this basic premise of Andersson’s image (as a Bergman star) that makes so moving the anguish of her more overtly serious roles in later films. In Through a Glass Darkly her physicality finds no release, caught as she is between a dull, well-meaning, unimaginative husband and a father who clinically studies her decline into schizophrenia; her ultimate breakdown is provoked by her desperate seduction of her younger brother in the womblike hull of an abandoned boat. The breakdown itself takes a hideously physical form: the hallucination of being violated by God in the form of a monstrous spider.

Andersson’s Agnes in Cries and Whispers builds on her sensuality in another way: haggard, emaciated, eaten away by cancer, her whole body expresses the physical experience of pain perhaps more vividly than it has ever been expressed in the cinema. The significance of her scene of physical contact with the maid Anna has been much debated: is it maternal or lesbian? As the infant’s first erotic experiences involve intimate contact with the mother, it can clearly be both, a reading strongly supported by Andersson’s persona. Her most recent appearance in a Bergman theatrical film—as the middle-aged maidservant in the household of the repressive stepfather in Fanny and Alexander—again plays on Andersson’s physicality: the character’s sexual repression (sexuality perverted into mean-spirited aggression) expresses itself in the physical symptoms of open sores.

—Robin Wood

ANDREWS, Dana

Films as Actor:

1940 Lucky Cisco Kid (Humberstone) (as Sergeant Dunn); Sailor’s Lady (Dwan) (as Scrappy Wilson); The Westerner (Wyler) (as Bart Coble); Kit Carson (Seitz) (as Capt. John C. Fremont)
1941 Tobacco Road (John Ford) (as Dr. Tim); Belle Starr (Cummings) (as Maj. Thomas Crail); Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Renoir) (as Ben)
1942 Ball of Fire (Hawks) (as Joe Lilac); Berlin Correspondent (Forde) (as Bill Roberts)
1943 Crash Dive (Mayo) (as Lt. Cdr. Dewey Connors); The Oxbow Incident (Strange Incident) (Wellman) (as Donald Martin); The North Star (Armored Attack) (Milestone) (as Kolya); December 7th (Toland and Ford)
1944 Up in Arms (Nugent) (as Joe); The Purple Heart (Milestone) (as Capt. Harvey Ross); Wing and a Prayer (Hathaway) (as Moulton); Laura (Preminger) (as Mark McPherson)
Dana Andrews (top) with Frederick March (right) and Harold Russell in The Best Years of Our Lives

1945 State Fair (Walter Lang) (as Pat Gilbert); Fallen Angel (Preminger) (as Eric Stanton); A Walk in the Sun (Milestone) (as Sergeant Tyne); Know Your Enemy: Japan (as narrator)

1946 Canyon Passage (Jacques Tourneur) (as Logan Stuart); The Best Years of Our Lives (Wyler) (as Fred Derry)

1947 Boomerang (Kazan) (as Henry L. Harvey); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger) (as Dan O’Mara); Night Song (Cromwell) (as Dan)

1948 The Iron Curtain (Wellman) (as Igor Gouzenko); Deep Waters (King) (as Hod Stilwell); No Minor Vices (Milestone) (as Perry Aswell)

1949 The Forbidden Street (Britannia Mews) (Negulesco) (as Herbert Lambert/Gilbert Lauderdale); Sword in the Desert (Sherman) (as Mike Dillon)

1950 My Foolish Heart (Robson) (as Walt Dreiser); Where the Sidewalk Ends (Preminger) (as Mark Dixon); Edge of Doom (Stronger Than Fear) (Robson) (as Father Roth)

1951 Sealed Cargo (Werker) (as Pat Bannon); The Frogmen (Lloyd Bacon) (as Flannigan); I Want You (Robson) (as Martin Greer)

1952 Assignment Paris (Parrish) (as Jimmy Race)

1954 Elephant Walk (Dieterle) (as Dick Carver); Duel in the Jungle (George Marshall) (as Scott Walters); Three Hours to Kill (Werker) (as Jim Guthrie)

1955 Smoke Signal (Jerry Hopper) (as Brett Halliday); Strange Lady in Town (LeRoy) (as Rork O’Brien)

1956 Comanche (Sherman) (as Read); While the City Sleeps (Fritz Lang) (as Ed Mobley); Beyond a Reasonable Doubt (Fritz Lang) (as Tom Garrett); Hollywood Goes A-Fishing

1957 Night of the Demon (Jacques Tourneur) (as John Holden); Spring Reunion (Pirosh) (as Fred Davis); Zero Hour (Bartlett) (as Ted Stryker)

1958 The Fearmakers (Jacques Tourneur); Enchanted Island (Dwan)

1960 The Crowded Sky (Pevney) (as Dick Barnett)

1962 Madison Avenue (Humberstone) (as Clint Lorimer)

1965 In Harm’s Way (Preminger) (as Admiral Broderick); The Satan Bug (John Sturges) (as the General); Crack in the World (Marton) (as Stephen Sorensen); Brainstorm (Conrad) (as Cort Benson); Town Tamer (Selander); The Loved One (Richardson) (as Gen. Brinkson); *Battle of the Bulge
Andrews looks like the average nice guy, but because of his groomed, and possessing a rich baritone voice, Andrews epitomizes the movie star of 1940s: handsome but rugged, smooth but vulnerable. Andrews looks like the average nice guy, but because of his often inscrutable countenance, he can become a morally ambiguous figure.

Andrews left a secure job as an accountant in Texas to go to Hollywood in the early 1930s. For the next several years, he worked odd jobs and performed at the Pasadena Playhouse. In 1938, he was “discovered” and signed to a contract with Samuel Goldwyn. In 1940, Andrews made his screen debut in The Westerner. Fox purchased half of Andrews’s contract, and his performance in Tobacco Road moved him into A pictures. In 1941, Andrews appeared in Jean Renoir’s Swamp Water, a simple, atmospheric film Andrews recalled as one of his favorites.

In 1943, Andrews moved closer to star status with his convincing portrayal of Donald Martin, the young rancher hanged by the lynching mob in The Ox Bow Incident. His position at Fox improved as well, for that same year two of Zanuck’s well-established stars, Tyrone Power and Henry Fonda, joined the armed services. Andrews, in his thirties with two children, was ineligible for enlistment, and Fox once again “discovered” Andrews, who looked like a handsome young man in his twenties. He established himself as a star through his solid and appealing performances in a trio of war films: The North Star, The Purple Heart, and Wing and a Prayer. Goldwyn decided to use Andrews as the romantic lead in Up in Arms, and from there, he played romantic leads in a second trio of films: Laura, Fallen Angel, and State Fair.

In Laura, Andrews demonstrates his ability to play troubled or morally ambiguous characters. His tightly controlled portrayal of the detective entranced with the woman whose (apparent) murder he is investigating finds a perfect match in Gene Tierney’s masklike elegance, and his performance is charged with sexuality, for his character’s interest in the case suggests sensitivity, integrity—and moral deviance. In The Best Years of Our Lives, Andrews’s portrait of the troubled but admirable young captain draws its power from the distance Andrews maintains from the other characters—and the audience—except in moments of controlled revelation. In Boomerang, Andrews’s portrayal of the conscience-driven district attorney is compelling because it is so guardedly reserved; an expression that passes through Andrews’s eyes when he first interviews the alleged murderer is the only sign we have that the attorney will work to defend the man he is supposed to prosecute.

In the late 1940s, Andrews began looking for small-scale projects to produce independently. The studios had other plans. Throughout the 1950s and 1960s, Andrews was cast in remakes (I Want You, Brainstorm), war films (In Harm’s Way, The Battle of the Bulge), spy melodramas (Assignment Paris, The Fearmakers), and mad-scientist thrillers (Crack in the World, The Frozen Dead). Rather than playing complex characters in well-directed films, Andrews appeared in a series of humorless, one-dimensional roles, and his reputation became tied to the declining status of Hollywood “studio pictures.”

Andrews looked to other venues for work. He had been involved in theater throughout the 1940s and early 1950s as a founding member of the “Eighteen Actors” Company, and in the late 1950s, Andrews returned to theater in earnest. In 1958, he began a two-year run on Broadway in Two for the Seesaw, and in the 1960s he appeared in stage productions of A Man for All Seasons, The Odd Couple, and Plaza Suite. He continued in theater throughout the 1970s. From 1969 to 1972 Andrews appeared in the soap opera Bright Promise. Andrews’s movie career reactivated in the 1970s. He was part of the star-studded cast that made Airport 1975 a box-office success. And, as an actor emblematic of Hollywood’s golden age, Andrews helped create the portrait of “old Hollywood” in The Last Tycoon.

A tough guy and a gentleman, Andrews’s most memorable characters are always in perfect control of themselves, but that control is the result of great effort, for Andrews’s underplaying conveys characters’ attempts not to show how deeply situations affect them.

—Cynthia Baron
ANDREWS, Julie

Films as Actress:

1964  Mary Poppins (Stevenson) (title role); The Americanization of Emily (Hiller) (title role)
1965  The Sound of Music (Wise) (as Maria)
1966  Torn Curtain (Hitchcock) (as Sarah Sherman); Hawaii (George Roy Hill) (as Jerusha Bromley)
1967  Thoroughly Modern Millie (George Roy Hill) (title role); The Singing Princess (animation) (as voice of Princess Zeila)
1968  Star! (Wise) (as Gertrude Lawrence)
1970  Darling Lili (Edwards) (title role)
1974  The Tamarind Seed (Edwards) (as Judith Farrow)
1979  10 (Edwards) (as Sam)
1980  Little Miss Marker (Bernstein) (as Amanda)
1981  S.O.B. (Edwards) (as Sally Miles)
1982  Victor/Victoria (Edwards) (title role)
1983  The Man Who Loved Women (Edwards) (as Marianna)
1984  Hanya: Portrait of a Dance Legend (Cristofoti)
1985  Pandora’s Box (Heath)
1986  Duet for One (Konchalovsky) (as Stephanie Anderson); That’s Life! (Edwards) (as Gillian Fairchild)
1991  Our Sons (Erman—for TV) (as Audrey Grant)
1992  A Fine Romance (Tchin-Tchin) (Saks) (as Pamela Picquet); Julie (Edwards—series for TV) (as Julie Carlisle)
1995  The Sound of Julie Andrews
1998  Hey Mr. Producer (as Host/Herself—for video); A Winter Visitor; One Special Night (Young—for TV)
1999  My Favorite Broadway: The Leading Ladies (as Host/Herself—for TV)
2000  Relative Values (as Felicity)

Publications

By ANDREWS: books—

By ANDREWS: articles—

On ANDREWS: books—

On ANDREWS: articles—

* * * *

Julie Andrews’s cinematic persona was established with her first appearance on screen as the magical title character in Walt Disney’s Mary Poppins (one of the top grossing films of all time). Her performance a year later as Maria von Trapp in The Sound of Music further reinforced her popular “sweetness and light” image, and the movie was an unprecedented financial success. This, together with her Academy Award for Mary Poppins, placed Andrews at the forefront of bankable Hollywood stars of the 1960s. Winning the Oscar for Mary Poppins was also a personal coup for Andrews. Just before getting the role, she had lost the movie role of Eliza Doolittle—a character she had brought to life in the Broadway production of My Fair Lady—to Audrey Hepburn.

After a while, Andrews became tired of this squeaky clean screen image and like most actors, sought different kinds of roles. Unfortunately, however, a subsequent string of box-office failures, as well as several atypical film roles, failed to alter the picture of Andrews that had become so firmly entrenched in the moviegoing public’s mind, and it is only in her more recent films with her husband, director Blake Edwards, that the actress has succeeded (at least partially) in changing the sugary image that has followed her throughout her career. With the exception of Victor/Victoria, however, these movies did not really showcase her talent.

The phenomenal impact of Andrews’s debut in films coincided with the final days of the traditional movie musical. The decade’s increasing desire for realism and relevancy led to an inevitable decline in stories that allowed their characters to express themselves in song and dance. Andrews, however, was a former child star of British revues and a very successful Broadway star (The Boy Friend, My Fair Lady, Camelot) and her theatrical training made her ideally suited to the filmmaking style that had had its heyday in the Hollywood musicals of the 1940s and 1950s. Yet the very films that brought her international acclaim, also made it impossible for audiences—and producers—to envision her in realistic, nonmusical roles at just the time that such roles were the only ones available.

Andrews’s portrayals of Mary Poppins and Maria von Trapp—roles that so marked and, in effect, pigeonholed her career—are nevertheless separate and distinct performances. She creates in the former a strict but loving figure whose no-nonsense manner hides magical powers and enables her to regard them as commonplace. While Mary Poppins is all-knowing and supremely confident, the young novice Maria is inexperienced, naive, and frequently unsure of herself. Both roles are made memorable by Andrews’s fresh, energetic style, a quality which would also color her work in such later films as Thoroughly Modern Millie, Star!, and Victor/Victoria. Yet her early dramatic parts in The Americanization of Emily, Torn Curtain, and Hawaii demonstrated Andrews’s ability to handle nonsinging characters with quiet assurance, although her reception in these roles was never equal to that accorded her musical work.

In recent years, however, Andrews’s films with Blake Edwards have given a new direction in her career. Although their first film together, the box-office disaster Darling Lili, proved professionally damaging to both, Edwards has succeeded in broadening his wife’s public image by casting her in a series of uncharacteristic roles. In the popular 10, Andrews gives a much underrated performance as the intelligent, outspoken woman Dudley Moore forsakes to pursue Bo Derek, while the savagely funny S.O.B. finds Andrews’s playing a spoof of her own on-screen persona. The latter includes a brief, highly publicized scene in which she appears topless. Victor/Victoria dealt the final blow to Andrews’s pristine image, presenting her as a woman masquerading as a “male” female impersonator in Edwards’s sophisticated examination of sexual lifestyles and stereotypes. (In 1996 Andrews appeared on Broadway in Victor/Victoria, once again on stage where she first began her show biz career.) The Academy Award nomination for her performance suggested that Andrews had at last broken free of her “singing governess” image and had embarked on a promising new phase in her career.

—Janet E. Lorenz, updated by Linda J. Stewart

ANN-MARGRET

Films as Actress:
1961 Pocketful of Miracles (Frank Capra) (as Louise)
1962 State Fair (José Ferrer) (as Emily Porter)
1963 Bye-Bye Birdie (Sidney) (as Kim McAfee)
1964  Viva Las Vegas (Sidney) (as Rusty Martin);  Kitten with a Whip (Heyes) (as Jody Dvorak);  The Pleasure Seekers (Negulesco) (as Fran Hobson)
1965  Bus Riley’s Back in Town (Harvey Hart) (as Laurel);  Once a Thief (Ralph Nelson) (as Kristine Pedak);  The Cincinnati Kid (Negulesco) (as Fran Hobson)
1966  Made in Paris (Sagal) (as Maggie Scott);  Stagecoach (Gordon Douglas) (as Dallas);  The Swinger (Sidney) (as Kelly Olsson);  Murderers’ Row (Henry Levin) (as Suzie Solaris)
1967  The Criminal Affair; Rebus (Zanchin);  Il Tigre (The Tiger and the Pussycat) (Dino Risi) (as Carolina);  Il Profeta (The Prophet; Mr. Kinky) (Dino Risi)
1968  Sette uomini e un Cervello (Criminal Symphony; Seven Men and One Brain) (Edward Ross)
1970  C.C. and Company (Chrome Hearts) (Robbie) (as Ann McCalley);  R.P.M. (Stanley Kramer) (as Rhoda)
1971  Carnal Knowledge (Mike Nichols) (as Bobbie);  Dames at Sea (for TV)
1973  The Train Robbers (Burt Kennedy) (as Mrs. Lowe);  Un Homme est Mort (The Outside Man; Funerale a Los Angeles) (Deray) (as Nancy Robson)
1975  Tommy (Ken Russell) (as Nora Walker Hobbs)
1976  Folies bourgeoisie (The Twist) (Chabrol) (as Charlie Minerva)
1977  Joseph Andrews (Tony Richardson) (as Lady Booby);  The Last Remake of Beau Geste (Marty Feldman) (as Lady Flavia Geste)
1978  The Cheap Detective (Robert Moore) (as Jezebel Dezire);  Magic (Attenborough) (as Peggy Ann Snow)
1979  The Villain (Needham) (as Charming Jones)
1980  Middle Age Crazy (John Trent) (as Sue Ann)
1982  The Return of the Soldier (Alan Bridges) (as Jennie Baldry);  I Ought to Be in Pictures (Herbert Ross) (as Stephanie);  Lookin’ to Get Out (Ashby) (as Patti Warner)
1983  Who Will Love My Children? (Erman—for TV) (as Lucile Fray)
1984  A Streetcar Named Desire (Erman—for TV) (as Blanche DuBois)
1985  Twice in a Lifetime (Yorkin) (as Audrey Minelli)
1986  52 Pick-Up (Frankenheimer) (as Barbara Mitchell)
1988  A Tiger’s Tale (Peter Douglas) (as Rose Butts);  A New Life (Alda) (as Jackie Giardino)
1991  Our Sons (Erman—for TV) (as Luanne Barnes)
1992  Newsies (Ortega) (as Medda Larkson)
1993  Grumpy Old Men (Donald Petrie) (as Ariel Truax)
1994  Following Your Heart (Lee Grant—for TV); Nobody’s Children (Wheatley—for TV) (as Carol Stevens)
1995  Grumpier Old Men (Deutch) (as Ariel Trux Gustafson) Seduced by Madness: The Diane Borchardt Story (John Patterson—for TV) (title role); Blue Rodeo (Peter Werner III—for TV) (as Maggie Yearwood)
1998  Life of the Party: The Pamela Harriman Story (Hussein—for TV) (as Pamela Harriman); Four Corners (as Amanda Wyatt—for TV)
1999  Blonde (Carol Oates—for TV); Perfect Murder, Perfect Town (Schiller—for TV) (as Maggie Yearwood)
2000  Anne of the Indies (as Ariel Truax Gustafson); Any Given Sunday (Stone) (as Margaret Pagniacci)

Publications

By ANN-MARGRET: book—

By ANN-MARGRET: articles—

On ANN-MARGRET: book—

On ANN-MARGRET: articles—

* * *

The Swedish-born Ann-Margret began her film career as the ingenue in the Frank Capra film Pocketful of Miracles, holding her own opposite luminaries Bette Davis and Glenn Ford, an omen, certainly, of her considerable presence and ability. A more important personal success was achieved with the musical Bye, Bye, Birdie, in which Ann-Margret exhibited her abundant skills as a singer and dancer, energizing the film with her powerful sexuality as well as with her innocence and fresh charm.

In Viva Las Vegas, one of the most underrated musicals of the American cinema, Ann-Margret played opposite Elvis Presley—providing Presley one of his few memorable co-stars. Indeed, in Viva Las Vegas, Ann-Margret exuded an undulating sexuality and unbridled energy so overwhelming that her musical scenes with Presley reflect the Zeitgeist of the sexual revolution of the sixties.

Ann-Margret followed Viva Las Vegas with a series of films that cemented—rather unfortunately for her—her reputation as a sex kitten. Films such as Kitten with a Whip and Bus Riley’s Back in Town created a rather tawdry image which critics of the time found necessary to ridicule. Not surprisingly, her often sensitive performances—as, for instance, the vulnerable wife in Once a Thief, opposite Alain Delon—were ignored. The critical nadir to her career occurred at the end of the sixties, when, after a series of foreign films disrespected by Hollywood, she returned to the United States to star opposite the rather wooden football player, Joe Namath, in a motorcycle melodrama, C.C. and Company, produced by her husband Roger Smith; and in Stanley Kramer’s R.P.M., an unconvincing Vietnam-era drama about student protest on a college campus. Rather unfairly, Ann-Margret had become a joke.

Her critical comeback occurred in 1971, when Mike Nichols cast her opposite Jack Nicholson in Carnal Knowledge. As Nicholson’s mistress, Bobbie, Ann-Margret played a woman whose very essence had been defined by her large breasts and sexuality. Nicholson’s film, based on the script by Jules Feiffer, showed persuasively how that had been defined by her large breasts and sexuality. Nichols’s film, based on the script by Jules Feiffer, showed persuasively how that

In Carnal Knowledge, Ann-Margret exuded an undulating sexuality and unbridled energy so overwhelming that her musical scenes with Presley reflect the Zeitgeist of the sexual revolution of the sixties.

In Viva Las Vegas, one of the most underrated musicals of the American cinema, Ann-Margret played opposite Elvis Presley—providing Presley one of his few memorable co-stars. Indeed, in Viva Las Vegas, Ann-Margret exuded an undulating sexuality and unbridled energy so overwhelming that her musical scenes with Presley reflect the Zeitgeist of the sexual revolution of the sixties.

Ann-Margret followed Viva Las Vegas with a series of films that cemented—rather unfortunately for her—her reputation as a sex kitten. Films such as Kitten with a Whip and Bus Riley’s Back in Town created a rather tawdy image which critics of the time found necessary to ridicule. Not surprisingly, her often sensitive performances—as, for instance, the vulnerable wife in Once a Thief, opposite Alain Delon—were ignored. The critical nadir to her career occurred at the end of the sixties, when, after a series of foreign films disrespected by Hollywood, she returned to the United States to star opposite the rather wooden football player, Joe Namath, in a motorcycle melodrama, C.C. and Company, produced by her husband Roger Smith; and in Stanley Kramer’s R.P.M., an unconvincing Vietnam-era drama about student protest on a college campus. Rather unfairly, Ann-Margret had become a joke.

Her critical comeback occurred in 1971, when Mike Nichols cast her opposite Jack Nicholson in Carnal Knowledge. As Nicholson’s mistress, Bobbie, Ann-Margret played a woman whose very essence had been defined by her large breasts and sexuality. Nichols’s film, based on the script by Jules Feiffer, showed persuasively how that simplistic definition was forced upon Bobbie by a sexist, male-dominated culture which refused to acknowledge or value other possibilities for a woman. That there was a certain autobiographical resonance to the role could not but help Ann-Margret to deliver what has been considered her greatest, most subtle, performance: vulnerable, hard-edged, pathetic, direct, emotional, brutally honest—a breakthrough Academy award-nominated performance which has prevented critics since from denigrating Ann-Margret’s talents or seeing her only in terms of her considerable sensuousness.

In fact, so rehabilitated was her reputation that Ann-Margret could afford to take the music and sex-oriented role of Tommy’s mother in Ken Russell’s version of the rock opera Tommy—in which a key scene had a sensuously clad Ann-Margret writhing in perhaps tons of baked beans. Her knockout performance was again nominated for an Academy Award.
Ann-Margret’s career since has alternated between her high-powered live Las Vegas shows spotlighting her singing and dancing with film and television roles generally requiring her to provide more subdued characterizations in serious drama. Her much-lauded performance in Who Will Love My Children? as a dying Iowa farm woman attempting to find homes for her ten children was heartbreakingly expressive—and indeed, was publicly praised by Barbara Stanwyck at an Emmy Awards ceremony as one of the best performances ever in the American cinema, as Stanwyck disparaged her own award for a competing performance. And as Blanche du Bois in a television version of Tennessee Williams’ A Streetcar Named Desire, Ann-Margret again received critical accolades, holding her own against the sacred memory of Vivien Leigh. Moving and honest performances can be found as well in The Return of the Soldier (playing an old maid opposite acting heavyweights Glenda Jackson and Julie Christie and comparing well), Twice in a Lifetime, The Two Mrs. Grenvilles, and the AIDS drama Our Sons.

Indeed, Ann-Margret’s confluence of sexuality with innocence and vulnerability is even more appealing as she moves through her mature middle-age. Yet if other performers who have drawn upon sexual personas or aggressive femininity have tended to display a coyness or self-consciousness (if they have not self-destructed, like Marilyn Monroe), Ann-Margret must be seen as always projecting a natural grace and intelligence, coupled with a sincerity and honesty so straightforward and unapologetic as to be almost unnerving.

Certainly, one must note that only a remarkably unselfconscious performer could take on so many roles which so shamelessly commented upon or exploited her own image—her comic turn in The Swinger, for instance, in which she plays a character with her own real last name (Olsson), who only pretends to be promiscuous to garner success; or roles that lampoon her own physical attributes—such as Lady Booby in Joseph Andrews, or Charming Jones in The Villain (which crosses Road Runner cartoons with Al Capp caricatures). Other elements also present in her trouper image—which have undoubtedly helped Ann-Margret sustain her popularity over the decades—are a certain coarseness; a connection to the blue-collar world; a populist appeal to women as well as men, straights as well as gays; and a lack of taste sometimes so outrageous as to itself become classy, if not camp.

—Charles Derry

---

ARBUCKLE, Roscoe (“Fatty”)

Nationality: American.
Born: Roscoe Conklin Arbuckle in Smith Center, Kansas, 24 March 1887; family moved to Santa Ana, California, in 1888.
Family: Married 1) the actress Minta Durfee, 1908 (divorced 1925); 2) Doris Deane, 1925 (divorced 1929); 3) Addie Oakley Dukes McPhail, 1932.
Career: 1895—stage debut in Frank Bacon’s stock company; 1902–08—toured in stock companies, and on vaudeville and burlesque circuits; 1908—worked as an extra for Colonel Selig’s Polyscope Company while continuing to perform in vaudeville; 1909—film debut in Ben’s Kid for Boggs; 1913—hired by Mack Sennett to replace Fred Mace in Keystone film comedies; later that year, he appeared with Mabel Normand in the first of a successful series of shorts starring the pair; 1914—allowed to devise and direct his own films; 1917—joined producer Joseph Schenk and headed his own studio, the Comique Film Company, in New York; Buster Keaton joined Arbuckle’s film company; later that year, the company moved to Long Beach, California; 1920—his first feature-length film released through Paramount; 1921—as a result of the scandal involving his arrest for the rape or manslaughter of a starlet, his films were banished from many theaters across the country though he was later acquitted; 1923—attempted comeback in Chicago nightclub; 1924—returned to vaudeville; 1925–32—directed films for Sennett’s Educational film company under the name William B. Goodrich while continuing to headline in vaudeville under his own name; 1932–33—in a series of talking shorts for Vitaphone Division of Warner Brothers.
Died: In New York, 29 June 1933.

Films as Actor:

(Shorts unless otherwise noted; contribution as director indicated where known):

- 1909 Ben’s Kid (Boggs); Mrs. Jones’ Birthday; Making It Pleasant for Him
- 1910 The Sanitarium (The Clinic) (Santschi)
1913 Alas! Poor Yorick (Colin Campbell) (as player in female costume); The Gangsters (Lehrman); Passions, He Had Three (Lehrman); Help! Help!; Hydrophobia! (Lehrman); The Waiters’ Picnic (Sennett); The Bandit (Sennett); Peeping Pete (Sennett); For the Love of Mabel (Lehrman); The Tell Tale Light (Sennett); A Noise from the Deep (Sennett); Love and Courage (Lehrman); Professor Bean’s Removal (Lehrman); The Riot (Sennett); Mabel’s New Hero (Sennett); Fatty’s Day Off (Wilfred Lucas); Mabel’s Dramatic Career (Sennett); The Gypsy Queen (Sennett); Mother’s Boy (Lehrman); The Fatal Taxicab (Sennett); When Dreams Come True (Sennett); Two Old Tars (Lehrman); A Quiet Little Wedding (Wilfred Lucas); The Speed Kings (Wilfred Lucas); Fatty at San Diego (George Nichols); Wine (George Nichols); Fatty Joins the Forces (George Nichols); The Woman Haters (Lehrman); Fatty’s Flirtation (George Nichols); His Sister’s Kids (George Nichols); He Would a Hunting Go (George Nichols); Ride for a Bride (George Nichols);

1914 A Misplaced Foot (Wilfred Lucas); The Under Sheriff (George Nichols); A Flirt’s Mistake (George Nichols); In the Clutches of the Gang (George Nichols); A Rebecca’s Wedding Day (George Nichols); A Robust Romeo (George Nichols); Twixt Love and Fire (George Nichols); A Film Johnnie (George Nichols); Tango Tangles (Sennett); His Favorite Pastime (George Nichols) (as fellow drunk); A Rural Dream (A Rival Demon) (Sennett and Lehrman); Barnyard Flirtations (A Barnyard Flirtation); Chicken Chaser (+d); A Bath House Beauty (+d); Where Hazel Met the Villain (+d); A Suspended Ordeal (+d); The Water Dog (+d); The Alarm (+co-d); The Knockout (Avery); Fatty and the Heiress (+co-d); Fatty’s Finish (+d); Love and Bullets (+d); A Rowboat Romance (+d); The Sky Pirate (+co-d); Those Happy Days (+d); That Minstrel Man (+d); Those Country Kids (+d); Fatty’s Gift (+co-d); The Masquerader (The Maskerade) (Chaplin); A Brand New Hero (+co-d); The Rounders (Chaplin); Lover’s Luck (+d); Fatty’s Debut (+co-d); Fatty Again (+d); Their Ups and Downs (+d); Zip, the Dodger (+d); Lovers’ Post Office (+d); An Incompetent Hero (+d); Fatty’s Jonah Day (+co-d); Fatty’s Wine Party (+co-d); The Sea Nymphs (+d); Leading Lizzie Astray (+co-d); Shotguns that Kick (+d); Fatty’s Magic Pants (Fatty’s Magic Party; Fatty’s Suitless Day) (+co-d); Fatty and Minnie He-Haw (Fatty’s Minnie-He-Haw) (+co-d); Our Country Cousin; Caught in a Flue; The Baggage Smasher; Tillie’s Punctured Romance (Sennett); Killing Horace; The Bowery Boys; Lover’s Post Office; How Hiram Won Out; The Peddler

1915 Mabel and Fatty’s Wash Day (+d); Mabel and Fatty’s Simple Life (Fatty and Mabel’s Simple Life) (+d); Fatty and Mabel at the San Diego Exposition (+d); Mabel, Fatty, and the Law (+d); Fatty’s New Role (+co-d); Mabel and Fatty’s Married Life (Fatty and Mabel’s Married Life) (+d); Fatty’s Reckless Fling (+d); Fatty’s Chance Acquaintance (+d); Love in Armor (+d); That Little Band of Gold (+co-d); Fatty’s Faithful Fido (+co-d); When Love Took Wings (+d); Wished on Mabel (+d); Mabel and Fatty Viewing the World’s Fair at San Francisco, California (+d); Mabel’s Wilful Way (+d); Miss Fatty’s Seaside Lovers (+d); The Little Teacher (Small Town Bully) (Sennett); Fatty’s Plucky Pup (+d); Fatty’s Tintype Tangle (+d); Fickle Fatty’s Fall (+d); The Village Scandal (+d); Fatty and the Broadway Stars (+co-d); Run and Wallpaper; Colored Villainy; Among the Mourners

1916 Fatty and Mabel Adrift (+d); He Did and He Didn’t (Love and Lobsters) (+d); The Bright Lights (The Lure of Broadway) (as cook, + d); His Wife’s Mistake (as janitor, + d); The Other Man (+d); The Waiters’ Ball (+d); His Alibi (+d); A Cream Puff Romance (A Reckless Romeo) (+d)

1917 The Butcher Boy (+d, sc); The Rough House (+d, sc); His Wedding Night (+d, sc); Oh, Doctor! (+d, sc); Fatty at Coney Island (+d, sc); A Country Hero (+d, sc)

1918 Out West (+d, sc); The Bell Boy (title role, +d, sc); Moonshine (as Chief Revenue Officer, + d, sc); Good Night, Nurse! (+d, sc); The Cook (+d, sc); The Sheriff (title role, +d, sc)

1919 Camping (+d, sc); The Pullman Porter (+d, sc); Love (+d, sc) (as farm boy); The Bank Clerk (+d, sc); A Desert Hero (+d, sc); Back Stage (+d, sc); The Hayseed (+d, sc); The Garage (as fire chief, + d, sc)

1920 The Round-Up (Melford—feature) (as Sheriff Slim Hoover); The Life of the Party (Henabery) (as Algernon Leary)

1921 Brewer’s Millions (Henabery—feature) (as Montgomery ‘Monty’ Brewer); The Dollar-a-Year Man (Cruze—feature) (as Franklin Pinney); The Traveling Salesman (Henabery—feature) (as Bob Blake); Gasoline Gus (Cruze—feature) (title role); Crazy to Marry (Cruze—feature) (as Dr. Hobart Hupp)

1922 Leap Year (Cruze—not released in U.S.) (as Stanley Piper); Freight Prepaid (Cruze—feature, not released in U.S.) (as Erastus Berry)

1923 Hollywood (Cruze—feature) (as man in casting office)

1925 Go West (Buster Keaton—feature) (as fat woman in department store)

1932 Hey, Pop!

1933 How’ve You Been? (feature); Buzzin’ Around; Close Relations; Tomalio (Ray McCarey); In the Dough

Films as Director Only:

1916 The Moonshiners (directed under name William B. Goodrich)

1924 Sherlock, Jr. (co-d with Buster Keaton)

1925 The Movies; The Tourist

1926 Cleaning Up; The Fighting Dude; Home Cured; My Stars; His Private Life; Fool’s Luck; One Sunday Morning

1927 Peaceful Oscar; The Red Mill (feature); Special Delivery

1930 Won by a Neck; Three Hollywood Girls; Si Si Senor; Up a Tree

1931 Crashing Hollywood; The Lure of Hollywood; Wendy Riley Goes Hollywood; Queenie of Hollywood; Honeymoon Trio; Ex-Plumber; Peat and Repeat; Marriage Rows; The Back Page; That’s My Line; Up Pops the Duke; Beach Pajamas; Take ‘em and Shake ‘em; That’s My Meat; One Quiet Night; Once a Hero; The Tamale Vendor; Smart Work; Idle Roomers

1932 Hollywood Luck; Anybody’s Goat; Moonlight and Cactus; Keep Laughing; Bridge Wives; Mother’s Holiday; Niagara Falls; Hollywood Lights; Gigolettes; It’s a Cinch
ARDANT, Fanny

Family: Daughters Lumir, Josephine (with François Truffaut) and Baladine. Education: University of Aix-en Provence, political science degree, 1970. Career: Worked briefly in London at the French Embassy, 1970; returned to France to act on stage and on television, 1970–1979: featured in television series Les Dames de la côte, where she was spotted by Truffaut, 1979; received critical acclaim as

* * *

Among the many shorts created by the Mack Sennett comedy mill, Roscoe “Fatty” Arbuckle’s movies remain significant contributions to the pioneer period of the one- and two-reel humorous cinema. After an apprenticeship in vaudeville and in short films for the Selig Polyscope Company as early as 1908, Arbuckle went on to such renown that eventually he was supervising his own films for Keystone. In 1913 he starred (often with Mabel Normand) in 47 films. As an actor, he enjoyed a fame second only to that of Chaplin, who began directing and playing leading roles in 1914, the same year that Sennett gave Arbuckle charge of a unit at Keystone.

Arbuckle had the right combination of obesity and agility to become a member of Sennett’s company. He was fleet-footed enough to dash about in the many chase scenes, and he could execute the frequent pratfalls that occurred in the frantic comedy of the Sennett studio. Early in his career he developed a charisma (the fat man as leading comic figure) that was almost as appealing as that projected by the much-loved John Bunny, a skillful actor who played middle-aged roles in genteel comedies. Arbuckle could play a variety of types: a likable country oaf, a lovesick suitor, a philandering husband. Eventually he moved away from the more primitive Keystone caricatures to a more solid comic creation: the young man next door trying to succeed.

Arbuckle developed a more independent style when he left Sennett to work for the Comique Film Corporation. There he created many effective two-reelers and introduced Buster Keaton to the screen as his supporting comedian. He left directing when he graduated to features in the early 1920s starring in Brewster’s Millions and Traveling Salesman.

Forced from the screen as a result of his involvement in one of Hollywood’s great sex scandals, Arbuckle became a filmmaker for Educational under the assumed name of William Goodrich. Such two-reelers as Cleaning Up in 1926 were minor efforts, but in 1927 he directed his first feature, The Red Mill (adapted from the musical by Victor Herbert). As an actor, the scandal that plagued him allowed him a chance at only bit parts. In the second period he created shorts for Educational for Educational and made a modest comeback by starring in some of them. Warner Brothers, under the subsidiary corporation Vitaphone, stared him in Hey, Pop!, Buzzin’ Around, How’ve You Been?, and Tomaiio in the early 1930s. The latter film was a broad farce set in South America. Director Ray McCarey, creator of Hal Roach shorts and a Laurel and Hardy feature, Pack Up Your Troubles, did little to help Arbuckle in what might have been a comeback. There were other problems too. A poverty of gag invention plagued this cheaply made two-reeler. Also, the comedian lacked the vocal skills necessary for the sound medium. In the climatic sequence, an obese man engaging in a foot race, the humor is crude. With such weak films Arbuckle did not have much of a chance, but had he been able to move on from such ventures to better parts in better films, he might have been a star again. Unfortunately, he died in 1933.

Arbuckle made a real contribution to the comedy film in his Keystone and Comique days. Also, he taught Buster Keaton all phases of filmmaking, and his student became one of the most important comedians the screen has known.

—Donald McCaffrey
Fanny Ardant with Bernard Girardeau in Ridicule

Films as Actress:

1978 Les Chiens (The Dogs) (Jessua); Le Mutant (Toublanc—Michel—for TV)
1979 Les Dames de la côte (Women of the Coast) (Companéez—for TV)
1981 Les Uns et les autres (They and the Others) (Bolero) (Lelouch); Le Chef de la famille (The Head of the Household) (Companéez—for TV) (as Katy); La Femme d’à côté (The Woman Next Door) (Truffaut) (as Mathilde Bauchard)
1983 Desiderio (Tato); Benvenuta (Welcome) (Batz and Delvaux) (title role); La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) (Resnais) (as Livia Cerasquier); Vivement dimanche! (Confidentially Yours) (Truffaut) (as Barbara Becker)
1984 Un amour de Swann (Love of Swann) (Schlöndorff) (as Duchesse de Guermantes); L’Amour à mort (Resnais)
1985 Vivement Truffaut (Suddenly Truffaut) (deGivray—for TV) (as herself); L’Été prochain (Next Summer) (Trintignant); Les Enragés (The Enraged) (Glenn) (as Jessica Melrose)
1986 Le Conseil de famille (Family Business) (Gouvras) (as The Mother); Le Paltoquet (Deville) (as Lotte); Mélo (Resnais) (as Christiane Levesque)
1987 La Famiglia (The Family) (Scola) (as Adriana)
1988 Médecins des hommes (Boisset and Corneau—for TV); Pauvre e amore (Love and Fear) (von Trotta) (as Velia)
1989 La Grande Cabriole (Companéez—for TV) (as Laure de Chabrollant); Pleure pas my love (Gatlif); Australia (Andrien) (as Jeanne Gauthier)
1990 Aventure de Catherine C. (The Adventure of Catherine C.) (Beuchot) (title role)
1991 Afraid of the Dark (Peploe) (as Miriam); Rien que des mensonges (Nothing But Lies) (Muret) (as Muriel)
1993 La Femme du déserteur (The Deserter’s Wife) (Bat-Adam) (as Nina); François Truffaut: Portraits volés (François Truffaut: Stolen Portraits) (Pascal) (as herself); Amok (Farges) (as The Woman)
1994 Le Colonel Chabert (Colonel Chabert) (Angelo) (as Countess Ferraud)
1995 Les Cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Actor for a Day); Par-delà les nuages (Beyond the Clouds)
ARDANT

(Pontioni and Wenders) (as Patricia); Sabrina (Pollack) (as Irene)
1996 Pédale douce (Aghion) (as Eva); Désirée (Desire) (Murat) (as Odette); Ridicule (Leconte) (as Madame de Blayac)
1998 Elizabeth (Kapur) (as Marie de Guise); La Cena (Diner) (Scola) (as Flora)
1999 Augustin, roi du Kung-fu (Augustin, King of Kung-fu) (Fontaine) (as herself); Balzac (Dayan—for TV) (as Eve Hanska); La Débandade (Berri) (as Marie); Les Fils du Français (Lauzier) (as Anne)
2000 Le Libertin (The Libertine) (Aghion) (as Madame Therbourche)

Publications

By ARDANT: articles—

“A Woman to Put Iron in a Man’s Soul,” interview with Chris Peachman, in Sunday Telegraph (London), 16 April 1995.

On ARDANT: articles—

* * *

In 1979, François Truffaut saw Fanny Ardant in a French television soap opera. Truffaut immediately got on the telephone and called Ardant, whom he described as a woman “who makes you think of a woman from another country, without knowing quite which one.” and asked her to star opposite Gérard Depardieu in his film La Femme d’à côté (The Woman Next Door). Fanny Ardant’s distinguished career in French cinema was about to begin. Until that point, the then 30-year-old Ardant had been acting on stage and in bit parts on television and in films. With her portrayal of Mathilde Bauchard in Truffaut’s film, however, Fanny Ardant became a star.

In La Femme d’à côté, Mathilde and her husband unwittingly move next door to Bernard Coudray, Mathilde’s former lover. From the first encounter, Ardant makes it clear that the passion between the two lovers has never died. Ardant’s gaze at this initial re-encounter silently displays the intensity of Mathilde’s feelings for Bernard, and the iron determination that eventually leads the couple to self-destruct. Ardant’s raw portrayal of Mathilde’s passion, her nervous breakdown and eventual suicide gained her both acclaim and a nomination for the César for best actress. In this debut, Ardant demonstrates a remarkable ability to embody both strength and vulnerability in her characters, as well as a talent for conveying a complex range of emotions in a single glance, or through the tone of her voice—in fact, these techniques have become her trademark.

Subsequent to La Femme d’à côté, Ardant worked on several films, including La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) with director Alain Resnais. Her next critically acclaimed performance, however, came in 1983 in another Truffaut film, Vivement dimanche (Confidentially Yours). This second collaboration with Truffaut, an homage to American film noir thrillers, is based on Charles William’s novel, The Long Saturday Night. Ardent again plays a strong, sexy woman, although this time, her character is much more unscrupulous than Mathilde Bauchard. In the film, she plays Barbara, the recently dismissed secretary to Julien Vercel. After Vercel’s wife is murdered, he engages Barbara to help him solve the crime. The film makes it clear that Barbara is in love with her boss, however, the main tension in the film is not romantic. Rather, it is due to the perpetual uncertainty as to Barbara’s loyalty. Ardant makes it absolutely unclear as to whether Barbara is helping Vercel, or betraying him. Ardant’s performance in this film again garnered her a César nomination for best actress.

Ardant starred in some 21 films after Vivement dimanche, most notably in Alain Resnais’ L’Amour à mort and Volker Schlöndorff’s Un Amour de Swann (Love of Swann), She did not, however, receive wide critical success until her 1994 role as Countess Ferraud in Yves Angelo’s Le Colonel Chabert (Colonel Chabert). As the Countess, Ardant shows her ability to portray the complexity of a single character through gesture, expression, and voice. In the film, based on a novella by Honoré de Balzac, the Countess, a former prostitute, struggles to maintain her marriage to a wealthy French Count, after her first husband, long presumed dead, returns. Although Balzac wrote the Countess as a scheming manipulator, interested only in the bottom line, Ardant portrays her as a strong, vulnerable woman, torn between the love for the husband she thought dead, and the security and independence of her current financial situation. Ardant’s silently emotional Countess is a character who inspires pity, and even admiration.

Ardant’s masterful performance in Le Colonel Chabert created interest in her ability to play independent, intelligent women during historical periods when women were allowed to be neither. For this reason, she was cast as Madame de Blayac in Patrice Leconte’s Confidentially Yours. This second collaboration with Truffaut, an homage to American film noir thrillers, is based on Charles William’s novel, The Long Saturday Night. Ardent again plays a strong, sexy woman, although this time, her character is much more unscrupulous than Mathilde Bauchard. In the film, she plays Barbara, the recently dismissed secretary to Julien Vercel. After Vercel’s wife is murdered, he engages Barbara to help him solve the crime. The film makes it clear that Barbara is in love with her boss, however, the main tension in the film is not romantic. Rather, it is due to the perpetual uncertainty as to Barbara’s loyalty. Ardant makes it absolutely unclear as to whether Barbara is helping Vercel, or betraying him. Ardant’s performance in this film again garnered her a César nomination for best actress.

Ardant starred in some 21 films after Vivement dimanche, most notably in Alain Resnais’ L’Amour à mort and Volker Schlöndorff’s Un Amour de Swann (Love of Swann), She did not, however, receive wide critical success until her 1994 role as Countess Ferraud in Yves Angelo’s Le Colonel Chabert (Colonel Chabert). As the Countess, Ardant shows her ability to portray the complexity of a single character through gesture, expression, and voice. In the film, based on a novella by Honoré de Balzac, the Countess, a former prostitute, struggles to maintain her marriage to a wealthy French Count, after her first husband, long presumed dead, returns. Although Balzac wrote the Countess as a scheming manipulator, interested only in the bottom line, Ardant portrays her as a strong, vulnerable woman, torn between the love for the husband she thought dead, and the security and independence of her current financial situation. Ardant’s silently emotional Countess is a character who inspires pity, and even admiration.

Ardant’s masterful performance in Le Colonel Chabert created interest in her ability to play independent, intelligent women during historical periods when women were allowed to be neither. For this reason, she was cast as Madame de Blayac in Patrice Leconte’s Confidentially Yours. This second collaboration with Truffaut, an homage to American film noir thrillers, is based on Charles William’s novel, The Long Saturday Night. Ardent again plays a strong, sexy woman, although this time, her character is much more unscrupulous than Mathilde Bauchard. In the film, she plays Barbara, the recently dismissed secretary to Julien Vercel. After Vercel’s wife is murdered, he engages Barbara to help him solve the crime. The film makes it clear that Barbara is in love with her boss, however, the main tension in the film is not romantic. Rather, it is due to the perpetual uncertainty as to Barbara’s loyalty. Ardant makes it absolutely unclear as to whether Barbara is helping Vercel, or betraying him. Ardant’s performance in this film again garnered her a César nomination for best actress.

Ardant starred in some 21 films after Vivement dimanche, most notably in Alain Resnais’ L’Amour à mort and Volker Schlöndorff’s Un Amour de Swann (Love of Swann), She did not, however, receive wide critical success until her 1994 role as Countess Ferraud in Yves Angelo’s Le Colonel Chabert (Colonel Chabert). As the Countess, Ardant shows her ability to portray the complexity of a single character through gesture, expression, and voice. In the film, based on a novella by Honoré de Balzac, the Countess, a former prostitute, struggles to maintain her marriage to a wealthy French Count, after her first husband, long presumed dead, returns. Although Balzac wrote the Countess as a scheming manipulator, interested only in the bottom line, Ardant portrays her as a strong, vulnerable woman, torn between the love for the husband she thought dead, and the security and independence of her current financial situation. Ardant’s silently emotional Countess is a character who inspires pity, and even admiration.

Ardant’s masterful performance in Le Colonel Chabert created interest in her ability to play independent, intelligent women during historical periods when women were allowed to be neither. For this reason, she was cast as Madame de Blayac in Patrice Leconte’s Confidentially Yours. This second collaboration with Truffaut, an homage to American film noir thrillers, is based on Charles William’s novel, The Long Saturday Night. Ardent again plays a strong, sexy woman, although this time, her character is much more unscrupulous than Mathilde Bauchard. In the film, she plays Barbara, the recently dismissed secretary to Julien Vercel. After Vercel’s wife is murdered, he engages Barbara to help him solve the crime. The film makes it clear that Barbara is in love with her boss, however, the main tension in the film is not romantic. Rather, it is due to the perpetual uncertainty as to Barbara’s loyalty. Ardant makes it absolutely unclear as to whether Barbara is helping Vercel, or betraying him. Ardant’s performance in this film again garnered her a César nomination for best actress.
language films, which later landed her the role of Marie de Guise in Shekhar Kapur’s Elizabeth in 1998. Marie is another strong woman, waging war against the young Elizabeth in the name of religion. Alternatively warlike and devout, cold and absolutely sexy, Ardant’s Marie is yet another woman whose desire does her in.

Despite her incredibly busy film career, Ardant has managed to maintain a stage career as well. Classically trained in plays by Corneille and Racine, Ardant won critical acclaim for her portrayal of opera singer Maria Callas in Roman Polanski’s production of Terence McNally’s Master Class in 1997. Olivier Schmitt called Ardant’s portrayal of Callas “remarkable” and said that she “is one of those rare actresses who can accentuate sadness with a smile, punctuate laughter with a tear the welcome of a being alone faced with himself.”

Now in her fifties, Fanny Ardant continues to act, graced with beauty and sex appeal that seems to develop rather than diminish over time. Unlike many of her Hollywood contemporaries, the roles offered her have neither decreased as she has aged, nor have they become less interesting. What is clear is that despite the wide range of roles Ardant has played, in some way, she identifies with all of them. Whether comic or tragic, historical or contemporary, Ardant’s ability to capture fragility and fire, desire and independence, domination and submission lead her to play women who are as complex as she is.

—Dayna Oscherwitz

ARKIN, Alan

Nationality: American. Born: Alan Wolf Arkin in New York City, 26 March 1934. Education: Attended Los Angeles City College. Family: Married Barbara Dana, 1964; sons: the actor Adam and Matthew from previous marriage, and Anthony. Career: Late 1950s—member of folk singing group the Tarriers; early 1960s—member of Chicago improvisational acting company Second City, a group including Mike Nichols and Elaine May; 1963—Broadway debut in Enter Laughing received much critical attention; mid-1960s—stage directing career began with off-Broadway production of Little Murders; 1966—feature film debut in The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming; 1971—directed first feature film, Little Murders; 1987—in TV series Harry. Awards: Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter, 1968; Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics, for Hearts of the West, 1975; Golden Globe for Comedy Performance, for The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming, 1966; Canadian Genies, for Best Actor for Improper Channels, 1981, and for Best Supporting Actor for Joshua Then and Now, 1985. Address: c/o William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino, Beverly Hills, CA 90212.

Films as Director:

1967 T.G.I.F. (short) (+ ro)
1969 People Soup (short) (+ ro)
1971 Little Murders (+ ro as detective)
1977 Fire Sale (+ ro as Ezra Fikus)
1987 The Visit
1993 Samuel Beckett Is Coming Soon (+ ro as the director)
2000 Arigo (+ ro)

Films as Actor:

1962 That’s Me (short)
1963 The Last Mohican (short)
1966 The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming (Jewison) (as Rosanov)
1967 Wait until Dark (Young) (as Roat); “The Suicides” ep. of Woman Times Seven (De Sica) (as Fred)
1968 The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter (Miller) (as John Singer); Inspector Clouseau (Yorkin) (as title role)
1969 Pope (Hiller) (title role); The Monitors (Shea) (cameo)
1970 Catch-22 (Nichols) (as Yossarian)
1972 The Last of the Red Hot Lovers (Saks) (as Barney Cashman); Deadhead Miles (Zimmerman)
1974 Freebie and the Bean (Rush) (as Bean); It Couldn’t Happen to a Nice Guy (Cy Howard—for TV)
1975 Rafferty and the Gold Dust Twins (Richards) (as Rafferty); Hearts of the West (Zieff) (as Kessler)
1976 The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross) (as Freud)
1978 The Dejection of Simon Kudirka (Rich—for TV) (title role)
1979 The Magician of Lublin (Golan) (as Yasha); The In-Laws (Hiller) (as Sheldon Kornett, + exec pr)
1980 Simon (Brickman) (as Simon Mendelson)
1981 Chi Chi and the Philly Flash (Rich); Improper Channels (Till) (as Jeffrey)
1982 The Last Unicorn (Rankin and Bass) (voice of Schmendrick, the Magician)
1983 The Return of Captain Invincible (Legend in Leotards) (Mora) (title role)
1985 Big Trouble (Cassavetes) (as Leonard Hoffman); Bad Medicine (Miller) (as Dr. Madera); Joshua Then and Now (Kotcheff) (as Reuben Shapiro); The Fourth Wise Man (Michael Ray Rhodes—for TV)
1986 A Deadly Business (Korty—for TV)
1987 Escape from Sobibor (Gold—for TV) (Feldhendler); Necessary Parties (Arner—for TV) (+ sc)
1990 Coope de Ville (Roith) (as Fred Libner); Too Much Sun (Downey); Edward Scissorhands (Burton) (as Bill Boggs); Havana (Pollack) (as Joe Volpi); The Rocketeer (Johnston) (as Peevy)
1992 Glengarry Glen Ross (Foley) (as George Aaronow)
1993 So I Married an Axe Murderer (Shlamme); Indian Summer (Binder) (as Uncle Lou); Taking the Heat (Tom Mankiewicz—for TV) (as Tommy Canard); Cooperstown (Haid—for TV) (as Harry Willette)
1994 North (Rob Reiner) (as Judge Buckle); The Jerky Boys (Melkonian) (as Lazarro); Doomsday Gun (Robert M. Young—for TV)
1995 Steal Big, Steal Little (Andrew Davis) (as Lou Perilli)
1996 Mother Night (Gordon) (as George Kraft)
1997 Grosse Pointe Blank (Armitage) (as Dr. Oatman); Gattaca (Niccol) (Detective Hugo)
1998 Slums of Beverly Hills (Jenkins) (as Murray Abramowitz); Jakob the Liar (Kassovitz) (as Max Frankfurter)
2000 Arigo (Arkin and Dana); Magicians (Merendino); Vanir’s War (Chetywynd—for TV)
Alan Arkin is the poor man’s Jack Lemmon. Think of Lemmon’s major film roles, from It Should Happen to You to The Apartment, Save the Tiger to Missing. Arkin could have played any one of these parts effectively. Both actors can play comical bumbling with serious sides, and both excel as sensitive characters whose nervous temperaments are hair-triggered. Considering Arkin’s solid talent and his proven versatility, it is regrettable that this actor has not had Lemmon’s opportunities to shine on the silver screen.

Arkin was no novice to acting when he made his feature film debut in the popular satirical comedy The Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming. Three years prior to that, he had won a Tony Award for his much acclaimed starring role in the Broadway production of Carl Reiner’s autobiographical seriocomedy Enter Laughing. In Russians, Arkin, co-starring with Reiner and a large star cast, won an Oscar nomination playing a zany Russian squad leader who steps off a Soviet submarine which accidentally has been grounded near an island off the Massachusetts coastline. As he communicated with the startled natives, Arkin spoke a blend of strange Russian lingo and broken Russian-English, which left a bizarre, but very comical, impression.

His next effort, Wait until Dark, was a very showy role for the newcomer. In this taut suspense film, he played a psychotic who dresses up as three different people in order to retrieve a cache of drugs unwittingly in the possession of a blind woman (Audrey Hepburn). His menacing leap at the helpless woman’s ankles and the unrelieved wickedness of his character even in his death throes gave audiences the dark and dramatic side of the actor’s repertoire. After his appearance the following year in The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter, as a lonesome deaf-mute who befriends a young girl, it seemed as though Arkin’s new status as a major movie star was cemented. So moving was his portrayal that he received his second Academy Award nomination.

Since then, only a handful of important screen roles have come his way. The most significant of these was in Catch-22, where he played Captain Yossarian in Joseph Heller’s scathing satire of U.S. Army life during World War II, which was presented in a surreal and absurdist way. The most significant recent roles have been as the camp director in Little Murders, where he played a lonesome deaf-mute who befriends a young girl, it seemed as though Arkin never has done poorly in a film, even when the material was flawed or forgettable. Yet he has been unable to sustain the stardom and attention he obtained so early; the multidimensional, extraordinary roles with which he began his film acting career inexplicably dried up.

Arkin turned to directing in the late 1960s, and in 1971 did a credible job bringing Jules Feiffer’s Little Murders to the screen. In the 1970s, he also wrote several books, including an autobiographical work about his involvement with yoga. In the past few years, Arkin has been appearing in films on a steady basis, sometimes enriching mediocre movies with brief but sparkling appearances. His two most significant recent roles have been as the camp director in Little Murders and in Huis clos (Audry) (as Inès); La Légende de la Chinoiserie (Schuller) (as Emma); La Guerre des valses (Berger) (as Ilonka); Le Grand Jeu (Verneuil) (as Blanche) (as Mme. Blanche); Huis clos (No Exit) (Audry) (as Inès); L’Air de Paris (Carné) (as Blanche Le Garrec).

1956 Mort Curé chez les pauvres (Diamant-Berger) (as L’epouseuse); Vacances explosives (Stengel) (as Arlette Bernard).
1957 Le Passager clandestin (Habib) (as friend).
1958 Maxime (Verneuil) (as Gazelle); Un Drôle de dimanche (Marc Allégret) (as Juliette Harmier); Et ta soeur (Delbez) (as Lucrèce du Boccage).
1959 Paris la belle (Prevart—short) (as narrator).
1960 Les Primitifs du XIIIe (Guilbaud—short) (as narrator).
1961 La Gamberge (Carbonnaux) (as Mother); Les Petits Matins (Audry).
1962 The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki and Oswald) (as Mme. Barraud); La Loi des hommes (Gerard) (as La Comtesse); Temp di Roma (de la Patellière) (as Cri-Cri); Le Voyage à Biarritz (Granger) (as Fernande).
1967 Dina chez les lois (Delouche—short) (as narrator).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
<th>Role</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>La Douceur d’aimer (Hervil)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Un Chien qui rapporte (Choux) (as Josyane)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Das schöne Abenteuer (La Belle Aventure) (Schünzel) (as Mme. des Mignieres); Entlevez-moi (Perret) (as Lulu); Une Idée folle (Natanon) (as Anita)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Doug Tomlinson, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

---

ARLETTY

Nationality: French. Born: Léonie Bathiat in Courbevoie, 15 May 1898. Education: Attended Institution Edith Barbier, Puteaux. Career: 1917—employed as factory worker at Darracq Ltd.; later worked as secretary for offices of Schneider du Creusot; 1918—worked as model; 1919—debuts at Théâtre des Capucines; 1920s—appeared in music hall revues, plays, and operettas; 1930—film debut; 1936—major stage success in Fric-Frac; 1938—in Hôtel du Nord, first of several appearances in films of Marcel Carné; c.1946—jailed for two months for collaboration with the Nazis as a consequence of an affair with a German officer during the occupation; 1949—resumed acting on both stage and screen. Awards: Special César, 1982. Died: In Paris, 24 July 1992.

Films as Actress:

- 1930 La Douceur d’aimer (Hervil)
- 1931 Un Chien qui rapporte (Choux) (as Josyane)
- 1932 Das schöne Abenteuer (La Belle Aventure) (Schünzel) (as Mme. des Mignieres); Entlevez-moi (Perret) (as Lulu); Une Idée folle (Natanon) (as Anita)

---

1933 Walzerkrieg (La Guerre des valses) (Berger) (as Ilonka); Un Soir de rêve (Anton) (as Viviane); Je te confie ma femme (Guissart) (as Totoche); Le Voyage de Monsieur Perrichon (Tarride) (as Anita).

1934 Le Vertige (Schillier) (as Emma).

1935 Pension Mimosas (Feyder) (as Parasol); La Fille de Madame Angor (Bernard-Derosne) (as Mlle Delaunay); Amants et voleurs (Bernard) (as Agatha).

1936 La Garçonne (de Limur) (as Niquette); Aventure à Paris (Marc Allégret) (as Rose de Saint-Leu); Le Mari rêve (Capellani) (as Eve Roland); Feu la mère de madame (Fried—short) (as Yvonne); Mais n’t promène donc pas toute nue (Joannon—short) (as Clarisse).

1937 Désiré (Guiry) (as Madeleine Crapicheau); Les Perles de la couronne (Pearls of the Crown) (Guiry and Christian-Jaque) (as Queen of Ethiopia); Faisons un rêve (Guiry); Si tu m’aimes (Mirages) (Ryder) (as Arlette); Aloha ou Le Chant des îles (Mathot) (as Ginette Gina).

1938 Hôtel du Nord (Carné) (as Madame Raymonde); Le Petit Chose (Cloche) (as Irma Borel); La Chaleur du sein (Boyer) (as Bernadette).

1939 Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné) (as Clara); Fric-Frac (Lehmann and Autant-Lara) (as LouLou); Circonstances atténuantes (Extenuating Circumstances) (Boyer) (as Marie Qu’a d’ça).

1940 Tempête (Bernard-Deschamps) (as Ida Mauclaincourt).

1941 Madame Sans-Gêne (Richebé) (title role); Boléro (Boyer) (as Catherine).

1942 Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoyos; The Devil’s Own Envoy) (Carné) (as Dominique); La Femme que j’ai le plus aimée (Vernay) (as La Divette); L’Amant de Borneo (Feydeau) (as Stella Losange); La Loi du 21 juin 1907 (Guiry—short).

1945 Les Enfants du paradis (Children of Paradise) (Carné) (as Garance).

1949 Portrait d’un assassin (Roland) (as Martha).

1950 L’Amour, madame . . . (Granger) (as herself); Gibier de potence (Richebé) (as Mme. Alice).

1953 Le Père de mademoiselle (L’Herbier and Dagan) (as Edith Mars).

1954 Le Grand Jeu (Flesh and the Woman; Il grande giuoco; The Big Game) (Siodmak) (as Mme. Blanche); Huis clos (No Exit) (Audry) (as Inès); L’Air de Paris (Carné) (as Blanche Le Garrec).

1956 Mor Curé chez les pauvres (Diamant-Berger) (as L’epouseuse); Vacances explosives (Stengel) (as Arlette Bernard).

1957 Le Passager clandestin (Habib) (as friend).

1958 Maxime (Verneuil) (as Gazelle); Un Drôle de dimanche (Marc Allégret) (as Juliette Harmier); Et ta soeur (Delbez) (as Lucrèce du Boccage).

1959 Paris la belle (Prevart—short) (as narrator).

1960 Les Primitifs du XIIe (Guilbaud—short) (as narrator).

1961 La Gamberge (Carbonnaux) (as Mother); Les Petits Matins (Audry).

1962 The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki and Oswald) (as Mme. Barraud); La Loi des hommes (Gerard) (as La Comtesse); Temp di Roma (de la Patellière) (as Cri-Cri); Le Voyage à Biarritz (Granger) (as Fernande).
Publications

By ARLETTY: books—

By ARLETTY: articles—

‘‘Strictly Entre Nous,’’ in Penguin Film Review (London), September 1948.
Interview with Edward Baron Turk, in American Film (New York), November 1981.
Interview with E. Decaux and Bruno Villien, in Cinématographe (Paris), March 1985.

On ARLETTY: books—

On ARLETTY: articles—

Ecran (Paris), June 1978.
Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), September 1990.

Arletty, the legendary and captivating actress was a major star during France’s “Golden Age” of cinema in the 1930s and 1940s. As women’s film roles during this period tended to lack complexity and left only a marginal space for women, Arletty is indeed quite an important and still treasured figure.

Well-known for her working-class origins, the beautiful and sublime Arletty was as famous for her work on the music hall stage as for her film performances. Her successful collaboration with the esteemed director Marcel Carné, especially in the films Hôtel du Nord, Le Jour se lève, Les Visiteurs du soir, and Les Enfants du paradis, brought both recognition and the opportunity to develop a “mysterious femininity”—and they are among the most popular and critically acclaimed films in the history of French cinema. Prior to her appearance in Carné’s Hôtel du Nord, Arletty’s film career was limited to supporting roles—most often she played prostitutes and, not surprisingly, music hall performers in which she capitalized on her working-class Parisian accent and gestures. In Pension Mimosas, for example, she played a street-smart woman of questionable virtue.

Despite her early inauspicious film roles and a certain constraint based upon typecasting, as her career evolved it was noteworthy for its diversity. Indeed, her performances in the somber “poetic realist” Le Jour se lève, the medieval fable Les Visiteurs du soir, and the epic study of the early 19th-century stage, Les Enfants du paradis, each demonstrate an extraordinary range and depth, and importantly, her characters exude a remarkably honest, complex, and unconventional sexuality, as well as a singular self-awareness and independence. In Le Jour se lève she quits her job and her lover, and in Les Visiteurs du soir she is an androgynous, shrewd, and seductive emissary of the devil posing as a traveling performer. But it was her characterization of the beautiful, ethereally elegant, and sexually desiring courtesan Garance who is loved by four different men in Les Enfants du paradis for which she is best remembered—and whose uncommon individuality became synonymous with Arletty’s own persona.

Unlike many other French stars, Arletty remained in France during the German occupation of the 1940s; thus her work helped contribute to a partial sense of continuity in French cinema during this period. For a time, Arletty was discussed primarily in terms of her well-known love affair with a German officer and for her brief imprisonment after the liberation than for her work on-screen. She returned to the screen after 1949 in several films, the most notable of which was an adaptation of Sartre’s play Huis clos. She continued to work on the stage, including as Blanche in the French version of Tennessee Williams’s A Streetcar Named Desire. Her only appearance in an American film was in an episode of The Longest Day. Then in the 1960s, her work as an actress was seriously hindered by an accident that badly affected her sight. In 1984, Arletty’s legendary status was confirmed when a cinema opened in the Pompidou Centre in Paris that was named after her most famous character, Salle Garance.

—Cynthia Felando

ARMENDÁRIZ, Pedro

Pedro Armendáriz

Films as Actor:

1935 Maria Elena; Rosario; Bordertown
1937 Las cuatro milpas; Amapola del Camino; La adelita; Jalisco nunca pierde
1938 Canto a mi tierra; Mi candidato; Los millones de Chafan
1939 Con los dorados de Pancho Villa; El Indio; La China hilaria; Borrasca humana
1940 Los olvidados de dios; La reina del Rio; Malahiera; El torro de falisco; El charro negro; Pobre diablo; El jefe maximo
1941 El secret del Sacerdote; La e ropeya del camino; Del ranco a la capital; La isla de la pasion (Passion Island) (Fernández); Ni sangre ni arena; Alia en el baija
1942 Soy puro mexicano (Fernández)
1943 Las calaveras del terror; Guadalajara; Flor Silvestre (Fernández); Konga roja; The Life of Simon Bolivar (Simon Bolivar); Distinto amanece (Bracho) (as Octavio); María Candelaria (Xochimilco; Portrait of Maria) (Fernández) (as Lorenzo Rafael); La guerra de los pasteles
1944 El corsario negro; Tierra de pasiones; Alma de bronce; La campana de mi pueblo; Las abandonadas (Fernández); El Capitan Malacara; Entre Hermanos; Bugambilia (Fernández)
1945 Rayando el sol; La perla (The Pearl) (Fernández)
1946 Enamorada (Fernández)
1947 La casa colorado; Juan Charrasqueado; Albur de amor; The Fugitive (John Ford)

1948 Maclovia (Fernández); En la hacienda de la flor; Al caer de la tarde; Three Godfathers (John Ford); Fort Apache (John Ford)
1949 Tula (Heisler); La lalquerada; Villa vuelve; La masquerada; El abandonado; We Were Strangers (Huston); The Outlaw and the Lady; Pancho Villa; Bodas de Fuego
1950 Camino de infierno; Del odio nace el amor (The Torch; Bandit General) (Fernández); Rosaura Castro; Tierra baja; La loga de la casa; Puerta falsa; Nos Veremos en el cielo
1951 Elly y yo; Por querer a una mujer; La noche avanza
1952 Carne de presidio; El rebozo de la soledad; El Bruto
1953 Les Amants de Tolède (The Lovers of Toledo; Tyrant of Toledo) (Decoin); Lucrèce Borgia (Lucrezia Borgia; Sins of the Borgias; Lucretia Borgia) (Christian-Jaque); Reportaje (Fernández); Mate a la vida; Multa
1954 Los mundos y un amor; Le rebellion de los Colgados; El diablo del desierto (Borderia); Border River (Sherman)
1955 The Littlest Outlaw (Gavaldón); Les amants du tage; Tam Tam Mayumba (Native Drums; Tom Toms of Mayumba); El pequeño proscrito; La escondida (The Hidden Woman) (Gavaldón)
1956 Uomini e lupi (Men and Wolves) (De Santis); The Conqueror (Dick Powell); Diane (David Miller); Canasta de cuentos mexicanos; La mayor que no tuvo infancia; El Impostor (Fernández); Viva revolución
1957 Flor de mayo (A Mexican Affair; Beyond All Limits) (Gavaldón); The Big Boodle (Wilson); Ando volando bajo; La pandilla del soborno; El Zarco (El Zarco-The Bandit); Asi era Pancho Villa; Affair in Havana (Benedek); Manuela (Stowaway Girl) (Hamilton)
1958 Pancho Villa y la valentina; Cuando viva villa es la muerte; Café Colón de la Cerna; Las Senoritas Vivanco (Blake); Los desarraigados; La cucaracha (The Bandit) (Alazraki)
1959 Yo Pecador (Rodríguez); El hombre nuestro de Cada Dia; Calibre 44; The Wonderful Country (Parrish); El pequeno salvaje
1960 La cárcel de Cananca; El indio; 800 Leguas por el Amazona; Dos hijos desobedientes
1961 Los valientes no mueren; El reyedor de Milagros; Arrivani i titani (Sons of Thunder; The Titans); Francis of Assisi (Curtiz)
1962 La Bandida
1963 Los hermanos del hierro (My Son, the Hero) (Tessari); Captain Sinbad (Michelet); From Russia with Love (Young)

Publications

On ARMENDÁRIZ: books—

* * *

Pedro Armendáriz was Mexico’s major movie star of the 1940s, frequently appearing in films of that country’s leading director Emilio
Fernández, whose work gained international recognition, ushering in a period of critical attention and acclaim for Mexican filmmaking. As a part of this new Mexican cinema, Armendáriz too gained some degree of recognition and began acting in American films around 1947, and later in some European films. He continued to work both at home and abroad until his death in 1963.

A key role in Armendáriz’s early career was the lead in Julio Bracho’s Distinto amanecer, in which he played Octavio, an idealistic labor leader freeing the gunmen of a corrupt governor. The film was noted for depicting the tensions of contemporary Mexican society.

Armendáriz was often cast as the romantic lead in his Mexican films. Perhaps his best-known role was as Lorenzo, the Indian peasant, in Fernández’s Mariá Candelaria. In the film, Lorenzo loves Maria, but finally cannot save her from being stoned to death by the villagers because of a tragic misunderstanding. Though the film was internationally acclaimed, it was also criticized by Mexican intellectuals for depicting Mexican Indians in terms of idealized stereotypes. However, Fernández’s approach and Armendáriz’s portrayal of Lorenzo presented a positive view of Indians—a group that had often been negatively stereotyped and made the butt of jokes.

His first role in an English-language film was in John Ford’s The Fugitive. He worked on three subsequent films by Ford, including Three Godfathers, in which he co-starred with John Wayne. Though Armendáriz’s move into American and international films can be seen as a career advance, he never appeared as a romantic leading man in American films, but in character parts that called for a Mexican ethnic actor.

—Susan M. Doll

ARTHUR, Jean

Nationality: American. Born: Gladys Georgianna Greene in New York City, 17 October 1905 (other sources say 1900, 1901 or 1909). Family: Married 1) the photographer Julian Anker (divorced); 2) the producer Frank J. Ross Jr., 1932 (divorced 1949). Career: 1920—quit school to become a model; 1923—film debut in bit role in John Ford’s Cameo Kirby; 1932–34—actress on New York stage; mid-1940s—released from Columbia contract; 1955—played Peter Pan on Broadway; 1966—in own TV series The Jean Arthur Show; 1970s—taught drama at Vassar and other colleges. Died: In Carmel, California, 19 June 1991.

Films as Actress:

1923 Cameo Kirby (Ford)
1924 Biff Bang Buddy (Ingraham); Bringin’ Home the Bacon (Thorpe); Travelin’ Fast; Fast and Fearless (Thorpe); Thundering Romance (Thorpe); Spring Fever; Case Dismissed; The Powerful Eye; The Temple of Venus 1925 The Drugstore Cowboy (Frame); The Hurricane Horseman (Eddy); Seven Chances (Buster Keaton) (as receptionist); Tearin’ Loose (Thorpe); The Fighting Smile (Marchant); A Man of Nerve (Chaudet); Thundering Through (Bain)
1926 The Block Signal (O’Connor); Born to Battle (De Lacey); The College Boob (Garson); The Cowboy Cop (De Lacey); Double Daring (Thorpe); The Fighting Cheat (Thorpe); Lightning Bill (Chaudet); Twisted Triggers (Thorpe); Under Fire (Eelft); The Mad Racer (Stoloff); Eight Cylinder Bull (Leys); Hello Lafayette (Lafayette, Where Are We?) (Gold and Davis)
1927 The Broken Gate (McKay); Flying Luck (Raymaker); Horse Shoes (Bruckman); Husband Hunters (Adolfi); The Poor Nut (Wallace); The Masked Menace (Heath—serial); Bigger and Better Blondes (Parrott)
1928 Brotherly Love (Reiser); Sins of the Fathers (Berger) (as Mary Spengler); Wallflowers (Meehan); Warming Up (Newmeyer); Easy Come, Easy Go (Tuttle)
1929 The Canary Murder Case (St. Clair) (as Alice LaFosse); The Greene Murder Case (Tuttle) (as Ada Greene); Half Way to Heaven (Abbott) (as Greta Nelson); The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu (Rowland V. Lee) (as Lila Eltham); The Saturday Night Kid (Sutherland) (as Janie); Stairs of Sand (Brower); Sins of the Fathers (Berger)
1930 Danger Lights (Seitz) (as Mary Ryan); ‘‘Dream Girl’’ ep. of Paramount on Parade (Arzner and others); The Return of Dr. Fu Manchu (Rowland V. Lee) (as Lila Eltham); The Silver Horde (Archainbaud) (as Mildred Wayland); Street of Chance (Cromwell) (as Judith Marsden); Young Eagles (Wellman) (as Mary Gordon)
1931 The Gang Buster (Sutherland) (as Sylvia Martine); Virtuous Husband (Moore) (as Barbara Olwell); The Lawyer’s Secret (Gassner and Marcin) (as Beatrice Stevens); Ex-Bad Boy (Moore) (as Ethel Simmons)
1933 Get That Venus (Grover Lee); The Past of Mary Holmes (Thompson and Vorkapich) (as Joan Hoyt)
1934 Whirlpool (Neill) (as Sandra Morrison); The Defense Rests (Hillery) (as Joan Hayes); Most Precious Thing in Life (Hillery)
1935 The Whole Town’s Talking (Passport to Fame) (Ford) (as Wilhelmina ‘‘Bill’’ Clark); Public Hero Number One (Ruben) (as Theresa O’Reilly); Party Wire (Kenton) (as Marge Oliver); Diamond Jim (Sutherland); Public Menace (Kenton) (as Cassie); If You Could Only Cook (Seiter) (as Joan Hawthorne)
1936 Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra) (as Babe Bennett); The Ex-Mrs. Bradford (Roberts) (as Paula Bradford); Adventure in Manhattan (Manhattan Madness) (Ludwig) (as Claire Peyton); The Plainsman (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Calamity Jane); More than a Secretary (Alfred E. Green) (as Carol Baldwin)
1937 History Is Made at Night (Borzage) (as Irene Vail); Easy Living (Leisen) (as Mary Smith)
1938 You Can’t Take It with You (Capra) (as Alice Sycamore)
1939 Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks) (as Bonnie Lee); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra) (as Saunders)
1940 Too Many Husbands (Ruggles) (as Vicky Lowndes); Arizona Ruggles (as Phoebe Titus)
1941 The Devil and Miss Jones (Wood) (as Mary Jones)
1942 The Talk of the Town (Stevens) (as Nora Shelley)
1943 The More the Merrier (Stevens) (as Connie Milligan); A Lady Takes a Chance (Seiter) (as Mollie Truesdale)
1944 The Impatient Years (Cummings) (as Janie Anderson)
1948 A Foreign Affair (Wilders) (as Phoebe Frost)
1953 Shane (Stevens) (as Marion Starrett)
Jean Arthur and James Stewart in Mr. Smith Goes to Washington

Publications

By ARTHUR: article—

On ARTHUR: books—

On ARTHUR: articles—

Jean Arthur began her film career in John Ford’s Cameo Kirby, which she followed with a series of ingenue and other lead parts in some 20 silent, low-budget Westerns and comedy shorts, graduating to a wider variety of roles for bigger studios by the coming of sound. In 1932, feeling that she needed to improve her acting skills, she left Hollywood and worked on the stage, both in New York and in summer stock, for the next two years. She played a variety of parts, even touring as Kalonica in a production of Lysistrata. In 1934 she returned to California to appear in Whirlpool, but received her first real break the next year, once again under John Ford’s direction, in The Whole Town’s Talking. In this movie she created the light-comedy character of a good-natured, sentimental girl-next-door, a character she later transformed into the vivacious, often oddball heroine most fully realized in the comedies of Frank Capra, who described her as his favorite actress.

Capra’s Mr. Deeds Goes to Town and Mr. Smith Goes to Washington provided Arthur with her most memorable roles. In both films she played a somewhat hard-boiled urbanite who is at first appalled and later smitten by the honest country boys: Gary Cooper, as Deeds, and James Stewart, as Smith. Capra made fine use of the femininity just beneath the toughness expressed by her distinctive husky, cracked voice, a voice which became her trademark though it initially kept her out of roles in early talkies.

She was very active in films from the later 1930s to the mid-1940s. She played Calamity Jane opposite Gary Cooper in Cecil B. DeMille’s The Plainsman, and starred in various other adventure films as well, including Wesley Ruggles’s Arizona and Howard Hawks’s Only Angels Have Wings with Cary Grant, turning in one of her best performances as his sentimental sidekick. She was at her peak in a number of classic Hollywood comedies, including Mitchell Leisen’s Easy Living (with a Preston Sturges script) and Sam Wood’s The Devil and Miss Jones, in the latter as the spunky shopgirl who reforms her crotchety boss, working incognito in his own department store. She also appeared in two romantic comedies directed by George Stevens, The Talk of the Town and The More the Merrier, the latter written specially for her by Garson Kanin. She received her only Oscar nomination for the second of these, but lost to Jennifer Jones.

After being released from her Columbia contract following a long dispute with Harry Cohn, the studio’s boss, she appeared in only two productions, Billy Wilder’s A Foreign Affair and Stevens’s Shane. Though she stopped making films, she appeared occasionally on the stage (winning critical acclaim for her part in Peter Pan on Broadway) and on television, in both guest spots and in a short-lived The Jean Arthur Show.

—Charles L. P. Silet, updated by Frank Uhle

ASTAIRE, Fred

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Dancing Lady</td>
<td>Potter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Flying Down to Rio</td>
<td>Ayres</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>The Gay Divorcee</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Top Hat</td>
<td>Travers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Follow the Fleet</td>
<td>Potter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Swing Time</td>
<td>Stevens</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Shall We Dance</td>
<td>Sandrich</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Carefree</td>
<td>Flagg</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>The Story of Vernon and Irene</td>
<td>Castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Broadway Melody of 1940</td>
<td>Brett/Taurog</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>You’ll Never Get Rich</td>
<td>Curtis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Holiday Inn</td>
<td>Hanover</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>You Were Never Lovelier</td>
<td>Davis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>The Sky’s the Limit</td>
<td>Griffith/Fred</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1945 Yolanda and the Thief (Minnelli) (as Johnny Riggs)
1946 Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli) (as himself/Raffles/Tai Long); Blue Skies (Heisler) (as Jed Potter)
1948 Easter Parade (Walters) (as Don Hewes, + co-choreographer)
1949 The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters) (as Josh Barkley)
1950 Three Little Words (Thorpe) (as Bert Kalmar, + co-choreographer); Let’s Dance (McLeod) (as Don Elwood)
1951 Royal Wedding (Wedding Bells) (Donen) (as Tom Bowen)
1952 The Belle of New York (Walters) (as Charles Hall)
1953 The Band Wagon (Minnelli) (as Tony Hunter)
1954 Deep in My Heart (Donen) (as guest)
1955 Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco) (as Jervis Pendleton)
1956 Funny Face (Donen) (as Dick Avery, + co-choreographer); Silk Stockings (Mamoulian) (as Steve Canfield)
1957 On the Beach (Kramer) (as Julian Osborn)
1958 The Pleasure of His Company
1960 Paris When It Sizzles
1961 The Notorious Landlady (Quine) (as Franklyn Armbruster)
1962 Easter Parade (McLyongan) (as voice)
1963 Deep in My Heart (Donen) (as guest)
1964 The Over-the-Hill Gang Rides Again
1965 Midas Run (A Run on Gold) (Kjellin) (as John Pedley)
1966 The Band Wagon (Quine) (as voice)
1967 Imagine
1968 Finian’s Rainbow (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Finian MacLonergeran)
1969 Mida’s Run (A Run on Gold) (Kjellin) (as John Pedley)
1970 The Over-the-Hill Gang Rides Again (McGowan—for TV); Santa Claus Is Comin’ to Town (for TV, animation) (as voice of mailman)
1973 Imagine
1974 The Towering Inferno (Guillermin and Irwin Allen) (as Charles Claiborne); That’s Entertainment! (Haley Jr.—compilation) (as host)
1976 That’s Entertainment, Part 2 (Kelly) (as host); The Amazing Dobermans (David and Byron Chudnow) (as Daniel Hughes)
1977 Un Taxi mauve (The Purple Taxi) (Boisset) (as Doctor Scully); The Easter Bunny Is Comin’ to Town (for TV, animation) (as voice of mailman)
1978 A Family Upside Down (Rich—for TV); Battleship Gallactica (Colla—for TV)
1979 The Man in the Santa Claus Suit (Corey Allen—for TV)
1980 Ghost Story (Irvin) (as Ricky Hawthorne)
1984 George Stevens: A Filmmaker’s Journey (George Stevens Jr.—doc) (as himself)

Publications

By ASTAIRE: book—

By ASTAIRE: article—

On ASTAIRE: books—
Hackl, Alfons, Fred Astaire and His Work, Vienna, 1970.

Harvey, Stephen, Fred Astaire, New York, 1975.
Delameter, James, Dance in the Hollywood Musical, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1981.
Kaminsky, Stuart M., Dancing in the Dark (fiction), New York, 1996.

On ASTAIRE: articles—

Fred Astaire is in a class by himself. Of all the movie legends of the golden era in Hollywood, he is perhaps the most universally accepted as unquestionably great. His film career encompassed more than 50 years as a top star, and his theater, recording, and television work have also been recognized as outstanding. The name “Fred Astaire” not only means “dance on film,” it also represents quality, longevity, and that most elusive characteristic of an artist—a true personal style.

Astaire is one of a small group of actors who have been able to shape their own movies and make a distinct contribution to film history beyond the level of entertainment or personality. Known to be a perfectionist, his insistence on control of his own dance work expanded his influence on films. Not only did he create his own choreography in most films, he also participated in the decision-making process of how his dances would be photographed, scored, and edited; generally the camera frames his entire body, moves only in response to his lead, and keeps running in order to preserve the integrity of the dance. The careful matching of dance, image, and rhythm (both of sound and cutting) seen in his best numbers was a direct result of his desire for the best in every aspect of his work.

Astaire pioneered the serious presentation of dance in motion pictures, both by his on-screen influence and his behind-the-scenes collaboration (most importantly with his alter ego at RKO, choreographer Hermes Pan).

Astaire’s film debut, after a successful 25-year stage career dancing with his sister Adele, was in a minor role as himself in an MGM Joan Crawford-Clark Gable film, Dancing Lady. His first real success came when he was paired with Ginger Rogers for a series of elegant RKO musicals in the 1930s. Astaire and Rogers were not the leads in their first film, Flying Down to Rio, but their enormous appeal and talent were immediately apparent, and their next eight films solidified their status as one of the cinema’s great teams. (The pair was reunited later at MGM for their last film, The Barkleys of Broadway.) The RKO films, with their charmingly complicated plots, excellent music, art deco decor, and remarkable dances, represent the high point of the 1930s musical genre. Although Astaire was paired thereafter with many beautiful women who were also fine dancers—Rita Hayworth, Vera-Ellen, Lucille Bremer, and Cyd Charisse—most critics agree that his most compatible partner in film was Rogers, whose looks and personality made a perfect contrast and complement to his own. Besides their exquisite dancing, they share a wonderful comic rapport; while many of his later co-stars such as Rita Hayworth and Eleanor Powell were possibly more accomplished dancers, none could deflate Astaire’s comic vanity with a well-timed wisecrack like Rogers.

During the 1940s and 1950s Astaire appeared in several outstanding musical films produced by the celebrated Freed unit at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, including the highly self-reflexive The Band Wagon (the title of the last show Fred and Adele starred in on Broadway in 1931), constructed as a stirring reassertion of Astaire’s value as an entertainer in a world losing its glamour. He continued his career past his dancing years, playing light comedy and dramatic roles in both television and film with equal success, earning an Oscar nomination for his supporting role in The Towering Inferno. He also “co-hosted” the first two That’s Entertainment compilations, introducing the Hollywood musical to a younger generation, and providing a strong shot of nostalgia for his original fans.

Although Astaire is associated with a certain European elegance of casual dress, his personality on film is actually that of a brash American who cracks wise and cons his way forward toward his true moment of deep expression: the dance. Astaire’s typical film character was saved from banality and the brink of unpleasantness by the joy, the tenderness, and the sexual tension of his dancing. The easy way in which he moved seemed to suggest to viewers that we could all be dancers, that music and dancing could and should be natural parts of self-expression. As critic Gerald Mast noted, for Astaire, singing and dancing are direct extensions of talking and walking; musical performance is a fundamental part of everyday life for Astaire, though perhaps no one ever walked, sat, or smoked on-screen quite as artfully.

Although less obviously skilled as a singer, Astaire was frequently recognized as an ideal interpreter of the songs of America’s greatest popular songwriters; Irving Berlin, the Gershwins, and Jerome Kern delighted in providing material for Astaire, and consistently praised his precise phrasing as an exact interpretation of their intentions. Although most of the songs he introduced were subsequently recorded by more powerful or versatile vocalists, his subtle renditions of such classics as Kern and Fields’s “A Fine Romance” or the Gershwins’ “Let’s Call the Whole Thing Off” remain the definitive versions.

Astaire’s screen work involved all kinds of dancing—tap, ballet, acrobatic, and jazz. Many of his routines were simple and elegant, and the photography was designed to match that quality. In some later films, however, he executed tricky routines that might be called experimental—dancing on the ceiling in Royal Wedding, in slow motion in Easter Parade, dancing on air in The Belle of New York, and with empty shoes in a shoe repair shop in The Barkleys of Broadway. But simple or experimental, Astaire’s routines were always perfectly danced and perfectly presented on film. His command of cinema was as great as his command of dance; he has been rightly compared to Buster Keaton, another artist for whom body and cinema act in tandem. As a result, he constitutes a major revolutionary force in the development of musical films. (In the 1930s his only conceptual rival was Busby Berkeley, who brilliantly choreographed large groups of anonymous dancers, whereas Astaire’s art always emphasizes the individual or the couple.)

Astaire won a special Academy Award in 1949, and the American Film Institute Life Achievement Award in 1981. His place in film history is not just assured. It is cemented. There is no one to equal him, but his own assessment of his contribution is reflective of his personal modesty, simplicity, and elegance: “I have no desire to prove anything by it,” he wrote in his autobiography, Steps in Time. “I just dance.”

—Jeanine Basinger, updated by Corey K. Creekmur
ASTOR, Mary

Films as Actress:

1921 The Beggar Maid (Blaché); Bullets or Ballots (Tuttle and Woolley); Brother of the Bear (Carle); The Lady o’ the Pines (Carle); The Bashful Suitor (Blaché)
1922 The Young Painter (Blaché); Hope (Le Jaren à Hiller); The Scarecrow (Blaché and Le Jaren à Hiller); The Angelus (Blaché and Le Jaren à Hiller); John Smith (Heerman); The Man Who Played God (Weight); The Rapids (Hartford)
1923 The Bright Shawl (Robertson); Hollywood (Cruze); To the Ladies (Cruze); The Marriage Maker (William DeMille); Puritan Passions (Tuttle); Second Fiddle (Tuttle); Success (Ralph Ince); Woman-Proof (Green)
1924 Beau Brummel (Beaumont); The Fighting American (Forman); The Fighting Coward (Cruze); Inez from Hollywood (The Good Bad Girl) (Green); The Price of a Party (Giblyn); Unguarded Woman (Crossland)
1925 Don Q. Son of Zorro (Crisp); Enticement (Archainbaud); Oh, Doctor! (Pollard); The Pace That Thrills (Campbell); Playing with Souls (Ralph Ince); Scarlet Saint (Archainbaud)
1926 Don Juan (Crossland); Forever After (Weight); High Steppers (Carewe); The Wise Guy (Lloyd)
1927 No Place to Go (LeRoy); Rose of the Golden West (Fitzmaurice); The Rough Riders (Fleming); The Sea Tiger (Dillon); The Sunset Derby (Rogell); Two Arabian Knights (Milestone)
1928 Dressed to Kill (Cummings); Dry Martini (D’Arrast); Heart to Heart (Beaudine); Romance of the Underworld (Cummings); Sailors’ Wives (Henabery); Three-Ring Marriage (Neilan)
1929 New Year’s Eve (Lehrman); The Woman from Hell (Erickson)
1930 Ladies Love Brutes (Rowland V. Lee) (as Mimi Howell); The Runaway Bride (Crisp) (as Mary); Holiday (Edward H. Griffith) (as Julia Seton); The Lash (Adios) (Frank Lloyd) (as Rosita Garcia); The Royal Bed (The Queen’s Husband) (Sherman) (as Princess Anne)
1931 Steel Highway (Other Men’s Women) (Wellman) (as Lily); Behind Office Doors (Brown) (as Mary Linden); The Sin Ship (Wolheim) (as Kitty); White Shoulders (Melville Brown) (as Norma Selbee); Smart Woman (La Cava) (as Nancy Gibson); Men of Chance (Archainbaud) (as Marthe)
1932 The Lost Squadron (Archainbaud) (as Follette Marsh); Those We Love (Florey) (as May); A Successful Calamity (Adolfi) (as Emmie Wilton); Red Dust (Fleming) (as Barbara Willis)
1933 The Little Giant (Del Ruth) (as Ruth Wayburn); Jennie Gerhardt (Gering) (as Letty Pace); The World Changes (LeRoy) (as Virginia); The Kennel Murder Case (Curtiz) (as Hilda Lake); Convention City (Mayo) (as Arlene Dale)
1934 Easy to Love (Keighley) (as Charlotte); Uppperworld (Del Ruth) (as Mrs. Hettie Stream); Return of the Terror (Bretherton) (as Olga Morgan); The Man with Two Faces (Mayo) (as Jessica Wells); The Case of the Howling Dog (Crossland) (as Bessie Foley); The Hollywood Gad-About 1935 I Am a Thief (Florey) (as Odette Maualair); Straight from the Heart (Beal) (as Marian Henshaw); Red Hot Tires (Racing Luck) (Lederman) (as Patricia Sanford); Dinky (Lederman and Bretherton) (as Mrs. Daniels); Page Miss Glory (LeRoy) (as Gladys Russell); Man of Iron (McGann) (as Vida)

Mary Astor and Humphrey Bogart in The Maltese Falcon
1936 The Murder of Dr. Harrigan (McDonald) (as Lillian Ash);
    And So They Were Married (Nugent) (as Edith Farnham);
    Trapped by Television (Caught by Television) (Lord) (as Bobby Blake);
    Dodsworth (Wyler) (as Edith Coagright);
    Lady from Nowhere (Wiles) (as Polly)
1937 The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell) (as Antoinette De Mauban);
    The Hurricane (Ford) (as Madame Germaine De Laage)
1938 No Time to Marry (Lachman) (as Kay McGowan); Paradise for Three (Romance for Three) (Buzzell) (as Mrs. Mellebre); There’s Always a Woman (Hall) (as Lola Fraser); Woman against Woman (Sinclair) (as Cynthia Holland); Listen,
    Darling (Marin) (as Dottie Wingate)
1939 Midnight (Leisen) (as Helene Flammarion)
1940 Turnabout (Roach) (as Marion Manning); Bringham Young—
    Frontiersman (Bringham Young) (Hathaway) (as Mary Ann Young)
1941 The Great Lie (Goulding) (as Sandra Kovak); The Maltese
    Falcon (Huston) (as Brigid O’Shaughnessy)
1942 In This Our Life (Huston) (unbilled cameo); Across the Pacific (Huston) (as Alberta Marlow); The Palm Beach
    Story (Preston Sturges) (as Princess Centimillia)
1943 Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as Hyllary Jones); Young Ideas
    (Dassin) (as Jo Evans)
1944 Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli) (as Mrs. Anne Smith);
    Blonde Fever (Whorf) (as Delilah Donay)
1946 Claudia and David (Walter Lang) (as Elizabeth Van Doren) 1947 Desert Fury (Lewis Allen) (as Fritzie Haller); Cynthia (The Rich, Fall Life) (Leonard) (as Louise Bishop); Fiesta
    (Thorpe) (as Senora Morales); Cass Timberlane (Sidney)
    (as Queenie Havock)
1949 Act of Violence (Zinnemann) (as Pat); Little Women (LeRoy)
    (as Marmee March); Any Number Can Play (LeRoy) (as Ada)
1956 The Power and the Prize (Koster) (as Mrs. George Salt); A
    Kiss before Dying (Oswald) (as Mrs. Corliss)
1957 The Devil’s Hairpin (Wilde) (as Mrs. Jargin)
1958 This Happy Feeling (Edwards) (as Mrs. Tremaine)
1959 Stranger in My Arms (Kautner) (as Mrs. Beasley)
1961 Return to Peyton Place (Ferrer) (as Roberta Carter)
1964 Youngblood Hawke (Daves) (as Irene Perry); Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Aldrich) (as Jewel Mayhew)

Publications

By ASTOR: books—

A Place Called Saturday, New York, 1968.
A Life on Film, New York, 1971.

On ASTOR: articles—

Higham, Charles, “Meeting Mary Astor,” in Sight and Sound
    (London), Spring 1964.
Anderson, Lindsay, “Mary Astor,” in Sight and Sound (London),
    Autumn 1990.
Bangley, J. “Mary Astor,” Films of the Golden Age (Muscatine,

* * *

Mary Astor is best known for her performance as Brigid O’Shaughnessy in The Maltese Falcon. One of film’s most versatile actresses, Astor played everything from ingenues to mothers in a career that lasted almost 45 years and included more than 100 films, including The Great Lie for which she won an Oscar for her portrayal of temperamental pianist, Sandra Kovak. One of Astor’s best performances is as the easygoing heiress in The Palm Beach Story.
Another, and the actress’s personal favorite, is Dodsworth, which casts her as the widow who brings happiness into the life of a downtrodden businessman. It contains one of the more memorable introductive lines in American cinema: on board ship Dodsworth asks the steward to bring him a drink to steady his nerves; from the dark reaches of a deck chair comes the voice of Mary Astor, “Why don’t you try stout, Mr. Dodsworth?” Astor made her screen debut at 15, a hauntingly innocent presence in The Beggar Maid. When John Burrymore cast her in Beau Brummel, Astor became established as a leading actress. Even in this early, silent film, Astor’s performance is expressive but not histrionic, her concentrated intensity an ideal match for Barrymore’s bravura performance. Astor’s delicate beauty and graceful carriage made her particularly suited to historical melodramas such as Don Q, Son of Zorro and Don Juan. It was an image that lasted into the 1930s when she made her last historical drama, The Prisoner of Zenda.

Almost a has-been at 23, Fox executives told Astor they were not impressed with the way her voice recorded. But her performance in a hit play led to several studio offers, and she ably made the transition to sound. The coolly confident Astor image first emerges in Holiday where Astor proves more than a match for the film’s star, Broadway-trained Ann Harding. Astor’s career again looked as if it was in trouble when the scandal associated with her infamous diaries erupted.
Some critics feel that the publicity surrounding her divorce and custody battle in 1936 has dulled recognition of her as work as an actress. Yet it appears that the scandal, and her “fortitude under stress” actually boosted her career, and helped reshape her star image, from ingenue to lovely but knowing woman-of-the-world, a transformation that allowed her to play the roles for which she is best remembered.

Critics often discuss Astor’s performances in The Great Lie and
The Maltese Falcon in terms of her marvelous bitchiness. Yet what is remarkable is Astor’s ability to play women who were charming, clever, perfectly manicured, but who also had an intensity, a candor, and an appetite for life that made them undeniably real. With her performances in the late 1930s and 1940s, Astor became a woman with a style and class unto herself. In 1948 the British magazine Sequence observed that “in Dodsworth she was intelligently lovely, in Hurricane intelligently conventional, in The Palm Beach Story intelligently crazy, in The Maltese Falcon intelligently depraved."

Astor’s image changed again when she began to accept mother roles, notably in Meet Me in St. Louis and Little Women, where she displayed a maternal charm almost symbolic of the American mother. Mother roles continued to come her way in the 1950s and 1960s, although in Stranger in My Arms and Return to Peyton Place she was not quite as nice as she had been a decade earlier. Astor ended her career with a cameo in Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte where her piercing eyes, expressive voice, and keen sense of dramatic timing gave a succinct portrait of a Southern lady whose recognition of her "ruined finery" only enhances her elegance.

In 1965 Astor turned to writing full time. She said that she never really cared for the industry of which she was so long a part, but that she is proud of the work of the actress called Mary Astor.

—Anthony Slide, updated by Cynthia Baron

ATTENBOROUGH, (Lord) Richard

Nationality: British. Born: Richard Samuel Attenborough in Cambridge, England, 29 August 1923. Education: Attended Wyggeston Grammar School, Leicester; Leverhulme Scholarship, Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London. Military Service: Royal Air Force, 1943–46 (assigned to RAF Film Unit, 1944). Family: Married the actress Sheila Sim, 1945, one son and two daughters. Career: 1941—first stage appearance as Richard Miller in Ah, Wilderness, Palmers Green, London; 1942—film debut in Noël Coward’s In Which We Serve; 1949–59—active as stage actor; 1959—formed Beaver Films with actor-director Bryan Forbes; 1960—formed Allied Filmmakers; 1970—appointed chairman of Royal Academy of Dramatic Art; 1971—vice-president of British Academy of Film and Television (Fellowship 1982); chairman, British Film Institute. Awards: Best Actor, British Academy, for Guns at Batasi and Séance on a Wet Afternoon, 1964; Golden Globes for Best Supporting Actor, for The Sand Pebbles, 1966, and Doctor Dolittle, 1967; Golden Globe for Best Director, British Academy of Film and Television Arts Award for Best Director, Directors Guild Award for Outstanding Directorial Achievement, and Academy Award for Best Film, for Gandhi, 1982; Berlinale Kamera, for Cry Freedom, 1987; Lifetime Achievement Award, Cinema Expo International, 1995. Commander, Order of the British Empire, 1967; knighted, 1976; Jean Renoir Humanitarian Award, 1987. Address: c/o Richard Attenborough Productions Ltd., Beaver Lodge, Richmond Green, Surrey TW9 1NQ, England.

Films as Actor:

1942 In Which We Serve (Lean and Coward) (as young Stoker)
1943 The Hundred Pound Window (Hurst) (as Tommy Draper); Schweik’s New Adventures (Lamac) (as railway worker)
1945 Journey Together (John Boulting) (as David Wilton)
1946 A Matter of Life and Death (Stairway to Heaven) (Powell and Pressburger) (as English pilot); Secret Flight (School for Secrets) (Ustinov) (as Jack Arnold)
1947 The Man Within (The Smugglers) (Knowles) (as Francis Andrews); Dancing with Crime (Carstairs) (as Ted Peters); Brighton Rock (Young Scarface) (John Boulting) (as Pinky Brown)
1948 London Belongs to Me (Dulcimer Street) (Gilliat) (as Percy Boon); The Guinea Pig (The Outsider) (Roy Boulting) (as Jack Read)
1949 The Boys in Brown (Tully) (as Jackie Knowles)
1950 The Lost People (Knowles) (as Jan); Morning Departure (Operation Disaster) (Baker) (as Stoker Snipe)
1951 Hell Is Sold Out (Anderson) (as Pierre Bonnet); The Magic Box (John Boulting) (as Jack Carter)
1952 The Gift Horse (Glory at Sea) (Bennett) (as Dripper Daniels); Father’s Doing Fine (Cass) (as Dougal)
1953 Eight O’Clock Walk (Comfort) (as Tom Manning)
1955 Private’s Progress (Boulting) (as Pvt. Cox); The Ship that Died of Shame (Dearden and Relph) (as George Hoskins)
1956 The Baby and the Battleship (Jay Lewis) (as Knocker White)
1957 Brothers in Law (Roy Boulting) (as Henry Marshall); The Scamp (Strange Affection) (Rilla) (as Stephen Leigh)
1958 Dunkirk (Norman) (as John Holden); The Man Upstairs (Chaffey) (as Peter Watson); Sea of Sand (The Desert Patrol) (Guy Green) (as Trooper Brody)
1959 I’m All Right, Jack (Roy Boulting) (as Sidney de Vere Cox); Jet Storm (Endfield) (as Ernest Tilley); S.O.S. Pacific (Guy Green) (as Whitey); The League of Gentlemen (Dearden)

!Richard Attenborough in Miracle on 34th Street
(as Edward Lexy); Danger Within (Breakout) (Chaffey) (as Captain “Bunter” Phillips)
1960 The Angry Silence (Guy Green) (as Tom Curtis, + co-pr)
1961 All Night Long (Relph and Dearden) (as Rod Hamilton)
1962 Only Two Can Play (Gilliat) (as Probert); The Dock Brief (Trial and Error) (Hill) (as Fowle)
1963 The Great Escape (John Sturges) (as Big “X” Bartlett)
1964 Seance on a Wet Afternoon (Forbes) (as Billy Savage, + co-pr); The Third Secret (Charles Crichton) (as Alfred Price-Gorham); Guns at Batasi (Guillermin) (as RSM Lauderdale)
1965 The Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich) (as Lew Moran)
1966 The Sand Pebbles (Wise) (as Frenchy)
1967 Doctor Dolittle (Fleischer) (as Albert Blossom)
1968 The Bliss of Mrs. Blossom (Grantham) (as Robert Blossom); Only When I Larf (Dearden) (as Silas)
1970 The Last Grenade (Fleming) (as General Charles Whiteley); The Magic Christian (Grantham) (as Oxford Coach); David Copperfield (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Mr. Tungay); A Severed Head (Dick Clement) (as Palmer Anderson); Loot (Narizzano) (as Truscott)
1971 10 Rillington Place (Fleischer) (as John Reginald Halliday Christie)
1975 And Then There Were None (Ten Little Indians) (Collinson) (as Judge); Brannigan (Joe Battle) (Hickox) (as Commander Swann); Rosebud (Preminger) (as Sloat); Conduct Unbecoming (Anderson) (as Major Lionel Roach)
1978 Shatranj Ke Khilari (The Chess Players) (Satyajit Ray) (as Gen. Outram)
1986 Mother Teresa (Ann Petrie and Jeanette Petrie—doc) (as narrator)
1979 The Human Factor (Preminger) (as Colonel John Daintrey)
1993 Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Dr. John Hammond)
1994 Miracle on 34th Street (Columbus) (as Kris Kringle)
1996 E=MC2 (Fry) (as the Visitor); Hamlet (Branagh) (as English Ambassador)
1998 The Lost World: Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Dr. John Hammond); Elizabeth (Kapur) (as Sir William Cecil)
2000 Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat (Mallet/ Pimlott) (Jacob); Ljuset håller mig sällskap (Light Keeps Me Company) (Nykvist) (as himself); The Railway Children (Morshead— for TV) (as the Old Gentleman)

Films as Director:

1961 Whistle Down the Wind (Forbes) (pr only)
1962 The L-Shaped Room (Forbes) (co-pr only)
1969 Oh! What a Lovely War (co-pr)
1972 Young Winston (co-pr)
1977 A Bridge Too Far
1978 Magic
1982 Gandhi (pr)
1985 A Chorus Line
1987 Cry Freedom (co-pr)
1992 Chaplin (co-pr)
1993 Shadowlands (co-pr)
1996 In Love and War
1999 Grey Owl (pr)

Publications

By ATTENBOROUGH: books—

By ATTENBOROUGH: articles—

“An Actor’s Actor,” interview with C. Hanson, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), March 1966.
“Why I Became a Director,” in Action (Los Angeles), January/February 1969.
“Dialogue on Film: Richard Attenborough,” in American Film (New York), March 1983.
Interview in Revue du Cinéma (Paris), March and April 1988.
“Sir Richard Replies . . . ,” in Eyepeice (Greenford, Middlesex), vol. 11, no. 6, 1990.
Interview with David Robinson, in Times (London), 22 March 1990.
“Richard Attenborough’s Romantic Return to WWI,” interview with Mary Hardesty, in DGA (Los Angeles), March/April, 1997.

On ATTENBOROUGH: books—

On ATTENBOROUGH: articles—

A Bridge Too Far Section of American Cinematographer (Hollywood), April 1977.
Today, Richard Attenborough is primarily recognized as the director of prestigious, large-scale message pictures and historical epics (Gandhi, Cry Freedom, A Bridge Too Far), and biographies (Young Winston, Chaplin). Prior to his directorial debut in 1969 with Oh! What a Lovely War, however, he enjoyed a quarter-century-long career in front of the camera. His on-screen debut came in the kind of film he might have directed himself: Noël Coward’s In Which We Serve, a World War II drama set aboard a British destroyer. He portrayed a coward and, unfortunately, found himself typecast as characters who at least start out as fainthearted and indecisive before (occasionally) redeeming themselves: the RAF pilot trainee in Journey Together; the young seaman in The Man Within; the gutless submarine crew member in Morning Departure.

Physically, Attenborough was stocky and boyish; he lacked the required good looks to become a leading man. And so, early in his career, he also was cast as characters far younger than his real years: most incredibly, as a schoolboy in The Guinea Pig (released when he was 25 years old); the thief who is sent to a borstal in Saint-Tropez. Still, some of his best characters remained submissive ones, such as the compliant mate of deranged medium Vitold. Additionally, he was divorced); 2) the director Claude Chabrol, 1964 (divorced), son: Thomas. Career: 1959—appeared in Chabrol’s Les Cousins, beginning long personal and professional relationship; work for TV includes Orient-Express, for French TV, 1979, and Brideshead Revisited for BBC TV, 1981, mini-series Mistral’s Daughter, 1984. Awards: Best Actress, Berlin Festival, for Les Biches, 1968; Best Actress, British Academy, for The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie and Juste avant la nuit, 1973; César Award for Best Actress, for Violette Nozière, 1978; Best Actress Award (UK Critics Circle) and Robert Award (Danish Film Academy), for Babette’s Feast, 1988. Address: 95 rue de Chézy, 92200 Neuilly, France.

Films as Actress:

1959 Les Cousins (The Cousins) (Chabrol) (as Françoise); Le Signe de lion (Rohmer)
1960 Les Bonnes Femmes (Chabrol) (as Ginette); Saint-Tropez Blues (Moussy)
1961 Les Godelureaux (Chabrol)
1962 L’Oeil du malin (The Third Lover) (Chabrol) (as Hélène Hartmann)
1963 Landru (Bluebeard) (Chabrol) (as Fernande Segret)
1964 Le Tigre aime la chair fraîche (The Tiger Loves Fresh Blood) (Chabrol); Les Durs à cuire (Pinoteau)
1965 “La Muette” ep. of Paris vu par . . . (6 in Paris) (Chabrol) (as wife); Marie-Chantal contre le Docteur Kha (Chabrol)
1966 La Ligne de démarcation (Line of Demarcation) (Chabrol)
1967 Le Scandale (The Champagne Murders) (Chabrol) (as Jacqueline/Lydia)
1968 Les Biches (The Does; The Girlfriends) (Chabrol) (as Frederique)
1969  La Peau de torpédo (Delannoy); La Femme infidèle (Unfaithful Wife) (Chabrol) (as Hélène Desvallées)
1970  La Dame dans l’auto avec des lunettes et un fusil (The Lady in the Car with Glasses and a Gun) (Litvak) (as Anita Caldwell); Le Boucher (The Butcher) (Chabrol) (as Hélène Marcoux); La Rapture (The Breakup) (Chabrol) (as Hélène)
1971  Juste avant la nuit (Just before Nightfall) (Chabrol (as Helen); Sans mobile apparent (Without Apparent Motive) (Labro) (as Hélène Vallee); Aussi loin que l’amour (Rossif)
1972  Un Meurtre est un meurtre (Périer); Dead Pigeon on Beethoven Street (Fuller) (as Janice)
1973  Les Noces rouges (Wedding in Blood) (Chabrol); Hay que matar a B. (B. Must Die) (Borau)
1974  And Then There Were None (Ten Little Niggers; Ten Little Indians) (Collinson) (as Ilona); Comment réussir dans la vie quand on est con et pleurnichard (Audiard); Le Cri du coeur (Lallemand); Vincent, François, Paul, et les autres (Vincent, François, Paul, and the Others) (Sautet)
1975  The Black Bird (Giler) (as Anna Kemidon); one ep. of Chi dice donna dice ... donna (Cervi)
1976  Folies bourgeois (The Twist) (Chabrol) (as wife)
1977  Mort d’un pourri (Lautner); Des Teufels Advokat (The Devil’s Advocate) (Green)
1978  Silver Bears (Passer) (as Shireen Firdausi); Les Liens du sang (Blood Relatives) (Chabrol) (as Mother); Violette Nozière (Violette) (Chabrol) (as Germaine Nozière); Eagle’s Wing (Harvey) (as the widow)
1979  Le Gagnant (Gion); Le Soleil en face (Kast)
1980  The Big Red One (Fuller) (as Walcoon)
1982  Boulevard des assassins; Le Choc; Le paradis pour tous (Jessua); Coup de torchon (Clean Slate) (Tavernier) (as Hughuette) (Cordier)
1984  Le Sang des autres (The Blood of Others) (Chabrol); The Bay Boy (Petrie) (as Blanche); The Sun Also Rises (for TV)
1985  Poulet au vinatige (Cop au Vin) (Chabrol) (as Mme. Cuno); La Cage aux Folles 3: The Wedding (Lautner) (as Matrimonia); La Scarlatine (Aghion) (as Minon Palazzi); Les Plouffe (Carle) (as Mme. Boucher); Night Magic (Furey) (as Janice)
1986  L’Isola (Lizzani); La Gitane (De Broca) (as Brigitte); Suivez Mon Regard (Curtelin)
1987  Babette’s Gastebud (Babette’s Feast) (Axel) (as Babette); Les Saisons du Plaisir (Mocky) (as Bernadette); Poor Little Rich Girl: The Barbara Hutton Story (Jarrott—for TV) (as Pauline); Les Predateurs de la Nuit; Corps zà Corps (Halimi) (as Edna Chabert)
1988  Manika, une vie plus tard (François Villiers) (as Ananda)
1989  Sons (Rockwell); Champagne Charlie (Allan Eastman—for TV)
1990  Jours tranquilles à Clichy (Quiet Days in Clichy) (Chabrol)
1992  The Turn of the Screw (Lemorande) (as Mrs. Gross)
1993  Betty (Chabrol) (as Laure)
1995  Au petit Marguery (Benouïg) (as Josephine)
1996  Maximum Risk (Lam) (as Chantal)
1997  Un printemps de chien (Tasma—for TV); Arlette (Zidi) (as Diane)
1998  Madeline (von Scherler Mayer) (as Lady Covington)
1999  Belle Maman (Aghion) (as Brigitte)
2000  La Bicyclette bleue (for TV); Le Pique-nique de Lulu Kreutz (Martiny) (as Lulu Kreutz)

Publications

By AUDRAN: articles—

Interview with Guy Braucourt, in Ecran (Paris), November 1972.
Interview with Karl Lagerfeld, in Inter/View (New York), April 1975.

On AUDRAN: books—

Fassbinder, Rainer Werner, and others, Reihe Film 5: Claude Chabrol, Munich, 1975.

On AUDRAN: articles—

Film Dope (UK), March, 1988.
Daems, P., “De discrete charme van Stéphane Audran,” in Film en Televisie (Brussels), February, 1989.

* * *

Stéphane Audran’s career is intimately connected to the emerging New Wave in France as well as to the career of her husband, Claude Chabrol, who directed Audran in her most acclaimed performances. Her beauty is remarkable: the luminous eyes, the exquisitely high cheekbones, the long neck, the grace with which she moves—her hand cocked at a slight angle. What makes Audran different from Garbo or Dietrich (whom she in some ways evokes) is that one never feels that an Audran film has been constructed as a vehicle for her, but rather that her performance, though central, remains subservient to the film’s overall conception. Audran has perfected her portrayal of the bourgeois French woman—elegant, aloof, reserved, and yet often compassionate—who becomes embroiled in a murderous conflict. Her major performances are all related; indeed, in at least five instances, the character Audran plays is named “Hélène,” although each Hélène demonstrates a subtly different psychological makeup. Minor, early Audran performances in Chabrol’s films include the salesgirl who yearns for success on the stage in Les Bonnes Femmes, the first incarnation as Hélène in the triangular tale of jealousy and murder, L’Oeil du malin, and a double role—as a mousy secretary and a femme fatale—in Le Scandale.

At least four later performances stand out as extraordinary. In La Femme infidèle Audran plays, with the most incredible subtlety and economy, an unfaithful wife: when her love dies, she kills her husband in a moment of passion. Hélène lies flat on her bed and emits three tiny sobs. One remembers Audran’s mysterious and wondrous expression of approval as she rediscovers her husband’s passion; one remembers, too, the delicacy of her posture at the moment she burns the picture. Although La Femme infidèle takes the emotional conflict between husband and wife as its psychological subject, it is significant to note that not one word passes between them on the subject of their relationship or her infidelity: the conflict is all in the subtext, and Audran makes the subtext dominant through her considerable nuance and skill. In Le Boucheur Audran plays a schoolteacher (again, Hélène) who sublimates her sexual desire into her work, but who nevertheless becomes involved with a homicidal maniac who falls in love with her. Here again, as in La Femme infidèle, Audran’s performance seems so extraordinarily integrated into the fabric of the film that one can hardly tell where actress Audran leaves off and director Chabrol begins. Certain images of Audran in Le Boucheur are difficult to forget: her elegant walk through town, sustained in a very long tracking shot; her yoga posture, formal and self-absorbing, as she attempts to shut out the world and her problems; her scene of breakdown and tears while eating cherries in her kitchen; and her ultimate isolation—serene and yet desolate—by film’s end. In La Rupture, Audran’s Hélène is this time of a somewhat lower class, but here absolutely virtuous: a strong and prepossessed woman who is unaware of the horrible plot being spun against her. Here one is drawn to the generosity and innocence of her portrayal. Again, certain scenes stand out: her heartrending monologue about her troubled past delivered on a streetcar in a scene recalling Murnau’s Sunrise; her triumphant speech as it appears she will finally vanquish her enemies (“I am a woman, and I have all my strength!”); her regression to childhood and subsequent release in a drug-induced fantasy at film’s climax. In Violette Nozière, Audran surprised many with her portrayal, drawn from a historical character, of a lower-class, almost slatternly mother who is poisoned by her daughter. Although her earlier Chabrol performances are arguably more significant, Audran’s playing against type in a narrative that gave the leading role to the younger Isabelle Huppert, finally brought Audran the official acclaim of the French “Oscar,” the César. And yet certainly, virtually all of Audran’s leading performances for Chabrol have been extraordinary, even if they have been judged by some as too many variations on the same theme to be accorded great acclaim—including her upper-class lesbian in a bisexual love triangle in Les Biches; her adulterous, murderous wife in Les Noces rouges; and again her status-conscious Hélène in Juste avant la nuit.

At least two other directors have managed to use Audran as skillfully as Chabrol: Luis Buñuel in The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie and Gabriel Axel in Babette’s Feast. In Buñuel’s film, Audran with great wit plays an archetypal bourgeoisie, mistress of the manor, totally and comically unflappable in her designer gowns as she oversees huge dinner parties, is visited by terrorists, climbs down garden ivy for a quickie with her husband, and listens politely to strangers who insist on telling her their violent dreams; as well, Buñuel’s recurring cutaways to images of his rich protagonists, including Audran, walking down the road (of life?) to an unclear destination, are surprisingly moving. Babette’s Feast represents an even more impressive personal achievement for Audran, not only because she was working outside the French industry, but because she plays a role far from the bourgeois, glacial persona which has become her trademark. Although Audran enters the film late, once she does, she totally dominates it with the understated warmth of her sincere, discreet, working woman, a cook whose earthy meals ultimately reveal her to be the most luminous and sensuous artist. Audran deservedly received several acting awards, and the film reaped huge international box office virtually everywhere except for its native Denmark.

Nevertheless, true international fame has eluded Audran. By the time of Brideshead Revisited, Audran’s English had improved enough to play Laurence Olivier’s Italian mistress, but the role attracted little attention. Despite a variety of opportunities in English-language roles (in The Black Bird, The Silver Bears, and the television films Mistral’s Daughter, The Sun Also Rises, and Poor Little Rich Girl), American stardom also has continued to elude Audran—in part because her demonstrated inability to speak English without a heavy, sometimes impenetrable accent renders many performances phonetic and rigid. Audran’s charisma is subtle, certainly, and perhaps inherently French; and too, one must consider the failure of the French mystique to travel well to American culture—the number of French stars (Bardot, Deneuve, Moreau) who have failed spectacularly in the American market is numerous. More recently, Audran has been taking supporting roles—even in Chabrol’s work—which, to her fans, must be seen as somewhat of a disappointment. That most of these supporting roles are in films that have had virtually no release outside of France makes it particularly difficult for an American commentator to generalize. But many of the performances that have been marginally available—for instance, her alcoholic, older woman in Chabrol’s Betty—do not seem especially interesting or notable. It is clear that as Audran ages further and loses that particular confluence of beauty and charisma that marked the period of her greatest performances for Chabrol, her challenges will be to find other roles worthy of her talents and to find directors—like Axel—who will spur her to complex, rich, inventive work.

—Charles Derry

AUTEUIL, Daniel

Daniel Auteuil (right) with Gerard Depardieu in Jean de Florette

Academy Award for Best Actor in a Supporting Role, for Jean de Florette, 1988; European Film Award (Felix) for Best Actor, for Un coeur en hiver, 1993; Cannes Film Festival Best Actor Award, for Le Huitième jour (shared with Pascal Duquenne), 1996; César Award for Best Actor, for La Fille sur le pont, 2000. Agent: Claire Blondel, Artemedia, 10 Avenue George V, 75008 Paris, France.

Films as Actor:

1975 L’Agression (Act of Aggression) (Pirès); Attention les yeux (Let’s Make a Dirty Movie) (Pirès) (as Alex)
1976 La Nuit de Saint Germain des Prés (Swaim) (as Remy); L’Amour violé (Rape of Love) (Bellon)
1977 Monsieur Papa (Monnier) (as Dede)
1978 Les Héros n’ont pas froid aux oreilles (Nemès)
1979 Bête mais discipliné (Zidi); À nous deux (An Adventure for Two) (Berri and Lelouch) (as Un Voyou)
1980 Les Sous-doués (Zidi) (as Bebel); Clara et les chics types (Clara and the Swell Guys) (Monnet) (as Mickey); La Banquière (Girod)
1981 Les Sous-doués en vacances (Zidi); Les Hommes préfèrent les grosses (Men Prefer Fat Girls) (Poiré) (as Jean-Yves)
1982 Que les gros salaires lèvent le doigt! (Graniere-Deferre) (as André Joeuf); Pour 100 briques t’as plus rien . . . (Molinaro); T’empêches tout le monde de dormir (Lauzieres)
1983 L’Indic (Leroy) (as Dorniche); Les Fauves (Daniel) (as Berg)
1984 P’tit con (Lauzier); L’Arbalète (The Syringe) (Gobbi)
1985 Palace (Molinaro); L’Amoure en douce (Love on the Quiet) (Molinaro)
1986 Le Paltoquet (Deville) (as The Journalist); Jean de Florette (Berri) (as Ugolin); Manon des sources (Manon of the Spring) (Berri) (as Ugolin)
1988 Quelques jours avec moi (A Few Days with Me) (Sautet) (as Martial)
1989 Romuald et Juliette (Mama, There’s a Man in Your Bed) (Serreau) (as Romuald Blindet)
1990 Lacenaire (The Elegant Criminal) (Girod) (as Pierre-François Lacenaire)
1991 Ma vie est un enfer (My Life is Hell) (Balasko) (as Abar)
1992 Un coeur en hiver (A Heart in Winter; A Heart of Stone) (Sautet) (as Stephane)
Ma saison préférée (My Favourite Season) (Téchiné) (as Antoine)

La Reine Margot (Queen Margot) (Chéreau) (Henri of Navarre);
La Séparation (The Separation) (Vincent) (as Pierre)

Une femme Française (A French Woman) (Warnier) (as Louis)

Afrima Pereira (According to Pereira) (Faenza) (as Dr. Cardioso);
Le Huitième jour (The Eighth Day) (van Dormael) (as Harry);
Les Voleurs (Thieves; Child of the Night) (Téchiné) (as Alex)

Lucie Aubrac (Berri) (as Raymond Aubrac);
Passage à l’acte (Death in Therapy) (Grod);
Le Bossu (On Guard) (de Broca) (as Lagardère/Le bossu [the hunchback])

An Interesting State (Wertmuller);
La Fille sur le pont neuf (The Girl on the Bridge) (Leconte) (as Gabor);
The Lost Son (Menges) (as Xavier Lombard);
Mauvaise passe (The Escort; The Wrong Blonde) (Blanc) (as Pierre)

Sade (Jacquot) (as Marquis de Sade);
Le Placard (Veber);
La Veuve de Saint-Pierre (The Widow of Saint-Pierre) (Leconte)
(as Le Capitaine)

Publications

By AUTEUIL: articles—

On AUTEUIL: books—

On AUTEUIL: articles—

Kilby, Stuart, review of Le Huitième jour, in Film Review (London), December 1996.

Matteou, Demetrios, review of The Lost Son, in Total Film (London), July 1999.

* * *

Algerian born Daniel Auteuil spent his teenage years traveling with his father, who was an opera singer, and claims to have grown up in the theatres of provincial France. Now one of France’s most popular and well-known male actors, Auteuil began his professional acting career in the theatre before making his big-screen debut in 1975 in Gérard Pirès’s L’Aggression, and going on to act in several stage and screen comedies. Auteuil’s career was slow to gather momentum, but in 1986 he starred in Jean de Florette and its sequel, Manon des sources, the success of which launched him into a select group of leading French character actors, alongside Gerard Depardieu and the late Yves Montand. Having worked mostly in French art-house cinema, Auteuil remains relatively little known outside the francophone nations, despite the world-wide success of Jean de Florette. It is in the 1990s that he has begun to find a regular audience in art-house cinemas elsewhere in Europe and in the United States.

Writing in The Daily Telegraph, Jasper Rees describes Auteuil as “‘the new Depardieu—but thinner,’” and it is true that since Jean de Florette the two men have vied for the affections of French cinemagoers. Yet as actors Auteuil and Depardieu could hardly be more different. While Depardieu excels as a romantic lead, Auteuil prefers more ambiguous characters, such as the landowner, Ugolin, in the “Manon” films, or the wronged lover in numerous other movies such as La Femme Francaise, Un Coeur en Hiver, and Le Separation. Auteuil’s physical presence on the screen is no match for Depardieu’s imposing bulk: much of the charm of Jean de Florette lies in the battle of wills between Depardieu’s brawny, powerful farmer, and Auteuil’s physically weak landowner, who uses guile and wit to drive his rival, finally, to his death. Yet Auteuil invariably succeeds in establishing the complexity of the characters he plays, convincing the audience of the “‘Manon’” films, for example, of the depth of his tragic passion for Manon, while at the same time playing a shallow individual whose chief characteristic is malignant greed.

In the 1990s, Auteuil had the pick of some of the best films to have been produced by the French film industry. Un Coeur en hiver saw him co-starring for the third time with his then wife Emmanuelle Béart in a bitter love story, and won him the Felix award for Best Actor. His ability to charm audiences with his vulnerability even in otherwise unsympathetic roles has gained him many awards nominations in recent years, most notably for Le Bossu, a period drama in which Auteuil stars as a swordsman who disguises himself as a hunchback to avenge the murder of his friend the Duke of Nevers. Although this was the sixth known adaptation of Paul Feval’s novel, the movie was a deserved success, bringing Auteuil his third César nomination of the decade.

Auteuil’s status among the most highly rated of French male actors is now assured, and the fact that he has worked on nine films in the two years up to 2000 is testament to his enthusiasm for acting and filmmaking. Films such as La Fille sur le pont neuf are also bringing him to a wider audience. Released in the United Kingdom in 2000 as The Girl on the Bridge, the film co-stars Vanessa Paradis, and tells the quirky tale of a man who rescues a girl about to throw herself from the parapet of the Pont Neuf in Paris, and then recruits her as the “target” for his circus knife-throwing act. Auteuil’s skill for character complexity endows the manipulative Gabor with a troubled inner life which comes to dominate a film which is otherwise lacking in human interest.

Often cast in roles involving troubled relationships, conspiracy, and pragmatic moral choices, Auteuil manages to attract audiences to unpleasant or difficult characters with his laconic style, and an obvious commitment to the parts he plays. While he has not yet broken into American cinema with so high a profile as Depardieu, the success of Kevin Spacey in American Beauty suggests that audiences outside France are more than ready to embrace the kind of impish wit and deadpan delivery that Auteuil has made his speciality.

—Chris Routledge

AYRES, Lew

Nationality: American. Born: Lewis Frederick Ayres III in Minneapolis, Minnesota, 28 December 1908. Education: Attended Lake Harriet Grammar School and West High School, Minneapolis; high school in San Diego, California. Military Service: During World War II, assigned to conscientious objector camp at Cascade Locks, Oregon, then served in U.S. Army Medical Corps; participated in beachhead landings in South Pacific. Family: Married 1) the actress Lola Lane, 1931 (divorced 1933); 2) the actress Ginger Rogers, 1934 (divorced 1941); 3) Diana (Ayres), 1964, son: Justin Bret. Career: Mid-1920s—following high school, formed band with friends, briefly toured Mexico; joined Henry Halstead band; 1928—spotted in Hollywood nightclub by agent Ivan Kahn, signed with Pathé Studios, 1929; 1929—role in The Kiss opposite Garbo for MGM followed by role of Paul Baumer in All Quiet on the Western Front; early 1930s—under contract to Universal; 1935—moved to Paramount; 1936—directing following decision not to fight in World War II, his films banned in Hollywood; early 1950s—began producing religious documentaries; 1953—role in State Fair (Henry King) (as reporter Pat Gilbert); 1954—Don’t Bet on Love (Roth) (as Bill McCaffrey); 1955—My Weakness (David Butler) (as Ronnie Gregory). Films as Actor:

1929 The Sophomore (McCary); The Kiss (Feyder); Big News (La Cava) (as copyboy)
1930 All Quiet on the Western Front (Milestone) (as Paul Baumer); Common Clay (Fleming) (as Hugh Fullerton); Doorway to Hell (A Handful of Clouds) (Mayo) (as Louie); East Is West (Bell) (as Billy Benson)
1931 Many a Slip (Moore) (as Jerry Brooks); The Iron Man (Browning) (as Kid Mason); Up for Murder (Fires of Youth) (Bell) (as Robert Marshall); The Spirit of Notre Dame (Vigour of Youth) (Mack) (as Bucky O’Brien); Heaven on Earth (Mack) (as States)
1932 The Impatient Maiden (Whale) (as Dr. Myron Brown); Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood (Dillon); Night World (Henley) (as Michael Rand); Okay America (Penalty of Fame) (Garnett) (as Larry Wayne); State Fair (Henry King) (as reporter Pat Gilbert); 1933 Don’t Bet on Love (Roth) (as Bill McCaffrey); My Weakness (David Butler) (as Ronnie Gregory)

1934 Cross Country Cruise (Buzzell) (as Norman); Let’s Be Rizy (Ludwig) (as Jimmie); She Learned about Sailors (George Marshall) (as Larry Wilson); Servants’ Entrance (Lloyd) (as Eric Landstrom)
1935 Lottery Lover (Theile) (as Cadet Frank Harrington); Spring Tonic (Bruckman); Silk Hat Kid (Humberstone) (as Eddie Howard)
1936 The Leathernecks Have Landed (Brechtenson) (as Woody Davis); Panic on the Air (Lederman) (as Jerry); Shakedown (Selman) (as Bob Sanderson); Lady Be Careful (Reed) (as Dud “Dynamite”); Murder with Pictures (Burton) (as Kent Murdock)
1937 The Crime Nobody Saw (Barton) (as Nicholas Carter); The Last Train from Madrid (Hogan) (as Bill Dexter); Hold ’em Navy! (Neumann) (as Tommy Gorham)
1938 Scandal Street (Hogan) (as Joe McKnight); King of the Newsboys (Vonhaus) (as Jerry Flynn); Holiday (Free to Live; Unconventional Linda) (Cukor) (as Ned Seton); Rich Man, Poor Girl (Schunzel) (as Henry Thayer); Young Doctor Kildare (Bucquet) (title role); Spring Madness (Simon) (as Sam Thatcher)
1939 The Ice Follies of 1939 (Schunzel) (as Eddie Burgess); Broadway Serenade (Leonard) (as James Geoffrey Seymour); Calling Dr. Kildare (Bucquet) (title role); These Glamour Girls (Simon) (as Philip S. Griswold); Remember? (McLeod) (as Sky Ames); Secret of Dr. Kildare (Bucquet) (title role)
1940 Dr. Kildare’s Strange Case (Bucquet) (title role); The Golden Fleece (Fenton) (as Henry Twinkle); Dr. Kildare Goes Home (Bucquet) (title role); Dr. Kildare’s Crisis (Bucquet) (title role)
1941 Maisy Was a Lady (Marin) (as Bob Rawlston); The People vs. Dr. Kildare (My Life Is Yours) (Bucquet) (title role); Dr. Kildare’s Wedding Day (Mary Names the Day) (Bucquet) (title role); Dr. Kildare’s Victory (The Doctor and the Debutante) (Van Dyke) (title role)
1942 Fingers at the Window (Lederer) (as Oliver Duffy)
1946 The Dark Mirror (Siodmak) (as Dr. Scott Elliott)
1947 The Unfaithful (Sherman) (as Larry Hannaford)
1948 Johnny Belinda (Neuvelesco) (as Dr. Robert Richardson)
1950 The Capture (John Sturges) (as Vanner)
1951 New Mexico (Reiss) (as Capt. Hunt)
1953 No Escape (Bennett) (as John Tracy); Donovan’s Brain (Feist) (as Dr. Patrick J. Cory)
1962 Advise and Consent (Preminger) (as the vice president)
1964 The Carpentractioners (Dmytryk) (as McCalister)
1968 Hawaii Five-O (Wendkos—for TV) (as Governor)
1969 Marcus Welby, M.D. (David Lowell Rich—for TV)
1971 Earth II (Gries—for TV); She Waits (Delbert Mann—for TV)
1972 The Biscuit Eater (McEveety) (as Mr. Ames); The Man (Sargent) (as Harley)
1973 Battle for the Planet of the Apes (J. Lee Thompson) (as Mandemus); The Questor Tapes (Colla—for TV) (as Vaslovik); The Stranger (Katzin—for TV)
Lew Ayres (left) with Raymond Griffith in All Quiet on the Western Front

1974  Heat Wave! (Jameson—for TV)
1976  Francis Gary Powers: The True Story of the U-2 Spy Incident
      (Delbert Mann—for TV)
1978  Damien—Omen II (Taylor) (as Bill Atherton); End of the World (Grilo and Hayes); Battlestar Galactica (Colla) (as President Adar); Suddenly, Love (Margolin—for TV)
1979  Salem’s Lot (Hooper—for TV); Letters from Frank (Parone—for TV)
1980  Reunion (Mayberry—for TV)
1981  Of Mice and Men (Badiyi—for TV)
1983  Don Camillo (Hill)
1986  Under Siege (Roger Young—for TV) (as John Pace)
1989  Cast the First Stone (Cast the First Stone: The Diane Martin Story) (Korty—for TV) (as Mr. Martin) 1994  Hart to Hart: Crimes of the Hart (Hunt—for TV) (as Professor Kamen)

Film as Director:

1936  Hearts in Bondage

Films as Producer:

1955  Altars of the East (doc) (+ sc, ro as narrator)
1976  Altars of the World (ed—doc) (+ d, ph)

Publications

On AYRES: articles—

Cutts, John, “Classics Revisited: All Quiet on the Western Front,” in Films and Filming (London), April 1963.
July 1978.
“Lew Ayres,” in Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), December 1986.
(Obituary), EPD Film (Frankfurt), February, 1997.

* * *
“‘Many things come together to create a man’s outlook on life,’” Lew Ayres once remarked. But nothing quite had the impact on both his life and career as did All Quiet on the Western Front. From a “bit” actor and supporting player (to Garbo) in The Kiss, Ayres became a star thanks to his performance as Paul Baumer in All Quiet on the Western Front. He is quick to credit his success to the dialogue director, George Cukor, who carefully coached the actors in the use of “neutral” accents and quiet underplaying. The film also instilled in Ayres a pacifist outlook on life, which eventually was to cause controversy for him as a member of the Hollywood community.

In the early 1930s Ayres starred in a string of minor features, the perfect leading man for every actress from Janet Gaynor to Jean Harlow. His career was failing rapidly, however, and he was turning up more and more frequently in B pictures (and even directing one, The Unfaithful). Ayres declared himself a conscientious objector, and Hollywood was quick to denounce him. While the industry hailed the stars who, with maximum publicity, entered the armed forces yet never saw active service, Lew Ayres quietly went about his work as a medical orderly at the South Pacific battlefront. There is a haunting photograph of the actor taping up the wounds of a Japanese prisoner in the Philippines, which appeared in Life magazine (25 December 1944).

On his return from the war, Ayres had aged. He looked more assured, more dignified, less a pretty face and more a figure with character and personality. A new phase of his career began, as he immediately appeared in The Dark Mirror (as a doctor), The Unfaithful (as an attorney), and Johnny Belinda. From the 1950s, his film work has been sporadic, with some notable credits being Advise and Consent and The Carpetbaggers. And his commitment to a spiritualist philosophy remained a constant, as evidenced by his involvement in the documentaries Altars of the East and Altars of the World.

—Anthony Slide, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

AZMI, Shabana

Films as Actress:

1973  The December Evening (short); Munshiiji (short); Ankur (The Seedling) (Benegal)
1974  Parinay; Ishq, Ishq, Ishq (Dev Anand); Faslah (Abbas)
1975  Sevak; Kadamberi; Nishant (Benegal)
1976  Fakira; Shaqae; Vishwasgaat
1977  Aadha din aadhi raat; Hira aur Patthar; Amar Akbar Anthony (Desai); Chor Sipahi; Ek hi rasta; Parwarish; Khel Khiladi ka; Kissu Kursi Ka; Karm; Swami; Kanneshwaru Rama; Zamanat
1978  Devata; Atithie; Swarg narad; Khoon ki pukar; Toote Khilone; Junoon (Obsession) (Benegal); Shatranj Ke Khilari (The Chess Players) (Satyajit Ray) (as Mirza’s wife)
1979  Bagula bhagat; Amar deep; Lahu ke do rang; Sparsh (Paranjpye); Jeena yahan
1980  Jwalamukhi; Albert Pinto ko gussa kyon aata hai (Why Albert Pinto Is Angry) (Mirza); Ek baar kaho; Apne paraye; Thodisi bewafai; Yeh kaisa insaaf; Hum paanch
1981  Ek hi bhool; Shama; Sameera (Shulka); Raaste pyare ke
1982  Namkeen; Ashanti; Anokha bandhan; Suraag; Yeh Nazdeekiyan; Arth (Mahash Bhatt); Log kya kahenge; Masoom (Innocent) (Shekhar Kapur)
1983  Doosri Doolhan; Sweekar kiya maine; Avtaar; Mandi (Market Place) (Benegal); Khandahar (The Ruins) (Mrinal Sen) (as Jamila); Paaasi Aankhen
1984  Aaj ka M.L.A. Ram Avtaar; Bhavna; Kamla; Itihaas; Lottie; Libaas; Sparsh (Paranjpye); Kamyaab; Paar (Goutam Ghose); Gangvaar; Hum Rahe Na Hum; Yaadon K.I. Zanjeer; Mr. X; Ram Tera Desh
1985  Rahi Badal Gaye; Uttarayan; Khamosh (Vidhu Vinod Chopra) (as herself); Shart
1986  Anjuman (Mazaffar Ali); Ek Pal; Samay Ki Dhara; Nishtari; Sasum (The Essence) (Benegal); Genesis (Mrinal Sen) (as the woman)
1987  Itihaas; Jallianwala Bagh; Pestonjee (Vijaya Mehta)
1988  Mardon Wali Baat; Madame Sousatzka (Schlesinger) (as Sushila Sen); Ek Din Achanak (Suddenly, One Day) (Mrinal Sen); Nuit Bengali (Bengali Night) (Klotz) (as Indira Sen)
1989  Oonch Neech Beech; Libaas; Jhoothi Sharm; Rakhwala; Main Azaad Hoon (Timmu Anand); Sati (Aparna Sen)
1990  Disha (Paranjpye); Picnic (Aparna Sen—for TV); Amba; Muqaddar Ka Badshah; Ek Doctor Ki Maut
1991  Immaculate Conception (Jamal Dehlavi) (as Samira); Dharavi (City of Dreams) (Sudhir Mishra) (as Kumud)
1992  Adharm; Jhoothi Shaan; City of Joy (Joffé) (as Kamla Pal); Antarrnaad
1993  Son of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as the Queen)
1994  Patang (The Kite) (Goutam Ghose) (as Jiti); In Custody (Hifzaazat) (Merchant) (as Intiaz Begum)
1996  Fire (Deepa Mehta)
1997  Side Streets (Gerber) (as Chandra Raj)
1998  Mrityu Dand (Jha)
1999  Godmother (Shukla) (as Rambhi)

Publications

By AZMI: articles—

Shabana Azmi shares with Smita Patil her position as the most important contemporary actress in Indian cinema (though not necessarily the most popular with the public) because of her unusual ability to successfully straddle the two worlds of commercial and art cinema. Many themes of the new cinema revolve around the personalities of women, providing opportunities for actresses to demonstrate their histrionic abilities. Azmi, like Patil, was not a conventional glamour girl, but through sheer personal magnetism found herself cast in Shyam Benegal’s first film Ankur, a landmark in India’s new cinema, after being turned down by him for a modeling assignment.

Azmi had always hoped to succeed in commercial films in order to cultivate a following for her art films. Her career was undoubtedly aided by the box-office success of her first big-budget movie, Fakira, which succeeded in spite of her. After several years and 60-odd films, making a dent in all kinds of cinema—from the lowest budget to the most crassly commercial—it is remarkable that she has been consistently shrewd enough to know which roles would suit her and yet impress the public with her versatility as an actress. From such roles as the madam of a brothel in Shyam Benegal’s Mandi, a bellicose part for which she had to gain considerable weight, or the subdued Jamila in Mrinal Sen’s Khandahar, where the camera lovingly explores her beauty amongst decaying ruins, she can switch to the tear-jerking melodramas which have won her a wider following.

Her secret lies in an ability to throw herself completely into the part, not worrying about what her friends think about a ‘‘dancing around the trees’’ routine. As she has said, ‘‘After a while, I realized that even such scenes needed a measure of talent to carry off convincingly and decided to throw myself into it wholeheartedly.’’

Azmi’s multifaceted talents bring a three-dimensionality, depth, and freshness to every character she takes on. She is the child prodigy’s grasping mother in Madame Sousatzka, the poet-pretender second wife of the aging poet Nur in In Custody, the unwedded tough mother Jitni in the Bengali film Patang, and the scheming queen in Son of the Pink Panther. Whether she is engaged in a war of wills with her son’s teacher, or trying to push her own poetry above her husband’s, or trying to bridge the gap between her son and lover, or planning the kidnaping of her stepdaughter, there is one common characteristic: she is vivacious.

More recently, Azmi tried her hand at stage acting in Tumhari Amrita, an adaptation of A. K. Gurney’s Love Letters. Azmi and Farouque Shaikh, who formed the duo cast, sat on the stage just reading letters and pouring their hearts out in the process. The play was critically acclaimed and had rave responses from audiences, adding another to Azmi’s impressive forte of talents. Azmi’s commitment not only to the portrayal of the weaker sections of the society, but also to their upliftment has been manifested in many of her activities. Staging a hunger strike to stop the evacuation of slum dwellers, protesting the killing of noted playwright Safdar Hashmi, organizing the film industry to help the Bombay riot victims—her convictions earn credit to her as a concerned human being, as much as her histrionics bring her acclaim as an actress.

Azmi, called the activist actress, is a member of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, and presented their Peace Award to South African President Nelson Mandela in 1994. She was also honored at the General State of Human Rights Conference at Paris in 1989.

—Behroze Gandhy, updated by Usha Venkatachallam
BACALL, Lauren

Nationality: American. Born: Betty Joan Perske in the Bronx, New York, 16 September 1924. Education: Attended Julia Richman High School; American Academy of Dramatic Arts, New York. Family: Married 1) the actor Humphrey Bogart, 1945 (died 1957), children: Stephen Humphrey and Leslie Howard; 2) the actor Jason Robards, 1961 (divorced 1973), son: Sam Prideaux. Career: Began modeling, also theater-related odd jobs, early 1940s; made New York stage debut as walk-on in Johnny Two-by-Four, 1942; appeared on Harper's Bazaar cover and attracted attention of director Howard Hawks; signed personal contract with Hawks who changed her name to Lauren Bacall, 1943; made film debut in Hawks's To Have and Have Not with Humphrey Bogart, 1944; contract sold to Warners, mid-1940s; protested againstHUAC in Washington with Bogart and other celebrities, 1947; fined and suspended by Warners for failing to accept roles, late 1940s; had first Broadway starring role in Goodbye Charlie, 1959; accepted periodic film roles while making highly successful Broadway appearances, from 1960s. Awards: Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture Golden Globe, Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a Supporting Role Screen Actors Guild Award, for Golden Globe, Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a Motion Picture Academy, 1350 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1944 To Have and Have Not (Hawks) (as Marie Browning)
1945 Confidential Agent (Shumlin) (as Rose Cullen)
1946 Two Guys from Milwaukee (Royal Flash) (Butler) (as herself);
   The Big Sleep (Hawks) (as Vivian Sternwood Rutledge)
1947 The Dark Passage (Daves) (as Irene Jansen)
1948 Key Largo (Huston) (as Nora Temple)
1950 Young Man with a Horn (Young Man of Music) (Curtiz) (as Amy North); Bright Leaf (Curtiz) (as Sonia Kovac)
1953 How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco) (as Schatze Page)
1954 Woman's World (Negulesco) (as Elizabeth)
1955 The Cobweb (Minnelli) (as Meg Paversen Rinehart); Blood Alley (Wellman) (as Cathy)
1956 Written on the Wind (Sirk) (as Lucy Moore Hadley)
1957 Designing Woman (Minnelli) (as Marilla Hagen)
1958 The Gift of Love (Negulesco) (as Julie Beck)
1959 Flame over India (Northwest Frontier) (Thompson) (as Catherine Wyatt)
1964 Shock Treatment (Denis Sanders) (as Dr. Edwina Beighley); Sex and the Single Girl (Quine) (as Sylvia)
1966 Harper (The Moving Target) (Smight) (as Mrs. Elaine Sampson)
1974 Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Mrs. Hubbard)
1976 The Shootist (Siegel) (as Bond Rogers)
1978 Perfect Gentlemen (Cooper—for TV) (as Lizzie Martin)
1980 Health (Altman) (as Esther Brill)
1981 The Fan (Bianchi) (as Sally Ross); The Great Muppet Caper (Henson)
1988 In from the Cold (Palmer—doc); Mr. North (Danny Huston) (as Mrs. Amelia Cranston); Appointment with Death (Winner) (as Lady Westholme)
1989 Dinner at Eight (Lagomarsino—for TV) (as Carlotta Vance)
1990 The Tree of Hands (Innocent Victims) (Foster) (as Marsha Archdale); Misery (Rob Reiner) (as Marcia Sindell); Ed Murrow: This Reporter (Steinberg); A Star for Two (Kaufman); A Little Piece of Sunshine (James Clellan Jones—for TV) (as Beatrix Coltrane)
1991 All I Want for Christmas (Liebman) (as Lillian Brooks)
1993 The Portrait (Arthur Penn—for TV) (as Fanny Church); A Foreign Field (Sturridge—for TV) (as Lisa); The Parallax Garden (David Trainer—for TV)
1994 Ready to Wear (Pret-a-Porter) (Altman) (as Slim Chrysler)
1995 From the Mixed-Up Files of Mrs. Basil E. Frankweiler (Marcus Cole—for TV) (title role)
1996 The Mirror Has Two Faces (Streisand) (as Hannah Morgan); My Fellow Americans (Segal) (as Margaret Kramer)
1997 Le Jour et la nuit (Day and Night) (Lévy) (as Sonia)
1999 The Venice Project (Dornhelm) (as Carlotta Vance)
2000 Johnny Hit and Run Pauline (Efrosini Lellios)

Publications

By BACALL: books—

By BACALL: articles—

“No Chicken for Bacall,” interview with P. Ast, in Inter/View (New York), November 1972.
Lauren Bacall and Humphrey Bogart in The Big Sleep

On BACALL: books—

On BACALL: articles—

* * *

Lauren Bacall’s rise to fame as a Hollywood star was meteoric. Soon after Mrs. Howard Hawks noticed her on the March 1943 cover of Harper’s Bazaar, the 19-year-old model was quickly signed by producer-director Hawks to a seven-year studio contract.

For her first film, To Have and Have Not, Hawks molded the as yet untried actress into the ideal woman of many men of that period—insolent and provocative, yet one who, underneath her femme fatale exterior, really was a ‘‘regular Joe.’’ In her first autobiography, Bacall writes that Hawks ‘‘wanted to be a Svengali.’’ He created her voice, her manner, her persona, and quite by accident—because in her nervousness she could not keep her head from shaking—‘‘The Look.’ Her chin was kept low. Her eyes stared up at a curious and fascinated Humphrey Bogart. When Bacall told Bogart her now famous line—‘You know how to whistle, don’t you Steve? You just put your lips together and blow’—she emerged an overnight sensation.

Her seductive portrayal of Slim in To Have and Have Not captivated audiences—especially male viewers. Her glamour and apparent sophistication were imitated by the women in the audience. Yet writer Moss Hart cautioned the burgeoning star, ‘You realize, of course, from here on you have nowhere to go but down.’

Hart’s words proved prophetic. Bacall’s phenomenal success was immediately followed by a crashing critical and box-office failure, Confidential Agent. Miscast as a British upper-class ingénue and lacking Hawks’s strong directorial support, Bacall floundered. Jack Warner (who had bought her contract from Hawks) attempted to boost her career by building up her role in the already completed The Big Sleep (in which she was again directed by Hawks). Retakes and new scenes were added to this most confusing film, injecting the qualities that had made her famous—primarily her aloof bearing and on-screen chemistry with Bogart (who by that time she had married). Despite its narrative flaws, The Big Sleep was a box-office success, and Bacall was back on top.

During her tenure at Warner Brothers she starred in only seven films—four of them with Bogart. The fan magazines reveled in the Bogart-Bacall relationship, which only added to their growing popularity as a screen team. Nevertheless, Bacall continually fought with Jack Warner over her assignments, rejecting properties she did not feel would advance her career. This resulted in a series of contract suspensions. One disagreement in particular made headlines when the actress announced she could not be cast in the frothy comedy To Have and Have Not. Instead, she demanded that she appear in a bathing suit. Warner, sensing Bacall’s middle-class upbringing, accepted the demand. Bacall’s seductive portrayal of Slim in To Have and Have Not was a box-office success, although immediately followed by a crashing critical and box-office failure, To Have and Have Not. Nonetheless, Bacall’s success was proof that you can get old without losing your looks, or your sense of style.

—Joanne L. Yeck, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

BACON, Kevin

Films as Actor:

1978 National Lampoon’s Animal House (Landis) (as Chip Diller)
1979 Starting Over (Pakula); The Gift (Don Taylor—for TV) (as Teddy)
1980 Hero at Large (Davidson) (as 2nd teenager); Friday the 13th (Cunningham) (as Jack)
1981 Only When I Laugh (It Hurts Only When I Laugh) (Glenn Jordan) (as Don)
1982 Forty Deuce (Morrissey) (as Rickey); Diner (Levinson) (as Fenwick)
1983 The Demon Murder Case (The Rhode Island Murders) (Hale—for TV) (as Kenny Miller); ‘Alexandra’s Story’ ep. of Enormous Changes at the Last Minute (Trumpp) (Bank—for TV, re-released theatrically in 1985) (as Dennis)
1984 Footloose (Ross) (as Ren MacCormack)
1986 Quicksilver (Donnelly) (as Jack Casey)
1987 White Water Summer (Rites of Summer) (Bleckner) (as Vic); Planes, Trains and Automobiles (Hughes) (as Taxi Racer); Lemon Sky (Egleson—for TV) (as Alan)

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION
Kevin Bacon (center), with Bill Paxton (left) and Tom Hanks in Apollo 13

1988 End of the Line (Jay Russell) (as Everett); She’s Having a Baby (Hughes) (as Jefferson “Jake” Briggs)
1989 Criminal Law (Campbell) (as Martin Thiel); The Big Picture (Christopher Guest) (as Nick Chapman)
1990 Tremors (Underwood) (as Valentine McKee); Flatliners (Schumacher) (as David Labraccio)
1991 Queens Logic (Rash) (as Dennis); He Said, She Said (Kwapis and Marisa Silver) (as Dan Hanson); Pyrates (Noah Stern—released direct to video) (as Sam); JFK (Oliver Stone) (as Willie O’Keefe)
1994 The Air Up There (Glaser) (as Jimmy Dolan); The River Wild (Hanson) (as Wade)
1995 Murder in the First (Rocco) (as Henri Young); Apollo 13 (Ron Howard) (as Jack Swigert); Balto (Wells—animation) (as voice of Balto)
1996 Sleepers (Levinson) (as Nokes)
1997 Picture Perfect (Gordon) (as Sam Mayfair); Telling Lies in America (Ferland) (as Billy Magic)
1998 Wild Things (McNaughton) (as Ray Duquette) (+ exec pr)
1999 Stir of Echoes (Koepp) (as Tom Witzky); My Dog Skip (Russell) (as Jack Morris)
2000 Hollow Man (Verhoeven) (as Sebastian Caine); We Married Margo (Shapiro) (as himself); Novocaine (Atkins)

Film as Director:

1996 Losing Chase (for TV)

Publications

By BACON: articles—

Interview with Mark Salisbury, in Empire (London), no. 79, 1996.

On BACON: articles—

* * *

The good-looking, WASPish Kevin Bacon has had a shaky but generally respected acting career, both in the American cinema and on the New York stage. For a time in the mid-eighties, Bacon was considered a major star, but because of a number of poor project choices and a certain stiffness the actor displays on camera he has not quite maintained his major rank. In the 1990s Bacon reestablished himself as something of a character actor playing the kind of sexy, dangerous roles he began his career with and he seems poised to follow many of his colleagues into directing.

By the time Herbert Ross’s Footloose came out in 1984, vaulting Bacon to stardom, he had already made an impression on critics with his drugged-out gay hustler Ricky in the off-Broadway production Forty Deuce and as Fenwick in Barry Levinson’s 1982 sleeper, Diner. While the former is virtually unknown outside the New York Village scene (the Paul Morrissey film adaptation starring Bacon and Orson Bean was barely released), Bacon’s performance in it exemplifies his appeal to directors looking for attractive young actors willing to throw vanity aside and play unglamorous, unlikable people. (Ricky was a character Bacon would recreate, to a certain extent, for Oliver Stone’s J.F.K.) Bacon’s praised work as the intelligent but foolish and self-destructive Fenwick in Diner is also part of this actors’ tradition Bacon still subscribes to.

It almost seems an anomaly that Bacon wound up in Footloose, one of the shallower films in his credits (and a role he did not seem quite comfortable with), but the film was a major blockbuster and it seemed to increase anticipations that the 25-year-old actor would become a major star. Expectations were suddenly very high, but Bacon tellingly chose to claim a kinship with the stage in a live television performance of the play Mr. Roberts (as Ensign Pulver) a month after Footloose’s record-breaking run had begun.

While Bacon might have done well to swing back and forth from “acting” on stage (and in independent cinema) and “starring” in major studio films, the choices offered him in these realms were often second-rank. Quicksilver was Bacon’s Footloose follow-up, but critics and audiences ignored the formulaic picture. Lemon Sky was an actorly realization of a Lanford Wilson script for American Playhouse, but, aside from giving Bacon an opportunity to act with his future wife Kyra Sedgwick, it did little to further his career. Some of Bacon’s best work in the late eighties was either in poor films (his brilliant psychopath Martin Thiel, opposite Gary Oldman, in Criminal Law) or in fine, but little-seen pictures (such as the winsome sci-fi pastiche Tremors). Bacon enjoyed moderate success in She’s Having a Baby as an expectant father opposite Elizabeth McGovern but his next major comedy The Big Picture, a satire of Hollywood, was barely released. By the nineties, Bacon seemed to star only in critical and box-office disappointments such as He Said, She Said and The Air Up There.

Bacon did regain some cachet in such ensemble films as Queens Logic and Apollo 13 (as a touchingly portrayed Jack Swigert) but it was in character roles that he most impressed audiences. Bacon returned to hustling, distinguishing himself in a cast of heavy-hitters, in J.F.K.; played a convincingly menacing military lawyer for Rob Reiner in A Few Good Men; held his own against Meryl Streep in The River Wild; and surprised many observers with his nearly operatic turn as Henri Young, an inmate driven mad by the conditions of Alcatraz in Murder in the First. As the nineties continued, Bacon reteamed with Barry Levinson for the ensemble film Sleepers, co-starring Robert De Niro, Brad Pitt, and Jason Patric but his future may place him more often behind the camera. Bacon’s directorial debut, the Showtime film Losing Chase, premiered at Sundance in 1996 to enthusiastic responses. While the project was hampered by a contrived script, its surefooted style and uniform acting excellence indicates that Bacon may harbor considerable talents as a director.

—Daniel Humphrey

BAKER, (Sir) Stanley

Films as Actor:

1943 Undercover (Underground) (Nolbandov) (as Peter)

1948 Obsession (The Hidden Room) (Dmytryk)
1949  All over the Town (Twist) (as Barnes)
1950  Your Witness (Eye Witness) (Montgomery) (as Sgt. Bannoch); Lilli Marlene (Crabtree) (as Evans)
1951  The Rossiter Case (Searle) (as Joe); Cloudburst (Searle) (as Milkman); Home to Danger (Fisher) (as Willie Dougan); Captain Horatio Hornblower R.N. (Walsh) (as Mr. Harrison)
1952  Whispering Smith Hits London (Whispering Smith vs. Scotland Yard) (Searle) (as reporter)
1953  The Cruel Sea (Frend) (as First Officer Bennett); The Red Beret (The Paratrooper) (Young) (as Breton); The Tell-Tale Heart (Williams) (as Edgar Allan Poe); Hell Below Zero (Robson) (as Erik Bland)
1954  The Good Die Young (Gilbert) (as Mike); The Beautiful Stranger (Twist of Fate) (Miller) (as Louis Galt); Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe) (as Mordred)
1955  Helen of Troy (Wise) (as Achilles); Richard III (Olivier) (as Henry Tudor)
1956  Alexander the Great (Rosen) (as Attalus); Child in the House (De Lautour and Endfield) (as Stephen Lorimer); A Hill in Korea (Hell in Korea) (Amyes) (as Corporal Ryker); Checkpoint (Thomas) (as O'Donovan)
1957  Hell Drivers (Endfield) (as Tom Yatley); Campbell’s Kingdom (Thomas) (as Owen Morgan); Violent Playground (Dearden) (as Sgt. Truman)
1958  Sea Fury (Endfield) (as Abel Hewson)
1959  The Angry Hills (Aldrich) (as Konrad Heisler); Yesterday’s Enemy (Guest) (as Captain Langford); Jet Storm (Endfield) (as Captain Barlow); Blind Date (Chance Meeting) (Losey) (as Inspector Morgan)
1960  Hell Is a City (Guest) (as Inspector Martineau); The Criminal (The Concrete Jungle) (Losey) (as Johnny Bannion)
1961  The Guns of Navarone (Thompson) (as C.P.O. Brown)
1962  Sodoma e Gomorra (Sodom and Gomorrah; The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah) (Aldrich and Leone) (as Astaroth); Eva (Eve) (Losey) (as Tyvian Jones); In the French Style (Parrish) (as Walter Beddoes); A Prize of Arms (Owen) (as Turpin); The Man Who Finally Died (Lawrence) (as Joe Newman)
1963  Zulu (Endfield) (as Lt. John Chard) (+ co-pr)
1965  Dingaka (Uys) (as Tom Davis); Sands of the Kalahari (Endfield) (as Bain) (+ co-pr); One of Them Is Named Brett (Graef) (as narrator); Who Has Seen the Wind? (Sidney—for TV)
1967  Accident (Losey) (as Charley); Robbery (Yates) (as Paul Clifton) (+ co-pr); Code Name Heraclitus (for TV)
1968  La ragazza con la pistola (The Girl with the Pistol) (Monicelli) (as Dr. Osborne)
1969  Where’s Jack (Clavell) (as Jonathan Wild) (+ co-pr); The Games (Winner) (as Bill Oliver)
1970 Perfect Friday (Hall) (as Mr. Graham); The Last Grenade (Flemyng) (as Major Harry Grigsby); Popsy Pop (The 21 Carat Snatch) (Herman) (as Inspector Corvin)

1971 Una lucertola con la pelle di donna (A Lizard with a Woman’s Skin; Schizoid) (Fulci) (as Inspector Silva)

1972 Innocent Bystanders (Collinson) (as John Craig)

1975 Zorro (Tessari) (as Huerta); Orzowei (Yves Allégret)

1976 Petita Jimenez (Bride to Be) (Alba) (as Pedro de Vargas)

Films as co-producer:

1969 The Italian Job (Collinson)
1970 Colosseum and Juicy Lucy (Palmer)

Publications

By BAKER: article—

On BAKER: book—

On BAKER: article—

* * *

Almost alone in the British postwar cinema, Stanley Baker embodied the essence of working-class ability to command. A Welsh miner chunkiness put aristocratic roles beyond him, a deficiency on which he capitalized by playing the self-motivated man in charge—minor military officer, professional criminal, cop—who gets a dirty job done.

Years of servitude as an unsympathetic support performer in British programme films (notably as a gluttonous officer in The Cruel Sea) ended with Robert Wise’s Helen of Troy: his strutting Achilles radiated power and arrogance. Thereafter, a shrewd association with exiled left-wing Hollywood directors Joseph Losey and Cy Endfield led to his gaining highly effective roles in three Endfield thrillers and as a sadistic professional thug or equally ruthless cop in Losey’s The Criminal and Blind Date, Val Guest’s Hell Is a City, and Cliff Owen’s A Prize of Arms.

In association with the South African-born Endfield, Baker co-produced and starred in Zulu and Sands of the Kalahari. In Zulu, as a pragmatic Lieutenant of Engineers, struggling to fortify Rorke’s Drift against Cetewayo’s imminent hordes and the more pressing pomposity of an aristocratic Michael Caine, Baker showed a maturing talent for finely shaded performance. He sustained it in Robbery as the criminal mastermind of the so-called Great Train Robbery. But Baker’s most improbable acting success was in the Losey/Pinter Accident: he offered a brilliantly offhand portrait of an academic-turned-media-hero, narcissistic, petulant, languid, effortlessly agile in argument but helpless in anything requiring a trace of humanity.

Baker’s five years in a variety of Italian and French thrillers before his premature death in 1976 did little justice to a powerful and distinguished performer.

—John Baxter

BANCROFT, Anne

Address: c/o Toni Howard, William Morris Agency, 151 EL Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 9021, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1952 Don’t Bother to Knock (Baker) (as Lyn Leslie)
1953 Treasure of the Golden Condor (Daves) (as Marie); Tonight We Sing (Leisen) (as Mrs. Sol Hurok); The Kid from Left Field (Jones) (as Marian)
Anne Bancroft and Dustin Hoffman in The Graduate

1954 Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves) (as Paula); The Raid (Fregonese) (as Katy Bishop); Gorilla at Large (Jones) (as Laverne Miller); A Life in the Balance (Horner) (as Maria Ibinia); New York Confidential (Rouse) (as Kathy Lupo)

1955 The Naked Street (Shane) (as Rosalie Regalzyk); The Last Frontier (Mann) (as Corinna Marston)

1956 Walk the Proud Land (Hibbs) (as Tianay); The Girl in Black Stockings (Koch) (as Beth Dixon); Nightfall (Tourneur) (as Marie Gardner); The Restless Breed (Dwan) (as Angelita)

1962 The Miracle Worker (Penn) (as Annie Sullivan)

1963 The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton) (as Jo Armitage)

1965 The Slender Thread (Pollack) (as Inga Dyson); Seven Women (Ford) (as Dr. D. R. Cartwright)

1967 The Graduate (Nichols) (as Mrs. Robinson)

1970 Arthur Penn (Hughes—doc) (as an interviewee)

1972 Young Winston (Attenborough) (as Lady Randolph Churchill)

1975 The Prisoner of Second Avenue (Frank) (as Edna); The Hindenburg (Wise) (as the Countess)

1976 Lipstick (Johnson) (as Carla Bondi); Silent Movie (Mel Brooks)

1977 The Turning Point (Ross) (as Emma Jacklin)

1979 Jesus of Nazareth (Zeffirelli) (as Mary Magdalene)

1980 The Elephant Man (Lynch) (as Mrs. Kendal)

1983 To Be or Not to Be (Mel Brooks) (as Anna Bronski)

1984 Garbo Talks (Lumet) (as Estelle Rolfe)

1985 Agnes of God (Jewison) (as Sister Miriam Ruth)

1986 'night, Mother (Moore) (as Thelma Cates); 84 Charing Cross Road (Jones) (as Helene Hanf)

1988 Torch Song Trilogy (Bogart) (as Ma)

1989 Bert Rigby, You’re a Fool (Carl Reiner) (as Meredith Perlestein)

1992 Broadway Bound (Bogart); Love Potion No. 9 (Launer) (as Madame Ruth); Honeymoon in Vegas (Bergman) (as Bea Singer); Mrs. Cage (for TV)

1993 Point of No Return (Badham) (as Amanda); Mr. Jones (Figgis) (as Dr. Catherine Holland); Malice (Becker) (as Claire Kennsinger)

1995 How to Make an American Quilt (Moorhouse) (as Glady Jo)

1996 Home for the Holidays (Foster) (as Adele Larson)

1997 G.I. Jane (Scott) (as Lillian DeHaven)

1998 Great Expectations (Cuaron) (as Nora Dinsmoor); Mark Twain’s America in 3D (Low) (as Narrator)
1999  Deep in My Heart (Kern—for TV) (as Gerry Cummins)
2000  Keeping the Faith (Norton); Up at the Villa (Haas) (as Princess San Ferdinando)
2001  Breakers (Mirkin); Haven (Gray—for TV)

Film as Director and Scriptwriter:

1980  Fatso (+ ro as Antoinette)

Publications

By BANCROFT: articles—

Interview with T. Casablanca, in Premiere (Boulder), December 1995.

On BANCROFT: book—

On BANCROFT: articles—

“Anne Bancroft,” in Film Dope (London), March, 1982.

* * *

Once upon a time, one could count on Anne Bancroft for consistent brilliance. As youth faded, she rushed prematurely into character work and dismayed those who fondly recalled the slinky glamor of her TV variety specials. Why survive being manhandled by a gorilla in 3-D, silence your naysayers by winning two Tony awards, an Emmy, and an Oscar, only to specialize in irascibly cute character roles (Home for the Holidays)? And yet, how can one censure her for playing the steady work game, when Hollywood cavalierly wastes the most gifted actresses of her era (Julie Harris, Gena Rowlands, and others).

Never garnering less than laudatory notices (Don’t Bother to Knock, A Life in the Balance) during her starlet period, Bancroft showed her moxie by fleeing the twilight time of contractual stardom and resurrecting her career with two consecutive Broadway smashes. Although Two for the Seeaw disintegrated on-screen with Shirley MacLaine’s gamine overload, director Arthur Penn fought for his original theater stars to shine in his trenchant visualization of The Miracle Worker. After her Oscar victory, Bancroft won universal acclaim as a housewife imprisoned by her own maternal instinct (The Pumpkin Eater), then reversed this victim image and became a sixties icon as The Graduate’s Mrs. Robinson, a suburban mom manqué who might have died laughing at Stella Dallas’s nobility. Occasionally recharging herself with Broadway stints (The Devils, Golda), Bancroft’s finest hour in the seventies was a still-cherished TV variety special, Annie: The Women in the Life of a Man, which showcased a dazzling musical comedy brio (that briefly resurfac ed in her husband’s To Be or Not to Be remake where Bancroft’s tomfoolery bore favorable comparison with Carole Lombard’s).

Although The Turning Point restored melodrama to transitory box-office glory, Bancroft’s Daughter-of-Bette-Davis thesping barely tapped her resources. And if 84 Charing Cross Road was stagebound and Garbo Talks was gimmicky, Bancroft evidenced enough magnetism to transform medium and long shots into personal close-ups. In addition to wasting her time with great lady stints in Young Winston and Elephant Man, she sugarcoated otherwise perceptive interpretations of vinegary characters (Agnes of God, 'night, Mother) with her own desire to be liked. Through all the years of compromised performances, however, Bancroft rebounded again and again. In virtual cameos in Malice and Point of No Return, she electrified stalled escapism with mini tour de forces in which a lifetime of training pulsed through every gesture.

Television has been particularly stimulating for Bancroft who spilled an entire Crayola box of colors over her elegist role in The Oldest Living Confederate Widow Tells All. As the careworn homemaker raling against obsolescence in Mrs. Cage, Bancroft was a virtuoso clearly deserving of the epithet, great actress. Proving her outbreaks of hamniness aren’t chronic, she displayed a rock-like resolve as a grandmother refusing to surrender to tenderness in 1996’s Homecoming. Her affinity for the small screen was once again demonstrated with her trenchant performance in the melodramatic Deep in My Heart. When she attacked her roles cleanly without fussbudget mannerisms or a conspiratorial wink, she was surpassingly effective.

On the big screen, her problem has been less one of misapplication than over-application of her gifts, particularly a tornadic delivery, which many directors, seem incapable of harnessing.

For someone who rejected the role of Mommie Dearest, she often seems to be out-Dunawaying Faye. Apparently, the old reliable Bancroft was unavailable for the filming of Michael Cimino’s pious drivel, Sunchaser, because over-the-top Anne blasted viewers out of their seat with a saccharine cameo as an alternative medicine practitioner. Is it any wonder she would load up a fusillade of acting tricks, when a mere volley would serve unworthy roles better—you could sense this short-changed performer’s anger in How to Make an American Quilt, because she had been given nothing but attitudes to play. The potential for a moving experience featuring wonderful, seasoned actresses was botched in an attempt to have them prop up their less interesting star, Winona Ryder.
And yet, she continued astonishing fans in the oddest of places, none odder than a Demi Moore vehicle, GI Jane, in which she bent her Anna Magnani-intensity to serve her characterization as a cold-bloodedly pragmatic senator, trading in feminist causes to promote her own glory. Every time one’s heart leapt with joy, however, the false Anne returned with a vengeance, as in Great Expectations. This MTV-style update was as exhaustively excessive as the recent BBC production (with Charlotte Rampling also falling short) was enervatingly muffled. Outfitted like a crone version of Jean Shrimpton, Bancroft portrayed Miss Havestham as a victim of fashion, not passion. As futilely grotesque a performance as you will ever see, Bancroft comported herself like a John Waters discovery on Crystal-Meth. Of course, she didn’t bore you like De Niro does in his cameo, but she was brutalized by a director who used her for camp relief in a bankrupt re-conception of Dickens. Will she rediscover, at this late career juncture, the ability to simmer instead of boil over? (Not on the evidence of her cutesy turn in Edward Norton’s directorial debut, Keeping the Faith).

Bancroft comported herself like a John Waters discovery on Crystal-Meth. Of course, she didn’t bore you like De Niro does in his cameo, but she was brutalized by a director who used her for camp relief in a bankrupt re-conception of Dickens. Will she rediscover, at this late career juncture, the ability to simmer instead of boil over? (Not on the evidence of her cutesy turn in Edward Norton’s directorial debut, Keeping the Faith.) Self-defeatingly, she seems to be undermining the adage that there are no small parts, only small actors, into a new proposition: There are only showy parts for veteran actors too big for small parts.

—Robert Pardi

BANDERAS, Antonio

Nationality: Spanish. Born: José Antonio Domínguez Banderas in Malaga, 10 August 1960. Family: Married 1) the actress Ana Leza 1988 (divorced 1996); 2) the actress Melanie Griffith 1996, daughter.

Education: Began four-year course of studies in classics at Malaga’s School of Dramatic Art, 1974. Career: 1980—moved to Madrid in search of professional career as actor; 1981—stage debut with Spain’s National Theatre in Los Trantos; 1982—film debut in Laberinto de Pasiones, the first of five films for director Pedro Almodóvar; 1992—U.S. film debut in The Mambo Kings. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1982 Laberinto de Pasiones (Labyrinth of Passion) (Almodóvar) (as Sadec); Pestanas Postizas (False Eyelashes) (Belloch); Y Del Seguro, Libranos Señor (And Surely Set Us Free Lord) (del Real)
1983 El Señor Galindez (Mr. Galindez) (Khun) (as Eduardo)
1984 El Caso Almeria (The Almeria Case) (Costa); Los Zancos (The Stilts) (Saura) (as Alberto)
1985 Caso Cerrado (Closed Case) (Arecha); Requiem por un Campsino Español (Requiem for a Spanish Peasant) (Betrui) (as Paco); La Corte de Farsoon (The Court of the Pharaoh) (Sánchez) (as Friar José)
1986 27 Horas (27 Hours) (Armendáriz); Puzzle (Comeron); Mata dor (Bullfighter) (Almodóvar) (as Angel Giménez)

1987 Así Como Habían Sido (The Way They Were) (Linares) (as Damian); La Ley del Deseo (The Law of Desire) (Almodóvar) (as Antonio Benitez)
1988 El Placer de Matar (The Pleasure of Killing) (Rotaeta); Baton Rouge (Moleón) (as Antonio); Mujeres al Borde de un Ataque de Nervios (Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown) (Almodóvar) (as Carlos); Bajarse al Moro (Going South Shopping) (Colomo) (as Alberto)
1989 Si Te Dicen Que Cai (If They Tell You That I Fell) (Aranda) (as Marcos); La Blanca Paloma (The White Dove) (Minon) (as Mario)
1990 ¡Atame! (Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!) (Almodóvar) (as Ricki); Contra el Viento (Against the Wind) (Perinan) (as Juan)
1991 Terra Nova (New Land) (Salvo); Truth or Dare (In Bed with Madonna) (Keshishian) (as himself); Cuentos de Borges I (Borges Tales Part I) (Vera) (as Rosendo Juárez)
1992 The Mambo Kings (Glimcher) (as Nestor Castillo); Una Mujer Bajo la Lluvia (A Woman in the Rain) (Vera) (as Miguel)
1993 ¡Dispara! (Outrage! Shoot!) (Saura) (as Marcos); Philadelphia (Jonathan Demme) (as Miguel Alvarez); The House of the Spirits (August) (as Pedro)
1994 Interview with the Vampire (Neil Jordan) (as Armand); Of Love and Shadows (Kaplan) (as Francisco)
1995 Miami Rhapsody (Frankel) (as Antonio); Never Talk to Strangers (Hall) (as Tony Ramirez); Assassins (Richard Donner) (as Miguel Bain); Desperado (El Mariachi 2) (Rodriguez) (as El Mariachi); “The Miserbehavers” ep. of Four Rooms (as the Father)
1996 Two Much (Trueba) (as Art and Bart Dodge); Evita (Alan Parker) (as Che Guevara)
1998 The Mask of Zorro (Campbell) (as Alejandro Murrieta/Zorro)
1999 The 13th Warrior (McTiernan) (as Ahmad Ibn Fadlan); The White River Kid (Glimcher) (as Morales Pittman); Play it to the Bone (Shelton) (as Cesar Dominguez)
2000 Original Sin (Cristofer) (as Louis Varga); The Body (McCord) (as Matt)

Publications

By BANDERAS: articles—

On BANDERAS: articles—

In the tradition of Rudolph Valentino, whom the actor was to have portrayed in Nagisa Oshima’s abortive 1992 film, Hollywood Zen, Antonio Banderas, with his sensuous, seductive charm and his black, curly hair, has become the Latin Lover for the 1980s and 1990s. "Is that man beautiful or what?" asks Madonna in Truth or Dare, and through his ambivalent on-screen attitude towards both gay and straight sex, Banderas has been able to persuade women and men to endorse Madonna’s opinion. He must be the only actor to have graced the covers of the national gay publication, The Advocate (8 February 1994) and GQ (December 1995).

Banderas made “an irrational decision” to become an actor after seeing the performers appear nude in a 1974 Spanish production of Hair. And that same openness in regard to sex and nudity has been a prevailing factor in his career. He made his debut in Pedro Almodóvar’s Labyrinth of Passion, playing a gay terrorist who French kisses and fondles the genitals of leading man Imanol Arias. In Almodóvar’s The Law of Desire, which helped make Banderas an international star, the actor gives an extraordinary performance as a young man losing his virginity to a director with whom he is besotted and whom he later dominates to the point of obsession. The seduction sequence in which the Banderas character is anally penetrated with the camera fixed in close up on the actor’s face is remarkable not only for the thoughts that the viewer perceives as passing through his mind but also for the physical position in which Almodóvar has placed his performer. In that The Law of Desire is, apparently, semiautobiographical, one can only agree with the critics who suggested that Banderas had become Jose Dallesandro to Almodóvar’s Warhol.

It is Almodóvar who nurtured Banderas’s career, casting him as a bullfighting student who faints at the sight of blood in Matador, and as the former psychiatric patient whose obsession with a porno actress leads to S&M and bondage in Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down! The professional relationship with Almodóvar obviously led to the actor’s casting in a gay role in his second feature, False Eyelashes, but his later Spanish films gave Banderas wider scope for his talents. At least three, Requiem for a Spanish Peasant, If They Tell You That I Fell, and The Court of Pharaoh, deal with Spain’s fascist era. His willingness to experiment on screen with any role led Banderas to accept leading roles in the first films of directors Enrique Belloch, Pedro Costa, Juan Caño Arecha, Andrés Linares, Felix Rotaeta, and Rafael Moleón.

The American films are not the equal of those from Spain. Banderas’s casting as a Cuban in The Mambo Kings was ill-conceived, as have been efforts to present him as an action hero in Assassins and Desperado. He was wasted in the small role of Tom Hanks’s lover in Philadelphia. All that Banderas’s American work has done is advance his image as a sex symbol. In 1992, People magazine named him one of the 50 Most Beautiful People in the World, and that same year, at the Academy Awards presentation, Billy Crystal described the actor as “the sexiest man alive,” as Banderas presented an award with Sharon Stone (with whom he co-starred in a Freixenet champagne advertisement, directed by Bigas Luna). Unfortunately, as Caryn James wrote in the New York Times (21 October 1995), reviewing Never Talk to Strangers, Banderas and a mediocre script is “not an odd situation these days,” and as the actor begins to look haggard and show signs of aging, it is obvious that a major career reevaluation is needed.

—Anthony Slide

BARDOT, Brigitte

Nationality: French. Born: Paris, 28 September 1934. Education: Studied ballet as a child. Family: Married 1) the director Roger Vadim, 1952 (divorced 1957); 2) the actor Jacques Charrier, 1959 (divorced), son: Nicholas Jacques; 3) Gunther Sachs, 1966 (marriage dissolved 1969); 4) Bernard d’Ormale, 1992. Career: 1948—a “dancing model” for fashion shows in mother’s shop; established as popular model by 1949; appeared on cover of Elle as “BB” or “Bébé”; 1952—film debut; 1955—refused offer by Warners of Created Woman (Marc Allégret); 1956—refused offer by Polanski of Light of My Life; 1957—three picture deal with Columbia for French productions featuring Bardot; 1976—formed the Foundation for the Protection of Distressed Animals; 1978—speaks before the Council of Europe against the slaughter of baby seals. Awards: Crystal Star of L’Académie du cinema, 1966; Chevalier dans l’ordre national de la légion d’honneur, 1985.

Films as Actress:

1952 Le Trou normand (Crazy for Love) (Boyier) (as Javotte Lemoine); Manina, la fille sans voiles (The Lighthouse Keeper’s Daughter, The Girl in the Bikini) (Rozier) (as Manina); Les Dents longues (Gémin)

1953 Act of Love (Litvak) (as Mimi); Le Portrait de son père (Berthonniou) (as Dominio); Si Versailles m’était conté (Affairs in Versailles; Royal Affairs in Versailles) (Guitry) (as Mlle. de Rosille)

1954 Tradita (La Notte del nozze; Night of Love) (Bonnard) (as Anna); * Futures vedettes* (Sweet Sixteen) (Marc Allégret); Le Fils de Caroline chérie (Devaivre)

1955 Helen of Troy (Wise) (as Andraste); Doctor at Sea (Thomas) (as Helene Colbert); La Lumière d’en face (The Light across the Street; The Female and the Flesh) (Lacombe) (as Olivia Marceau); Les Grandes Manoeuvres (Summer Manoeuvres; The Grand Maneuver) (Clair) (as Lucie); Cette Sacrée gamin (Man’zell Pigalle) (Boisrond)

1956 Mio figlio Nerone (Nero’s Mistress; Nero’s Weekend) (Steno) (as Poppaea); En effeuillant la Marguerite (Mam’selle Striptease; Please, Mr. Balzac; While Plucking the Daisy) (Marc Allégret); Et . . . Dieu créa la femme (And . . . God Created Woman) (Vadim) (as Juliette Hardy); La Mariée est trop belle (The Bride Is Much Too Beautiful) (Gaspar-Huit) (as Chouchou)

1957 Une Parisienne (La Parisienne) (Boisrond) (as Brigitte Laurier); Les Bijoutiers du clair de lune (The Night Heaven Fell; Heaven Fell that Night) (Vadim) (as Ursula Desfontaines)

1958 En cas de malheur (Love Is My Profession; In Case of Adversity) (Autant-Lara) (as Yvette); La Femme et le pantin (A Woman Like Satan; The Female; The Woman and the Puppet) (Duivivier) (as Eva)

1959 Babette s’en va-t-en guerre (Babette Goes to War) (Christian-Jaque) (title role); Voulez-vous danser avec moi? (Come Dance with Me) (Boisrond) (as Virginia); Le Testament d’Orphée (The Testament of Orpheus) (Coeuvart) (as herself)

1960 La Vérité (The Truth) (Clozot) (as Dominique Marceau); L’Affaire d’une nuit (It Happened at Night) (Verneuil)

1961 La Bride sur le cou (Please, Not Now!) (Vadim and Aurel) (as Sophie); ‘‘Agnès Bernauer’’ ep. of Amours célèbres (Boisrond)

1962 Le Repos du guerrier (Il Riposo del guerriero; Warrior’s Rest; Love on a Pillow) (Vadim) (as Genevieve Le Theil); La Vie privée (A Very Private Affair) (Malle) (as Jill)

1963 Tentazioni proibite (Civirani); Le Mépris (Contempt) (Godard) (as Camille Javal)

1964 Paparazzi (Rozier—doc); Marie Soleil (Bourseiller); Une ravissante idiote (A Ravishing Idiot; Adorable Idiot; Agent 38–24–36; The Warm-Blooded Spy) (Molinaro) (as Penelope Light Feather)

1965 Viva Maria (Malle) (as Maria Fitzgerald O’Malley/Maria II); Dear Brigitte (Koster) (as herself)

1966 Masculin-féminin (Masculine-Feminine) (Godard) (as woman in a couple)

1967 A coeur joie (Two Weeks in September) (Bourguignon) (as Cecile)

1968 Shalako (Dmytryk) (as Countess Irina Lazaar); “William Wilson” ep. of Histoires extraordinaires (Tales of Mystery; Spirits of the Dead) (Malle) (as Giuseppina)

1969 Les Femmes (Aurel) (as Clara); Les Ours et la poupée (The Bear and the Doll) (Deville) (as Felicia)

1970 Les Novices (The Novices) (Casaril)

1971 Les Péroleuses (The Legend of Frenchie King; The Petroleum Girls) (Christian-Jaque) (as Frenchie); Boulevard du rhum (Run Runner) (Enrico)

1973 Don Juan 1973 ou Si Don Juan était une femme (Ms. Don Juan; Don Juan, or if Don Juan Were a Woman) (Vadim); L’Histoire très bonne et très joyeuse de Colinet Trouse-Chemise (The Happy and Joyous Story of Colinet, the Man Who Pulls Up Skirts; Colinet) (Compagniez); *Il sorriso del
Brigitte Bardot

grande tentatore (The Tempter, The Devil Is a Woman) (Damiani)

Publications

By BARDOT: article—

‘‘Brigitte Bardot, ovvero: vive la difference!’’ interview with Giorgio Cremonini, June 1983.

On BARDOT: books—

On BARDOT: articles—

* * *

Jeanne Moreau is rare among filmmakers in giving serious attention to the career of Brigitte Bardot. “Brigitte was the real modern revolutionary character for women,” she says. “And Vadim, as a man and a lover and a director, felt that. What was true in the New Wave is that suddenly what was important was vitality, emotion, energy, love, and passion. One has to remember it was Vadim who started everything, with Bardot.” It was veteran director Marc Allégret who noticed the teenage Brigitte Bardot modeling for the cover of Elle magazine, and later found her some minor film roles. But his friend and assistant Vadim married her, and directed her in Et . . . Dieu créa la femme, the film that cemented her fame and triggered the nascent nouvelle vague. Vadim did not share Moreau’s unmitting admiration for Bardot. “She could portray a character in any situation—as long as that character was herself.” No more than a competent actress (just as Vadim is at best an average director) Bardot, like all true stars, projected one quality that survived even the most tawdry material. Posing and putting in sartooned nudity for Et . . . Dieu créa la femme, Bardot epitomized what Simone de Beauvoir was later to isolate as “the Lolita syndrome”—an infantile, almost animal sexuality that freed her from all the inhibitions of adulthood. The innocent daughter or wife, eager for sexual awakening, was a role she had already played half a dozen times in such films as Manina, la fille sans voiles and La Lumière d’en face, but Vadim’s Riviera melodrama offered the character Eastman-color and CinemaScope, which made the film more than acceptable to foreign audiences.

Along with the film went Vadot’s increasingly sensational reputation. More than any other actress of the 1960s (and certainly more than any French performer thrown up by the youth boom) she fulfilled, on-screen and off, the expectations of her mainly middle-aged audience. Shrewdly, Vadim placed her opposite not only the virile young Trintignant and Marquand, but matched her too with a subsidiary homme de moyen âge in Curt Jurgens. In Une Parisienne, she becomes romantically entangled with visiting prince Charles Boyer (a transparent imitation of the Duke of Edinburgh) to win back her younger husband’s interest, and she teased impossibly with Jean Gabin in En cas de malheur.

For a decade, newspapers made gleeful capital of Bardot, transparently incognito in dark glasses, sojourning with her latest boyfriend. On film, she appeared in Godard’s Le Mépris and Masculin-féminin, and as herself in Cocteau’s Le Testament d’Orphée, and the American comedy Dear Brigitte, where she is the love object of a lovable (but pointedly prepubescent) little boy. She even made a much-publicized stab at serious acting in Clouzot’s La Vérité, a courtroom drama which presents the conflicting evidence in a murder case and the tangled motives that lead a lazy, sexy Parisienne to steal her sister’s lover, then kill him. Once again more sinned against than sinning, Bardot pleads the case of the hedonist too sensitive to live by social rules, but even Clouzot could not induce in audiences the pity needed to hammer this point home.

Louis Malle, who later directed her opposite Moreau in the western romp Viva Maria, exploited these parallels more effectively than anyone in La Vie privée. Bardot the star moons about the Spoleto festival, frustrated in both love and career, and ponders the Kleist play being produced by lover Marcello Mastroianni until despair sends her toppling in slow motion from the heights of the medieval town.

Bardot’s last screen appearances came in 1973. One of her final films, Don Juan 1973 ou Si Don Juan était une femme, serves as a pointed demonstration that, even in her forties, she still could play nude scenes and captivate an audience. It appears unlikely that she ever will make any sort of celluloid comeback. She has isolated herself with her causes, focusing on the animals that she was once thought so much to resemble. Nevertheless, Bardot still remains a popular figure in the news for her animal-rights activism. Soon after her exit from movies she founded the Foundation for the Protection of Distressed Animals, and eventually auctioned her jewels to help fund the organization; she has been the subject of almost as many “intimate” and “personal” biographies as her American counterpart, pretifeminist sex icon, Marilyn Monroe.

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

BARRAULT, Jean-Louis

Nationality: French. Born: Le Vésinet, 8 September 1910. Education: Attended Collège Chaptal and École du Louvre, Paris, received bachelor’s degree; studied theater with Charles Dullin and pantomime with Étienne Decroux. Family: Married the actress Madeleine Renaud, 1940. Career: Late 1920s—worked as apprentice bookkeeper, flower salesman, and assistant master at Collège Chaptal; 1931—stage debut in Paris in Volpone at Charles Dullin’s workshop; 1935—stage directorial debut of Autour d’une mère; film debut in Les Beaux Jours; 1936—founded own theater-workshop, Le Granier des Augustins; 1940–46—acted and directed with Comédie Française; from late 1940s—with various stage companies, including the Théâtre Marigny and the Théâtre de l’Odéon; formed own stage company, Compagnie Renaud-Barrault, in partnership with wife; 1959—named Jean-Louis Barrault (right) with Gaston Modat in Les Enfants du Paradis

Films as Actor:

1935 Les Beaux Jours (Marc Allégret)
1936 Sous les yeux d’Occident (Marc Allégret); A nous deux, Madame la vie (Mirande); Un Grand Amour de Beethoven (Beethoven, le voleur de femmes; The Life and Loves of Beethoven) (Gance) (as Karl); Hélène (Benoît-Levy and Epstein); Jenny (Carné)
1937 Mademoiselle Docteur (Fabst); Police mondaine (Chamborant and Bernheim); Le Puritain (Musso); Les Perles de la couronne (Pearls of the Crown) (Guitry and Christian-Jaque) (as Gen. Bonaparte); Mirages (Ryder); Drôle de drame (Bizarre Bizarre) (Carné); Altitude 3200 (Benoît-Levy and Epstein)
1938 Nous les jeunes (Benoît-Levy and Epstein); Orage (Marc Allégret); La Piste du Sud (Billon)
1939 Farinet oder das falsche Geld (Farinet ou l’or dans la montagne) (Haufler)
1941 Parade en sept nuits (Marc Allégret); Le Destin fabuleux de Desirée Clary (Guitry); Montmartre-sur-Seine (Lacombe)
1942 La Symphonie fantastique (Christian-Jaque) (as Hector Berlioz)
1943 Lumière d’été (Grémillon); L’Ange de la nuit (Berthomieu)
1945 Les Enfants du paradis (Children of Paradise) (Carné) (as Baptiste Debureau); La Part de l’ombre (Delannoy)
1946 Le Cocu magnifique (de Meyst)
1947 La Rose et le réséda (Michel) (as narrator)
1948 D’homme à hommes (Christian-Jaque)
1949 Le Bateau ivre (Chaumel) (as narrator)
1950 La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Max Ophüls) (as Robert Kuhlenkampf)
1951  Paul Claudel (Gillet) (as narrator)
1953  Si Versailles m'était conté (Affairs in Versailles; Royal Affairs in Versailles) (Guity) (as François Fenelon)
1959  Le Testament du Docteur Cordelier (Reynoir)
1960  Le Dialogue des Carmélites (Bruckberger and Agostini)
1961  Le Miracle des loups (Hunebelle); Architecture, art de l’espace (Haesaerts) (as narrator)
1962  The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki, and Oswald) (as Fr. Roulland)
1964  Répétition chez Jean-Louis Barrault (Hessens); La Grande frousse (La Cité de l’indéciblepeur) (Mocky)
1966  Chappaqua (Rooks) (as doctor)
1967  La Route d’un homme (Hacquard) (as narrator)
1968  Je tire chemin (Lesage) (as narrator)
1981  La Nuit de Varennes (That Night in Varennes; The New World) (Scola) (as Nicolas Edme Restif de la Bretonne)
1988  La Lumière du lac (Comencini)

Publications

By BARRAULT: books—

Correspondence with Paul Claudel, edited by Michel Lioure, Paris, 1974.

On BARRAULT: books—

On BARRAULT: articles—

Current Biography 1953, New York, 1953.

Though Jean-Louis Barrault made his greatest contribution to French theater, his performance in Les Enfants du paradis is frequently cited as a singular illustration of pantomimic art on film.

After studying with Charles Dullin and the famous mime Étienne Decroux, Barrault made his Paris debut in a 1931 production of Volpone. His first screen appearance four years later in Les Beaux Jours marked the first of a series of films for Marc Allégret, but it was for Marcel Carné, in films written by Jacques Prévert, that Barrault created his two most memorable roles, in Drôle de drame, and as Baptiste Debureau in Les Enfants du paradis. It was Barrault who had suggested to Carné and Prévert a story about Debureau, France’s greatest pantomimist of the 19th century, whose fate is intertwined with those of the great romantic actor Frederick Lemaître (Pierre Brasseur), and the famous actress Garance (played by Arletty).

But the film was, in the words of its director, “a tribute to the theatre,” which Barrault had firmly embraced when he joined the Comédie Française in 1940 where, in addition to acting, he directed a series of notable productions including Phaedra and Antony and Cleopatra. After leaving the Comédie Française in 1946, Barrault and his wife, the actress Madeleine Renaud, founded a now-famous acting company. They profoundly influenced the postwar development of theater in France through such productions as Barrault’s adaptation of Kafka’s The Trial.

Barrault appeared in several films after the war, including Delannoy’s La Part de l’ombre, and D’homme à hommes directed by Christian-Jaque for whom Barrault had already created the role of the composer Berlioz in La Symphonie fantastique during the war. He was part of the brilliant cast assembled by Max Ophüls for La Ronde in 1950, but subsequently devoted his energies entirely to theater. In 1959 Barrault played the double title role in Jean Renoir’s Le Testament du Docteur Cordelier, but Barrault was not again offered a major film role until 1981 when Ètienne Scola engaged him for La Nuit de Varennes, in which Barrault plays the writer Restif de la Bretonne, witness to the French Revolution.

—Karel Tabery

BARRYMORE, Drew

Nationality: American. Born: Drew Blyth Barrymore, in Los Angeles, CA, 22 February 1975; granddaughter of John Drew Barrymore (an actor); great-granddaughter of Maurice Costello (an actor in silent films). Family: Married Jeremy Thomas, 20 March 1994 (marriage ended, May 1994). Career: Actress; made her television debut in a commercial at the age of eleven months; founder of production company, Flower Films, with Nancy Juvonen. Awards: Young Artist
Drew Barrymore and Dougray Scott in Ever After: A Cinderella Story

Award for Best Young Supporting Actress in a Motion Picture, for E. T., the Extra-Terrestrial, 1983; Hollywood Film Festival Actress of the Year, 1999; Women in Film Crystal Award, 1999; Young Artist Former Child Star Lifetime Achievement Award, 1999. Agent: William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Dr., Beverly Hills, CA 90212.

Films as Actress:

1978 Suddenly, Love (Margolin) (as Bobby Graham)
1980 Altered States (Russell) (as Margaret Jessup); Bogie (Sherman—for TV) (as Leslie Bogart)
1982 E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial (Spielberg) (as Gertie)
1984 Irreconcilable Differences (Shyer) (as Casey Brodsky); Firestarter (Mark L. Lester) (as Charlene “Charlie” McGee)
1985 Cat’s Eye (Lewis Teague) (as Amanda)
1986 Babes in Toyland (Donner—for TV) (as Lisa Piper)
1987 Conspiracy of Love (Noel Black—for TV) (as Jody Woldarski)
1989 See You in the Morning (Pakula) (as Cathy); Far from Home (Meiert Avis) (as Joleen Cox)
1992 Waxwork II: Lost in Time (Hickox) (as Vampire Victim); Poison Ivy (Katt Shea) (as Ivy); No Place to Hide (Richard Danus) (as Tinsel Hanley); Motorama (Shils) (as Fantasy Girl); Sketch Artist (Papamichael—for TV) (as Daisy); 2000 Malibu Road (Schumacher—series for TV) (as Lindsay); Guncrazy (Davis) (as Anita Minteer)
1993 Wayne’s World 2 (Surjik) (as Bergen Kjergen); Doppelganger (Nesher) (as Holly Gooding); The Amy Fisher Story (Tennant—for TV) (as Amy Fisher)
1994 Inside the Goldmine (Evans) (as Daisy); Bad Girls (Kaplan) (as Lilly Loronette)
1995 Boys on the Side (Ross) (as Holly); Batman Forever (Schumacher) (as Sugar); Mad Love (Bird) (as Casey Roberts)
1996 Scream (Craven) (as Casey Becker); Everyone Says I Love You (Allen) (as Skylar); Like a Lady
1997 Wishful Thinking (Park) (as Lena); Best Men (Davis) (as Hope)
1998 Ever After (Tennant) (as Danielle De Barbarac); Home Fries (Parisot) (as Sally); The Wedding Singer (Coraci) (as Julia Sullivan)
Deitch Rohrer, Trish, “True Drew: After 23 Years as an Actress, 24 Year-Old Drew Barrymore is Starting a Whole New Career as a Producer,” in In Style, vol. 6, no. 3, 1 March 1999.

* * *

Granddaughter of the legendary John Barrymore, Drew Barrymore made her own acting debut at age 3 in the 1987 TV movie, Suddenly Love. Three years later, Barrymore appeared on the big screen in the 1982 science fiction drama, Altered States. But it was in 1982 that the precocious, sweet-faced, blond tyke burst into the American consciousness in one of the most popular movies of all time, E.T., the Extra-Terrestrial. Playing the youngest of three children who help E.T. find his way home, Barrymore launched her film career by capturing the hearts of moviegoers of all ages.

Throughout her childhood, Barrymore appeared in a wide range of big and small screen films, the best-known of which was Firestarter (1984), in which she played the petulant Charlie McGee, a little girl with telekinetic fire-starting abilities linked to her bouts of anger. But Barrymore’s acting career soon took a back seat to her troubled personal life. At age nine, Barrymore had her first drink, by ten she was smoking pot, and by the time she was 12 she was hooked on cocaine. Two years later, she attempted suicide, and began a string of stints in rehab. Despite finding steady work in little-seen films such as Babes in Toyland (1986), See You in the Morning (1989), and Far From Home (1989), the caliber of Barrymore’s acting disintegrated along with her personal life. Soon her tabloid appearances outnumbered her acting roles, and many saw Drew as heir to the “Barrymore curse.”

In 1989, the 15-year-old became the youngest person ever to publish a memoir, Little Girl Lost, which chronicled her battles with addiction. But beneath the teenager’s troubles lay a steely determination to succeed in the family business. Riding the wave of publicity sparked by her memoir and a nude photo shoot in Interview, the 17-year-old Barrymore began an impressive comeback in Poison Ivy (1992), playing a part that cleverly mirrored her off-screen tabloid persona of a slutish and seductive teen.
During the early 1990s, Barrymore was everywhere—on screen, on talk shows, on magazine covers, on billboards. And her movie career flourished. Despite a few misguided choices such as The Amy Fisher Story, America embraced Drew’s bad girl persona in films such as Bad Girls and Batman Forever. But slowly more subtlety and depth began to find its way into her roles. In Boys on the Side (1995), playing the spunky Holly, one of three women who escape their lives by driving cross country together, she earned the praise of Roger Ebert who wrote that she was developing into “an actress of great natural zest and conviction.”

Even as the wider public focused on wild Drew moments such as her chest-baring incident on The David Letterman Show, Barrymore was struggling to earn the respect of the movie industry powers-that-be after forming her own production company, Flower Films. With her star in the ascendancy, in 1996 the 21-year-old Barrymore earned critical praise for her diverse performances in Wes Craven’s Scream and Woody Allen’s Mad About You. As Casey Becker in Scream, Barrymore’s ability to convey palpable fear set the tone for the film that many felt revitalized the horror genre. That same year, Barrymore successfully played against type as the fiancée of a proper young man in the Woody Allen musical.

Barrymore’s growing reputation as a competent and compelling actress led to a string of immensely popular movies. In the Cinderella remake Ever After (1997), Barrymore starred as the intelligent, spirited, book-loving, and beautiful stepdaughter who wins the heart of a prince. Barrymore’s next star turn was undoubtedly her most popular film since E.T. As Julia, the warm-hearted waitress in The Wedding Singer, Barrymore’s soulful spunk proved the ideal counterpoint to Adam Sandler’s nerdy and forlorn Robbie Hart, and the romantic comedy became the surprise blockbuster of 1998.

By 1999, Barrymore was earning $3 million a picture, and had won the respect of Hollywood as a talented actress, an audience favorite, and one of the rare young female stars who can single-handedly carry a picture. In Never Been Kissed, Drew winningly played Josie Geller, a nerdy newspaper employee sent undercover back to high school. Though the film was not a critical success, Barrymore’s star remained undimmed. From child star to troubled teen to blonde bombshell to box office gold, Drew Barrymore has spent most of her life in the public eye. But she is just now beginning to come into her own as a film actress—and one can only eagerly await the performances yet to emerge from one of the film industry’s most exciting young stars.

—Victoria Price

BARRYMORE, Ethel

Films as Actress:

1914 The Nightingale (Thomas)
1915 The Final Judgment (Carewe)
1916 The Kiss of Hate (Night); The Awakening of Helen Ritchie (Noble)
1917 The White Raven (Baker); The Call of Her People (Noble); The Greatest Power (Carewe); The Lifted Veil (Baker); Life’s Whirlpool (Lionel Barrymore); The Eternal Mother (Reicher); An American Widow (Reicher)
1918 Our Mrs. McChesney (Ralph Ince); The Divorcee (Blaché)
1919 The Spender (Sswickard)
1932 Rasputin and the Empress (Rasputin—the Mad Monk) (Boleslawski) (as Empress Alexandra)
1944 None but the Lonely Heart (Odets) (as Ma Mott)
1946 The Spiral Staircase (Siodmak)
1947 The Paradine Case (Hitchcock) (as Lady Sophie Horfield); The Farmer’s Daughter (Potter) (as Mrs. Morley); Moss Rose (Ratoff) (as Lady Sterling); Night Song (Cromwell) (as Miss Willey)
1948 Moonrise (Borzage) (as Grandma); Portrait of Jennie (Jennie) (Dieterle) (as Miss Spinney)

1949 The Great Sinner (Siodmak) (as Granny); That Midnight Kiss (Taurog) (as Abigail Budell); The Red Danube (Sidney) (as Mother Superior); Pinky (Kazan) (as Miss Em)

1951 Kind Lady (John Sturges) (as Mary Herries); Daphne, the Virgin of the Golden Laurels (Hoyningen-Huene) (as narrator); It's a Big Country (one ep.) (Brown and others) (as Mrs. Brian Patrick Riordon); The Secret of Convict Lake (Gordon) (as Granny)

1952 Deadline—U.S.A. (Deadline) (Richard Brooks) (as Mrs. Garrison); Just for You (Nugent) (as Allida de Bronkhart)

1953 “Mademoiselle” ep. of The Story of Three Loves (Equilibrium; Three Stories of Love) (Minnelli and Reinhardt) (as Mrs. Pennicott); Main Street to Broadway (Garnett) (as herself)

1954 Young at Heart (Gordon Douglas) (as Aunt Jessie)

1957 Johnny Trouble (Auer) (as Mrs. Chandler)

Publications

By BARRYMORE: book—

By BARRYMORE: articles—

‘‘My Reminiscences,’’ in Delineator, September 1923 through February 1924.

On BARRYMORE: books—

Barrimore, John, We Three: Ethel—Lionel—John, Akron, Ohio, 1935.
Barrimore, Lionel, We Barrimores, as told to Cameron Shipp, London, 1951.
Fox, Mary Virginia, Ethel Barrimore: A Portrait, Chicago, 1970.

On BARRYMORE: articles—

Current Biography 1941, New York, 1941.
“Ethel Barrimore, a Star for Forty-two Years,” in Vogue (New York), 1 April 1943.

Ethel Barrimore came late to the movies after two false starts, and it is a pity that there is little footage of the actress in her prime left to us today. While her brothers Lionel and John embraced motion pictures early on, Ethel stayed on Broadway and lived up to her reputation as Queen of the Great White Way.

Although she recognized the cinema’s burgeoning importance and transition from nickelodeon peep show to middle-class entertainment, she made her film debut for financial reasons. She was paid $15,000 to play in The Nightingale, written for her by Augustus Thomas, and starred in a number of pictures made at Metro’s New York City studios. Interestingly, brother Lionel directed her in Life’s Whirlpool, from his own story.

One of her early works that does survive is The White Raven, in which she plays a financially ruined Wall Street stockbroker’s daughter who winds up singing in an Alaskan saloon. Although the melodrama is trite and her performance is humdrum, it is exciting to see Barrimore moving about as a young woman. In fact, she disliked all her early pictures (with the exception of The Awakening of Helen Ritchie) and remained away from films until her fortunes were reduced by the Great Depression. She accepted the role of Empress Czarina Alexandra in MGM’s Rasputin and the Empress, with Lionel as the mad monk and John as Prince Chedogieff. The picture was fraught with difficulty (the original director Charles Brabin was replaced by Richard Boleslawski); today, it is best-known as the lone film in which the three Barrimores appeared. However, Ethel did not like Hollywood. She returned to New York, and did not make another film for a dozen years. Even though her financial ills continued, she ignored acting offers from the studios, and made a stage comeback in 1940 as Miss Moffat in The Corn Is Green. When Clifford Odets saw her do the play in Los Angeles, he persuaded her to take the part of Ma Mott, Cockney Cary Grant’s mother, in None but the Lonely Heart. Under Odets’s direction, she toned down the excesses that marred her previous film work, and won a Best Supporting Actress Oscar.

This time she stayed on in Hollywood, and moved from film to film in supporting parts. Her roles did not vary, and she was pigeonholed as a grande dame, more than occasionally a bit brittle but with a warm and wimanly core, lending real presence and authority to top-grade melodramas such as The Spiral Staircase, The Paradise Case, Moonrise, and Portrait of Jennie, and lesser soap operas such as Young at Heart and Johnny Trouble, in which she eloquently essayed the part of a lonely old woman.

She and Lionel enjoyed a double cameo in Tay Garnett’s Main Street to Broadway, and though her screen time is minimal, one is afforded an inside look at Ethel and Lionel’s natural rapport, much more so than in the more theatrical Rasputin and the Empress. She outlived both her brothers, and continued to hold court and preserve the legacy of the family name.

—John A. Gallagher, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg
BARRYMORE, Lionel

Nationality: American. Born: Lionel Blythe in Philadelphia, 28 April 1878; brother of the actress Ethel and the actor John Barrymore. Education: Attended Gilmore School, London; St. Vincent’s Academy, New York; Seton Hall, New Jersey; Arts Students League, New York. Family: Married 1) Doris Rankin, 1904 (divorced 1922); 2) Irene Fenwick, 1923 (died 1936). Career: 1900—Broadway debut in Sag Harbor; 1904—critical and public attention for performances on Broadway in The Mummy and the Hummingbird and The Other Girl; 1906–09—moved to Paris to study painting; 1909—returned to Broadway in Fines of Fate; employed at Biograph as actor and writer, and worked with D. W. Griffith; 1911—starring roles in Griffith’s films, as well as those of other directors, while continuing to write scripts; mid ‘teens—began to do some directing; 1920s—began to work mainly character roles; 1925—abandoned theater completely for film acting; 1926—contract with MGM where he remained for the rest of his career; 1928—appeared in talking film for first time; 1932—in Rasputin and the Empress with brother John and sister Ethel; 1938—role as Dr. Gillespie, first in series of 15 Dr. Kildare films; partially paralyzed by a combination of arthritis and a leg injury, and confined to a wheelchair, but continued acting; 1942—Best Actor Academy Award, for A Free Soul, 1930/31. Died: In Van Nuys, California, 15 November 1934.

Films as Actor:

(in films directed or supervised by D. W. Griffith, unless otherwise noted)

1911 The Battle; Fighting Blood
1912 Friends; So Near, Yet So Far; The Chief’s Blanket; The One She Loved; Gold and Glitter; My Baby; The Informer; Brute Force; Under the Gaslight
1913 Three Friends; The Telephone Girl and the Lady; An Adventure in the Autumn Woods; Oil and Water; Near to Earth; Fate; The Sheriff’s Baby; The Perfidy of Mary; A Misunderstood Boy; The Lady and the Mouse (+ se); The Wanderer; House of Darkness; The Yaqui Car; Just Gold; The Power of the Press; A Timely Interception; The Well; Death’s Marathon; The Switch Tower; A Girl’s Stratagem; Classmates (Kirkwood); House of Discord (Kirkwood); Death’s Marathon; The Rancher’s Revenge; Her Father’s Silent Partner; Pa Says; The Fatal Wedding; Father’s Lesson; His Inspiration; A Welcome Intruder; Mister Jefferson Green; So Runs the Way; The Suffragette Minstrels
1914 The Massacre; Strongheart (Kirkwood); Men and Women (Kirkwood); Judith of Bethulia (as extra); Brute Force; Under the Gaslight
1915 Wildfire (Middleton); A Modern Magdalen (Davis); The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde; The Romance of Elaine (Seitz—serial); The Flaming Sword (Middleton); Dora Thorne; A Yellow Streak (Nigh); The Exploits of Elaine (Seitz—serial)

1916 Dorian’s Divorce (Lund); The Quitter (Horan); The Upheaval (Horan); The Brand of Cowardice (Noble)
1917 The End of the Tour (Baker); His Father’s Son; The Millionaire’s Double (Davenport)
1919 The Valley of Night
1920 The Copperhead (Maigne); The Mastermind (Webb); The Devil’s Garden (Webb)
1921 The Great Adventure (Webb); Jim the Penman
1922 Boomerang Bill (Terriss); The Face in the Fog (Crosland) (as Boston Blackie)
1923 Enemies of Women (Crosland) (as Prince Lubimoff); Unseeing Eyes (E. H. Griffith); The Eternal City (Fitzmaurice)
1924 Decameron Nights (Wilcox); America (Love and Sacrifice) (as Capt. Walter Butler); Meditation Women (Abramson); I Am the Man (Abramson)
1925 Die Frau mit dem schlechten Ruf; The Iron Road (A Man of Iron) (Bennett); Fifty Fifty (Diamiant); The Girl Who Wouldn’t Work (DeSano); Children of the Whirlwind (Bennett); The Splendid Road (Lloyd); The Wrongdoers (Dierker)
1926 The Barrier (Hall); Brooding Eyes (Le Saint); Paris at Midnight (Hopper); The Lucky Lady (Walsh); The Temptress (Niblo); The Bells (Young); Wife Tamers (Roach)
1927 The Show (Browning); Women Love Diamonds (Goulding); Body and Soul (Barker); The Thirteenth Hour (Franklin)
1928 Drums of Love; Sadie Thompson (Walsh) (as Alfred Atkinson); The Lion and the Mouse (Lloyd Bacon) (as John “Ready Money” Ryder); Love (Anna Karenina) (Goulding); The River Woman (Henabery) (as Bill Lefty); West of Zanzibar (Browning) (as Crane)
1929 Alias Jimmy Valentine (Conway) (as Doyle); The Hollywood Review (Riesner); The Mysterious Island (Hubbard) (as Count Andre Dakkar)
1930 Free and Easy (Easy Go) (Sedgwick) (as himself, in bedroom scene); The Love Parade (Lubitsch) (asPrime Minister)
1931 A Free Soul (Brown) (as Stephen Ashe); Guilty Hands (Van Dyke) (as Richard Grant); The Yellow Ticket (The Yellow Passport) (Walsh) (as Baron Igor Andrey); Mata Hari (Fitzmaurice) (as Gen. Serge Shubin)
1932 Broken Lullaby (The Man I Killed) (Lubitsch) (as Dr. Holderlin); Arsène Lupin (Conway) (as Guerchard); Grand Hotel (Goulding) (as Otto Kringlelein); Washington Masquerade (Mad Masquerade) (Bram) (as Jeff Keane); Rasputin and the Empress (Rasputin—The Mad Monk) (Boleslawski) (as Rasputin)
1933 Sweepings (Cromwell) (as Daniel Pardway); Looking Forward (The New Deal) (Brown) (as Michael Benton); The Stranger’s Return (King Vidor) (as Grandpa Storr); Dinner at Eight (Cukor) (as Oliver Jordan); One Man’s Journey (Robinson) (as Dr. Eli Watt); Night Flight (Brown) (as Rabineau); Christopher Bean (Her Sweetheart) (Wood) (as doctor); Should Ladies Behave? (Beaumont) (as Augustus Merrick); Berkeley Square (Frank Lloyd) (as innkeeper); La ciudad de carton (Cardboard City)
1934 This Side of Heaven (William K. Howard) (as Martin Turner); Carolina (The House of Connelly) (Henry King) (as Bob
Lionel Barrymore in Calling Dr. Kildare

Connely); The Girl from Missouri (One Hundred Percent Pure) (Conway) (as T. B. Paige); Treasure Island (Fleming) (as Billy Bones)

1935 David Copperfield (Cukor) (as Dan Peggotty); Mark of the Vampire (Browning) (as Prof. Zelen); The Little Colonel (David Butler) (as Col. Lloyd); Public Hero Number One (Nicholls Jr.) (title role); Ah, Wilderness (Brown) (as Nat Miller)

1936 The Voice of Bugle Ann (Thorpe) (as Springfield Davis); The Road to Glory (Hawks) (as Papa LaRoche); The Devil Doll (Browning) (as Paul Lavond); The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown) (as Andrew Jackson)

1937 Camille (Cukor) (as Monsieur Duval); Captains Courageous (Fleming) (as Disko); A Family Affair (Seitz) (as Judge Hardy); Saratoga (Conway) (as Grandpa Clayton); Navy Blue and Gold (Wood) (as Capt. “Skinny” Dawes)

1938 A Yank at Oxford (Conway) (as Dan Sheridan); Test Pilot (Fleming) (as Howard B. Drake); You Can’t Take It with You (Capra) (as Martin Vanderhof); Young Dr. Kildare (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie)

1939 Let Freedom Ring (Conway) (as Thomas Logan); Calling Dr. Kildare (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); On Borrowed Time (Bucquet) (as Julian Northup, “Gramps”); The Secret of Dr. Kildare (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie)

1940 Dr. Kildare’s Strange Case (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Dr. Kildare Goes Home (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Dr. Kildare’s Crisis (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie)

1941 The Penalty (Bucquet) (as “Grandpop” Logan); The Bad Man (Two-Gun Cupid) (Thorpe) (as Uncle Henry Jones); Cavalcade of the Academy Awards; The People vs. Dr. Kildare (My Life Is Yours) (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Lady Be Good (McLeod) (as Judge Murdock); Dr. Kildare’s Wedding Day (Mary Names the Day) (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Dr. Kildare’s Victory (The Doctor and the Debutante) (Van Dyke) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie)

1942 Calling Dr. Gillespie (Bucquet) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Dr. Gillespie’s New Assistant (Goldbeck) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Tennessee Johnson (The Man on America’s Conscience) (Dieterle) (as Congressman Thaddeus Stevens)

1943 Dr. Gillespie’s Criminal Case (Crazy to Kill) (Goldbeck) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); The Last Will and Testament of Tom Smith (Bucquet) (as Gramps); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming) (as the General); Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as announcer)
On BARRYMORE: articles—

Mullet, Mary, “Lionel Barrymore Tells How People Show Their Age,” in American Magazine, February 1922.

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

Crichton, Kyle, “Barrymore, the Lion-hearted,” in Collier’s (New York), March 1949.

Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), June 1982.

* * *

Lionel Barrymore, the oldest of the three Barrymore siblings who comprised probably the greatest acting family of the American theater and cinema, began his career in films shortly before 1910. He started out acting in Biograph shorts, and was soon starring in and occasionally writing and directing a wide variety of films for various studios. His roles were characterized by their diversity, from romantic leads and villains to character parts, in films such as D. W. Griffith’s The New York Hat, Wildfire, and Just Gold.

In the 1920s Barrymore appeared in dozens of films, among them America, also directed by Griffith, Sadie Thompson, in which he played a self-righteous reformer, and Alias Jimmy Valentine, as the detective Doyle. The 1920s were a turning point in his career, for he began more and more to play character parts and older men, something he was to do for the rest of his life. Although in his younger days Lionel had resembled his younger brother John in his good looks, his jowliness in middle age necessitated a switch to character parts when he was still relatively young. By the early 1930s Lionel usually appeared as a father-type or as a heavily made-up character, as in Rasputin and the Empress. That film marked the only time that Lionel, John, and Ethel Barrymore all played together in the same film. Lionel Barrymore won an Oscar in 1931 as Best Actor (tying with Wallace Beery for The Champ) for A Free Soul, in which he played Norma Shearer’s drunken father. His performance stands up well, as do many of his others of the period, such as Grand Hotel (in which he is memorably cast as the dying accountant attempting to squeeze every last drop of life). Barrymore is equally remembered, however, for his role as Dr. Leonard Gillespie in the long-running MGM series of Dr. Kildare films produced in the 1930s and 1940s. Barrymore appeared in all 15 of the films, more than anyone else connected with the series. His first Dr. Kildare film, Young Dr. Kildare, opened in late 1938 and seemed ideally suited to Barrymore because he was by then afflicted with severe arthritis and could act only on crutches or while sitting down. The series accommodated his illness by allowing him to remain in a wheelchair yet be vital in his characterization. Dr. Gillespie was the definitive Barrymore combination of exaggerated moves, intensity, and emotional vacillation. He could be calm and tender with patients yet extremely agitated with everyone else.

Films as Director:

- 1917 Life’s Whirlpool
- 1929 Confession; Madame X (Absinthe); His Glorious Night (+ pr, mus); The Unholy Night (The Green Ghost)
- 1930 The Rogue Song (+ pr)
- 1931 Ten Cents a Dance

Films as Scriptwriter:

- 1911 Fighting Blood (Griffith)
- 1912 My Hero (Griffith); The Musketeers of Pig Alley (Griffith); The Tender-Hearted Boy (Griffith)
- 1913 The Vengeance of Galora
- 1914 The Battle of Elderbush Gulch (Griffith); date uncertain: The Woman in Black; The Span of Life; The Seats of the Mighty

Publications

By BARRYMORE: book—

We Barrymores, as told to Cameron Shipp, London, 1951.

By BARRYMORE: articles—

On BARRYMORE: books—

1944 Three Men in White (Goldbeck) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie); Dragon Seed (Conway and Buquet) (as narrator); Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (as clergyman); Between Two Women (Goldbeck) (as Dr. Leonard Gillespie)

1945 The Valley of Decision (Garnett) (as Pat Rafferty)

1946 Three Wise Fools (Buzzell) (as Dr. Richard Gaught); The Secret Heart (Leonard) (as Dr. Rossiger); It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra) (as Mr. Potter); Duel in the Sun (King Vidor and Dieterle) (as Sen. McCanles)

1947 Dark Delusion (Cynthia’s Secret) (Goldbeck) (as Dr. Gillespie)

1948 Key Largo (Huston) (as James Temple)

1949 Some of the Best (Whitbeck) (as narrator); Down to the Sea in Ships (Hathaway) (as Capt. Bering Joy)

1950 Malaya (East of the Rising Sun; Alien Orders) (Thorpe) (as John Manchester); Right Cross (John Sturges) (as Sean O’Malley)

1951 The M-G-M Story (as narrator); Bannerline (Weis) (as Hugo Trimble)

1952 Lone Star (Sherman) (as Andrew Jackson)

1953 Main Street to Broadway (Garnett) (as himself)
A short time before the Dr. Kildare series began, Barrymore had appeared in the first of MGM’s Andy Hardy films as Judge Hardy in A Family Affair. Barrymore gave an excellent, calm performance which in retrospect seems more realistic than the wise and overly patient characterization given by Lewis Stone in the subsequent films.

Apart from the Dr. Gillespie role, Barrymore continued to act in dozens of films throughout the final years of his life, usually in a wheelchair or deskbound yet still dominating his scenes. His screen persona in the latter years was often the butt of nightclub impressionists who copied his unusually pitched and timed voice and grandiose hand gestures. Yet Barrymore’s career was a diverse one with as many calmly serious roles as flamboyant ones. It is unfortunate that the lasting impression he left is more that of Mr. Potter in Frank Capra’s It’s a Wonderful Life than the worried businessman in Dinner at Eight or the smart detective in Arsène Lupin. He was a consummate actor who worked hard and gave almost 300 screen performances of wide diversity, a great accomplishment by any standard.

—Patricia King Hanson, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

BARTHELMESS, Richard

Films as Actor:

1916 Gloria’s Romance (Kline); War Brides (Brenon); Snow White (Searle)
1917 The Moral Code (Miller); The Eternal Sin (Brenon); The Valentine Girl (Dawley); The Soul of Magdalen (King); The Streets of Illusion; Bab’s Diary (Dawley); Bab’s Burglar (Dawley); For Valour (Parker); Nearly Married (Withey); The Seven Swans (Dawley)
1918 Sunshine Nan (Giblyn); Rich Man, Poor Man (Dawley); Hit the Trail Holiday (Neilan); The Hope Chest (Clifton)
1919 The Girl Who Stayed at Home (Griffith); Broken Blossoms (Griffith) (as Cheng Huan); Boots (Clifton); Three Men and a Girl (Neilan); Peppy Polly (Clifton); I’ll Get Him Yet (Clifton)
1920 Scarlet Days (Griffith); The Idol Dancer (Griffith); The Love Flower (Griffith); Way Down East (Griffith) (as David Bartlett)
1921 Experience (Fitzmaurice); Tol’able David (King) (as David Kinemon)
1922 The Seventh Day (King); Just a Song at Twilight (Carlton King); Sonny (King); The Bond Boy (King); Fury (Goulding)
1923 The Bright Shawl (Robertson); The Fighting Blade (Robertson); Twenty One (Robertson)
1924 The Enchanted Cottage (Robertson); Classmates (Robertson)
1925 New Toys (Robertson); Soulfire (Robertson); Shore Leave (Robertson); The Beautiful City (Webb)
1926 Just Suppose (Webb); Ranso’s Folly (Olcott); The Amateur Gentleman (Olcott); The White Black Sheep (Olcott)
1927 The Dropkick (Santell); The Patent Leather Kid (Santell)
1928 The Noose (Dillon); The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come (Santell); The Wheels of Chance (Santell); Out of the Ruins (Santell); Scarlet Seas (Dillon)
1929 Weary River (Lloyd); Drag (Lloyd); Young Nowheres (Lloyd); The Show of Shows (Adolfi)
1930 Son of the Gods (Lloyd); The Dawn Patrol (Hawks); The Lash (Lloyd)
1931 The Finger Points (Dillon); The Last Flight (Dieteler)
1932 Alias the Doctor (Curtiz); Cabin in the Cotton (Curtiz)
1933 Central Airport (Wellman); Heroes for Sale (Wellman)
1934 Massacre (Crosland); A Modern Hero (Pabst); Midnight Alibi (Crosland)
1935 Four Hours to Kill (Leisen)
1936 Spy of Napoleon (Elvey)
1939 Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks)
1940 The Man Who Talked Too Much (Sherman)
1942 The Mayor of Forty-Fourth St. (Green); The Spoilers (Enright)

Publications

By BARTHELMESS: articles—

“15 Years of Fame,” in Pictures and Picturegoer, June 1929.

On BARTHELMESS: articles—

Hall, Gladys, “Richard the Tenth,” in Motion Picture Magazine, April 1921.
Wilson, B. F., “A Terribly Intimate Portrait,” in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), August 1924.

* * *
Some actors achieve a place in the filmic hall of fame by the totality of their performances. Others, like Richard Barthelmess, are known for one or two outstanding roles that overshadow all their other work.

His mother was the great Nazimova’s English teacher, and when the Russian actress made her film debut in Herbert Brenon’s War Brides, young Richard shared her honors. Several performances helped establish Barthelmess as a star before D. W. Griffith engaged him to play opposite Lillian Gish in Broken Blossoms. His interpretation of a poetic Chinese boy from the London docks who falls in love with a battered waif of the streets is one of the most remarkable examples of screen acting. The following year Griffith again used Barthelmess and Gish in Way Down East, an old melodrama brought to life by the master. Griffith also directed him in four other films.

Forming his own company, Inspiration Pictures, in cooperation with the director Henry King, he again gave an outstanding performance in the film masterpiece Tol’able David based on a Joseph Hergesheimer story of a country boy’s courage when a gang of ruffians threaten his family. King’s direction and Barthelmess’s playing make this a classic of the cinema which influenced many directors, including the great Russian Pudovkin.

The Bright Shawl, again based on Hergesheimer and starring Dorothy Gish, and The Enchanted Cottage with May McAvoy, added to his laurels, and his popularity continued to the end of the silent period. His career was by no means finished with the coming of sound, and he had leading roles in Howard Hawks’s The Dawn Patrol and Only Angels Have Wings, Michael Curtiz’s Cabin in the Cotton with the young Bette Davis, and Pabst’s only American film, A Modern Hero. As Barthelmess grew older he undertook minor character roles but left Hollywood forever after joining the navy in 1942. He enjoyed a comfortable retirement until his death at his Long Island home in 1963.

—Liam O’Leary

BASINGER, Kim

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Dog and Cat (Kelljian—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Officer J. Z. Kane)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Katie: Portrait of a Centerfold (Greenwald—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Katie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>The Ghost of Flight 401 (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Killjoy (Who Murdered Joy Morgan?) (Moxey—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Laury Medford)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Hard Country (David Greene)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Mother Lode (Charlton Heston and Joe Canutt)</td>
<td>(as Andrea Spalding)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Never Say Never Again (Kerschner)</td>
<td>(as Domino Petachi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Man Who Loved Women (Edwards)</td>
<td>(as Louise)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Natural (Levinson)</td>
<td>(as Memo Paris)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Fool for Love (Altman)</td>
<td>(as May)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>No Mercy (Pearce)</td>
<td>(as Michel Duval)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>9 1/2 Weeks (Lyne)</td>
<td>(as Elizabeth)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Blind Date (Edwards)</td>
<td>(as Nadia Gates)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(Benton)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>My Stepmother Is an Alien (Richard Benjamin)</td>
<td>(as Celeste Martin)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Batman (Burton)</td>
<td>(as Vicki Vale)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>The Marrying Man (Too Hot to Handle)</td>
<td>(as Vicki Anderson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Final Analysis (Joanou)</td>
<td>(as Heather Evans)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cool World (Bakshi)</td>
<td>(as Holli Would)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Wayne’s World 2 (Surjik)</td>
<td>(as Honey Horne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Real McCoy (Mulcahy)</td>
<td>(as Karen McCoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>The Getaway (Donaldson)</td>
<td>(as Carol McCoy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ready to Wear (Prêt-a-Porter)</td>
<td>(Altman) (as Kitty Potter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>L.A. Confidential (Hanson)</td>
<td>(as Lynn Bracken)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>I Dreamed of Africa (Hudson)</td>
<td>(as Kuki Gallmann)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bless the Child (Russell)</td>
<td>(as Maggie O’Connor)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By BASINGER: articles—

On BASINGER: articles—

* * *
Her beauty is the subject of regular comment in her films but Jack Nicholson’s Joker in Batman, gives us the most accurate, if sardonic appraisal of her eye-catching looks: “You’re beautiful, in an old-fashioned kind of way.” A Breck girl at the age of 16 and a Playboy model a year later, Kim Basinger, with her full lips, glowing skin, and wayward honeyed locks, was the most sultry but also the most conventional of the sex symbols of the eighties. Although capable of conveying sexual menace, her specialty has been to mimic the sexual availability and emotional vulnerability patented by Marilyn Monroe, whose breathy style she acknowledges as influencing her own in Cool World. Her first star turn in Katie: Portrait of a Centerfold already contained the home recipe for Basinger’s trademark sexual confection—a melting Southern sweetness, a soft center, a girlish and confiding, often nervous laugh. Even when dressed in the height of fashion, Basinger hardly strikes the eye as modern, either in her looks or attitudes. She typically belongs to a society in which, as a character in No Mercy observes, it is pleasurable to be a man. Basinger is generally cast as the sexual trophy trying to escape from such a world, which is why flight and the chase figure so prominently in her films, sometimes to deliriously happy effect, as in the boisterous Nadine, in which she gives her most endearing comic performance, but more often as a dangerous game of erotic pursuit. Films such as No Mercy and the soft-pornographic 9 1/2 Weeks as well as the film she famously did not make—Boxing Helena—cast her in elaborate scenarios of sexual bondage. Even in the more elegantly appointed thrillers, such as Final Analysis, she inhabits what appear to be exhibition cases for human display. Her films often present her as handicapped for anything resembling self-reliant womanhood—twice by alcohol disorders, once by illiteracy, once (arguably more than once) by masochistic sex addiction.

Basinger has tried to maneuver within the narrow confines of her sexpot image by parodying her heartstopper reputation. Like Kathleen Turner, she enjoys lampooning the hypnotic power of her own sexuality, although her Holli Would in the nightmarish Cool World is the diabolic double of Turner’s “good blond” in Who Framed Roger Rabbit? Basinger’s attempts at self-parody spoof rather than reinvent the Blond Bombshell: Honey Horne incarnates adolescent sex fantasies in Wayne’s World 2, itself a spoof on the icons of media culture; and her Celeste in My Stepmother Is An Alien a woman so good-looking that sex with her is treated as a cosmic event. Still in that film and in more earthbound, but equally frenetic vehicles, such as the witless Blind Date, Basinger displays a goofiness and slapstick limberness deserving of better stunts. It remains to be seen whether Basinger can modernize her screen persona, which while glamorous, lacks the independence, drive, and determination that characterize the screen’s most “modern” women from Bette Davis to Sharon Stone. Final Analysis suggests she might, with the right vehicle, shed the manners that have kept her in relative subjection to men. In this unapologetic remake of Vertigo, Basinger brings a murderous resolve to her role as Heather Evans, a more sinister and cunning descendant of Kim Novak’s compliant, zombified Madeleine. When she falls to her death from atop a lighthouse tower, it is after having rejected the new age masculinity offered to her by her hapless lover and dupe, Richard Gere. The man on the tower remains standing, in command of the scene, but the phallic structure supporting him is much in need of repairs.

The entire question of role choice ceased to be academic when Basinger was sued by Main Line Pictures for backing out of an oral agreement to star in Jennifer Lynch’s Boxing Helena. The initial judgment against her sent Basinger into bankruptcy although it was later reversed by the California Court of Appeals. Despite the setback, Basinger is in top comic form in Robert Altman’s Ready to Wear, enlivening the fairly drab and mean-spirited satire on the fashion industry as Kitty Potter, an undismayed commentator for FADTV. Altman’s sly joke is to give this luminous beauty, defined by image culture all her professional life, the final clear-eyed pronouncement on the mystique of the female body beautiful.

—Maria DiBattista

BASSETT, Angela

Films as Actress:

1985 Doubletake (Jud Taylor—for TV)
1986 F/X (Mandel) (as TV reporter)
1990 Kindergarten Cop (Reitman) (as stewardess); Perry Mason: The Case of the Silenced Singer (Satof—for TV) (as Carla Peters); In the Best Interest of the Child (David Greene—for TV) (as Lori); Family of Spies (Gyllenhaal—for TV); Challenger (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Cheryl McNair)
1991 Boyz N the Hood (Singleton) (as Reva Styles); City of Hope (Sayles) (as Reesha); One Special Victory (Stuart Cooper—for TV); Line of Fire: The Morris Dees Story (Korty—for TV) (as Pat); Fire! Trapped on the 37th Floor (Robert Day—for TV) (as Allison)
1992 Innocent Blood (Landis) (as U.S. Attorney Sinclair); Malcolm X (Spike Lee) (as Betty Shabazz); Passion Fish (Sayles) (as Dawn/Rhonda); Critters 4 (Harvey) (as Fran); Locked Up: A Mother’s Rage (Rooney—for TV) (as Willie); The Heroes of Desert Storm (Ohmley—for TV) (as Lt. Jeter)
1993 What’s Love Got to Do with It (Brian Gibson) (as Tina Turner)
1995 Panther (Van Peebles) (cameo as Betty Shabazz); Vampire in Brooklyn (Craven) (as Rita); Strange Days (Bigelow) (as Mace Mason); Waiting to Exhale (Whitaker) (as Bernadine)
1999 Contact (Zemeckis) (as Rachel Constantine)
1998 How Stella Got Her Groove Back (Sullivan) (as Stella); Africans in America: America’s Journey Through Slavery (Bagwell, Bellows—mini for TV) (as Narrator)
1999 Wings Against the Wind (Palcy) (as Bessie Coleman); Music of the Heart (Craven) (as Janet Williams); Whispers (Beverly and Dereck Joubert) (as Groove); Our Friend, Martin (Smiley and Trippetti—anim) (as voice of Miles’ mom)
When Angela Bassett was 15 years old, she went on a field trip to the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., with the Upward Bound program for gifted students. It was here that she saw James Earl Jones in a production of the play Of Mice and Men, and she knew that she wanted to act. In talking about the performance, she said, “I just wept. I thought, if I could make someone feel the way I feel right now...” Bassett grew up in a single-parent household in St. Petersburg, Florida, with her sister D’Nette and her mother Betty, where she was the first African-American student accepted in her high school’s National Honor Society. She credits her mother with instilling in her a strict work ethic, a firm grounding, and a strong sense of self. These traits are evident in the roles she has chosen—many of which are strong mothers—and in the intensity and commitment she brings to the acting process.
Her acting career began on the stage for which she was trained at the prestigious Yale School of Drama under the tutelage of veteran director Lloyd Richards. She acted in two August Wilson plays on Broadway before making her foray onto the screen. Her first screen credit is an unmemorable small part with one line of dialogue in the thriller F/X. Shortly after, she migrated to California, and while guesting on numerous television shows, she also began making screen appearances. The first role that got her noticed was as Reva, the driven mother of the film’s protagonist Tre, in Boyz N the Hood. Bassett obviously identified with the strong-willed mother who sends her son to live with his father so he has an adult male role model. She forged a friendship with co-star Laurence Fishburne on the set, and this bond would prove to serve her well later.

Bassett had supporting roles in two of John Sayles’s small-budget, but well-regarded films, City of Hope and Passion Fish. The next role that garnered her attention, however, was as Betty Shabazz, the wife of Malcolm X, in Spike Lee’s film about the widely known activist. She brought a sense of dignity to the role, and in the process helped the film transcend a script calling mainly for large doses of humbleness. Bassett played a legendary figure again when she took on the role of Katherine Jackson in the television mini-series The Jacksons: An American Dream. The drama spans Jackson’s life from age 15 to 55. Bassett received mainly positive notices for her performance, but her next role is the one that catapulted her to fame.

She won the coveted star role of Tina Turner in the biopic What’s Love Got to Do with It over numerous other popular actresses. To prepare for the role, Bassett physically trained for more than a month. She worked with dialect coaches, and studied hours of videotape of Turner’s performances. Bassett’s rigorous work ethic paid off. She won the Golden Globe for her riveting portrayal, and was nominated for an Academy Award. Once again, Bassett was able to bring a sense of dignity, vulnerability, and mercy to a character who could have been seen purely as a victim of domestic abuse. It was of utmost importance that the audience understand why Turner—through years of violence—would stay with Ike (played by Fishburne, who accepted the role in large part because Bassett was playing Turner). Bassett accomplished this by showing Turner’s sense of loyalty and grace. Bassett seems to have an uncanny knack at showing opposite emotions in her characters, a skill essential to good acting. It is also to her credit that the film is never about an actress playing Tina Turner.

Bassett seemed to become Turner. This is most evident at the end of the film when Turner herself appears in a stage number, and the illusion of reality of the film is not broken.

In 1995, Bassett was seen in two major films in very different roles. She was cast opposite Ralph Fiennes in the action-adventure Strange Days, set at the end of the millennium amidst racial wars. Her heroic character—another single parent—carries equal emotional heft to Fiennes’s lead role. Her most recent film is Waiting to Exhale, which has been strongly criticized for male bashing. Bassett has said, however, that was not her or the director Forest Whitaker’s intention. The film also received praise for its strong, black female roles. In a time when there are more, but still too few good, female roles, Bassett seems to find them, and to be able to cross racial boundaries.

—Anita Gabrosek

BATES, Alan

Films as Actor:

1960 The Entertainer (Richardson) (as Frank Rice)
1961 Whistle Down the Wind (Forbes) (as Arthur Blakey)
1962 A Kind of Loving (Schlesinger) (as Vic Brown)
1963 The Running Man (Reed) (as Stephen Maddox); The Caretaker (The Guest) (Clive Donner) (as Mick)
1964 Nothing but the Best (Clive Donner) (as Jimmy Brewster); Zorba the Greek (Cacoyannis) (as Basil)
1965 Insh’ Allah (Hudson) (as narrator)
1966 Georgy Girl (Narizzano) (as Jos); King of Hearts (Le Roi de coeur) (de Broca) (as Pvt. Charles Plumpick)
1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger) (as Gabriel Oak); Rece do gory (Hands Up!) (Skolimowski)
1968 The Fixer (Frankenheimer) (as Yakov Bok)
1969 Women in Love (Russell) (as Jimmy Brewster)
1970 Three Sisters (Olivier) (as Vershinin)
1971 The Go-Between (Losey) (as Ted Burgess); A Day in the Death of Joe Egg (Medak) (as Brian)
1972 Second Best (Dartnell) (+ co-pr)
1973 L’Impossible objet (The Impossible Object) (Frankenheimer) (as Harry)
1974 Mikis Theodorakis: A Profile of Greatness; Butley (Pinter) (title role); The Story of Jacob and Joseph (Cacoyannis—for TV) (as narrator)
1975 In Celebration (Lindsay Anderson) (as Andrew Shaw)
1976 Royal Flash (Lester) (as Rudi von Starnberg); Where Adam Stood (Brian Gibson—for TV)
1977 An Unmarried Woman (Lester) (as Keplan)
1978 The Shout (Skolimowski) (as Charles Crossley)
1979 The Rose (Rydell) (as Rudge)
1980 Nijinsky (Ross) (as Sergei Diaghilev)
1981 Quartet (Ivory) (as H. J. Heidler)
1982 The Return of the Soldier (A. Bridges) (as Capt. Chris Baldry); A Voyage Round My Father (Rakoff—for TV) (as the son); Britannia Hospital (Lindsay Anderson)
1983 The Wicked Lady (Winner) (as Capt. Jerry Jackson); Separate Tables (Schlesinger—for TV) (as Mr. Malcolm/Maj. Pollock)
1984 Dr. Fischer of Geneva (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (as Jones)
1985 An Englishman Abroad (Schlesinger—for TV) (as Guy Burgess)
1986 Duet for One (Konchalovsky) (as David Cornwallis)
1987 Pack of Lies (Page—for TV) (as Stewart); A Prayer for the Dying (Hodges) (as Jack Meehan)
1988 We Think the World of You (Gregg) (as Frank); The Dog It Was That Died (Wood—for TV) (as Blair)
1989 Force majeure (Uncontrollable Circumstances) (Jolivet) (as Malcolm Forrest); Club Extinction (Dr. M) (Chabrol) (as Dr. Marsfeldt/Guru)
1990 Hamlet (Zeffirelli) (as Claudius); Mister Frost (Setbon) (as Felix Detweiller); 102 Boulevard Haussmann (Prassad—for TV) (as Marcel Proust); Shuttlecock (Piddington) (as James Prentis)
1991 Unnatural Pursuits (for TV) (as Hamish Partt)
1992 Secret Friends (Potter) (as John); Silent Tongue (Shepard) (as Eamon McCree)
1994 Hard Times (Peter Barnes—for TV) (as Bounderby)
1995 The Grotesque (J. P. Davidson) (as Sir Hugo Coal); Oliver’s Travels (Foster—series for TV) (as Oliver)
1998 Nicholas’ Gift (Markowitz—for TV) (as Reg Green)
1999 Varya (Cacoyannis) (as Gayev)
2000 St. Patrick: The Irish Legend (Robert Hughes—for TV) (as Calpronius); Arabian Nights (Barron—for TV) (as Storyteller)
2001 “In the Beginning” (Connor—for TV) (as Aaron)

Publications

By BATES: articles—

On BATES: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter, 1992.

* * *

Alan Bates has distinguished himself in a number of important realistic and romantic films made by several of Britain’s best directors of the postwar generation, including Tony Richardson (The Entertainer), Bryan Forbes (Whistle Down the Wind), Ken Russell (Women in Love), and John Schlesinger (A Kind of Loving and Far from the Madding Crowd).

Bates made his acting debut in 1955 on the stage. He created the role of Cliff in John Osborne’s Look Back in Anger, the quintessential Angry Young Man drama, and also starred in Harold Pinter’s The Caretaker, a role that he later brought to the screen. Once he had made the transition from stage to screen, his talents were soon widely recognized and his reputation became an international one. He held his own opposite Anthony Quinn’s flamboyant portrayal of the title character in Michael Cacoyannis’s Zorba the Greek, and his performance as an unfairly incarcerated Jewish handyman in turn-of-the-century Russia in John Frankenheimer’s The Fixer earned him an Academy Award nomination. He went on to do splendid work for Joseph Losey in The Go-Between, Paul Mazursky in An Unmarried Woman, and Jerzy Skolimowski in The Shout.

Bates is an actor of impressive range and flexibility. In Far from the Madding Crowd he played Thomas Hardy’s Gabriel Oak as a pillar of stability: the actor’s purposefully wooden exterior was ideal for playing a simple character who is defined by patience, dedication, and loyalty. (Bates also appeared in Hardy’s The Mayor of Casterbridge for BBC-TV.) In sharp contrast to Gabriel Oak is his role in The Go-Between as Ted Burgess, another strong peasant type, also infatuated with a striking woman who, like Bathsheba Everdene in Far from the Madding Crowd, breaks his heart. But in The Go-Between, his character’s response is much different. As the plot moves towards its climax, Bates must suggest that Burgess’s spirit has been broken. He very effectively portrays the inner turbulence of the character, but even more challenging is the mystical enigma of Charles Crossley in The Shout, adapted from a strange and disturbing short story by Robert Graves concerning an intruder with shamanic powers who disrupts the lives of a staid English couple. Roles such as these make his performance as the romantic lead in An Unmarried Woman seem rather conventional (though decidedly entertaining) by comparison.

Bates has had his best later-career role in The Grotesque, giving a picture-stealing performance as Sir Hugo Coal, a crusty, aristocratic English squire who is fascinated by dinosaurs to the point of reproducing a full-scale model of one. Of course, he himself, as a representative of the stuffy upper classes, is a dinosaur. Sir Hugo no longer sleeps with his wife, and prefers physically tussling with men. As a member of a repressed class, however, he can only fantasize or act out the kind of sexuality in which his amoral new servant (played by Sting) revels. The character of Sir Hugo makes for a telling contrast to Bates’s earthy Rupert Birkin in Women in Love: in the latter, he raised eyebrows with his nude wrestling scene with Oliver Reed.

In the first part of The Grotesque, Bates seems to be parodying Nigel Bruce’s Dr. Watson, but as the story progresses he also gets to be seriously dramatic. His performance is superb, and one hopes that, in the future, he will be offered similar, equally challenging roles.

—James M. Welsh, updated by Rob Edelman

---

BATES, Kathy

Nationality: American. Born: Kathleen Doyle Bates in Memphis, Tennessee, 28 June 1948. Family: Married the actor Tom Campisi.

Education: B.F.A., Southern Methodist University. Career: Worked in regional theater in Washington, D.C., and at the Actors Theater in Louisville, late 1960s; moved to New York to pursue acting career, 1970; worked as a singing waitress in a Catskill Mountain resort, early 1970s; made screen debut in a bit role in Taking Off, 1971; had first off-Broadway role in Vanities, 1976; began appearing in roles on TV series, and had recurring role on daytime soap All My Children, 1977; made Broadway debut in Goodbye Fidel, 1980; had first important screen role in Misery, 1990; directed episodes of the TV series NYPD Blue and Homicide: Life on the Street, 1993; made feature directorial debut with the TV movie Dash and Lily, 1999.

Awards: Best Actress Academy Award, Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture—Drama Golden Globe, and Chicago Film Critics Award, for Misery, 1990; Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role in a Series, Mini-Series or Motion Picture Made for TV Golden Globe, for 3rd Rock from the Sun, 1996; Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a TV Movie or Mini-Series Screen Actors Guild Award, for The Late Shift, 1996; Best Supporting Actress Chicago Film Critics Association, Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a Supporting Role Screen Actors Guild Award, for Primary Colors, 1998. Agent: Ssan Smith and Associates, 121 North Vicente Boulevard., Beverly Hills, CA 90211, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1971 Taking Off (Forman) (bit role as a singer)
1978 Straight Time (Grossbard) (as Selma Darin)
1982 Come Back to the 5 and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean (Altman) (as Stella Mae)
1983 Two of a Kind (Herzfeld) (as Furniture Man’s Wife)
1986 Johnny Bull (Weill—for TV) (as Katrine Kovacs); The Morning After (Lumet) (as woman on Mateo Street)
1987 Summer Heat (Gleason) (as Ruth); Murder Ordained (Mike Robe—for TV) (as Bobbi Bank)
1988 Arthur 2: On the Rocks (Yorkin) (as Mrs. Canby)
1989 Signs of Life (Coles) (as Mary Beth); High Stakes (Melanie Rose) (Kollek) (as Jill); Roe vs. Wade (Hoblit—for TV) (as Kathy Bates and James Caan in Misery

Jessie); No Place Like Home (Homeless) (Grant—for TV) (as Bonnie Cooper)
1990 Misery (Rob Reiner) (as Annie Wilkes); Men Don’t Leave (Brickman) (as Lisa Coleman); Dick Tracy (Beatty) (as Mrs. Green); White Palace (Mandoki) (as Rosemary Powers)
1991 At Play in the Fields of the Lord (Babenco) (as Hazel Quarrier); Fried Green Tomatoes (Avnet) (as Evelyn); The Road to Mecca (Fugard and Goldsmid) (as Elsa Barlow)
1992 Shadows and Fog (Woody Allen) (as prostitute); Prelude to a Kiss (Rene) (as Leah Blier); Used People (Kidron) (as Bibby)
1993 Hostages (Wheatley—for TV) (as Peggy Say); A Home of Our Own (Bill) (as Frances Lacey)
1994 North (Rob Reiner) (as Alaskan Mom); Curse of the Starving Class (McClary) (as Ella)
1995 Dolores Claiborne (Hackford) (title role); Angus (Johnson) (as Meg)
1996 Diabolique (Chechik) (as the Detective); The Late Shift (Betty Thomas—for TV) (as Helen Kushnick); The War at Home (Estevez) (as Maureen Collier)
1997 Titanic (Cameron) (as Molly Brown)
1998 Swept From the Sea (Kidron) (as Miss Swaffter); Primary Colors (Nichols) (as Libby Holden); The Waterboy (Coraci) (as Mama Boucher)
1999 Annie (Marshall—for TV) (as Miss Agatha ‘Aggie’ Hannigan); A Civil Action (Zaillain) (as Bankruptcy Judge)
2000 Bruno (MacLaine) (as Mother Superior); Il Potere della speranza (Manera) (as Rosy Bindi); Unconditional Love (Hogan)
2001 Rat Race (Zucker) (as Squirrel Lady); Jesse James (Mayfield) (as Ma James)

Other Films:
1999 Dash and Lilly (d—for TV)

Publications
By BATES: articles—

BATES

Interview with Jean-Luc Vandiste, in Écran Fantastique (Paris), June 1996.

On BATES: articles—

* * *

Kathy Bates is a fine actress with a natural, straightforward style, who for years had impressed discerning viewers and critics with her stage work. But despite this recognition, she failed to break through the boundaries of regional and New York-based theater into the mainstream of the motion picture industry. Indeed, between 1979 and 1987 she originated roles in three hit stage plays: Crimes of the Heart, ‘night, Mother, and Frankie and Johnny in the Clair de Lune—the latter a part written especially for her. Yet when it came time to cast each property for the big screen, Bates was replaced by, respectively, Diane Keaton, Sissy Spacek, and Michelle Pfeiffer. The reasons were twofold: Not only was Bates an unknown celluloid commodity, but at 5’ 4” with a square build she lacked the inborn glamour of standard Hollywood leading ladies. In the late 1980s, Bates offered an explanation for Hollywood’s hesitation to cast her when she declared, “I do lose roles because I’m not slender and glamorous.”

When not appearing on stage, Bates earned a living in guest spots on prime-time television series and made-for-television films. She even had a regular role in the popular daytime soap opera All My Children. Feature film roles were infrequent and, for the most part, forgettable. Bates was past her 40th birthday when Rob Reiner became the first Hollywood director to recognize her screen power. He cast her in what was to be an Academy Award-winning performance in Stephen King’s Misery, playing Annie Wilkes, the “Number One Fan” of a famous romance novelist (James Caan), whom she nurses after he is injured in a car accident. Annie is significantly psychotic, and the bedridden writer soon becomes her prisoner. Bates’s bravura performance is nothing short of extraordinary. She unvels an astonishingly wide range of emotions as she befriends and then suddenly taunts her captive.

This breakthrough performance was proof that Bates could be a dynamo in character roles. Misery, however, was not her first interesting screen role. In the little-seen The Road to Mecca, based on a play by Athol Fugard, she was cast as a Capetown, South Africa, teacher—a part she earlier had played on the stage, but which was not considered significant enough for her to have lost it to a more well-known performer.

The year following the release of Misery, Bates created the pivotal role of Evelyn in Fried Green Tomatoes, the screen version of Fannie Flagg’s offbeat novel. Bates plays a repressed Southern housewife who meets an elderly but spirited woman (Jessica Tandy) who resides in a nursing home. The old woman’s intricate yarns of people and events of the 1920s have a decided influence on Evelyn’s own lifestyle. Bates’s power-packed portrayal of Evelyn works in tandem with Tandy’s more delicate but equally forthright performance. The vigor of the pair (who appeared together one more time in Used People) represents a collaboration of the best of two generations of actresses.

Two other pivotal Bates performances came in A Home of Our Own, in which she is cast as a spirited single mother who settles with her children in a small Idaho town; and especially Dolores Claiborne, also based on a Stephen King story and her best role since Misery. In Dolores Claiborne, she offers an award-caliber tour de force as the title character, a Down East Maine woman accused of killing her boss—and who years earlier may have done in her abusive husband—and who is reunited with her long-estranged daughter (Jennifer Jason Leigh). Here, Bates and Leigh, cast as characters who share a deeply complex and involved personal history, play opposite each other just as impressively as Bates and Tandy had in Fried Green Tomatoes.

In the second half of the 1990s, Bates most often found herself playing dominating, larger-than-life characters. Some merely were colorful (Molly Brown in Titanic, while others were pushy and manipulative (Helen Kushnick in The Late Shift). In 1998, Bates had two of her most outstanding character parts in a pair of decidedly different films, one a loosely based-on-fact satire grounded in reality and the other a no-brainer farce. The first is Primary Colors, a sharply-written adaptation (by Elayne May) of the best-selling fictionalized chronicle of the first Bill Clinton Presidential campaign. Here, the full-bodied Bates plays a foul-mouthed, bossy campaign operative, a “dustbuster” whose task is to protect the candidate from accusations of scandal. She is Libby Holden, a “true believer,” a woman dedicated to getting good candidates elected. Libby cuts her teeth on the McGovern campaign, and then spent the next two decades having mental breakdowns and living in and out of mental hospitals. This role offers Bates a full range of stances and emotions, from tough and ruthless to weakened and despairing. In The Waterboy, Bates is hilarious as Mama Boucher, a buxom bayou widow who controls every aspect of her son’s life. Her apron-strings strangle the young man’s aspirations as she prevents him from playing football and obtaining an education and a girlfriend. In this film, Bates has the singular challenge of fitting into the same celluloid fantasy world as the star, offbeat comic actor Adam Sandler. She deftly develops her character, as she speaks her bayou lingo and gestures broadly and comically. Without ever competing with Sandler’s comic style, Bates builds the character of a weirdly memorable matron who complements and even fills out Sandler’s universe.

Then in 1999, Bates made her directorial debut with a made-for-television feature film, Dash and Lilly, about the love affair between the writers Dashiel Hammett and Lillian Hellman. Although the film lacked pacing and a solid viewpoint, it does not seem unlikely that a woman with such a strong command of acting will be able to develop a more controlled skill for directing.

Character actresses traditionally have benefited from age in the film industry. In middle age, Kathy Bates finally and deservedly has been able to attain—and maintain—stardom as a reliable and occasionly riveting motion picture character performer. Her success is proof that there is room in Hollywood for both the slender “glamour girl” and the commanding character actress.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg
BAXTER, Anne

Films as Actress:

1940 20 Mule Team (Thorpe) (as Jean Johnson); The Great Profile (Walter Lang) (as Mary Maxwell)
1941 Charley’s Aunt (Charley’s American Aunt) (Mayo) (as Amy Spettigue); Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Renoir) (as Julie)
1942 The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles) (as Lucy Morgan); The Pied Piper (Pichel) (as Nicole Rougeron)
1943 Crash Dive (Mayo) (as Jean Hewlett); Five Graves to Cairo (Wilders) (as Mouche); The North Star (Armored Attack) (Milestone) (as Marina)
1944 The Eve of St. Mark (Stahl) (as Janet Feller); The House of Dracula (Asa de Hill) (as Ethel) (as Penny Johnson); The Sullivans (The Fighting Sullivans) (Lloyd Bacon) (as Katherine Mary); Sunday Dinner for a Soldier (Lloyd Bacon) (as Tessa Osborne); The Purple Heart (Milestone) (as voice)
1945 A Royal Scandal (Czarina) (Preminger) (as Countess Anna Jaschikoff)
1946 Smoky (Louis King) (as Julie Richards); Angel on My Shoulder (Mayo) (as Barbara Foster); The Razor’s Edge (Edmund Goulding) (as Sophie MacDonald)
1947 Mother Wore Tights (Walter Lang) (as narrator); Blaze of Noon (Farrow) (as Lucille Stewart)
1948 Homecoming (LeRoy) (as Penny Johnson); The Luck of the Irish (Koster) (as Nora); The Walls of Jericho (Stahl) (as Julia Norman); Yellow Sky (Wellman) (as Mike)
1949 You’re My Everything (Walter Lang) (as Hannah Adams)
1950 A Ticket to Tomahawk (Sale) (as Kit Dodge Jr.); All about Eve (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Eve Harrington)
1951 Follow the Sun (Lanfield) (as Valerie Hogan)
1952 Screen Snapshots No. 206; My Wife’s Best Friend (Sale) (as Virginia Mason); “The Last Leaf” ep. of O. Henry’s Full

House (Full House) (Negulesco) (as Joanna); The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Joseph M. Newman) (as Cal)
1953 I Confess (Hitchcock) (as Ruth Grandfort); The Blue Gardenie (Fritz Lang) (as Norah Larkin)
1954 Carnival Story (Neumann) (as Willie)
1955 Bedevilled (Leisen) (as Monica Johnson); One Desire (Jerry Hopper) (as Tacey Cromwell); The Spoilers (Hibbs) (as Cherry Malotte)
1956 The Come-On (Birdwell) (as Rita Kendrick); The Ten Commandments (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Princess Nefretiri); Three Violent People (Maté) (as Lorna Hunter Saunders)
1958 Chase a Crooked Shadow (Anderson) (as Kimberley)
1960 Cimarron (Anthony Mann) (as Dixie)
1961 Season of Passion (Summer of the 17th Doll) (Norman) (as Olive)
1962 Mix Me a Person (Norman) (as Dr. Anne Dyson); Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk) (as Teresina Vidarverri)
1965 The Family Jewels (Jerry Lewis) (cameo)
1966 Frauen, die durch die Hölle gehen (The Tall Women; Donna alla frontiera; Sette donne per una strage) (Grooper or Zehetgruber, Parolini, and Pink) (as Mary Ann)
1967 The Busy Body (Castle) (as Margo Foster); Stranger on the Run (Siegel—for TV) (as Valvera Johnson)
1968 Companions in Nightmare (Norman Lloyd—for TV) (as Carlotta Mauridge)
1969 Marcus Welby, M.D. (Rich—for TV) (as Myra Sherwood)
1970 The Challenger (Martinson—for TV, produced in 1968) (as Stephanie York); Ritual of Evil (Day—for TV) (as Jolene Wiley)
1971 Fools’ Parade (Dynamite Man from Glory Jail) (McLaglen) (as Ceclo); If Tomorrow Comes (McCowan—for TV) (as Miss Cramer); The Late Liz (Dick Ross) (as Liz Addams Hatch)
1972 Lapin 360 (Lewis—unreleased); The Catcher (Miner—for TV) (as Kate)
1973 Lisa, Bright and Dark (Swarc—for TV) (as Margaret Schilling)
1978 Little Mo (Webb—for TV) (as Jess Connolly)
1979 Nero Wolfe (Gilroy—for TV) (as Rachel Bruner)
1980 Jane Austen in Manhattan (Ivy) (as Liliana Zorska)
1983 The Architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright (Grigor—doc) (as narrator)
1984 Sherlock Holmes and the Masks of Death (Masks of Death) (Roy Ward Baker—for TV)

Publications

By BAXTER: book—

On BAXTER: books—

Given the creative legacy of Anne Baxter’s family—she was Frank Lloyd Wright’s granddaughter—her artistic accomplishments were scripted from childhood. She was from the age of ten determined to become an actress after seeing a stage production starring Helen Hayes in New York; her aspirations were encouraged by her parents and grandfather.

There was an air of duplicity about Baxter that she and her directors used to diverse effect throughout her career. Her steely-eyed, intelligent beauty was composed of elements disparate enough to hint at complex or contradictory aspects of a character. Few of Baxter’s roles were straightforward interpretations; her characters, more often than not, play other characters. The masks that Baxter’s women wear may depict treachery (All about Eve), mental unbalance (Guest in the House), or a rugged, no nonsense exterior that disguises a vulnerable, tentative personality (Yellow Sky). Many of Hollywood’s best directors found Baxter a surprisingly intense performer and she did first-rate work for Hitchcock, Welles, Wellman, Edmund Goulding, Negulesco, Milestone, and Joseph L. Mankiewicz.

Without establishing a dominant screen persona, she made several good films from the time she was only a teenager. At the age of 16 she tested for the title role in Hitchcock’s Rebecca, but her youth prevented her from being cast; she had to settle for an ingenue part in 20 Mule Team. From the beginning, though, her assignments and her.
performances were varied and interesting; she was earnest in The Great Profile, earthy in Swamp Water, and a coquette in Charley’s Aunt. The Magnificent Ambersons gave her the best role of her early career and her performance is subtle and thoughtfully shaded. She won an Academy Award for her tragic dipsomaniac in The Razor’s Edge and was again nominated for her Eve Harrington in All about Eve, which she played, as The New York Times put it, with “an icy calm.”

Her career peaked sooner than seems just. While she continued to give good, sometimes inspired performances in I Confess, O. Henry’s Full House (in Negulesco’s “The Last Leaf” episode), The Blue Gardenia, and The Ten Commandments, eventually she found herself slogging through forgettable romantic comedies. Walk on the Wild Side and Fools’ Parade gave her a few shining moments, but she soon had to turn to television and the stage for sustenance. In 1971, she took over Lauren Bacall’s role of Margo Channing in All about Eve, and found herself in the intriguing position of playing the established star at odds with the young upstart, Eve, whom Baxter herself had played so memorably on film.

Though she never achieved the status of superstar, she did achieve longevity, diversity, and popularity throughout a very stable career. In her final role, Baxter portrayed Victoria Cabot on the television series Hotel from 1983 until her death, caused by a massive stroke in 1985.

—Frank Thompson, updated by Kelly Otter

BAYE, Nathalie

Nationality: French. Born: Maineville, 6 July 1948. Education: Trained as a dancer; studied acting in Cours (René) Simon; attended Paris Conservatory of Dramatic Art, graduated 1972. Family: One child. Career: At 17, studied classical and modern dance in New York, and toured with dance company; returned to France for vacation, decided to stay and study acting; 1971—film debut in Faustine and the Beautiful Summer; 1974—in Pirandello’s Liolla at Théâtre de la Commune; also TV work; 1978–79—stage appearance in Three Sisters, directed by Lucian Pintilî. Awards: Best Supporting Actress César Award, for Sauve qui peut, 1980; Best Supporting Actress César Award, for Une Étrange Affaire, 1981; Best Actress César Award, for La Balance, 1983; Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup for Best Actress, for Une liaison pornographique, 1999; Golden Space Needle Award for Best Actress, Seattle International Film Festival, for Vénus beauté, 2000. Agent: Artmédia, 10 av Georges V, Paris 75008, France.

Films as Actress:

1971 Faustine et le belâtre (Faustine and the Beautiful Summer) (Companeez) (as Giselle)
1972 Two People (Wise) (bit role)
1973 La Nuit américaine (Day for Night) (Truffaut) (as Joëlle)
1974 La Gueule ouverte (The Mouth Agape) (Pialat); Un Jour de fête (Sisser); La Gifle (The Slap) (Pinoteau) (as Christine)
1975 Le Voyage des noces (Honeymoons) (Trintignant); La Jalousie (Trintignant)

1976 Mado (Sautet) (as Catherine); Le Plein de super (Fill It Up, Premium!) (Cavali)er; L’ultima donna (The Last Woman) (Ferrier); La Communion solennelle (Féret)
1977 L’Homme qui aimait les femmes (The Man Who Loved Women) (Truffaut) (as Martine Desdoits); Monsieur Papa (Monnier) (as Janine)
1978 La Chambre verte (The Green Room) (Truffaut) (as Cecilia Mandel); Mon Premier Amour (My First Love) (Chouraqui) (as Fabienne); La Mémoire courte (Short Memory) (de Gregorio)
1979 Je vais caquer (The Rat Race) (Leterrier)
1980 Sauve qui peut (La Vie; Slow Motion; Every Man for Himself) (Godard) (as Denise Rimbaud); Une Semaine de vacances (A Week’s Vacation) (Tavernier) (as Laurence); La Provinciale (The Girl from Lorraine) (Goretta) (as Christine)
1981 Beau-Père (Blier) (as Charlotte); Une Étrange Affaire (Granier-Deferre); L’Ombre rouge (Comoll); Le Retour de Martin Guerre (The Return of Martin Guerre) (Vigne) (as Bertrande de Roi)
1982 La Balance (The Nark) (Swain) (as Nicole); J’ai épousé une ombre (I Married a Dead Man; I Married a Shadow) (Robin Davis) (as Hélène/Patricia)
1983 Rive droit, rive gauche (Right Bank, Left Bank) (Labro) (as Sacha Vernakas); Madame Sourd (Huppert)
1984 Notre histoire (Our Story; Separate Rooms) (Blier) (as Donatienne Pouget/Marie-Therese Chatelard/Genevieve Avranche); Le Neveu de Beethoven (Beethoven’s Nephew) (Morrissey) (as Leonore); Lane di miel (Honeymoon) (Jamain) (as Cecile Carlino); Détective (Godard) (as Francoise Chenal)
1987 En Toute Innocence (Jessua) (as Catherine)
1988 Guerre Lasse (Enrico)
1989 Gioco al massacro (Damiani)
1990 The Man Inside (Roth) (as Christine); Un Weekend sur deux (Every Other Weekend) (Garcia) (as Camille Valmont); La Baule-les-pins (C’est la vie) (Kury) (as Lena)
1992 Mensonge (Lie) (Francois Margolin) (as Emma)
1993 and the Band Played On (Spottiswoode—for TV)
1994 La Machine (The Machine) (Dupeyron) (as Marie)
1995 François Truffaut: Portraits Volés (Francois Truffaut: Stolen Portraits) (Toubiana and Pascal—doc)
1996 Enfants de salaud (Bastard Brood) (Tonie Marshall) (as Sophie)
1997 Food of Love (Poliakov); Paparazzi (Berberian) (as Nicole)
1998 Si je t’aime, prends garde à toi (Beaware of My Love) (Labrun)
1999 Vénus beauté (institut) (Venus Beauty Salon) (Tonie Marshall) (as Angèle); Une liaison pornographique (A Pornographic Affair) (Fonteyne) (as Her)
2000 Selon Mathieu (Beauvois)

Publications

By BAYE: articles—

Nathalie Baye with François Truffaut in La Chambre verte

On BAYE: articles—

Films and Filming (London), December 1981.
Stars (Mariembourg), March 1992.

* * *

“I could leave a man for a film, but never a film for a man.” The comment is that of Joëlle, the continuity girl played by Nathalie Baye in Truffaut’s La Nuit américaine, and more than 20 years later it is still one of the actress’s best-remembered lines. Though such total devotion to the movies may not be true of Baye herself—“If I only lived for the cinema, I don’t think I would be able to act,” she once observed—it fairly sums up a strong aspect of her on-screen persona: level-headed, professional, dedicated to the task in hand. It is hard to imagine her staging a tantrum and storming off the set.

Though La Nuit américaine was one of Baye’s first films, her inexperience was hardly evident. The conviction with which she inhabited her role led some people—including, apparently, Billy Wilder—to imagine she really was Truffaut’s continuity girl. (Irritated at the time, Baye later realized what an involuntary compliment she had been paid.) Truffaut, whom she found sympathetic and supportive (“He’s not just in love with the movies, he loves actors”), subsequently used her in two more films—but neither the episodic L’Homme qui aimait les femmes nor the gloom of La Chambre verte offered much scope to her growing talent.

It was Bertrand Tavernier who established her on the international scene. As the Lyonnaise schoolteacher in Une Semaine de vacances, troubled by the urge to step back and take stock of her too well-ordered existence, Baye conveyed a sense of lived emotion in a performance subtly detailed without ever seeming self-conscious. Tavernier paid tribute to her “quivering inwardness . . . she confronts a scene head-on, with neither fear nor tricks.” She herself speaks of “le déclic essentiel,” the moment when identification with a part clicks into place, no longer studied but felt.

She was now ranked among the “nouvelle actrices” of French cinema, along with Isabelle Huppert, Isabelle Adjani and Miou-Miou—players for whom personal considerations of looks or prestige were subordinated to the demands of the role. Baye in any case has never aspired to glamour, or even to conventional notions of prettiness. She can look plain, at times almost ugly, then at once—as a shaft of thought or passion lights up the eyes—unexpectedly beautiful. She moves with an unobtrusive grace, her dancer’s training standing her in good stead. “Her every gesture is musical,” Tavernier noted.

Such understated qualities can invite typecasting in dutiful or victimized roles—as in undemanding material such as Goretta’s La Provinciale—and Baye in turn has sometimes tended to fall back on certain well-tried mannerisms: the tremulous smile, the hurt look in the eyes. To counter these tendencies she has consistently aimed to widen her range, favoring directors who will cast her against type and “make me do things that weren’t immediately obvious for me.”

Two films of the early 1980s helped her shatter the nice-girl image. In Daniel Vigne’s period drama Le Retour de Martin Guerre, she brought an unleashed sensuality to her scenes with Gérard Depardieu—evidently indifferent, in the joy of her rekindled passion, as to whether he is or is not her long-lost husband. Even more against type was her hooker in La Balance, Bob Swaim’s slick policier, crude and aggressive in her street-life, direct and tender in her devotion to her boyfriend as the trap closes around them both. Baye’s performance won her first César as Best Actress.

Her talent for comedy has been relatively underused. As the enigmatic focus of Bertrand Blier’s surreal farce Notre histoire, she deftly switched personae under the bemused gaze of Alain Delon. She also emerged with credit from the labyrinthine comedy of Godard’s Détective, playing the apex of an erotic triangle with Claude Brasseur and her offscreen lover at that period, the pop-singer Johnny Hallyday. Godard remains one of her favorite directors. “‘There’s often stuff in his films that irritates me, but he saw things in me that nobody had seen before. He knew how to look at me. And it’s invaluable for an actor to feel that you’re being really looked at.’”

Baye retains a strong commitment to theatre, and for a period during the late 1980s retreated entirely to the stage when her liaison with Hallyday was attracting unwelcome press attention. She returned to the screen with two strong roles in women-directed films. In La Baule-les-Pins, the third in Diane Kurys’s autobiographical sequence, she played a woman juggling the demands of daughters, a collapsing marriage, and her own love-life—poised and determined, though still vulnerable. Nicole Garcia’s Un week-end sur deux offered a challenging contrast: the role of a failed actress denied custody of her children, who kidnaps them for a wild flight across country. Baye’s Camille, with her abrupt, nervy reactions and slightly off-focus gaze, suggested a woman sliding helplessly out of touch with reality.

The mid-1990s were a difficult period for Baye, with her career seemingly losing momentum. But the end of the decade saw her back with reality.

BEATTY, Warren

Education: Attended Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois; studied drama at Stella Adler Acting School. Family: Married the actress Annette Bening, 1992, two children. Career: Had role in TV series The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis, signed abortive contract with MGM, 1959–60; had lead role in Compulsion in stock, and on Broadway in William Inge’s A Loss of Roses, 1960–61; made film debut in Elia Kazan’s Splendor in the Grass, 1961; produced first film, Bonnie and Clyde, 1967; wrote first screenplay, Shampoo, co-scripted with Robert Towne, 1975; made directorial debut with Heaven Can Wait, co-directed with Buck Henry, 1978; co-wrote, produced, directed, and acted in award-winning film Reds, 1981; co-wrote, produced, directed and acted in award-winning film Bulworth, 1998. Awards: Best Screenplay National Society of Film Critics, for Shampoo, 1975; Best Comedy Adapted from Another Medium Writers Guild of America Award, Best Motion Picture Actor—Musical/Comedy Golden Globe, for Heaven Can Wait, 1978; Best Director Academy Award, D. W. Griffith Award for Best Director, Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Motion Pictures Directors Guild of America Award, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Director, Best Director National Board of Review, Best Director—Motion Picture Golden Globe, Best Drama Written Directly for the Screen Writers Guild of America Award, for Reds, 1981; Best Actor National Board of Review, for Bugsy, 1991; Los Angeles Critics Association Best Screenplay, for Bulworth, 1998; Irving G. Thalberg Award for body of work, Motion Picture Academy, 2000. Address: JRS Productions, 555 Melrose Avenue, Los Angeles, CA 90038, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1961 Splendor in the Grass (Kazan) (as Bud Stamper); The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone (Quintero) (as Pablo di Leo)
1962 All Fall Down (Frankenheimer) (as Berry-Berry Willart)
1964 Lilith (Rossen) (as Vincent Bruce)
1965 Mickey One (Arthur Penn) (title role)
1966 Promise Her Anything (Hiller) (as Harley Rummel); Kaleidoscope (Smight) (as Barney Lincoln)
1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Arthur Penn) (as Clyde Barrow, + pr)
1969 The Only Game in Town (Stevens) (as Joe Grady)
1971 McCabe and Mrs. Miller (Altman) (as McCabe); $ (Dollars; The Heist) (Richard Brooks) (as Joe Collins)
Warren Beatty in Bulworth

1973  Year of the Woman (Hochman—doc)
1974  The Parallax View (Fakula) (as Joseph Frady)
1975  Shampoo (Ashby) (as George, + co-pr, co-sc); The Fortune (Nichols) (as Nicky)
1984  George Stevens: A Filmmaker’s Journey (Stevens, Jr.) (as himself)
1987  Ishtar (May) (as Lyle Rogers, + pr)
1991  Bugsy (Levinson) (as Benjamin “Bugsy” Siegel, + co-pr); Truth or Dare (Keshishian—doc) (as himself)
1998  Bulworth (+pr, co-sc, ro as Jay Bulworth)

Films as Director:

1978  Heaven Can Wait (co-d with Buck Henry, + pr, co-sc, ro as Joe Pendleton)
1981  Reds (+ pr, co-sc, ro as John Reed)
1990  Dick Tracy (+ pr, title role)
1998  Bulworth (+pr, co-sc, ro as Jay Bulworth)

Film as Producer:

1987  The Pick-up Artist (Toback)

Publications

By BEATTY: articles—

Interview with Curtis Lee Hanson, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), Summer 1967.
Interview with Philip Thomas and others, in Empire (London), September 1990.

On BEATTY: books—

On BEATTY: articles—

* * *

Warren Beatty has served as an inspiration for actors wishing to extend their talents to other aspects of moviemaking.

His older sister Shirley MacLaine was already a star when Beatty arrived in Hollywood. Playwright William Inge, however, discovered Beatty and arranged for him to play opposite Natalie Wood in Elia Kazan’s film version of Inge’s Splendor in the Grass. With his exceptional looks, Beatty made an impressive debut as the son of a wealthy family who is forced to abandon his girlfriend of lower social standing. Fitting into the post-James Dean wounded youth syndrome, he immediately was earmarked for success and given the highly sought-after role of gigolo to Vivien Leigh’s fading, middle-aged actress in Tennessee Williams’s The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone. His alienated youth period continued with another William Inge story, All Fall Down, in which he is a narcissistic pretty boy. In Lilith, he plays a psychiatric worker who becomes fixated upon a patient and eventually needs psychiatric help himself. Both performances are studies of brooding instability, and they displayed his ability to convey a mixture of boyish innocence and world-weary cynicism.

Beatty’s antihero persona lead him to the part of the troubled nightclub comedian in Mickey One, directed by Arthur Penn. The quirks of this character may have been too offbeat, and the film failed at the box office. Beatty reteamed with Penn for the most important role of his career: ruthless, psychotic killer Clyde Barrow in Bonnie and Clyde, which was also his first producing venture. The film was a blockbuster, one which had an immense impact on filmmaking styles, not to mention fashion. With its stylized violence, Bonnie and Clyde was on the cutting edge of its time. Its success opened up career possibilities for Beatty both in front of and behind the camera. The film made him a millionaire, and from that point onward he chose his projects slowly and with caution—but not always wisely. In McCabe and Mrs. Miller, directed by Robert Altman, he played an itinerant gambler who builds a whorehouse for his girlfriend. The moody, rambling Western was considered jumbled and sluggish by many critics and hardly was considered at all by ticket buyers, although, today, its reputation has improved.

As early as 1973, announcements appeared in the press concerning Beatty’s development of a project about American leftist writer John Reed, but that film, Reds, did not reach screens until 1981. Meanwhile, he co-produced, co-wrote, and starred in 1975’s Shampoo, a stinging satire on Southern California lifestyles, in which he is a hairstylist who tries to achieve financial security through sexual opportunism. The character also had a blend of the boy/man Beatty seemed destined to play again and again. Some understood his hairdresser to be an autobiographical rumination on his own Casanova reputation.

In 1978 Beatty was producer, co-director, co-writer, and star of Heaven Can Wait, a successful remodeling of the classic romantic comedy Here Comes Mr. Jordan. Popular with the public and lauded by critics, Heaven Can Wait was followed by Reds, which turned out to be a sprawling romantic epic with political overtones, taking John Reed (Beatty) into communism and through the Russian Revolution, as well as into a relationship with a freethinking woman. Reds allowed Beatty an opportunity to create a larger-than-life romantic character, and place that character into a setting of sociological significance—an indication of Beatty’s own inclination toward liberal politics.
Then came Ishtar. An out-of-control budget and costly delays resulted in Hollywood’s worst financial disaster since Heaven’s Gate. The flat comedy follows two untalented singer-songwriters (Beatty and Dustin Hoffman) into desert intrigue. The film was only a temporary embarrassment for Beatty, who regained box-office success three years later as Dick Tracy. By then, Beatty’s handsome face had lost some of its allure and he seems too old for the part—he’s yellow Burberry raincoat has more luster than he does in his role as the crime-fighting comic-strip hero. Beatty is much more effective as real-life gangster Benjamin “Bugsy” Siegel in Bugsy. Here is a serious, gritty character role, one which is a maturation of the troubled youths and gangsters he played so well in the 1960s.

Beatty the movie idol has not aged well. At the opening of Love Affair, Gary Shandling (playing the lawyer of Beatty’s character, football star turned television sports commentator Mike Gambril) comments on how good Gambril looks on television. This bit of script maneuvering seems meant to telegraph the idea to the viewer that, contrary to opinion, Beatty himself remains a hunk. Gambril might be a clone of Beatty, a continent-hopping celebrity who has ‘‘been with a lot of women’’ and whom the paparazzi are eager to photograph. In the course of the story Gambril meets the woman, played by Beatty’s wife Annette Bening, who will intrigue and then domesticate him—just as Bening did to Beatty in real life.

In Bugsy (which also pairs Beatty and Bening romantically) and Love Affair, the actors trade quips, which are the basis of their attraction. In Bugsy Beatty and Bening work with an intelligent script, while in Love Affair the conversation is vapid. Beatty no longer can get by on-screen only with charm and good looks. He is far better off playing character roles, as he did so well in Bugsy—and this precisely is what he does in Bulworth, a deft and biting political satire that is one of his most ambitious projects. Beatty directs, co-scripts, and stars as Jay Bulworth, a pompous, do-nothing United States senator whose guilt over his own inaptitude results in his having a nervous breakdown. He emerges as a white, middle-aged rap singer who speaks the truth regarding the reality of contemporary American politics. At the core of that truth is that politicians are neither ruled by right and wrong nor motivated by the will of the electorate. Rather, they primarily are influenced by those individuals or corporations with the most money and connections.

What is most interesting about the film is that, like Reds, it seems to reflect on Beatty’s liberal political sensibilities and concerns. Yet at the same time, Bulworth exudes a feeling of disenchantment. According to the film, Democrats and Republicans have become virtually indistinguishable. Politicians are little more than men and, in some cases, women who appear on television, look personable, and mouth rhetoric. They are media personalities, who are no different from the actor-pitchman who appears on TV, smiles brightly, and tells you that you will find happiness if only you use a certain brand of bathroom tissue. Bulworth is an audacious film, one that is loaded with bitter truths. It should be required viewing every October and November, in the weeks prior to Election Day. And given its content, combined with its creator’s own political activism dating from the 1960s, it is not surprising that Beatty briefly was considered a potential candidate in the 2000 presidential election.

—Doug Tomlinson, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg and Rob Edelman

---

BELAFONTE, Harry

Nationality: American. Born: Harold George Belafonte, Jr., in New York City, 1 March 1927. Education: Studied at Irwin Piscator’s Dramatic Workshop at the New School for Social Research, 1946–48, Actors Studio, and the American Negro Theatre. Military Service: U.S. Navy, 1943–45. Family: Married Marguerite Byrd (divorced); two daughters, Adrienne and Shari Belafonte (actress); married dancer Julie Robinson, 8 March 1957; son, David, and daughter, Gina Belafonte (actress). Career: Became a member of the American Negro Theater in New York, 1948; appeared regularly on the CBS black variety show Sugar Hill Times, 1949; first appeared on Broadway, 1953; film debut in Bright Road, 1953; recording artist with RCA, 1954–73; popularized calypso music with the release of his album Calypso, 1956; formed his own television production company, 1959; first African American to star in a television special, 1960; president, Belafonte Enterprises Inc.; became goodwill ambassador for UNICEF, 1986. Awards: Tony Award, for Almanac, 1953; Emmy Award, for Tonight with Belafonte, 1960; Grammy Awards, for We Are the World, 1985; recipient of Kennedy Center Honors, 1989; National Medal of Arts Award, 1994; New York Film Critics Circle Award for Best Supporting Actor, for Kansas City, 1996; Chairman’s Award, NAACP, 1999; numerous honorary doctorates and humanitarian awards. Address: Belafonte Enterprises Inc., 830 8th Avenue, New York, NY 10019, USA.

Films as Actor:

1953 Bright Road (Mayer) (as school principal)
1954 Carmen Jones (Preminger) (as Joe)
1957 Island in the Sun (Rossen) (as David Boyeur)
1959 The World, The Flesh, and the Devil (MacDougall) (as Ralph Burton); Olds Against Tomorrow (Wise) (as Johnny Ingram)
1970 King: A Filmed Record...Montgomery to Memphis (doc) (narrator), The Angel Levine (Kadár) (as Alexander Levine)
1972 Back and the Preacher (Poirot) (as the Preacher)
1974 Uptown Saturday Night (Poirot) (as Geechie Dan Beauford); Free to Be You & Me (Davies, Steckier) (as himself)
1981 Grambling’s White Tiger (Brown—for TV) (as Eddie Robinson)
1982 A veces miro mi vida (Rojas) (as himself)
1989 We Shall Overcome (Brown) (doc) (narrator)
1990 Eyes on the Prize II (Shearer—for TV) (doc) (as himself)
1992 The Player (Altman) (as himself)
1994 Prêt-à-Porter (Ready to Wear) (Altman) (as himself)
1995 White Man’s Burden (Nakano) (as Thaddeus Thomas)
1996 Jazz ’34 (Robert Altman’s Jazz ’34) (Altman) (as narrator); Danny Kaye: A Legacy of Laughter (Marty—for TV) (doc) (as himself); Kansas City (Altman) (as Seldom Seen)
1999 Swing Vote (Anspaugh—for TV) (as Will)

Films as Producer:

1984 Beat Street
1995 The Affair (for TV)
2000 Parting the Waters (miniseries—for TV)
Harry Belafonte, born in Harlem to a Jamaican mother and a father from Martinique, is known as the “consummate entertainer,” successful in the realms of theater, motion pictures, and the recording industry. A human rights activist, Belafonte has used his celebrity to cast a spotlight on humanitarian causes around the world, including the Civil Rights struggle of African Americans, the fight against apartheid in South Africa, and UNICEF. In motion pictures he is probably best known for his acting talents, which, combined with his physique, good looks, and voice, made him Hollywood’s first African American male sex symbol.

Belafonte’s first appeared in Bright Road (1953) alongside Dorothy Dandridge. He starred with her again the next year in Carmen Jones, an all-black version of George Bizet’s opera, Carmen. Belafonte’s popularity with female audiences crossed color lines, and Hollywood exploited it by frequently casting him in films that featured interracial romance, such as the controversial Island in the Sun. Because such stereotyping limited his acting possibilities, Belafonte turned to the recording industry, singing calypso music, a popular folk style in the Caribbean. His recordings of such songs as “Matilda” and what would become his signature song, “Banana Boat Song,” resulted in an American obsession with the music form.

Publications

By BELAFONTE: articles-

Interview in Interview (New York), September 1996.

On BELAFONTE: books-

On BELAFONTE: articles-

* * *
His album Calypso became the first solo album to sell over a million copies.

In 1960 Belafonte starred in a television special, becoming the first African American to do so. He did not work in motion pictures during the decade, dedicating his energies to the Civil Rights Movement. During the African American struggle for social, political, and economic equality, Belafonte helped raise funds for the Montgomery Bus Boycott, the Freedom Riders and voter registration drives, and helped establish the Southern Free Theater in Mississippi. He served on the board of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and chaired the Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Fund. He also worked as an unofficial liason between the Kennedy Administration and leaders of the Movement. In 1961, he was appointed to the advisory committee of the Peace Corps.

Belafonte returned to motion pictures during the 1970s, appearing in such films as Buck and the Preacher (1971) and Uptown Saturday Night (1974) with comedian Bill Cosby. During this period, he continued his singing career, recording albums and performing, often for the benefit of numerous charities. In 1984 he became a film producer, bringing to the screen one of the first hip-hop inspired feature films, Beat Street. Belafonte continued his multifaceted career in the 1980s and 1990s. In 1985 he developed the idea for what was to become the “We Are the World Project,” which brought together popular music artists such as Michael Jackson, Bob Dylan, and Bruce Springsteen to record a single that raised over $70 million for famine relief in Africa. In 1986 he was named goodwill ambassador for UNICEF, and in 1990 served as the chair for the committee that welcomed Nelson Mandela to the United States. He received numerous awards for his humanitarian efforts.

In the 1990s Belafonte appeared regularly in the films of Robert Altman. His cameo appearances in Prêt-à-Porter and The Player allowed him to poke fun at his image as the suave black celebrity, but he played a far more substantive role in Kansas City (1996). As Seldom Seen he was a menacing gangster figure lurking in the background of the 1930s Kansas City jazz scene. The role earned him a best supporting actor award from the New York Film Critics Circle.

—Frances Gateward

BELMONDO, Jean-Paul

—Jean-Paul Belmondo in Pierrot le Fou.

Films as Actor:

1955 Molière (Tildian)
1956 Dimanche nous volerons
1957 A pied, à cheval et en voiture (Delbez) (as Venin)
1958 Sois belle et tais-toi (Blonde for Danger; Just Another Pretty Face) (Marc Allégret) (as Pierrot); Drôle de dimanche (Marc Allégret) (as Patrick); Les Tucheurs (Youthful Sinners; The Cheaters) (Carné) (as Lou); Charlotte et son Jules (Goddard) (as Jean, the old boyfriend); Les Copains du dimanche (Aisner) (as Trebois)
1959 Mademoiselle Ange (Ein Engel auf Erden; Angel on Earth) (von Radvanyi); A bout de souffle (Breathless) (Goddard) (as Michel Poiccard); A double tour (Web of Passion; Leda; A Doppia mandata) (Chabrol) (as Laszlo Kovacs)
1960 Classe tous risques (The Big Risk) (Sautet) (as Eric Stark); Les Distractions (Trapped by Fear) (Dupont) (as Paul); “L’Adultrière” (“Adultery”) ep. of La Française et l’amour (Love and the Frenchwoman) (Verneuil) (as Gil); Lettre di una novizia (Letter from a Novice; Rita) (Lattuada) (as Giuliano Verdi); Moderato cantabile (Seven Days . . . Seven Nights) (Brook) (as Chauvin)
1961 La ciociara (Two Women) (de Sica) (as Michele); La violenza (The Love Makers) (Bolognini) (as Amerigo Casamonti); Léon Morin, prêtre (Leon Morin, Priest; The Forgiven Sinner) (Melville); Une Femme est une femme (A Woman Is a Woman) (Goddard) (as Alfred Lubitsch); “Lauzun” ep. of Amours célèbres (Boisrond); Un Nommé La Rocca (Jean Becker)

1962 Cartouche (Swords of Blood) (de Broca) (title role); Un Singe en hiver (It's Hot in Hell; A Monkey in Winter) (Verneuil) (as Gabriel Fouquet); I Don Giovanni della Costa Azzurra (Sala); L'Aïné des Ferchaux (Magnet of Doom) (Melville) (as Michel Maudet); Un Couer gros comme ca (The Winner) (Reichenbach)

1963 Le Doulas (The Fingerman; Doulas—The Fingerman) (Melville) (as Silien); Mare matte (Castellani); Il giorno più corto (The Shortest Day) (Corbucci); Dragées au poivre (Sweet and Sour) (Baratier) (as Raymond); Cent mille dollars au soleil (Greed in the Sun) (Verneuil) (as Rocco)

1964 Peau de banane (Banana Peel) (Michel) (as Marcel Ophüls); L'Homme de Rio (That Man from Rio) (de Broca) (as Adrien Dufourquet); Enchappement libre (Backfire) (Jean Becker); La Chasse à l'homme (The Gentle Art of Seduction; Male Hunt; Scappamento Aperito) (Molinaro) (as Fernand); Weekend à Zayacooté (Weekend at Dunkirk) (Verneuil) (as Sgt. Julien Maillat)

1965 Par un beau matin d'été (Crime on a Summer Morning) (Deray); Les Tribulations d'un chinois en Chine (Up to His Ears; Chinese Adventures in China) (de Broca) (as Arthur Lemperereur); Pierrot le fou (Peter the Crazy) (Godard) (as Ferdinand Griffon, “Pierrot”)

1966 Paris brûle-t-il (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Morandat); Tendre voyou (Tender Scoundrel) (Jean Becker) (as Tony Marechal)

1967 Le Voleur (The Thief of Paris) (Malle) (as Georges Randa); La Bande à Bébel (Gérard); Casino Royale (Huston and others) (as French Legionnaire)

1968 Ho! (Enrico) (title role)

1969 Le Cerveau (The Brain) (Oury) (as Arthur); La Sirène du Mississippi (Mississippi Mermaid) (Truffaut) (as Louis Maha); Un Homme qui me plait (Love Is a Funny Thing; Again a Love Story; Un Tipo chi mi place) (Lelouch) (as Henri); Dieu a choisi Paris (Proutaud and Arthuys)

1970 Borsalino (Deray) (as François Capella)

1971 Les Mariés de l’an II (The Scoundrel) (Rappeneau) (as Nicholas Philabert); Le Casse (The Burglars) (Verneuil) (as Asad)

1972 Docteur Popaul (Scoundrel in White; High Heels) (Chabrol) (as Paul Simay); La Scoumoune (Giovanni) (as Borgo)

1973 L’Héritier (The Inheritor) (Labro) (as Barthelmy Cordell)

1974 Le Magnifique (How to Destroy the Reputation of the Greatest Secret Agent . . . The Magnificent One) (de Broca) (as Bob Saint-Clair/François Merlin); Stavisky (Resnais) (title role)

1975 Peur sur la ville (The Night Caller; Fear over the City) (Verneuil) (as Commissioner Jean Letellier); L’Incorrigible (The Incorrigible) (de Broca) (as Victor)

1976 Le corps de mon ennemi (Verneuil) (as François Leclerc, + pr, co-sc); L’Alpaquier (Labro) (as Roger Pilard/L’Alpaquier)

1977 L’Animal (The Animal; Stuntwoman) (Zidi) (as Mike Gaucher/ Bruno Ferrari)

1979 Flic ou voyou (Lautner) (as Commissioner Stanislas Borowitz/Angelo Crutti)

1980 Le Guignolo (Lautner) (as Alain Dupre); I piccioni di Piazza San Marco; The Hunter (Will Get You) (Labro) (title role)

1981 Le Professionnel (Lautner) (as Joss Baumont)

1982 L’As des as (Ace of Aces; The Super Ace) (Oury) (as Joe Cavailer, + pr)

1983 Les Morfalous (The Vultures) (Verneuil) (as Pierre Augagneur); Le Marginal (The Outsider) (Deray) (as Commissioner Philippe Jordan)

1984 Joyeuses Pâques (Happy Easter) (Lautner) (as Stephane Margelle); The Swashbuckler (The Scarlet Buccaneer) (Rappeneau)

1985 Hold-Up (Arcady) (as Grimm)

1987 Le Solitaire (Deray) (as Commissioner Stan Jalard); L’Itinéraire d’un enfant gâté (Lelouch) (as Sam Lion)

1990 Fleur de Rubis (Mocky)

1992 L’Inconnu dans al Maison (Stranger in the House) (Lautner) (as Loursat, + pr)

1995 Les Mixérables (Lelouch) (as Jean Valjean/Roger Fortin/Henri Fortin); Les Cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Actor for a Day)

1996 Desire (Muriat) (title role)

1998 Une chance sur deux (Half a Chance) (Leconte) (as Léo Brascac)

1999 Peut-être (Klapisch) (as Ako)

2000 Les Acteurs (Actors) (Blier) (as himself); Amazone (de Broca) (as Edouard)

Publications

By BELMONDO: book—

By BELMONDO: articles—

Interview with Rex Reed, in Herald Tribune (New York), 17 October 1965.
Unifrance Film (Paris), no. 6, 1981.

On BELMONDO: books—

On BELMONDO: articles—

Time (New York), 10 July 1964.
Unifrance Film (Paris), No. 10, 1982.
Film Français (Paris), 5 and 26 November 1982.
Privat, Pascal, “France’s War of the Noses; Dueling Cyranos of Stage and Screen,” in Newsweek (New York), 7 May 1990.
Monova, Penka, “Groznite me ostarjavat krasivo,” in Kino (Sophia), April-May 1993.
Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1993.

When Jean-Paul Belmondo entered films in the mid-1950s, his expressive face, with thick lips, the broken nose of a boxer, and the mocking gaze of a rascal, did not correspond to the conception of the traditional young film hero/lover. He received his first real on-screen opportunity only with the coming of the French New Wave, when he began playing defiant and discontented young men who instinctively rebelled against their environment and society’s status quo. Such was his role in Chabrol’s A double tour (in which he substituted for an ailing Jean-Claude Brialy), but this film did not receive a great deal of attention. However, it was his role in Godard’s A bout de souffle, made in the same year—1959, a watershed for the French New Wave—which won him unexpected success from the public and the critics and made him famous all over the world. The hero of the film, Michel Poiccard, is a car thief, living from hand to mouth, who finally becomes a murderer and pays with his life for his recklessness and irresponsibility. The success of A bout de souffle even resulted in a wave of “Belmondism” in the hipster circles of Paris, manifesting itself in a particular style of behavior, clothing, and expression.

Previously, Godard had directed Belmondo in an interesting short-length study, Charlotte et son Jules, and they worked together again in Une Femme est une femme and, more importantly, Pierrot le fou. To express his anarchistic conception of modern life, Godard, rejecting everything conventional and static, had found in Belmondo the ideal screen hero. In several other films, the actor replaved this type of rough, isolated (and ultimately ill-fated) character. He had similarly motivated roles in Becker’s Un Nommé La Rocca, while in Verneuil’s Un Singe en hiver, where Belmondo partnered with Jean Gabin, the dramatic situations were alternated with comic elements. He gathered further experience in Italy where he made films under the direction of Lattuada (Lettere di una novitá), de Sica (La ciociara), and Bolognini (La viaccia). Almost as consequential to his work with Godard were the films he made with Jean-Pierre Melville, including Léon Morin, prêtre, Le Deux, and L’Aîné des Ferchaux.

But thereafter, Belmondo began breaking off his connection to the authors of the New Wave. After the Louis Malle black comedy Le Voleur, and especially after the ambitious but unsuccessful attempt by Alain Resnais to revive in film the character of a famous speculator and crook from the 1930s—Stavisky—Belmondo began appearing almost exclusively in commercially oriented features. His films offered few artistic demands, but nevertheless were widely popular and filled the cinemas. Among these early commercial pictures were Belmondo’s L’Homme de Rio and Les Tribulations d’un chinois en Chine, films in which Belmondo proved not only his dramatic talent but also his physical dexterity. He followed up these successful works with roles as a dauntless secret agent in Le Magnifique and a brilliant crook in L’Incorrigible, also directed by de Broca.

Belmondo appeared in a series of eight films made with Verneuil, most of which were written with him in mind. The director’s ambition was, above all, to entertain audiences, offering up a combination of spectacle and charismatic star performances. A typical Verneuil-Belmondo feature is the adventure story of truck drivers in the Sahara, Cent mille dollars au soleil, in which he plays the role of Rocco, a criminal who attempts to double-cross his colleagues. This picture won the Cannes Prize of Golden Ticket ex aequo, awarded for the first time by the Union of the French Cinema Owners. The film Weekend à Zuydcoote followed, adapted from the novel of Robert Merle, in which the tragic events near Dunkirk from the beginning of World War II are mirrored via the fate of several French soldiers. Belmondo played one of them, a fighter who is at once easygoing and resolute. He co-starred with Omar Sharif in the next film by Verneuil, Le Casse, as a member of a gang of jewel thieves. As a commissar-in-chief of the Paris police in Peur sur la ville, he again had the opportunity to give an athletic and acrobatic performance. Another noteworthy Belmondo-Verneuil collaboration is Les Morfalous, an adventure story of death and greed during the war in Tunisia.

Belmondo has also worked with other directors in recent years. In Lautner’s Flic ou voyou, he appeared in the role of a nonconformist policeman who sets out to rid Nice of gangsterism and corruption. In this case, however, the dialogue and humor were more prominent than the action. He played a charming, aging adventurer in subsequent films by Lautner, Le Guignolo and Le Professionnel, and another police commissar in Deray’s Le Marginal. After decades of appearing in such genre fare, Belmondo had his most challenging, highest-profile role since the 1960s in Lelouch’s Les Misérables, a provocative drama inspired by the Victor Hugo classic. He played Henri Fortin, an uneducated ex-pugilist who befriends an intellectual Jewish family escaping the Nazis during World War II. Through them, he learns the story of Jean Valjean, with the film eventually becoming a meditation on the essence of Hugo’s story. One only can ponder the course of Belmundo’s career had he, earlier on, chosen to accept roles in films as ambitious as Les Misérables.

—Karel Tabery, updated by Rob Edelman

BENIGNI, Roberto

Nationality: Italian. Born: Arrezo, Tuscany, 27 October 1952. Family: Married the actress Nicoletta Braschi, 1991. Career: At age 10 or 11, member of troubadour act in rural Tuscany that improvised songs and poetry; also was a circus clown for a short time; late 1960s—moved to Rome and acted in underground experimental theater there; 1976—film debut in adaptation of “Cioni Mario” monologue, Berlinguer ti volgio bene; 1982—directing debut with Tu mi turbi; live TV monologue critical of Pope John Paul II brought widespread notoriety; 1984—met Jim Jarmusch at a film festival near Roberto Benigni (center) with Nicoletta Braschi and Giorgio Cantarini in Life in Beautiful

Awards:
- Italian Golden Grail for Best Actor, for Il minestrone, 1980;
- Nastri d’Argento Award for Best Actor, for Down by Law, 1986;
- David Di Donatello Award for Best Actor, for Il piccolo diavolo, 1988; Academy Award for Best Actor for La Vita E Bella, 1998.

Address: Via Traversa 44, Vergaglio, Prato, Italy.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Berlinguer ti volgio bene</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
<td>as Cioni Mario, + co-sc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Chiedo asilo</td>
<td>Ferreri</td>
<td>as Roberto, + co-sc</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Clair de femme</td>
<td>Costa-Gavras</td>
<td>as upholsterer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>La Luna</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
<td>as upholsterer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Il minestrone</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Il Pap’Occhio</td>
<td>Arbore</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Tut苯igni (All Benigni)</td>
<td>Bertolucci</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Down by Law</td>
<td>Jarmusch</td>
<td>as Roberto</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>La Voce della Luna</td>
<td>Fellini</td>
<td>as Ivo Salvini</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>“Rome” ep. of Night on Earth</td>
<td>Jarmusch</td>
<td>as Gino, the taxi driver</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Son of the Pink Panther</td>
<td>Edwards</td>
<td>as Jacques Gambrini/</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Jacques Clouseau, Jr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Astérix et Obélix contre César</td>
<td>Zidi</td>
<td>as Lucius Detritus</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Films as Actor and Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Tu mi turbi</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Non ci resta che piangere</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Saverio, co-d with Massimo Troisi)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Il piccolo diavolo</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Giuditta, + co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Johnny Stocchino (Johnny Toothpick)*</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Dante/Johnny Stocchino, + co-sc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Il mostro</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Loris, + co-sc, co-pr)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>La Vita E Bella (Life is Beautiful)*</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Guido, + co-sc)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Publications

By BENIGNI: books—

By BENIGNI: articles—

Interview with J. Rood, in Skoop (Amsterdam), June/July 1980.

Interview with A. Samueli, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1990.

“Mille et une émotions,” in Skoop (Paris), May 1990.

Interview with Tom Waits, in Interview (New York), January 1993.

On BENIGNI: articles—

Filmography in Segnocinema (Vincenza, Italy), January/February 1992.

* * * *

Screen comedians seem to be overly burdened with comparisons to past comedic giants. In a relatively short career to date, Roberto Benigni—the most popular comic talent in Italy in the late 20th century—has been compared to more than his share, with the list ranging from the inevitable (Toto) to the obvious (Chaplin, Keaton, Laurel and Hardy, Harpo and Chico Marx) to the seriously misguided (Woody Allen, Lenny Bruce, Jim Carrey). Clichéd though it may be, Benigni is a unique comic genius whose variety of talents stem from a most unusual apprenticeship into entertainment, and conjure up such a wellspring of comparisons.

Benigni was born and raised in poverty in a small Tuscan village. His gift for improvisation was nurtured early on (age 10 or 11) with his immersion into the Italian tradition of improvised song and poetry through a sort of troubadour act that traveled rural Tuscany. After another formative experience during the several months he spent as a circus clown, Benigni’s vocation was cemented when at about age 16 he leaped up on a platform in the town square of Prato (in Tuscany, near Florence) and, pretending to be a political candidate, gave a “speech” that was greeted with hearty laughter from the crowd that filled the square. In the audience was the director of an avant-garde theater company, who persuaded Benigni to move to Rome and join his company. In Rome, Benigni worked in the theater, television, and film throughout the 1970s and early 1980s, achieving initial success through monologues, particularly one called “Cioni Mario” about a sex-obsessed man from his hometown who never has sex, but thinks and talks of nothing else. This was adapted by Giuseppe Bertolucci in 1976 as Berlinguer ti volglio bene, Benigni’s film debut; later Bertolucci would adapt another smash stage show, Tuttobenigni. Benigni’s initial appearances in features were in minor roles but for major directors: Marco Ferreri’s Chiedo asilo, Costa-Gavras’s Clair de femme, and Bernardo Bertolucci’s La Luna. He made a very early move into directing—forced to, he says, because of the lack of Italian directors able to do comedy—debuting in 1982 with Tu mi turbi, but received accolades for his second directing effort, Non ci resta che piangere. Co-directed with co-star Massimo Troisi, this delightful film has the two stars time-traveling to 1492 Italy where they attempt to cash in on their 20th century foreknowledge with comic results.

During this period, Benigni developed his signature persona, building off a body well-suited to physical comedy—wild hair, receding, creating a halo head; tall with gangling limbs accentuated by plain suits, worn one size too large, flopping about; and a most expressive comic face, highlighted by an impish grin. His characters are generally down-to-earth urban survivors, relying on their wits, motormouths, and low-level scams to get by, often remaining amazingly ignorant of the mayhem around them caused either directly or indirectly by their actions or inactions.

A chance meeting at an Italian film festival led Jim Jarmusch to cast Benigni in 1986’s Down by Law, his U.S. debut. The comic nearly stole the film as an Italian tourist—thrown into a New Orleans jail cell occupied by two deadbeats (John Lurie and Tom Waits)—who knows little English but tries to engage the others in conversation (Benigni himself knew little English at the beginning of the film’s production). Even better was his second film for Jarmusch, Night on Earth, where his gift for monologue and improvisation shine as the taxi driver in the “Rome” episode who confesses his sex life to a priest—pumpkins, sheep, and sister-in-law, all. The initial scene in the episode where Benigni drives around Rome keeping himself (and the audience) amused with his banter is classic. In Italy he achieved superstar status in the late 1980s and early 1990s through three consecutive box-office blockbusters: Il piccolo diavolo, with co-star Walter Matthau as a priest whose life is made chaotic by Benigni’s devil; Johnny Stecchino, where a bus driver is mistaken for a Mafia boss to comic effect, with Benigni enacting both roles, the former much more effectively than the latter; and Il mostro, his best film to date, another case of mistaken identity in which Benigni’s witless errand boy Loris is suspected, through a hilarious sequence of misinterpreted police videotape, of being a mass murderer.

Along the way, Benigni was cast against type in Federico Fellini’s final film, La Voce della Luna, which has yet to be released in the United States. Benigni has, however, become a favorite of the American art-house crowd through his Jarmusch films and his self-directed efforts. Such successes led to his ill-fated debut in a major U.S. film as Jacques Clouseau’s son in the box-office failure, Son of the Pink Panther, where his best efforts are undermined by an inferior script (his “Wasn’t that fun!” at the end is a truly embarrassing line).

Benigni remains immensely popular in Italy, evidenced by the huge crowds that attended his mock political rallies in 1995 and 1996, where he skewered one of his favorite targets—politicians. One would hope that in the future his great talent could be exposed to a larger North American audience—perhaps through a collaboration with an American director, given Benigni’s self-acknowledged limitations in that area. In any event, there is no doubt that Benigni will in the not-too-distant future be added to the pantheon of comedic giants to which rising film comedians are compared.

—David E. Salamie

BENING, Annette

Films as Actress:

1986 Manhunt for Claude Dallas (London—for TV) (as Ann Tillman)
1988 Hostage (Against Her Will) (Levin—for TV) (as Jill); The Great Outdoors (Deutch) (as Kate)
1989 Valmont (Forman) (as Merteuil)
1990 The Grifters (Frears) (as Myra Langtry); Postcards from the Edge (Nichols) (as Evelyn Ames)
1991 Bugsy (Levinson) (as Virginia Hill); Regarding Henry (Nichols) (as Sarah); Guilty by Suspicion (Winkler) (as Ruth Merrill)
1994 Love Affair (Caron) (as Terry McKay)
1995 The American President (Reiner) (as Sydney Ellen Wade); Richard III (Loncraine) (as Queen Elizabeth)
1996 Mars Attacks! (Burton) (as Barbara Land)
1998 The Siege (Zwick) (as Elise Kraft/Sharon Bridger)
1999 Forever Hollywood (Glassman and McCarthy) (as herself); American Beauty (Mendes) (as Carolyn Burnham); In Dreams (Jordan) (as Claire Cooper)
2000 What Planet Are You From? (Nichols) (as Susan)

Publications

By BENING: articles—

On BENING: articles—

* * *

Referred to as “the thinking man’s sex symbol,” Annette Bening has firmly established herself as one of Hollywood’s most talented and most professional actresses. In such roles as Myra Langtry in The Grifters, Virginia Hill in Bugsy, Sydney Wade in The American President and Carolyn Burnham in American Beauty (four very different roles), she has repeatedly played strong intelligent women who just happen to be beautiful. But perhaps the role that has made her most familiar to the American public is as the girlfriend-then-wife of Hollywood’s most famous former lothario, Warren Beatty, with whom she has had four children.

After her film debut as Dan Aykroyd’s sex-starved wife in the forgettable The Great Outdoors (“I tried to pick my projects more carefully after that,” she says), Bening auditioned for a role as a courtesan in director Stephen Frears’s film version of Choderlos de Laclos’s 1782 novel Les Liaisons Dangereuses. Bening didn’t get the role in Frears’s Dangerous Liaisons, which starred Glenn Close, John Malkovich, and Michelle Pfeiffer, and which went on to garner an Oscar nomination for Best Film of 1988 and a Best Actress nomination for Close’s portrayal of the wicked manipulative Marquise de Merteuil. But Bening played the same role in 1989’s Valmont, director Milos Forman’s version of the same story. While interesting, Forman’s film and Bening’s performance suffered in comparison, and audiences already knew the story from the previous film, so Valmont fared poorly.

Ironically, Frears was so impressed by Bening’s performance in Valmont that he hired her to play one of the leads in his next film, 1990’s The Grifters—the role that marked the turning point in Bening’s film career. This contemporary film noir classic contains three outstanding performances: Anjelica Huston plays Lily Dillon, a hard-as-nails con artist with platinum blond hair who works for a big-time bookie placing huge last-minute bets at racetracks to change the odds. John Cusack plays Roy Dillon, the son Lily hasn’t seen in eight years, who has the innocent face to occasionally get away with penny-ante swindles but lacks the killer instinct for anything more. And Bening plays Myra Langtry, a gold digger with a killer smile, spiky hair, and leopard-skin miniskirts, who uses her body as a Gold Card when she’s short of cash, and who is hoping to use Roy to get back into the big time. All three are smart enough to get money from people using their brains rather than brawn, and stupid enough to think there won’t be any consequences. Lily and Myra meet in Roy’s hospital room after he is beaten because of one of his scams and, as this odd triangle of amoral grifters spins out of control to the film’s grim end, all three performances remain absolutely riveting.

The New York Times said Bening “is absolutely right as a bright-eyed, giggly, amoral young woman who has possibly never had a generous or spontaneous thought in her life. [She] has something of the angelic looks of Michelle Pfeiffer and the comic style and low-down sexiness of Kathleen Turner. It is a terrific combination.”

Bening was nominated for a Best Supporting Actress Oscar and was named Best Supporting Actress by the National Board of Review.

Bening made three films in 1991, the well-acted-but-familiar Guilty by Suspicion, the hard-to-believe Regarding Henry, and the film that would forever change her personal life, the superb Bugsy. Bugsy tells the story of Benjamin Siegel, the 1940s gangster who invented modern-day Las Vegas beginning with one casino, the Flamingo—which was also the nickname of his long-legged girlfriend, Virginia Hill. Producer Beatty wanted Bening as his leading lady after seeing her in The Grifters, saying “What drew me to her onscreen was her energetic intelligence and refusal to rely on her good looks.”

The resultant film is as much a love story as it is a gangster film, with beautifully delivered dialogue and a palpable chemistry between the two leads. Bening’s performance is complex: sexy and smart, tough and vulnerable, in love yet double-crossing, an independent kept woman.

The Washington Post called Beatty’s decision to have children with and marry Bening “the watershed moment in the history of American civilization.” Bening’s decision to bear children at the height of her career, at an age when most actresses are in their prime, forced her to turn down a number of roles that otherwise would have been hers, including Catwoman in Batman Returns and the female leads in Disclosure and What Dreams May Come. According to Bening, “Being a good parent doesn’t just happen. I really enjoy taking my daughter to school, getting to know the teachers. If I was doing a movie I couldn’t do that.”

Between children Bening played several roles, most notably in The American President and American Beauty. In the former she plays environmental lobbyist Sydney Wade, who is wooed by widower President Andrew Shepherd (Michael Douglas). Here Bening plays an old-fashioned romantic lead, one without a sinister side, and she shows a light comic touch delivering Aaron Sorkin’s zinger-filled dialogue. Director Rob Reiner said of the role, “She had to be formidable. She had to project a sense of intelligence, sex appeal, so he would be attracted to her fairly quickly.’’

In American Beauty, Bening plays Carolyn Burnham, married to Lester Burnham (Kevin Spacey), who is going through the midlife crisis to end all midlife crises. The material may be familiar; it is the specificity of the characters, as written and as performed, that raises this film to award-worthy levels. Carolyn is a real estate agent who undergoes life changes in reaction to her husband’s, including an energetic affair with a rival real estate agent. As The New York Times said, “Ms. Bening is scathingly funny, and also quite graceful, as a walking monument to despicable values.’’ As her film career continues to evolve, it is easy to understand what attracts movie audiences to this outstanding actress.

—Bob Sullivan

BENNETT, Joan

Films as Actress:

1915 The Valley of Decision (Berger) (as an “unborn soul’’)
1923 The Eternal City (Fitzmaurice) (bit role)
1928 Power (Higgin) (as waitress)
1929 The Divine Lady (Lloyd) (as an extra); Bulldog Drummond (F. Richard Jones) (as Phyllis Benton); Three Live Ghosts (Freeland) (as Rose Gordon); Disraeli (Alfred E. Green) (as Lady Clarissa Pevensey); The Mississippi Gambler (Barker) (as Lucy Blackburn)
1930 Puttin’ on the Ritz (Sloman) (as Dolores Fenton); Crazy That Way (MacFadden) (as Ann Jordan); Moby Dick (Lloyd Bacon) (as Faith); Maybe It’s Love (Wellman) (as Nan Sheffield); Scotland Yard (Detective Clive, Bart) (William K. Howard) (as Xandra)
1931 Many a Slip (Vin Moore) (as Pat Coster); Doctors’ Wives (Borzage) (as Nina Wyndram); Hush Money (Lanfield) (as Janet Gordon)
1932 She Wanted a Millionaire (Blystone) (as Jane Miller); Careless Lady (MacKenna) (as Sally Brown/Mrs. Illington); The Trial of Vivienne Ware (William K. Howard) (title role); Weekends Only (Crosland) (as Venetia Carr); Wild Girl (Salomy Jane) (Walsh) (as Salomy Jane Clay); Me and My Gal (Pier 13) (Walsh) (as Helen Riley)
1933 Arizona to Broadway (Tinling) (as Lynn Martin); Little Women (Cukor) (as Amy)
1934 The Pursuit of Happiness (Hall) (as Prudence Kirkland)
1935 The Man Who Reclaimed His Head (Ludwig) (as Adele Verin); Mississippi (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Lucy Rumford); Private Worlds (La Cava) (as Sally MacGregor); Two for Tonight (Tuttle) (as Bobbie Lockwood); She Couldn’t Take It (Woman Tamer) (Garnett) (as Carole Van Dyke); The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo (Roberts) (as Helen Berkeley)
1936 Thirteen Hours by Air (Leisen) (as Felice Rollins); Big Brown Eyes (Walsh) (as Eve Fallon); Two in a Crowd (Alfred E. Green) (as Julia Wayne); Wedding Present (Wallace) (as Monica “Rusty” Fleming)
1937 Vogues of 1938 (Walter Wanger’s Vogues of 1938; All This and Glamour Too) (Cummings) (as Wendy Van Klettering)
Joan Bennett, the youngest of the three acting daughters of prominent stage and screen star Richard Bennett, was the last of the sisters to enter films seriously, but she had the longest and, in retrospect, the most meaningful career of any of her family. Joan, like Constance and Barbara, was a gorgeous woman, slender and blond, with dramatic eyes. She acted in numerous films during the 1930s, many of which were important, such as Disraeli and Little Women, but none of them was particularly noteworthy for her participation. It was not until the late 1930s when she dyed her hair dark brown that Bennett became more than just another beautiful Hollywood blond and began to have significant impact on films. She frequently played a sultry femme fatale in her new image, outstandingly beautiful but destructive. In her two most highly regarded films, The Woman in the Window and Scarlet Street, both directed by Fritz Lang, she displayed a cool, pernicious character, the antithesis of the mild-mannered, unsophisticated common man played by Edward G. Robinson.

In these two films, as well as others such as Jean Renoir’s The Woman on the Beach, Bennett was able to appear beautifully innocent and vulnerable on the surface, while hiding a stony evilness on the inside. Lang, and others, have expressed great admiration for Bennett’s contributions to her films of this period, and some critics have called her the epitome of the film noir heroine.

Yet, despite her success in dramatic roles, Bennett also acted successfully in more sympathetic comedy roles. At age 40, and still a very beautiful, young-looking woman, she was very charming in the box-office success Father of the Bride, portraying Spencer Tracy’s wife and Elizabeth Taylor’s mother. Unlike many other beautiful actresses, Bennett decided to begin playing “mothers” and older parts before she actually needed to. She also took chances in her career and varied her roles, dividing her time among costume epics, melodramas, and tearjerkers such as Max Ophüls’s The Reckless Moment and Douglas Sirk’s There’s Always Tomorrow. In the latter film, Bennett played a boring housewife married to Fred MacMurray who feels stifled by her presence and that of their children and contemplates leaving them for a former sweetheart.

Bennett’s career flourished in the 1940s not only because of her change of hair color but also because of her marriage to the prominent producer Walter Wanger. Wanger guided her career and can take much of the credit for the powerful roles which she accepted. He produced many of the films in which she appeared during their marriage, and provided her with some of the outstanding European directors who were working in Hollywood during that period. They divorced relatively quietly in 1965, but their relationship created international headlines in 1951 when Wanger shot Bennett’s agent Jennings Lang, purportedly out of jealousy; Wanger went briefly to prison. By 1956 Bennett had virtually retired from films and thereafter confined herself to occasional theater and television work. From the mid-1950s on, her most prominent role was as one of the main

Publications

By BENNETT: books—

How to Be Attractive, New York, 1943.
The Bennett Playbill, with Lois Kibbee, New York, 1970.

On BENNETT: articles—

106 characters of the very popular supernatural television soap opera, Dark Shadows, the only long-running daytime serial in history to spawn both a film, House of Dark Shadows (which Bennett also starred in), and successful rerun engagement (as well as a short-lived 1991 prime-time reprisal, also called Dark Shadows, which debuted on January 13, a little over one month after Bennett died).

—Patricia King Hanson

BERGEN, Candice

Films as Actress:

1947 Unusual Occupations (Brandt) (as herself [uncredited infant role])
1966 The Group (Lumet) (as Lakey Eastlake); The Sand Pebbles (Wise) (as Shirley Eckert)
1967 The Day the Fish Came Out (Cacoyannis) (as Electra); Live for Life (Vivre pour Vivre) (Lelouch) (as Candice); Flash O2 (short) (Mathayal) (as herself)
1968 The Magus (Green) (as Lily/Julie)
1970 The Adventurers (Gilbert) (as Sue Ann Daley); Getting Straight (Rush) (as Jan); Soldier Blue (Nelson) (as Cresta Marybelle Lee)
1971 The Hunting Party (Medford) (as Melissa Ruger); Carnal Knowledge (Nichols) (as Susan); T. R. Baskin (Date with a Lonely Girl) (Ross) (title role)
1974 11 Harrowhouse (Anything for Love) (Avakian) (as Maren)
1975 Bite the Bullet (Brooks) (as Miss Jones); The Wind and the Lion (Milius) (as Eden Pedecaris)
1977 The Domino Principle (The Domino Killings) (Kramer) (as Ellie Tucker)
1978 The End of the World in Our Usual Bed in a Night Full of Rain (La fine del mondo in una notte piena di pioggia) (Wertmuller) (as Lizzy); Oliver’s Story (Korty) (as Marcie Bonwit)
1979 Starting Over (Pakula) (as Jessica Potter)
1981 Rich and Famous (Cukor) (as Merry Noel Blake)
1982 Gandhi (Attenborough) (as Margaret Bourke-White)
1984 2010 (2010: The Year We Make Contact) (Hyams) (as voice of SAL 9000)
1985 Stick (Reynolds) (as Kyle McLaren); Arthur the King (Merlin and the Sword) (Donner—for TV) (as Morgan Le Fey); Murder: By Reason of Insanity (also known as My Sweet Victim) (Page—for TV) (as Ewa Berwid); Hollywood Wives (Day—mini, for TV) (as Elaine Coni)
1987 Mayflower Madam (Antonio—for TV) (as Sydney Biddle Barrows)
1995 Who Is Henry Jaglom? (doc) (Rubin and Workman) (as herself)
1996 Mary and Tim (Jordan—for TV) (as Mary Horton) (+ co-exec pr); Belly Talkers (doc) (Luckow) (interviewee)

Publications

By BERGEN: books—

Knock Wood (autobiography), New York, 1984.

By BERGEN: articles—

On BERGEN: books—

On BERGEN: articles—

* * *

As the child of the legendary ventriloquist Edgar Bergen, Candice Bergen spent much of her childhood in the shadow of her father’s more famous offspring—his dummies, Charlie McCarthy and Mortimer Snerd. In adulthood, however, she quickly came into her own, first as a model, then as one of Hollywood’s most beautiful and respected film and television actresses.

After attending the University of Pennsylvania and modeling on the side, 20-year-old Candice Bergen made her screen debut in Sidney Lumet’s The Group (1966), playing the then shocking role of a beautiful lesbian in the Mary McCarthy story of a group of friends from a Vassar-like school. Following her successful debut, Hollywood was quick to cast the striking blond-haired beauty opposite top star Steve McQueen in The Sand Pebbles, a film nominated for eight Academy Awards. But most of the acting acclaim went to McQueen, who turned in what many felt was his best performance. To Hollywood, Bergen was still mostly just a very pretty face.
Nonetheless, Bergen continued to work steadily throughout the late 1960s and early 1970s, establishing herself as a competent actress, who also happened to be very easy on the eyes, in a series of less-than-memorable films, including The Day the Fish Came Out, The Magus, The Adventurers, Getting Straight, and Soldier Blue. In 1971, Bergen joined an all-star cast including Jack Nicholson, Art Garfunkel, Rita Moreno, Carol Kane, and Ann-Margret in Mike Nichol’s Carnal Knowledge (1971). The story of two men’s lives and sexual journeys featured Bergen as Garfunkel’s rather proper and somewhat dull wife. In a film that could have been a breakthrough for Bergen, the acting honors once again went to someone else—Ann-Margret, who earned an Oscar nomination for Best Supporting Actress.

Bergen continued to soldier on in both leading and supporting roles in films as diverse as Bite the Bullet, The Wind and the Lion, and The Domino Principle. She even took over for Ali McGraw opposite Ryan O’Neal in the saccharine Oliver’s Story. But though Bergen was regarded as a competent and always beautiful Hollywood star, it was not until she was cast opposite Burt Reynolds in Starting Over (1979) that she proved her mettle as an actress. As Jessica Potter, Bergen showed off her ability to play comedy, particularly in a scene in which she tries to seduce her ex-husband (Reynolds) wearing a see-through blouse and singing very badly. Bergen’s willingness to make fun of herself and her own beauty signaled new possibilities for the 33-year-old actress. Hollywood thought so, too, and nominated Bergen for an Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress.

Bergen followed up Starting Over with a starring role opposite another screen beauty, Jacqueline Bissett, in the fluffy George Cukor film, Rich and Famous. And, in a part in which film mimicked life, Bergen played photographer Margaret Bourke-White (Bergen is an avid amateur photographer) in Richard Attenborough’s Gandhi. In 1980, Bergen married director Louis Malle, and for much of the decade she devoted herself to their marriage and their daughter. But in 1988, the 42-year-old actress returned to acting, playing the title role in the television sitcom, Murphy Brown. As the outspoken and often controversial investigative reporter, Bergen was finally able to return to the comedic form she displayed in Starting Over, and the sitcom became an 11-season hit as well a pop culture phenomenon.

Bergen and Brown were virtually synonymous for more than a decade, and though the actress did not make a film in the 1990s, she became more famous than ever—and, as a multiple Emmy Award winner, much more highly acclaimed. In 2000, Bergen resurfaced on the small screen to host a TV talk show. But one can only wonder if she will ever bring the talent she honed for eleven seasons on the small screen back to the medium in which she got her start.

—Victoria Price

BERGMAN, Ingrid

Films as Actress:

1934 Munkbrogreven (The Count of Monk’s Bridge) (Adolphson and Wallen) (as Elsa)
1935 Brannigar (Ocean Breakers; The Surf) (Johansson) (as Karin Ingman); Swedenehlmen (The Family Swedenehlmen) (Molander) (as Astrid); Valborgsmassoafton (Walpurgis Night) (Edgren) (as Lena Bergstrom)
1936 Pa solsidan (On the Sunny Side) (Molander) (as Eva Bergh); Intermezzo (Molander) (as Anita Hoffman)
1938 Dollar (Molander) (as Julia Balzar); En kvinnas ansikte (A Woman’s Face) (Molander) (as Anna Holm); Die vier gesellen (The Four Companions) (Frolich) (as Marianne)
1939 En enda natt (Only One Night) (Molander) (as Eva); Intermezzo (A Love Story) (Rossellini) (as Anita Hoffman)
1940 Juninatten (A Night in June) (Lindberg)
1941 Adam Had Four Sons (Rossellini) (as Emilie Gallatin); Rage in Heaven (W. S. Van Dyke) (as Stella Bergen); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming) (as Ivy Peterson)
1942 Casablanca (Curtiz) (as Ilsa)
1943 For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood) (as Maria); Swedes in America (Lerner)
1944 Gaslight (Cukor) (as Paula Alquist)
1945 Saratoga Trunk (Wood) (as Clio Dulaine); Spellbound (Hitchcock) (as Dr. Constance Peterson); The Bells of St. Mary’s (McCarey) (as Sister Benedict)
1946 Notorious (Hitchcock) (as Alicia Huberman)
1948 Arch of Triumph (Milestone) (as Joan Madou); Joan of Arc (Fleming) (title role)
1949 Under Capricorn (Hitchcock) (as Lady Henrietta Considine)
1950 Stromboli (Rossellini) (as Karin)
1951 Europa ‘51 (The Greatest Love) (Rossellini) (as Irene Girard)
1953 Siamo donne (We, the Women) (Rossellini)
1954 Giovanna d’Arco al rogo (Joan at the Stake) (Rossellini); Viaggio in Italia (Journey to Italy; The Lonely Woman) (Rossellini) (as Katherine Joyce)
1955 Angst (La Paura; Fear) (Rossellini)
1956 Anastasia (Litvak) (title role)
1957 Elena et les hommes (Paris Does Strange Things) (Renoir) (title role)
1958 Indiscreet (Donen) (as Ann Kalman); Inn of the Sixth Happiness (Robson) (as Gladys Aylward)
1961 Aimez-vous Brahms? (Goodbye Again) (Litvak) (as Paula Tessier)
1964 Der Besuch (The Visit) (Wicki) (as Karla Zachanassian)

Ingrid Bergman with Humphrey Bogart in Casablanca
1965  The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith) (as Mrs. Gerda Millett)
1967  Stimmungsliebe ("Smycket"
1969  Cactus Flower (Saks) (as Stephanie Dickinson)
1970  A Walk in the Spring Rain (Green) (as Cissy Meredith);
1973  From the Mixed-Up Files of Mrs. Basil E. Frankweiler (Cook)
1974  Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet)
1976  A Matter of Time (Minnelli)
1978  Autumn Sonata (Ingmar Bergman) (as Charlotte)

Publications

By BERGMAN: book—

By BERGMAN: articles—

On BERGMAN: books—

On BERGMAN: articles—

Daimico, J., “Ingrid from Lorraine to Stromboli: Analyzing the Public’s Perception of a Film Star,” in Journal of Popular Film (Bowling Green, Ohio), v. 4, no. 1, 1975.

“Rossellini’s Stromboli and Ingrid Bergman’s Face,” in Movietone News (Seattle), December 1979.

* * *

The complexity of Ingrid Bergman’s career (with its notorious vicissitudes), and of the image that is its product, raises a number of important issues about stars: the perennial one (but here in a peculiarly acute form) of the tensions between acting and presence; the efforts of Hollywood to construct a star according to a specific prescription and the actress’s rebellion against that construction; the diverse and sometimes contradictory ways in which a “star image,” once constructed, can be inflected in the work of different directors.

The use for which Hollywood initially intended her is clear enough: she was the new Swedish import, the new Garbo, and yet, emphatically, not Garbo, the public appearing to be rejecting Garbo’s image of an aloof Goddess. Instead of aloofness, mystery, and glamour, what was stressed above all (both on screen and in publicity) was naturalness. Two publicity handouts epitomized this quality: the glamor, what was stressed above all (both on screen and in publicity) was naturalness. Two publicity handouts epitomized this quality: the easily dismissed by embarrassing sophisticates for its alleged sentimentality, is among other things, a complex and delicate study of gender roles, allowing Bergman a wide range of expression within the apparent confines of her nun’s habit. Bergman’s notions of being an actress (centered on a striving after obviously big acting roles such as Maria in For Whom the Bell Tolls and, above all, Joan of Arc in the disastrous Fleming film of that name) were always somewhat naïve; her richest and most complex performances arose not out of “big” roles but out of collaborations with directors such as Cukor and McCarey who were particularly sensitive and sympathetic to performers, collapsing the usual distinction between presence and acting ability. One may also note that, for all her efforts to establish a wider range, Bergman was quite incapable of playing a bad woman convincingly; the irreducible beauty of her character partly undermines the dismally reactionary project of Ingmar Bergman’s Autumn Sonata, the chastisement of a great pianist for failing to be a great mother.

The core of Bergman’s achievement is in her work for two of the cinema’s greatest filmmakers: the three films for Hitchcock, the five for Rossellini. Both, again, drew on the persona, inflecting it in quite different ways. Spellbound (the least interesting Hitchcock) reconstructs the natural Bergman out of the repressed psychiatrist. Both Notorious and Under Capricorn achieve great resonance by playing upon the possibility of the persona’s irreparable degradation (through heavy drinking and promiscuity in the former, alcoholism and potential insanity in the latter) and its eventual, triumphant rehabilitation.

The Rossellini films are still disgracefully underrated, even largely unknown, outside small circles of initiates; they are essentially films about Bergman (though they are also about much else besides), obliquely relating to her personal situation. Stromboli places the lady, as a displaced person, among the physical and emotional brutalities of a primitive community and explores her reactions; Europa ’51 begins by abruptly demolishing the facade of elegance and sophistication that represents one aspect of the lady and proceeds to release the natural side of the woman and develop it towards sainthood; Viaggio in Italia reunites the lady with George Sanders in all the sterility of a respectable bourgeois marriage and proceeds to show her reaching out to make contact with eroticism, death, and the terror of emptiness, as a necessary movement towards the discovery of meaning. Bergman herself did not greatly value her work in these films: she didn’t “act,” she “walked through them.” Yet they constitute the essence of her own meaning, as star, presence, actress, image.

—Robin Wood

BERGNER, Elisabeth

Nationality: British.  Born: Elisabeth Ettel in Drohobycez, Poland (now Drohobych, Ukraine), 22 August 1897; became citizen of Great Britain, 1938.  Education: Vienna Conservatory, c. 1915–19.  Family: Married director Paul Czinner, 1931 or 1933 (died 1972).  Career: 1919—stage debut in Zurich; 1923—film debut in Der Evangelimann; late 1920s–early 1930s—international reputation for stage work, particularly in Max Reinhardt productions Peer Gynt and St. Joan; 1933—moved to England with Czinner; successful London stage debut in Escape Me Never, and on Broadway in 1935; late 1930s—5-year contract with United Artists stipulating that the films be made in England; 1940—moved to U.S.; 1950—resettled in England 1950s–1960s—worked intermittently in Germany and Austria; 1962—returned to film acting after 20-year absence.  Awards:

!Elisabeth Bergner (right) with Sophia Stewart in As You Like It

Films as Actress:

1923  Der Evangelimann (Holger-Madsen)
1924  Nju (Husbands or Lovers) (Czinner)
1926  Der Geiger von Florenz (Impetuous Youth; The Violinist of Florence) (Czinner); Liebe (Czinner)
1927  Donna Juana (Czinner)
1928  Queen Louise (Königin Luise) (Grune)
1929  Fräulein Else (Miss Else) (Czinner)
1931  Ariane (The Loves of Ariane) (Czinner) (title role)
1932  Der träumende Mund (Dreaming Lips) (Czinner)
1934  Catherine the Great (Czinner) (title role)
1935  Escape Me Never (Czinner) (as Gemma Jones)
1936  As You Like It (Czinner) (as Rosalind)
1937  Dreaming Lips (Czinner and Garmes) (as Gaby Lawrence)
1938  Stolen Life (Czinner) (as Sylvia/Martina Lawrence)
1941  Paris Calling (Marin)
1962  Die glücklichen Jahre der Thorwalds (Staudte)
1968  Strogoff (Courier to the Tsar) (E. Visconti)
1970  Cry of the Banshee (Hessler) (as Oona)
1973  Der Füssgänger (The Pedestrian) (Schell)
1978  Der Pfingstausflug (The Pentecost Outing; The Whitsun Outing) (Gunther)
1982 Feine Gesellschaft—Beschränkte Haftung (Runze)
1985 Der Garten (Liebeineier)

Publications

By BERGNER: book—

By BERGNER: articles—

Interviews in Picturegoer (London), 6 January and 18 August 1934.
Interview by Eva Orbanz in Exil—Sechs Schauspieler aus Deutschland, Berlin, 1938.
Filmecho/woche (Germany), 11 December 1981.
On BERGNER: book—

On BERGNER: articles—

Close Up (London), December 1932.
Film Weekly (London), 10 November 1933, 24 August and 14 December 1934.
Picturegoer (London), 2 February 1935, and 1 April 1939.

* * *

The dramatic art of Elisabeth Bergner was nourished on stage first in Zurich and then in various Austrian and German cities. When she came to Berlin her popularity was soon established as she captivated spectators and critics with strongly emotive portrayals in such stage productions as Romeo and Juliet, Queen Christine, and Camille. She subsequently began to specialize in playing women with childlike or boyish traits. Her stage and film career is closely related to the work of Hungarian director Paul Czinner who had come to Germany from Budapest via Vienna. He became both her artistic partner and her husband.

Their film collaboration began with Nju and continued with Der Geiger von Florenz, Liebe, Dona Juana, and Fräulein Else. Her co-stars included the great German film actors Emil Jannings, Conrad Veidt, and Albert Bassermann. The bisexual type that she portrayed in Der Geiger von Florenz and in other film and stage roles reflected a contemporary German taste derived, according to Kracauer in From Caligari to Hitler, from an ‘‘inner laxity of manners.’’

With the coming of sound, Bergner began to portray a more sentimental and delicate woman. Soon critics labeled her characters as fragile, emotional, or nervous. Bergner acted her roles in such a manner as to charm her audience in an almost hypnotic way. Czinner allowed her to play the whole gamut of emotional experience in a series of films made in Germany, and then in Great Britain to which both of them fled after the rise to power of the Nazis.

The peak of her career is represented by her work in two films. In the first, Ariane, an adaptation of a novel by the French author Claude Anet, Bergner played a girl who plunges into adventure with an older, more experienced man. The second is the drama Der träumende Mund, an adaptation of a play by Henri Bernstein. Here Bergner played a sensitive, pure woman who cannot escape her passion for a musical virtuoso, but does not want to hurt her loving husband. This film was remade by Czinner as Dreaming Lips, with Bergner again in the leading role. None of her later films achieved such critical popular success. After having made a few films in England, Bergner again dedicated herself to the theater, both as an actress and director. Her profoundly sensitive acting, which influenced the German cinema of the 1920s and 1930s, is, fortunately, preserved on film for future generations.

—Karel Tabery

BERRY, Jules

Films as Actor:

1908 Tirez s’il vous plaît (Gasnier)
1911 Cromwell (Desfontaines)
1928 L’Argent (L’Herbier)
1931 Mon Coeur et ses millions (Arveyres) (as Frank Creighton)
1932 Quick (Siodmak) (title role); Le Roi des palaces (Gallone) (as Claude Decourcy)
1933 Arlette et ses papas (Roussel) (as Pierre)
1934 Une Femme chipée (Colombier) (as Germont); Un Petit Trou pas cher (Ducis—short)
1935 Baccara (Mirande) (as André Leclerc); Et moi j’te dis qu’elle t’a fait de l’oeil (Forrester) (as André Courvalin); Jeunes Filles à marier (Vallée) (as Perret); Le Crime de Monsieur Pégoute (Ducis—short) (as M. Pégoute); Touche à tout (Dréville) (as Comte de Bressac); Monsieur Personne (Christian-Jaque) (as Comte de Trégunc)
1936 Le Disque 413 (Pottier); Les Loups entre eux (Mathot) (as Commissaire Raucourt); Cargaison blanche (Le Chemin de Rio) (Siodmak) (as Moreno); La Bête aux sept manteaux (L’Homme à la cagoule noire) (de Limur) (as Pierre Arnaud); Un Colpo di vento (Tavano); Advenuture à Paris (Marc Allégret) (as Michel Levassure); Le Mort en fuite (Berthomieu) (as Trignol); Rigolboche (Christian-Jaque) (as Bobby); Une Poule sur un mur (Gleize); 27, Rue de la Paix (Pottier) (as Denis Grand); Le Voleur de Femmes (Gance); Le Crime de Monsieur Lange (Renoir) (as Batala)

1937 Rendez-vous aux Champs-Elysées (Houssin) (as Maxime Germal); Le Club des aristocrates (Colombier) (as Serge de Montbreuse); Les Rois du sport (Colombier) (as Burette); L’Habit vert (Richebé) (as Parmeline); Les Deux Combinards (Le System bouboule) (Houssin) (as Barisart); Arsène Lupin Detective (Diamant-Berger) (title role); L’Occident (Fescourt); L’Homme à abattre (Ceux du deuxième bureau) (Mathot) (as Commissaire Raucourt); Un Déjeuner de soleil (Cohen) (as Pierre Haquet)

1938 L’Inconnue de Monte-Carlo (Berthomieu) (as Messirian); Café de Paris (Lacombe) (as Louis Fleury); Mon Père et mon papa (Schoukens) (as La Vaillant); Eusèbe depute (Berthomieu); L’Avion de minuit (Kirsanoff) (as Carlos); Hercule (Esway) (as Vasco); Clodoche (Sous les ponts de Paris) (Lamy) (as Prince Berky); Carrefour (Bernhardt) (as Lucien Sarroux); Balthazar (Colombier) (title role)

1939 Cas de conscience (Kapps) (as Laurent Arnoux); Accord final (Bay) (as Baron Larzac); Son Oncle de Normandie (La Fugue de Jim Baxter) (Dréville) (as Joseph); Derrière la façade (Mirande and Lacombe) (as Alfredo); Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné) (as Valentín); Retour au bonheur (L’Enfant de la tourmente) (Jayet); La Famille duraton (Stengel) (as Samy); Paris—New York (Mirande and Heymann) (as the manager)

1940 L’Héritier des Mondésir (Valentin) (as Waldemar); L’An quarte (Mirande); Soyez les bienvenu (de Barconcelli)

1941 L’Embuscade (Rivers—produced 1939); Face au destin (Fescourt—produced 1939) (as Claude); Parade en sept nuits (Marc Allégret); Les Petit riens (Lebournier)

1942 Après l’orage (Ducis) (as Alex Krakow); La Symphonie fantastique (Christian-Jaque) (as Schlesinger); La Troisième Dalle (Dulud) (as Stéphane Barbaroux); L’Assassin a peur la nuit (Delannoy) (as Jérôme); Les Visiteurs du soir (Carné) (as le Diable); Le Grand Combat (Roland) (as Charlie)

1943 Des jeunes filles dans la nuit (Hénaff and Mirande); Le Camion blanc (Joannon) (as Shabas); Le Voyageur de la Toussaint (Daquin) (as Plantel); Marie-Martine (Valentin) (as Loïc Limousin); Le Soleil de minuit (Roland) (as Forestier); L’Homme de Londres (Decoin) (as Brown); Tristi amori (Gallone); T’amero sempre (Camerini)

1944 Le Mort ne reçoit plus (Tarride); Beatrice devant le désir (de Marguenat)

1945 Dorothee cherche l’amour (Gréville) (as Monsieur Pascal)

1946 Monsieur Gregoire s’evade (Daniel-Norman) (as Charles Tuffal); Messieurs Ludovic (Le Chanois) (as Guillaume Maréchal); Etoiles sans lumière (Blístene); L’Assassin n’est pas coupable (Delacroix) (as himself); Desarroi (Dagan) (as Frontenac)

1947 Rêves d’amour (Stengel) (as Belloni); La Taverne du poisson couronne (Chanas) (as Fléo)

1948 Si jeunesse savait (Cerf) (as Charles Vigne)

1949 Portrait d’un assassin (Roland) (as Pfeiffer); Histoires extraordinaires (Faurez) (as Fortunato)

1950 Pas de week-end pour notre amour (Montazel) (as Baron Richard); Tête blonde (Cam) (as Frédéric Truche); Sans tambour ni trompette (Blanc); Le Gang des tractions-arrière (Loubignac) (as Baron Dupuy de la Margelle); Les Maitres-Nageurs (Lepage) (as Chamboise)

Publications

On BERRY: book—

On BERRY: article—

* * *

After graduating from secondary school Jules Berry began training to become an actor, but took a job as an apprentice in a theater company and therefore his fate was sealed. He appeared in various minor roles, then attracted attention during the visit of his theater company to Lyons and was engaged by a company in Brussels where he was to remain for many years. He appeared in Paris on tour in 1910 and 1913, and during those years he occasionally played a small part in a film. After the First World War Berry returned to Paris and appeared in a series of vaudevilles and light comedies that were not particularly challenging but did give him the opportunity to play a great variety of parts and to refine his talent. In his private life, he was a ladies’ man and a gambler (he gambled away much of what he earned in his life), and something of the aura of the dandy pervaded his performances: he became noted for his elegant appearance, vivid temperaments, timing, and his ease at portraying both lovers and seducers—roles he was to be equally adept at playing in films.

Berry made his first important film appearance in 1928 in L’Herbier’s L’Argent, an adaptation of the work by Zola. In the early 1930s, like many of his fellow stage actors, he made films abroad, in Sweden, Hungary, and Germany (he appeared in Siodmak’s Quick in Berlin). After returning to Paris he got a part in Roussel’s Arlette et ses papas, returned briefly to the stage, then left the theater entirely for a time and accepted any film offers that came his way without much concern for the quality of the script or the director. From 1933 until his death in 1951 Berry appeared in almost 100 films, often as many as 10 a year, his reputation in the theater often serving as a guarantee for many adaptations on plays, talky efforts that had little to do with the expressionistic techniques available to film. These unpretentious products were popular with French audiences of the early 1930s, and Berry was the ideal representative of the usual hero—high society sophisticate, aristocrat, successful industrialist, cynical Don Juan. He played yet another variant on his usual range of characters in Le Crime de Monsieur Lange in 1935, but this was a film written by Prévert and directed by Jean Renoir, and here Berry achieved a greater conciseness and dramatic tension in performance than in his other films. As the entrepreneur Batala, whose interests are... dictated by his egoism, who not only mercilessly exploits his employees but also tries to dupe them, he gave a performance that was universally admired.

Berry had some success in the part of the police commissioner Raucourt in films made by Mathot in 1936–37, and he returned to detective films in 1938–40. He worked with such directors as Pottier, Allégret, Mirande and others, but none of his films of the late 1930s in notable. The exception was Le Jour se lève, with a script by Prévost and directed by Carné, in which Berry had one of his most important roles—the artist Valentin, a demonic incarnation of evil who obstructs the love of two young people. Berry gives a masterful performance of rich nuance, expressing a series of contradictory states of mind: a charlatan who sneers at human goodness and weakness, abuses his power, dissimulates, torments others with his cruelty, then tries to evoke pity for himself. He created yet another incarnation of evil in the 1942 Carné film, Les Visiteurs du soir. The film was highly praised, and it marks a high point in Berry’s career as a film actor.

From then on, however, Berry’s career seemed to go into eclipse. He made more detective films and played yet another unsympathetic character in Daguir’s Le Voyageur de la Toussaint. But Berry was not really offered the opportunities in the 1940s that his talent and reputation should have commanded. An exception in André Cerf’s Si jeunesse savait (reminiscent in many ways of the style of Clair, whose assistant Cerf had been). Berry plays a millionaire in this brilliant comedy, and provides additional evidence, if any were needed, of the exceptional range, technique, and mature interpretational style he had developed.

—Karel Tabery

BERTINI, Francesca

Nationality: Italian. Born: Elena Seracini Vitiello in Florence, 11 April 1888 (some sources state 6 February 1892). Family: Married Count Paul Cartier, 1921, one son. Career: c. 1903—stage debut at Teatro Nuovo in Naples; member of troupe of dialect players under Gennaro Pantalena; about 1907—film debut in Neapolitan film La dea del mare; acted for Film d’Arte Italiana Pathé, 1910–11, for Cine production company, 1912, for Celio production company, 1912–14; 1914—began acting for Caeser and Bertini Film; 1915—international star after role in Assunta spina; 1918—co-directed La Tosca, first and only attempt at film direction; 1920—contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1921—broke contract with Fox to retire from acting after marriage to Count Cartier; late 1920s—appeared in a few sound films in Germany and France; 1930–76—made occasional special appearance in various films. Died: October 1985.

Films as Actress:

c.1907 La dea del mare
1910 Il trovatore (Gasier)
1911 Ernani; Giulietta e Romeo; Tristano e Isotta; Francesca da Rimini; La contessa di Challant; Re Lear; Folchetto di Narbonne; Lorenzo il Magnifico; Pia De’ Tolomei
1912 La morte civile; Il ritratto dell’amata; Il mercante di Venezia; La suonatrice ambulante; La rosa di Tebe; Il Papagallo della zia Berta (Negroni); Idillio tragico (Negroni); Lagrime e sorrisi (Negroni)
1913 La gloria (Negroni); L’avvoltoio nero; L’arma dei vigiliacchi; Terra promessa; La maestrina (Negroni); La bufara (Negroni); Tramonte; L’Histoire d’un Pierrot (Negroni); Idolo infantino; L’anima del demi-monde (Negroni); L’arrivista; La cricca dorata; In faccia al destino (Negroni); La madre (Negroni); La vigilia di natale; Salome; Per la sua gioia
1914 Eroismo d’amore (Ravà); L’onesta che uccide; L’amazzione mascherata; La canzone di Werner; Sangue bleu (Ravà); Nelly la gigolette (Ghione); Une donna! Per il blasone; La principessa straniera; Rose e spine; Il veleno della parola; Colpa altrui
1915 Assunta spina (Serena); La signora dalle camelle (Serena); Nella fornice (Oxilia); Ivonne (Serena); Diana l’affascinatorice (De Antoni); Il capestro degli Asburgo
1916 La perla del cinema (De Liguoro or Serena or De Antoni); Fedora (De Liguoro or De Antoni); Odette (De Liguoro); My Little Baby (Baby l’indissolable) (De Liguoro); Ferrelol (De Antoni); Oberdan (Serena); Vittima dell’ideale (Serena)
1917 Don Pietro Caruso (Bacchao); Lacrimae rerum (Nel gorgo della vita) (Del Liguoro); Andreina (Robert or Serena); L’alba; Anima redenta
1918 La Tosca (+ co-d with De Antoni or Serena); L’affaire Clémenceau (De Antoni); Piccolo Fonte (Robert); Frou Frou (Robert or De Antoni); La piovra (Robert); Malia (De Antoni); Anima allegra (Robert); La donna nuda (Robert); Mariute (Bencivenga); Saracinesca (Robert)
1919 Oltre le legge; L’ombra (Robert); Principessa Giorgio (Robert); La contessa Sarah (Robert); Lise Fleron (Robert); Spiritismo (Robert); La serpe (Robert); Beatrice (De Riso); La sfinge (Robert)
1920 I sette piccata capitali (series of seven films) (Robert, De Riso, Bencivenga, De Antoni, and possibly d’Ambra); Anima selvaggia
1921 Maddalena Ferat (Robert); Le blessure (Robert); Marion (Robert); La giovinella del diavolo (D’Annunzio); La fanciulla di Amalfi (De Liguoro); La Ferita (Robert); L’arme dei vigliacchi (Roberti or De Antoni); La fine di Montecarlo (Roberti); Tu m’appartiens (L’Herbier) (French version of previous film)
1922 Consuelita (Robert)
1928 Monte Carlo (La fine di Montecarlo); Odette (Mein Leben fur das deine) (Morat)
1929 Possession (Perret); Tu m’appartiens (Glièze)
1930 La donna di una notte (Palermi); La Femme d’une nuit (L’Herbier) (French version of previous film)
1943 Dora
1956 A sud niente di nuovo (Simonelli)
1976 1900 (Novecento) (Bertolucci)

Publications

By BERTINI: book—
Il resto non conta, Pisa, 1969.
On BERTINI: books—

Costantini, Costanzo, La diva imperiale: ritratto di Francesca Bertini, Milano, 1982.

On BERTINI: articles—

Cinema nuovo (Turin), August 1981.

On BERTINI: film—

The Last Diva, Gianfranco Mingozzi, 1983.

* * *

A type of film star grew up in the early Italian cinema: sophisticated, glamorous, highly temperamental, and a trendsetter in fashion and romance. The film divas were highly competitive and jealously guarded their status in the cinema; they were also highly paid. Lyda Borelli and Hesperia were two of them, but Francesca Bertini was to become the most famous.

After having begun her career in Naples, Bertini came to Rome and played with Celio films, where she was groomed for stardom. In 1913 she scored a great success in Baldassare Negroni’s La Tosca, a break with the torrid society dramas to which her public was accustomed. Her Nelly la gigolette, intelligently directed by Emilio Ghione the previous year, was also a more down-to-earth creation. Assunta spina was the story of a working-class girl who is a slave of circumstance, attracting men whose loves, jealousies, and selfishness lead her to a tragic end. A faithful depiction of its setting (it was shot in the streets of Naples), it anticipates the neorealism of the 1940s. Its director, Gustave Serena, played the lead.

For great roles such as La Signora dalle camelle, she rose to the occasion. The latter was rushed through to challenge her rival Hesperia, then appearing in the same role. Bertini’s output was prolific, encompassing all kinds of subjects; she possessed both a photogenic beauty, and an expressive personality.

In 1921 she married Count Paul Cartier and retired from films. But she did return to filmmaking in Germany and Spain at the beginning of the sound period and thereafter made special appearances, as Burt Lancaster’s sister, for example, in Bertolucci’s 1900. When the London Film Festival of 1983 presented a film about her by Gianfranco Mingozzi she was planning to attend the showing, though she was then in her nineties. The title of the film was The Last Diva. Louis Delluc, an admirer of hers, said: “One does not know till too late that it is necessary to study all the work of Francesca Bertini.”

—Liam O’Leary

BINOCHÉ, Juliette

Films as Actress:

1983 Liberty Belle (Kane)
1984 Les Nanas (The Women) (Lancoe)
1985 Je vous salue, Marie (Hail Mary) (Goddard) (as Juliette); La Vie de famille (Family Life) (as Natacha); Rendez-vous (Téchiné) (as Nina Larrieu)
1986 Mauvais Sang (The Night Is Young; Bad Blood) (Carax) (as Anna); Mon Beau-frère a tué ma soeur (My Brother-in-Law Has Killed My Sister) (as Esther)
1988 The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman) (as Tereza)
1989 Un Tour de manège (Roundabout) (as Elsa)
1991 Les Amants du Pont Neuf (The Lovers on the Pont-Neuf) (Carax) (as Michele); Women & Men II (Women & Men: In Love There Are No Rules) (Bernstein, Figgis, and Zee—for TV) (as Mara)
1992 Wathering Heights (Kosminsky—not released in U.S.) (as Catherine Earnshaw); Fatale (Damage) (Malle) (as Anna Barton)
1993 Trzy Kolory: Niebieski (Blue; Blue) (Kieslowski) (as Julie); Trzy Kolory: Czerwony (Blanc; White) (Kieslowski) (cameo as Julie)
1994 Trzy Kolory: Bialy (Red) (Kieslowski) (cameo as Julie)
1995 Le Hussard sur le toit (The Horseman on the Roof) (as Pauline de Theus)
1996 The English Patient (Minghella) (as Hanna); Lucie Aubrac (Berri); Un Divan a New York (A Couch in New York) (Akerman) (as Beatrice Saulnier)
1998 Alice et Martin (Téchiné) (as Alice)
1999 Les Enfants du siécle (Kurys) (as George Sand)

Publications

By BINOCHÉ: articles—

Juliette Binoche

On BINOCHÉ: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), September 1993.

* * *

Juliette Binoche was introduced to French theater at the age of 12 by her actress-writer mother, with whom her acting studies began. Her father is a former mime who creates masks for the theater. Her parents separated when she was two years old, and she believes she was drawn into the theater because it represented a family. While better known for her film roles, Binoche remains tied to the theater where she began her career (she appeared on stage in Paris in 1988 in Chekov’s The Seagull, directed by Andrei Konchalovsky).

Binoche was urged to audition for films when she was 18 by a casting director who helped her get some bit parts. Despite her success at an early age, Binoche did not emerge overnight. After studying acting for several years she performed in stage productions in the early 1980s and in some television films. Her first film roles followed: in Pascal Kane’s Liberty Belle; a small part in Jean-Luc Godard’s Hail Mary, with her youthful innocence as her selling point; and a more substantial role in Annick Lanoë’s Les Nanas.

She met the director Léos Carax in 1985, starred in his thriller Mauvais Sang, and began to undergo a transformation. They moved in together and this relationship dominated her professional and emotional life for four years. Carax molded Binoche for the role of Anna in Mauvais Sang, requiring her to adopt a gamin look and to lose weight. She studied dance and voice, read Balzac, and even changed her laugh. (Later Carax would cast Binoche as the one-eyed, gun-toting painter, Michele, in Les Amants du Pont Neuf, an unsuccessful, $30 million film which proved to be the most expensive thus far in French history.)

Later in the 1980s she reached international fame with her English-language debut, The Unbearable Lightness of Being, based on the Milan Kundera novel, playing a sexual free spirit. In her next two widely seen roles—in Louis Malle’s Damage and Blue, the first film of Krzysztof Kieślowski’s Trzy Kolory trilogy—Binoche was not free spirited at all, but rather gave exceptionally passive and solemn portrayals, too detached for many observers. Binoche had turned down the female lead in Steven Spielberg’s Jurassic Park.
BJÖRNSTRAND, Gunnar

Films as Actor:

1931 Pour mon coeur et ses millions (The False Millionaire) (Berthomieu)
1938 Vi som går scenvägen (We from the Theatre) (Wahlberg); Junitetten (Night in June) (Lindberg)
1939 Panik (Panic) (Willoughby); Vi två (We Two) (Bauman); Möt nya tider (Towards New Times) (Wallén)
1940 Hjälter i gult och blått (Scanian Guerilla) (Ohberg); En äventyrare (Adventurer) (Olsson); General von Döbeln (Molander)
1942 Natt ihann (Night in the Harbour) (Faustman); Jag dröpte (I Killed) (Olof Molander)
1944 Appassionata (Olof Molander); Lev farlight (Live Dangerously) (Falk); Mitt folk är icke ditt (My People Are Not Yours) (Hildebrand); Nyordning på Sjögårda (New Order at Sjögårda) (Hildebrand); Hets (Frenzy) (Sjöberg)
1945 Sussie (Mattsson); I som här inträden . . . (You Who Are about to Enter . . .) (Mattsson)
1947 Peggy på vif (Peggy on a Spree) (Mattsson); Kristin Kommenderar (Kristin Commands) (Edgren); Röttägg (Bad Eggs) (Mattsson); Det regnar på vår kärlek (It Rains on Our Love; The Man with an Umbrella) (Bergman); Medan porten var stängd (While the Door Was Locked) (Ekman); Midvinterblod (Midwinter Blood) (Werner)
1948 Bruden kom genom taket (Bride Came through the Ceiling) (Palm); Pappa sökes (Daddy Wanted) (Mattsson); Krigsmans erinran (Soldier’s Duties) (Faustman); En fluga gör ingen sommar (One Swallow Doesn’t Make a Summer) (Ekman); Här kommer vi (Here We Come) (Lagerwall and Zacharias); Två kvinnor (Two Women) (Sjöstrand)
1949 Skola skolen (Playing Truant) (Bauman); Flickan från tredje raden (Girl from the Third Row) (Ekman); Pappa Bom (Father Bom) (Kjellgren)
1950 Min syster och jag (My Sister and I) (Bauman); Fästmö uthyres (Fiancée for Hire) (Gustaf Molander); Kvissn på kryssen (Kiss on the Cruise) (Mattsson); Den vita katten (The White Cat) (Ekman); Kvartetten som sprängdes (The Quartet That Was Split Up) (Gustaf Molander)
1951 Tull-Bom (Customs Officer Bom) (Kjellgren)
1952 Säg det med blommor (Say It with Flowers) (Kjellgren); En fästman i taget (One Fiancé at a Time) (Bauman); Kvinnorns väntan (Secrets of Women; Waiting Women) (Bergman); Flygbom (Bom the Flyer) (Kjellgren); Oppåt med gröna hissen (Up with the Green Lift) (Larsson)
1953 Dansa min docka (Dance with My Doll) (Söderhjelm); Vi tre debutera (We Three Debutantes) (Ekman); Gycklarnas afjön (The Naked Night) (Bergman); Sommarnattens leende (Smiles of a Summer Night) (Bergman)
1956 Det är aldrig för sent (It’s Never Too Late) (Boman); Sjunde hemlen (Seventh Heaven) (Ekman)
1958 Skorpan (The Rusk) (Lagerkvist); Det sjunde inseget (The Seventh Seal) (Bergman); Natten ljs (Night Light) (Kjellgren); Sommarnöje sökes (Summer Place Wanted) (Ekman); Smultronstället (Wild Strawberries) (Bergman)
1958 Du är mitt äventyr (You Are My Adventure) (Olin); Fröken April (Miss April) (Gentele); Anskiet (The Magician; The Face) (Bergman)
1959 Det svänger på slottet (Swinging at the Castle) (Kjellin); Brott i paradiset (Crime in Paradise) (Kjellgren); Himmel och pannkaka (Heaven and Pancakes) (Ekman); Mälarpirater (Pirates of the Malaren) (Holmgren)
1960 Djävulens öga (The Devil’s Eye) (Bergman)
1961 Såsom i en spegel (Through a Glass Darkly) (Bergman); Lustgården (The Pleasure Garden) (Kjellin)
1963 Nattvardsgästerna (Winter Light) (Bergman); Lyckodrömmen (Dream of Happiness) (Abramson); Min kära är en ros (My Love Is Like a Rose) (Ekman)
1964 Klämningen (The Dress) (Sjöman); * Aktenskapsbrödern* (Marriage Wrestler) (Ekman); Allskande par (Loving Couples) (Zetterling)
1965 Syskonbädd 1782 (My Sister, My Love) (Sjöman)
1966 Trafjacken (The Sadist) (Lindgren); Persona (Ekman); Här har du ditt liv (Here Is Your Life) (Troell)
1967 Den rode kappe (The Red Mantle) (Axel); Stimulantia (“Smycket” or “The Necklace” ep.) (Gustaf Molander); Töfflan-en lycklig komedi (Slipper) (Anderberg)
1968
Flickorna (The Girls) (Zetterling); Skammen (Shame) (Bergman)

1969
Pappa, varför är du arg? Du gjorde likadant själv när du var ung (Daddy, Why Are You Angry? You Did the Same When You Were Young) (Stivell); Riten (The Rite) (Bergman—for TV); Una estate in quattro (L'isola) (Vancini)

1971
Lockfågeln (The Birdcall) (Wickman)

1973
Pistolen (The Pistol) (Tirl)

1976
Ansikte mot ansikte (Face to face) (Bergman—for TV)

1977
Tabu (Taboo) (Sjöman)

1978
Herbstsonate (Autumn Sonata; Höstsonaten) (Bergman)

1982
Fanny och Alexander (Fanny and Alexander) (Bergman)

Publications

On BJÖRNSTRAND: article—

* * *

Gunnar Björnstrand made a career portraying morally upright figures plagued by doubt and temptation. A courtly actor who seemed equally at home in comedy and melodrama, he came to the attention of non-Swedish film audiences in the dozen or so films of Ingmar Bergman in which he appeared. Björnstrand made his first film for Bergman in 1946, It Rains on Our Love, and rose to international prominence in a series of films beginning with Sawdust and Tinsel, and culminating with Winter Light. His role in this last film was a tour de force for Björnstrand who played a man of God who had lost his faith and, although he searched for meaning in the modern world, could provide little guidance for himself or his parishioners. The elegance of Björnstrand’s bearing provided a vivid contrast to the inner torment caused by his religious uncertainty. For The Seventh Seal, on the other hand, where he played the cynical Sancho Panza-like companion to Max von Sydow’s questing knight, he was cast against type and provided a shrewd foil to his Quixotic master.

Björnstrand continued to play roles in other Swedish productions including Vilgot Sjöman’s The Dress and the same director’s controversial My Sister, My Love, Jan Troell’s first feature, Here Is Your Life, and Mai Zetterling’s Loving Couples and The Girls. He also appeared in Bergman’s later films such as Shame, Face to Face, and the international success, Autumn Sonata.

—Charles L. P. Silet

BLANCHETT, Cate

Films as Actress:

1996
Parklands (Millard) (as Rosie)

1997
Paradise Road (Beresford) (as Susan McCarthy); Thank God He Met Lizzie (Nowlan) (as Lizzie); Oscar and Lucinda (Armstrong) (as Lucinda)
1998  Elizabeth (Kapur) (as Elizabeth I)
1999  An Ideal Husband (Parker) (as Lady Gertrud Chiltern); Pushing Tin (Newell) (as Connie Falzone); Bangers (Upton) (as Housewife) (short); The Talented Mr. Ripley (Minghella) (as Meredith Logue)

Publications

By BLANCHETT: articles—

"Heaven’s Cate," interview with Howard Feinstein, in Detour (New York), February 1998.
Interview with Angie Errigo, in Empire (London), May 1998.
Blanchett, Cate, "Cate Blanchett on Crying in Public Places," in This Is London, 4 March 1999.
"Why the Elizabeth Star Has Taken Hollywood by Storm," interview in Vanity Fair (New York), May 1999.

On BLANCHETT: articles—

* * *

Of all the performers who emerged onto the international film scene in the late 1990s, Cate Blanchett was among the most promising. Her luminous good looks combine with a passion, intelligence, and versatility that are reminiscent of Meryl Streep. Although it is premature at this point in her career to cite her as Streep’s acting equal, Blanchett is a performer who, like Streep, seamlessly inhabits her characters, making them believable despite their diversity in class, nationality, or life experience.

Upon graduation from Australia’s National Institute of Dramatic Art, Blanchett quickly established herself as an up-and-coming stage actress. She was the first performer to win two Sydney Theatre Critics Circle awards in the same year (1993), for Best Newcomer and Lead Actress, and further established herself by playing everything from Shakespeare to David Mamet on the Australian stage. Blanchett’s first high-profile screen credit was in Paradise Road, a well-intentioned but clichéd prisoner-of-war drama, in which she was cast alongside veteran actresses Glenn Close, Pauline Collins, and Frances McDormand. Next, she won the title role, opposite Ralph Fiennes, in Oscar and Lucinda, a Victorian-era romantic adventure. Blanchett gave a spirited performance while playing Lucinda Leplastrier, an eccentric, fiercely independent young woman raised on a ranch in the Australian outback. With her soul mate, the shy, guilt-ridden Oscar Hopkins, Lucinda shares a love of gambling and an inability to fit into society.

The energy and finesse Blanchett brought to the role made her a natural for the film that was to win her international stardom: Elizabeth, which like Oscar and Lucinda is a period piece featuring a spunky and determined heroine. Elizabeth is a dark, absorbing historical drama and political spectacle. It is set in England during the mid-16th century, with Henry VIII dead and the nation in religious turmoil. Mary I, who has taken the throne from her father, is a Catholic; Elizabeth, her younger half-sister, is a Protestant. At the outset of the story, Mary orders Elizabeth taken into custody, and she barely escapes with her life. But upon Mary’s death, Elizabeth becomes England’s ruler. At its core, Elizabeth is the story of the molding of a queen. It charts the manner in which Elizabeth—as embodied by Blanchett—is transformed from a fainful young woman who thinks with her heart and not her head to the tough, venerated Virgin Queen of history. Elizabeth is a complex, demanding role, and Blanchett exudes a majestic dignity as her character matures.

In spite of her stardom, Blanchett accepted a supporting role in a film because she was intrigued by its story and interested in working with the cast and director. In Pushing Tin, a tale of conflicting New York City air traffic controllers, she plays Connie Falzone, a middle-class Long Island housewife-mother with a thick New York accent. Though the primary concerns of Elizabeth I are ruling her country, Connie’s life focuses on her family and tuna casseroles. Yet Blanchett offered the same intelligence to the creation of both characters; she appears equally familiar with the inner beings of these altogether different women. In fact, Blanchett blends so seamlessly into *Pushing
That it might seem unimaginable that she is the same actress who, scant months earlier, had starred in Elizabeth. Then, in The Talented Mr. Ripley, Blanchett added just the right shading to a character who is a pawn to the plot: Meredith Logue, a breathless débutante-social butterfly whose knowledge of the chameleon-like title character plays a significant role as the story develops. Here, the character of Meredith is secondary to the film’s heroine, Marge Sherwood (played by Gwyneth Paltrow, whose performance a year earlier in Shakespeare in Love topped Blanchett’s Elizabeth I). Another noteworthy part came in The Seventh Juror (Lautner; as Grégoire Duval); Pourquoi Paris? (de la Patellière); Les Saintes Nitouches (Montazel).

Unlike those stars who start their careers on the stage and never return upon making their cinematic splash, Blanchett’s dedication to acting is exemplified by her decision in 1999 to appear in London’s West End in David Hare’s Plenty—despite her being in demand for screen roles. Blanchett’s signature screen performance remains Elizabeth I, but she appears to be at the beginning of a very promising career. It will be interesting to observe how her career evolves.

—Rob Edelman

BLIER, Bernard

Nationality: French. Born: Buenos Aires, Argentina, of French parents, 11 January 1916. Education: Lycée Condorcet; studied drama with Raymond Rouleau, and at Paris Conservatory under Louis Jouvet. Family: Married; son: film director Bertrand Blier; daughter: Brigitte. Career: 1936—stage debut at Théâtre de l’Etoile, Paris; 1937—film debut in Trois-six-neuf; 1940—mobilized at beginning of war, taken prisoner by Germans; 1942—resumed stage appearances; after war—leading player in “boulevard comedies” on Parisian stage. Awards: Brussels Prize, 1949; Prix Femminin de la Patellière; 1958—légion d’honneur; Special César, 1988. Died: In Paris, 29 March 1989.

Films as Actor:

1937 Trois-six-neuf (Rouleau); Gribouille (Heart of Paris) (M. Allégret); Le Messager (Rouleau); La Dame de Malacca (M. Allégret); L’Habit vert (Richebé)

1938 Altitude 3200 (Youth in Revolt) (Benoît-Lévy); Entrée des artistes (The Curtain Rises) (M. Allégret); Hôtel du Nord (Carné); Grisou (de Canonge); Double Crime sur la Ligne Maginot (Treachery Within) (Candera); Place de la Concorde (Lamac); Accord final (Bay)

1939 Le Jour se lève (Daybreak) (Carné); L’Enfer des anges (Christian-Jaque); Quartier Latin (Colombier); Nuit de Décembre (Heure exquise) (Bernhardt); Tourelle 3 (Christian-Jaque)—unfinished due to outbreak of war

1941 L’Assassinat du Père Nœil (Who Killed Santa Claus?) (Christian-Jaque); Le Pavillon Brûlé (de Baroncelli); Premier bal (Christian-Jaque); Caprices (Joannon)

1942 La Symphonie fantastique (Christian-Jaque); La Femme que j’ai le plus aimée (Vernay); Romance à trois (Richebé); La Nuit fantastique (L’Herbier); Le Journal tombe à cinq heures (Lacombe); Le Mariage de chiffon (Autant-Lara); Marie Martine (Valentin)

1943 Les Petites du quai aux Fleurs (M. Allégret); Je suis avec toi (Decoin); Domino (Richebé)

1944 Faranzolle (Zwoboda)

1945 Seul dans la nuit (Stengel); Monsieur Gregoire s’évadé (Daniel-Norman)

1946 Messieurs Ludovic (Le Chanois); Le Café du Cadran (Gehret)

1947 Quai des Orfévres (Clouzot)

1948 Dédiée d’Anvers (Dédiée) (Y. Allégret); D’hui hommes à hommes (Man to Men) (Christian-Jaque); Les Casse-pieds (The Spice of Life) (Dreville)

1949 L’École buissonnière (Passion for Life; I Have a New Master) (Le Chanois); Monseigneur (Richebé); Retour à la vie (“Tante Emma” ep.) (Cayatte); L’Invité du Mardi (Deval)

1950 La Sourcière (Cafel); Manèges (The Cheat; Riding for a Fall) (Y. Allégret); Les Anciens de Saint-Loup (Lampin); Souverains perdus (Christian-Jaque)

1951 Sauver l’adresse (Le Chanois); La Maison Bonnadieu (Rim)

1952 Agence matrimoniale (Le Chanois); Je l’ai été trois fois (Guity)

1953 Secrets d’alcôve (“Le Lit de la Pompadour” ep.) (The Bed) (Delannoy); Suivez cet homme! (Lampin)

1954 Avant le déluge (Cayatte); Scènes de ménage (Berthomieu)

1955 Le Dossier noir (Cayatte); Les Hussards (Joffe)

1956 Crime et châtiment (Crime and Punishment) (Lampin); Prigionieri del male (Costa); Rivelazione

1957 L’Homme à l’imperméable (The Man in the Raincoat) (Duvivier); Retour de Manivelle (There’s Always a Price Tag) (de la Patellière); Quand la femme s’en mêle (Y. Allégret); La Bonne Tisane (Lacombe)

1958 Les Misérables (Le Chanois) (as Javert); La Chatte (The Cat) (Decoin); Les Grandes Familles (The Possessors) (de la Patellière); Sans famille (Michel); En légitime défense (Berthomieu); Le Joueur (Autant-Lara); L’Ecole des cocottes (Audry)

1959 Marie-Octobre (Duvivier); La grande guerre (La Grande Guerre; The Great War) (Monicelli) (as Captain Castelli); Marche ou crève (Lautner); Archimède, le clochard (The Magnificent Tramp) (Grangier) (as Pichon); Les Yeux de l’amour (de la Patellière)

1960 Il Gobbo (Le Bossu de Rome; The Hunchback of Rome) (Lizzani) (title role); Crimen . . . and Suddenly It’s Murder (Camerini) (as police commissioner); Vive Henri IV, vive l’amour! (Autant-Lara); Le Secret du Chevalier d’Eon (Audry); Le Président (Verneuil)

1961 Le Cave se réiffe (The Counterfeiters of Paris; Money, Money, Money) (Grangier) (as Charles); Arrêtez les tambours (Women and War) (Lautner) (as Mayor Leproux); I briganti italiani (Les Guerilleros) (Camerini); Les Petits Matins (Audry); Le Monocle noir (Gérard)

1962 Mathias Sandorff (Lampin); Le Septième Juré (The Seventh Juror) (Lautner) (as Grégoire Duval); Pourquoi Paris? (de la Patellière); Les Saintes Nécessités (Montazel)
1963 I compagni (The Organizer) (Monicelli) (as Martinetti); Il magnifico avventuriero (Fredda); Germinal (Y. Allégret); Cent Mille Dollars au Soleil (Greed in the Sun) (Verneuil) (as Mitch-Mitch)

1964 La Bonne Soupe (Careless Love) (Thomas) (as Monsieur Joseph); "Gente moderno" ("Modern People") ep. of Alta infedeltà (High Infidelity) (Monicelli) (as Reguzzoni); Il magnifico cugino (The Magnificent Cuckold) (Pietrangeli) (as Corna d’Oro); La Chasse à l’homme (Male Hunt) (Molinaro) (as Monsieur Heurtin); Les Barbouzes (The Great Spy Chase) (Lautner) (as Cafarelli); "Une Chance explosive" or "Le Jeu de la chance" ep. of La Chance et l’amour (Tavernier)

1965 ‘La Fermeture’ ep. of Les Bons Vivants (Grangier); Una questione d’amore (A Question of Honor) (Zampa); Quand passent les faisans (Molinaro)

1966 Du mou dans la gachette (Grospiere); Duello nel mondo (Scott); Delitto quasi perfetto (Camerini); Le Grand Restaurant (Besnard); Un Idiot à Paris (Korber)

1967 Lo straniero (The Stranger) (Visconti) (as defense counsel); Peau d’expion (To Commit a Murder) (Molinaro) (as Rhome); Le fou du labo 4 (Besnard); Caroline chérie (de la Patellière); Copain suavé sa peau (Boisset); Si j’étais un expion (Breakdown; If I Were a Spy) (Bertrand Blier)

1968 Faut pas prendre les enfants du bon Dieu pour les canards sauvages (Operation Leontine) (Audiard); Riusciranno i nostri eroi a trovare il loro amico misteriosamente scomparso in Africa? (Scola); Elle boit pas, elle fume pas, elle drogue pas, mais elle cause (Audiard); Appelez-moi Mathilde (Mondy)

1969 Mon Oncle Benjamin (Molinaro)

1970 Le Cri du cormoran (The Cormorant) (Monicelli) (as Dr. Mezzini); La Fermeture ep. of Série noire (Amiel); "Gente moderno" ep. of Serie noire (Amiel); "Joseph" ep. of Gente moderno ("Modern People") ep. of Série noire (Amiel)

1971 Catch Me a Spy (Clement); Homo eroticus (Man of the Year) (Vicario) (as Dr. Mezzini); Il furto e l’anima del commercio (Corbucci); Quarta parete (Bolzoni); Le Tueur (de la Patellière); Jo (Girault)

1972 Le Grand Blond avec une chaussure noire (The Tall Blond Man with One Black Shoe) (Robert) (as Milan); Tout le monde il est beau, tout le monde il est gentil (Yanne); Elle cause plus, elle fume pas, elle drogue pas, mais elle cause (Audiard); Appelez-moi Mathilde (Mondy)

1973 Le Grand Blond avec une chaussure noire (The Tall Blond Man with One Black Shoe) (Robert) (as Milan); Tout le monde il est beau, tout le monde il est gentil (Yanne); Elle cause plus, elle fume pas, elle drogue pas, mais elle cause (Audiard); Appelez-moi Mathilde (Mondy)

1974 Le Compromis (Zeribh)

1975 Il malato imaginario (La malade imaginaire; The Hypochondriac) (Cervi); Serie noire (Corneau) (as Staplin); Buffet froid (Bertrand Blier) (as police inspector)

1976 Les Bons Vivants (Grangier); La Nuit d’or (Moatti)

1977 Le Témoin (Mocky)

1978 Le Compromis (Zeribh)

1979 Il malato imaginario (La malade imaginaire; The Hypochondriac) (Cervi); Serie noire (Corneau) (as Staplin); Buffet froid (Bertrand Blier) (as police inspector)

1980 Voltati Eugenio (Comencini)

1981 Passione d’amore (Scola) (as Major Tarasso); Pétrole, pétrole (Gion)

1985 I due vite di Mattia Pascal (The Two Lives of Mattia Pascal) (Monicelli) (as Paul); Ca n’arrive qu’a moi (Perrin); Sceno di guerra (Risi); Amici miei atto III (Loy)

1986 Je hais les acteurs (I Hate Actors) (Krawczyk) (as J. B. Cobb); Spaggiata privata (Bozzetto); Twist Again a Moscou (Poure) (as Minister); Speriamo che sia femmina (Let’s Hope It’s a Girl) (Monicelli) (as Uncle Gughi)

1987 Sotto il ristorante cinese (Bozzetto) (as Eva’s father); I Picari (Monicelli)

1988 Mangeclous (Mizrahi); Ada dans la jungle (Zindy)

1989 Una bota di vita (Oldaim); Paganini (Kinski)

Publications

By BLIER: article—

On BLIER: book—

On BLIER: articles—

Although Bernard Blier made his film debut at the age of 21 in films by Marc Allégret and Rouleau (two films by each director in 1937), and worked regularly in films during the next few years, he began to get good roles only after the war. He had played ordinary workers in different settings quite convincingly, but was able to show his many-sided dramatic abilities in Dédee d’Amers (Yves Allégret) and, particularly, in Quai des Orfèvres (Clouzot), a classic film of the criminal genre, in which he appeared with Jouvet and Dullin. His performance as a country teacher in L’Ecole buissonnière (Le Chanois) solidified his reputation, and he won several prizes for his acting in it.

From that time he regularly appeared in French and foreign films as a leading character actor. Audiences have been particularly fond of his roles as police inspectors, his most notable performances in this vein being Javert in Le Chanois’s version of Hugo’s Les Misérables and in Cayatte’s Le Dossier noir. But he also appeared in such works as Zola’s Germinale (Yves Allégret), Camus’s Le straniero (Visconti), and many comic films.

His filmography, containing some 200 film roles, is evidence of the intensity of his work. He earned the reputation of an excellent and many-sided interpreter due to his discipline and exactingness, and he continued to occupy a prominent place in French film.

His work on the stage, begun slightly before his work in films, was also outstanding. His work in boulevard comedies climaxed in his success in Roussin’s comedy Le Marié, la femme, et la mort which ran almost three years. He also appeared with Isabelle Adjani in the Comédie Française production of L’Ecole des femmes for the 300th anniversary celebration of Molière’s death in 1973.

—Karel Tabery

BLONDELL, Joan

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 30 August 1909. Family: Married 1) the cameraman George Barnes, 1933 (divorced 1935), son: Norman Scott; 2) the actor Dick Powell, 1936 (divorced 1945), daughter: Ellen; 3) the producer Michael Todd, 1947 (divorced 1950). Career: 1910—born into vaudeville family; stage debut at age 14 months; 1919—incorporated into family vaudeville act; toured U.S., Europe, China, and Australia; 1926—joined stock company in Dallas; won “Miss America” beauty contest; on Broadway in Tarnished and The Trial of Mary Dugan; also in the Ziegfeld Follies; 1929—played lead in Broadway musical Maggie the Magnificent; 1930—signed with Warners to star in Sinners’ Holiday; 1938—left Warners and begins to freelance; 1940s—began working in radio and making USO appearances; 1951–56—worked on stage and television only; 1963—in TV series The Real McCoys; 1968–70—in TV series Here Come the Brides; 1972–73—in TV series Banyon. Died: Of leukemia in Santa Monica, California, 25 December 1979.

Films as Actress:

1930 The Office Wife (Bacon) (as Catherine Murdock); Sinners’ Holiday (Adolfi) (as Myrtle); Broadway’s Like That (Roth)
1931 Illicit (Mayo) (as Helen “Duckie” Children); Millie (Dillon) (as Angie); My Past (Del Ruth) (as Marion Moore); God’s Gift to Women (Curtiz) (as Fifi); The Public Enemy (Wellman) (as Mannie); Other Men’s Women (Wellman) (as Marie); Big Business Girl (Seiter) (as Pearl); Night Nurse (Wellman) (as Maloney); The Reckless Hour (Dillon) (as Myrtle Nicholas); Blonde Crazy (Del Ruth) (as Anne Roberts)
1932 Make Me a Star (Beaudine) (as Flips Montague); Union Depot (Green) (as Ruth); The Greeks Had a Word for It (Sherman) (as Schatze); The Crowd Roars (Hawks) (as Anne); The Famous Ferguson Case (Bacon) (as Maizie Dickson); Miss Pinkerton (Bacon) (as Miss Adams/Miss Pinkerton); Big City Blues (LeRoy) (as Vida); Three on a Match (LeRoy) (as Mary Keaton); Central Park (Adolfi) (as Dot); Lawyer Man (Dieterle) (as Olga)
1933 Blonde Johnson (Enright) (title role); Broadway Bad (Lanfield) (as Tony Landers); Gold Diggers of 1933 (LeRoy) (as Carol King); Goodbye Again (Curtiz) (as Anne); Footlight Parade (Bacon) (as Nan Prescott); Havana Widows (Enright) (as Mae Knight); Convention City (Mayo) (as Nancy Lorraine)
1934 I’ve Got Your Number (Enright) (as Maria Lawson); Smarty (Florey) (as Vicki Wallace Thorpe); He Was Her Man (Bacon) (as Rose Lawrence); Dames (Enright) (as Mabel Anderson); Kansas City Princess (Keighley) (as Rosy)
1935 Traveling Saleslady (Enright) (as Angela Twitchell); Broadway Gondolier (Bacon) (as Alice Hughes); We’re in the Money (Enright) (as Ginger Stewart); Miss Pacific Fleet (Enright) (as Gloria Fay)
1936 Colleen (Green) (as Minnie Mawkins); Sons O’Guns (Bacon) (as Yvonne); Bullets or Ballots (Keighley) (as Lee Morgan); Stagestruck (Berkley) (as Peggy Revere); Three Men on a Horse (LeRoy) (as Mabel); Gold Diggers of 1937 (Bacon) (as Norma Parry)
1937 The King and the Chorus Girl (LeRoy) (as Dorothy); Back in Circulation (Enright) (as Timothea Blake); The Perfect Specimen (Curtiz) (as Mona Carter); Stand-In (Garnett) (as Lester Plum)
1938 There’s Always a Woman (Hall) (as Sally Reardon)
1939 Off the Record (Flood) (as Jane Morgan); East Side of Heaven (Butler) (as Mary); The Kid from Kokomo (Seiler) (as Doris Harvey); Good Girls Go to Paris (Hall) (as Jenny); The Amazing Mr. Williams (Hall) (as Maxine Carroll)
1940 Two Girls on Broadway (Simon) (as Molly Mahoney); I Want a Divorce (Murphy) (as Geraldine “Jerry” Brokaw)
1941 Topper Returns (Del Ruth) (as Gail Richards); Model Wife (Jason) (as Joan Keating Chambers); Three Girls about Town (Jason) (as Hope Banner); Lady for a Night (Jason) (as Jenny Blake)
1943 Cry Havoc (Thorpe) (as Grace)
1945 A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (Kazan) (as Aunt Sissy); Don Juan Quilligan (Tuttle) (as Marjorie Mosrock); Adventure (Fleming) (as Helen Molohn)
1947 The Corpse Came C.O.D. (Levin) (as Rosemary Durant); Nightmare Alley (Goulding) (as Zeena)
1950 For Heaven’s Sake (Seaton) (as Lydia)
1951 The Blue Veil (Bernhardt) (as Annie Rawlings)
1956 The Opposite Sex (Miller) (as Crystal)
1957 Lizzie (Haas) (as Aunt Morgan); Desk Set (Walter Lang) (as Peg Costello); Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter? (Tashlin) (as Violet)
1961 Angel Baby (Wendkos) (as Mollie Hays)
1964 Advance to the Rear (Marshall) (as Easy Jenny)
1965 The Cincinnati Kid (Jewison) (as Lady Fingers)
1966 Ride beyond Vengeance (McEvey) (as Mrs. Lavender); Waterhole Number Three (Graham) (as Lavinia); Winchester ’73 (Daughtery) (as Larouge)
1968 Stay Away, Joe (Tewksbury) (as Glenda Callahan); Kona Coast (Johnson) (as Kitiabelle Lightfoot)
1970 The Phoenix (Katzin) (as Ruby)
1971 Support Your Local Gunfighter (Kennedy) (as Jenny)
1975 The Dead Don’t Scream (Harrington—for TV) (as Levenia); Winner Take All (Bogart—for TV) (as Beverly Craig)
1976 Won Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner) (as landlady); Death at Love House (Swackhamer—for TV) (as Marcella Jeffenhart)
1977 Opening Night (Cassavetes) (as Sarah Goode)
1978 Grease (Kleiser); Battered (Werner—for TV); The Glove (Hagen) (as Mrs. Fitzgerald)
Joan Blondell with Dick Powell in Dames

1979  The Champ (Zeffirelli) (as Dolly Kenyon); Family Secrets (for TV)
1981  The Woman Inside (Van Winkle) (as Aunt Coll)

Publications

By BLONDELL: book—

Center Door Fancy, 1972.

By BLONDELL: article—

On BLONDELL: book—

On BLONDELL: articles—

On BLONDELL: recordings—

* * *

Joan Blondell’s career spanned a half-century and her output numbered nearly a hundred films, not to mention innumerable television appearances, yet she was never less than vivid, bright, and appealing; often she is the single saving grace of an otherwise tepid work.
She played roles of every description, but specialized in a specific type; the brassy, blowzy, blonde goldilocks with a kind heart and legs that won’t quit. She could trade quips, crack wise, wring tears, and generally meet any challenge a scriptwriter could throw her way. Though she wasn’t much of a musical performer, she was so thoroughly a trooper that Warner Brothers felt no compunction in featuring her prominently in most of the popular and influential Busby Berkeley musicals; as often as not, she remains more vividly in the memory than the more accomplished singers and dancers in the films. “Remember My Forgotten Man” from Gold Diggers of 1933 and “The Girl at the Ironing Board” from Dames are but two examples of the impressive emotional range of which her rather ordinary voice was capable. Her versatility and professionalism made her invaluable to her employers (a little too valuable since, more than once, Blondell was worked to the point of exhaustion) but the public responded to her round, expressive face, Art Deco eyes, and brilliant (though friendly and familiar) smile.

She came to Hollywood with James Cagney in 1930 to appear in Sinners’ Holiday, the movie of a hit play in which they had co-starred. They both signed long-term contracts with Warner Brothers on the same day and were immediately put on the treadmill. Cagney’s star ignited with more intensity than that of his co-star, and Blondell never quite escaped the supporting player category. Nevertheless she regularly eclipsed the “stars” of her pictures and built a loyal following—she and Barbara Stanwyck spend an inordinate amount of time in their underwear. Her delightfully crisp, snappy patter illuminates Blonde Crazy, The Crowd Roars, The Greeks Had a Word for It, and the hilarious and unjustly neglected Convention City.

After her exhausting stint at Warners, Blondell began to slow down and choose her films with more care. As she became more matronly, her character roles took on a different, but equally interesting character. A Tree Grows in Brooklyn gave her a rich part which she played brilliantly. She was nominated for an Academy Award for The Blue Veil and proved that her sense of comedy was as keen as ever. She played roles of every description, but specialized in a certain type; the brassy, blowzy, blonde goldilocks with a kind heart and legs that won’t quit. She could trade quips, crack wise, wring tears, and generally meet any challenge a scriptwriter could throw her way. Though she wasn’t much of a musical performer, she was so thoroughly a trooper that Warner Brothers felt no compunction in featuring her prominently in most of the popular and influential Busby Berkeley musicals; as often as not, she remains more vividly in the memory than the more accomplished singers and dancers in the films. “Remember My Forgotten Man” from Gold Diggers of 1933 and “The Girl at the Ironing Board” from Dames are but two examples of the impressive emotional range of which her rather ordinary voice was capable. Her versatility and professionalism made her invaluable to her employers (a little too valuable since, more than once, Blondell was worked to the point of exhaustion) but the public responded to her round, expressive face, Art Deco eyes, and brilliant (though friendly and familiar) smile.

She came to Hollywood with James Cagney in 1930 to appear in Sinners’ Holiday, the movie of a hit play in which they had co-starred. They both signed long-term contracts with Warner Brothers on the same day and were immediately put on the treadmill. Cagney’s star ignited with more intensity than that of his co-star, and Blondell never quite escaped the supporting player category. Nevertheless she regularly eclipsed the “stars” of her pictures and built a loyal following—she and Barbara Stanwyck spend an inordinate amount of time in their underwear. Her delightfully crisp, snappy patter illuminates Blonde Crazy, The Crowd Roars, The Greeks Had a Word for It, and the hilarious and unjustly neglected Convention City.

After her exhausting stint at Warners, Blondell began to slow down and choose her films with more care. As she became more matronly, her character roles took on a different, but equally interesting character. A Tree Grows in Brooklyn gave her a rich part which she played brilliantly. She was nominated for an Academy Award for The Blue Veil and proved that her sense of comedy was as keen as ever. She responded to her round, expressive face, Art Deco eyes, and brilliant (though friendly and familiar) smile.

She made over 50 films at Warners during her first decade in films and this pace must have contributed to the frenetic edge which characterizes her style. Her beauty, optimism, quick wit, and malleable face of hers.

She made over 50 films at Warners during her first decade in films and this pace must have contributed to the frenetic edge which characterizes her style. Her beauty, optimism, quick wit, and malleable face of hers.

BLOOM, Claire

Films as Actress:

1948 The Blind Goddess (French) (as Mary Dearing)
1952 Limelight (Chaplin) (as Terry)
1953 Innocents in Paris (Parry) (as Susan Robbins); The Man Between (Reed) (as Susanne Mallinson)
1955 Richard III (Olivier) (as Lady Anne)
1956 Alexander the Great (Rossen) (as Barsine)
1958 The Brothers Karamazov (Brooks) (as Katya); The Buccaneer (Quinn)
1959 Look Back in Anger (Richardson) (as Helena Charles)
1960 Die Schachnovelle (Brainwashed: The Royal Game; Three Moves to Freedom) (Oswald) (as Irene Andreyne)
1962 The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm (Levin) (as Dorothea Grimm); The Chapman Report (Cukor) (as Naomi Shields)
1963 The Haunting (French) (as Theodosia); Il maestro di Vigevano (Pietri) (as Laura); The Outrage (Ritt) (as Wife)
1964 The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (Ritt) (as Nan Perry)
1967 Soldier in Love (Schaefter—for TV)
1968 Charly (Nelson) (as Alice Kinian)
1969 Three into Two Won’t Go (Hall) (as Frances Howard); The Illustrated Man (Smight) (as Felicia)
1970 A Severed Head (Clement) (as Honor Klein)
1971 Red Sky at Morning (Goldstone) (as Ann Arnold); The Going Up of David Lev (Collier—for TV)
Claire Bloom with Richard Burton in Look Back in Anger

1973 A Doll’s House (Garland) (as Nora Helmer)
1977 Islands in the Stream (Schaffner) (as Audrey)
1980 Hamlet, Prince of Denmark (Rodney Bennett—for TV) (as Gertrude)
1981 Clash of the Titans (Desmond Davis) (as Hera)
1982 Cymbeline (Moshinsky—for TV) (as Queen)
1983 Separate Tables (Schlesinger—for TV) (as Miss Cooper)
1984 Memories of Monet (Martindale) (as narrator); Oedipus the King (Don Taylor—for TV) (as Jocasta); The Ghost Writer (Tristam Powell—for TV)
1985 Déjà Vu (Richmond) (as Eleanor Harvey); Florence Nightingale (Duke—for TV) (as Fanny Nightingale); Promises to Keep (Black) (as Sally); Shadowlands (Norman Stone—for TV) (as Joy Gresham); This Lightning Always Strikes Twice (for TV)
1986 Anastasia: The Mystery of Anna (Chomsky—for TV) (as Czarina Alexandra); Hold the Dream (Don Sharp—for TV) (as Edwina); Liberty (Sarafian—for TV)
1987 Sammy and Rosie Get Laid (Frears) (as Alice); Intimate Contact (Hussein—for TV) (as Ruth)
1988 Beryl Markham: A Shadow on the Sun (Shadow on the Sun) (Richardson—for TV) (as Lady Florence Delamere)
1989 Crimes and Misdemeanors (Woody Allen) (as Miriam Rosenthal); The Lady and the Highwayman (Hough—for TV) (as Lady Emma Darlington)
1993 A Hercegnoe ex a Kobold (The Princess and the Goblin) (Gemes—animation) (as voice of Fairy Godmother); The Age of Innocence (Scorsese) (uncredited role); Miss Marple: The Mirror Crack’d (The Mirror Crack’d from Side to Side) (Norman Stone—for TV) (as Marina Gregg); It’s Nothing Personal (Bradford May—for TV) (as Evelyn Whitloft); Barbara Taylor Bradford’s Remember (Hersfeld—for TV) (as Anne)
1995 Mighty Aphrodite (Woody Allen) (as Amanda’s mother); Mad Dogs and Englishmen (Henry Cole) (as Stringer’s wife)
1996 Daylight (Cohen) (as Eleanor Trilling)
1997 Family Money (Rye for TV) (as Frances Pye); What the Deaf Man Heard (Harrison) (as Mrs. Tynan)
1998 Wrestling with Alligators (Weltz) (Lulu Fraser); Imogen’s Face (Wheatley for TV) (as Elinor); The Irish in America: Long Journey Home (Lennon II, Zwonitzer for TV)
Publications

By BLOOM: book—

By BLOOM: articles—

‘‘The Year of the Steigers,’’ interview in Cinema (Beverly Hills), March 1966.

On BLOOM: articles—

* * *

The screen persona of Claire Bloom has most often emerged as a blend of regality and vulnerability. This combination of traits manifested itself in the role of Terry, the ballerina heroine of Charles Chaplin’s Limelight. Although the 1952 film did not mark her film debut (she had appeared in The Blind Goddess four years earlier), Limelight earned Bloom an international reputation. That she perceives this film as the real beginning of her career is evident from the title of her autobiography published in 1982, Limelight and After: The Education of an Actress.

Bloom’s regality has characterized her performances in films ranging from Richard III, in which she played opposite Laurence Olivier, to Clash of the Titans, a Ray Harryhausen fantasy in which, as the goddess Hera, she again appeared opposite Olivier as Zeus. Vulnerability is the dominant trait of Bloom’s parts in such films as The Outrage, Martin Ritt’s Old West remake of Rashomon, Akira Kurosawa’s study of shared guilt in feudal Japan. Perhaps Bloom has been at her most effective when a role allows her to merge the two traits. The Limelight part benefited from such an amalgam as did her characterization of Theodosia, the lesbian psychic in The Haunting. Based on a horror novel by Shirley Jackson, Robert Wise’s film required Bloom to dominate such characters as Julie Harris’s neurotic spinster while maintaining a somewhat subservient stance in relation to the mysterious—and, at times, frustratingly unseen—force that pervades the film’s Val Lewton-ish milieu.

Bloom’s continuing appearance in classical stage roles has definitely contributed to her screen presence. She has acted such Shake-spearean parts as Juliet and Ophelia as well as modern roles such as Blanche DuBois in A Streetcar Named Desire.

Still in demand for screen work by important contemporary directors, she has appeared recently for Stephen Frears in Sammy and Rose Get Laid and for Woody Allen in the ensemble cast of the seriocomic Crimes and Misdemeanors, as well as in Allen’s Mighty Aphrodite. Earlier, she essayed the role of the American divorcée who captures the heart of British writer C. S. Lewis (Joss Ackland) in a television version of William Nicholson’s stage drama Shadowlands—but for Richard Attenborough’s 1993 film of the play, the role was taken by Debra Winger.

Bloom’s most memorable on-screen partner, however, was Richard Burton, with whom she made three films: Alexander the Great, Look Back in Anger, and, most enduringly, The Spy Who Came in from the Cold, based on John Le Carré’s gloomy tale of love doomed by the duplicities of East-West espionage.

—William M. Clements, updated by John McCarty

BOGARDE, (Sir) Dirk

Nationality: British. Born: Derek Jules Gaspard Ulric Niven van den Bogarde in Hampstead, London, England, 29 March 1921. Education: Attended University College School and Allan Glen’s School, Scotland. Military Service: In Far East, 1940–45: lieutenant; Career: 1939—acting debut; 1947—appeared in West End production of Power without Glory; signed seven-year contract with J. Arthur Rank Organisation; 1960s—moved to France; 1977—published first volume of memoirs, A Postillion Struck by Lightning; 1980s—worked in TV, in France and Britain; 1990—returned to England. Awards: Best British Actor, British Academy, for The Servant, 1963; Best British Actor, British Academy, for Darling, 1965; Honorary D. Litt, St. Andrews University, 1985; BFI Fellowship, 1987; British Academy of Film and Television Arts Award for ‘‘outstanding contribution to world cinema,’’ 1990; knighted, 1992.

Films as Actor:

1947 Dancing with Crime (Carstairs) (as policeman)
1948 Esther Waters (Darylmyle and Proud) (as William Latch); ‘‘Alien Corn’’ ep. of Quartet (French) (as George Bland); Once a Jolly Swagman (Maniacs on Wheels) (Jack Lee and McNaughton) (as Bill Fox)
1949 Dear Mr. Prohack (Freeland) (as Charles Prohack); Boys in Brown (Tully) (as Alfie Rawlins)
1950 The Blue Lamp (Dearden) (as Tom Riley); So Long at the Fair (Fisher and Darnborough) (as George Hathaway); The Woman in Question (Five Angles on Murder) (Asquith) (as Bob Baker)
1951 Blackmailed (Marc Allègre) (as Stephen Mundy); Penny Princess (Guest) (as Tony Craig)
1952 Hunted (The Stranger in Between) (Charles Crichton) (as Chris Lloyd); The Gentle Gunman (Dearden) (as Matt Sullivan)
1953 Desperate Moment (Bennett) (as Simon von Halder); Appointment in London (Leacock) (as Wing Commander Tim Mason)
1954 They Who Dare (Milestone) (as Lt. Graham); Doctor in the House (Thomas) (as Dr. Simon Sparrow); *The Sleeping
1955  The Sea Shall Not Have Them (Lewis Gilbert) (as Flight Sgt. Mackay); Simba (Simba—Mark of Mau Mau) (Hurst) (as Alan Howard); Doctor at Sea (Thomas) (as Dr. Simon Sparrow); Cast a Dark Shadow (Lewis Gilbert) (as Edward Bare)

1956  The Spanish Gardener (Leacock) (as Jose)

1957  Ill Met by Moonlight (Night Ambush; Intelligence Service) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Major Patrick Leigh Fermor); Doctor at Large (Thomas) (as Dr. Simon Sparrow); Campbell’s Kingdom (Thomas) (as Bruce Campbell)

1958  The Wind Cannot Read (Thomas) (as Flight Lt. Michael Quinn); A Tale of Two Cities (Thomas) (as Sydney Carton); The Doctor’s Dilemma (Asquith) (as Louis Dubedat)

1959  Libel (Asquith) (as Sir Mark Lodder/Number 15/Frank Welney)

1960  The Angel Wore Red (Johnson) (as Arturo Carrera); Song without End (Charles Vidor) (as Franz Liszt)

1961  The Singer Not the Song (Baker) (as Anacleto); Victim (Dearden) (as Melville Farr)

1962  H.M.S. Defiant (Damn the Defiant!) (Lewis Gilbert) (as First Lt. Scott-Padget); The Password Is Courage (Andrew L. Stone) (as Sergeant Major Charles Coward); We Are in the Navy Now (We Joined the Navy) (Toye) (as Dr. Simon Sparrow); The Mind Benders (Dearden) (as Dr. Henry Longman)

1963  I Could Go On Singing (Neame) (as David Donne); Doctor in Distress (Thomas) (as Dr. Simon Sparrow); The Servant (Losey) (as Hugo Barrett); Hot Enough for June (Agent 8¾) (Thomas) (as Nicholas Whistler); The Epic that Never Was (doc for TV)

1964  King and Country (Losey) (as Captain Hargreaves); The High Bright Sun (McGuire Go Home! (Thomas) (as Major McGuire)

1965  Darling (Schlesinger) (as Robert Gold); Little Moon of Alban (for TV)

1966  Modesty Blaise (Losey) (as Gabriel); Blithe Spirit (for TV)

1967  Our Mother’s House (Clayton) (as Charlie Hook); Accident (Losey) (as Stephen)

1968  Mr. Sebastian (Sebastian) (David Greene) (title role); The Fixer (Frankenheimer) (as Bibikov)
1969  Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Stephen); Justine (Cukor) (as Pursewarden); La caduta degli dei (The Damned) (Visconti) (as Freidrich Bruckman); Upon This Rock (doc for TV) (as Bonnie Prince Charlie)

1971  Morte a Venezia (Death in Venice) (Visconti) (as Gustav von Aschenbach)

1973  Le Serpent (The Serpent; Night Flight from Moscow) (Vernueil) (as Philip Boyle); The Night Porter (Cavani) (as Maximilian Theo Aldorfer)

1975  Permission to Kill (Frankel) (as Alan Curtis)

1977  Providence (Resnais) (as Claude Langham); A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Lt. Gen. Frederick “Boy” Browning); Eine Reise ins Licht (Despair) (Fassbinder) (as Hermann Karlovich); To See Such Fun (Scofield—compilation)

1981  Act of Love (The Patricia Neal Story) (Harvey and Page—for TV) (as Roald Dahl)

1987  The Vision (Norman Stone—for TV) (as James Marriner)

1990  Daddy Nostalgie (Daddy Nostalgia; These Foolish Things) (Tavernier) (as Tommy “Daddy” Russell)

Films as Actor and Scriptwriter:

1986  May We Borrow Your Husband? (Mahoney—for TV) (as William Harris, + sc)

1992  Voices in the Garden (Boutron) (co-sc only)

Publications

By BOGARDE: books—

By BOGARDE: articles—

Interview with G. Gow, in Films and Filming (London), May 1971.

On BOGARDE: books—

On BOGARDE: articles—

* * *

Dirk Bogarde’s career is a classic case of a gradual rise from light matinee idol roles to ones requiring depth and maturity—the latter eventually earning him a knighthood for his contribution to British and world cinema.

A quiet and retiring person in private life, Bogarde started his acting career in 1939 on the stage, only to have it interrupted by war service. After the war, the British Rank Organisation gave him a contract (they were grooming young and promising actors and actresses), and from 1947 to 1961 Bogarde appeared in more than 30 British films. Assuming the nom de screen “Dirk,” a sort of Continental variation on the Hollywood “Rock,” “Troy,” and “Tab,” he starred in a succession of featherweight movies designed to launch him as a teen heartthrob image—which, for years, caused him to be perceived by most critics as a glamour boy of minor talent. He became one of the team of young actors who appeared and reappeared in the highly successful Doctor series of comedies—Doctor in the House, Doctor at Sea, Doctor at Large, and, later, Doctor in Distress. Like most actors who had seen war service, he was in demand for a seemingly endless turnover of war films from Desperate Moment, They Who Dare, and The Sea Shall Not Have Them to Ill Met by Moonlight, H.M.S. Defiant, and The Password Is Courage. He did further service in another action genre, the British crime film—which American audiences tended to find tepid and dull in comparison with American films in a similar vein.

Approaching his forties, Bogarde began to show his maturing capacity to handle more complex and demanding characters in Anthony Asquith’s adaptation of Bernard Shaw’s The Doctor’s Dilemma and Basil Dearden’s Victim, the first British film to deal seriously with the problems of a homosexual in public life. Public recognition of his excellence as an actor was really to come, however, when he teamed up with Joseph Losey to play the key role in The Servant, a part into which he injected a new, dark vein of subtle, insinuating evil as the manservant who secures a Mephistophelian hold over the rich young man he serves. The performance won him a British Academy Award as Best Actor. Now in his forties and independent, Bogarde embarked on a series of singular performances. He was the defending officer in a court martial in Losey’s Paths of Glory variation, King and Country—and the Oxford academic with complex professional and emotional problems in Losey’s Accident. As well, he appeared effectively in such notable films as John Schlesinger’s Darling—for which he won his second British Best Actor award—-Losey’s Modesty Blaise, Jack Clayton’s Our Mother’s House, Richard Attenborough’s Oh! What a Lovely War, and Alain Resnais’s impressive film Providence. Widening his scope still further, Bogarde appeared in a series of arty and experimental films made abroad: Visconti’s controversial The Damned, about the impact of Nazism on a vicious upper-class family; the same director’s exquisite version of Thomas Mann’s Death in Venice; Liliana Cavani’s The Night Porter, as a former Nazi SS concentration camp officer; and, in marked contrast, Fassbinder’s extraordinary film Despair, as a survivor of the Holocaust.

Although Bogarde continues to act from time to time, he has turned increasingly and successfully to writing. Besides novels, he has written four volumes of memoirs, A Postillion Struck by Lightning, Snakes and Ladders, An Orderly Man, and Backcloth, the second volume covering his film career up to Death in Venice (with fascinating details in particular of working with Losey and Visconti) and the third including accounts of the making of Night Porter, Providence, and Despair.

—Roger Manvell, updated by John McCarty

BOGART, Humphrey

Nationality: American. Born: Humphrey DeForest Bogart in New York City, 23 January 1899. Education: Attended Trinity School, New York; expelled from Philips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts. Family: Married 1) Helen Menken, 1926 (divorced 1927); 2) Mary Philips, 1928 (divorced 1938); 3) Mayo Methot, 1938 (divorced 1945); 4) the actress Lauren Bacall, 1945, son: Stephen Humphrey, daughter: Leslie Howard. Career: 1918–19—served in U.S. Navy; 1920–22—managed stage company owned by William S. Brady; performed various chores at Brady’s New York film studio; 1922—began acting regularly on stage; 1930—film debut in short Broadway’s Like That; 1930–35—minor film roles for various studios while continuing to work on stage; 1936—success of film version of The Petrified Forest led to long-term contract with Warner Brothers; 1947—protested against HUAC activities with actress wife Lauren Bacall and other celebrities. Awards: Best Actor Academy Award, for The African Queen, 1951. Died: Of cancer, in Hollywood, California, 14 January 1957.

Films as Actor:

1930 Broadway’s Like That (Roth—short); Up the River (John Ford) (as Steve); A Devil with Women (Cummings) (as Tom Standish)

1931 Body and Soul (Santell) (as Jim Watson); Bad Sister (Henley) (as Valentine Corliss); A Holy Terror (Cummings) (as Steve Nash); Women of All Nations (Walsh) (as Stone)

1932 Love Affair (Freeland) (as Jim Leonard); Big City Blues (LeRoy) (as Adkins); Three on a Match (LeRoy) (as Ace)

1933 Midnight (Erskine) (as Gabrini)

1936 The Petrified Forest (Mayo) (as Duke Mantee); Bullets or Ballots (Keighley) (as Bugs Fenner); Two Against the World (McGann) (as Sherry Scott); China Clipper (Enright) (as Hap Stuart); Isle of Fury (McDonald) (as Val Stevens)

1937 Black Legion (Mayo) (as Frank Taylor); The Great O’Malley (Dieterle) (as John Phillips); Marked Woman (Lloyd Bacon) (as David Graham); Kid Galahad (Curtiz) (as Turkey Morgan); San Quentin (Lloyd Bacon) (as Joe “Red” Kennedy); Dead End (Wyler) (as Baby Face Martin); Stand-In (Garnett) (as Quintain)

1938 Swing Your Lady (Enright) (as Ed Hatch); Crime School (Seiler) (as Mark Braden); Men Are Such Fools (Berkeley) (as Harry Galloian); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak) (as Rock Valentine); Racket Busters (Lloyd Bacon) (as Martin); Angels with Dirty Faces (Curtiz) (as James Frazier)

1939 King of the Underworld (Seiler) (as Joe Gurney); The Oklahoma Kid (Lloyd Bacon) (as Whip McCord); You Can’t Get Away with Murder (Seiler) (as Frank Wilson); Dark Victory (Goulding) (as Michael O’Lery); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh) (as George Hally); The Return of Doctor X (Sherman) (as Dr. Marshall Cane)

1940 Invisible Stripes (Lloyd Bacon) (as Chuck Martin); Virginia City (Curtiz) (as John Murrell); It All Came True (Seiler) (as Grasselli); Brother Orchid (Lloyd Bacon) (as Jack Buck); They Drive By Night (The Road to Frisco) (Walsh) (as Paul Fabrini)

1941 The Maltese Falcon (Huston) (as Sam Spade); High Sierra (Walsh) (as Roy Earle); The Wagons Roll at Night (Enright) (as Nick Coster)

1942 All Through the Night (Sherman) (as Gloves Donahue); In This Our Life (Huston); The Big Shot (Seiler) (as Duke Berne); Across the Pacific (Huston) (as Rick Leland); Casablanca (Curtiz) (as Rick Blaine)

1943 Action in the North Atlantic (Lloyd Bacon) (as Joe Rossi); Thank Your Lucky Stars (David Butler); Sahara (Zoltan Korda) (as Sgt. Joe Gunn)

1944 Passage to Marseilles (Curtiz) (as Martac); To Have and Have Not (Hawks) (as Harry Morgan)

1945 Conflict (Bernhardi) (as Richard Mason)
Humphrey Bogart in The Maltese Falcon

1946 Two Guys from Milwaukee (David Butler); The Big Sleep (Hawks) (as Philip Marlowe); Dead Reckoning (Cromwell) (as Rip Murdock); The Two Mrs. Carrolls (Godfrey) (as Geoffrey Carroll); Dark Passage (Daves) (as Vincent Parry); Always Together (de Cordova)
1947 The Treasure of the Sierra Madre (Huston) (as Fred C. Dobbs); Key Largo (Huston) (as Frank McCloud); Knock on Any Door (Nicholas Ray) (as Andrew Martin); Tokyo Joe (Heisler) (as Joe Barrett)
1948 Chain Lightning (Heisler) (as Matt Brennan); In a Lonely Place (Nicholas Ray) (as Dixon Steele)
1949 The Enforcer (Windust, uncredited Raoul Walsh) (as Martin Ferguson); Sirocco (Bernhardt) (as Harry Smith)
1950 The African Queen (Huston) (as Charlie Allnut); Deadline—U.S.A. (Richard Brooks) (as Ed Hutcheson); The Road to Bali (Walker) (as himself)
1951 Battle Circus (Richard Brooks) (as Major Jeb Webbe); Beat the Devil (Huston) (as Billy Danreuther)
1952 The Love Lottery (Charles Crichton); The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk) (as Captain Queeg); A Star Is Born (Cukor)
1953 (voice only); Sabrina (Wilder) (as Linus Larabee); The Barefoot Contessa (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Harry Dawes)
1954 We’re No Angels (Curtiz) (as Joseph); The Left Hand of God (Dmytryk) (as Jim Carmady); The Desperate Hours (Wyler)
1955 The Harder They Fall (Robson) (as Eddie Willis)
1956 The Love Lottery (Charles Crichton); The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk) (as Captain Queeg); A Star Is Born (Cukor)

Publications

On BOGART: books—

Humphrey Bogart had a privileged upbringing in Manhattan, the son of a noted surgeon; later, he had to leave college for disciplinary reasons. He served during World War I in the Navy, and suffered an injury during shell ing which slightly paralyzed his upper lip, giving him the tight-lipped appearance and the suggestion of hesitancy in his speech that became the hallmark of his screen persona. After the war, he worked in the theater, first as a junior in stage management and later as a performer in youthful, romantic parts. A celebrated review by Alexander Woolcott in 1922 described him in a play called Swiftly as “inaudible.” Nevertheless, during the 1920s he remained in employment, and he had the pertinacity to go to Hollywood when sound required the participation of new, stage-trained performers from Broadway. He constantly returned to the stage when he was dissatisfied with the supporting roles he was given in such films as A Devil with Women, Body and Soul, and Love Affair. The first role characteristic of his future image was in the theater production of Robert E. Sherwood’s semipoetic play The Petrified Forest (1935), which the following year was made into a film by Warner Brothers. Warners intended to give Bogart’s part—the gangster, Duke Mantee—to Edward G. Robinson. That Bogart got the part had to do with the intervention of Leslie Howard, who played the lead in both the play and the film; Howard insisted that Bogart reappear as Duke Mantee. 1936, therefore, marked the first appearance in film of the gaunt, sinister, slow-speaking Bogart persona. Fortunately, the film was successful and drew favorable critical attention.

Bogart was not, however, to become a charismatic star immediately, though he appeared, normally in a gangster role, in an endless flow of films during the next five years, from San Quentin, Crime School, and Racket Busters to Angels with Dirty Faces, King of the Underworld, and The Roaring Twenties. The Bogart image was very marked in William Wyler’s Dead End in which he played a ruthless, cynical gangster rejected alike by his mother and his former girlfriend on his return to the New York slums in which he had been raised. This was followed in 1941 by Raoul Walsh’s High Sierra with an exceptional script by John Huston and performance by Bogart as the aging, disillusioned gangster who has a change of heart. The devotion to “Bogey” was born of such later films as Huston’s The Maltese Falcon, with Bogart as the ruthless but basically human Sam Spade; Michael Curtiz’s Oscar-winning Casablanca, again with Bogart as the rough-surfaced but vulnerable dark horse; and Howard Hawks’s two films To Have and Have Not—Lauren Bacall’s film debut—and The Big Sleep, also with Bacall and with Bogart playing a private eye with a heart. Bogart’s celebrated romance with Bacall led to her becoming his fourth wife.

Bogart’s widening range of characters (which added to his stature as an actor, while increasing the impact of his always recognizable personal style and image) expanded notably under Huston in The Treasure of the Sierra Madre, Key Largo, and The African Queen (the latter gaining him an Oscar); in Nicholas Ray’s In a Lonely Place; in Richard Brooks’s serious story with a newspaper setting, Deadline; and Edward Dmytryk’s The Caine Mutiny, in which he gave one of his finest performances as the paranoid Captain Queeg. He returned to his former gangster role in William Wyler’s The Desperate Hours, and in his last appearance before his premature death in 1957, in Mark Robson’s The Harder They Fall, he played a worn-out sportswriter in the more cynical mood of earlier films.

As Joan Mellen calls Bogart the epitome of a “moral tough guy,” his stardom, considerably shorter than actors such as Cary Grant and Gary Cooper, also presents an irony that none of the other stars of his generation “remains such a lively presence in our imaginations.” Indeed, as Richard Schickel continues to remind us “it is worth lingering at that crossroads and contemplating the evidence about who he was and what he was that was left there in plain sight.” Throughout his career till his death and onward for almost four decades now, the Bogart image and the sense of integrity and courage that image carries prevail at the center of American film history.

—Roger Manvell, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

BOND, Ward

Films as Actor:

1929 Salute (Ford); Words and Music (Tinling)
1930 Born Reckless (Ford); The Big Trail (Walsh)
1932 High Speed (Lederman); White Eagles (Hillyer); Rackety Rax (Werker); Hello, Trouble (Hillyer); Virtue (Buzzell)
1933 When Strangers Meet (Badger); Heroes for Sale (Wellman); Wild Boys of the Road (Wellman); The Wrecker (Rogell); Unknown Valley (Hillyer); Police Car Seventeen (Hillyer); Obey the Law (Stoloff); The Sundown Rider (Hillyer)
1934 Whirlpool (Neill); Most Precious Thing in Life (Hillyer); Straightaway (Brower); The Poor Rich (Sedgwick); Frontier Marshal (Seiler); Broadway Bill (Strictly Confidential) (Capra); It Happened One Night (Capra); The Defense Rests (Hillyer); Fighting Rangers (Seitz); Here Comes the Groom (Sedgwick); The Fighting Code (Hillyer); The Voice in the Night (Coleman); A Man’s Game (Lederman); The Crime of Helen Stanley (Lederman); Girl in Danger (Lederman); The Human Side (Buzzell); Kid Millions (Del Ruth); Against the Law (Hillyer)
1935 Devil Dogs of the Air (Bacon); Little Big Shot (Bischoff); The Informer (Ford); The Crimson Trail (Raboch); She Gets Her Man (Nigh); His Night Out (Nigh); Black Fury (Curtiz); Western Courage (Bennett); Fighting Shadows (Selman); Guard That Girl (Hillyer); Murder in the Fleet (Sedgwick); The Headline Woman (Nigh); Waterfront Lady (Santley); Men of the Night (Hillyer); Justice of the Range (Selman); Too Tough to Kill (Lederman)
1936 Cattle Thief (Bennett); Mass ‘em Up (House of Fate) (Charles Vidor); The Bride Walks Out (Jason); Second Wife (Killy); Without Orders (Landers); Crash Donovan (Nigh); Conflict (Howard); They Met in a Taxi (Green); The Man Who Lived Twice (Lachman); The Legion of Terror (Coleman); The Leathernecks Have Landed (The Marines Have Landed) (Bretheron); Pride of the Marines (Lederman); Avenging Waters (Bennett)
1937 You Only Live Once (Fritz Lang); Dead End (Wyler); Park Avenue Logger (Tall Timber; Millionaire Playboy) (Howard); The Devil’s Playground (Kenton); 23 1/2 Hours Leave (Blystone); Night Key (Corrigan); Escape by Night (McFadden); The Wildcatter (Collins); A Fight to the Finish (Coleman)
1938 Born to Be Wild (Kane); Flight Into Nowhere (Collins); Hawaii Calls (Clinic); Reformatory (Collins); Gun Law (Howard); The Law West of Tombstone (Tryon); Professor Beware (Nugent); Mr. Moto’s Gamble (Tinling); Submarine Patrol (Ford); Prison Break (Lubin); Numbered Woman (Karl Brown); Over the Wall (MacDonald); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak)
1939 They Made Me a Criminal (Berkeley); Made for Each Other (Bean); Dodge City (Curtiz); Waterfront (Morse); Gone with the Wind (Fleming); Trouble in Sundown (Howard); Return of the Cisco Kid (Leeds); Young Mr. Lincoln (John Ford); Frontier Marshal (Dwan); The Girl from Mexico (Goodwins); The Kid from Kokomo (The Orphan of the Ring) (Seiler); Drums along the Mohawk (John Ford); Dust Be My Destiny (Seiler); The Oklahoma Kid (Bacon); Heaven with a Barbed Wire Fence (Cortez); Mr. Moto in Danger Island (Leeds)
1940 Virginia City (Curtiz); The Cisco Kid and the Lady (Leeds); The Grapes of Wrath (John Ford); Little Old New York (King); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz); Buck Benny Rides Again (Sandrich); The Mortal Storm (Borzage); Kit Carson (Seitz); The Long Voyage Home (John Ford)
1941 Tobacco Road (John Ford); A Man Betrayed (Auer); The Shepherd of the Hills (Hathaway); Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Renoir); Sergeant York (Hawks); Manpower (Walsh); Doctors Don’t Tell (Tourelle); Wild Hickok Rides (Enright); The Maltese Falcon (Huston)
1942 The Falcon Takes Over (Reis); In This Our Life (Huston); Ten Gentlemen from West Point (Hathaway); Gentleman Jim (Walsh); Sin Town (Enright)
1943 Hello Frisco, Hello (Humberstone); A Guy Named Joe (Fleming); Hitler—Dead or Alive (Grinde); Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles); They Came to Blow Up America (Ludwig); Cowboy Commandos (Luby)
1944 Home in Indiana (Hathaway); The Sullivans (Bacon); Tall in the Saddle (Marin)
1945 Dakota (Kane); They Were Expendable (John Ford)
1946 Canyon Passage (Jacques Tourneur); It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra); My Darling Clementine (John Ford)
1947 The Fugitive (John Ford); Unconquered (DeMille)
1948 Fort Apache (John Ford); The Time of Your Life (Potter); Tap Roots (Marshall); Joan of Arc (Fleming); Three Godfathers (John Ford)
1950 Riding High (Marshall); Wagonmaster (John Ford); Singing Guns (Springsteen); The Great Missouri Raid (Douglas); Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye (Douglas)
Ward Bond (right) with Jack Holt, John Wayne, and Robert Montgomery in They Were Expendable

1951 Operation Pacific (Waggner); Only the Valiant (Douglas); On Dangerous Ground (Nicholas Ray)

1952 Hellgate (Warren); Thunderbirds (Auer); The Quiet Man (John Ford)

1953 Blowing Wild (Fregonese); The Moonlighter (Rowland); Hondo (Farrow)

1954 Gypsy Colt (Marton); Johnny Guitar (Nicholas Ray); The Bob Mathias Story (The Flaming Torch) (Lyon)

1955 The Long Gray Line (John Ford); Mr. Roberts (John Ford); A Man Alone (Milland)

1956 The Searchers (John Ford); Dakota Incident (Foster); Pillars of the Sky (Marshall)

1957 The Wings of Eagles (John Ford); The Halliday Brand (Lewis)

1958 China Doll (Borzage)

1959 Rio Bravo (Hawks); Alias Jesse James (McLeod)

Publications

On BOND: books—

See entry on John Ford in International Dictionary of Films and Filmmakers, Volume 2: Directors.

On BOND: articles

* * * *

Ward Bond acted best what he was in reality: a dyed-in-the-wool social and political conservative, a perfect expression of the American West. He proudly displayed his extreme right-wing views during the 1940s and 1950s when he worked for the still relatively liberal John Ford, and he set himself up for some merciless kidding from his mentor. In fact, Ford went beyond mere “kidding.” His papers at the Lilly Library at Indiana University again and again exhibit a contempt for Bond, and that attitude had something to do with the kinds of roles that Ford, from among his company of stock players, chose Bond to play.

In the early films the conservative Bond is usually cast by Ford as an unimaginative and stolid foil to a rebellious John Wayne—the Wayne persona, if not the man himself. In the later films Wayne himself assumes the role of the inflexible man; there is no need for a Bond figure in, say, The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance.

There are a number of films in which Ford achieves his “balance” in this way. In The Three Godfathers the bank robber (played by Wayne) is set in opposition to the conventional lawman-in-pursuit (played by Bond). The two even fight over the unusual name given the lawman’s grandchild, who has been christened and adopted by the bank robber. Again, it is a fight between the supporter of social order (Bond) against the disrupter from the desert (Wayne). As sheriff, Bond is, at once, the gravel-voiced commander and the always-joking upholder of the status quo.

In The Quiet Man Bond plays a priest. Set as he is against the fiery personalities of Wayne and Victor McLagen, Bond is nothing more than the stuffy representative of an anachronistic Irish Catholicism. The demands of this particular part, however, seem to be beyond him. The stiffness with which he plays the part of an intriguer demonstrates not only his limitations as an actor, but also his inability as a person to play, even for a moment, the social Other. Only in pious poses and (as the film’s narrator) in priestly tones is Bond at ease.

In Wagonmaster Ford fully exploits the dominant aspect of Bond’s persona—the organization man. He portrays a Mormon elder, the intractable punisher of sin—sin in the form of a young sinner who has joined the wagon train to Zion—and here the portrayal is completely successful. In this unsettling film Bond becomes the pivotal emblem for all that is reactionary in our society—the American Patriarch. This figure represents only one part of Ford’s vision of America. But it was a part—one piece among many others—that Bond embodied to perfection.

—Rodney Farnsworth

BONDARCHUK, Sergei

Died: Of blood disease, in Moscow, Russia, 20 October 1994.

Films as Director:

1954 It Mustn’t Be Forgotten (This Must Not Be Forgotten) (Lukov) (as Garmash)
1955 Popiginya (The Gadfly; The Grasshopper) (Samsonov) (as Dr. Dymov); Neokonchennaya povest (The Unfinished Tale; Unfinished Story) (Ermier) (as Yershov)
1956 Othello (Yutkevich) (title role); Ivan Franko (Levchuk) (title role)
1957 Two from the Same Block (Two from One Housing Block) (Gurin and Ibragimov); Pages from the Story (Kryzhanovsky) (as Stage reader)
1958 Shi sodaty (The Soldier Marched) (Trauberg) (as Matvei Krylov)
1959 A Spring Wind on Venaya (as narrator)
1960 Seryozha (A Summer to Remember) ((Danelia and Talankin) (as Korostelyov); Era notte a Roma (It Was Night in Rome) (Rossellini) (as Fyodor)
1961 Povest plamennyykh (Story of the Turbulent Years; The Flaming Years; Chronicle of Flaming Years) (Soltseva) (as narrator)
1969 Bitka na Neretvi (Battle of Neretva) (Bulajic) (as Martin)
1970 Dyadya Vanya (Uncle Vanya) (Mikhalkov-Konchalovsky) (as Dr. Astrov)
1973 Molchaniye Doktoraevens (The Silence of Dr. Evans) (Metalnikov) (as Dr. Evans)
1974 Such High Mountains (Soltseva) (as Ivan Nikolayevich)
1975 The Choice of a Goal (Talankin) (as Kurchatov)
1989 La Bataille des trois rois (Barka)

Films as Actor:

1948 The Young Guard (Gerasimov) (as Valko); The Story of a Real Man (Stolper) (as Gvozdev); Michurin (Dovzhenko)
1949 The Path of Glory (Buneev, Rybakov, and Shveitser) (as Tutarinov)
1950 A Knight of the Gold Star (The Bearer of the Golden Star) (Raizman) (as Tutarinov)
1951 Taras Shevchenko (Savchenko) (title role)
1953 Admiral Ushakov and The Ships Are Storming the Bastions (Attack from the Sea) (Romm) (as Tikhon Prokoviev)

Publications

By BONDARCHUK: books—
Za družeskie diskuşsii, Moscow, 1959.
Zhelanie chuda, Moscow, 1984.

By BONDARCHUK: articles—
Interview in Film a doba (Prague), October 1972.
Interview with S. Tschertok, in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), April 1975.
“Ot serdca k serdcu,” in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), May 1980.
On BONDARCHUK: books—

Shalunovsky, V., Sergei Bondarchuk, Moscow, 1959.
Khaniutin, I., Sergei Bondarchuk, Moscow, 1961.
Ignateva, N. Sergei Bondarchuk, Moscow, 1961.

On BONDARCHUK: articles—

Lind, John, “The Road to Waterloo,” in Focus on Film (London), September-October 1970.

Sergei Bondarchuk made his film acting debut as a stock company player while still attending film school in Moscow. One of his earliest important roles was in Gerasimov’s The Young Guard. But Bondarchuk’s undisputed talent only became evident in his seventh feature, Taras Shevchenko, in which he played the great Ukrainian poet of that name who also wrote the script. The deficiencies of Shevchenko’s imperfect screenplay made Bondarchuk’s introductory scenes seem cold and rhetorical, but in the scenes from the close of the author’s life on through the final exile episode, showing the inhumanity of the czar’s soldiers, Bondarchuk succeeded on his own in raising the film to a truly tragic level.

Bondarchuk’s acclaim in this role, and his being given the title of State Artist in 1952, made him one of the most prominent actors in the Soviet Union. Yet with the exception of Samsonov’s The Grasshopper, in which he starred as a physician locked in a marriage with a woman unimpressed by his devotion to duty and achievements for the common folk, most of his films of the 1950s were not as impressive as his early success had promised—even though he was given important parts in films by most of the country’s best directors, including Yutkevich’s Othello, one of the first Soviet filmings of a Shakespeare play.

Bondarchuk’s interest in Sholokhov’s story “The Destiny of Man,” about the struggles of people to maintain some vestige of their former lives while surrounded by war, pushed him to direct as well as star in the film version. The result was a successful blending of Bondarchuk’s already-recognized thespian talents with—for an actor and first-time director—a stunningly cinematic visual style. This led to the Lenin Prize and a succession of films as actor and director in both the Soviet Union and abroad.

The overall result of these personal triumphs led Bondarchuk to attempt a definitive film version of Tolstoy’s massive work War and Peace. One of the most expensive (estimates reach as high as $100 million) and exquisitely staged Soviet films, the ambitious undertaking took two years to reach the screen. The immense scope of the film, which ran more than eight hours in its original version and was shown in Soviet cinemas over several nights, was amply balanced by Bondarchuk’s poetic vision of the broad spaces of the Russian landscape. For sheer spectacle, its battle scenes have yet to be surpassed. Bondarchuk himself played the key role of Pierre Bezukhov, Tolstoy’s intellectual hero and mouthpiece. Though some critics felt him too old for the part, Bondarchuk won the Moscow Festival Prize for his performance. The film itself, released abroad in a slightly scaled down six-hour version, also shown over several nights, captured the 1968 Oscar for best foreign film.

Bondarchuk followed War and Peace with another epic, Waterloo, for Dino De Laurentis, in which he took only a small role. It too was highlighted by battles scenes of bravura size and spectacle, and caused him to be compared with Orson Welles, who also had a small role in the film, because of their both being actor/directors, their robust appearance, and their grandiosity of purpose.

The film was not a hit, however. Moreover, Bondarchuk had been unable to control the volcanic temperament of his scenery-chewing star, Rod Steiger (as Napoleon). Thereafter, he retreated to his native industry where his autonomy was assured; most of his subsequent films received little exposure elsewhere. They included smaller scale projects inspired by Chekhov and Sholokhov, and a return to the epic format with the two-part Mexico in Flames, a film based on the career of the journalist John Reed, the only American to be honored with burial in the Kremlin. A Soviet counterpart and response to Warren Beatty’s Hollywoodized Reds, the film chronicles the maverick Reed’s exploits covering and participating in both the Russian and Mexican revolutions.

Bondarchuk’s work as both actor and director typically focuses on sturdy characters full of mental stamina and patriotic pathos with a credo that is indomitably optimistic. At the time of his death in 1994, Bondarchuk had become a living monument in Soviet film, and arguably its most important figure since that earlier Sergei named Eisenstein.

—Karel Tabery, updated by John McCarty

BONHAM-CARTER, Helena

Nationality: British. Born: London, England, 26 May 1966; great-granddaughter of Liberal Prime Minister Lord Herbert Asquith, granddaughter of socialite Lady Violet Bonham Carter and granddaughter of the director Anthony Asquith. Education: Attended South Hampstead High School; Westminster School. Career: Made screen debut when chosen by director Trevor Nunn for the title role in Lady Jane, and began association with director James Ivory when cast in A Room with a View, 1986; made her London stage debut in The Woman in White, 1988. Awards: Best Performance by an Actress in a Leading Role Genie Award, Fantasporto-Best Actress International Fantasy Film Award, for Margaret’s Museum, 1995; London Critics Circle British Actress of the Year, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actress, National Board of Review Best Actress, Boston Society of Film Critics Best Actress, Society of Texas Film Critics Best Actress, Southeastern Film Critics Association Best Actress, for The Wings of the Dove, 1997. Agent: Adam Isaacs, United Talent Agency, 9560 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1983 A Pattern of Roses (for TV) (as Netty)
1986 Lady Jane (Nunn) (title role); A Room with a View (Ivory) (as Lucy Honeychurch)
1987 Maurice (Ivory) (as young lady at cricket match); The Vision (Norman Stone—for TV) (as Jo Marriner); A Hazard of Hearts (John Hough—for TV) (as Serena Staverley)
1988 La Maschera (The Mask) (Infascelli) (as Iris)
1989 Francesco (Caviani) (as Chiara); Getting It Right (Kleiser) (as Lady Minerva Munday)
1990 Hamlet (Zeffirelli) (as Ophelia)
1991 Where Angels Fear to Tread (Sturridge) (as Caroline Abbott)
1992 Howards End (Ivory) (as Helen Schlegel)
1993 Fatal Deception: Mrs. Lee Harvey Oswald (Marina’s Story) (Dornhelm—for TV) (as Marina Oswald)
1994 *Mary Shelley’s Frankenstei*n (Branagh) (as Elizabeth); A Dark-Adapted Eye (Fywell—for TV) (as adult Faith)
1995 Mighty Aphrodite (Woody Allen) (as Amanda); Margaret’s Museum (Ransen) (as Margaret MacNeil)
1996 Twelfth Night (Trevor Nunn) (as Olivia); Portraits chinois (Shadow Play) (Dugowson) (as Ada)
1997 The Wings of the Dove (Softley) (as Cate Croy); Keep the Aspidistra Flying (A Merry War) (Bierman) (as Rosemary); The Petticoat Expeditions (as Narrator)
1998 The Theory of Flight (Greengrass) (as Jane Hatchard); Merlin (Barron—for TV) (as Morgan Le Fay); The Revengers’ Comedies (Mowbray) (as Karen Knightly)
1999 Fight Club (Fincher) (as Marla Singer); Carnivale (Taylor (as Milly); Women Talking Dirty (Griedroyc) (as Cora); The Nearly Complete and Utter History of Everything (Humphreys, Jackson, Lipsey—for TV)
2000 Novocaine (Atkins); Till Human Voices Wake Us (Petroni)
When one thinks of Merchant/Ivory/Jhabvala and E. M. Forster, one also thinks of Helena Bonham-Carter. Other actors, including Emma Thompson, Anthony Hopkins, James Wilby, and Hugh Grant, have appeared in more than one James Ivory-directed feature beginning in the mid-1980s. But it seems as if Bonham-Carter had been in them all.

Early in her career, Bonham-Carter most often acted on screen in period costume. This was the case in her first starring film, Lady Jane, directed by Trevor Nunn and set in sixteenth-century England. She is well-cast as Lady Jane Grey, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Suffolk: the ill-equipped, ill-fated adolescent who, as the result of political intrigue, is forced into marriage with Guilford Dudley (Cary Elwes), son of the Duke of Northumberland, and ends up on the throne of England for barely a week before being executed. Bonham-Carter adequately expresses Lady Jane’s initial shyness and naïveté; the actress believably portrays the character’s transformation as Lady Jane coming to envision a far more equitable world. At this point in her career, one can see Bonham-Carter cast as Juliet in Franco Zeffirelli’s Romeo and Juliet.

In Forster’s A Room with a View, her first film with Ivory, Bonham-Carter gives a thoughtful performance as Lucy Honeychurch, a wealthy, detached young woman who has traveled to Florence in the company of her fastidious aunt (Maggie Smith). As in Lady Jane, Bonham-Carter’s character undergoes an emancipation as she becomes involved in a romantic relationship. After this promising start, however, Bonham-Carter faltered. In Ivy and Forster’s Howards End she is just one of an ensemble, with her fellow actors—including Hopkins, Thompson, Vanessa Redgrave, and Samuel West—cast in the juicier roles. As a result, Bonham-Carter registers on screen as little more than a kewpie doll presence. The actress especially suffers when cast opposite strong, naturalistic performers. This is most apparent in Kenneth Branagh’s Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein, in which she is Dr. Frankenstein’s love interest, whom he turns into a monster reminiscent of Elsa Lanchester in The Bride of Frankenstein. She is the weak link in a cast headed by Branagh (as Dr. Frankenstein) and Robert De Niro (as the Frankenstein monster). After Lady Jane and A Room with a View, Bonham-Carter’s best early career period—film performance came in Where Angels Fear to Tread (based on an E. M. Forster novel but directed by Charles Sturridge rather than Ivory). Here, she is cast as another repressed young Englishwoman who gets in touch with her emotions when she becomes involved romantically.

Bonham-Carter on occasion has appeared in more contemporary settings, most successfully in Getting It Right, in which she plays an eccentric, unstable young lady; The Theory of Flight, cast as a fiesty paraplegic, dying of Lou Gehrig’s disease, who is desperate to lose her virginity; and Fight Club, one of her higher-profile late 1990s features, in which she elicits a plucky sensuality as a chainsmoking hipster/faker who is first seen lying her way into twelve-step support groups. However, in the latter, her role is secondary to those played by Edward Norton and Brad Pitt. And she barely registers when cast as characters who aren’t quirky flakes. In Robert Bierman’s adaptation of George Orwell’s Keep the Aspidistra Flying (retitled A Merry War), she is unmemorable as the level-headed girlfriend of ad man/artist wannabe Richard E. Grant. In Woody Allen’s Mighty Aphrodite, she has the far less interesting of the two leading female roles. She is a Manhattan art gallery owner, married to Allen’s sportswriter, with the scenario set in motion when the couple decides to adopt a baby. The film’s showcase role is played by Mira Sorvino, cast as the loopy prostitute who is the child’s birth mother.

Bonham-Carter gave what is by far her most full-bodied performance to date in a film that might have been made by James Ivory: Iain Softley’s adaptation of Henry James’s The Wings of the Dove, playing Kate Croy, the penniless relation of her wealthy aunt. Kate is being courted by a rich boor, but has fallen deeply in love with Merton Densher (Linus Roache), no child of the upper class but rather a hopelessly poor journalist—and she is faced with a romantic predicament on which rides her future and her happiness. Softley’s telling of the story features a hot-and-heavy, between-the-sheets sensuality that surely would have Henry James twisting in his grave.

As Bonham-Carter’s career progresses, she might be best advised to seek out characters who have, at the story’s outset, experienced more of life. She did just that in Fight Club, and also in Margaret’s Museum, a low-profile Canadian film in which she plays an embittered small-town woman who despises the local mines, and is wooed and won by a former miner. And if she is to sustain her stardom, Bonham-Carter also must choose her projects with care. In the barely releasable Women Talking Dirty, she plays a spunky single mother opposite Gina McKee’s shy cartoonist. The scenario focuses on the friendship between the two women; actually, they do very little “talking dirty” but instead suffer at the hands of almost all the men they know, who are collectively cruel and manipulative. Those who feel compelled to indiscriminately male-bash not only will like Women Talking Dirty but will cheer the film. At the same time, it will be dismissed by those who are looking for a film that is more complex and mature, that does not just aspire to take pot-shots at an entire sex. A film like Women Talking Dirty serves neither its audience nor an actress of the stature of Bonham-Carter.

—Rob Edelman

BONNAIRE, Sandrine

Nationality: French. Born: Clermont-Ferrand (some sources say Gannat), 31 May 1967. Family: Daughter with actor William Hurt. Awards: César Award for Most Promising Young Actress, for À nos amours, 1984; César Award for Best Actress, and Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actress Award, for Sans toit ni loi, 1986; Volpi Cup (with Isabelle Huppert) for Best Actress, Venice Film Festival, for La Cérémonie, 1995. Address: c/o CINEART, 36 rue de Ponthieu, 75008, Paris, France.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Le tout cinéma (Courant)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>La Boum 2 (Pinoteau)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>À nos amours (To Our Loves) (Pialat) (as Suzanne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Tir à vue (Fire on Sight) (Angelo) (as Marilyn); Blanche et Marie (Renard) (as Marie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Sans toit ni loi (Vagabond) (Varda) (as Mona Bergeron); Le meilleur de la vie (Victor)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Police (Pialat) (as Lydie); Sous le soleil de Satan (Under Satan’s Sun; Under the Sun of Satan) (Pialat) (as Mouchette); La puritaine (The Prude) (Doillon) (as Manon)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Les innocents (Téchiné) (as Jeanne); Jaune revolver (Langlois)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Quelques jours avec moi (A Few Days with Me) (Sautet) (as Francine); Peaux de vaches (Thin Skinned) (Mazuy) (as Annie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>La captive du désert (Captive of the Desert; Prisoner of the Desert) (Depardon); Monsieur Hire (Leconte) (as Alice)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Dans la soirée (Verso sera and Towards Evening) (Archibugi) (as Stella)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Le ciel de Paris (The Sky Above Paris) (Béna) (as Suzanne)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Prague (Sellari) (as Elena); La peste (The Plague) (Puenzo) (as Martine Rambert)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Jeanne la pucelle (in two parts: Les Batailles and Les Prisons) (Rivette) (as Jeanne d’Arc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Confidences à un inconnu (Secrets Shared with a Stranger) (Bardawil) (as Natalia); La Cérémonie (Chabrol) (as Sophie)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Sandrine Bonnaire (right) with Isabelle Huppert in La Ceremonie

1996  Never Ever (The Circle of Passion) (Finch) (as Katherine Beaufort)
1997  Secret défense (Rivette) (as Sylvie); Voleur de vie (Stolen Life) (Angelo) (as Olga); Une femme en blanc (mini—for TV) (as Margaux Dampierre); La Lettre (—for TV)
1999  John Felton (Thomasson); Est-Ouest (East-West) (Wargnier) (as Marie); Au coeur du mensonge (The Color of Lies) (Chabrol) (as Vivianne Sterne)

Publications

By BONNAIRE: articles—

Interview in Cinéma 85/86 (Paris), no. 332, 4 December 1985.

On BONNAIRE: articles—

In that way that French actresses seem to rise fully formed out of a mysterious wellspring—from the young Deneuve and Bardot, to the Isabelle Huppert and Adjani—a performer already in command of considerable powers emerged from Maurice Pialat’s 1983 film À Nos Amours. Sandrine Bonnaire was just fifteen years old when she made À Nos Amours, yet her presence in the film shows an immediate understanding of acting for the camera: she-withholds the obvious from the audience, she watches the other actors, she listens and waits. Her physical presence, too, was intriguing, a hard-edged, almost mannish face topping a voluptuous body. ‘Everything was there,’ observed critic David Thomson, ‘without coyness or boasting. From shot to shot, nearly, she seemed to be shifting in mood and age. Here was a phenomenon of acting.’

She won a César as best newcomer for the role, but more importantly she won entry into the company of France’s top auteurs—and she has since stuck to the path of film-as-art rather than indulging in more commercial European fare. She made two more films with Pialat, more than holding her own in a supporting role opposite Gerard Dépardieu in the rough crime film Police (1984); the female lead went to another teenage icon, Sophie Marceau, who had starred in La Boum 2 (1982), a smash hit that gave Bonnaire one of her first small roles. Bonnaire also sifted through the miasma of Pialat’s controversial Cannes winner Under Satan’s Sun (1987). Teamed again with Dépardieu, she played a temp-tress to his tortured country priest—two intensely committed performances made rather difficult to appreciate through the philosophical (and visual) murk.

But her most extraordinary performance while still a teenager came in Agnes Varda’s Vagabond (1985), one of the best French films of the decade. Her character, a flinty, unreadable drifter, is discovered dead, in a frozen ditch, as the film opens. What follows is an episodic, cool-minded account of how she got there, from narrator Varda’s opening speculation that ‘It seems to me she came from the sea’ through a series of heartbreakingly mundane encounters. Bonnaire gives one of the least sentimental performances ever delivered by an actress, refusing to soften or explain her character’s decision to exist, as the original French title has it, ‘without roof or law.’ She won the César award for best actress.

Her extraordinary early run was not yet finished. In 1989 she was the object of Michel Blanc’s gaze in Monsieur Hire, Patrice Leconte’s superb adaptation of a Georges Simenon story. Blanc plays a pesty Peeping Tom who watches the beautiful woman in the window across from him; Bonnaire does an uncanny job of maintaining the woman’s mystery, even after she has become a flesh-and-blood presence in the voyeur’s life. The film’s immaculately cold style suited Bonnaire, and indeed the actress has a coolness that permeates her varied roles. This may be one of the reasons she has had only limited success as a popular star outside Europe.

One fling at international co-production was the unfortunate The Plague (1991), directed by Luis Puenzo. A garbled adaptation of the Camus novel, set in South America, the film received only limited distribution. It did introduce Bonnaire to her domestic partner, co-star William Hurt, with whom she has a daughter, Jeanne.

Another Jeanne was on the horizon, this time the maid of Orleans, courtesy of director Jacques Rivette. Bonnaire was cast as Joan of Arc, the 15th century virgin-general-saint, in the lengthy two-part film Jeanne la Pucelle (1991). The always-inventive Rivette might have had Vagabond in mind, for this is another perfect joining of Bonnaire’s intelligent yet distant style with an enigmatic character. Leaner in appearance now, with her sculpted cheekbones jutting out of her determined face, Bonnaire gave the part not wild-eyed fervor (as Luc Besson and Milla Jovovich would later in the decade) but a confident calm. And in Rivette’s telling, which allows for comic asides that deflate the usual pomposity of historical epics, Bonnaire can let Joan giggle girlishly at herself, seeing her blond hair cut away into a boyish bob.

Jeanne la Pucelle was not widely distributed outside France, but Bonnaire found international audiences again with Claude Chabrol’s chilling La Cérémonie (1995). Cast as an illiterate housemaid in a stuffy upper-class home in Brittany, Bonnaire brought her focused sangfroid to another study of dangerous anomie. Janet Maslin revealed, “Chabrol suggested she think of her character as a vegetable. She chose to imagine herself as a stiff and featureless leek.” Bonnaire shared the Venice festival best actress award with co-star Isabelle Huppert, who played a trouble-making hot pepper to Bonnaire’s slow leek.

In 1999, Bonnaire took the lead role in a film designed for a much broader audience than her usual fare, Régis Wargnier’s Oscar nominee East-West. As a French mother who voluntarily travels to the Soviet Union with her Russian husband in 1946, Bonnaire is able to suffer nobly when the Soviet bear closes its jaws on her unsuspecting family. The casting is curious, since the film is broad and sentimental, while Bonnaire never takes easy emotional short-cuts; yet there is never a doubt that the actress, as in the remainder of her vaguely unsettling career, has her fingers firmly on the nape of her character’s neck.

—Robert Horton

BORGINE, Ernest

Ernest Borgnine in The Devil’s Rain

Films as Actor:

1951 China Corsair (Nazzaro) (as Hu Chang); The Whistle at Eaton Falls (Siodmak) (as Bill Street); The Mob (Parrish) (as Joe Castro)
1953 The Stranger Wore a Gun (de Toth) (as Bull Slager); From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann) (as Mike Radin)
1954 Johnny Guitar (Nicholas Ray) (as Bart Lonergan); Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves) (as Strabo); The Bounty Hunter (de Toth) (as Rachin); Vera Cruz (Aldrich) (as Donnegan)
1955 Bad Day at Black Rock (John Sturges) (as Coley Trimble); Marty (Delbert Mann) (title role); Run for Cover (Nicholas Ray) (as Morgan); Violent Saturday (Fleischer) (as Stad); The Last Command (Lloyd) (as Mike Radin); The Square Jungle (Jerry Hopper) (as Bernie Browne)
1956 Jubal (Daves) (as Shep Horgan); The Catered Affair (Richard Brooks) (as Tom Hurley); The Best Things in Life Are Free (Curtiz) (as Lew Brown)
1957 Three Brave Men (Dunne) (as Bernie Goldsmith)
1958 The Vikings (Fleischer) (as King Ragnar); The Badlanders (Daves) (as John McBain); Torpedo Run (Pevney) (as Lt. Archer Sloan)
1959 The Rabbit Trap (Leacock) (as Eddie Colt)
1960 Man on a String (de Toth) (as Boris Mitrov); Pay or Die (Wilson) (as Lt. Joseph Petrosino)
1961 Go Naked in the World (MacDougall) (as Pete Stratton); Il re di Poggioreale (Coletti); Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica); Barabba (Barabbas) (Fleischer) (as Lucius); Season of Passion (Norman) (as Roo); I briganti italiani (Les Guerilleros) (Camerini)
1964 McHale’s Navy (Montagne) (as Lt. Cdr. Quinton McHale)
1966 Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich) (as Trucker Cobb); The Oscar (Rouse) (as Barney Yale)

1967 The Dirty Dozen (Aldrich) (as Gen. Worden); Chuka (Doug-las) (as Sgt. Otto Hahnhsbach)

1968 The Legend of Lylah Clare (Aldrich) (as Barney Sheean); The Split (Flemingy) (as Bert Clinger); Ice Station Zebra (John Sturges) (as Boris Vaslov)

1969 The Wild Bunch (Peckinpah) (as Dutch Engstrom); Vengeance Is Mine (Buchs)

1970 Los desperados (A Bullet for Sandoval) (Buchs) (as Don Pedro Sandoval); The Adventurers (Gilbert) (as Fat Cat); Suppose They Gave a War and Nobody Came? (War Games) (Averback) (as Sheriff Harve)

1971 Willard (Daniel Mann) (as Al Martin); Rain for a Dus-ty Summer (Lubin) (as dictator); Hennie Caulder (Kennedy) (as Emmett Clemens); Un uomo dalla pelle dura (Ripped-Off, The Boxer) (Prosperi)

1972 The Revengers (Daniel Mann) (as Hoop); The Poseidon Adventure (Neame) (as Mike Rogo); Bunny O’Hare (Oswald) (as Bill Green)

1973 The Neptune Factor (An Underwater Odyssey; The Neptune Disaster) (Petrie) (as Don “Mack” MacKay); Emperor of the North Pole (Emperor of the North) (Aldrich) (as Shack)

1974 Law and Disorder (Passer) (as Cy)

1975 Sunday in the Country (Trent) (as Adam Smith); The Devil’s Rain (Fuest) (as Corbis); Hustle (Aldrich) (as Santoro)

1976 Natale in Casa di Appuntamento (Christmas at the Brothel) (Nannuzzi); Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner); Shoot (Hart) (as Lou)

1977 The Prince and the Pauper (Crossed Swords) (Fleischer) (as John Canty); The Greatest (Gries) (as Angelo Dundee)

1978 The Cops and Robin (Reisner—for TV); Convoy (Peckinpah) (as Lyle Wallace)

1979 The Black Hole (Nelson) (as Harry Booth); Ravagers (Compton) (as Rann); The Double McGuffin (Camp) (as Firat)

1980 When Time Ran Out (Earth’s Final Fury) (Goldstone) (as Tom Conti)

1981 Escape from New York (Coppola) (as Cabbie); Deadly Blessing (Craven) (as Isaiah); High Risk (Raffill) (as Clint); Super Fuzz (Supersnooper) (Corbucci) (as Willy Dunlop)

1982 Young Warriors (Foldes) (as Lt. Bob Carrigan); Blood Feud (Newell—for TV); Carpool (Swackhamer—for TV) (as Mickey Doyle)

1984 The White Stallion (Fournier); Codename Wildgeese (Dawson) (as Fletcher); Love Leads the Way (Delbert Mann)

1985 The Dirty Dozen: The Next Mission (McLaglen—for TV) (as Gen. Worden); Alice in Wonderland (Harry Harris) (as Lion)

1986 Manhunt (Ludman) (as Ben Robeson); Isola del tesoro (Dawson)

1987 Skeleton Coast (Coast of Skeletons) (Cardos) (as Col. Smith); The Dirty Dozen: The Deadly Mission (Katzin—for TV) (as Gen. Worden)

1988 The Dirty Dozen: The Fatal Mission (Katzin—for TV) (as Gen. Worden); Spike of Bensonhurst (Morrissey) (as Baldo Cacetti); Jake Spanner, Private Eye (Katzin—for TV)

1989 Octavio (Deodato—for TV); Turnaround

1990 Laser Mission (Soldier of Fortune) (Davis) (as Prof. Braun); Any Man’s Death (Clegg—for TV) (as Gantz); Last Match (Ludman); The Opponent (Martino) (as Victor); Appear-ances (Phelps—for TV) (as Emil Danzig); Moving Target (Mattei) (as Captain Morrison); Tides of War (Rossati)

1992 Mistress (Primus) (as himself)

1993 Tieraerztin Christine (Retzer—for TV) (as Dr. Gruber); Der Blaue Diamant (Retzer—for TV) (as Hans Kroger)

1995 The Legend of O. B. Taggett; Tieraerztin Christine II (Retzer—for TV) (as Dr. Gruber); Captiva Island (Biffar)

1996 All Dogs Go to Heaven 2 (Sabella, Leker) (voice)

1997 McHale’s Navy (Spicer) (as Cobra); Gattaca (Niccol) (as Caesar)

1998 BASEketball (Zucker) (as Ted Denslow)

Publications

On BORGNI: articles—

Ecran (Paris), July 1978.

Films Illustrated (London), June 1981.

*   *   *

Ernest Borgnine, best known as a supporting player, has one of the most familiar faces in movies and television. It is a difficult one to forget; burly, gap-toothed, and pug-ugly, with bushy black eyebrows, and a smile that can suggest warmhearted affability or gleeful sadism. Borgnine has won acclaim playing roles appropriate to both smiles.

Portrayals in two Academy Award-winning films display these sides of his screen persona. In 1953, he co-starred as the brutal sergeant “Fatso” Judson who got his kicks treading on Frank Sinatra in From Here to Eternity. But two years later Borgnine, usually associated with villainous roles, especially in Westerns, did an about-face and won the Best Actor award as the lonely, gentle butcher in 1957's Marty, a part he got by default when Rod Steiger, the actor who originated the character of Marty in Paddy Chayefsky's award-winning television drama, was unable to do the film version because he was busy making the film version of the hit Broadway musical Oklahoma! Borgnine’s familiarity with audiences stems in part from his stint on the long-running television sitcom McHale’s Navy (1962–66), in which he starred as the scheming but good-hearted Captain McHale, playing mother hen to a wacky crew of misfits. Borgnine returned to series television in 1995, playing opposite comic Jonathan Silverman in the NBC sitcom The Single Guy.

In films, however, Borgnine’s commanding presence has been put to its best use in menacing or villainous roles. One of his most memorable performances was as a weary member of a doomed gang of outlaws in a changing West in the Sam Peckinpah classic The Wild Bunch, which underwent a major restoration and theatrical rerelease in 1995 to mark the film’s 25th anniversary. Whether in Westerns, disaster films, or biblical epics, Borgnine is at his most sublime when in a lumbering, blustering rage.

—Donald Liebenson, updated by John McCarty
BRANAGH, Kenneth

Films as Actor:
1982 Too Late to Talk to Billy (Paul Seed—for TV)
1983 To the Lighthouse (Colin Gregg—for TV) (as Charles Tansley)
1985 Coming Through (Barber-Fleming—for TV) (as D. H. “Bert” Lawrence)
1986 Ghosts (Moshinsky—for TV) (as Oswald)
1987 High Season (Peploe) (as Rick Lamb); A Month in the Country (O’Connor) (as Charles Moon); Strange Interlude (Herbert Wise—for TV) (as Gordon Evans); The Lady’s Not for Burning (Julian Amyes—for TV) (as Thomas Mendip)
1989 Look Back in Anger (Judi Dench—for TV) (as Jimmy Porter)
1992 Swing Kids (Carter) (as SS official, unbilled)
1995 Anne Frank Remembered (Blair—doc) (as narrator)
1996 Othello (Alan Parker) (as Iago); Looking for Richard (Pacino) (as self)
1998 The Gingerbread Man (Altman) (as Rick Magruder); The Theory of Flight (Greengrass) (as Richard); Celebrity (Allen) (as Lee Simon)
1999 Wild, Wild West (Sonnenfeld) (as Dr. Arliss Loveless)

Films as Director:
1989 Henry V (+ title role, sc)
1991 Dead Again (+ ro as Roman Strauss/Mike Church)
1992 Peter’s Friends (+ ro as Andrew, pt); Swan Song (short)
1993 Much Ado about Nothing (+ ro as Benedick, co-pr, sc)
1994 Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein (+ ro as Dr. Frankenstein, co-pr)
1995 A Midwinter’s Tale (In the Bleak Midwinter) (+ sc)
1996 Hamlet (+ title role)
1999 Love’s Labour’s Lost (+ ro as Berowne, sc)

Publications
By BRANAGH: books—
Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein: The Classic Tale of Terror Reborn on Film, New York, 1994.
Hamlet, New York, 1996.

By BRANAGH: articles—
“Man of many parts,” interview with M. Hindle in Time Out, 26 October 1994.
“It’s a Monster: Kenneth Branagh Unveils His Biggest Creation Yet—Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein,” interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview (New York), November 1994.

On BRANAGH: book—
Shuttleworth, Ian, Ken & Em, New York, 1995.

On BRANAGH: articles—
Stanfill, Francesca, “To the Mantle Born?,” in New York, 12 February 1990.
When Henry V was released, Kenneth Branagh was little-known in America. He had appeared in several films and British made-for-television movies, acted on the stage and co-founded his own theater troupe, the Renaissance Theatre Company. But the 28-year-old filmmaker-phenomenon immediately was hailed as the “new Olivier” for both directing and starring as Shakespeare’s warrior-king. Henry V is stirring filmmaking, and a tour de force which instantly thrust Branagh into the front ranks of international film personalities. As British critic Alexander Walker observed, the film “confirmed that...”
all Laurence Olivier taught us about filming Shakespeare has not been forgotten—only boldly revised to fit a crueler world of kingship and power, mercifully one still tempered by magnificently spoken poetry.” With an emphasis on Henry’s exploration of his inner self, Branagh had produced a coming-of-age film that appealed to a broad contemporary audience. Although his battle scenes are bloodier than Olivier’s and his wounded warriors are more ghastly, Branagh’s view clearly is antiwar, a philosophy which touched modern viewers. As a critics’ favorite and darling of the art film crowd, Branagh signed a lucrative contract to write his autobiography, a witty anecdotal ramble aptly called Beginnings, which was published while he still was in his twenties.

Branagh’s other major go at cinematizing Shakespeare is the almost-equally successful Much Ado about Nothing, a delightfully airy, inventive version of the Shakespeare comedy adapted by Branagh. He and his then-wife, Emma Thompson, are cast as Benedick and Beatrice. They are especially charming when pitching cleverly written, risqué puns and slurs at each other. The same year, he found time to appear unbilled as a Nazi in Swing Kids, an unusual World War II story about the Nazi persecution of German adolescents who enjoyed American popular music.

Between his robust interpretations of the Bard, Branagh again won praise for directing and starring in two films which are very different in nature. In the British-made comedy-drama Peter’s Friends, he is the husband of a flamboyant and ill-tempered Hollywood television star. In the Hollywood-produced film noir thriller Dead Again, he audaciously plays two roles, a fast-talking gumshoe and a sophisticated European composer who has emigrated to Los Angeles (in flashbacks to the 1940s). In both films, his co-star is Thompson.

It seemed Branagh the wunderkind could do no wrong until he was hired by Francis Ford Coppola to direct and star in the lavish, $40-million production, Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein. The briskly-paced, stylized attempt to bring the classic novel to the screen with authenticity resulted in a bizarre, out-of-control disaster. Critics turned thumbs down, audiences shied away, and Branagh encountered the first major setback of what had seemed a charmed career.

Since that debacle marred his remarkable record, Branagh has scaled back the extent of his involvement in film projects. What followed was A Midwinter’s Tale, the first film he directed (and wrote) in which he did not appear before the cameras. The black-and-white British production offers a somewhat coy, comical take on the “Let’s put on a show in the barn” theme. At the time the film was released, another blow fell when the announcement was made that he and Thompson had separated. At that time, Branagh’s immediate plans included starring as Iago in Oliver Parker’s upcoming film of Othello and directing and playing the lead in Hamlet.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

BRANDAUER, Klaus Maria

Nationality: Austrian. Born: Altaussee, Austria, 22 June 1944.
Education: Studied at the Stuttgart Academy of Music and Dramatic Art, graduated 1963. Family: Married Karen Mueller, son: Christian.
Career: From 1970—actor and director with the Burgtheater (the National Theater of Austria), Vienna; 1972—film debut in The Salzburg Connection; unhappy with film, returned to stage work; 1984—signed by Francis Ford Coppola to direct and star in the lavish, $40-million production, Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein. It seemed Branagh the wunderkind could do no wrong until he was hired by Francis Ford Coppola to direct and star in the lavish, $40-million production, Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein. The briskly-paced, stylized attempt to bring the classic novel to the screen with authenticity resulted in a bizarre, out-of-control disaster. Critics turned thumbs down, audiences shied away, and Branagh encountered the first major setback of what had seemed a charmed career.

Since that debacle marred his remarkable record, Branagh has scaled back the extent of his involvement in film projects. What followed was A Midwinter’s Tale, the first film he directed (and wrote) in which he did not appear before the cameras. The black-and-white British production offers a somewhat coy, comical take on the “Let’s put on a show in the barn” theme. At the time the film was released, another blow fell when the announcement was made that he and Thompson had separated. At that time, Branagh’s immediate plans included starring as Iago in Oliver Parker’s upcoming film of Othello and directing and playing the lead in Hamlet.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

Films as Actor:

- 1972 The Salzburg Connection (Katzin) (as Johann Kronsteiner)
- 1974 Der Widerspenstigen Zaeumung (Schenk—for TV) (as Petruccio)
- 1975 Das Konzert (Haugk—for TV)
- 1976 Die Babenberger in Oesterreich (Umgelter—for TV); Darf ich mitspielen? (Davy—for TV)
- 1981 Mephisto (Szabó) (as Hendrik Höfgen)
- 1983 Never Say Never Again (Kershner) (as Maximilian Largo); Der Weg ins Freie (Karen Brandauer—for TV)
- 1984 Kindergarten (Yevtushenko); Der Snob (Staudte—for TV)
- 1985 Redl Ezredes (Oberst Redl; Colonel Redl) (Szabó) (as Alfred Redl); Out of Africa (Pollack) (as Baron Bror Blixen-Finecke); Quo Vadis (Rossi—for TV) (as Nero)
- 1986 Streets of Gold (Roth) (as Alek Neuman); The Lightship (Skolimowski) (as Capt. Miller)
- 1988 Burning Secret (Birkin) (as Baron)
- 1989 Hanussen (Szabó) (title role); Das Spinnennetz (Spider’s Web) (as Lenz); La Revolution Francaise (The French
Films as Director:

1988 Speer
1989 The Artisan
1990 Georg Elser—Einer aus Deutschland (Georg Elser; Seven Minutes) (+ title role)
1994 Mario und der Zauberer (Mario and the Magician) (as Cipolla) (+ ro as Cipolla, sc)
1995 Die Wand

Publications

By BRANDAUER: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), June 1986.
Interview with Lynne Tillman, in Interview (New York), February 1991.

On BRANDAUER: book—

Lanz, Peter, Klaus Maria Brandauer: Ein Portrait des berühmten Schauspielerin, Munich, 1986.

On BRANDAUER: articles—

Cinema (Germany), July 1987.
Kurdriadtsev, S., in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 11, 1990.

Klaus Maria Brandauer is an actor who actually has two very different and distinct careers. One is as a star in his native Europe. The other came out of his emergence during the mid-1980s as a supporting player in American films. Brandauer generally has received his greatest acclaim as an actor in Europe. The three films that are central to this aspect of his career are Mephisto, which won a Best Foreign Film Academy Award in 1981; Colonel Redl, released in 1985; and Hanussen, which came out in 1989. All are directed by Istvan Szabo, and are set in Europe before or during World War I or leading to the rise of Hitler. In each, Brandauer creates a character who, though not necessarily sympathetic to the existing power structure or “new order,” compromises himself as he resigns himself to the reality of the time. Thus, a crisis of conscience is created, with each characterizing becoming a skillful study in turmoil hidden beneath bravado and supreme egotism. The Brandauer characters in these films are an egocentric actor who sells out to the Nazis upon Hitler’s coming to power (in Mephisto); a determined career soldier of modest background who achieves a lofty position in the Austro-Hungarian military prior to World War I (in Colonel Redl); and an Austrian soldier in World War I who is wounded in battle, and who attains the ability to foresee the future (in Hanussen).

His American films include The Lightship, in which he is an ex-German naval officer who captains the title craft; Never Say Never Again, in which he plays a diabolical West German terrorist; The Russia House, portraying a mysterious, charismatic Russian physicist; and Streets of Gold, as a champion Russian fighter who coaches two young Americans for the Olympics. As in his films with Szabo, these characters feel obligated to an inflexible code. Thus, the commander of the lightship is bound by his responsibility to his ship, even after it is boarded by ruthless gangsters, while the obsessive boxing coach in Streets of Gold lives rigidly by the notion that all must be sacrificed to the will-to-win.

For the most part, Brandauer’s roles in American films have been supporting ones. The sole exception is Streets of Gold, which did not succeed either critically or commercially in making him a force in the American cinema. Supporting roles have, however, by his own admission, allowed him the freedom to create deeper, psychologically motivated character studies. The prime example of this is his Academy Award-nominated role as Meryl Streep’s unfaithful husband in Out of Africa—easily his highest-profile English-language performance to date. It is characters such as this one—subtle, idiosyncratic, seemingly unequivocal in their motivations—which are the real hallmarks of Brandauer’s career.

—Rob Winning, updated by Rob Edelman

BRANDO, Marlon

Marlon Brando in Julius Caesar

Films as Actor:

1950 The Men (Zinneman) (as Ken)
1951 A Streetcar Named Desire (Kazan) (as Stanley Kowalski)
1952 Viva Zapata! (Kazan) (as Emiliano Zapata)
1953 Julius Caesar (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Mark Antony)
1954 The Wild One (Benedek) (as Johnny); On the Waterfront (Kazan) (as Terry Malloy); Desiree (Koster) (as Napoleon Bonaparte)
1955 Guys and Dolls (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Sky Masterton)
1956 The Teahouse of the August Moon (Daniel Mann) (as Sakini)
1957 Sayonara (Logan) (as Major Lloyd Gruber)
1958 The Young Lions (Dmytryk) (as Christian Diestl)
1960 The Fugitive Kind (Lumet) (as Val Xavier)
1962 Mutiny on the Bounty (Milestone) (as Fletcher Christian)
1963 The Ugly American (Englund) (as Harrison Carter MacWhite)
1964 Bedtime Story (Levy) (as Freddy)
1965 The Saboteur—Code Name Morituri (Morituri) (Wicki) (as Robert Crain)
1966 The Chase (Arthur Penn) (as Sheriff Calder); The Appaloosa (Southwest to Sonora) (Furie) (as Matt Fletcher)
1967 A Countess from Hong Kong (Chaplin) (as Ogden Mears); Reflections in a Golden Eye (Huston) (as Major Weldon Penderton)
1968 Candy (Marquand) (as Grindl)
1969 The Night of the Following Day (Cornfield) (as Bud); Burn! (Queimada!) (Pontecorvo) (as Sir William Walker)
1971 The Nightcomers (Winner) (as Peter Quint)
1972 The Godfather (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Don Vito Corleone)
1973 L’ultimo tango a Parigi (Last Tango in Paris) (Bertolucci) (as Paul)
1978 Superman (Richard Donner) (as Jor-El, father of Superman)
1979 Apocalypse Now (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Colonel Kurtz)
1980 The Formula (Avildsen) (as Adam Steffel)
1989 A Dry White Season (Palcy) (as Ian McKenzie)
1990 The Freshman (Andrew Bergman) (as Carmine Sabatina)
1992  Christopher Columbus: The Discovery (Glen) (as Tomas de Torquemada)
1995  Don Juan DeMarco (Leven) (as Dr. Jack Mickler)
1996  The Island of Dr. Moreau (Frankenheimer) (title role, + co-sc)

Film as Director:

1961  One-Eyed Jacks (+ to as Rio)

Publications

By BRANDO: books—

By BRANDO: articles—

Film und Fernsehen (Potsdam), June 1990.

On BRANDO: books—

On BRANDO: articles—

Steele, R., “Meet Marlon Brando,” in Film Heritage (Dayton, Ohio), Fall 1966.

Marlon Brando is the preeminent actor of American postwar cinema. In the early 1950s, he received Academy Award nominations for Best Actor in four successive years, and in 1954 won the Oscar for Best Actor for his performance in On the Waterfront. His portrayal of the leather-jacketed biker in The Wild One established an integral connection between rebellion, defiance, and sexual prowess, and made Brando a generation’s symbol of masculinity. Brando himself studied the work of actors such as Spencer Tracy, Paul Muni, and Cary Grant, but for actors of his generation and beyond, it has been Brando who has served as the model.

Often considered America’s greatest actor, Brando has, throughout his career, demonstrated a remarkable ability to reveal characters’ contradictions. His portrayals of rebels such as Stanley Kowalski (A Streetcar Named Desire) and Sir William Walker (Burn!), men who understand and live by the rules of “civilized” society, become studies of personal disintegration and the devastating effects of power. Brando’s skill in representing complex characters creates compelling and contradictory points of contact for spectators: in The Young Lions, Brando’s portrayal of the young Nazi officer is disturbing for he is, at times, a sympathetic and attractive figure; in The Godfather, Brando’s Don Corleone is both ruthless and kindhearted; in The Last Tango in Paris, Brando’s representation of Paul mobilizes and lays siege to the image of masculinity Brando’s early film roles helped to establish.

Brando studied with Stella Adler and came to Hollywood from Broadway after his performance in A Streetcar Named Desire caught the attention of the critics and the public. In an interview with Truman Capote in 1957, Brando explained that he intended to remain a film actor because “movies have the greatest potential. You can say important things to a lot of people. About discrimination and hatred and prejudice.” Brando’s work with Adler had instilled in him the belief that actors should have a point of view toward society, and we can get a sense of that view by looking at the parts he has chosen to play throughout his career (e.g. the Mexican revolutionary in Viva Zapata!), and the specific coloring he has given many of his characters (e.g. his portrayal of Fletcher Christian in Mutiny on the Bounty who, because of the forces of class and commerce, cannot live inside or outside the law).

The conventional wisdom is that Brando wasted his talents in the period between his auspicious beginning in the 1950s and his commercial and critical comeback in the 1970s (in films such as The Godfather and Last Tango in Paris). A more comprehensive consideration of his work suggests that is not the case. For example, in 1961, Brando directed and starred in One-Eyed Jacks, an effective ensemble piece and, in its reworking of Western formulas, an interesting (Hamlet-like) study of revenge. In 1970’s Burn!, playing the part of the agent of imperial and capitalist aggression, Brando gave what he sees as his best performance. This role is especially illustrative of the actor’s authorial control and ideological concerns, for in portraying Sir William, Brando candidly articulates why the British imperial forces will defeat the island’s guerrilla army in a way that echoes, almost word for word, the speech he gives as Major Penderton when lecturing on military strategy in Reflections in a Golden Eye. Brando’s performances in the late seventies, eighties, and nineties—for example, as Colonel Kurtz in Apocalypse Now, as Ian McKenzie in A Dry White Season, and as Tomas de Torquemada in Christopher Columbus—reveal his signature reshaping of material and his abiding (social) concerns.

Like other stars, Brando’s work as an actor has been understood through and in terms of certain roles and highly publicized moments of his private life. Yet rather than focusing on the rebel roles of his early career or incidents that have provided fuel for gossip columnists, Brando’s work should be considered as a whole, for as James Naremore points out, Brando’s achievements are remarkable, and his performances reveal a negotiation between the contradictions of not only his own personality, but those of the culture as well. What is significant is that Brando has not simply continued to play the rebel throughout his career, but instead has put together a body of work that examines the exercise of power in all its troubling aspects.

—Cynthia Baron

BRASSEUR, Pierre

Films as Actor:

1924 La Fille de l’Eau
1925 Madame Sans Gêne (Pérret) (as walk-on)
1928 Feu! (de Baroncelli) (as sailor)
1930 Je suis un (Tzpine—short); Ce qu’on dit, ce qu’on pense (short); Etoile filant (Bouquet—short); Une Heure de rêve (Tzpine—short); Un Trou dans le mur (Barberis) (as Anatole)
1931 Circulez! (de Limur) (as Jean Dupont-Desroches); Papa sans le savoir (R. Wyler—short); Une Rêve blond (Martin) (as Maurice)
1932 Mon ami Victor (Berthomieu); Quick (Siodmak) (as Maxime); Moi et l’impératrice (Martin and Holländer) (as Didier); Voyage de noces (Schmidt) (as Rudi); La Chanson d’une nuit (Litvak) (as Koretzky); F.P.1 ne répond plus (Hartl) (as Georges); Une Faim de loup (Fried and Morsorki—short)
1933 Le Sexe faible (Siodmak) (as Jimmie); Incognito (Gerron) (as Marcel); L’Oncle de Pekin (Darmont) (as Philippe); Le Médecin de service (Cerf—short); Vacances conjugales (Greville) (as Pierre)
1934 Caravane (Caravan) (Charell) (as Le Lieutenant de Tokay); La Garnison amoureuse (Vaucorbeil) (as Pierre); Johnny haute-couture (de Poligny) (as Johnny); Le Miroir aux alouettes (Le Bon) (as Jean Forestier); Quadrille d’amour (Fried) (as Robert Lancelot)
1935 Le Bébé de l’escadron (Quand la vie était belle) (Sti) (as Georges); Bout-de-chou (Wulschleger); Jeunesse d’abord (Stelli) (as Stéphane Minot); Un Oiseau rare (Pottier) (as Jean Berthier)
1936 Pattes de mouche (Grémillon) (as Michel); Vous n’avez rien à déclarer? (Joannon) (as Edmond de Trivelin); Une Femme qui se partage (Cammad) (as Cornette); Le Mari rêve...
1937 Mademoiselle ma mère (Decoin) (as Georges); La Schpountz (Pagnol) (as Cousine)
1938 Claudine à l’école (Claudine) (de Poligny) (as Le Docteur Dubois); Giuseppe Verdi (Gallone) (as Alexandre Dumas); Quai des brumes (Port of Shadows) (Carné) (as Lucien); Goose de riche (de Canonge) (as Pierre Mougins); Café de Paris (Lacombe) (as Le Rec); Hercule ou l’incorruptible (Esway) (as Bastien); Grisou (de Canonge) (as Henri Hagnauer, + sc)
1939 Visages de femmes (Guissart) (as Fred); Les Frères corses (The Corsican Brothers) (Kelber); Dernière jeunesse (Last Desire) (Musso) (as M. de Gilhooley); La Père Lebonnard (de Limur) (as Freddy); Le Chemin de l’honneur (Paulin) (as Lt. Philippe Driemserino); Frères d’Afrique (Navarra); Sixième étage (Cloche) (as Jonval); Trois Argentines à Montmartre (Hugon) (as Toninett)
1941 Le Soleil a toujours raison (Billon) (as Gabriel)
1942 Les Deux Timides (Y. Allégret) (as Thibaudier); Promesse à l’inconnue (Berthomieu) (as Lussac); Le Croisée des chemins (Berthomieu) (as Hubert Epervans)
1943 Adieu Léonard (Prevert) (as Bonenfant); Lumière d’été (Grémillon) (as Roland Malillard)
1944 Le Pays sans étoiles (Lacombe) (as Jean-Pierre/François-Charles); Les Enfants du paradis (The Children of Paradise) (Carné) (as Frédérick Lemaitre); La Femme fatale (Boyer) (as Jean Pleyard)
1945 Jéricho (Calef) (as “Marche Noir”); Les Portes de la nuit (Gates of the Night; Ports of the Night) (Carné) (as Georges); Pétrus (M. Allégret) (as Rodriguez); L’Arche de Noé (Noah’s Ark) (Jacques) (as Bitru); L’Amour autour de la maison (de Héran) (as Douze-Apôtres); Rocambole (2 parts: Rocambole and La Revanche de Baccarat) (de Baroncelli)
1947 Croisière pour l’inconnu (Montazel) (as Emile Fréchishe)
1948 Les Amants de Vérona (The Lovers of Verona) (Cayatte) (as Raffaele); La Nuit blanche (Pottier) (as Pierre); Le Secret de Monte-Cristo (Valentin) (as François Picard)
1949 Portrait d’un assassin (Roland) (as Fabius); Millionnaires d’un jour (Hunelle) (as Francis)
1950 Souvenirs perdus (“La Statuette” ep.) (Christian-Jaque) (as Philippe); Maire après Dieu (Skinner Next to God) (Daquin) (as Captaine Joris); L’Homme de la Jamaïque (de Canonge) (as Jacques Marel); Julie de Carneillan (Manuel) (as Herbert Espivant); De Renoir à Picasso (Haesaerts) (as narrator)
1951 Barbe-Bleue (Bluebeard) (Christian-Jaque) (as Amadée de Salfère); Les Mains sales (Dirty Hands) (Rivers) (as Hœderer)
1952 Le Plaisir (House of Pleasure) (“La Maison Tellier” ep.) (Max Ophüls) (as Julien Le Dentu); La Pocharde (Combret) (as Renneville); Le Rideau rouge (Barsaçq) (as Ludovic Arns); Saint-Tropez, devoir de vacances (Paviot—short); Torticola contre Frankensberg (Paviot—short); Jouens le jeu (“L’Impatience” ep.) (Gillois)
1953 La Bergère et le ramoneur (Grimault) (as voice of the bird); Vestire gli ignudi (Pagliero) (as Gorlier)
1954 Rasputine (Combret) (title role); Les Soliloques du pauvre (Drach—short) (as narrator)
1955 La Tour de Nèsle (Gance) (as Buridan); Napoléon (Guiry) (as Barras)
1957 Porte de Lilas (Gates of Paris) (Clair) (as Juju)
1958 Sans famille (Michel) (as Jeroboam Driscoll); Les Grandes Familles (The Possessors) (de Pouvillier) (as Maublanc); La Vie à deux (Duhour) (as Pierre Carreau)
1959 La Loi (Where the Hot Wind Blows) (Dassin) (as Don Cesare); La Tête contre les murs (Dassin) (as Docteur Varmont); Messieurs les ronds-de-cuir (Combret) (title role); Les Ennemis (Carbonnaux) (as Pangloss); *Le Dia-

1960 Les Yeux sans visages (Eyes without a Face) (Franju) (as Genessier); Cartagine in fiamme (Carthage in Flames) (Gallone) (as Sidone); Il bell’Antonio (Bolognini) (as Alfio Magnano); Candide (Carbonnaux) (as Pangloss); Le Dialogue des Carmélites (Agostini) (as commissioner of the people); Les Ennemis (Molinaro)
1961 Les Amours célébrer (“Agnès Bernauer” ep.) (Boisrond) (as Le Grand-Duc Ernst de Wittelsbach); Pleins feux sur l’assassin (Franju) (as Comte Hervé de Keraudren); Vive Henri IV, Vive l’amour (Autant-Lara) (as Montmorency); Le Bateau d’Emile (de la Patellière) (as François Larmentiel); Les Petits Matins (Audry) (as Achille Pipermint); Rencontres (Agostino) (as Carl Krasner)
1962 Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay) (“L’Affaire Fenayrou” ep.) (Oury) (as Martin Fenayrou); L’Abominable Hommes des douanes (M. Allégret) (as Le Tueur Russe)
1963 Les Bonnes Causes (Don’t Tempt the Devil) (Christian-Jaque) (as Cassidi)
1964 Liola (A Very Handy Man) (Blasetti) (as Simone Palumbo); Le Magot de Josèfa (Autant-Lara) (as the Mayor); Humour noir (“La Bestoile” ep.) (Autant-Lara); Un Soir . . . par hasard (Govar) (as Charles); Le Grain de sable (Kast) (as Georges Richter); Lucky Joe (Deville) (as chief commissioner); Les Comédiens (Thierry—short)
1965 La Métamorphose des cloportes (Granier-Deférre) (as Tonton); Deux Heures à tuer (Govar) (as Laurent); L’Or du duc (Baratier) (as uncle); Pas de caviar pour toute Olga (Becker) (as Patache); Pas de panique (Gobbi) (as Toussaint)
1966 La Vie de château (A Matter of Resistance) (Rappeneau) (as Dimanche); Un mondo nuovo (A Young World) (de Sica) (as boss); La Fille de la mer morte (Golan) (as Jeroboam Driscoll); King of Hearts (de Broca) (as General Géranium)
1967 Le Fou de Labo (Besnard) (as Father Ballanchon); La Petite Vertu (Ants) (as Polnik)
1968 Les Oiseaux vont mourir aux Pérou (Birds in Peru) (Gary) (as husband); Goto, île d’amour (Borowczyk) (as Goto); Sous la signe de Monte-Cristo (Hunelle) (as Faria)
1970 Macédoine (Scandellari) (as Bloch-Dupond)
1971 Les Mariés de l’an deux (Rappeneau) (as Goselin)
1972 La plus bella serata della mia vita (Scola) (as Comte la Brunettié)

Film as screenwriter:

1957 Les Amants de demain (Blistène)

Publications

By BRASSEUR: books—

Aile est morte (verse), with Dede Sunbeam, Paris, 1926.
La Guerre de mines (play), Paris, 1939.
Tobie est un ange (script for film never completed), Paris, 1941.

By BRASSEUR: articles—

On BRASSEUR: articles—

* * *

Pierre Brasseur once wrote, “‘There exist three kinds of actors, the good, the bad, and the great.’ As a participant in practically every major development in the French cinema after 1920, he proved himself to be one of that final category. His early involvement with the Parisian avant-garde in the 1920s was followed by his first leading roles in French-German co-productions of the early 1930s. He found his best roles during the grand epoch of poetic realism, and survived the desert of the 1950s French filmmaking to find himself stranded in the 1960s: an actor’s actor in a director’s cinema.

His stage work was always central to his career, and in the mid-1920s the charming young comedian was adopted by the intelligentsia. He first worked with Jean Cocteau in 1924, and was soon associated with the Surrealist group, having contact with André Breton and others, and contributing poems and texts to La Révolution Surréaliste. In 1925 his first play, L’Ancre noire, was produced, and he continued to write or collaborate on play and film scripts, notably with Marcel Dalio.

After military service, the first major phase of his acting career began at UFA studios in Berlin in films made for German and French release. ‘To be employed at UFA was, for me, more important than going to Hollywood,’ he wrote, and he remained in Berlin for a year and a half, establishing himself as a leading comedian in a series of romantic farces. He did briefly visit Hollywood in 1934, where Erik Charell was directing Caravan for Fox in English and French versions. Brasseur played the Philip Holmes role in the French one, opposite Charles Boyer who starred in both.

On his return to France, Brasseur lent his presence to a series of quickly made and undistinguished films, although one of these, Un Oiseau rare, marked the first of 11 films he made which were written by Jacques Prévert. Among his films of this period were a number of bawdy comedies, a genre then accounting for a significant proportion of French production. Perhaps not atypical of his mid-1930s work is his appearance, along with such comedians as Raimu and Saturnin Fabre, in Joannon’s extremely vulgar Patte de mouche, but it was his brief appearance opposite Jean Gabin in Carné’s Quai des brumes in 1938 that revealed another Brasseur, one capable of infinitely more subtle and complex characterization. He nevertheless continued to play the cynical Don Juan and various playboys until the war, taking over that specialty from the aging Jules Berry.

It was during the war that Brasseur left his mark. After working with Yves Allégret on Tobie est un ange, which Brasseur co-scripted (the film’s negatives were destroyed in a fire before its release), and on Les Deux Timides, he collaborated once again with Grémillon in Lumière d’été. Brasseur starred as the brilliant, decadent painter Roland Maillard, in a celebrated performance detailing the disintegration of an artistic career.

He soon followed this with his greatest role, as the famous nineteenth-century actor Frederick Lemaître in Les Enfants du Paradis. The film brought together two performers at the summit of their art: Jean-Louis Barrault and Brasseur, the mime and the comedian. Brasseur’s performance, requiring him to create roles such as Othello within the role of Lemaître, is an example of a complex character thought over in every detail.

After the war, theatrical work increasingly occupied Brasseur. In 1948 he joined the renowned company of Barrault and Madeleine Renaud, appearing in plays of Camus, Claudel, and others. He worked in films between theatrical engagements, and these films were often adaptations of stage plays, such as Sartre’s Les Mains sales or Vestire gli ignudi from Pirandello.

After the success of his humorous and pathetic Juju in Clair’s Porte de Lilas, Brasseur was cast mainly in supporting roles. Though he made interesting film appearances, especially in a series of three films for Georges Franju, and in Bolognini’s Il beller’Antonio, his work in theater was more notable, for example his acclaimed performance in a 1967 Paris production of Harold Pinter’s The Homecoming.

—Judah Löwe

BRENNAN, Walter

Films as Actor:

1927 The Ridin’ Rowdy (Thorpe); Tearin’ into Trouble (Thorpe)
1928 Silks and Saddles (Thoroughbreds); The Ballyhoo Buster (Thorpe)
1929 The Long Trail (Robson); The Lariat Kid (Eason); One Hysterial Night (Craft); The Shannons of Broadway (Flynn); Smillin’ Guns (MacRae)
1930 Scratch as Scratch Can; The King of Jazz (Anderson)
1931 Neck and Neck (Thorpe); Dancing Dynomite (Mason)
1932 Law and Order (Cahn); The Iceman’s Ball; The Texas Cyclone (Lederman); Two Fisted Law (Lederman); The All-American (Sport of a Nation) (Mack)
1933 Man of Action (Melford); Fighting for Justice (Brower); The Keyhole (Curtiz); Lilly Turner (Wellman); Baby Face (Baby Face Harrington) (Green); Female (Curtiz); From Headquarters (Dietrle); Sing, Sinner, Sing (Christy); One Year Later (Hopper); Strange People (Thorpe); Parachute Jumper (Green)
1934 Woman Haters; Housewife (Green); Desirable (Mayo); Half a Sinner (Newman); Riptide (Goulding); Stamboul Quest (Wood); The Painted Veil (Boleslawski); Good Dame (Gering)
1935 Man on a Flying Trapeze (The Memory Expert) (Bruckman); Barbary Coast (Hawks) (as Old Atrocity); Restless Knights; Metropolitan (Boleslawski); Bric-a-Brac; Seven Keys to Baldpate (Hamilton); The Bride of Frankenstein (Whale); Lady Tubbs (Crosland); Northern Frontier (Newfield); The Wedding Night (King Vidor); Law beyond the Range (Beebe)
1936  These Three (Wyler);  The Three Godfathers (Boleslawski);
Fury (Fritz Lang) (as Bugs Meyers);  Come and Get It (Hawks and Wyler);
Banjo on My Knee (Cromwell);  The Moon's Our Home (Seiter);  The Prescott Kid (Selman)

1937  When Love Is Young (Seiter);  Wild and Wooly (Werker);  She's Dangerous (Foster and Carruth);
The Affairs of Cappy Ricks (Staub)

1938  Kentucky (Butler);  The Buccaneer (DeMille);  The Texans (Hogan);
The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (Taurog);  Mother Carey's Chickens (Rowland V. Lee);
The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter)

1939  The Story of Irene and Vernon Castle (Potter);
Stanley and Livingston (King);  They Shall Have Music (Mayo);
Joe and Ethel Turp Call on the President (Sinclair)

1940  Northwest Passage (King Vidor);  The Westerner (Wyler) (as Judge Roy Bean);
Maryland (King)

1941  Meet John Doe (Capra) (as the “Colonel”);
Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Renoir);
Sergeant York (Hawks);  Rise and Shine (Dwan);
Nice Girl? (Seiter);  This Woman Is Mine (Lloyd)

1942  Pride of the Yankees (Wood);
Stand by for Action (Cargo of Innocents) (Leonard)

1943  Hangmen Also Die (Fritz Lang);  The North Star (Milestone);
The Last Will and Testament of Tom Smith;
Slightly Dangerous (Ruggles);  Home in Indiana (Hathaway);
The Princess and the Pirate (Butler);
To Have and Have Not (Hawks) (as Eddy)

1945  Dakota (Kane)

1946  A Stolen Life (Bernhardt);
Centennial Summer (Preminger);
My Darling Clementine (John Ford) (as Old Man Clanton);
Nobody Lives Forever (Negulesco)

1947  Driftwood (Dwan)

1948  Red River (Hawks) (as Groot);
Scudda Hoo! Scudda Hay! (Summer Lightning) (F. Hugh Herbert);
Blood on the Moon (Wise)

1949  Task Force (Daves);  The Great Dan Patch (Newman);
The Green Promise (Raging Waters) (Russell);
Brimstone (Kane)

1950  Surrender (Dwan);
Curtain Call at Cactus Creek (Take the Stage) (Lamont);
A Ticket to Tomahawk (Sale);
*Singing
Bridges’ colorful persona both useful and effective, were John Ford (My Darling Clementine), King Vidor (The Wedding Night), Fritz Lang (Fury), Frank Capra (Meet John Doe), Jean Renoir (Swamp Water), Lewis Milestone (The North Star), Raoul Walsh (Along the Great Divide), and John Sturges (Bad Day at Black Rock). Although he performed in a wide variety of genres, it was the Western with which he became most strongly associated.

With the television series The Real McCoys, a countrified situation comedy in which Brennan played Grandpappy Amos McCoy (a flat-out comic version of the blustery but lovable screen character he had been essaying for years), Brennan became, during the program’s six-year tenure, something of a television icon. Bringing the same skill to his television work that he had given to the cinema for decades, he kept nightclub impressionists and the general public busy imitating everything about his character—from his cornpone accent to his axle-grease-squeaky voice to his coming-apart-at-the-seams limp. Moreover, his characterization on television was so strong that it nearly obliterated the public’s memory of his fruitful movie career, which he ended in a series of theatrical family films and several made-for-television movies, staying productive right up to the time of his death, at the age of 80, in 1974.

—Bill Wine

BRIDGES, Jeff

Nationality: American. Born: Los Angeles, 4 December 1949; son of the actor Lloyd Bridges; brother of the actor Beau Bridges. Education: Attended University High School, Los Angeles; studied acting at Berghoff Studios, New York. Family: Married Susan (Bridges), three daughters: Isabelle, Jessica, and Hayley. Career: Appeared in the film The Company She Keeps, 1951; made his acting debut in father Lloyd Bridges’s television series Sea Hunt, 1950s; composed and sang “Lost in Space” on the soundtrack of the film John and Mary, 1969; continued to be active as songwriter; made his feature film acting debut in Halls of Anger, 1970. Awards: Academy of Science Fiction, Horror and Fantasy Films Saturn Award-Best...
Actor, for Starman, 1984; Best Male Lead Independent Spirit Award, for American Heart, 1992. Agent: c/o Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1951 The Company She Keeps (Cromwell) (as infant at train station, uncredited)
1969 Silent Night, Lonely Night (Petrie—for TV) (as Young John)
1970 Halls of Anger (Bogart) (as Douglas); In Search of America (Bogart—for TV) (as Mike Olson); The Yin and Yang of Mr. Go (Meredith) (as Nero Finnigan)
1971 The Last Picture Show (Bogdanovich) (as Duane Jackson)
1972 Fat City (Huston) (as Ernie); Bad Company (Benton) (as Jake Ramsey)
1973 Lolly Madonna XXX (Sarafian) (as Zack Feather); The Last American Hero (Johnson) (as Elroy Jackson Jr.); The Iceman Cometh (Frankenheimer) (as Don Parritt)
1974 Thunderbolt and Lightfoot (Cimino) (as Lightfoot); Rancho Deluxe (Perry) (as Jack McKee)
1975 Hearts of the West (Zieff) (as Lewis Tater)
1976 King Kong (Guillermin) (as Jack Prescott); Stay Hungry (Rafelson) (as Craig Blake)
1978 Somebody Killed Her Husband (Johnson) (as Jerry Green)
1979 Winter Kills (Richert—produced in 1977) (as Nick Kegan)
1980 Heaven’s Gate (Cimino) (as John H. Bridges); The American Success Company (Richert) (as Harry)
1981 Cutter and Bone (Passer) (as Richard Bone); The Last Unicorn (Rankin Jr. and Bass—animation) (as voice of Prince Lir)
1982 Tron (Lisberger) (as Kevin Flynn/Clu); Kiss Me Goodbye (Mulligan) (as Rupert)
1984 Against All Odds (Hackford) (as Terry Brogan); Starman (Carpenter) (as Alien)
1985 Jagged Edge (Marquand) (as Jack Forrester)
1986 8 Million Ways to Die (Ashby) (as Matthew Scudder); The Morning After (Lumet) (as Turner Kendall); The Thanksgiving Promise (Beau Bridges—for TV) (as neighbor, uncredited)
1987 Nadine (Benton) (as Vernon Hightower)
1988 Tucker (Tucker: The Man and His Dream) (Coppola) (as Preston Tucker); See You in the Morning (Pakula) (as Larry Livingston)
1989 The Fabulous Baker Boys (Kolves) (as Jack Baker)
1990 Texasville (Bogdanovich) (as Duane Jackson); Quarter Time (Bogayevicz); Cold Feet (Dornhelm) (as bartender, uncredited)
1991 The Fisher King (Gilliam) (as Jack Lucas); Picture This—The Times of Peter Bogdanovich in Archer City, Texas (Hickenlooper) (doc) (as himself)
1992 American Heart (Bell) (as Jack Keely (+ co-pr)
1993 The Vanishing (Sluizer) (as Barney); Fearless (Weir) (as Max Klein)
1994 Blown Away (Hopkins) (as Jimmy Dove)
1995 Wild Bill (Walter Hill) (title role)
1996 White Squall (Ridley Scott) (as Christopher ‘‘Skipper’’ Sheldon); The Mirror Has Two Faces (Streisand) (as Gregory Larkin); Hidden in America (Bell—for TV) (as Vincent)
1998 The Big Lebowski (Joel Coen) (as The Dude); A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries (Ivy) (as Lightfoot, uncredited)
1999 Arlington Road (Pellington) (Michael Faraday); The Muse (Brooks) (as Jack Warrick); Simpatico (Warchus) (as Carter); Forever Hollywood (Glassman, McCarthy) (doc) (as himself)
2000 The Contender (Lurie) (as President Jackson Evans); Raising the Mammoth (Deniau) (doc) (as Narrator).

Publications

By BRIDGES: articles—

“Jeff Bridges,’’ interview with S. Munshower, in InterView (New York), February 1975.
Interview with B. Lewis and Brian Baxter, in Films and Filming (London), November/December 1988.
“Building Bridges,’’ interview with M. Frankel, in Movielife, September 1993.
“His Dudeness,’’ interview with Jeff Dawson, in Empire (London), May 1998.

On BRIDGES: articles—

* * *

“Inexplicably underrated’’ are the words that best describe Jeff Bridges. In 1971, his role as 1950s Texas teenager Duane Jackson in Peter Bogdanovich’s The Last Picture Show earned him an Oscar nomination. Throughout the years he has offered an impressive array of performances, and has been a consistent critics’ favorite; he is a tremendously likable actor, expert at underplaying yet totally burying himself in a role. Yet he never has been considered among the front rank of movie stars—perhaps because he has never had that one blockbuster film to thrust him into the epicenter of media attention and public adoration.

Son of Lloyd and brother of Beau, Bridges began acting when he was four months old, appearing alongside Jane Greer in The Company She Keeps; he also was a child actor on Sea Hunt, his father’s television series. He had just graduated high school when he appeared in The Last Picture Show. In his role as Duane Jackson he projected an instinctive ease, which he continued to put forth over the next few years in roles as boyish types in Fat City (playing a boxer), The Last American Hero (as stock-car driver Junior Jackson), and Bad Company; he was especially fine in the latter, a bleak anti-Western, playing a Civil War draft dodger. Still, despite earning critical acclaim, Bridges admitted that self-doubts about his abilities did not allow him to take acting seriously. His attitude changed in 1973, after appearing in the film version of Eugene O’Neill’s The Iceman Cometh. As Don Parritt, another boyish character to be sure, but one with levels of psychological depth (courtesy of O’Neill), Bridges gives his first fully mature screen performance. A critic in Variety, in describing Bridges’s acting, perfectly summed up the essence of his most typical roles by calling his performance “a brilliant mixture of innocence, guilt, despair, and hope. His vulnerability and yearning . . . seem almost physically evident from the beginning.’’ At the time, Pauline Kael characterized Bridges as being “so fresh and talented that just about every movie director with a good role wants him for it.’’

Over the next several years, Bridges’s roles were diversified. His generous screen presence allowed his co-stars ample space without detracting from the power of his own performances. His second-fiddle roles—to John Heard’s crazed Vietnam veteran in Cutter’s Way, for example, or to leading man Clint Eastwood in the tragic homoerotic buddy movie Thunderbolt and Lightfoot—are deceptively passive. In the old-fashioned way of a Gary Cooper or James Stewart, his dreamy boyishness ended up leaving a profound impression on the viewer.

Bridges’s first important starring role came as the naive, noirish hero in Against All Odds, a remake of Out of the Past. He was superb in his next film, Starman, an offbeat, bittersweet science fiction romance, in which he plays a vulnerable, birdlike extraterrestrial. His intense research into the difficult role—watching the movements of children and animals, and videotaping himself writhing naked on the floor in an attempt to capture the essence of his embryo-hatching scene—demonstrated that Bridges’s commitment to his craft is no less than that of a Dustin Hoffman or Robert De Niro.
BRODERICK, Matthew

Bridges continued playing dreamers and likably flawed heroes, as he did so effectively as visionary automobile manufacturer Preston Tucker in Tucker: The Man and His Dream and the artistically frustrated cocktail lounge piano player opposite brother Beau and Michelle Pfeiffer in The Fabulous Baker Boys. But he also toyed with his outward appearance of innocence. In Jagged Edge, he plays a high-powered newspaper publisher accused of killing his wife, and who wholeheartedly proclaims his guiltlessness. As the story unfolds, the question remains: Did he, or did he not, do it? In this film, Bridges effectively pivots on the ambiguity of his lovableness, flinging the audience between adoring trust and uneasy suspicion.

In 1990, it seemed that his career had come full circle when he played an older, wiser, more portly Duane Jackson in Texassville, a sequel to The Last Picture Show. But at the same time, as he has aged, Bridges has gone on to diversify his career even more, taking on challenging roles that are anything but boyish—and which the younger Jeff Bridges never would have been called on to play. In The Vanishing, George Sluizer’s American remake of his Dutch thriller, Bridges gives a forceful performance as a crafty kidnapper who reveals himself to the boyfriend of the woman he abducted. In Fearless and The Fisher King, he is cast as two very different characters whose lives are thrown into major crises. In the former, he conveys levels of emotion as a deeply troubled plane crash survivor. In the latter, he starts out as a hard-hearted, egotistical radio talk show host who undergoes a transformation after one of his listeners, whom he has just cruelly dismissed, goes on a murder spree. As the story progresses, Bridges effectively communicates the confusion within a man whose outward characteristic is pomposity. But Bridges is at his best in one of his least-known films: American Heart, a jaunt, at times daring drama about love and redemption, which depicts the pain and promise of its two key characters. Bridges offers a fierce, heartrending performance as an ex-con who has just been paroled from prison. His plans for continuing his life are sidetracked upon the arrival of his lonely, 14-year-old son whom he had abandoned, and who is determined to establish a relationship with him.

As he has settled into middle-age, Bridges’ characterizations remain equally varied. They range from a horse breeder/con artist who is the very image of heedless dishonesty (in Simpatico) to a bowling-obsessed burn-out who ceased evolving sometime in the 1970s (The Big Lebowski), a conspiracy theory-obsessed university professor who senses that his genial new neighbors are hiding terrible secrets (Arlington Road) to a disheveled university professor, too-often burned by love, who is romantically paired with Barbra Streisand (The Mirror Has Two Faces).

At this juncture of his career, it seems less likely that Jeff Bridges ever will earn stardom. But he is still respected, still taking intelligent risks, and still a pleasure to watch on screen.

—Samantha Cook, updated by Rob Edelman

Films as Actor:

1983 Max Dugan Returns (Ross) (as Michael McPhee); WarGames (Badham) (as David Lightman)
1984 Cinderella (Cunningham—for TV) (as Prince Henry)
1985 1918 (Harrison) (as Brother); Master Harold and the Boys (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (as Master Harold ‘Hally’); Ladyhawke (Donner) (as Phillip)
1986 On Valentine’s Day (Story of a Marriage, title for On Valentine’s Day and 1918) (Harrison) (as Brother); Ferris Bueller’s Day Off (Huges) (as Ferris Bueller)
1987 Courtship (Cummings) (as Brother); Project X (Kaplan) (as Jimmy Garrett)
1988 She’s Having a Baby (Hughes) (as Cameo at end [uncredited]); Torch Song Trilogy (Bogart) (as Alan); Biloxi Blues (Nichols) (as Eugene)
1989 Family Business (Lumet) (as Adam); Glory (Zwick) (as Colonel Robert Gould Shaw)
1990 The Freshman (Bergman) (as Clark Kellogg)
1992 Out on a Limb (Veber) (as Bill Campbell)
1993 The Night We Never Met (Leight) (as Sam Lester); A Life in the Theater (Mosher—for TV) (as John)
1994 The Road to Wellville (Parker) (as William Lightbody); Would You Kindly Direct Me To Hell?: The Infamous Dorothy Parker (Karp—for TV) (as Commentator); Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle (Mrs. Parker and the Round Table) (Rudolph) (as Charles MacArthur); The Lion King (Allers and Minkoff) (voice of Adult Simba)
1995 Arabian Knights (Williams) (as voice of Tack)
1996 Infinity (as Richard Feynman) (+ d, pr); The Cable Guy (Stiller) (as Steven Kovacs)
1997 Lewis & Clark: The Journey of the Corps of Discovery (Burns) (mini—for TV) (voice of John Ordelay); Addicted to Love (Forlorn) (Dunne) (as Sam)
1998 The Lion King II: Simba’s Pride (LaDuca and Rooney) (voice of Simba); Godzilla (Emmerich) (as Dr. Niko Tatopoulos)
1999 Walking to the Waterline (Mülhern); Inspector Gadget (Kellogg) (as John Brown and Inspector Gadget); Election (Payne) (as Jim McAllister)
2000 You Can Count on Me (Lonergan) (as Brian)

Publications

By BRODERICK: articles—

Interview with Kenneth Lonergan, in Interview (New York), vol. 30, no. 4, April 2000.

* * *

Matthew Broderick left an indelible mark on 1980s cinema with a bravura performance as the eponymous hero in Ferris Bueller’s Day Off, the archly Oedipal comedy that helped define the actor’s screen persona as much as it did the emerging sensibility of Generation X. Ferris is not just the subject of his life, but its architect as well. Director John Hughes exemplifies the control this high school senior is able to achieve through force of will, cunning, and charm by giving him the power to address the audience directly, as he steps out of the story world at will to mug for his eager viewers or explain himself.
Skipping school is for Ferris not an act of rebellion, but a work of art that depends on his benevolent, but selfish manipulation of others, especially his double career Boomer parents who haven’t a clue what their teenage son is up to. Ferris, an “A” student bored by the inanity of the classroom, has no intention of seeking an alternative to his parents’ upscale life. He uses his day off to travel to the city where his father works and eat at a businessman’s restaurant, where, it hardly seems coincidental, his father is lunching as well. Ferris must expend great effort and cunning to preserve the illusion that he is thoroughly obedient, but he easily defeats the uninspired efforts of the school’s assistant principal to unmask his deception.

Broderick had developed the essential elements of the Ferris
Bueller character in some earlier work, especially the engaging Wargames, where his character’s childish pranksterism almost causes a nuclear confrontation that, à la Tom Swift, he alone proves able to defuse, once again showing the inadequacies of “official” adulthood.
Among other early films such as Project X, he reprises it to great effect. In Biloxi Blues, he plays the smart New York Jew faced with double culture shock: life in the army and life in, of all places, a very non-Kosher Mississippi. Even recently, though older and not so baby faced, Broderick does two turns on the Bueller character, taking it into the realm of likable eccentricity chiefly inhabited by Robin Williams.
As the title character in Inspector Gadget, a kind of pleasant RoboCop, and the naïve biologist in Godzilla, Broderick proves able once again to deliver just the right mixture of kooky antiestablishmentarianism and boy-next-door appeal. Less successful is the schlemiel turn on Bueller character that Broderick attempted in The Freshman, where he was much too old to play a naïve recent high school graduate just arrived in New York to pursue a filmmaking career at New York University. The story plays interestingly with age contrasts, pitting
Broderick against Marlon Brando as an older version of the godfather;
Andrew Bergman’s fine screenplay gives Broderick some interesting moments, including a Ferris Bueller kind of chase for an escaped lizard through a terrorized suburban mall. Though directed by Sidney Lumet, Family Business was a critical and popular failure, notwithstanding its casting of Sean Connery, Dustin Hoffman, and Broderick as the three generations in a family turned to a disastrously conceived crime. Also unsuccessful was Torch Song Trilogy, where Broderick attempts the role of a young gay man (on stage he had appeared in different parts in the immensely popular Broadway extravaganza dominated by the personality and talent of Harvey Fierstein). This mixture of bravura performance and conventional melodrama did not transfer well to the screen, and Broderick seems lost in the role.

Making the transition, more or less, to adult roles, Broderick, despite his energy and wit, has not been so successful with romantic comedy, but always turns in a competent and engaging performance. In The Cable Guy, he plays a young man disappointed in love who, through incredible mischance, becomes hooked up with Jim Carrey’s equally lonely cable repairman, who eventually takes over his life. Broderick does a good job of providing the proper human setting for Carrey’s legendary antics; his straight man is subdued, submissive, and easy to victimize. The black comedy Addicted to Love offered Broderick more opportunity to shine, but, paired with Meg Ryan doing an excellent turn as an aggressive, low rent talker, he seemed unable to generate an equivalent energy, trapped, perhaps, by the nerdy lineaments of his character (an astronomer from the Midwest).

Though the first part of the film focuses on his attempts to spy on the woman who has jilted him, when Ryan’s biker lady moves in downstairs he is simply overwhelmed. With some romantic chemistry, the pair might have been able to make the subsequent plot work, but Broderick lacks traditional leading man charisma and sexiness. Though the first part of the film focuses on his attempts to spy on the woman who has jilted him, when Ryan’s biker lady moves in downstairs he is simply overwhelmed. With some romantic chemistry, the pair might have been able to make the subsequent plot work, but Broderick lacks traditional leading man charisma and sexiness.

In strictly dramatic roles, he has achieved some better results, often as a part of an ensemble (in Alan Rudolph’s Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle, where as Charles McArthur, one of the Algonquin circle presided over by Dorothy Parker, he does a creditable, if one-dimensional job) or as a minor but featured player (in Horton Foote’s рассматрииаемый затем как актер театра). In his own directorial debut, Infinity (based on his mother’s screenplay), Broderick attempts to incarnate an adult Ferris Bueller, physicist Richard Feynman, who, by all accounts, was a manic, difficult, wildly creative person. The film is essentially a love story, but Broderick’s version of Feynman lacks the charisma and bubbling creativity that would make this nerdy recluse an attractive romantic partner (Patricia Arquette does a convincing job as the girlfriend, who becomes desperately ill, setting up a kind of Love Story plot where Feynman must find a way to attend to his beloved yet assist with the ongoing Manhattan project). It is in the Civil War epic Glory that Broderick does his finest dramatic work. Here he plays one of history’s most famous mama’s boys, the Boston aristocrat Robert Gould Shaw, who became the first colonel of one of the Federal Army’s first Negro regiments. In a fine, layered performance, Broderick subtly suggests Shaw’s fearful hesitancy at Antietam, and the subsequent growth in self-esteem and ideological purpose that transforms him as he assumes a truly important and transcendent moral burden, setting an example for the black soldiers who are called upon to set examples of their own for their fellows not yet in arms. Forced to grow up, Shaw is also forced to accept his own death. It is a part in which Ferris Bueller, all kidding aside, would not be caught dead.

—R. Barton Palmer

BRODSKÝ, Vlastimil

Films as Actor:

1947 Uloupená hranice (The Stolen Frontier) (Weiss)
1953 Tajemství krve (The Secret of Blood; The Mystery of Blood) (Frič)
1957 Zářijové noci (Jasný)
1958 Mezi nebem a zemi (Between Heaven and Earth) (Podskalský)
1959 Pět z milionů (Brynych)
1963 Až přijde kocour (That Cat) (Jasný); Transport z rje (Transport from Paradise) (Brynych)
1964 Každý den odvahu (Everyday Courage; Courage for Every-day) (Schorm)
1965 Povídky z první republiky (Krejčík); Ztracena tvar (The Lost Face) (Hobl)
1966 Lidé z maringotek (People on Wheels) (Frič); Otře sledované vlaky (Closely Watched Trains; Closely Observed Trains) (Menzel) (as Councilor Zedníček); Spadla s měsíce (The Girl from the Moon; Never Strike a Woman with a Flower) (Podskalský)
1968 Rozmarné léto (Capricious Summer) (Menzel) (as Major Hugo); Zločin v Santánu (Crime in a Night Club) (Menzel) (as Minister of the Interior); Farářův konec (End of a Priest) (Schorm) (as Sexton); Všechno dobré rodace (All My Good Countrymen) (Jasný); Skrivanci na niti (Larks on a String) (Menzel) (as professor for literature)
1970 Kam čert nemůže (Where the Devil Cannot Get; A Devilish Honeymoon) (Podskalský)
1975 Jakob der Lügner (Jacob the Liar) (Beyer) (title role); Tak laska Zacina (Bocan)
1976 At ziju duchove (Lipsky); Smrt nacerno (Toman)
1977 Talíře nad Velkým Malikovem (Flying Saucers over Our Town) (Jireš); Zitra vstanu a oparim se cajem (Polak)
1979 Od zitka necarují (Polak); Poplah v oblaci (Polak); Tchan (Mika)
1981 Tajemný hrad v Karpatech (Mystery Castle in the Carpathians) (Lipsky) (as Ignac)
1982 Pocitani ovecek (Kachyna)
1983 A csoda vege (Veszi)
1984 Oci pro plac (Mika)
1986 Neni Sirotek Jako Sirotek (Strnad)
1987 Sasek a kralovna (Chytílová) (as Vaclav); Smich se lepi na paty (Bocan); Chobotnice Z II. Patra (Polak) (as Grandfather Holan)
1992 The Flying Sneaker (Pojar) (as Dr. Renc); Labyrinth (Jireš)
1998 V centru filmu—v teple domova (In the Center of Film—In the Warmth of Home) (Janecek, Marek—for TV) (as Himself)
1999 Zdravý nemocný Vlastimilbrodsky (Havelka) (as Himself); Návrat ztraceného ráje (Return to Paradise Lost) (Jasný)
BRONSON, Charles

Charles Bronson (right) in The Dirty Dozen

Charles Bronson (right) in The Dirty Dozen

Noblesse he tells us his experience as an actor, his life story, and his declaration of humanity in his autobiography, Tidbits from a Soul Hock Shop, published in 1995.

—Blážena Urgošíková
Films as Actor:

(as Charles Buchinsky)

1951 You’re in the Navy Now (U.S.S. Teakettle) (Hathaway) (as Waszylewski); The People against O’Hara (John Sturges) (as Angelo Korvac); The Mob (Remember That Face) (Parrish) (as Jack)

1952 Red Skies of Montana (Smoke Jumpers) (Joseph M. Newman) (as Neff); My Six Convicts (Fregonese) (as Jocko); The Marrying Kind (Cukor) (as Eddie); Pat and Mike (Cukor) (as Hank Tasling); Diplomatic Courier (Hathaway) (as Bronson); Bloodhounds of Broadway (Harmon Jones)

1953 House of Wax (de Toth) (as Igor); Miss Sadie Thompson (Bernhardt) (as Pvt. Edwards); The Clown (Leonard) (as Eddie)

1954 Crime Wave (The City Is Dark) (de Toth) (as Hastings); Tennessee Champ (Wilcox) (as Sixty Jubel); Riding Shotgun (de Toth) (as Pinto); Apache (Aldrich) (as Hondo); Vera Cruz (Aldrich) (as Pittsburgh)

(as Charles Bronson)

1954 Drum Beat (Daves) (as Capt. Jack)

1955 Big House, U.S.A. (Koch) (as Benny Kelly); Target Zero (Harmon Jones) (as Sgt. Vince Gaspari)

1956 Jubal (Daves) (as Reb Haislipp)

1957 Run of the Arrow (Hot Lead) (Fuller) (as Blue Buffalo)

1958 Machine Gun Kelly (Corman) (title role); Gang War (Fowler Jr.) (as Alan Avery); Showdown at Boot Hill (Fowler Jr.) (as Luke Welsh); When Hell Broke Loose (Crane) (as Steve Boland); Ten North Frederick (Dunne)

1959 Never So Few (John Sturges) (as Sgt. John Danforth)

1960 The Magnificent Seven (John Sturges) (as O’Reilly)

1961 Master of the World (Witney) (as Strock); A Thunder of Drums (Joseph M. Newman) (as Trooper Hanna); X-15 (Richard Donner) (as Lt. Col. Lee Brandon)

1962 This Rugged Land (Hiller); Kid Galahad (Karlson) (as Lew Nyack); The Meanest Men in the West (Fuller) (as Harge Talbot Jr.)

1963 The Great Escape (John Sturges) (as Danny Velinski); Four for Texas (Aldrich) (as Matson)

1964 Guns of Diablo (Sagal) (as Linda Murdock)

1965 The Sandpiper (Minnelli) (as Cos Erickson); Battle of the Bulge (Anmakin) (as Major Wolenski)

1966 This Property Is Condemned (Pollack) (as J. J. Nichols)

1967 The Dirty Dozen (Aldrich) (as Joseph Wladislaw); La Bataille de San Sebastian (Guns for San Sebastian) (Verneuil) (as Teclo)

1968 Adieu l’ami (Farewell Friend; Honor among Thieves) (Herman) (as Franz Propp); Villa Rides (Kulik) (as Fierro); C’era una volta il West (Once upon a Time in the West) (Leone) (as the Man “Harmonica”)

1969 Twinky (Lola) (Richard Donner) (as Scott Wardman); Le Passager de la pluie (Rider on the Rain) (Clément) (as Col. Harry Dobbs)

1970 You Can’t Win ’em All (Collinson) (as Josh Corey); Città violenta (Violent City; The Family) (Sollima) (as Jeff)

1971 Soleil rouge (Red Sun) (Terence Young) (as Link); Qual’ un derrière la porte (Two Minds for Murder; Someone behind the Door) (Gessner) (as the stranger); Chato’s Land (Winner) (as Chato); L’uomo dalle due ombre (De la part des copains; Cold Sweat) (Terence Young) (as Joe Martin)

1972 The Valachi Papers (Joe Valachi: I segreti di Casa Nostra) (Terence Young) (as Joseph Valachi); The Mechanic (Winner) (as Arthur Bishop)

1973 The Stone Killer (Winner) (as Det. Lou Torrey); Valdez il mezzosangue (The Valdez Horses; Valdez, the Halfbreed; Chino) (John Sturges and Coletti) (as Chino Valdez)

1974 Mr. Majestyk (Fleischer) (title role); Death Wish (Winner) (as Paul Kersey)

1975 Breakout (Gries) (as Nick Colton); Hard Times (The Streetfighter) (Walter Hill) (as Chaney); Breakheart Pass (Gries) (as John Deakin)

1976 From Noon Till Three (Gilroy) (as Graham Dorsey); St. Ives (J. Lee Thompson) (as Raymond St. Ives)

1977 Raid on Entebbe (Kershner—for TV) (as General Dan Shomron); Telefon (Siegel) (as Grigori Borzov); The White Buffalo (Hunt) (as Steve Boland) (as Wild Bill Hickok) (James Otis)

1978 Love and Bullets (Rosenberg) (as Charlie Congers)

1979 Caboblanco (J. Lee Thompson) (as Giff Hoyt)

1980 Borderline (Freedman) (as Jeb Maynard)

1981 Death Hunt (Hunt) (as Johnson); Death Wish II (Winner) (as Paul Kersey)

1982 10 to Midnight (J. Lee Thompson) (as Leo Kessler)

1983 The Evil that Men Do (J. Lee Thompson) (as Jack Murphy); Act of Vengeance (Mackenzie—for TV) (as Jock Yablonski)

1984 Murphy’s Law (J. Lee Thompson) (as Jack Murphy); Garry S. White (Winner) (as General Dan Shomron)

1984 The Valdez Horses (Winner) (as Det. Lou Torrey)

1984 The Indian Runner (Larry—for TV) (as Paul Fein)

1985 Death Wish III (Winner) (as Paul Kersey)

1985 The Stone Killer (Winner) (as Det. Lou Torrey); Valdez il mezzosangue (The Valdez Horses; Valdez, the Halfbreed; Chino) (John Sturges and Coletti) (as Chino Valdez)

1986 The People against O’Hara (Winner) (as General Dan Shomron); Telefon (Siegel) (as Grigori Borzov); The White Buffalo (Hunt) (as Steve Boland) (as Wild Bill Hickok) (James Otis)

1986 Assassination (Hunt) (as Jay Killian); Death Wish IV: The Crackdown (J. Lee Thompson) (as Jack Murphy); Wild West (compilation)

1987 Messenger of Death (Avenging Angels) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Garrett Smith)

1988 Kinji: Forbidden Subjects (J. Lee Thompson) (as Lt. Crowe); Act of Vengeance . . . A True Story (Mackenzie—for TV)

1989 The Indian Runner (Sean Penn) (as Father); Yes, Virginia, There Is a Santa Claus (Jarrott—for TV) (as Francis Church)

1989 The Sea Wolf (Michael Anderson—for TV) (as Capt. Wolf Larsen); Donato and Daughter (Holcomb—for TV) (as Sgt. Mike Donato)

1990 Death Wish V: The Face of Death (Goldstein) (as Paul Kersey)

1995 Family of Cops (Kotchek—for TV) (as Paul Fein)

1995 Breach of Faith: Family of Cops II (Green—for TV) (as Paul Fein)

1999 Family of Cops III (Larry—for TV) (as Paul Fein)

Publications

By BRONSON: articles—

On BRONSON: books—

On BRONSON: articles—

Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), July and August 1982.
Stars (Mariembourg), September 1989.

* * *

The French call Charles Bronson “the sacred monster.” That quality and the characteristics suggested by the “man of few words” and “man of action” are the main reasons Bronson became one of the “big three” of film macho-men of the 1970s. He is often compared with Clint Eastwood or Burt Reynolds, but Bronson’s masculinity is unglamorized, distant, and often brutal in a fashion that previously had not been particularly successful with American audiences until Eastwood himself paved the way with his series of Sergio Leone revenge Westerns in the 1960s. Unlike Eastwood, Bronson had appeared in major roles in many Hollywood films by then, but his ascendency to stardom, like Eastwood’s, evolved in Europe.

Burt Reynolds has said of Bronson that there is an “undercurrent of danger” in his characterizations. The subtle explosiveness is the element of his acting style that is most exploited in his major roles in Europe. The first real example is Sergio Leone’s Once upon a Time in the West in which Bronson plays a ruthless gunfighter seeking revenge. The vengeance scenario has in fact always been the ideal one for Bronson’s volatile and seemingly ruthless personality on screen—most notably in the series of Death Wish films he made after his stardom in Europe transitioned to America. For the director Michael Winner, Bronson brought these qualities to his portrayal of a betrayed hitman in The Mechanic and to that of a Mafia driver whose past becomes a threat to him in Cold Sweat. In both films Bronson’s character at first glimpse seems to be resigned and calm, but ultimately he explodes violently against those who threaten him. Early on in his career, he satirized his already evolving tough-guy screen image as the outwardly macho but inwardly gutless real-life title character in Roger Corman’s Machine Gun Kelly.

Bronson began in films in 1951, billing himself under his real name, Charles Buchinsky, until 1954 in the Western Drum Beat opposite Alan Ladd. From the beginning, his rugged persona lent itself mostly to action films, gangster films and Westerns, in which he was often cast as an Indian or Mexican. He specialized in action films, except for occasional anomalies such as the 3-D horror thriller House of Wax, the torrid Miss Sadie Thompson, and the Red Skelton comedy-tearjerker, The Clown.

The action films in which Bronson has appeared in America are far less cynical than his European films, and he benefited from working with some of the great masters of the action genre: John Sturges in The Magnificent Seven and The Great Escape; Robert Aldrich in Apache, Vera Cruz, Four for Texas, and The Dirty Dozen; and Don Siegel in Telefon. His greatest commercial success in America has been Death Wish, in which he plays an unassuming architect who becomes an obsessed urban vigilante after his wife and daughter are brutalized by street punks. The film was followed by four sequels. His virtually nonstop activity as a major screen tough guy slacked off a bit following the death of his wife Jill Ireland, with whom he often co-starred; he has appeared in only two big screen films since—Sean Penn’s The Indian Runner, and the latest (to date) installment in the long-running Death Wish series, titled Death Wish V: The Face of Death. In 1986, he had a memorable turn as the murdered United Mine Workers official Jock Yablonski in the made-for-cable docudrama Act of Vengeance, one of Bronson’s few forays into television since his own, now almost forgotten, TV series Man with a Camera disappeared from the airwaves in the 1950s.

Although in the past the Bronson persona has always seemed to work best in roles in which he plays the bad guy or the madman, a degree of variation has been involved in some of his more recent films, such as the offbeat Frank D. Gilroy Western From Noon Till Three, in which Bronson again kidded his image, and 10 to Midnight, where he played a police detective who, to get his man, uses the same means as the psycho he is tracking—in “the name of the law.” The role seemed to marry the role of the brutal man of action which made him a star in Europe to that of the righteous avenger, which made him a star in America.

—Rob Winning, updated by John McCarty

BROOKS, Mel

Nationality: American. Born: Melvin Kaminsky in Brooklyn, New York, 28 June 1926. Education: Attended Virginia Military Institute, 1944, and Brooklyn College. Family: Married 1) Florence Baum (divorced), one son, two daughters; 2) the actress Anne Bancroft, one son. Career: 1944—46—combat engineer, U.S. Army; late 1940s—jazz drummer, stand-up comedian, and social director, Grossinger’s resorts; 1950–58—writer and occasional performer for Sid Caesar’s TV show; 1963—conceived, wrote, and narrated cartoon short The Critic; 1965—co-creator (with Buck Henry) of Get Smart TV show (ran 1965–69); 1968—directed first feature, The Producers; 1976—creator and producer of TV series When Things Were Rotten; 1980—founder, Brokofilms. Awards: Academy Award for Best Short Subject, for The Critic, 1963; Academy Award for Best Story and Screenplay, and Writers Guild Award for Best Written Screenplay, Mel Brooks (center) with Harvey Korman in Blazing Saddles for The Producers, 1969; American Comedy Awards Lifetime Achievement Award, 1987. Address: 2301 La Mesa, Santa Monica, CA 90405, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1969 Putney Swope (Downey) (as Mr. Forget It)
1979 The Muppet Movie (Frawley) (as Professor Max Krassman)
1983 To Be or Not to Be (Alan Johnson) (as Frederick Bronski, + pr, co-sc)
1990 Look Who’s Talking, Too! (Heckerling) (as voice of Mr. Toilet Man)
1994 Il silenzio dei prosciutti (The Silence of the Hams) (Greggio);
   The Little Rascals (Spheeris) (as Mr. Welling)
1997 I Am Your Child (Rob Reiner—for TV) (as himself)
1998 The Prince of Egypt (Chapman, Hickner) (as voice)

1970 The Twelve Chairs (as Tikon, + mus)
1974 Blazing Saddles (as Governor Lepetomane/Indian Chief, co-sc, + mus); Young Frankenstein (Frankenstein Jr.) (co-sc)
1976 Silent Movie (as Mel Funn, co-sc)
1977 High Anxiety (as Dr. Richard Thorndyke, co-sc, + pr, mus)
1981 History of the World, Part I (as Moses/Comicus/Torquemada/
   Jacques/King Louis XVI, co-sc, + pr, mus)
1987 Spaceballs (as President Skroob/Yogurt, co-sc, + pr)
1991 Life Stinks! (as Goddard Bolt, co-sc, + pr)
1993 Robin Hood: Men in Tights (as Rabbi Tuckman, co-sc, + pr)
1995 Dracula: Dead and Loving It (as Dr. Abraham Van Helsing, co-sc, + pr)
1999 Svitati (Greggio) (as Jake Gordon, co-sc)

Films as Executive Producer:

1980 The Elephant Man (David Lynch)
1985 The Doctor and the Devils (Francis)
1986 The Fly (Cronenberg); Solarbabies (Johnson)
1987 84 Charing Cross Road (David Jones)
1992 The Vagrant (Walas)
Publications

By BROOKS: books—

By BROOKS: articles—

Interview with James Atlas, in _Film Comment_ (New York), March/April 1975.

‘Fond Salutes and Naked Hate,’ interview with Gordon Gow, in _Films and Filming_ (London), July 1975.

Interview with A. Remond, in _Ecran_ (Paris), November 1976.

Interview with Alan Yentob, in _Listener_ (London), 8 October 1981.

Interview in _Screen International_, 3 March 1984.

Interview with L. Stiegel, in _Playboy_ (Chicago), January 1989.

On BROOKS: books—

On BROOKS: articles—

‘Two Thousand Year Old Man,’” in _Newsweek_ (New York), 4 October 1965.

Diehl, D., ‘‘Mel Brooks,’’ in _Action_ (Los Angeles), January/February 1975.

spends much of the film as Bronski posing as other characters, particularly a bearded Nazi-scientist who has an eye for his wife. Brooks has scenes where he expresses fear and sadness very convincingly, although the script is structured so that each of these emotional moments is followed by a comical line. A final note about Brooks in To Be or Not to Be: He is the first and only comedy actor to play Hamlet and Hitler in the same film!

The second fully developed Brooks character appears in Life Stinks!, an otherwise disappointing attempt at a comedy involving the lives of homeless people. In what might be deemed Brooks’s least funny film, he gives his most serious, naturalistic performance to date. He is Goddard Bolt, a heartless billionaire who agrees to live without money (or wig) for 30 days in a Los Angeles slum area in order to win a lucrative bet. On the streets for a couple of days, lacking food and shelter, he adopts more humane values and concerns. The film is slower-paced than his previous works, allowing Brooks to offer a more thoughtful and sensitive portrayal.

Many comedians—Jerry Lewis, Charlie Chaplin, Milton Berle, Bert Lahr, and Danny Kaye are just a few—have given outstanding dramatic performances on stage, screen and television. Now that Mel Brooks, master of comedy, has disclosed a talent for portraying man’s serious side, perhaps he will execute a straight dramatic characterization in the future.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

BROSnan, Pierce

Films as Actor:

1980 The Mirror Crack’d (Hamilton) (uncredited); The Long Good Friday (Mackenzie) (as First Irishman)
1986 Nomads (McTiernan) (as Jean Charles Pommier)
1987 The Fourth Protocol (Mackenzie) (as Valeri Petrofsky)
1988 Taffin (Megahy) (as Mark Taffin); The Deceivers (Meyer) (as William Savage)
1989 The Heist (Orme—for TV) (as Neil Skinner)
1991 Mister Johnson (Beresford) (as Harry Rudbeck); Murder 101 (Condon—for TV) (as Charles Lattimore); Victim of Love (London—for TV) (as Paul Tomlinson)
1992 The Lawnmower Man (Stephen King’s The Lawnmower Man) (Leonard) (as Doctor Lawrence Angelo); Live Wire (Dugnay) (as Danny O’Neill)
1993 Mrs. Doubtfire (Columbus) (as Stuart Dunmeyer); Entangled (Les Veufs) (Fischer) (as Garavan); Death Train (Alistair MacLean’s Death Train; Detonator) (Jackson—for TV) (as Mike Graham); The Broken Chain (Johnson—for TV) (as Sir William Johnson)
1994 Dangerous Pursuit (—for TV); Don’t Talk to Strangers (Lewis—for TV) (as Patrick Brody); Love Affair (Caron) (as Ken Allen)
1995 GoldenEye (Campbell) (as James Bond); Night Watch (Alistair MacLean’s Night Watch; Detonator 2: Night Watch) (Jackson—for TV) (as Mike Graham); Robinson Crusoe (Daniel Defoe’s Robinson Crusoe) (Hardy, Miller) (as Robinson Crusoe)
1996 The Disappearance of Kevin Johnson (Megahy) (as himself); The Mirror Has Two Faces (Streisand) (as Alex); Mars Attacks! (Burton) (as Donald Kessler)
1997 Dante’s Peak (Donaldson) (as Harry Dalton); Tomorrow Never Dies (Spottiswoode) (as James Bond)
1998 Quest for Camelot (The Magic Sword: Quest for Camelot) (du Chau) (as voice of King Arthur); The Nephew (Brady) (as Joe Brady + pr)
1999 The World is Not Enough (Pressure Point) (Apted) (as James Bond); The Thomas Crown Affair (McTiernan) (as Thomas Crown + pr); The Match (The Beautiful Game) (Davis) (as John MacGhee + pr); Grey Owl (Attenborough) (as Archibald Belaney/Grey Owl)

2000 Dolphins (Freeman) (narrator); The Tailor of Panama (Boorman) (as Andy Osnard)

Publications

By BROSAN: articles—

Interview with Caroline Westbrook in Empire (London), December 1995.

On BROSAN: books—

On BROSAN: articles—

Kahn, Sheryl, ‘‘The Two Faces of Pierce Brosnan,’’ in McCall’s (New York), December 1996.

Jones, Alan, ‘‘Pierce Brosnan on James Bond,’’ in Cinefantastique (Oak Park, Illinois), 1 December 1999.

* * *

Now best known in the role of James Bond, the playboy secret agent, Pierce Brosnan began his showbusiness career as a fire-eater before establishing himself in the 1970s as a stage actor in London. In the 1980s and 1990s, he built a career as a tough but dignified leading man, inheriting the role of Bond from Timothy Dalton in 1995, and becoming the fifth actor to play the spy in the long-running series. He has so far appeared three times as Commander Bond, and has been the key to a revival of interest in the films.

Born in Ireland, but raised from the age of eleven in London, Brosnan’s early childhood was a troubled one. His father left the family when Pierce was a year old—the two were reunited in 1986—and when his mother went to London to train as a nurse, the child stayed in Ireland with his grandparents. Brosnan joined his mother in London in 1964, but left school at the earliest opportunity, aged fifteen. It was while working as a commercial artist in Harrods department store that he became interested in acting, and gave up work to enroll as a student at the London Drama Centre. Brosnan had some success as a stage actor, but it was in 1981, with the ABC mini-series The Manions of America, that his career began to take off.

Playing the lead, Rory O’Manion, Brosnan was noticed by the producers of the detective series Remington Steele. With the encouragement of his wife, Cassandra Harris, who was a ‘‘Bond Girl’’ in For Your Eyes Only, the family moved to Los Angeles from London in 1982.

Taking the title role in the highly popular TV series Remington Steele, Brosnan became well known as the suave bachelor detective. Talking to Rosemary Ellis in 1984, he complained of being overlooked by casting directors who saw only the sophisticated smoothness of the character, and thought he must be a model rather than an actor. The similarities between Steele and Bond are obvious, and it was because of the success of Remington Steele that, in 1985, he was invited to replace Roger Moore as agent 007. Brosnan was keen to take up the offer, but contractual difficulties over leaving Remington Steele stood in his way, preventing him from making his anticipated break into film.

In the years that followed, Brosnan worked mostly on mediocre cable-TV film thrillers, and mini-series, although his performance as the Russian masterspy Valeri Petrofsky in a Michael Caine vehicle, The Fourth Protocol, was well received. Somewhat against form was a supporting role in the Robin Williams comedy Mrs. Doubtfire that marked an upturn in a career that seemed stuck in repetitive, though lucrative, action flicks. Two years later, when a new actor was needed for the role of Bond, Brosnan’s wit and studied elegance again impressed producers, making him a popular choice. The three films in which he has appeared as Bond have been the most successful in the thirty-year history of the series, with the most recent, The World is Not Enough, also grossing more than any other film made by the studio, MGM.

Brosnan’s second success of 1999 was The Thomas Crown Affair, a remake of the 1968 film of the same name starring Steve McQueen in the lead role. With Brosnan playing Thomas Crown, a billionaire businessman who turns to crime to relieve his boredom, and Rene Russo as the insurance investigator who pursues him, the later version updates the slick style of the earlier film, substituting the theft of a priceless Monet painting for the bank robbery of the original. As a result, Crown’s motivation for committing the crime becomes more complex: only by stealing something beyond value can he escape the world of money with which he has become dissatisfied.

Since GoldenEye, Brosnan has become one of the most bankable actors in Hollywood. The average gross of the twenty-one films in which he stars tops $40 million, while The World is Not Enough came in at a whisker under the magic $100 million. Yet perhaps because of his own background he remains a devoted father and family man. Although he has often spoken candidly about the intensity of his relationship with his first wife, who died of cancer in 1991, he has managed also to keep his private life separate from his life as a celebrity.

While Bond seems likely to be the role for which he is best remembered as an actor, Brosnan has also devoted a good deal of his time to campaigning for environmental causes and fundraising for cancer research. Since the 1980s he has worked to protect ocean habitat, and in particular whales and dolphins, from exploitation, and with his second wife, environmental journalist Keely Shaye-Smith, is involved with the International Fund for Animal Welfare. Several of his recent film projects have an environmental theme. Richard Attenborough’s less than impressive Grey Owl tells the true story of an English settler and conservationist who passed himself off as a Native American in the 1930s, and in 2000, Brosnan narrated...
Dolphins, an IMAX film which highlights environmental threats to dolphins and other sea creatures.

—Chris Routledge

BRYNNER, Yul

Films as Actor:

1949 Port of New York (Benedek)
1956 The King and I (Walter Lang); The Ten Commandments (DeMille); Anastasia (Litvak)
1958 The Brothers Karamazov (Brooks); The Buccaneer (Quinn)
1959 The Journey (Litvak); The Sound and the Fury (Ritt); Solomon and Sheba (King Vidor); Le Testament d’Orphée (The Testament of Orpheus) (Cocteau); Mission to No Man’s Land (Pessis) (as narrator)
1960 Once More, with Feeling! (Donen); Profile of a Miracle (as narrator); Surprise Package (Donen); The Magnificent Seven (John Sturges)
1961 Goodbye Again (Aimez-vous Brahms?) (Litvak); My Friend Nicholas (Raymond) (as narrator)
1962 Escape from Zahrain (Neame); Taras Balba (Thompson); Man Is to Man . . . (Wright) (as narrator)
1963 Kings of the Sun (Thompson)
1964 Flight from Ashiya (Anderson); Invitation to a Gunfighter (Wilson)
1965 Morituri (The Saboteur Code Name “‘Morituri’”) (Wicki)
1966 Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément); Cast a Giant Shadow (Shavelson); Return of the Seven (Kennedy); Danger Grows Wild (The Poppy Is Also a Flower) (Young); Triple Cross (Young)
1967 The Long Duel (Annakin); The Double Man (Schaffner)
1968 Villa Rides (Kulik)
1969 Bitka na Neretvi (The Battle of Neretva) (Bulajic); The File of the Golden Goose (Wanamaker); The Magic Christian (McGrath); The Madwoman of Chaillot (Forbes)
1970 Indio Black, sai che ti dico: sei un gran figlio di . . . (Adios Sabata; The Bounty Hunters) (Frank Kramer, i.e. Gianfranco Parolini)
1971 Romance of a Horsethief (Polonsky); Catlow (Wanamaker); La Luz del fin del mundo (The Light at the Edge of the World) (Billington)
1972 The Picasso Summer (Salin); FuZZ (Colla)
1973 Le Serpent (Night Flight from Moscow) (Verneuil); Westworld (Crichton)
1975 The Ultimate Warrior (Clouse)
1976 Futureworld (Heffron); Con la rabbia agli occhi (Death Rage; Anger in His Eyes) (Anthony Dawson, i.e. Antonio Margheriti)

Publications

By BRYNNER: book—

Yul Brynner’s trademark—his baldness—was obviously the actor’s most identifiable feature. On a deeper level, his bald pate signified the type he has played in films and on stage through most of his career. His image—exotic, often sinister, and foreign, yet virile, masculine, and authoritative—was undeniably linked to his physique, his Eurasian facial features, but most especially his bald head.

Early in his career, most of the publicity surrounding Brynner centered on his baldness. During the production of his early films such as The Ten Commandments and The King and I, articles in popular magazines were quick to equate his baldness with sexual attractiveness. A career article in Newsweek, for example, quoted several female fans at length on the subject of Brynner’s appearance. One declared him to be “ugly magnetic” while another thought him “the most attractive man alive even if he grew grass on his head.” Interestingly, in publicity for later films in which Brynner often donned hairpieces, attention was still directed to his baldness, as photography sessions were arranged by the studios to record the fitting of various wigs.

Brynner had originally shaved his head for his part as the King of Siam in the stage production of The King and I, a role which both made him a star and first presented him as exotic and erotic. Screen roles such as the Pharaoh in The Ten Commandments, the King in the filmed version of The King and I, and Jean Lafitte in The Buccaneer, reinforced this image—an image in stark contrast to that of other box office stars of the 1950s, including John Wayne, Rock Hudson, Jimmy Stewart, and Alan Ladd, who were masculine, yet distinctly American, and were rarely presented in such a sinister or seemingly negative manner.

Brynner himself added to the exotic aspects of his image by inventing several versions of his childhood for various publications. He declared himself to be either a gypsy or the illegitimate son of a gypsy and a wealthy Russian. Often he stated that he studied philosophy at the Sorbonne in Paris, alternating this story with those about working as a gypsy singer in Parisian night spots or as a trapeze artist in a circus.

The peak of his film career was perhaps his role as the black-clad leader of a gang of cutthroats and outlaws in John Sturges’s The Magnificent Seven. The film emphasized his authoritarian air, while playing down his more exotic side, depicting him as “the gunfighter,” an outsider who by the nature of his profession can never be civilized. Brynner would reprise this character type again in later Westerns including Invitation to a Gunfighter, Return of the Seven (a sequel to The Magnificent Seven), Indio Black, and Westworld.

Unfortunately, by the late 1960s too many roles with too little variation had him hopelessly stereotyped as foreign heads of state or doomed gunfighters. In 1968 Variety actually listed him as a liability to producers because his films were consistent financial and critical flops. A move to Switzerland and roles in several European films did little to change his box office status. His most outrageous role, and one that purposely played against his image, was a cameo as a transvestite in The Magic Christian.

Brynner died of lung cancer in 1985. His last “performance” was by far his most dramatic and perhaps his most courageous. Shortly before his death, Brynner filmed a public service announcement for the American Cancer Society in which he warned viewers about the dangers of cigarette smoking. Brynner makes clear to the audience in his monologue that by the time they see the commercial, he will already have died from the result of smoking. It was a truly memorable exit from a dynamic film star who had always shrouded himself in drama and mystery.

—Susan M. Doll

BUCHANAN, Jack

Films as Actor:

1917 Auld Lang Syne (Morgan) (as Vane)
1919 Her Heritage (Merwin) (as Bob Hales)
1923 The Audacious Mr. Squire (Greenwood) (as Tom Squire)
1924 The Happy Ending (Cooper) (as Capt. Dale Conway)
1925 Settled Out of Court (Evidence Enclosed) (Cooper) (as husband); Stage Stars Off Screen (short); A Typical Budget (Brunel—short); Bulldog Drummond’s Third Round (Morgan) (as Capt. Hugh Drummond)
1927 Confetti (Cutts) (as Count Andrea Zorro)
1928 Toni (Maude) (as Toni Marr/Marini)
1929 Paris (Badger) (as Guy Pennell); Show of Shows (Adolfi)
1930 Monte Carlo (Lubitsch) (as Count Rudolph Fallière); The Glee Quartette (short)
1931 The Invisible Enemy (charity appeal short); Man of Mayfair (Mericant) (as Lord William)
1932 Goodnight Vienna (Magic Night) (Wilcox) (as Capt. Max Schlettof); Yes Mr. Brown (Geschaft nit Amerika) (as Nicholas Baumann, + co-d with Herbert Wilcox); That’s a Good Girl (as Jack Barrow, + d, co-sc)
1935 Brewster’s Millions (Freeland) (as Jack Brewster); Come Out of the Pantry (Raymond) (as Lord Robert Brent)
1936 When Knights Were Bold (Raymond) (as Sir Guy de Vere); This’ll Make You Whistle (Wilcox) (as Bill Hopping); Limelight (Backstage) (Wilcox) (as himself)
1937 Smash and Grab (Whelan) (as Jack Forrest, + pr); The Sky’s the Limit (as Dave Harber, + co-d with Lee Garmes, pr)
1938 Cavalcade of Stars (short); Break the News (Le Mort en fuite) (Clair) (as Teddy Fenton, + pr)
1939 The Middle Watch (Bentley) (as Capt. Maitland); The Gang’s All Here (The Amazing Mr. Forrest) (Freeland) (as Forrest, + co-pr)
1940 Bulldog Sees It Through (Huth) (as Bill Watson)
1944 Some Like It Rough (short) (as narrator)
1951 A Boy and a Bike (short)
1952 Giselle (short) (as narrator)
1953 The Band Wagon (Minnelli) (as Jeffrey Cordova)
1955 As Long as They’re Happy (Thompson) (as John Bentley); Josephine and Men (Bouling) (as Charles Luton)
1956 The French They Are a Funny Race (The Diary of Major Thompson) (Preston Sturges)

Other Films:
1938 Sweet Devil (Quelle drole de gosse) (Guissart) (pr only)
1943 Happidrome (Brandon) (co-pr only)
Publications

On BUCHANAN: books—

* * *

Jack Buchanan typified the suave, debonair (almost bland) English gentleman of stage and screen; he could sing and dance hardly more than adequately, but there was something about his personality (‘something about you that’s different,’ as one of his songs put it) that was very charming and attractive. Usually attired in top hat and tails, Buchanan was hailed by many critics as the British Fred Astaire, and although his dancing style was far more simplistic than Astaire’s, Buchanan did possess the same relaxed manner.

Buchanan made his film debut as a leading man in the silent era; the films were all second-rate, and Buchanan was hopelessly miscast in them. He made his debut in “talkies” in America in leading roles opposite Irene Bordoni in Paris and Jeanette MacDonald in Monte Carlo. Somehow he lacked the natural charm of MacDonald’s other leading man from this period, Maurice Chevalier; he returned to England to continue his film career there. (Interestingly Buchanan and Chevalier were later co-starred in one film, René Clair’s Break the News.)

In England Buchanan’s leading ladies included the American Fay Wray (When Knights Were Bold) and the French-born American star Lili Damita (Brewster’s Millions). His best British films, however, are those with Anna Neagle and Elsie Randolph; both ladies possessed just the right middle-class quality to complement Buchanan’s aristocratic air. Goodnight Vienna/Magic Night is probably his best film with Neagle, in which he charmingly sings the title song to her over the telephone, while This’ll Make You Whistle, his best work with Randolph, introduces the delightful “I’m in a Dancing Mood.”

The Buchanan charm was still apparent, despite the ravages of age and cancer, in his return-to-Hollywood feature, The Band Wagon. It was missing from his last film, Preston Sturges’ depressingly unfunny The French They Are a Funny Race.

—Anthony Slide

BUCHHOLZ, Horst

Films as Actor:

1955 Regine (Braun); Marianne, meine Jugendliebe (Duvivier) (as Vincent Loringer); Himmel ohne Sterne (Sky Without Stars) (Kautner)

1956 Die Halbstarken (The Hooligans; Teenage Wolfpack) (Tressler) (as Freddie)

1957 Ein Stuck vom Himmel (A Piece of Heaven) (Jugert) (uncredited); Montpi (Kautner) (as Young Montpi); Endstation Liebe (Tressler) (as Mecky); Robinson soll nicht sterben (The Girl and the Legend; The Legend of Robinson Crusoe) (von Baky) (as Tom); Bekentnisse des Hochstaplers Felix Krull (The Confessions of Felix Krull) (Hofman) (as Felix Krull); Herrschere ohne Krone (King in Shadow) (Braun) (as King Christian)

1958 Nasser Asphalt (Wet Asphalt) (Wisbar); Auferstehung (Resurrection) (Hansen) (as Nechjudoff)

1959 Tiger Bay (Thompson) (as Korchinsky); Das Totenschiff (Tressler) (as Philip)

1960 The Magnificent Seven (Sturges) (as Chico)

1961 Fanny (Logan) (as Marius); One, Two, Three (Wilder) (as Otto Ludwig Pfiff)

1963 Nine Hours to Rama (Robson)

1964 La Noia (The Empty Canvas) (Damiani) (as Dino)

1965 The Love Goddesses (Turell); Estambul (That Man in Instanbul) (Isasi-Isasmendi)

1966 Cervantes (Young Rebel) (Sherman) (as Miguel de Cervantes)

1967 Johnny Banco (Allegret) (as Johnny Banco)

1968 Como, Quando, Perchep (How, When and WithWhom) (Pietrangeli) (as Alberto); L’Astragale (Astragal) (Casaril) (as Julien)

1971 La Colomba Non Deve Volare (Skyriders Attack) (Garrone)

1972 The Great Waltz (Stone) (as Johann Strauss, Jr.)

1973 Aber Jonny! (Weidenmann)

1974 Pittsville—Ein Safe voll Blut (The Catamount Killing) (Zanussi) (as Mark Kalvin)

1976 Frauenstation (Thiele); The Savage Bees (Geller—for TV) (as Dr. Jorge Meuller)

1977 Dead of Night (Curtis); Raid on Entebbe (Kershner—for TV) (as Wilfred Boese)

1978 The Amazing Captain Nemo (March) (as King Tibor); Return to Fantasy Island (Fantasy Island II) (McCowan—for TV) (as Charles Fleming)

1979 Da Dunkerque alla Vittoria (From Hell to Victory) (Lenzi) (as Jurgen Dietrich); Avalanche Express (Hellman and Robson) (as Scholten); The French Atlantic Affair (Heyes—for TV) (as Doctor Chabot)

1981 Berlin Tunnel 21 (Michaels) (as Emerich Weber)

1982 Aphrodite (Fuest) (as Harry Laird)

1983 Sahara (McLaglen) (as Von Glessing)
Horst Buchholz (third from left) in The Magnificent Seven

1984  Wenn Ich Mich Furchte (Fear of Falling; When I’m Afraid) (Rischert)
1985  Code Name: Emerald (Sanger) (as Walter Hoffman)
1986  Die Braut von Damals (Haugk—for TV); Crossings (Arthur—for TV) (as Martin Goertz)
1988  I Skrzypce Przestaly Grac (And the Violins Stopped Playing) (Ramatii) (as Dymitr)
1990  Requiem por Granada (Escriva—for TV) (as Muley Hassan)
1991  Touch and Die (Solinas) (as Limey)
1992  Aces: Iron Eagle III (Leichman)
1993  In Weiter Ferne, So Nah! (Faraway, So Close!) (Wenders) (as Tony Baker)
1994  Todliches Erbe (Rothermund—for TV) (as Wolfgang Olmer); Fantaghiro IV (Cave of the Golden Rose IV) (Bava—for TV) (as Darken)
1995  Der Clan der Anna Voss (Ballman—for TV) (as Paul Voss)
1997  Ptak Ohnivak (Vorlick) (As King Jorgen); Der Kleine Unterscheid (Bohn—for TV) (as Wolfhart Perl); Geisterstunde—Fahrstuhl ins Jenseits (Matsutani and Niemann—for TV); La Vita e Bella (Life Is Beautiful) (Benigni) (as Dr. Lessing)

1998  Voyage of Terror (The Fourth Horseman) (Trenchard-Smith—for TV) (as Captain); Dunckel (Kraume)
1999  Minefield (Lane); Kinderraub in Rio—Eine Mutter Schlägt Zurück (Grünler—for TV) (as Dr. Lopez)
2000  Heller als der Mond (Brighter than the Moon) (Widrich) (as Erster Gast); Der Feuervogel (Vorlick)

Publications

On BUCHHOLZ: articles—

* * *
Born in Berlin, Germany, in 1933, Horst Buchholz came into the world the same time as did the Third Reich; he was lucky to escape the destruction that engulfed that regime in 1945. Like so many Germans, the Buchholzes were bombed out of their home, and they spent the closing months of the war in a series of evacuation camps. The family was separated by the war; although Horst and his mother returned to Berlin in the fall of 1945, the boy’s father remained in an Allied POW camp until 1947.

To help support the family, young Horst found work in the reviving German theatre, mostly as a bit player or extra. A few years later, he was hired by a film company to assist with the dubbing of foreign films into German. Buchholz gradually earned more substantial roles in the theatre, which, in turn, led to acting jobs in motion pictures. He played supporting roles in three German films made in 1955, and his first major role came the next year, when he played a biker-gang leader named Freddy in Die Halbstarken (The Half-Strong, German slang for juvenile delinquents). It was this portrayal, along with a few similar roles, that gained Buchholz a following among German youth and earned him the nickname “‘The Teutonic James Dean.’”

More important parts began to come Buchholz’s way as his acting ability and popularity with audiences became clear. He was named Best Actor at the Cannes Film Festival for his role in Helmut Kautner’s 1955 film Tiger Bay. Buchholz’s breakout role came in 1957, with The Confessions of Felix Krull (based on a popular novel by Thomas Mann). The film, and its young star, received international acclaim (although the English-dubbed version erroneously credited “Henry Bookholt” in the title role).

Although Felix Krull did play in the United States, it was mostly seen by art house patrons. Buchholz’s first major exposure to American audiences came with his appearance in J. Lee Thompson’s 1959 film Sky Without Stars. Buchholz’s breakout role was cast as the villain in that film, but his next role gave him the opportunity to portray that most heroic of American heroes, the cowboy. John Sturges’ western The Magnificent Seven (1960) featured such established stars as Yul Brynner and Eli Wallach, along with rising young American actors like Steve McQueen, James Coburn, and Charles Bronson. Buchholz was cast as Chico, a young Mexican who had become a gunslinger in rejection of his peasant heritage—a life to which he returns at the film’s end.

Although Buchholz received favorable reviews for his cast-against-type performance, and had major roles in other American films of the period—such as Joshua Logan’s Fanny (1961) and Billy Wilder’s One, Two, Three (which cast Buchholz opposite James Cagney)—the young German never became a major star in the Hollywood firmament, possibly because he refused to focus on American films exclusively. Buchholz has remained a working actor, dividing his career between films and television, between the United States and Europe—a lifestyle made possible by his command of English, French, and Italian, in addition to his native German. Buchholz and his wife of forty-plus years, the French actress Miriam Bru, maintain homes in Switzerland, France, and Germany.

Although much of his later work involved him in relatively undistinguished films, Buchholz did play a supporting role in Roberto Begnini’s Life Is Beautiful, which won several Oscars in 1999, including Best Picture. Buchholz has also lent his talents to numerous made-for-TV movies over the years in both the United States and Europe, and has also done occasional episodic television work in both markets.

—Justin Gustainis

BUJOLD, Geneviève

Nationality: Canadian. Born: Montreal, 1 July 1942. Education: Studied at a convent and at the Quebec Conservatory of Drama. Family: Married the director Paul Almond, 1967 (divorced 1973), sons: Matthew and Emmanuel. Career: 1962—joined Théâtre du Gesù’s production of The Barber of Seville; 1963—became member of Le Théâtre du Rideau Vert; 1963–64—acted in some 60 TV and radio shows; 1964—first role in Canadian-French co-production La Fleur de l’âge; 1965—toured Europe and the Soviet Union with Rideau Vert company; 1966—while in Paris, chosen by Alain Resnais to play opposite Yves Montand in Le Guerre est finie; on return to Canada appeared in stage and film productions directed by husband Paul Almond; 1969—international fame after starring role in Anne of the Thousand Days. Awards: Best Actress, Canadian Film Awards, for Isabel, 1968; Best Actress, Canadian Film Awards, for Acte de coeur, 1970; Best Actress Award, LA Film Critics, 1988. Address: c/o Trauber and Flynn, 2029 Century Park East, Suite 300, Los Angeles, CA 90027, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Cast</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Amantia Pestilens (Bonnire)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>‘‘Geneviève’’ ep. of La Fleur de l’âge (Les Adolescents; The Adolescents) (BrauIl) (as Geneviève)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>La Guerre est finie (The War Is Over) (Resnais)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Nadine Sallanches); Le Roi de coeur (King of Hearts) (de Broca) (as Coquelicot)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Le Velour (The Thief of Paris) (Malle)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Charlotte); Entre la mer et l’eau douce (BrauIl)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Isabel (Almond)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Anne of the Thousand Days (Jarrott)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Anne Boleyn)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Acte du coeur (Act of the Heart) (Almond)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Martha Hayes); Marie-Christine (short)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Trojan Women (Cacyoynnis)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Cassandra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Journey (Almond)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Saguenay)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Kamouraska (Jutra)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Elisabeth)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Earthquake (Robson)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Denise)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>L’Incorrigible (The Incorrigible) (de Broca)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Marie-Charlotte)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Swashbuckler (The Scarlet Buccaneer) (Goldstone) (as Janet Barnet); Obsession (De Palma) (as Elizabeth Courtland); Alex and the Gypsy (Love and Other Crimes) (Korty) (as Maritza)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Un Autre Homme, une autre chance (Another Man, Another Chance) (Lelouch) (as Jeanne Leroy)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Coma (Crichton)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Dr. Susan Wheeler); Mistress of Paradise (Medal—for TV) (as Elizabeth Beaufort)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Murder by Decree (Clark)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Annie Crook); Final Assignment (Almond) (as Nicole Thomson)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Last Flight of Noah’s Ark (Jarrott)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Bernadette Laffeur)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Monsignore (Perry)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Clara)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Tightrope (Tuggle)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Beryl Thibodeaux); Choose Me (Rudolph) (as Dr. Nancy Love)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Trouble in Mind (Rudolph)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(as Wanda)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1988  Dead Ringers (Cronenberg) (as Claire Niveau); The Moderns (Rudolph) (as Libby Valentin)
1989  Les Noces de papier (A Paper Wedding) (Braault—for TV) (as Claire); Secret Places of the Heart (Bridges); Red Earth, White Earth (Greene—for TV) (as Madeline)
1990  False Identity (Keach) (as Rachel Roux); Une Certaine Charme (Aghian); And the Dance Goes On (Almond) (as Rick and James’s mother)
1991  Rue du Bac (as Marie Aubriac)
1992  Oh, What a Night (Till) (as Eva)
1993  Spending Time with Family (Barron); An Ambush of Ghosts (Lewis) (as Irene Betts)
1994  Mon Ami Max (My Friend Max) (as Marie-Alexandrine Brabant)
1995  The Adventures of Pinocchio (Barron) (as Leona)
1997  The House of Yes (Mark Waters) (as Mrs. Pascal)
1998  You Can Thank Me Later (Dotan) (as Joselle); Last Night (McKellar) (as Mrs. Carlton)
1999  Eye of the Beholder (Elliott) (as Dr. Brault)
2000  The Bookfair Murders (Panzer—for TV) (as Margaret)
2001  Sex and a Girl (Rosenberg)

Publications

By BUJOLD: articles—

Interview by M. Euvrard, in Cinéma Québec (Montreal), March-April 1973.

On BUJOLD: articles—

Surely few film actresses so distinguished as Geneviève Bujold have appeared in so few distinguished films. After a strong beginning in supporting roles as the provocative, lissome admirer of Yves Montand in Alain Resnais’s _La Guerre est finie_ and the wistfully fey inmate in Philippe de Broca’s _King of Hearts_, the young Quebecoise became a star in American films of the Seventies, a quirky character actress in the Eighties, and only an occasional player, mainly in Canadian films, in recent years.

American audiences were introduced to Bujold as a slight-of-build but self-contained, fiercely determined Anne Boleyn, a perfect foil to Richard Burton’s extravagant Henry VIII in _Anne of the Thousand Days_. Three years later she met the challenge of Greek tragedy on film, as Cassandra in Michael Cacoyannis’s _The Trojan Women_, holding her own against Katharine Hepburn, Vanessa Redgrave, and Irene Papas. Many must have felt, with Pauline Kael, that “this performance is a leap in her career; her ambitiousness in tackling Irene Papas. Many must have felt, with Pauline Kael, that “this performance is a leap in her career; her ambitiousness in tackling

As it turned out, most of her American films in the next 10 years were to be glossy, unimaginative genre exercises: _Earthquake_, _Swashbuckler_, _Monsignor_, and _Coma_ (in which she at least brought an air of authority to her starring role as a doctor in a Michael Crichton thriller). In between, there were some Canadian films directed by her husband, Paul Almond— _Isabel, Acte du coeur, Journey, Final Assignment_—and a few offbeat projects such as John Korty’s _Alex and the Gypsy_ and Claude Lelouch’s underrated _Another Man, Another Chance_. Of her English-language starring roles, perhaps Brian De Palma’s _Obsession_ used her best, not least for her haunting role (and distinctly French) facial features, a combination of soft and firm qualities, upon which the male lead is fixated. The role calls for Bujold to project a remote yet intense and (to the hero) seemingly attainable sensuality; beyond that, a kindly, intelligent concern (both feigned and real, as it turns out); while underneath she is a determined avenger, and underneath that, a wounded, unloved child pleading for help.

Bujold brings to most of her best roles several of these qualities: both toughness and vulnerability (a copywriter’s hackneyed pairing, but truly pertinent here), and both an air of poised, experienced, unexaggerated sensuality and a convent-girl or hurt-child innocence. These qualities have worked together most perfectly perhaps in a 1974 television production of Jean Anouilh’s _Antigone_, an adaptation of Sophocles that retains the plot but uses deliberately anachronistic modern speech. The force and conviction of Bujold’s performance eliminate potentially ludicrous clashes of style and lapses into sentimentality, while keeping the pride and pathos.

Following good notices for her role as a rape-victim therapist in another thriller, _Tightrope_, Bujold appeared in some extremely varied and distinctive character parts, notably in a trio of films by Alan Rudolph and one by David Cronenberg. _Choose Me_, the first of the Rudolph films, provided her a most unusual deadpan comic role, as a radio “Love Doctor” who gives brilliant advice to her listeners but is a psychological mess outside the studio. Her first scene, establishing her cool, self-assured radio persona, using her deep voice to superb effect, is contrasted later by her tour-de-force dialogue with Keith Carradine, in which, under a false name, she admiringly describes the radio star with a sort of daffy abandon, totally absorbed in herself. In Cronenberg’s _Dead Ringers_, playing a jaded actress, she manages to make her character neither ludicrous nor villainous—a considerable achievement, since the plot calls for her to be having an affair with twin brothers without knowing it, and later, after a denunciation and reconciliation, carelessly leading one of them into drug addiction.

Bujold’s screen presence is so strong that she can be a major part of the success of a film in which she has only one scene. Such is the case in the Sherlock Holmes drama _Murder by Decree_, in which she plays the pivotal role of a madwoman who not only reveals the information necessary for Holmes to solve the case but who is so vitally appealing that Holmes makes an emotional commitment to her that carries him to a climatic denunciation.

In recent years Bujold appears to have pursued a private life more than a film career, though she was briefly notorious for abandoning her role as the captain in the _Star Trek: Voyager_ television series. She has continued to work mainly in Canadian productions, and occasionally in such American independent films as _An Ambush of Ghosts_, where she is a woman driven mad by guilt, and _The House of Yes_ (yet another madwoman, but this one dryly arch), receiving excellent notices as always but little public renown.

—Joseph Milicia

BURKE, Billie

Nationality: American. Born: Mary William Ethelbert Appleton Burke, in Washington, D.C., 7 August 1886 (some sources say 1885); daughter of William (Billy) Burke, an internationally celebrated Barnum and Bailey circus clown. Family: Married theater impresario Florenz Ziegfeld, 1914; daughter: Patricia. Career: Toured Europe and the United States with the circus that employed her father, 1890s; made stage debut in London, 1903; came to New York to appear on the stage in _My Wife_, with John Drew, and continued appearing on Broadway, 1907; made her screen debut in _Peggy_, 1916; retired from screen acting, and returned to Broadway, 1921; returned to screen acting when hers and husband Florenz Ziegfeld’s assets were wiped out in the stockmarket crash, 1929; played Glinda, the Good Witch, in _The Wizard of Oz_, 1939; appeared in the television series, _Doc Corkle_, 1952. Died: Of a heart ailment, Verdugo City, California, 14 May 1970.

Films as Actress:

- 1916 _Peggy_ (Giblyn, Ince) (as Peggy Cameron); _Gloria’s Romance_ (Campbell, Edwin) (serial) (as Gloria)
- 1917 _The Mysterious Miss Terry_ (Dawley) (as Mavis Terry); _Arms and the Girl_ (Kaufman) (as Ruth Sherwood); _The Land of Promise_ (Kaufman) (as Nora Marsh)
- 1918 _Eve’s Daughter_ (Kirkwood) (as Irene Simpson-Bates); _Let’s Get a Divorce_ (Giblyn) (as Mme. Cyprienne Marcey); _In
Billie Burke (left) with Judy Garland (center) and Margaret Hamilton in The Wizard of Oz

Pursuit of Polly (Withney) (as Polly Marsden); The Make-Believe Wife (Robertson) (as Phyllis Ashbrook)

1919 Good Gracious, Annabelle! (Melford) (as Annabelle Leigh); The Misleading Widow (Robertson) (as Betty Taradine); Sadie Love (Robertson) (as Sadie Love); Wanted: A Husband (Windom) (as Amanda Darcy Cole)

1920 Away Goes Prudence (Robertson) (as Prudence Thorne); The Frisky Mrs. Johnson (Dillon) (as Belle Johnson)

1921 The Education of Elizabeth (Dillon) (as Elizabeth Banks)

1929 Glorifying the American Girl (Harkrider, Webb) (as Herself)

1932 A Bill of Divorcement (Cukor) (as Margaret Fairfield)

1933 Christopher Strong (Arzner) (as Lady Elaine Strong); Dinner at Eight (Cukor) (as Millicent [Mrs. Oliver] Jordan); Only Yesterday (Stahl) (as Julia Warren)

1934 Finishing School (Nichols, Jr., Tuchcock) (as Mrs. Radcliffe); Where Sinners Meet (Ruben) (as Eustasia); We're Rich Again (Seiter) (as Linda); Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke) (as Aunt Paula)

1935 Splendor (Nugent) (as Clarissa); Society Doctor (Seitz) (as Mrs. Crane); She Couldn't Take It (Garnett) (as Mrs. van Dyke); A Feather in Her Hat (Santell) (as Julia Trent Anders); Doubting Thomas (Butler) (as Paula Brown); After Office Hours (Leonard) (as Mrs. Norwood); Becky Sharp (Mamoulian) (as Lady Bareacres)

1936 My American Wife (Young) (as Mrs. Robert Cantillon); Piccadilly Jim (Leonard) (as Eugenia Willis); Craig's Wife (Arzner) (as Mrs. Frazier); The Great Ziegfeld (Leonard) (advisor only)

1937 Topper (McLeod) (as Mrs. Topper); Parnell (Stahl) (as Clara Wood); The Bride Wore Red (Arzner) (as Contessa di Meina); Navy Blue and Gold (Wood) (as Mrs. Alyce Gates)

1938 Merrily We Live (McLeod) (as Mrs. Emily Kilbourne); Everybody Sing (Marin) (as Diana Bellaire); The Young in Heart (Wallace) (as Marmy Carleton)

1939 Remember? (McLeod) (as Mrs. Louise Bronson); Eternally Yours (Garnett) (as Aunt Abby); Broken Suite (Thiele) (as Mrs. McGill); Topper Takes a Trip (McLeod) (as Mrs. Topper); Zenobia (Douglas) (as Bessie Tibbitt); The Wizard of Oz (Fleming) (as Glinda, the Good Witch)

1940 Hullabaloo (Marin) (as Penny Merriweather); The Ghost Comes Home (Thiele) (as Cora Adams); Dulcy (Simon) (as Eleanor Forbes); And One Was Beautiful (Sinclair) (as Mrs.
Lattimer); Irene (Wilcox) (as Mrs. Herman Vincent); The Captain Is a Lady (Sinclair) (as Blossey Stort)

1941 The Wild Man of Borneo (Sinclair) (as Bernice Marshall); Topper Returns (Del Ruth) (as Mrs. Topper); One Night in Lisbon (Griffith) (as Catherine Enfielden)

1942 What’s Cookin’? (Cline, Lantz) (as Agatha); Girl Trouble (Schuster) (as Mrs. Rowland); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley) (as Mrs. Ernest Stanley); In This Our Life (Huston) (as Lavinia Timberlake); They All Kissed the Bride (Hall) (as Mrs. Drew)

1943 You’re a Lucky Fellow, Mr. Smith (Feist) (as Aunt Harriet); So’s Your Uncle (Yarbrough) (as Minerva); Hi Diddle Diddle (Stone) (as Liza Prescott); Gildersleeve on Broadway (Douglas) (as Mrs. Laura Chandler)

1945 Swing Out, Sister (Lilley) (as Jessica); The Cheaters (Kane) (as Mrs. Pudgeon)

1946 Breakfast in Hollywood (Schuster) (as Mrs. Cartwright); The Bachelor’s Daughters (Stone) (as Molly)

1948 Silly Billy (White) (short); Billie Gets Her Man (Bernds) (short)

1949 And Baby Makes Three (Levin) (as Mrs. Fletcher); The Barkleys of Broadway (Walters) (as Mrs. Livingston Belney)

1950 Three Husbands (Reis) (as Mrs Whittaker, the Wife); The Boy From Indiana (Rawlins) (as Zelda Bagley); Father of the Bride (Minnelli) (as Doris Dunstan)

1951 Father’s Little Dividend (Minnelli) (as Doris Dunstan)

1953 Small Town Girl (Kardos) (as Mrs. Livingston)

1959 The Young Philadelphians (Sherman) (as Mrs. J. Arthur Allen)

1960 Pepe (Sidney) (as Guest Star); Sergeant Rutledge (Ford) (as Mrs. Cordelia Fosgate)

Publications

By BURKE: books—

With a Feather on My Nose, with Cameron Shipp, New York, 1949.

With Powder on My Nose, with Cameron Shipp, New York, 1959

On BURKE: books—

On BURKE: articles—

* * *

There will be no more lasting screen image of Billie Burke than Glinda, the Good Witch of the North, in The Wizard of Oz. Her entrance—inside a multi-colored ball of light—is breathtaking. From the light, she appears before Dorothy and the Munchkins in a sparkly, pink organza gown, her waves of strawberry red hair topped with a tall silver crown. Speaking in cheerful comforting tones, and waving her enormous fairy wand, Glinda instructs the ruby-slippered Dorothy to follow the yellow brick road. Burke’s performance inspires audiences to take heart: the Kansas farm girl will live to see her Aunt Em once more.

Glinda is an icon of goodness in the fairytale land of Oz that otherwise is ruled by evil sister witches and an impotent wizard. Her diction is British and highborn; she rolls her R’s majestically. She is dainty and frilly and feminine, delicate and sweet—but not fragile. Dorothy says she is beautiful.

What more fitting way for Billie Burke to be remembered? After all, during the first twenty years of her career she was a popular and attractive actress, much-adored by theater audiences as a comedienne and ingenue. She endorsed many beauty products and set styles: the “Billie Burke Collar,” a flat, lacy ruff, was a favorite among women prior to World War I. She attracted the attentions of the most famous entertainers and writers, including Mark Twain, Enrico Caruso, and W. Somerset Maugham. During this period, Burke was looked upon as “beautiful” much in the way that Dorothy views her. However, because none of her plays were classics and no records of her performances exist, this part of her life floats off in the distance somewhere between legendary and forgotten.

In fact, even her early film career has been overlooked. Burke’s first appearance in a motion picture is in the title role of Peggy. She plays a lovely young orphan-heiress who is forced into leaving the party-filled Westchester social scene to join her legal guardian in a remote Scottish village. In a favorable review, Variety critic “Jolo” remarks, “Peggy is a fine photoplay feature, which will live its allotted time, but what is of greater importance to the film industry is that there has been launched a new juvenile comedienne of the first rank. There cannot be any question of this.”

What is outstanding in Burke’s debut is her ability to fool the camera about her age. During the cinema’s silent years, most screen stars who played sweet, virginial characters were teenagers. By the time Burke played her first ingenue role, she was thirty years old. Her fine, petite features allowed her to play these types of innocent young leading roles into the early 1920s.

The second phase of her screen career—the part that is well-remembered—began shortly after the stock market crash of 1929. By choice, Burke had remained off-screen for the entire decade. But now, she made an effort to recover from the heavy financial reverses encountered by herself and her husband, Florenz Ziegfeld, by re-entering films. By then her age—she was in her mid-forties—disallowed the opportunity for more ingenue parts. Her delicate girlish features had ripened, and she appeared small and birdlike.
Furthermore, the high-pitched, British accent that made her such a believable socialite on stage sounded quite stodgy and very comical in talking pictures. And so, the Billie Burke of sound films was cemented. Her character is rich, social, ditsy. In one film after another she twitters about in a world of her own, not willing to listen to others’ needs and not understanding the lack of cooperation offered her as she pursues frivolous goals.

The most full-bodied examples of this character are found in Dinner at Eight and Topper. In Dinner at Eight, Burke’s self-absorbed character is flustered by the uneven number of men coming to her upcoming dinner party, and offers her husband no sympathy as he struggles with devastating business problems and even suffers a heart attack of sorts. If that were not enough, her daughter has become entangled in an illicit affair that will topple the young woman’s legitimate prospects for true love—and the Burke character is so busy with the details of her party that she first fails to listen to the information her daughter attempts to impart and then trivializes the dilemma.

In Topper, Burke plays another dysfunctional wife. In this film, and in several Topper sequels, she is the force who keeps Thorne Smith’s title character from loosening up and enjoying life in the manner that ghost couple George and Marion Kerby do. Burke played variations of this comedic socialite-matron throughout the 1930s and 1940s. As entertaining as the actress is in those roles, it is comforting that her best-remembered moment is Glinda in The Wizard of Oz. For there, as in a Technicolor dream, Burke gives audiences a taste of the glamorous, dazzling beauty that characterizes the early, “lost” years of her career.

—Audrey Kupferberg

BURSTYN, Ellen

Films as Actress:

( Ellen McRae)
1964 For Those Who Think Young (Martinson) (as Dr. Pauline Thayer); Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli) (as Franny)
1969 Pit Stop (Hill) (as Ellen McLeod)

( Ellen Burstyn)
1970 Alex in Wonderland (Mazursky) (as Beth); Tropic of Cancer (Strick) (as Mona)
1971 The Last Picture Show (Bogdanovich) (as Lois)
1972 The King of Marvin Gardens (Rafelson) (as Sally)
1973 The Exorcist (Friedkin) (as Chris)
1974 Harry and Tonto (Mazursky) (as Shirley); Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore (Scorsese) (as Alice Hyatt); Thursday’s Game (Moore—for TV)
1977 Providence (Resnais) (as Sonia)
1978 A Dream of Passion (Dassin) (as Brenda); Same Time Next Year (Mulligan) (as Doris) 1980 Resurrection (Petrice) (as Edna Mae McCauley)
1981 The Silence of the North (King) (as Olive Fredrickson)
1984 The Ambassador (Thompson) (as Alex Hacker)
1985 Twice in a Lifetime (Yorkin) (as Kate MacKenzie); Surviving (Hussein—for TV); Into Thin Air (Young—for TV)
1986 Something in Common (Glenn Jordan—for TV)
1987 Pack of Lies (Page—for TV); Hello Actors Studio (Tresgot—for doc); Look Away (Seidelman); Dear America (Letters Home from Vietnam) (doc—for TV) (voice)
1988 Hanna’s War (Golan) (as Katarina Senesh)
1990 The Color of Evening (Stafford); When You Remember Me (Winer—for TV) (as Nurse Coober)
1991 Dying Young (Schumacher) (as Mrs. O’Neill); Mrs. Lambert Remembers Love (for TV) (as Lil Lambert)
1992 Taking Back My Life (for TV) (as Wilma); Grand Isle (Lambert—for TV) (as Mademoiselle Reisz)
1993 Shattered Trust: The Shari Karney Story (for TV) (as Joan Delvecchio); The Cemetery Club (Duke) (as Esther Moskwitz)
1994 Getting Gotti (Young—for TV) (as Jo Giacalone); Trick of the Eye (for TV) (as Frances Griffin); When a Man Loves a Woman (Mandoki) (as Emily); Getting Out (for TV) (as Artie’s mother)
1995 The Baby-Sitter’s Club (as Mrs. Haberman); Roommates (Yates) (as Judith); How to Make an American Quilt (Moorhouse) (as Hy); My Brother’s Keeper (for TV) (as Helen); Follow the River (for TV) (as Gretel)
1996 The Spitfire Grill (Zlotoff) (as Hannah Ferguson)
1997 Deceiver (Jonas Pate, Josua Pate) (as Mook); A Deadly Vision
1998 You Can Thank Me Later (Dotan) (as Shirley Cooperberg); Playing by Heart (Carroll) (as Mildred); Flash (Winzer—for TV) (as Laura Strong); The Patron Saint of Liars (Gyllenhaal—for TV) (as June Clatterbuck); A Will of Their Own (Arthur—mini for TV) (as Veronica Steward)
Ellen Burstyn (left) and Linda Blair in The Exorcist

1999  Night Ride Home (Jordan—for TV) (as Maggie)
2000  The Yards (Gray) (as Val Handler); Requiem for a Dream (Aronofsky) (as Sara Goldfarb); Mermaid (Masterson—for TV) (as Trish); Walking Across Egypt (Seidelman) (as Mattie Rigsbee)

* * *

Publications

By BURSTYN: article—

Interview, in Take One (Montreal), March 1977.

On BURSTYN: articles—

Glaessner, Verina, “Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore,” in Focus on Film (London), Summer 1975.

Ellen Burstyn is an unparalleled re-inventress. While many actresses transmute their image after stardom wanes, Burstyn tried on different identities prior to Hollywood glory. It is her inbred survivability and desire to refashion adversity in a favorable image that informs her finest work. Having been christened Edna Rae Gillooly, and having danced as Keri Flynn, Ellen “Erica Dean” Burstyn then promenaded as one of Jackie Gleason’s television Glee Girls, snared a fling at Broadway ingenuedom as Ellen McRae, and paid her dues as Ellen McLeod in such drive-in filler as Pit Stop. Before she chucked her marginal screen-acting progress to hone her craft at the Actors Studio, Burstyn had already gone through more name changes than Joan Crawford. If great actresses should be chameleons, then Burstyn returned to film work in 1970 as well-prepared by her own catch-as-catch-can life as by Strasberg’s Method. Playing vitally attractive women with some mileage on them, Burstyn sent critics scrambling for superlatives by shifting from supportive but insecure mom in The Last Picture Show to the destructively paranoid stepmother in King of Marvin Gardens. At an age when most female stars have accumulated the bulk of their above-title credits, Burstyn was just hitting her stride. Maintaining dignity amidst the pea soup-spitting hysteria of the box-office avalanche, The Exorcist, Burstyn slyly demonstrated the chutzpah that nourished her slow-burning career. Negotiating a deal for a project she rescued from television, Burstyn starred in the finest flowering of feminism for the masses, Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore and won the Oscar. Chronicling a minor lounge singer’s embattled insistence on not sacrificing rewarding work for a Prince Charming, she fueled the film with the rage she must have felt waiting so long for stardom herself.

Having hit this unexpected height in her forties, Burstyn repeated her Tony-award triumph in Same Time, Next Year, but on-screen, the shenanigans seemed better suited to Doris Day’s Ross Hunter period. As a conventional movie star, Burstyn registered as too unyielding. More challenged by varying her range with misguided art films such as Resnais’s stuffy chat-fest Providence and Dassin’s A Dream of Passion (an attempt to do for Medea what Bergman did for Persona), Burstyn’s star power experienced a Resurrection, in which she filtered her tensile fortitude through her most translucent performance as a widow transformed into a psychic healer by personal tragedy. Sadly, this perfect mesh of actress and role led only to claptrap (Silence of the North), post-stardom supporting crumbs (Twice in a Lifetime) and the welcoming vista of television where she suffered to stunning effect in Pack of Lies and Into Thin Air, and wreaked emotional chaos in Getting Out. Having briefly sampled Hollywood immortality, Burstyn seemed content to cast herself as working actress, returning to Broadway as a female priest in Sacrilege or gracing ensemble films such as How to Make an American Quilt and Cemetery Club. Sometimes faltering in grande dame parts (e.g., television’s Primal Secret), the still-radiantly sexy Burstyn needs to display her many facets in something other than retreads of Fay Dunaway.”

—Robert Pardi

BURTON, Richard

Films as Actor:

1948 The Last Days of Dolwyn (Dolwyn) (Williams) (as Gareth)
1949 Now Barabbas Was a Robber . . . (Which Will You Have?) (Parry) (as Paddy)
1950 Waterfront (Waterfront Women) (Anderson) (as Ben Satterthwaite); The Woman with No Name (Her Panelled Door) (Vajda and O’Ferral) (as Nick Chamerd)
1951 Green Grow the Rushes (Brandy Ashore) (Twist) (as Robert ‘Bob’ Hammond)
1952 My Cousin Rachel (Koster) (as Philip Ashley)
1953 The Desert Rats (Wise) (as Capt. MacRoberts); The Robe (Koster) (as Marcellus Gallio); Thursday’s Children (Anderson and Brenton) (as narrator)
1954 Demetrius and the Gladiators (Daves) (in film clip from The Robe); Prince of Players (Dunne) (as Edwin Booth)
1955  The Rains of Ranchipur (Negulesco) (as Dr. Safti); Alexander the Great (Rossen) (title role)
1957  Sea Wyf and Biscuit (Sea Wyf) (McNaught) (as Biscuit); Amère victoire (Bitter Victory) (Nicholas Ray) (as Capt. Leith)
1958  March to Aldermaston (as narrator)
1959  Look Back in Anger (Richardson) (as Jimmy Porter)
1960  The Bramble Bush (Petrie) (as Guy); Ice Palace (Vincent Sherman) (as Zeb Kennedy)
1961  Dylan Thomas (Howells—short); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Sackler); Sen noci svatojánské (Jiří Trnká) (as narrator of English-language version)
1962  The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Hickie, and Oswald) (as RAF pilot)
1963  Cleopatra (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Mark Antony); The V.I.P.s (Asquith) (as Paul Andros); Zulu (Endfield) (as narrator); Inheritance (Irvin—short) (as narrator)
1964  Becket (Glennville) (title role); The Night of the Iguana (Huston) (as the Rev. T. Lawrence Shannon); Hamlet (Colleran—for TV, filmed record of Gielgud’s New York theater production) (title role)
1965  The Sandpiper (Minnelli) (as Dr. Edward Hewitt); What’s New, Pussy? (Clive Donner) (as man in bar); The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (Ritt) (as Alec Leamas); Eulogy to 5.02 (Herschensohn—short) (as narrator); The Days of Wilfred Owen (produced by Lewine and Bach) (as narrator)
1966  Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Mike Nichols) (as George); La Bisbetica Domata (The Taming of the Shrew) (Zeffirelli) (as Petruchio, + co-pr)
1967  The Comedians (Glennville) (as Brown); The Comedians in Africa (short)
1968  Boom! (Losey) (as Chris Flanders); Candy (Marquand) (as McPhisto); Where Eagles Dare (Hutton) (as John Smith); The Rime of the Ancient Mariner (Queenan) (as narrator)
1969  Anne of the Thousand Days (Jarrott) (as King Henry VIII); Staircase (Donen) (as Harry Leeds)
1971  Villain (Tuchner) (as Vic Dakin); Raid on Rommel (Hathaway) (as Capt. Alec Foster)
1972  The Assassination of Trotsky (Losey) (as title role); Hammersmith Is Out (Ustinov) (as title role); Barbe-Bluette (Bluebeard) (Dmytryk) (as Baron Von Sepper/title role); A Wall in Jerusalem (Kobler and Rossif—English-language version of Un Mur à Jerusalem) (as narrator); Satjeska (The Fifth Offensive) (Delic) (as Josip Broz Tito)
1973  Il viaggio (The Voyage; The Journey) (de Sica) (as Cesar Braggi); Under Milk Wood (Sinclair) (as narrator); Divorce: His/Her: Divorce (Hussein—for TV); Rappresaglia (Massacre in Rome) (Cosmatos) (as Col. Kappler)
1974  The Klansman (Terence Young) (as Breck Stancill); Gathering Storm (Wise) (as Winston Churchill); Brief Encounter (Alan Bridge—for TV)
1976  Volcano (Brittain) (as narrator); Resistance (McMullen)
1977  Exorcist II: The Heretic (Boorman) (as Father Lamont); Equus (Lumet) (as Dr. Martin Dysart)
1978  The Wild Geese (Mclaglen) (as Col. Allen Faulkner); Stars’ War: The Flight of the Wild Geese (Johnstone—short); The Medusa Touch (Gold) (as John Morlar)
1979  Breakthrough (Sergeant Steiner) (McLaglen) (as Sgt. Steiner); Love Spell (Donovan)
1980  Circle of Two (Dassin) (as Ashley St. Clair)
1981  Absolution (Anthony Page) (as Fr. Goddard)
1983  Wagner (Palmer—for TV) (title role)
1984  1984 (Radford) (as O’Brien)

Film as Director:

1967  Doctor Faustus (co-d with Nevill Coghill, + title role, co-pr)

Publications

By BURTON: book—

By BURTON: article—

Interview in PlayBoy (Chicago), September 1963.

On BURTON: books—

On BURTON: articles—

Merkin, D., obituary in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1984.
Richard Burton’s turbulent life overwhelmed the public perception of his vast talent. Born Richard Jenkins, the twelfth child of a hard-drinking Welsh miner, he was raised from the age of two by his eldest sister following the death of their mother. Love of language (exclusively Welsh until the age of five) and gift of gab influenced an early plan to enter the ministry, a notion extinguished in his teens when, anticipating his role as the minister defrocked for dallying with his underage parishioners in The Night of the Iguana, he realized he lacked all religious feeling. He turned instead to acting under the tutelage of a secondary school teacher, Philip Henry Burton, who coached him to develop his remarkably resonant voice and, equally, to erase traces of his rough-hewn upbringing; he became Burton’s ward at 18 and permanently assumed his name. Richard Burton made his film debut in The Last Days of Dolwyn opposite fellow Welshman Emlyn Williams, whose early life, as fictionalized in Williams’s The Corn Is Green, remarkably mirrored Burton’s own.

English stage and screen roles in the late 1940s and early 1950s led to plum Shakespearean parts with the Old Vic, most notably Hamlet in 1953, and a contract with Twentieth Century-Fox, for whom he chose, in words attributed to Laurence Olivier, to become the minister at war with his lack of faith, T. Lawrence Shannon, in John Huston’s now-legendary adaptation of Tennessee Williams’s Night of the Iguana; angry young men such as John Osborne’s Jimmy Porter in Look Back in Anger; and—still overwhelmingly—Shakespeare’s tortured Danish prince in the 1964 Broadway production of Hamlet (directed by John Gielgud), which was photographed for posterity in a now elusive film transcription, and recorded on vinyl, as well.

—Mark W. Estrin, updated by John McCarty

BUSCEMI, Steve

Nationality: American. Born: Brooklyn, New York, 13 December 1957. Education: Studied acting at Lee Strasberg Institute, New York City. Family: Married Jo Andres (a filmmaker/choreographer); children: Lucian. Career: Began as a stand-up comedian in New York City; also worked as a fireman; played Mr. Hickle on the TV series The Adventures of Pete & Pete, 1993; directed “Finnegan’s Wake” episode of TV series Homicide: Life on the Street, 1993, and Oz, 1997. Awards: Independent Spirit Award for Best Supporting Male, for Reservoir Dogs, 1993. Agent: c/o William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Dr., Beverly Hills, CA 90212.

Films as Actor:

1984 The Way It Is (Mitchell)
1985 Tommy’s (as Daniel)
1986 Coffee and Cigarettes II (Jarmusch) (as Waiter); Film House Fever (as Tony); No Picnic; Sleepwalk (Driver) (as Worker); Parting Glances (Sherwood) (as Nick)
1987 Heart (Lemmo) (as Nicky); Kiss Daddy Goodnight (Huemer)
1988 Arena Brains (Longo); Call Me (Mitchell) (as Switchblade); Heart of Midnight (Chapman) (as Eddy); Vibes (Kwapis) (as Fred)
1989 Bloodboumds of Broadway (Brookner) (as Whining Willie); New York Stories (Allen, Scorsese, Coppola) (as Gregory Stark); Slaves of New York (Ivy) (as Wilfredo); Mystery Train (Jarmusch) (as Charlie); Lonesome Dove, Wincer—mini, for TV) (as Luke)
1990 Force of Circumstance; Miller’s Crossing (Coen) (as Mink); Tales from the Darkside: The Movie (Harrison) (as Bellingham); King of New York (Ferrara) (as Test Tube)
1991 Barton Fink (Coen) (as Chet); Billy Bathgate (Benton) (as Irving); Zandalee (Pillsbury) (as OPP Man)
1992 CrissCross (Alone Together) (Menges) (as Louis); What Happened to Pete (as Stranger) (+ d, sc); Who Do I Gotta Kill? (Me and the Mob) (Rainone); Reservoir Dogs (Tarantino) (as Mr. Pink); In the Soup (Rockwell) (as Aldolpho Rollo)
1993 Ed and His Dead Mother (Bon Appetit, Mama) (Wacks) (as Ed Chilton); Twenty Bucks (Rosenfeld) (as Frank); Rising Sun (Kaufman) (as Willy “the Weasel” Wilhelm)
Steve Buscemi (right) in Parting Glances

1994  Floundering (McCarthy) (as Ned); Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (as Surly Buddy Holly Waiter); Somebody to Love (Rockwell) (as Mickey); The Last Outlaw (Murphy—for TV) (as Philo); Airheads (Lehmann) (as Rex); The Hudsucker Proxy (Coen) (as Beatnik Barman)

1995  Things to Do in Denver When You’re Dead (Fleder) (as Mister Shhh); Desperado (Rodriquez) (as Buscemi); Dead Man (Jarmusch) (as Bartender [uncredited]); Billy Madison (Davis) (as Danny McGrath [uncredited]); Living in Oblivion (DeCillo) (as Nick Reve)

1996  Black Kites (Andres); Escape from L.A. (Carpenter) (as Map to the Stars Eddie); The Search for One-Eye Jimmy (Kass) (as Ed Hoyt); Kansas City (Altman) (as Johnny Flynn); Trees Lounge (as Tommy) (+ d, sc); Fargo (Coen) (as Carl Showalter)

1997  The Real Blonde (DeCillo) (as Nick); Con Air (West) (as Garland ‘The Marietta Mangler’ Greene)

1998  The Impostors (Tucci) (as Happy Franks); Louis and Frank (Rockwell); Armageddon (Bay) (as Rockhounds); The Big Lebowski (Coen) (as Donny); The Wedding Singer (Coraci) (as David Veltri [uncredited]); Divine Trash (doc) (Yeager) (as himself)

1999  Franky Goes to Hollywood (Kelly) (as himself); Big Daddy (Digan) (as Homeless Guy)

2000  28 Days (Thomas) (as Cornell); The Animal Factory (as A.R. Hosspack) (+ d, pr); Ghost World (Zwigoff) (as Seymour)

2001  Final Fantasy (Sakaguchi—anim) (as voice of Neil); Monsters, Inc. (Docter and Silverman—anim) (as voice of Randall Boggs); Double Whammy (DiCillo)

Publications

By BUSCEMI: articles—

On BUSCEMI: articles—

Empire (London), March 1997.

‘Oh, My God! They’ve Killed Buscemi!’ in Premiere (Boulder, Colorado), vol. 11, April 1998.

* * *

In the Coen brothers’ thriller Fargo, Steve Buscemi plays a lethally inept gunman of whom no witness can ever recall anything except that “he was kinda funny-lookin’.” It’s a typically poker-faced Coen’esque gag that Buscemi’s highly distinctive features should be found so nondescript. Journalists and critics, at all events, have had no trouble thinking up epithets, usually anything but complimentary. References abound to the actor’s feral face, bugged eyes, lank hair, flabby lips, whiny voice, ill-assorted teeth, and the consumptive pallor of his complexion. Steve Buscemi, it seems, was never in much danger of getting cast as a romantic lead.

This clearly doesn’t worry him a bit. “I like playing strange characters,” he once commented. “I don’t see myself as a regular guy.” The heir, in terms of screen persona, of Peter Lorre or Elisha Cook Jr., Buscemi has created a rich gallery of geeks, nerds, losers, sleazebags, and twitchy psychopaths. Any apparent narrowness of range is belied by the individuality and edgy intensity he brings to all his roles. Though one of cinema’s hardest-working actors—throughout the 1990s he regularly appeared in three or four films a year—he rarely repeats himself, and can make something incisive and memorable out of the sketchiest role, even in slam-bang action blockbusters like Con Air or Armageddon. In Buscemi’s game-plan, big-budget movies like these serve merely as a means to an end, a form of cross-subsidy—as they did for one of his personal icons, John Cassavetes.

“It’s important to get that type of work,” he observes, “because it’s hard for me to make a living doing things that I really like,” and his dedication to the relatively cash-strapped independent sector has earned him the unofficial title of “King of the Indies.” In return the indies have served him well: his oddball persona, doleful with a disquieting undertow of menace, has been avidly mined by, among others, the Coens, Jim Jarmusch, Abel Ferrara, Robert Altman, Roberto Rodriguez—and of course Quentin Tarantino, who launched Buscemi into wider public notice with his volatile turn as the non-tipping Mr. Pink, sole survivor of the bloodbath that was Reservoir Dogs. Tarantino made good use of one of Buscemi’s specialities, the knack of delivering dialogue at whirlwind speed, often in a querulous yammer that suggests a long-held grievance against an unappreciative world. Most of Buscemi’s characters, shifty and nervous, use words as a defence mechanism, turning up a smokescreen of insistent verbiage behind which to effect a sneak attack or a strategic retreat. Certain directors, though, have noted something unnerving in the actor’s rare silences, and cast him accordingly. In Gary Fleder’s hyper-stylised thriller Things To Do in Denver When You’re Dead he plays against type as Mr. Shhh, “the most lethal hitman this side of the Mississippi,” speaking as rarely as his name implies but conveying coiled reserves of menace through stance and eye-movement. This was a rare example of a Buscemi character displaying professional competence; dire ineptitude is usually more in line, an incapacity so total as to be unaware of itself. As a would-be stick-up man in Keva Rosenfeld’s episodic comedy-drama Twenty Bucks, Buscemi’s self-absorbed blundering is all the funnier for the cool distate of Christopher Lloyd as his ultra-disciplined partner.

In his screen persona Buscemi always conveys an element of pathos, an impression of someone who started off several strikes down, unfairly ill-equipped to deal with life. Accordingly he rarely loses our sympathy, even in his most violent or sinister roles; but by the same token there’s a disquieting quality about him even when he’s playing sweet-natured. In Barton Fink his bellboy at the dilapidated Hotel Earle, beamingly eager to be of service, only increases Barton’s unease the more he offers help, seemingly embodying the very spirit of the decaying establishment with his contorted postures and ingratiating grin. No matter how brief the part (in Barton Fink he’s on screen for barely two minutes), his shifty presence invariably captures the attention.

Buscemi has twice been cast as a film-director, turning his intimacy with the indie film-making scene to advantage: as a neophyte manipulated by an affable gangster’ (Cassavetes veteran Seymour Cassel) in Alexandre Rockwell’s In the Soup, and in a state of mounting exasperation verging on hysteria in Tom DeCillo’s film-a-clef Living in Oblivion. After which, turning director for real seemed a logical development. For Trees Lounge, his debut as writer-director, Buscemi drew on his own Italian-Irish roots in provincial Long Island. Shooting in Valley Stream, the town where he grew up, and incorporating a lot of his own personal background, he played the lead, Tommy Basilio, an amiably feckless no-hoper, as a projection of “What would have happened if I’d stayed in Valley Stream?” Shot in 24 days on a $1 million budget, the film—centred round the local bar of the title—is low-key and understatedly funny with a hint of melancholy. Buscemi displays an appealing generosity of spirit towards his characters—“I like films where people aren’t so easily defined, where I can be interested in how they deal or don’t deal with their problems”—and an instinctive, unflashy grasp of cinematic technique.

Describing Trees Lounge as “a total satisfaction. . . my best film so far,” Buscemi has since completed his second film as director: Animal Factory, a prison drama based on a novel by Eddie Bunker (Mr. Blue in Reservoir Dogs). Advance word is good. Directing evidently suits him: “If I could make a living from directing, that’s what I’d do,” he says. But it’s to be hoped that so watchable a performer isn’t entirely tempted away from acting.

—Philip Kemp
CAAN, James

Films as Actor:

1963 Irma La Douce (Wilder) (bit)
1964 Lady in a Cage (Grauman) (as Randall)
1965 The Glory Guys (Laven) (as Pvt. Anthony Dugan); Red Line 7000 (Hawks) (as Mike Marsh)
1967 El Dorado (Hawks) (as Alan ‘‘Mississippi’’ Bourdillon Traherne); Games (Harrington) (as Paul)
1968 Countdown (Moonshot) (Altman) (as Buck Burnett); Submarine X-1 (Graham) (as Lt. Cmdr. Bolton)
1969 The Rain People (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Jemmie ‘‘Killer’’ Kilgannon)
1970 Rabbit, Run (Smight) (as Rabbit Angstrom); Brian’s Song (Kulik—for TV) (as Brian Piccolo)
1971 T. R. Baskin (Hale) (as Buck Burnett); Submarine X-1 (Graham) (as Lt. Cmdr. Bolton)
1972 Slither (Zeff) (as Dick Kanipsia); Cinderella Liberty (Rydell) (as John Baggs Jr.)
1974 Freebie and the Bean (Rush) (as Freebie); The Gambler (Reisz) (as Axel Freed); The Godfather, Part II (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Sonny Corleone)
1975 Gone with the West (Girard); Funny Lady (Ross) (as Billy Rose); Rollerball (Jewison) (as Jonathan E.); Killer Elite (Peckinpah) (as Mike Locken)
1976 Harry and Walter Go to New York (Rydell) (as Harry Dighby); Silent Movie (Mel Brooks) (as himself)
1977 A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough and Hayers) (as Sgt. Dohun); Un autre Homme, une autre Chance (Lelouch) (as Glenn Sr./Glenn Jr.)
1978 Comes a Horseman (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Sonny Corleone)
1979 Chapter Two (Moore) (as George Schneider)
1980 Naked (Achard) (as Dr. Scuvry)
1982 Kiss Me Goodbye (Mulligan) (as Jolly Villano)
1983 Gardens of Stone (Frank) (as Frank); Les Uns et les autres (Bolero; Within Memory) (as Glenn Sr./Glenn Jr.)
1984 A Boy Called Hate (Marcus); Tashunga (Gaup) (as Sean McLennon)
1996  Bottle Rocket (Wes Anderson) (as Mr. Henry); Balletproof (Dickerson) (as Frank Colton); Eraser (Chuck Russell) (as Robert Deegerin)

1998  This Is My Father (Quinn) (as Kieran Johnson); Poodle Springs (Rafelson—for TV) (as Philip Marlowe)

1999  Mickey Blue Eyes (Makin) (as Frank Vitale)

2000  The Yards (Gray) (as Frank Olchin); Luckytown Blues (Nicholas) (as Charlie Doyle); Viva Las Nowhere (Bloom) (as Roy); The Warden (Gyllenhall—for TV) (as John Flinders); Way of the Gun (McQuarrie); In the Boom Boom Room (Kopple)

2001  Night at the Golden Eagle (Rifkin); In the Shadows (Waugh)

Film as Director:

1979  Hide in Plain Sight (+ ro as Thomas Hacklin)

Publications

By CAAN: articles—

On CAAN: books—

On CAAN: articles—

Allen, T., ‘‘Tough guys dance,’’ in Esquire (New York), May 1998.

* * *

Back in the late 1960s and early 1970s, James Caan was one of the most promising and interesting young actors in Hollywood. Clearly, he was multitalented. As the young punk who terrorizes Olivia de Havilland in Lady in a Cage, his first featured movie role, he showcased his skill at playing a sadistic thug who could rattle your spine—an aspect of his range he would expand on less than a decade later as Sonny Corleone in The Godfather. He further demonstrated his talent, offering a likable, star-making performance in Howard Hawks’s El Dorado. In his role as the young drifter Mississippi (aka Alan Bourdillon Traherne), Caan is showcased opposite John Wayne’s hero-gunfighter Cole Thornton and Robert Mitchum’s drunken sheriff J. P. Harrah. In this part, the young actor was able to put across macho and swagger while at the same time remaining likably boyish.

Caan added to his expanding reputation with a sensitive performance as the ill-fated pro football player Brian Piccolo opposite Billy Dee Williams’s Gale Sayers in Brian’s Song, one of the best-ever made-for-television movies. Another key (but often overlooked) early Caan performance which adds yet another dimension to his career came in The Rain People, the story of a pregnant housewife (Shirley Knight) who abandons her husband and commences a cross-country journey of self-discovery. Along the way, she picks up a deeply vulnerable, brain-damaged ex-college football player (Caan). The film is ahead of its time in its depiction of a woman struggling for an independent identity; while Knight is outstanding, Caan matches her with his deeply sensitive and keenly insightful performance in a role that easily might have defeated a less-talented actor.

The penultimate accomplishment of Caan’s career remains Sonny Corleone: a performance that announced his arrival as one of his generation’s major movie stars. Caan’s acting is galvanizing, as he inhabits the role of the psychotic, trigger-happy heir to the Corleone throne, who (predictably but appropriately) meets a violent and bloody end. The film depicts organized crime as an extension of American capitalism; the Corleones essentially are a family of prosperous businessmen, a corporate entity whose powers understand all too well that ruthlessness and treachery are accepted means to success. Sonny, however, more than any other character, represents the true nature of the clan Corleone; he is a thug who is thoroughly remorseless in his out-of-control violence. If you so much as stare at Sonny Corleone, let alone attempt to defy him, he will challenge you, and then promptly blow you away. Sonny, as played by Caan, is the family enforcer, the reality behind the facade of respectability, in a business which relies on employing guns or fists instead of telephone calls or memos as a means of communication.

Since the release of The Godfather in 1972, Caan has, unfortunately, found it impossible to top himself. Unlike his Godfather co-star Al Pacino, he has not had great roles in memorable films; none of his subsequent work matches the overall quality of Serpico and Dog Day Afternoon, Pacino’s Godfather follow-ups. And so Caan (who also lacks Pacino’s Actors Studio pedigree) does not enjoy a reputation similar to Pacino as an actor’s actor.

He has, however, done substantial work in a number of films, which have allowed him to display his range. He has played nice guys (the kindhearted sailor in Cinderella Liberty and the widowed writer in Chapter Two, both opposite Marsha Mason); a cerebral lawbreaker (the title character in Thief); a career soldier/war veteran who has come to oppose America’s involvement in Vietnam, in Gardens of Stone (which, as The Rain People and The Godfather, was directed by Francis Ford Coppola); and, most memorably, the pitifully addicted college professor/title character in The Gambler. Caan also directed as well as starred in Hide in Plain Sight, playing a divorced man in search of his children. Chapter Two (at least on screen) is second-tier Neil Simon, while Gardens of Stone is a secondary Vietnam-related title. The Gambler is obscured by the similar California Split, which also came to movie theaters in 1974. And far too many of Caan’s films simply have been third-rate, if not outright disasters: Freebie and the Bean, Funny Lady, Rollerball, Killer Elite, Harry and Walter Go to New York, and Kiss Me Goodbye. In the case of Misery and *For the Boys, he has been overshadowed by his co-star: Kathy Bates in the former, giving an Oscar-winning performance as a psycho fan opposite Caan’s romance novelist; and Bette Midler in the latter, in an Oscar-nominated performance as a star singer opposite Caan’s star comedian.

In his best later-career films—Misery and Honeymoon in Vegas, a romantic comedy in which he plays a professional gambler/con man—Caan has emerged as a solid character actor. Yet in Honeymoon in Vegas, he is not so much creating a character as playing off his Godfather persona. He further spoofs Sonny Corleone in Mickey Blue Eyes (another comedy, in which he is cast as a Mafia honcho) and Bulletproof (a Damon Wayans-Adam Sandler farce in which he plays a drug lord who removes his hairpiece prior to committing mayhem). In The Program, Caan may nicely underplay a college football coach, a character linked to his roles in Brian’s Song and The Rain People. However, the film’s failure is symbolic of the actor’s plight. The Program is a Jekyll-and-Hyde football movie that celebrates on-field heroes while attempting to bare the destructiveness of the win-or-else sports mentality and the manner in which colleges exploit athletic recruits. While the scenario exudes a sense of outrage over college football program abuses, it also ends illogically, with the coach’s team savoring a dramatic come-from-behind victory that salvages its season. Meanwhile, Caan’s performance is lost amid the confusion.

The actor remains capable of playing characters as diverse as a cutthroat villain (without the comedy) in the Arnold Schwarzenegger actioner Eraser to a gloomy teacher who heads off to Ireland to explore his family history in This Is My Father. But for the most part, Caan remains a misused and too-often untapped talent.

—Rob Edelman

CAGE, Nicolas

Films as Actor: as Nicolas Coppola:

1981 The Best of Times (for TV)
1982 Fast Times at Ridgemont High (Heckerling) (as Brad’s bud)

as Nicolas Cage:

1983 Valley Girl (Coolidge) (as Randy); Rumble Fish (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Smokey)
1984 Racing with the Moon (Richard Benjamin) (as Nicky); The Cotton Club (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Vincent Dwyer); Birdy (Alan Parker) (as Al Columbato)
1986 The Boy in Blue (Jarrott) (as Ned Hanlan); Peggy Sue Got Married (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Charlie Bodell)
1987 Raising Arizona (Coen) (as Hi); Moonstruck (Jewison) (as Ronny Cammareri)
1988 Never on Tuesday (Rifkin) (as man in red sports car, uncredited)
1989 Vampire’s Kiss (Bierman) (as Peter Loew)
1990 Fire Birds (David Green) (as Jake Preston); Wild at Heart (David Lynch) (as Sailor Ripley); Tempo di Uccidere (Time to Kill; The Short Cut) (Montaldo) (as Enrico Silvestri); Industrial Symphony No. 1: The Dream of the Broken Hearted (Lynch) (as Heartbreaking Man)
1991 Zandalee (Pillsbury) (as Johnny Collins)
1992 Honeymoon in Vegas (Andrew Bergman) (as Jack Singer)
1993 Amos & Andrew (Frye) (as Amos Odell); Deadfall (Christopher Coppola) (as Eddie); Red Rock West (Dahl) (as Michael Williams)
1994 Guarding Tess (Hugh Wilson) (as Doug Chesnic); It Could Happen to You (Andrew Bergman) (as Charlie Lang); Trapped in Paradise (George Gallo) (as Bill Firpo)
1995 Kiss of Death (Schroeder) (as Little Junior Brown); Leaving Las Vegas (Figgis) (as Ben Sanderson)
1996 The Rock (Bay)
1997 Con Air (West) (as Cameron Poe); Face/Off (Woo) (as Castor Troy)
1998 City of Angels (Silberling) (as Seth); Snake Eyes (De Palma) (as Rick Santoro)
1999 8MM (Schumacher) (as Tom Welles); Bringing Out the Dead (Scorsese) (as Frank Pierce)
2000 Gone in Sixty Seconds (Sena) (as Randall “Memphis” Raines); The Family Man (Ratner) (as Jack Campbell)
2001 Captain Corelli’s Mandolin (Madden) (as Corelli)

Publications

By CAGE: articles—

On CAGE: books—

On CAGE: articles—

Radio Times (London), 30 March 1996.
Stars (Mariemborg), no. 29, 1997.

***

In his early screen appearances Nicolas Cage came across as a bit of a blowhard. But when he turned himself into a cartoon, as the gentle thief Hi in Raising Arizona, his all-out style became emphatically pleasurable. Cage plays wild hare comedy off his lanky-hunky body, his air of eternal devotion, and a glimmer of Old World honor in his round, dark-lidded eyes. A berserkly anomalous courtliness gives him a romantic air even in the looniest slapstick. He furthered his comic style in the more sophisticated Moonstruck as Ronny, a young butcher in love with his estranged older brother’s fiancée. Ronny’s brooding perfectly matches the dormancy of Cher’s good daughter Loretta; when he proclaims his love for her and she smacks him and tells him to “Snap out of it!” they seem to jolt each other to life. Romantic comedy pairings rarely carry such a richly sensual charge.

Cage then outdid himself in his starring role in Vampire’s Kiss as a yuppie editor who thinks he is turning into a vampire; he makes too much seem like just the right amount. His Peter Lowe is at once grotesque and bounding, both a heavily florid comedian such as the young Charles Laughton and a leaping calorie-burner such as Douglas Fairbanks. He keeps falling prey to obsessions and topping one tantrum with another, and getting more and more amusing. Cage achieves transformations as alarmingly funny as Jim Carrey’s in The Mask, but without the special effects. (Like Carrey, Cage shows the influence of Jerry Lewis, whom he claims to have idolized as a child.)

Cage was less successful in David Lynch’s Wild at Heart as a junkie sailor on the run with his girlfriend, because his craziness has too much competition from the murky swirl of the story and visuals; Lynch was straining. Cage was more impressive in a series of light comedies in the early 1990s, working especially well with Andrew Bergman. As Jack Singer in Honeymoon in Vegas he plays a man who overcomes his fear of marriage when he loses his girlfriend in a poker game. Jack has vacillated too long; by the time he acts the situation requires more than ordinary effort. Jack quickly becomes hilariously exasperated, and Cage gives classic accelerating delivery to such lines as, “He lives in a SHACK!” Cage shows his peerless ability to engage in the most frantic complications of romantic comedy and remain not only funny but sexy.

He was also good in the calmer role of the married cop who leaves a winning lottery ticket as a tip to a waitress in Bergman’s It Could Happen to You, and in a straight performance in John Dahl’s film noir Red Rock West. Cage is fresh and convincing in both pictures in which he has to be more essentially stable than the way his life is turning out. However, you miss his earmark outbursts. He does not seem actory in Red Rock West, but he does not seem like himself either. He has matured on screen, getting continually manlier and handsomer, and he may be incapable of a bum performance, but he needs to have his composure cracked to work at his most imaginative.

Finally with Leaving Las Vegas he gets a chance to really plumb his comic skill. He plays Ben Sanderson, an alcoholic writer who leaves Hollywood for Vegas with the stated goal of drinking himself to death. The script lets us know that Cage’s goofiness is the character’s: when Ben tape records a pornographic-alcoholic fantasy while waiting in line at the bank, it is the showy misbehavior of a writer, a man emulating Henry Miller and Charles Bukowski. Cage’s mugging and flashily affected readings stem from Ben’s self-destructive perversion, and the writer-director Mike Figgis enables Cage to push his one-man-band inventiveness to a level of expressiveness that could not be reached any other way. There is no other approach to Ben; he is too smart and too self-conscious to emote. Ben’s spaced-out put-on is an extraordinary invention—it is how a man who needs human interaction to the very end keeps in touch with people without letting them intervene in his determination to get to the end. Cage, by showing us how to see through Ben’s evasiveness without violating Ben’s terms of play, pulls off what Quentin Tarantino could not in Pulp Fiction when at the closing he went sincere with Samuel L. Jackson’s freaky takeoff on black Baptist oratory. (Tarantino is a great joker, but he had not provided himself with a fleck of emotional fiber to spin.) Cage has long been the most exciting young actor in American movies; with Leaving Las Vegas he became the most stirring as well.

—Alan Dale

CAGNEY, James

FILMS AS ACTOR:

1930 Sinner’s Holiday (Adolfi) (as Harry Delano); Doorway to Hell (A Handful of Clouds) (Mayo) (as Steve Mileaway); Intimate Interview (Elliott)
1931 Other Men’s Women (Wellman) (as Ed); The Millionaire (Adolfi) (as Schofield); The Public Enemy (Wellman) (as Tom Powers); Smart Money (Alfred E. Green) (as Jack); Blonde Crazy (Larson’s Lane) (Del Ruth) (as Bert Harris); How I Play Golf (Marshall)
1932 Taxi! (Del Ruth) (as Matt Nolan); The Crowd Roars (Hawks) (as Joe Greer); Winner Take All (Del Ruth) (as Jim Kane)
1933 Hard to Handle (LeRoy) (as Lefty Merrill); Picture Snatcher (Lloyd Bacon) (as Danny Keenan); The Mayor of Hell (Mayo) (as Patsy Gargan); Footlight Parade (Lloyd Bacon) (as Chester Kent); Lady Killer (Del Ruth) (as Dan Quigley); Hollywood on Parade
1934 Jimmy the Gent (Curtiz) (as Jimmy Corrigan); He Was Her Man (Lloyd Bacon) (as Flicker Hayes); Here Comes the Navy (Lloyd Bacon) (as Chesty O’Connor); The St. Louis Kid (A Perfect Weekend) (Enright) (as Eddie Kennedy); Hollywood Gad-About; Screen Snapshots One
1935 Devil Dogs of the Air (Lloyd Bacon) (as Tommy O’Toole); G-Men (Keighley) (as James “Brick” Davis); The Irish in Us (Lloyd Bacon) (as Danny O’Hara); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle) (as Bottom); Frisco Kid (Lloyd Bacon) (as Bat Morgan); Ceiling Zero (Hawks) (as Dizzy Davis); A Trip through a Hollywood Studio; Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd) (as extra)
1936 Great Guy (Pluck of the Irish) (Blystone) (as Johnny Cave)
1937 Something to Sing About (Schertzinger) (as Terry Rooney)
1938 Boy Meets Girl (Lloyd Bacon) (as Robert Law); Angels with Dirty Faces (Curtiz) (as Rocky Sullivan); For Auld Lang Syne (Bisson)
1939 The Oklahoma Kid (Lloyd Bacon) (as Jim Kincaid); Each Dawn I Die (Keighley) (as Frank Ross); The Roaring Twenties (Walsh) (as Eddie Bartlett)
1940 The Fighting 69th (Keighley) (as Jerry Plunkett); Torrid Zone (Keighley) (as Nick Butler); City for Conquest (Litvak) (as Danny Kenny)
1941 The Strawberry Blonde (Walsh) (as Biff Grimes); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley) (as Steve Collins)
1942  Captains of the Clouds (Curtiz) (as Brian MacLean); Yankee Doodle Dandy (Curtiz) (as George M. Cohan)
1943  Johnny Come Lately (Johnny Vagabond) (William K. Howard) (as Tom Richards); Show Business at War (March of Time); You, John Jones (LeRoy) (as Air Raid Warden)
1944  Battle Stations (as narrator)
1945  Blood on the Sun (Lloyd) (as Nick Condon)
1946  13 Rue Madeleine (Hathaway) (as Bob Sharkey)
1948  The Time of Your Life (Potter) (as Joe)
1949  White Heat (Walsh) (as Cody Jarrett)
1950  The West Point Story (Del Ruth) (as Elwin Bixby); Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye (Gordon Douglas) (as Ralph Cotter)
1951  Come Fill the Cup (Gordon Douglas) (as Lew Marsh); Starlift (Del Ruth) (as himself)
1952  What Price Glory? (Ford) (as Captain Flagg)
1953  A Lion Is in the Streets (A Lion in the Streets) (Walsh) (as Hank Martin)
1955  Run for Cover (Nicholas Ray) (as Matt Dow); Love Me or Leave Me (Charles Vidor) (as Martin "Gimp" Snyder); Mister Roberts (John Ford and LeRoy) (as Captain); The Seven Little Foys (Shavelson) (as George M. Cohan)
1956  Tribute to a Bad Man (Wise) (as Jeremy Rodock); These Wilder Years (Rowland) (as Steve Bradford)
1957  Man of a Thousand Faces (Pevney) (as Lon Chaney Sr.)
1959  Never Steal Anything Small (Lederer) (as Jake MacIlIaney); Shake Hands with the Devil (Anderson) (as Sean Lenihan)
1960  The Gallant Hours (Montgomery) (as Adm. William F. "Bull" Halsey, + pr)
1961  One, Two, Three (Wilder) (as C. P. MacNamara)
1962  Road to the Wall (as narrator)
1966  Ballad of Smokey the Bear (voice only)
1968  Arizona Bushwhackers (Selander) (as narrator)
1975  Brother, Can You Spare a Dime? (Mora—doc) (as voice of Everyman)
1981  Ragtime (Forman) (as Police Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo)
1984  Terrible Joe Moran (Sargent—for TV) (title role)

Film as Director:

1957  Short Cut to Hell
Publications

By CAGNEY: book—

By CAGNEY: articles—

‘‘How I Got This Way,’’ as told to Pete Martin in The Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 7, 14, and 21 January 1956.

On CAGNEY: books—

On CAGNEY: articles—

Kirstein, Lincoln, ‘‘Cagney and the American Hero,’’ in Hound and Horn (New York), April 1932.

Potamkin, H. A., ‘‘The Personality of the Player: A Phase of Unity,’’ in Close-Up (London), March 1933.

Duran, John, ‘‘Tough on and Off,’’ in Collier’s (New York), 31 August 1940.

Current Biography 1942, New York, 1942.

Tynan, Kenneth, ‘‘Cagney and the Mob,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), May 1951.

Parsons, Louella, ‘‘Cagney’s Year,’’ in Cosmopolitan (New York), June 1955.

‘‘Yankee Doodle Dandy,’’ in Newsweek (New York), 22 April 1968.

McGilligan, Patrick, ‘‘Just a Dancer Gone Wrong: The Complication of James Cagney,’’ in Take One (Montreal), September 1974.

‘‘The Conversation: Studs Terkel and James Cagney,’’ in Esquire (New York), October 1981.

*Jimmy Cagney was a natural actor with an astonishing range. As Bottom in Reinhardt and Dieterle’s A Midsummer Night’s Dream, he demonstrated that he could play comedy effectively. He was Lon Chaney in Man of a Thousand Faces, and twice played George M. Cohan, winning an Academy Award for Yankee Doodle Dandy, and repeating the role in 1955 for The Seven Little Foys. But his specialty was Irish tough guys: prizefighters, gangsters, bootleggers, and racketeers.*

In 1931, a year after his film career began, Cagney created the definitive portrait of a tough, swaggering movie gangster in Wellman’s The Public Enemy. Fifty years later, and in failing health, he gave Milos Forman an equally memorable portrayal as New York police commissioner Rhinelander Waldo in the film version of E. L. Doctorow’s Ragtime. The swagger was still there, and the charisma. As early as 1939, critic Otis Ferguson paid tribute to Cagney by noting that it would be “hard to say what our impression of the total American character would have been without him.”

Cagney learned the American character on the streets of New York. When he played Irish tough guys on the screen, he was able to... draw on his own youthful experiences. Cagney began his performing career as a hoofer in a show called Every Sailor at Keith’s 86th Street Theatre, then, in 1920, he landed a specialty dance in the show Pitter-Patter. His future wife, Frances Willard Vernon, was in the chorus line and after Pitter-Patter closed, they joined to form a dance team called “Vernon and Nye.” His first important acting assignment came in 1925 when he was cast with Charles Bickford in the Maxwell Anderson play Outside Looking In.

In 1929 he played opposite Joan Blondell in Maggie the Magnificent, and subsequently in Penny Arcade. Al Jolson procured the rights for this play and then sold it to Warner Brothers. Cagney and Blondell were part of the package, and so Cagney went to Hollywood, where Penny Arcade became Sinner’s Holiday. A year later he had the lead in The Public Enemy and was on his way to becoming a star.

His great talent was confined by the apparently stereotyped roles he often played over the next 25 years, but no one could do them better than Cagney. He perfectly understood the characters of the punks he portrayed, from the raw and brutal ambition of Tom Powers to the psychotic complexity of Cody Jarrett in White Heat, 18 years later.

In his portrayal of “Gimp” Snyder for Charles Vidor in Love Me or Leave Me, Cagney drew upon all the vitality and charisma of his old gangster roles to present the melancholy figure of a man who loves and respects a woman, Doris Day’s Ruth Etting, whose sense of decency he is incapable of understanding. Cagney takes a modest melodrama and gives it an almost tragic dimension as Snyder attempts to reform but is finally driven crazy by his jealousy and shoots the piano player (Cameron Mitchell), who is his rival.

Rat-a-tat-tating those famous feet like machine gun fire in his musicals, Cagney was a whirling dervish whose finest performances, even in nonmusicals, seem choreographed. Both his upbringing in Hell’s Kitchen and his vaudeville trouping inform every step this sui generis takes. Unlike other male superstars of Hollywood’s Golden Age, Cagney was unafraid of returning to his gangster roots throughout his long, kinetic career. Only an actor unconstrained by image considerations could deliver as chilling a portrayal of psychopathy as his migraine-plagued Mama’s boy, Cody Jarrett. By contrast, think of the roles Gable, Stewart, Tracy, and Grant chose after their mass appeal hardened around their persons. Bringing humanity to his criminals and moral uncertainty to his good guys, Cagney created the myth of the streetwise cynic, who could just as fatefully be recruited to walk the straight and narrow or stride through a police lineup with attitude to burn. The only characterization common ground was an energy-level unknown to the rest of us. In One, Two, Three, a virtuoso collaboration with Billy Wilder (then intended as Cagney’s retirement film), the performer propels the Cold War farce forward and flies past topical references that date the film, as if his acting were independent of tired plot mechanics, as if his personality could simply burn through familiar gags until the audience is left only with the distilled essence of Cagney. One wishes this vital actor had accepted such ventures were considered suicidal, Cagney’s production company created some lovely films, such as Johnny Come Lately, before going down fighting. But bucking the odds has always been a signature move on Cagney’s part, whether knocking himself out to put on a show in Footlight Parade or sizing up Ann Sheridan on a rubber plantation in Torrid Zone. Not only could he jump in the job pool from G-Man to America’s most wanted but he could also enliven Shakespeare or impersonate Adm. “Bull” Halsey in The Gallant Hours with the same self-confident droit du seigneur. Whereas less versatile stars played storybook versions of heroism, Cagney always scrapped for his honor because he was not a to-the-manner-born savior like John Wayne but a conflicted hero who had to arrive at virtue by sometimes battling his own instincts. Jimmy Cagney embodied the personal charisma of star acting during Hollywood’s Golden Era. His abilities were unique, and his classic films are forever marked by his personal brilliance.

—James M. Welsh, updated by Robert Pardi

CAINE, Michael

Films as Actor:

1956 A Hill in Korea (Hell in Korea) (Amyes) (bit role as Pvt. Lockyer)
1957 How to Murder a Rich Uncle (Patrick) (as Gilrony)
1958 The Key (Reed) (bit role); Blind Spot (Maxwell) (bit role); The Two Headed Spy (de Toth) (bit role as 2nd Gestapo agent); Carve Her Name with Pride (Gilbert)
1959 Passport to Shame (Room 43) (Rakoff) (bit role); Danger Within (Breakout) (Chaffey) (bit role)
1960 Foxhole in Cairo (Money) (as Weber); The Bulldog Breed (Asher) (bit role)
1961 The Day the Earth Caught Fire (Guest) (bit role)
1962 Solo for Sparrow (Fleming) (as Mooney); The Wrong Arm of the Law (Owen) (bit role)
1964  Zulu (Endfield) (as Lt. Gonville Bromhead)
1965  The Ipcress File (Furie) (as Harry Palmer)
1966  Alfie (Gilbert) (title role); The Wrong Box (Forbes) (as Michael);
       Gambit (Neame) (as Harry); Funeral in Berlin (Hamilton) (as Harry Palmer); Hurry Sundown (Preminger) (as Henry Warren)
1967  Billion Dollar Brain (Russell) (as Harry Palmer); “Snow” ep. of Woman Times Seven (De Sica) (as handsome stranger)
1968  Deadfall (Forbes) (as Henry Clarke); Play Dirty (de Toth) (as Capt. Douglas); The Magus (Green) (as Nicholas Urfe)
1969  The Italian Job (Collinson) (as Charlie Croker); Battle of Britain (Hamilton) (as Sqdn. Leader Canfield); Too Late the Hero (Aldrich) (as Tosh)
1970  The Last Valley (Clavell) (as Captain); Get Carter (Hodges) (as Jack Carter); Simon, Simon (short)
1971  Kidnapped (Delbert Mann) (as Alan Breck); Zee and Company (X, Y, and Zee) (Hutton) (as Robert)
1972  Pulp (Hodges) (as Mickey King); Sleuth (Mankiewicz) (as Milo Tindle)
1974  The Black Windmill (Siegel) (as Major John Tarrant); The Marseilles Contract (The Destru ctors) (Parrish) (as Deray)
1975  The Wilby Conspiracy (Nelson) (as Keogh); The Romantic Englishwoman (Losey) (as Lewis Fielding); The Man Who Would Be King (Huston) (as Peachy Carnehan)
1976  Peeper (Hyams) (as Leslie Tucker); The Eagle Has Landed (John Sturges) (as Col. Kurt Steiner)
1977  A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Lt. Col. Joe Vandeule); Harry and Walter Go to New York (Rydell) (as Adam Worth)
1978  California Suite (Ross) (as Sidney Cochran); Ashanti (Fleischer) (as Dr. David Lenderby); Silver Bears (Passer) (as Doc Fletcher)
1979  The Swarm (Irwin Allen) (as Brad Crane); The Island (Ritchie) (as Maynard); Beyond the Poseidon Adventure (Irwin Allen) (as Mike Turner)
1980  Dressed to Kill (De Palma) (as Dr. Robert Elliott)
1981  Victory (Escape to Victory) (Huston) (as Colby); The Hand (Stone) (as Jon Landsdale)
1982  Deathtrap (Lumet) (as Sidney Bruhl)
1983  The Honorary Consul (Beyond the Limit) (Mackenzie) (as Charlie Fortnum); Educating Rita (Gilbert) (as Professor)
1984  The Jigsaw Man (Young) (as Sir Philip Kimberly/Sergei Kuzminsky); Blame It on Rio (Donen) (as Matthew Hollis)
1985 The Holcroft Convention (Frankenheimer) (as Noel Holcroft); Water (Clement) (as Baxter)

1986 Half Moon Street (Swaim) (as Lord Bulbeck); Hannah and Her Sisters (Woody Allen) (as Elliot); Mona Lisa (Neil Jordan) (as Mortwell); Sweet Liberty (Alda) (as Elliott James)

1987 The Fourth Protocol (Mackenzie) (as John Preston, + exec pr); Jaws—the Revenge (Sargent) (as Hoagie); Surrender (Belson) (as Sean Stein, mystery novelist); The Whistle Blower (Langton) (as Frank Jones)

1988 Dirty Rotten Scoundrels (Oz) (as Lawrence Jamieson); Without a Clue (Eberhardt) (as Sherlock Holmes); Jack the Ripper (Wickes) (as Frederick Abberline—for TV)

1989 Movie Life of George (Brand—for TV); The Trouble with Michael Caine (Macmilian—for TV)

1990 A Shock to the System (Egleston) (as Graham Marshall); Bullseye! (Winner) (as Sidney Lipton/Dr. Daniel Hicklar); Mr. Destiny (Or) (as Mike); Jekyll & Hyde (Wickes—for TV) (title role)

1991 Noises Off (Bogdanovich) (as Lloyd Fellows)

1992 The Muppet Christmas Carol (Henson) (as Scrooge); Death Becomes Her (Zemeckis); Blue Ice (Mulcahy—for TV) (as Harry Anders, + pr)

1994 On Deadly Ground (Seagal) (as Michael Jennings); World War II: When Lions Roared (Joseph Sargent—for TV) (as Joseph Stalin)

1995 Len Deighton’s Ballet to Beijing (Mihalka) (as Harry Palmer)

1997 Blood and Wine (Rafelson) (as Victor Spansky); 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea (Hardy—for TV) (as Captain Nemo); Mandala and deKlerk (Sargent—for TV) (as F.W. deKlerk)

1998 Little Voice (Herzan) (as Ray Say)

1999 Curtain Calls (Yates) (as Max Gale); The Cider House Rules (Hallström) (as Dr. Wilbur Larch)

2000 Quills (Philip Kaufman) (as Dr. Royer-Collard); Get Carter (Kay) (as Cliff Brumby); Miss Congeniality (Petrie) (as Vic); Shiner (Irvin) (as Billy Simpson)

Publications

By CAINE: books—

Not Many People Know This Either, London, 1986.
Acting in Film: An Actor’s Take on Movie Making, New York, 1990.

By CAINE: articles—

‘‘Playing Dirty,’’ interview in Films and Filming (London), April and May 1969.

Interview with Nick Roddick, in Stills (London), October 1984.

Interview with Derek Winnert, in Radio Times (UK), 27 October, 1990.

Interview with Brian Case in Time Out (UK), 16 September 1992.

‘‘Michael Caine’s Presentation Speech,’’ in Film Score Monthly (Los Angeles), no. 74, October 1996.

On CAINE: books—

On CAINE: articles—

Farber, Stephen, ‘‘Alfie,’’ in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1967.
‘‘Michael Caine,’’ in Focus on Film (London), Spring 1973.
Ciné Revue (Paris), 27 January 1983 and 12 April 1984 (both with filmography).

‘‘Michael Caine. Cockney Gentleman,’’ in Film en Televisie (BE), March 1990.

* * *

Michael Caine belonged in the Cockney contingent (Anthony Newley, Terence Stamp, Twiggy) that rose to stardom soon after kitchen-sink Northerners such as Albert Finney and Tom Courtenay. While Stamp came on as the smart tough mod, and Newley led with his pathos, Caine’s basic persona was the upwardly mobile Cockney, with 1960s executive specs and crispy well-groomed wavy hair, who yet retains, without inverted snobbery and in a naturally neat voice, his Cockney accent. He was laid-back, too—tall, amiable, almost lordly—and his cool blue eyes bespoke calm calculation, bedroom sensitivity, and/or deep dark scheming. This balance of easy sociability and private purpose is of the essence.

Son of a fish porter and a charwoman, Caine rose through rep to kitchen-sink Northerners such as Albert Finney and Tom Courtenay. While Stamp came on as the smart tough mod, and Newley led with his pathos, Caine’s basic persona was the upwardly mobile Cockney, with 1960s executive specs and crispy well-groomed wavy hair, who yet retains, without inverted snobbery and in a naturally neat voice, his Cockney accent. He was laid-back, too—tall, amiable, almost lordly—and his cool blue eyes bespoke calm calculation, bedroom sensitivity, and/or deep dark scheming. This balance of easy sociability and private purpose is of the essence.

Son of a fish porter and a charwoman, Caine rose through rep to television, which he alternated with innumerable bit and supporting parts. Auditioning for a grumbling Cockney soldier in Zulu, he was surprised to be offered a lead role, and as an aristocratic young officer, whose authority must be overthrown by toughly professional Stanley Baker. Caine revamped his stereotypically effete character, so that his Cockney air proved deceptive.

While Caine’s performance in Zulu drew considerable critical attention, he languished for almost a year without film offers after the picture’s release. Then Harry Saltzman, co-producer of the fabulously successful James Bond films, tapped him for the lead in the screen version of Len Deighton’s espionage novel The Ipcress File. As the insolent, working-class secret agent Harry Palmer, Caine was a complete antithesis to James Bond. The long, improvised, supermarket scene in the film embellishes the everyday melancholy that extended Caine’s rapport with audiences. The subsequent Palmer films, Funeral in Berlin and Billion Dollar Brain, the latter directed by Ken...
Russell, Caine’s handpicked choice, neglected that intimate rapport with audiences, and failed. As did Caine’s return to the character twenty years later in Bullet to Beijing, producer Harry Allan Tower’s flat start to a proposed new series of Harry Palmer theatrical adventures that died aborning when the film was spun off to TV and video. In Alfie Caine’s Cockney chauffeur, a smoothly relentless Casanova, with his insidiously cynical chats direct to the audience, stirred a deep uneasiness about permissiveness. It was a role shunned by almost every eligible star; Caine won his first Oscar nomination, and the film was the biggest-ever British money-earner in the United States. It made him the star he is today.

Caine contributed polished performances to many lesser films, although his very Englishness, as domestic production flagged, set him adrift in productions of ‘‘ersatz internationalism,’’ as he called it. Of various war action films in exotic locales, the most interesting were two toughly ironic motivations on idealism and power: The Last Valley, written and directed by the late novelist James Clavell of Shogun and Noble House fame, with Caine as a thoughtful German mercenary in the Thirty Years’ War; and John Huston’s long-aborning The Man Who Would Be King, with Caine as the feet-on-the-ground adventurer Peachy Carnehan, opposite Sean Connery’s upstart character. In both films, settings and trimmings somehow eclipsed stars and themes intrinsically as powerful as The Bridge on the River Kwai or Apocalypse Now. Caine’s long line of affable scoundrels and commen extended to chillingly calm London gangsters in Get Carter, a pet project of Caine’s directed by Mike Hodges, that has been relocated to America for a 2000 remake starring Sylvester Stallone in the role originally played by Caine, who is set to play a cameo in the remake; and Mona Lisa, for which Caine took substantially less than his usual astronomical fee in order to get the film made. In Kidnapped his sword-fencing worked in well with his airily long-limbed command of personal space.

Caine’s sharply blue, yet softly bulbous, eyes suggested quietly devious, complicated, or creative characters. Pulp, Sleuth, and Deathtrap were dialogue comedies involving writers in murder-plot-and-counterplot; they were near two-handers, Caine “duetting” with, respectively, Mickey Rooney, Laurence Olivier (Caine plucking an Oscar nomination from under the knightly nose), and Christopher Reeve. A fourth variation on writer/reality games, The Romantic Englishwoman, with Caine as a writer fantasizing his wife’s adultery, promised greater depth, but the eagerly awaited collaboration between Caine and director Joseph Losey seemed short-circuited by a tricky script.

Caine’s air of mischievous sensuality explains his three gay roles: in Deathtrap where he and Reeve kiss, Dressed to Kill (as a psychiatrist who is also a transvestite homicidal maniac), and California Suite (with Maggie Smith as sexually ambiguous Hollywood marries doubly nervy while awaiting the Oscar announcements).

By 1979 Caine’s career again risked losing direction, with a run of parts in mediocre spy, horror, and disaster films. Educating Rita was a “return to roots,” to the director of Alfie, and to Oscar nomination. Caine played an extinct poet turned university lecturer, disillusioned by the grooves of academe, and vacillating between his textbooks and his whiskey bottle; but revivified by the cheek and eager optimism of working-class housewife Julie Walters. Alan Alda’s Sweet Liberty and Woody Allen’s Hannah and Her Sisters brought Caine fully into the American comedy of manners. In Alda’s film he sketches a film star surely based on himself. A gregarious Cockney now King of Hollywood, he good-naturedly jollies Alda, as a history professor, out of his misery about moviemakers travestyng his serious book. In Allen’s slightly sad comedy, Caine, a business manager for rock stars, is torn by guilt about loving two sisters, and ends up prey to the nervousness with which the Allen character began; an intriguing role reversal. Though every character but Allen’s was dissatisfyingly foreshortened, Caine won a Supporting Actor Oscar.

He continues a highly popular star, though he is frequently criticized for being less than selective about the projects he takes on. He played the real inspector Frederick Abberline, the working-class chief detective on the trail of the infamous serial killer Jack the Ripper in writer-director David Wickers’s two-part telefilm produced for the Ripper’s centenary. The film proposed a final solution to the century-old mystery, naming the Queen’s royal physician as the legendary killer, a solution offered by the 1979 Ripper film, Murder by Decree, as well. For Wickers also, Caine played the title roles in Jekyll and Hyde, the umpteenth version of the durable Robert Louis Stevenson barnstormer, this one produced for British and American television. For TV, he also played an unremarkable Captain Nemo in an unspectacular mini-series based on the Jules Verne classic; and gave a remarkable performance (sporting a convincing South African accent) as F. W. de Klerk opposite Sidney Poitier’s Nelson Mandela in Mandela and de Klerk, a docudrama about the fall of apartheid.

He returned to comedy with Noises Off, Peter Bogdanovich’s film adaptation of playwright Michael Frayn’s takeoff on British sex farces, appearing opposite his old Deathtrap flame Christopher Reeve. In The Muppet Christmas Carol, he played Scrooge opposite a bevy of Jim Henson’s puppet creatures in Dickensian garb. 1992’s Blue Ice, a film he also produced, found Caine once again embroiled in secret agentry. He was a villainous oil baron whom Steven Seagal prevents from destroying the Alaskan landscape in On Deadly Ground.

Late in the 1990s he returned to more meaty roles. In Little Voice he gave a notable turn as a sleezy talent scout who discovers an introverted girl (Jane Horrocks) with an amazing skill for imitating famous songstresses like Judy Garland and Shirley Bassey. And in The Cider House Rules, based on a novel by John Irving, he adopted his first American accent (down-home Maine no less) to play the sympathetic head of an orphanage and earned another Oscar nomination as Best Supporting Actor for his trouble. The busy star somehow managed to find the time find to write his autobiography, published in 1992 under the title What’s It All About?, Caine’s famous refrain from Alfie, as well as open a string of upscale restaurants in London and Miami.

—Raymond Durgnat, updated by John McCarty

CALHERN, Louis

Nationality: American. Born: Carl Henry Vogt in New York City, 19 (or 16) February 1895. Family: Married 1) the actress and writer Ilka Chase, 1926 (divorced 1926); 2) Julia Hoyt, 1927 (divorced 1932); 3) Natalie Schafer, 1933 (divorced); 4) Marianne Stewart, 1932; 5) Natalie Schafer, 1933 (divorced). Career: Late 1910s-early 1920s—worked on Broadway stage; 1921—film debut in The Blot; followed by romantic leading-man roles in silent films; 1931—talking film debut in Stolen Heaven; 1938—on stage in Golden Boy in London; later stage roles include Life with Father, 1942, The Magnificent Yankee (and film version), and King Lear, 1950; after 1949—worked exclusively for Louis Calhern with Ann Harding in The Magnificent Yankee

MGM, mainly in supporting roles. Died: In Tokyo, Japan, 12 May 1956.

Films as Actor:

1921 The Blot (Weber) (as Phil West); Too Wise Wives (Weber); What's Worth While? (Weber)

1922 Woman, Wake Up! (Harrison)

1923 The Last Moment (Read)

1931 Blonde Crazy (Larceny Lane) (Del Ruth) (as Dapper Dan Barker); Stolen Heaven (Abbott) (as Steve Perry); The Road to Singapore (Alfred E. Green) (as Dr. George March)

1932 Okay America (Penalty of Fame) (Garnett) (as Mileaway Rosso); They Call It Sin (Freeland) (as Ford Humphries); Night after Night (Mayo) (as Dick Bolton); Afraid to Talk (Cahn) (as Wade)

1933 20,000 Years in Sing Sing (Curtiz) (as Joe Finn); The Woman Accused (Abbott) (as Leo Young); Duck Soup (McCarey) (as Ambassador Trentino); Frisco Jenny (Wellman) (as Steve Dutton); Strictly Personal (Murphy) (as Magruder); The World Gone Mad (The Public Be Hanged) (Cabanee) (as Christopher Bruno); Diplomaniacs (Seiter) (as Winkleried)

1934 The Count of Monte Cristo (Rowland V. Lee) (as Raymond de Villefort Jr.); The Affairs of Cellini (La Cava) (as Ottaviano); The Man with Two Faces (Mayo) (as Stanley Vance)

1935 The Arizonian (Charles Vidor) (as Jake Mannen); The Last Days of Pompeii (Cooper) (as prefect); Sweet Adeline (LeRoy) (as Maj. Jim Day); Woman Wanted (Seitz) (as Smiley)

1936 The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown) (as Sunderland)

1937 The Life of Emile Zola (Dieterle) (as Maj. Dort); Her Husband Lies (Ludwig) (as Sordini)

1938 Fast Company (The Rare Book Murder) (Buzzell) (as Elias Z. Bannerman)

1939 Juarez (Dieterle) (as LeMarc); Fifth Avenue Girl (La Cava) (as Dr. Kessler); Charlie McCarthy, Detective (Tuttle) (as Arthur Aldrich); The Story of Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet (Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet) (Dieterle) (as Dr. Brockdorf); I Take This Woman (Van Dyke) (as Dr. Duveen)
1943
Heaven Can Wait (Lubitsch) (as Randolph Van Cleve);

Nobody's Darling (Anthony Mann)

1944
The Bridge of San Luis Rey (Rowland V. Lee) (as viceroy);
Up in Arms (Nugent) (as Col. Ashley)

1946
Notorious (Hitchcock) (as Paul Prescott)

1948
Arch of Triumph (Milestone) (as Morosow)

1949
The Red Danube (Sidney) (as Col. Piniev);
The Red Pony (Milestone) (as Grandpa)

1950
Nancy Goes to Rio (Leonard) (as Gregory Elliott);
Two Weeks with Love (Rowland) (as Horatio Robinson);
The Magnificent Yankee (Thorpe) (as Randolph Van Cleve);

It's a Big Country (Thorpe and others) (as narrator)

1952
Invitation (Reinhardt) (as Simon Bowker);
The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli) (as voice on the recording);
We're Not Married (Goulding) (as Freddie Melrose);
The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorpe) (as Col. Zapt);
Washington Story (Target for Scandal) (Pirosh) (as Charles W. Birch)

1953
Confidentially Connie (Buzzell) (as Opie Bedloe);
Julius Caesar (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (title role);
Remains to Be Seen (Weis) (as Benjamin Goodwin);
Main Street to Broadway (Garnett) (as himself);
Latin Lovers (LeRoy) (as Grandpa Santos)

1954
Rhapsody (Charles Vidor) (as Nicholas Durant);
Executive Suite (Wise) (as George Nyle Caswell);
The Student Prince (Thorpe) (as King of Karlsburg);
Men of the Fighting Lady (Merton) (as James A. Michener);
Betrayed (Reinhardt) (as Gen. Ten Eyck);
Athena (Thorpe) (as Grandpa Ulysses Mulvain)

1955
The Blackboard Jungle (Richard Brooks) (as Jim Murdock);
The Prodigal (Thorpe) (as Nahreeb)

1956
Forever, Darling (Hall) (as Charles Y. Bewell);
High Society (Walters) (as Uncle Willie)

Publications

On CALHERN: articles—

Current Biography 1951, New York, 1951.

In the first half of the 1950s it seemed as if Louis Calhern was in every other MGM picture released. He had signed with that studio in 1949 and immediately began creating character roles that were always interesting and occasionally more. One of his first portrayals was Buffalo Bill, long white hair flowing, in the musical Annie Get Your Gun.

In 1950 Calhern recreated for the cinema his acclaimed stage role in The Magnificent Yankee, in which he had definitively impersonated—or perhaps reincarnated—Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes. The previous year he had returned to Broadway to play the role he had prepared himself for most of his professional life: the great mad King Lear.

Despite the actor’s gray-haired and dignified mien he was not always cast as a rock of prophecy. It was John Huston’s crime drama The Asphalt Jungle that gave Calhern one of his few truly memorable film parts. With an inexperienced but plainly noble Marilyn Monroe in a supporting role as his decades-younger mistress, he brought both understated menace and a sad world-weariness to his sleazy, crooked lawyer Emmerich. To her he euphemistically may have been “Uncle Lon” but he was far from avuncular.

This was somewhat of a return to Calhern’s film roots. He began his sound film career in 1931 and throughout the decade he played villains or at least men with morality in various shades of gray. When he wasn’t plotting dirty work in melodramas he was sometimes found doing it in such comedies as Paramount’s Duck Soup in which the formidable Groucho Marx was his adversary.

Calhern was also subjected to indignities by the comedy team of Wheeler and Woolsey in Diplomaniacs and by Danny Kaye in Up in Arms. In viewing those films one is led to wonder whether Calhern really had much sense of humor. He seems to have a puzzled look on his face that may or may not have been called for in the script. Either he wittingly played against his persona in comedies or it was played against without his complicity.

Calhern usually essayed authoritative characters, helped by a powerful physical presence with a height in the 6’2” to 6’3” range. This imposing physicality was topped by a face like that on some ancient coin. His was a Roman nose incarnate and indeed it was seen at least twice above a Roman toga in The Last Days of Pompeii and the title role in the all-star Julius Caesar.

Calhern had begun his illustrious career humbly enough trouping in a Bronx stock company about 1912. He gradually made his way upward through vaudeville and repertory, eventually joining a stock company in Los Angeles. He was discovered for the cinema in the very lair of the movie industry and taken under the wing of director Lois Weber.

It was in 1921 that Louis Calhern made the first three of his five silent movies. He partnered the beauteous Weber star Claire Windsor who got far more mileage out of their pictures together than he did. With such unprepossessing titles as What’s Worth While?, Woman, Wake Up!, and Too Wise Wives to his dubious credit, he soon headed east again. This time it was to a career as a Broadway matinee idol.

With the success of The Song and Dance Man in 1923 and the romantic lead in the next year’s even more popular The Cabra, the decade of the Roaring Twenties was Calhern’s. His reappearance in movies during the 1930s did not necessarily bring him greater fame but aging theater idols do not have great job security. He certainly did not give up the theater; a road company of Life with Father later provided him with another born-to-play role.

Louis Calhern’s film career had its ups and downs but he proved himself to be a distinguished character actor. If he had to endure Charlie McCarthy, Detective and The Gorgeous Hussy there were also the rewards of The Life of Emile Zola and Heaven Can Wait. Indeed, as fine wines do, Calhern got better as he aged. His once arrogant screen persona softened and grew more likable. Good roles still came, such as that of the once great actor George Lorison in The Bad and the Beautiful, Executive Suite and High Society, his last completed film, also provided him with worthy assignments. He was, as he wanted to be, still in harness and still in demand when he died in Japan during the making of what would have been his 73rd film, _The Teahouse of the August Moon._

—Roy Liebman

CANTINFLAS

Nationality: Mexican. Born: Mario Moreno Reyes in Ciudad de los Palacios, 12 August 1911. Education: Studied at the Universidad Nacional Autonoma de Mexico in the school of medicine. Family: Married Valentina Zubareff, 1937 (died 1966), son: Mario Arturo Moreno Ivanova. Career: 1930—began working in variety theaters, using name Cantinflas to hide identity from family; 1936—first film role as comic in _No te engañes corazón_; 1940—became leading comic figure of Spanish-language cinema with lead role in _Ahí está el detalle_; 1941—founded Posa Films production company and produced _Ni sangre ni arena_; began lifelong professional relationship with the director Miguel M. Delgado after first film together, _Cantinflas the Boxer_; 1956—became known internationally after role as Passepartout in _Around the World in Eighty Days_; 1960—commercial and critical failure of _Pepe_ led to his departure from Hollywood and return to Mexico; 1981—final feature film, after which he concentrated on philanthropic interests. Awards: Special Prize, Ariel Awards, Mexico, for “work on behalf of the Mexican cinema,” 1950–51; Golden Globe for Best Actor, for _Around the World in Eighty Days_, 1956; Special Award, Golden Globes, 1960; Special Prize, Mexican Silver Goddesses, 1969; named “symbol of peace and happiness of the Americas,” by the Organization of American States, 1983; Diploma of Honor, Inter-American Council of Music, 1983; honored for lifelong contribution to Mexican cinema, by the Mexican Academy of Cinemagraphic Arts and Sciences, 1988. Died: Of lung cancer, in Mexico City, 20 April 1993.

Films as Actor:

1936 _No te engañes corazón_ (Don’t Deceive Yourself, My Heart) (Torres)
1937 _Así es mi tierra!_ (Boyntler); _Aguila o sol_ (Boyntler)
1939 _Siempre listo en las tinieblas_ (Rivero—short); _Jengibre contra dinamita_ (Rivero—short); _El signo de la muerte_ (Urueta)
1940 _Ahí está el detalle_. _There Is the Detail_; _Here’s the Point_ (Oro) (as himself); _Cantinflas y su prima_ (Rivero—short); _Cantinflas the Boxer_ (Rivero—short); _Cantinflas ruletero_ (Rivero—short)
1941 _Ni sangre ni arena_. _Neither Blood Nor Sand_ (Galindo) (+ pr); _El gendarme desconocido_ (Delgado) (as 77)
1942 _Los tres mosqueteros_ (The Three Musketeers) (Delgado) (as D’Artagnan); _El circo_ (Delgado)
1943 _Romeo y Julieta_ (Romeo and Juliet) (Delgado) (as Romeo)
1944 _Gran hotel_ (Delgado)
1945 _Un día con el diablo_ (Delgado)
1946 _Soy un prófugo_ (Delgado)
1948 _El supersabio_ (Delgado)
1949 _Puerta . . . joven_ (Delgado); _El mago_ (Delgado)
1950 _El siete machos_ (Delgado); _El bombero atómico_ (The Atomic Fireman) (Delgado)
1951 _Si yo fuera diputado_ (Delgado)
1952 _El señor fotógrafo_ (Delgado)
1953 _Caballero a la medida_ (Delgado)
1954 _Abajo el telón_ (Delgado)
1956 _El bolero de Raquel_ (Delgado); _Around the World in Eighty Days_ (Anderson) (as Passepartout)
1957 _Les Bijoutiers du clair de lune_ (The Night Heaven Fell); _Heaven Fell that Night_ (Vadim) (as Alfonso)
1958 _Ama a tu prójimo_ (Demicheli); _Sube y bajo_ (Delgado); _Agguato a Tangier_ (Trapped in Tangiers) (Freda)
1960 _Pepe_ (Sidney) (title role); _El analfabeto_ (Delgado) (as Inocencio Prieto y Calvo)
1962 _El extra_ (Delgado) (Rogaciano)
1963 _Entrega inmediata_ (Delgado) (as Feliciano)
1964 _El padre crítico_ (Delgado) (as Padre Sebas)
1965 _El señor doctor_ (Delgado) (as Dr. Medina)
1966 _Su excelencia_ (Delgado)
1968 _Por mis pistolas_ (Delgado) (as Fidenco)
1969 _Don Quijote sin mancha_ (Delgado)
1970 _El profe_ (Delgado)
1972 _Don Quijote cabalga de nuevo_ (Delgado) (as Sancho Panza)
1976 _El ministro y Yo_ (Delgado)
1978 _El patrullero 777_ (Patrol Car 777) (Delgado)
1981 _El Barrendero_ (Delgado)
1985 _Mexico . . . Estamos Contigo_ (for TV)

Cantinflas (top) with David Niven in _Around the World in Eighty Days_
Publications

By CANTINFLAS: book—

Cantinflas: Apología de un humilde, Mexico, n.d.

On CANTINFLAS: books—

On CANTINFLAS: articles—

Time (New York), 26 April 1940.
Ross, B., “Mexico’s Chaplin,” in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1948.
Current Biography 1953, New York, 1953.
“‘OAS Bids Farewell to Cantinflas,’” in Américas, May/June 1993.

* * *

The best-known figure of Spanish-language cinema, Cantinflas gained international recognition through his rendering of a purely local character. The Pelado is native to Mexico City’s slums—a lumpen-proletarian created by rapid, unplanned, and uncontrollable urbanization, the clash of classes in a dependent and underdeveloped society, and the racial mixing and antagonism of Indians and Europeans. Streetwise as only the powerless learn to become, the pelado relies on wit and guile in dealing with the state apparatus—law, for instance—which oppresses rather than protects him. Cantinflas’s peladito was a comic variant of this character but the actor’s lack of a critical class consciousness led in the end to his acceptance of the very forces that he had built his career on attacking.

Literally, pelado means stripped clean, broke. Cantinflas himself defined his “prototype of the humble people from the urban barrio” in this way: “Superficially educated and practically non-existent socially, but with a highly developed ingenuity (a Mexican characteristic), a formidable astuteness—and a large, gentle, and open heart.” Confronted with the rich and powerful, Cantinflas’s peladito delights in turning the tables and confusing them with their own tools of domination.

Language—the instrument of the educated—is one of the ways the privileged classes maintain their position, but it is also a front on which the peladito excels. Cantinflas’s enormous gift for impromptu verbal invention was the very essence of his comedy—requiring, for example, that he be allowed to improvise fully on scripts. In Mexico, to cantinfllear has come to mean to talk a lot and say nothing, while the noun cantinflas means lovable clown. As Cantinflas put it, when an explanation is demanded “by the policeman whose hat you stepped on or the boss whose shirt you just spilled catsup down, the pelado’s defense is to talk, talk, talk.”

In Cantinflas’s early films this nonsensical double-talk was used to criticize forms of social control—for example, when he confused a courtroom full of lawyers, infecting them with his incoherent verbiage in Ahí está el detalle. In the later works, however, this critical attitude toward the use and abuse of language was replaced with word games which essentially denied the existence of social problems. In his last several movies Cantinflas became openly reactionary, taking on social roles he had earlier criticized, such as priest, doctor, and politician. Under the guise of being nonideological, Cantinflas spouted a rabid and simplistic anticommunism while calling fervidly for free enterprise—and offering himself as the most cogent and apparent example of what hard work can do for one.

Even if on one hand Cantinflas lost touch with his slum roots as he became a multimillionaire with five homes, a thousand-acre ranch, and his own airplane, he at the same time freely donated his time and money to philanthropic causes, appearing at numerous benefits each year and, notably, at one time financially supporting more than 250 poor families in a Mexico City slum. In the end Cantinflas was, justifiably or not, a hero to the Mexican masses, evidenced by the thousands of people who gathered outside the funeral home where his body lay, in tribute to his great talent for making people laugh as well as his enormous generosity.

—John Mraz, updated by David E. Salamie

CANTOR, Eddie

Nationality: American. Born: Edward Israel Iskowitz in New York City, 31 January 1892. Family: Married Ida Tobias, 1914, five daughters. Career: 1907—debut at the Clinton Music Hall; later joined Gus Edwards’s “Kid Kabaret”; 1914–15—with Lily Lee, performed as Cantor and Lee; 1916—moved to the West Coast, performed with the ‘Canary Cottage’ company; 1917–19—in the Ziegfeld ‘Follies’; 1920—debut as star in The Midnight Rounders; 1926—film debut in filmed version of stage success, Kid Boots; 1930s—president of Jewish Theatrical Guild of America, and of the American Federation of Radio Artists (1937); 1950–54—host of The Colgate Comedy Hour; 1955—host of Eddie Cantor Comedy Theatre. Awards: Honorary Oscar, for “distinguished service to the film industry,” 1956. Died: 10 October 1964.
Eddie Cantor

Films as Actor:

1926  Kid Boots (Tuttle) (title role)
1927  The Speed Hound (short); Follies; Special Delivery (Goodrich) (as Eddie, the mail carrier, + story)
1929  Glorifying the American Girl (Webb) (as himself, performing in revue); That Party in Person (short); Getting a Ticket (Blumenstock—short) (as himself)
1930  Whoopee! (Freeland) (as Henry Williams); Insurance (short) (as Sidney B. Sweiback)
1931  Mr. Lemon of Orange (co-sc only); Palmy Days (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Eddy Simpson, + co-story, co-sc)
1932  The Kid from Spain (McC Carey) (as Eddie Williams)
1933  Roman Scandals (Tuttle) (as Eddie)
1934  Kid Millions (del Ruth) (as Eddie Wilson Jr.); Hollywood Cavalcade (short); Screen Snapshots No. 11 (short)
1936  Strike Me Pink (Taurog) (as Eddie Pink)
1937  Ali Baba Goes to Town (David Butler) (title role)
1940  Forty Little Mothers (Berkeley) (as Gilbert J. Thompson)
1943  Thank Your Lucky Stars (David Butler) (as Joe Sampson/ himself)
1944  Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as himself); Show Business (Marin) (as Eddie Martin, + pr)
1945  Rhapsody in Blue (Rapper)
1948  If You Knew Susie (Gordon Douglas) (as Sam Parker, + pr)
1952  The Story of Will Rogers (Curtiz) (as himself)
1953  The Eddie Cantor Story (Alfred E. Green) (appearance)
1956  Seidman and Son (for TV)

Publications

By CANTOR: books—

My Life Is in Your Hands, as told to David Freedman, New York, 1928.

By CANTOR: articles—

Photoplay (New York), November 1926.
Film Weekly (London), 8 December 1933.

On CANTOR: books—

On CANTOR: articles—

Forde, Walter, in Film Weekly (London), 2 January 1932.

On CANTOR: film—

The Eddie Cantor Story, musical biography directed by Alfred E. Green, 1955.

* * *

With the exception of the Marx Brothers team no other comedian has brought from the stage to the screen so much of the vigor of vaudeville and the musical comedy as Eddie Cantor. A stand-up comic with the skills of a song and dance man, he possessed the charisma to dominate a theater or film skit. During the transition to sound in 1929 and 1930 his one-reel films such as Getting a Ticket were refurbished vaudeville sketches. As an actor who obviously had developed a kinetic comic style that matched the lively pace of the musical comedy, Cantor then starred in a series of films in the early 1930s that equalled such well-known musicals as Forty-Second Street and Footlight Parade. His Roman Scandals, produced the same year... as these works, remains one of the best examples of his contribution. One of the achievements in this film is a manic portrait that bursts with energy; consequently, when his character switches from straight dialogue to a musical number, it seems quite logical. Cantor also developed a working method similar to that of Charles Chaplin and Buster Keaton. He created a persona who exists on the edge of society, a tramp-child character, who nevertheless possesses a mind which works differently than those of his social superiors, creating the anomalous “wise fool.” Comic ingenuity reigns as his oddball mind produces a tactic to escape the wrath of his enemies.

In Roman Scandals many facets of Cantor’s skill evolved. He exhibits comic cowardice, a con man’s ability to bilk authority, and a childlike spirit of play when faced with each new situation. Visually, the actor becomes as adroit as he does verbally. Many of his reactions, the rolling of his large eyes, the gaiety of movement, the charming smile, and the overall warmth of a little fellow struggling against odds and escaping are intriguing. His aggression is distinctive, but he never becomes the brash confidence man in the vein of his contemporary, Groucho Marx. In this 1933 musical, for example, his wisecracks have a more flippant tone. But while Eddie’s invective humor may not prove to be a match for Groucho’s, his deftness as a song and dance man left the leader of the Marx team far behind. In his films Cantor could sell a song such as ‘‘Making Whoopee,’’ ‘‘Keep Young and Beautiful,’’ and ‘‘My Honey Said Yes, Yes.’’ Of course, it could have been partly a case of the public preferring allusions to the high life over the social cynicism of Groucho.

In these early 1930s musicals the comedian retained the lion’s share of the focus even when he was flanked by a Busby Berkeley battalion of beauties dancing in swirling, kaleidoscopic patterns. Eddie does not merely hold his own; he dominates. With his strutting patte routine, he hops about in an eccentric dance, pressing palms together and clapping with delight, his huge eyes revolving. He is a standout figure as his vaudeville “blackface” dance and song routines keep him in the center of the action—among the circling, scantily costumed blonds.

Like many top comedians, Cantor had a number of impersonations up his sleeve. In Palmy Days, he skillfully handles three roles: he impersonates a woman to escape his adversaries, a phony French spiritualist to con a quack medium, and a wacky efficiency expert recruited by a bakery tycoon through a mistaken identity plot development in the film. Another farcical twist shows the comedian acting out the role of a toreador in The Kid from Spain, an effort that wins the approval of the crowd because of his supposed innovative deviations from the art of bullfighting. In all of these contrivances the comedian portrays the coward on the run who achieves safety and even fame by pluck and luck.

In the musical with a strong comedy emphasis, Eddie Cantor can be rated as king of them all. By 1933 he was the highest-paid comedian in the country; not merely through his films but also as America’s leading radio comedian. In fact, his success in that medium cut into the number of films he created in the 1930s, and consequently, his influence on the musical began to wane. His ability to turn a line, even a mediocre one, was an asset that made him a successful radio comedian, but he was skilled in visual comedy as well. It was a pity that, with his success in radio, he did not concentrate on films. Even a second-rate Cantor work was better than most of the musical comedy movies of the 1930s. It is, however, only conjecture that he might have changed the face of the musical. Roman Scandals may have been a fortunate combination of writing, directing, and production talents which could not be equalled in a later picture, such as Kid Millions. If the quality of his work in film had continued, he might now be ranked with the best laugh getters of the period—the Marx Brothers, W. C. Fields, and Laurel and Hardy. As a comedian in the musical comedy, however, Eddie Cantor had no equal.

—Donald McCaffrey

CARDINALE, Claudia

Nationality: Italian. Born: Tunis, Tunisia, 15 April 1939. Education: Attended acting classes at Centro Sperimentale film school, Rome. Family: Married the producer Franco Cristaldi. Career: 1956—appeared in small part in short film Anneaux d’or; 1957—contract with Cristaldi; 1958—began appearing in secondary roles in Italian films; early 1960s—international stardom, particularly with Fellini’s 8%; 1977—in TV mini-series Jesus of Nazareth. Awards: Silver Ribbons, Italy, for Best Actress, for La ragazza di Bube, 1963, and Claretta, 1984–85, and for Best Supporting Actress, for La pelle, 1981–82. Address: Via Flamia Km.17,200, 1–0018 Rome, Italy.

Films as Actress:

- 1956 Anneaux d’or (Chaines d’or) (Vautier)
- 1957 Goha (Baratier)
- 1958 I soliti ignoti (Big Deal on Madonna Street; Persons Unknown) (Monicelli) (as Carmelina); Tre straniere a Roma (Gora); La prima notte (Cavalcanti); Totò e Marcellino (Masa)
- 1959 Il magistrato (Zampa); Un maledetto imbroglio (The Facts of Murder) (Germi); Audace colpo dei soliti ignoti (Fiasco in Milan; Hold-up à la Milanaise) (Loy); Vento del sud (Provenzale); Upstairs and Downstairs (Thomas) (as Maria)
- 1960 Austerlitz (The Battle of Austerlitz) (Gance) (as Pauline); Il bell’Antonio (Bolognini) (as Barbara Puglisi); 1 delfini (Maselli); Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers; Rocco et ses frères) (Visconti) (as Ginetta)
- 1961 La ragazza con la valigia (Girl with a Suitcase; Pleasure Girl) (Zurlini) (as Aida Zepponi); Les lions sont lâchés (Verneuil); Senilità (Bolognini) (as Angiolina); La viaccia (The Love Makers) (Bolognini)
- 1962 Cartouche (Swords of Blood) (de Broca) (as Venus)
- 1963 Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti) (as Angelica Sedara/ Bértiana); 8½ (Otto e mezzo) (Fellini) (as Claudia); La ragazza di Babe (Bebo’s Girl) (Comencini) (as Mara)
- 1964 Circus World (The Magnificent Showman) (Hathaway) (as Toni Alfredo); The Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Princess Dala); Il magnifico cornuto (The Magnificent Cuckold) (Pietrangeli) (as Maria Grazia Artusi); Gli indifferenti (A Time of Indifference) (Maselli) (as Carla Ardengo)
- 1965 Vaghe stelle dell’Orsa (Sandia; Of a Thousand Delights) (Visconti) (as Sandra)
Claudia Cardinale with David Niven in The Pink Panther

1966  Blindfold (Dunne) (as Vicky Vincenti); Una rosa per tutti (A Rose for Everyone; Every Man’s Woman) (Rossi) (as Rosa); “Fata Armenia” (“Queen Armenia”) ep. of Le fata (The Queens; Sex Quartet) (Monicelli) (as Armenia); Lost Command (Not for Honor and Glory) (Robson) (as Aicha); The Professionals (Richard Brooks) (as Maria Grant)

1967  Don’t Make Waves (Mackendrick) (as Laura Califatti); Piero Gherardi (Werba)

1968  The Hell with Heroes (Sargent) (as Elena); C’era una volta il West (Once upon a Time in the West) (Leone) (as Jill McBain); Il giorno della civetta (The Day of the Owl; La Mafia fait la loi; Mafia) (Damiani) (as Rosa Nicolosi)

1969  La tenda rossa (Krasnaya palata; The Red Tent) (Kalatozov) (as Nurse Valeria); Nell’anno del signore (Magni) (as Giuditta Di Castro); Ruba al prossimo tuo (Una coppia tranquilla; A Fine Pair) (Maselli) (as Esmeralda Marini)

1970  The Adventures of Gerard (Skolimowski) (as Countess Teresa); Certo, certissimo . . . anzi probabile (Certain, Very Certain, as a Matter of Fact . . . Probable) (Fondato) (as Marta)

1971  Popsy Pop (The Butterfly Affair; The 21 Carat Snatch; Queen of Diamonds) (Herman) (as Popsy); Les Péréleuses (The Legend of Frenchie King; The Petroleum Girls) (Christian-Jaque) (as Maria); L’audienza (Tee Audience; The Papal Audience) (Ferretti); Bello, onesto, emigrato Australia sposerebbe compaesana illibata (Zampa)

1972  La scoumoune (Giovanni) (as Genevieve Saratov)

1973  Libera, amore mio (Libera, My Love) (Giovanni); I guappi (Blood Brothers) (Squitieri); Il giorno del furore (Days of Fury; One Russian Summer) (Calenda) (as Anya)

1974  Gruppo di famiglia in un interno (Conversation Piece; Violence et Passion) (Visconti) (as wife)

1975  A mezzanotte va la ronda del piacere (The Immortal Bachelor; Midnight Pleasures; Qui comincia l’avventura) (Fondato) (as Gabriella Sansoni)

1976  One ep. of Il communo senso del pudore (A Common Sense of Modesty) (Sordi); The Pink Panther Strikes Again (Edwards)

1977  Blonde in Black Leather (Di Palma); Un jour peut-être à San Pedro ou ailleurs; Il prefetto di ferro (Squitieri); La part du feu (Périer); Goodbye e Amen (Goodbye and Amen) (Damiani) (as Aliki)

1978  Cocktails for Three; L’arma (The Gun) (Squitieri) (as Marta Campagna); La petite fille en velours bleu (The Little Girl in Blue Velvet) (Bridges); Corleone (Father of the Godfather) (Squitieri) (as Rosa Accordino)

1979 L’ingorgo (Traffic Jam) (Comencini); Escape to Athena (Cosmatos) (as Elena)

1980 Si salvi chi vuole (Faenza)

1981 La pelle (Cavani); The Salamander (Zinner) (as Elena)

1982 Le Cadeau (The Gift) (Michel Lang) (as Antonella); Fitzcarraldo (Herzog) (as Molly); Burden of Dreams (Blank—doc)

1983 Le Ruffian (The Ruffian) (Giovanni) (as la “baronne”); Princess Daisy (Hussein—for TV); Stelle emigranti (Mazeni—for TV)

1984 Claretta (Squitieri); Enrico IV (Henry IV) (Bellochio) (as Matilda)

1985 La storia (History) (Comencini) (as Ida); Donna delle meraviglie (The Woman of Wonders) (Beraviglie)

1986 L’Été prochain (Next Summer) (Trintignant) (as Jeanne)

1987 Un Homme amoureux (A Man in Love) (Kurys) (as Julia Steiner); Sniper (Jameson)

1988 Blu Elettrico (Electric Blue) (Gaeng) (as Tata)

1989 La bataille des trois rois (The Battle of Three Kings; Tambores de duello; Drums of Fire) (Baraka); La Révolution Française (The French Revolution) (Enrico and Heffron) (as the Countess); Ben Webster: The Brave and the Beautiful (Jeremy—doc)

1990 Hiver 54, l’Abbé Pierre (Amar); Atto di dolore (Squitieri); Money (Stern)

1991 Mayrig (as Araxi/Mayrig); Act of Contrition (Squitieri)

1992 588 Rue Paradis (Mother) (as Araxi/Mayrig)

1993 Son of the Pink Panther (Edwards) (as Maria)

1994 Elles ne pensent qu’a ca (Women Have Only One Thing on Their Minds) (as Margaux)

1995 Un été à La Goulette (Bougheadir) (as Herself); 10–07: L’affaire Zeus (Ciupka) (as Agent)

1996 Nostromo (Réid) (as Viola); Cannes … les 400 coups (Nadeau—for TV) (as herself)

1997 Sous les pieds des femmes (Krim) (as Aya 1996); Deserto di fuoco (Castellari—for TV) (as Leila)

1998 Riches, belles, etc. (Schpoliansky); Mia, Liebe meines Lebens (Soldati—for TV) (as Mary O’ Sullivan); Mein liebster Feind—Klaus Kinski (Herzog—doc) (as herself)

1999 Luchino Visconti (Lizzani) (as herself); Briganti (Squitieri)

Publications

By CARDINALE: book—

Io, Claudia, tu, Claudia, with Anna Maria Mori, Milan, 1995.

By CARDINALE: article—

Film Comment (Denville), March–April 1983.

On CARDINALE: articles—

* * *

Claudia Cardinale, the Italian actress famous for her husky, almost raspy voice, began her career by winning a contest for “the most beautiful Italian girl in Tunisia.” As the winner, she was granted a trip to the Venice Film Festival, and eventually attended acting classes at the Centro Sperimentale in Rome. She was promoted by producer Franco Cristaldi, who carefully guided her every move in regard to the cinema, and later married her.

Cardinale was discovered during the era when Brigitte Bardot created one sensation after another both on screen and off. Cardinale could merely have become “the Italian Bardot,” and, indeed comparisons have been drawn between the two actresses. But a number of factors helped lead Cardinale’s career in a different direction. The publicity surrounding both Cardinale’s films and her personal life was not nearly as sensational as that concerning Bardot. More importantly, Cardinale soon began appearing in the films of the major Italian auteurs. Minor, and later more substantial, roles in the films of Mario Monicelli, Mauro Bolognini, Luchino Visconti, and Federico Fellini made her a star in Italy and abroad.

While many of Bardot’s films are now known simply because she is in them, Cardinale’s films are often important works in the careers of their respective directors. For example, she appeared in Monicelli’s best-known comedy (Big Deal on Madonna Street), co-starred in a fine series of films for Bolognini (Il bell’Antonio, La viaccia, and Senilità), and gained critical and popular recognition for her role as the fiancée of the eldest brother in Visconti’s Rocco and His Brothers. She appeared in multiple roles in Fellini’s 8½, one of her most memorable films.

In these films, Cardinale’s characters were, more often than not, portrayed as glamorous sex objects, not unlike Bardot. The variations each director introduced in the presentation of Cardinale in this type of character, however, prove interesting. In 8½ she plays Claudia, herself, as well as the ideal woman of Guido’s dreams. Outside the immediate narrative context of the film, her character becomes a symbol for Fellini of unspoiled, yet unattainable, innocence. Though beautiful and sensuous, she is not crushingly sexual.

Later, in Leone’s Once upon a Time in the West, Cardinale portrays Jill McBain, the new bride of murdered settler Brett McBain. Again, her character could be described as the object desired by the male figures in the film, but Jill McBain signifies much more within the context of the film’s complex narrative, and within the genre of the Western itself. She represents the forces of civilization, as female characters often do in Westerns. The final scene depicts Jill providing water to the thirsty workers building the railroad (that other symbol of the taming of the west), implying that Jill will fulfill her husband’s dream of running a railroad station. Her past life as a prostitute in New Orleans, however, recalls the less than desirable elements of civilization, which will inevitably follow the settlers. In this film, as in 8½, Cardinale’s character carries symbolic, almost mythic connotations.

Cardinale made her American film debut in Blake Edwards’s very popular The Pink Panther, securing her international star status. Other American films, such as The Professionals, followed. During the 1970s and 1980s, however, Cardinale made most of her films in Italy. and Europe. Many were not distributed in America or suffered from limited distribution, thereby reducing Cardinale’s international exposure. Three 1980’s roles, in Liliana Cavani’s La pelle (well-received at Cannes), in Werner Herzog’s Fitzcarraldo, and Diane Kurys’s A Man in Love, have again focused attention on her as she enters a more mature phase of her life and career.

—Susan M. Doll

CAREY, Harry

Films as Actor:

c.1909 Bill Sharkley’s Last Game
1911 Riding de Trail
1912 An Unseen Enemy (D. W. Griffith); A Cry for Help (D. W. Griffith); The Musketeers of Pig Alley (D. W. Griffith); In the Aisles of the Wild (D. W. Griffith); Friends (D. W. Griffith); Heredity (D. W. Griffith); The Unwelcome Guest (D. W. Griffith); An Adventure in the Autumn Woods (D. W. Griffith); My Hero (D. W. Griffith); Love in an Apartment Hotel (D. W. Griffith); The Informer (D. W. Griffith); Three Friends (D. W. Griffith); Brothers (D. W. Griffith)
1913 Broken Ways (D. W. Griffith); The Ranchero’s Revenge (D. W. Griffith); The Left-Handed Man (D. W. Griffith); The Hero of Little Italy (D. W. Griffith); Olaf—An Atom (D. W. Griffith); The Sheriff’s Baby (D. W. Griffith); Two Men of the Desert (D. W. Griffith)
1914 Judith of Bethulia (D. W. Griffith); McVeagh of the South Seas (Brute Island; Brute Force; Wars of the Primai Tribes) (D. W. Griffith); Travellin’ On; The Master Cracksman (as Gentleman Joe, the Cracksman)
1915 Graft
1917 Beloved Jim; The Fighting Gringo; The Secret Man (Ford); A Marked Man (Ford); Bucking Broadway (Ford); Two Guns; Straight Shooting (The Cattle War; Joan of the Cattle Country) (Ford) (as Cheyenne Harry)
1918 Thieves’ Gold (Ford); Wild Women (Ford); Three Mounted Men (Ford); A Woman’s Fool (Ford); The Scarlet Drop (Ford); The Phantom Riders (Ford); Hell Bent (Ford)
1919 By Indian Post (Ford); The Rustlers (Ford); Gun Law (Ford); The Gun Packer (The Gun Pusher) (Ford); The Last Outlaw (Ford); The Fighting Brothers (Ford); Blind Husbands (von Stroheim); A Fight for Love (Ford); Bare Fists (Ford); Riders of Vengeance (Ford); The Outcasts of Poker Flat (Ford); The Ace in the Saddle (Ford); A Gun Fightin’ Gentleman (Ford); The Rider of the Law (Ford); Marked Men (Ford); Sure Shot Morgan
1920 Hitchin’ Posts (Ford); Overland Red; West Is West; Sundown Slim; Human Stuff; Ballet Proof; Blue Streak McCoy
1921 ‘If Only’ Jim (Iaccard); The Freeze Out (Ford); Hearts Up; Desperate Trails (Ford); The Fox (Thornby); The Wallop (Ford)
1922 Man to Man (Paton); The Kick Back (Paul); Good Men and True (Neitz)
1923 Canyon of the Fools (Paul); Crashin’ Thru (Paul); Desert Driven (Paul); The Miracle Baby (Paul)
1924 The Night Hawk (Paton); The Man from Texas; Tiger Thompson (Eason); The Lightning Rider (Ingraham); Roaring Rails (Forman); The Flaming Forties (Forman)
1925 Soft Shoes (Ingraham); Beyond the Border (Dunlap); Silent Sanderson (Dunlap); The Texas Trail (Dunlap); Wanderer; The Bad Lands (Henderson); The Prairie Pirate (Mortimer); The Man from Red Gulch (Mortimer)
1926 Drifin’ Thru (Dunlap); The Seventh Bandit (Dunlap); The Frontier Trail (Dunlap); Satan Town (Mortimer)
1927 A Little Journey (Leonard); Slide, Kelly, Slide (Sedgwick)
1928 The Trail of ’98 (Brown); The Border Patrol (Hogan); Burning Bridges (Hogan)
1931 Trader Horn (Van Dyke) (title role); Bad Company (Garnett) (as McBaine); The Vanishing Legion (Eason—serial); Across the Line; Double Sises; Horse Hoofs; The Hurricane Rider; Cavalier of the West (McCarthy)
1932 Border Devils (Nigh); Without Honors (Nigh); Law and Order (Guns A’ Blazing) (Cahn) (as Ed Brant); Last of the Mohicans (Beebe—serial); The Devil Horse (Brower—serial); The Night Rider (Nigh)
1933 Man of the Forest (Hathaway) (as Jim Gaynor); Sunset Pass (Hathaway) (as John Heshitt)
1934 The Thundering Herd (In the Days of the Thundering Herd) (Hathaway) (as Clark Sprague)
1935 The Last of the Clintons (Fraser) (as Trigger Carson); Rustlers’ Paradise (Fraser) (as Cheyenne Kincaid); Powdersmoke Range (Fox) (as Tucson Smith); Barbary Coast (Hawks) (as Slocum); Wagon Trail (Fraser) (as Sheriff Hartley); Wild Mustang (Fraser) (as Norton)
1936 The Prisoner of Shark Island (Ford) (as Commandant of Fort Jefferson “Shark Island”); Little Miss Nobody (Blystone) (as John Russell); The Last Outlaw (Last of the Outlaws) (Cabanne) (as Dean Payton); Sitter’s Gold (Cruze) (as Kit Carson); Valiant Is the Word for Carrie (Ruggles) (as Phil Yonne); The Accusing Finger (Hogan) (as Sen. Nash); The Three Mesquites (Saylor) (as Man behind the Mask (Powell)
1937 Racing Lady (Fox) (as Tom Martin); Born Reckless (St. Clair) (as Dad Martin); Kid Galahad (Curtiz) (as Silver Jackson); Souls at Sea (Hathaway) (as Captain of the William Brown); Ghost Town (Fraser) (as Cheyenne Harry); Border Cafe
Harry Carey (left) in Trader Horn (Landers) (as Tex); Annapolis Salute (Salute to Romance) (Cabanne) (as Chief Martin); Aces Wild (Fraser); Danger Patrol (Landers) (as “Easy” Street)

1938

- You and Me (Fritz Lang) (as Mr. Morris); Sky Giant (Landers) (as Col. Stockton); The Law West of Tombstone (Tryon) (as Bill Barker); Gateway (Werker) (as Commissioner Nelson); Port of Missing Girls (Brown) (as Capt. Storm); King of Alcatraz (Florey) (as Capt. Glennan); Code of the Streets (Harold Young) (as Lt. Lewis)

1939

- Burn ‘em Up O’Connor (Sedgwick) (as P. G. Delano); Inside Information (Lamont) (as Capt. Bill Dugan); Mr. Smith Goes to Washington (Capra) (as President of the Senate); Street of Missing Men (Salkow) (as Putnam); My Son Is Guilty (Barton) (as Tim Kerry)

1940

- Outside the 3-Mile Limit (Mutiny on the Seas) (Collins) (as Capt. Bailey); Beyond Tomorrow (A. Edward Sutherland) (as George Melton); They Knew What They Wanted (Kanin) (as doctor)

1941

- Among the Living (Heisler) (as Dr. Ben Saunders); The Shepherd of the Hills (Hathaway) (as Daniel Howitt); Parachute Battalion (Goodwins) (as Bill Richards); Sunset (Hathaway) (as Dewey)

1942

- The Spoilers (Enright) (as Al Dextery)

1943

- Air Force (Hawks) (as Sgt. Robby White); Happy Land (Pichel) (as Gramp)

1945

- The Great Moment (Preston Sturges) (as Prof. Warren); China’s Little Devils (Bell)

1946

- Duel in the Sun (King Vidor and others) (as Lem Smoot)

1947

- Angel and the Badman (Grant) (as Wistful McClintock); The Sea of Grass (Kazan) (as Doc Reid)

1948

- Red River (Hawks) (as Mr. Millville)

1949

- So Dear to My Heart (Schuster) (as judge at county fair)

Publications

By CAREY: articles—

Interviews with M. Cheatham, in Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), February 1921 and November 1921.
On CAREY: books—

On CAREY: article—

* * *

When John Ford dedicated Three Godfathers "to the memory of Harry Carey—bright Star of the early Western sky" he acknowledged more than the death of an old friend and colleague. Carey, like Ford himself, was an Easterner who fell in love with the West, adopted its ethos, and came to feel himself, as did William S. Hart, a custodian of its ethics and principles.

With Ford and others, Carey for many years lived a communal Western-style existence on a small ranch near Newhall, California, counterfeiting a life that, as the son of a New York judge, he had never known. Distrusting Griffith’s sentimental view of the frontier, and the antics of such stars as Tom Mix and Hoot Gibson whose comedy/action Westerns reflected their rodeo and traveling show backgrounds, Carey and Ford, in 26 silents together, often co-written and co-directed, combined myth and truth to construct a legendary West more consistent with their own intellect and morality.

Carey’s lined, impassive face with its turned-down mouth epitomized the Russell/Remington vision of frontier life—violent, grinding, dirty. As Henry Nash Smith wrote in Virgin Land, the hero of this West, "even after his reformation, could not easily be distinguished from the criminals opposing him." Most Americans soon unquestioningly accepted the West of Carey’s Cheyenne Harry films as literal truth.

Carey survived the move to sound better than many of his colleagues. Playing the white scout Hawkeye in a serial version of Last of the Mohicans, he introduced his stern face and growling voice to new audiences. He was excellent in the underrated Earp/Holliday film Law and Order, and transferred his frontier rectitude to Africa for Trader Horn. Few character actors could have rallied the force to face down Lionel Barrymore so effectively in Duel in the Sun. When Hitchcock, with characteristic malice, suggested him for the Nazi spy in Saboteur, Carey’s wife advised him indignantly that he now occupied the position in the American pantheon vacated by Will Rogers. Her claim was exaggerated, but not without its justification.

—John Baxter

Films as Actor:

1990  Riff-Raff (Loach) (as Steve); Silent Scream (Hayman) (as Big Woody)
1993  Being Human (Forsyth) (as Prehistoric Shamen); Safe (Bird) (as Nosty)
1994  Priest (Bird) (as Graham)
1995  Go Now (Winterbottom) (as Nick Cameron)
1996  Carla’s Song (Loach) (as George); Trainspotting (Boyle) (as Francis “Franco” Begbie)
1997  Face (Bird) (as Ray); The Full Monty (Cattaneo) (as Gary ‘Gaz’ Schofield)
1998  ‘‘Looking After Jo Jo’’ (Mackenzie) (mini, for TV) (as John Joe ‘‘Jo Jo’’ McCann)
1999  The World Is Not Enough (Apted) (as Renard); Angela’s Ashes (Parker) (as Dad); Ravenous (Bird) (as Colquhoun/Ives); Plunkett & Macleane (Scott) (as Plunkett)
2000  To End All Wars (Cunningham) (as Campbell); The Beach (Boyle) (as Daffy); There’s Only One Jimmy Grimble (Hay) (as Eric Wirral); To End All Wars (Cunningham) (as Campbell)

CARLYLE, Robert

Nationality: Scottish.  Born: Glasgow, Scotland, 14 April 1961.  Education: Acting classes at Glasgow Arts Centre.  Career: Founded, with four others, Raindog Theatre Company, 1991; played Hamish Macbeth, Hamish Macbeth TV series, and Albie, Cracker TV series, both 1995.  Awards: British Academy Award, for Best Performance by an Actor in a Leading Role, London Critics Circle Award, for
Publications

By CARLYLE: articles—

On CARLYLE: articles—

---

In barely ten years, Robert Carlyle has established himself as one of the best-known Scottish actors in the world, probably second only to Sean Connery. This is all the more remarkable since, with only one or two exceptions, his films have all been low-budget, British-made movies. So far, he seems resistant to the megabuck glamour of the U.S. film industry, and his career apparently doesn’t need it in order to thrive.

Not that transatlantic offers have been wanting, especially in the wake of Trainspotting and The Full Monty. But Carlyle, a serious and committed actor with a strong political conscience, has always fought shy of Hollywood, which rarely offers the kind of role he favours. “The most important thing for me,” he observes, “is to find a script that has some kind of social comment, that says something to somebody. . . . I can’t think of anything worse than being in a film or playing a part with nothing to say.” Accepting the role of villain in a Bond movie (The World Is Not Enough) might seem to stretch that principle, but Carlyle justifies it in historical terms. “That link between Connery and Bond and the Scottish people is fundamental. Being in a Bond film is like being part of history.”

In any case the casting was probably inevitable, sooner or later, since Carlyle has created some of the most memorably terrifying villains in recent cinema. Created them, too, with evident relish: “Those are the parts, aren’t they? There’s just much more in those characters to get my teeth into.” He first came to wide public notice in the British TV crime series Cracker playing Albie, a shaven-headed Scouse serial killer with a grimly single-minded agenda. A year later his talent for acting scary riveted movie audiences in Trainspotting. As psychotic Scots hardman Begbie, with his mad-eyed stare and ferocious moustache, Carlyle plays the only member of his lowlife set with no use for hard drugs: gratuitous violence gives him all the highs he wants. It’s a lethally funny performance, hiliarious, and unsettling at once.

Physically, Carlyle seems singularly ill-equipped to play heavies, being small and slender with wide-set, soulful brown eyes. But there’s an intensity to his acting that can, when he chooses, readily take on a dangerous edge, lending his slight frame an impression of coiled power. The eyes narrow and darken, the thin, arrow-straight nose turns sharp as a blade, the lips tighten and the whole wiry physique clenches, poised to attack. Not even in Ravenous, where he plays a vampiric cannibal gaining strength from those he devours, did he need any extraneous gimmicks or special effects to create a sense of malign, unstoppable force. As the director Danny Boyle told him when casting him—rather to Carlyle’s own surprise—as Begbie, “Small psychos are the best.”

At the opposite end of his range, Carlyle can play amiable, innocuous types with no less conviction. Simultaneously with his killer-role in Cracker, he was appearing on another TV channel as Hamish Macbeth, a shy, unambitious, pot-smoking Highland cop—causing viewers no apparent confusion. But both Hamish and Albie can be seen as contrasted facets of the outsider figures that Carlyle is most drawn to: society’s misfits, whether benevolent or savage, in whom he invests a sympathy that strikes an answering chord in audiences. In The Full Monty the wry warmth of his performance as leader of the would-be male strippers did much to ensure the film’s runaway success, and his South-London gangster in Antonia Bird’s Face comes across more as victim than predator. Priest, another Bird film, casts him as the eponymous cleric’s gay lover; Carlyle gives an appealingly vulnerable performance, cocky and streetwise but sensitive, with a touching tenderness in the love scenes.

Carlyle rejects the term “method actor.” But he always seeks out a level of emotional identification with a role (“It’s not about acting, it’s about being”), aiming to find a core of humanity in even the least promising material, such as his Bond villain, Renard: “I tried to make him a character who’s staring into the abyss. He knows he’s going to die, so there’s a gentleness about him because of that, a relaxed quality.” Likewise, his take on the feckless, drunken father of Angela’s Ashes avoids demonising the man. “No doubt he did terrible things, but the kids adored him, which says a lot for what he was like.”

As yet, Carlyle seems set on sticking to his roots. He remains committed to the Rain Dog theatre company that he founded in Glasgow, and followed up his Bond stint with a $3 million film in Manchester (It’s Only Jimmy Grimble). “I always try to go as far away from what I have just done as possible. If you can do that, you get a longer shelf-life. And it’s more interesting.” Even so, once or twice lately there’s a sense—as with his deranged druggie in The Beach—that he may be in danger of repeating himself, falling back on a few well-tried mannerisms. But if he can avoid that trap, and resist the glitter of Tinseltown, Carlyle looks set to inherit Connery’s crown—and more than likely surpass him as an actor.

—Philip Kemp

CARON, Leslie

Leslie Caron with Gene Kelly in An American in Paris

Films as Actress:

1951  An American in Paris (Minnelli) (as Lise Bouvier); The Man with a Cloak (Markle) (as Madeline Minot)

1952  Glory Alley (Walsh) (as Angela)

1953  “Mademoiselle” ep. of The Story of Three Loves (Minnelli) (as Mademoiselle); Lili (Walters) (title role)

1955  The Glass Slipper (Walters) (as Ella); Daddy Long Legs (Negulesco) (as Julie Andre)

1956  Gaby (Bernhardt) (title role)

1958  Gigi (Minnelli) (title role); The Doctor’s Dilemma (Asquith) (as Mrs. Dubedat)

1959  The Man Who Understood Women (Johnson) (as Ann Garantier); Austerlitz (The Battle of Austerlitz) (Gance) (as Mlle. de Vaudey)

1960  The Subterraneans (MacDougal) (as Mardou Fox); Fanny (Logan) (title role)

1962  “Les Deux Pigeons” (“Two Pigeons”) ep. of Les Quatres Vérités (Three Fables of Love) (Clair); Guns of Darkness (Asquith) (as Claire Jordan); The L-Shaped Room (Forbes) (as Jane Fosset)

1964  Father Goose (Nelson) (as Catherine Freneau)

1965  A Very Special Favor (Gordon) (as Lauren Boullard)

1966  Promise Her Anything (Hiller) (as Michele O’Brien); Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Françoise Labe)

1967  Il padre di famiglia (The Head of the Family, Jeux D’adultes) (Loy) (as Paola)
1970 Madron (Jerry Hopper) (as Sister Mary)
1971 Chandler (Magwood) (as Katherine)
1972 Nicole (Ventilla); Purple Night (film not listed in most sources)
1975 James Dean, the First American Teenager (Connolly—doc)
(Connolly—doc) (as herself); Carola (Lloyd—for TV)
1976 Sérail (de Gregorio)
1977 L’Homme qui aimait les femmes (The Man Who Loved Women) (Truffaut) (as Vera); Valentino (Ken Russell) (as Alla Nazimova)
1978 The Contract (Hui)
1979 Goldengirl (Sargent) (as Dr. Sammy Lee); Tous vedettes (Michel Lang)
1981 Kontrakt (The Contract) (Zanussi) (as Penelope); Chanel solitaire (Kaczender)
1982 Imperative (Zanussi) (as Mother); Die unerreichbare (The Unapproachable) (Zanussi)
1984 La Diagonale du fou (Dangerous Moves) (Dembo) (as Henia Liebskind)
1987 The Sealed Train (for TV)
1989 Guerriers et captives (Warriors and Prisoners) (Cozarinsky);
Courage Mountain (Leitch) (as Jane Hillary)
1990 Blue Notte (Serafini)
1992 Damage (Fatale) (Malle) (as Elizabeth Prideaux)
1993 The Genius (Joe Gibbons); Jean Renoir (David Thompson—doc)
1994 That’s Entertainment! III (Friedgen and Sheridan—compilation)
1995 Funny Bones (Chelsom) (as Katie Parker); Let It Be Me (Bergstein)
1996 The Ring (Armand Mastroianni—for TV) (as madame de Saint Marne); The Great War (Byker—for TV) (Czarina Aleksandra Romanov)
1997 The Reef (Ackerman) (as Regine De Chantelle)
1999 From Russia to Hollywood: The 100-Year Odyssey of Chekhov and Shdanoff (Keeve) (as Herself); Passion’s Way (as Regine)
2000 Chocolat (Hallström) (as Madame Audel)

Publications

By CARON: articles—

On CARON: books—

On CARON: article—

Ecran (Paris), March 1979.

Film Dope (London), March 1982.
Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1994.

Originally a Gallic twinkletoes and all-purpose gamine for MGM, Leslie Caron became the only dancing star of her day to transpose brilliance en pointe to pointedly dramatic performance. While Cyd Charisse, Ann Miller, Ginger Rogers, and Vera-Ellen remain symbols of a glamorous yesterday, Caron (who had never intended to be a Thespian, let alone a movie star) has matured into a working actress keenly aware of contemporary trends. Disparaging her early MGM work in the book, The Magic Factory, she has lately softened those ungenerous remarks. Never a happy camper within the studio system, outspoken Caron need not play down her escapist past in order to emphasize her present seriousness.

If An American in Paris now registers as a rather puffed-up sacrifice to the Art of Dance, that musical does have its saving graces including the moonstruck pas de deux that Kelly and Caron dance to “Our Love Is Here to Stay.” In all her MGM diversions (although it is least evident in Lili), there is a disdainful chilliness about Caron as if she is hiding her feelings from the camera. (In retrospect, it may be that she simply was not comfortable making these films.) While her reserve melts whenever she moves to music, the Roland Petit choreography is not much of a sendoff to her in the second-rate The Glass Slipper and Daddy Long Legs. Still, an ebullient delight, Lili characterizes the actress’s reticence as diffidence and her cool composure as innocence vanquishing the hard heart of sophistication. Bringing immense conviction to the scenes where she converses with poupées, Caron speaks to the inner child in us all—no more meaty than the human actors she contends with such as Mel Ferrer are more wooden than the puppets.

In her nonmusicals, Caron was forced to be a one-woman Gallic goodwill ambassador, and you can feel her resentment at having to typify all things French. Since MGM already limited her range, she was probably wise to nix Les Girls, just one more nail in the coffin of the movie musical. Salvation was at hand when the cinema’s premiere continental charmer Audrey Hepburn rejected Gigi, for which Caron was ideally suited. Enchanting as the child raised to be a courtesan, she was bewitching as the adult who scandalizes her instructors by preferring l’amour to family traditions of impropriety. At the other end of the soignée scale came the box-office smash Fanny which scuttled the gorgeous Harold Rome score except for the rapturous title theme, failed to come within hailing distance of the Pagnol original, and straitjacketed Caron into embodying the soul of France for one final occasion. Since then, her forays into art films have been as unrewarding as sporadic returns to Hollywood, where her strenuous comedy technique went down for the count with A Very Special Favor and Promise Her Anything. The one bright note of the post-MGM period came with the kitchen-sink soap opera, The L-Shaped Room, for which she earned an Oscar bid for conveying the anguish of an unwed mother. This film, which could be dubbed, “The Death of Innocence” benefited greatly from a supporting cast of consummate British players and from Caron’s insight into the plight of an abandoned foreigner.

One wishes late-career highlights such as Il padre di famiglia and Dangerous Moves had offset pretentious misfires and commercial duds. Fortunately, in 1995, Caron graced a little-seen masterwork Funny Bones. It is exactly the kind of personal, offbeat film that she had always championed. Protecting her psychologically damaged son from the unkindness of strangers or vanquishing a crooked cop who mistakes her womanliness for softness, Caron contributed significantly to the film’s impact. Looking more lovely than ever, Caron can confidently expect further adventures in cinematic artistry, foreshadowed by her variegated and supremely confident work in Funny Bones.

—Robert Pardi

CARRADINE, John

Nationality: American. Born: Richmond Reed Carradine in New York City, 5 February 1906. Education: Christ Church School, Kingston, New York; Graphic Art School; Episcopal Academy, Philadelphia. Family: Married 1) Ardanelle Cosner, 1935 (divorced 1944), sons: Bruce John and the actor John Arthur (David); 2) Sonia Sorel, 1945 (divorced 1955), sons: Christopher, John, and the actors Keith Ian and Robert Reed; 3) Doris Rich, 1957 (died 1971); 4) Emily Cisneros, 1975. Career: Pre-1925—traveled throughout the South working as sketch artist; 1925—stage debut in Camille in New Orleans; then joined Shakespearean stock company; 1927–30—appeared in stage productions in Los Angeles; 1930—film debut using professional name Peter Richmond in Tol’able David; also appeared as John Peter Richmond until 1935; 1936—changed name to John Carradine after signing contract with 20th Century-Fox; c. 1930s-60s—acted on stage between film assignments; 1940s—began freelancing for various studios; 1950—host of TV series The Trap; 1953–54—in TV series Greatest Heroes of the Bible. Died: In Milan, 27 November 1988.

Films as Actor:

1930 Tol’able David (Blystone) (as Buzzard)
1931 Heaven on Earth (Mack) (as Chicken Sam); Bright Lights (Curtiz)
1932 The Sign of the Cross (DeMille); Forgotten Commandments (Gasnier and Schorr)
1933 The Invisible Man (Whale); This Day and Age (DeMille); The Story of Temple Drake (Roberts) (as trial spectator); To the Last Man (Hathaway) (as Peteraron)
1934 The Black Cat (Ulmer) (as member of cult); Cleopatra (DeMille) (as Roman citizen); The Meanest Gal in Town (Mack)
1935 The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo (Roberts); Alias Mary Dow (Neumann); Les Misérables (Boleslawski); The Crusades (DeMille); The Bride of Frankenstein (Whale) (as Woodsman); Clive of India (Boleslawski); She Gets Her Man (Nigh); Cardinal Richelieu (Lee); Bad Boy (Blystone); Transient Lady (False Witness) (Buzzell)
1936 Anything Goes (Tops Is the Limit) (Milestone); Captain January (Butler); The Prisoner of Shark Island (John Ford) (as Sgt. Rankin); Under Two Flags (Lloyd) (as Cafard); White Fang (Butler) (as Beauty Smith); Ramona (King) (as Jim Farrar); Dimples (Seiter) (as Richards); Mary of Scotland (John Ford) (as David Rizzio); Daniel Boone (Howard) (as Simon Girty); Winter (Santell) (as Romagna); The Garden of Allah (Boleslawski); A Message to Garcia (Marshall) (as voice of President McKinley); Half Angel (Lanfield); Laughing at Trouble (Laughing at Death) (Strayer)
1937 Nancy Steele Is Missing (Marshall) (as Harry Wilkins); Danger—Love at Work (Preminger) (as Herbert Pemberton); This Is My Affair (His Affair) (Seiter) (as Ed); Love under Fire (Marshall) (as Captain Delmar); Thank You, Mr. Moto (Foster) (as Pereira); Captains Courageous (Fleming) (as Long Jack); The Last Gangster (Ludwig) (as Caspar); The Hurricane (John Ford); Ali Baba Goes to Town (Butler) (as Ishak)
1938 International Settlement (Forde) (as Murdoch); Four Men and a Prayer (John Ford) (as Gen. Adolfo Arturo Sebastian); I’ll Give a Million (Walter Lang) (as Kopelpeck); Kentucky Moonshine (Four Men and a Girl) (Butler) (as Reef Hatfield); Kidnapped (Werker) (as Gordon); Alexander’s Ragtime Band (King) (as cockpit); Gateway (Werker); Submarine Patrol (Ford) (McAllison); Of Human Hearts (Brown) (as Abraham Lincoln)
1939 Jesse James (King) (as Bob Ford); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Lanfield) (as Barryman); Frontier Marshal (Dwan) (as Ben Carter); Drums along the Mohawk (John Ford) (as Caldwell); The Three Musketeers (The Singing Musketeer) (Dwan) (as Naveau); Stagecoach (Ford) (as Hatfield); Captain Fury (Roach) (as Coughly); Five Came Back (Farrow) (as Crimp); Mr. Moto’s Last Warning (Foster) (as Danforth)
1940 The Grapes of Wrath (John Ford) (as Jim Casey); The Return of Frank James (Fritz Lang) (as Bob Ford); Brigham Young—Frontiersman (Brigham Young) (Hathaway) (as Porter Rockwell); Chad Hanna (King) (as Bisbee)
1941 Western Union (Fritz Lang) (as Murdoch); Blood and Sand (Mamoulian) (as El Nacional); Man Hunt (Fritz Lang) (as Mr. Jones); Swamp Water (The Man Who Came Back) (Renoir) (as Jesse Wick)
1942 Whispering Ghosts (Werker) (as “Long Jack”/“Norbert”); Son of Fury (Cromwell) (as Caleb Green); Northwest Rangers (Newman) (as Martin Caswell); Reunion (Reunion in France); Mademoiselle France (Dassin) (as Ulrich Windler); Information Please no. 5 (short) (as guest panelist)
1943 Silver Spurs (Kane); Captive Wild Woman (Dmytryk) (as Dr. Walters); Hitler’s Madman (Hitler’s Hangman) (Sirk) (as Heydrich); I Escaped from the Gestapo (No Escape) (Young); The Isle of Forgotten Sins (Ulmer)
1944 The Mummy’s Ghost (LeBorg); Barbary Coast Gent (Del Ruth) (as Duke Clean); The Adventures of Mark Twain (Rapper) (as Bret Harte); The Black Parachute (Landers); The Invisible Man’s Revenge (Beebe) (as Dr. Drury); The Return of the Ape Man (Rosen); Voodoo Man (Beaudine) (as Job); Alaska (Archainbaud); House of Frankenstein (Kenton) (as Dracula); Waterfront (Sekely); Gangway for Tomorrow (Auer); Revenge of the Zombies (The Corpse Vanished) (Sekely); Bluebeard (Ulmer) (title role)
1945 House of Dracula (Kenton) (as Dracula); Fallen Angel (Preminger); Captain Kidd (Lee) (as Orange Povey); It’s in the Bag (The Fifth Chair) (Wallace) (as Pike)
1946 Down Missouri Way (Berne) (as Thorndyke Dunning); The Face of Marble (Beaudine)
1947 The Private Affairs of Bel Ami (Lewin) (as Charles Forestier)
1949 C-Man (Lerner) (as Doc Spencer)
1954 Thunder Pass (McDonald) (as Bergstrom); Casanova's Big Night (McLeod) (as Forelli); Johnny Guitar (Nicholas Ray) (as Old Tom); The Egyptian (Curtiz)
1955 Stranger on Horseback (Jacques Tourneur); Desert Sands (Selandier) (as Arab Jala); The Kentuckian (Lancaster) (as Fletcher)
1956 The Female Jungle (Ve Sota); The Black Sheep (Dr. Cadman’s Secret) (LeBorg) (as Borg); The Ten Commandments (DeMille) (as Aaron); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Col. Proctor Stamp); Hidden Guns (Gunnaway) (as Snake Harding); The Court Jester (Panama and Frank); Dark Venture (Trevlac, i.e. John Calvert)
1957 The Unearthly (Peters); Half Human (Yujin Yukitoko) (Honda and Crane); Hell Ship Mutiny (Sholem and Williams) (as Malone); The True Story of Jesse James (Nicholas Ray) (as Rev. Bailey); The Story of Mankind (Allen) (as Pharaoh Khufu)
1958 The Proud Rebel (Curtiz); The Last Hurrah (Ford) (as Amos Force); Showdown at Boot Hill (Fowler, Jr.) (as Doc Webby)
1959 The Oregon Trail (Fowler, Jr.) (as Zachariah); The Cosmic Man (Greene); Invisible Invaders (Cahn)
1960 The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Curtiz); Tarzan the Magnificent (Day); Sex Kittens Go to College (Zugsmith); The Incredible Petrified World (Warren)
1962 Invasion of the Animal People (Terror in the Midnight Sun) (Vogel and Warren); The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance (Ford) (as Major Cassius Starbuckle)
1964 The Patsy (Lewis) (as Bruce Alden); Cheyenne Autumn (John Ford) (as Major Jeff Blair); Curse of the Stone Hand (Warren and Schlieppe)
1965 House of the Black Death (Blood of the Man Devil; Night of the Beast) (Daniels and LeBorg); The Wizard of Mars (Hewitt); Something for Mrs. Gibbs (Van Praag—advertising short)
1966 Billy the Kid vs. Dracula (Beaudine) (as Dracula); Night Train to Mendoza Fine (Francis); Broken Sabre (McEvey); Munster, Go Home! (Bellamy) (as Cruijskink); The Emperor’s New Clothes (Clark—unreleased)
1967 The Hostage (Doughten) (as Otis Lovelace); Hillbillys in a Haunted House (Yarbrough); Dr. Terrors Gallery of Horrors (The Blood Suckers; Gallery of Horror; Return from the Past) (Hewitt) (as narrator and warlock in one ep.); La Senora Muerte (Mrs. Death; The Death Woman) (Salvador)
1968 They Ran for Their Lives (Payne) (as Laslow); Pacto diabolico (Pact with the Devil) (Salvador); The Astro-Zombies (Mikels); Autopsia de un fantasma (Autopsy on a Ghost) (Rodriguez) (as Satan); The Helicopter Spies (Sagal—for TV); Genesis (Genesis I) (organized by R. B. Childs; compilation film) (as narrator)
1969 Blood of Dracula’s Castle (Adamson and Hewitt) (as George); The Good Guys and the Bad Guys (Kennedy); The Trouble with Girls (Tewksbury); Daughter of the Mind (Grauman—for TV); Dracula vs. Frankenstein (The Blood Seekers; Blood of Frankenstein) (Adamson); Las vampiras (The Vampires) (Curiel)
1970 The Mc Masters (Kjellin); Myra Breckinridge (Same); Hell’s Bloody Devils (The Fakers; Szwastika Savages; Operation M; Smashing the Crime Syndicate) (Adamson); Crowhaven Farm (Grauman—for TV); Cain’s Cathroats (Cain’s Way; Justice Cain) (Osborne) (as Preacher Sims); Blood of the Iron Maiden (Trip to Terror; Is This Trip Really Necessary?) (Benoit); Horror of the Blood Monsters (The Flesh Creatures; Flesh Creatures of the Red Planet; Creatures of the Prehistoric Planet; Creatures of the Red Planet; Vampire Men of the Lost Planet) (Adamson); Five Bloody Graves (The Lonely Man; Five Bloody Days to Tombstone; Gun Riders) (Adamson)
1971 Shinbone Alley (Wilson and Detiege—animated feature) (as voice); The Seven Minutes (Meyer)
1972 Silent Night, Bloody Night (Zora; Night of the Full Dark Moon) (Gershuny); Terror in the Wax Museum (Fenady); Bad Charleston Charlie (Nagy); Hex (Garen); Superchick (Forsyth) (as Igor Smith); House of Dracula’s Daughter (Hessler); One Million A.D. (Baron—unreleased); The Cat Creature (Harrington—for TV); The Night Strangler (Curtis—for TV); Legacy of Blood (Monson); The Gatling Gun (Gordon—produced 1969 as King Gun); Bigfoot (Slater)
1973 The House of the Seven Corpses (Harrison); Moonchild (Gadney—produced 1972) (as ‘The Walker’)
1975 Mary, Mary, Bloody Mary (Mocetuzma); Stowaway to the Moon (McLaglen—for TV) (as Jacob Avril)
1976 Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner); Crash (Band); The Killer Inside Me (Kennedy); The Shootist (Siegel) (as Hezekiah Beckum); The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as studio tour guide); Death at Love House (The Shrine of Lorna Love) (Swackhammer—for TV) (as Conan Carroll)
1977 The Sentinel (Winner); Shock Waves (Death Corps; Almost Human) (Weiderhorn); The White Buffalo (Thompson) (as Amos Briggs); Golden Rendezvous (Lazarus); Tail Gunner Joe (Taylor—for TV); The Christmas Coal Mine Miracle (Christmas Miracle in Caulfield, U.S.A.) (Taylor—for TV); Satan’s Cheerleaders (Clark); Journey into the Beyond (Olsen) (as narrator); The Lady and the Lynching; Frankenstein Island (Warren) (as Dr. Frankenstein)
1978 Sunset Cove (Save Our Beach) (Adamson) (as Judge Winslow); Vampire Hookers (Santiago); The Bees (Zacharias) (as Dr. Sigmund Hummel)
1979 Monster (Monster: The Legend That Became a Terror) (Hartford); The Seekers (Hayers—for TV); Teheran Incident
Carradine began acting in films in the early 1930s using the name John Peter Richmond. He found fairly steady work as a bit player with such directors as Cecil B. DeMille (The Sign of the Cross, This Day and Age, Cleopatra) and James Whale (The Bride of Frankenstein, The Invisible Man). In 1936, using the name John Carradine, he became a Fox contract player. That same year Carradine appeared in John Ford’s The Prisoner of Shark Island. (Carradine eventually appeared in ten films directed by John Ford, including Stagecoach, The Grapes of Wrath, and The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance.) Carradine received excellent notices for his performance as a prison guard in The Prisoner of Shark Island, which led to villainous roles in other films.

In addition to his reputation as a film “bad guy” Carradine also became known for his roles in cheap horror pictures. These films were produced very quickly and so there are many of them among Carradine’s credits. In 1945 he appeared in two low-budget films for Universal, House of Frankenstein and House of Dracula, which marked the first times that Carradine played a vampire. His subsequent horror films, with titles like The Incredible Petrified World and Billy the Kid vs. Dracula, did not carry much credibility, but this kind of film kept Carradine employed for a good number of years. Carradine became so well known for playing the “mad scientist” in low-budget horror films that he was enlisted to do a parody of himself in a segment of Woody Allen’s Everything You Always Wanted to Know about Sex but Were Afraid to Ask. With such an amazingly diverse list of film credits, it is not greatly surprising that John Carradine became one of the most recognizable character actors on the American screen.

—Linda J. Obalil

The film career of John Carradine was one of the longest and most prolific in Hollywood. He claimed to have appeared in over 400 films and the range of his roles varies widely. Although he made a successful career for himself in films, Carradine’s first love was always the theater, particularly Shakespeare. His training in theater is apparent in his film work, creating “larger than life” characters with exaggerated gestures and a booming voice.

See also: Alec Guinness; Christopher Lee; Vincent Price.
a motion picture-comedy/musical, and MTV Movie Award, best comedic performance, all 1998, for Liar Liar; Golden Globe Award, best performance by an actor in a motion picture-drama, 1999, for The Truman Show; Golden Globe Award, best performance by an actor in a motion picture-drama, 2000, for Man on the Moon; ShoWest Award, for Male Star of the Year, 2000. Address: United Talent Agency, 9560 Wilshire Boulevard, 5th Floor, Beverly Hills, CA 90212–2401, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1983  All in Good Taste (Kramreither); Copper Mountain (Mitchell) (as Bobby Todd); Introducing . . . Janet (Rubberface) (Salzman and Yates) (as Tony Moroni)
1984  Finders Keepers (Lester) (as Lane Biddlecoff)
1985  Once Bitten (Storm) (as Mark Kendall)
1986  Peggy Sue Got Married (Coppola) (as Walter Getz)
1988  The Dead Pool (Van Horn) (as Johnny Squares) (credited as James Carrey)

1989  Pink Cadillac (Van Horn) (as Lounge entertainer) (credited as James Carrey); Earth Girls Are Easy (Temple) (as Wiploc); Mike Hammer: Murder Takes All (Nicolella—for TV) (as Brad Peters)
1991  High Strung (Nygard) (as Death [uncredited])
1992  Doing Time on Maple Drive (Olin—for TV) (as Tim)
1994  Dumb and Dumber (Farrelly) (as Lloyd Christmas); The Mask (Russell) (as Stanley Ipkiss and The Mask); Ace Ventura: Pet Detective (Shadyac) (as Ace Ventura, + co-sc)
1995  Ace Ventura: When Nature Calls (Oedekerk) (as Ace Ventura); Batman Forever, (Schumacher) (as The Riddler/Edward Nygma)
1996  The Cable Guy (Stiller) (as Chip Douglas)
1997  Liar Liar (Shadyac) (as Fletcher Reede)
1998  Simon Birch (Johnson) (as Adult Joe Wentworth); The Truman Show (Weir) (as Truman Burbank)
1999  Man on the Moon (Forman) (as Andy Kaufman)
2000  Me, Myself and Irene (Farrelly and Farrelly) (as Charlie Baileygates and Hank); How the Grinch Stole Christmas (Howard) (as The Grinch)
Publications

On CARREY: articles—

Everschor, Franz, “Jim Carrey: Superstar,” in Film Dienst (Cologne), vol. 48, no. 16, 1 August 1995.

* * *

Jim Carrey combined the rubber-faced rubber-boned antics of a Jerry Lewis with the zany improvisational style of a Robin Williams (with a heavy dash of Williams’s acting ability thrown in) to make some of the most successful and entertaining comedies of the 1990s and to launch him into the superstar stratosphere—Carrey becoming the first actor to break the $20-million-per-film wage barrier.

His beginnings could not have been humbler. His father, a professional musician, sold his saxophone to pay his wife’s hospital bills, and at various points the family lived in a Volkswagen camper and in a tent. After years as the resident white guy on television’s enormously popular In Living Color, he took on the serious role of a son detective designed to make outrageous fun of leading men. In Groundhog Day, with his backed-into-a-corner lawyer finally forced to win a case by actually using his brain instead of his usual bag of knee-jerk, lawyerly tricks. And Carrey’s a good enough actor to make you believe the “I love my son” ending.

The Truman Show (1998) was considered by most to be Carrey’s breakthrough performance. In it, he plays Truman Burbank, the unwitting star of a 24-hour-a-day real-life drama unfolding on the world’s largest movie set. As an “everyman,” Carrey acts without his manic side, in what Corliss called “a performance of profound charm, innocence, vulnerability and pain.” Many predicted Carrey would win an Oscar for his performance, but the award eluded him. Similar predictions for an Oscar returned when critics saw Carrey’s uncanny performance of Andy Kaufman in Milos Forman’s Man on the Moon (1999). Many felt he was again snubbed when Carrey did not win the Oscar. Kaufman, the groundbreaking comedian/performance artist who died in 1984, was one of Carrey’s inspirations, and in the film Carrey throws himself into each of Kaufman’s diverse personae—the wide-eyed Foreign Man, the sneering wrestler of women, the observant Tony Clifton—with such conviction that those who actually knew Kaufman were completely spoofed. Janet Maslin in the New York Times called Carrey’s performance “an electrifying homage,” while Newsweek claimed, “Jim Carrey may be a better Andy Kaufman than Andy Kaufman was,” and Time said it was very possibly the best work Carrey had ever done. Should Academy members ever finally realize that great comedic talent is as rare as great dramatic talent, perhaps Carrey will one day get his due, but in the meantime at least he should be happy with the compensation.

—Bob Sullivan

CARROLL, Madeleine

Madeleine Carroll with Dick Powell in On the Avenue

Broadway in Goodbye, My Fancy. Awards: Legion of Honor (France); United States Medal of Freedom. Died: In Marbella, Spain, 2 October 1987.

Films as Actress:

- 1928 The Guns of Loos (Hill) (as Diana Cheswick); What Money Can Buy (Greenwood) (as Rhoda Pearson); The First Born (Mander) (as Lady Madeleine Boycott)
- 1929 The Crooked Billet (Brunel) (as Joan Easton); The American Prisoner (Bentley) (as Grace Malherb); Atlantic (Dupont) (as Monica)
- 1930 The ‘W’ Plan (Saville) (as Rosa Hartmann); Young Woodley (Bentley) (as Laura Simmons); French Leave (Raymond) (as Dorothy Glenister); Escape (Dean) (as Dora); The School for Scandal (Elvey) (as Lady Teazle); Kissing Cup’s Race (Knight) (as Lady Molly Adair)
- 1931 Madame Guillotine (Fogwell) (as Lucille de Choisigne); Fascination (Mander) (as Gwenda Farrell); The Written Law (Fogwell) (as Lady Margaret Rochester)
- 1933 Sleeping Car (Litvak) (as Anne); I Was a Spy (Saville) (as Marthe Nockhaert)
- 1934 The World Moves On (Ford)
- 1935 The Dictator (Saville and Santell) (as Caroline Struensee); The 39 Steps (Hitchcock) (as Pamela)
- 1936 The Story of Papworth (charity appeal) (as guest); The Secret Agent (Hitchcock) (as Elsa); The Case against Mrs. Ames (Seiter); The General Died at Dawn (Milestone); Lloyds of London (King)
- 1937 On the Avenue (Del Ruth); It’s All Yours (Nugent); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell)
- 1938 Blockade (Dieterle)
- 1939 Cafe Society (Griffith); Honeymoon in Bali (Griffith); Husbands or Lovers (Griffith)
- 1940 My Son, My Son! (Charles Vidor); Safari (Griffith); Northwest Mounted Police (DeMille)
- 1941 Virginia (Griffith); One Night in Lisbon (Griffith); Bahama Passage (Griffith)
- 1942 My Favorite Blonde (Lanfield)
- 1946 La Petite Republique (Vicas)
1947 White Cradle Inn (High Fury) (French) (as Magda)
1948 Don’t Trust Your Husband (An Innocent Affair) (Bacon)
1949 The Fan (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (Preminger)

Publications

On CARROLL: articles—

Roberts, B., ‘Madeleine Carroll: Courage, Brains, and Beauty,’ Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), no. 245, November 1995.

* * *

Although her primary fame was for her unusually refined blonde good looks, Madeleine Carroll was nonetheless a capable film actress. Her current reputation is based on her work with Alfred Hitchcock (notably in The 39 Steps and The Secret Agent). These were by no means the only worthwhile films she made; she was one Hollywood import who thrived on its soil. The highlights of her Hollywood years were The General Died at Dawn and the fanciful romantic epic The Prisoner of Zenda in which she played opposite Ronald Colman.

She began in the theater after attending the University of Birmingham, and entered the British film scene in the late 1920s. Gaumont British traded her for Warner Baxter, in an arrangement with 20th Century-Fox, and it was thus that she made her first American film, The World Moves On (John Ford, 1934). She returned to England for her work with Hitchcock, and finally returned to America under contract to Walter Wanger. She ended up at Paramount, and found her niche as a comedienne. Although her films were rather lackluster, her restrained and subtle performances won her a loyal following, and she remained active until the late 1940s. Her later films included a version of Oscar Wilde’s Lady Windermere’s Fan (The Fan) and a string of comedies in which she was teamed with Fred MacMurray. She also had a huge stage success in the early 1950s with Garson Kanin’s Goodbye, My Fancy.

As a film actress, Carroll was notable for her underplaying, her lack of posturing or reliance on mannerism. This was unusual in an era when such qualities were more common than they are now, and perhaps explains her enduring popularity among film enthusiasts.

—Joseph Arkins

---

CERVI, Gino

Films as Actor:

1932 L’armata assura (Righelli)
1933 T’améro sempre (Camerini)
1934 Frontiere (Meano and Caraphi)
1935 Aldebaran (Blasetti) (as Camado Valeri); Amore (Bragaglia) (as Paolo)
1936 I due sergenti (Guazzoni)
1937 Ettore Fieramosca (Blasetti); Gli uomini non sono ingrati (Brignone); L’argine (d’Errico) (as Zagni)
1938 I figli del marchese Lucera (Palermi); Inventiamo l’amore (Mastrocinque) (as Carlo); Voglio vivere con Letizia (Mastrocinque)
1940 La peccatrice (Palermi) (as Alberto); Un’avventura di Salvator Rosa (Blasetti) (as Salvator Rosa); Melodie eterne (Et cabinets Melodies) (Gallone) (as Mozart); Una romantica avventura (Camerini); La corona di ferro (The Iron Crown) (Blasetti) (as King Sedemondo)
1941 I promessi sposi (Father Christopher’s Prayer; The Spirit and the Flesh) (Camerini) (as Renzo); La regina di Navarra (Gallone) (as Charles V); Il sogno di tutti (Biancoli and Kisch)
1942 L’ultimo addio (Cerio) (as Paolo); Acque di primavera (Malasomas); Don Cesare di Bazan (Feda) (as Don Cesare); Gente dell’aria (Pratelli); Quattro passi fra le nuvole (Four Steps in the Clouds) (Blasetti); Quarta pagina (Manzari)
1943 Tristi amori (Gallone); Che distinta famiglia (M. Bonnard); T’améro sempre (Camerini); La locandiera (Chiarini) (as the Poet); Nessuno torna indietro (Blasetti)
1944 Quartetto Pazzo (Salvini); Sensa famiglia (Ferroni); Vivere ancora (Gianini)
1945 Lo sbaglio di essere vivo (My Widow and I) (Bragaglia); Le miserie del signor Travet (His Young Wife) (Soldati)
1946 Malia (Amato); Umanità (Bragaglia); Un uomo ritorna (Revenge) (Neufeld); Aquila nera (Feda)
1947 L’angelo e il diavolo (Camerini); Cronaca nera (Bianchi); Daniele Cortis (Soldati); Furia (Alessandrini)
1948 I miserabili (Les Miserables) (Feda) (as Jean Valjean); La signora della camelie (Bardini); Anna Karenina (Duvivier) (as Enrico)
1949 Gagliermo Tell (William Tell) (Pastino); Yvonne la nuit (Amato); La fiamma che non si spegne (Cottafavi); Fabiola (Blasetti); La passione secondo San Matteo (Marischka); La sposa non puo attendere (Franciolini)
1950 Donne senza nome (Women without Names) (Radvanj); Il cielo è rosso (Gora); La scolgeria del peccato (Montero); Sigillo rosso (Calzavara); Il caino del Piave (Bianchi)
1951 Cristo proibito (Forbidden Christ; Strange Deception) (Malaparte); Cameriera bella presenza offrersi (Pastini); O.K. Nerone (O.K. Nero) (Soldati) (as Nero)
1952 Le Petit Monde de Don Camillo (The Little World of Don Camillo) (Duvivier) (as Peppone); Tre storie proibite (Three Forbidden Stories) (Genina); Moglie per una notte (Wife for a Night) (Camerini); La regina di Saba (The Queen of Sheba) (Francisci) (as Solomon); La Dame aux camélias (Bernard)
For several decades, Gino Cervi was the leading character actor in Italy and certainly one of the pillars of the industry. He began as a stage actor in 1924; a few years later he made his screen debut in a film on the Air Force. Immediately demonstrating his versatility, he starred in Camerini’s melancholic love story Tamerò sempre. He was one of Alessandro Blasetti’s favorite actors, providing a commanding presence in the historical epics Ettore Fieramosca, Un’avventura di Salvator Rosa, and La corona di ferro. Blasetti recognized Cervi’s range and cast him in the role of the plain, downtrodden traveling salesman who aids an unwed mother in Four Steps in the Clouds, the first of Cervi’s films to be shown widely outside Italy.

His performance in one scene of a little-known film, La Perceatrice, is a tour de force that represents Cervi’s combination of technical virtuosity and naturalness. He plays a cad living in a small town; a person he has victimized, the “sinner” of the title, has returned to the town after several years and watches him eating alone in a restaurant. In this scene he must express the cad’s entire character—his disregard for others, his lack of conscience, his pomposity—simply by eating his meal.

After the war, he continued to give credence to Italian costume dramas and historical epics but reached an international audience through his portrayal of Peppone, the Communist mayor in Giovanni Guareschi’s series of novels about Don Camillo. Cervi played the role in Duvivier’s first version of the story in 1952 and in the many sequels. His resonant voice enabled him to work as a dubber (he dubbed Olivier’s voice for the Italian versions of his Shakespeare films) and achieve considerable success on stage. For Italian television, he played Georges Simenon’s Inspector Maigret in a series of productions.

—Elaine Mancini

CHAN, Jackie

Films as Actor: (films as child actor not included)

1971 Little Tiger from Canton
1973 Enter the Dragon (The Deadly Three) (Clouse)
Jackie Chan in Supercop

1975  Countdown in Kung Fu (Hand of Death) (Woo)
1976  Xin Ching-Wu Men (New Fist of Fury) (Lo Wei) (as Ai Long); Shaolin Wooden Men (36 Wooden Men; Shaolin Chamber of Death) (Ch’en Chih-Hua and Lo Wei); The Killer Meteors (Lo Wei)
1977  Snake and Crane Arts of Shaolin (Ch’en Chih-Hua)
1978  To Kill with Intrigue (Lo Wei); Magnificent Bodyguards (Lo Wei); Snake in the Eagle’s Shadow (The Eagle’s Shadow) (Yuen Woo-ping); Spiritual Kung-Fu (Karate Ghostbuster) (Lo Wei)
1979  Dragon Fist (In Eagle Dragon Fist) (Lo Wei); Drunken Master (Drunken Monkey in a Tiger’s Eye; The Story of Drunken Master) (Yuen Woo-ping) (as Huang Fei-hong)
1980  The Big Brawl (Battle Creek Brawl) (Clouse) (as Jerry); Half a Loaf of Kung Fu (Ch’en Chi-Hua) (+ martial arts director)
1981  The Cannonball Run (Needham) (as Subaru driver no. 1); Snake Fist Fighter
1983  Winners and Sinners (Samo Hung); The Fearless Hyena: Part 2 (Chuen Chan)
1984  Cannonball Run 2 (Needham) (as Jackie); Meals on Wheels (Samo Hung); Eagle’s Shadow (Yuen Woo-ping)
1985  My Lucky Stars (Samo Hung) (as Muscles); Twinkle, Twinkle, Lucky Stars (Samo Hung); First Mission; The Protector (Glickenhaus) (as Billy Wong); Ninja Thunderbolt (Ho)
1986  Heart of the Dragon (The First Mission) (Samo Hung)
1987  Dragons Forever (Samo Hung); Fist of Death
1990  The Deadliest Art: The Best of the Martial Arts Films (Weintraub—compilation)

1992  City Hunter (Jing Wong) (as Ryu Saeba); Supercop: Police Story III (Stanley Tong) (as Chan Chia-chu); Twin Dragons (Ringo Lam and Hark Tsui) (as John Ma/Boomer)
1993  Police Story 4: Project S (Once a Cop; Project S; Supercop 2) (Stanley Tong); Crime Story (Kirk Wong) (as Inspector Eddie Chan)
1995  Hong Faan Kui (Rumble in the Bronx) (Stanley Tong) (as Ah Keung, + martial arts director); Thunderbolt
1996  Rumble in the Bronx (Tong) (as Keung); Supercop 3 (Tong) (as Detective Kevin Chan/Fu Sheng)
1998  Rush Hour (Ratner) (as Detective Inspector Lee)
1999  Gorgeous (Kok) (as C.N. Chan); The King of Comedy (Chow, Lee); Teijin sinrenlei (Chan)
2000  Shanghai Noon (Dey) (as Chong Wang)

Films as Actor and Director:

1979  Siukan gwaisiu (The Fearless Hyena) (co-d)
1980  Sidai cheutma (The Young Master) (+ co-sc)
1982  Lung siuye (Dragon Lord; Young Master in Love) (+ co-sc, martial arts choreographer)
1983  A gaiwak (Project A) (as Dragon Ma, + co-sc)
1985  Gingchat gusi (Police Story; Police Force; Jackie Chan’s Police Story; Jackie Chan’s Police Force) (+ co-sc)
1986  Lungging fudai (The Armour of God) (+ co-sc)
1987  A gaiwatsuktsap (Project A: Part II) (+ co-sc)
1988  Gingchat gusi tsuktsap (Police Story Part II) (+ co-sc)
1989  Keitsik (Miracle; Black Dragon; Miracles: The Canton Godfather; Mr. Canton and Lady Rose) (as Kuo Cheng-wah/Mr. Canton, + co-sc)
1990  Lungging fudai tsuktsap (The Armour of God II: Operation Condor) (as Jackie/“Condor,’’ + sc); Island on Fire (Island of Fire; The Prisoner)
1994  Tsui Kun II (Drunken Master II) (as Huang Fei-hong)

Publications

By CHAN: articles—

Interview with Michael Kitson, in Cinema Papers (Abbotsford), June 1996.

On CHAN: book—

On CHAN: articles—

Film Review (London), November 1980.
Kehr, Dave, “‘Chan Can Do,’” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1988.

“Hong Kong Focus,” in London Film Festival Programme, 1990.

Jackie Chan emerged out of the ranks of martial arts stuntmen and bit players in the mid-1970s as the most talented of those hoping for the international megastardom Bruce Lee had achieved before his death in 1973. In 1976, Lo Wei introduced Chan in a sequel to one of Lee’s more popular films, Fist of Fury (The Chinese Connection), called New Fist of Fury, in which Chan imitates Lee’s fighting style for the most part. Throughout his career, Chan has been haunted by comparisons with Lee. Despite his huge popularity in Asia, evidenced by the box-office records films such as Police Story and Project A: Part II have broken, Chan still aspires to break into the European and American market the way Lee was able to with his Enter the Dragon. To date, Chan’s English-language vehicles, The Big Brawl and The Protector, have failed to appeal to most audiences in the West, and Chan is perhaps still most often recognized outside of Asia from his cameo role as the comic Chinese racer in The Cannonball Run series. In 1995, he makes another attempt at winning the American audience with Rumble in the Bronx, filmed “on location” in Vancouver. Although Chan has enjoyed a certain amount of critical attention since his films have been hailed at several international festivals as artistic “masterpieces,” popular appeal, outside the Asian community, eludes him.

Comparisons to Lee and failure to win over the Western mass audience are both understandable and unfortunate. Although publicized as a “new Bruce Lee” and encouraged to imitate Lee very early in his film career, Chan, in fact, can best be appreciated as Lee’s polar opposite in terms of performance persona and martial arts style. Whereas Lee was fascinated by Western boxing, Philippine stick fighting, and European fencing, which all became part of his very eclectic style, Chan has stuck more to the acrobatic movements associated with the traditional Chinese opera he studied as a young man. A significant part of this involves comic pantomime, and, unlike the more serious and intense Lee, who only occasionally threw in a humorous bit for comic relief, Chan excels at the lighter aspects of the operatic tradition in which his martial skills are rooted. This gift for both acrobatics and comedy has led some critics to compare Chan to Harold Lloyd or Buster Keaton. Conscious of the comparison, Chan has recreated Lloyd’s daredevil clock tower stunt and Keaton’s infamous falling house stunt in his own films (Project A: Parts I and II). Like his silent Hollywood film heroes, Chan prides himself on doing his own stunts, and he has had a number of brushes with death as a result (the most serious a head injury when filming Armour of God). In the closing credits of his more recent films, outtakes show the bloody results of failed stunts, adding an element of machismo to his star persona missing from the insouciant characters he typically portrays.

With his wide, almost bulbous nose, sparkling eyes and mischievous smile, Chan’s boyish ebullience and remarkable physical prowess seem best put to use in the costume martial arts comedies he made in the late 1970s and early 1980s. During this phase of his career, Chan began to choreograph his own fighting, act as martial arts instructor, and, eventually, direct his own features. As a result, a characteristic Chan star persona really began to emerge, displaying Chan’s acrobatic and martial skills to their best advantage.

In most of these films, Chan plays reluctant students who excel at kung fu in spite of themselves. With the exception of Dragon Lord, they all feature scenes that display Chan’s physical prowess in training as well as combat. The Chan character is repeatedly tortured by eccentric masters (exemplified by the “drunken master” played by Simon Yuen in Drunken Master and Snake in the Eagle’s Shadow, who casually drink or smoke while Chan sweats blood and plots to escape from kung-fu practice. Set in the past, all these films make use of traditional costumes and weaponry as well as such Chinese arts as lion dancing and calligraphy, and allude to (indeed mildly satirize) established Chinese customs and institutions. In Drunken Master, for example, Chan portrays a young, impudent and impulsive Huang Fei-hong, in sharp contrast to Jet Li’s more sober portrayal of the same folk hero in the Once upon a Time in China series. Scenes with expressly Chinese content, however, might explain the cool reception Chan has been given outside the Asian community in the West.

Chan’s most recent films mark a significant break with his earlier successes. These later films are set in the present or the more recent past. Unlike the earlier films which delight in Chinese traditions, archaic weaponry, and the arcane aspects of Chinese kung fu, these films have a more Western orientation with gun play, automobile chases, shopping malls, cops, and gangsters replacing rival kung-fu schools, drunken masters, and operatic swordplay. Although Chan continues to play an affable hero, more attention is given to the action-adventure aspects of the plot and to the spectacular, often noncombative stunts than to Chinese martial artistry or acrobatics. No longer the troublesome pupil, Chan has matured into Asia’s best-loved comic action hero.

With his own production unit at Hong Kong’s Golden Harvest studios, Chan has artistic and a great deal of economic control over his current projects. More than just a kung-fu superstar, Chan has also become a shrewd film producer and promoter. His recent films place Hong Kong and its citizens on the world stage, as players in their own right, with an identity separate from mainland China. In City Hunter, Chan plays a Japanese detective, partly as a tribute to his loyal Japanese fans and partly as a means of looking beyond the confines of Hong Kong. As Rumble in the Bronx brings him back to North America, Chan embodies the fantasy of the Chinese global citizen, acting outside the strictures of a vacillating national identity.

—Gina Marchetti
CHAPLIN, (Sir) Charles (Charlie)

Nationality: British. Born: Charles Spencer Chaplin in London, England, 16 April 1889. Family: Married 1) Mildred Harris, 1918 (divorced 1920); 2) Lita Grey, 1924 (divorced 1927), two sons; 3) Paulette Goddard, 1936 (divorced 1941); 4) Oona O’Neill, 1943, eight children. Career: At age nine, followed the careers of his parents, Charles and Hannah Chaplin, as a music hall performer; 1903–06—appeared as the youth Billy in the stage play Sherlock Holmes; 1907—hired for the Fred Karno troupe; 1913—signed by Mack Sennett for Keystone Studios after second Karno tour of the United States; moved to Hollywood; 1914—first film, Making a Living, followed by 34 more films that same year; 1915—left Keystone to write, direct, and act in 14 films for Essanay Films; 1916—moved to Mutual Films to create 12 films through 1917; 1918–23—produced seven shorts and one feature, The Kid (1921), for First National; 1919—co-founder with D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, and Douglas Fairbanks of United Artists; 1923—first film for United Artists, A Woman of Paris; 1952—visited London; political pressure forced cancellation of his reentry permit to return to the United States; 1953—moved to Vevey, on Lake Geneva, Switzerland. Awards: Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for The Great Dictator, 1940; Foreign Language Press Critics designate Limelight as best film, 1953; Honorary Oscar, "for the incalculable effect he has had in making motion pictures the art form of this century," 1971; Academy Award for Best Original Dramatic Score (shared), for Limelight, 1972 (film first released in 1952, but had not been shown in Los Angeles until 1972); Golden Lion, Venice Film Festival, 1972; Knighted, 1975. Died: In Vevey, Switzerland, 25 December 1977.

Films as Actor:

(Shorts for Keystone Film Company; role as Charlie unless otherwise noted)

1914 Making a Living (A Busted Johnny; Troubles; Doing His Best) (Lehrman) (as reporter); Kid Auto Races at Venice (The Kid Auto Race) (Lehrman); Mabel’s Strange Predicament (Hotel Mixup) (Lehrman and Sennett); Between Showers (The Flirts; Charlie and the Umbrella; In Wrong) (Lehrman); A Film Johnnie (Movie Nut; Million Dollar Job; Charlie at the Studio) (Sennett); Tango Tangles (Charlie’s Recreation; Music Hall) (Sennett); His Favorite Pastime (The Bonehead; His Reckless Fling) (Nichols); Cruel, Cruel Love (Sennett); The Star Boarder (The Hash-House Hero) (Sennett); Mabel at the Wheel (His Daredevil Queen; Hot Finish) (Norman and Sennett); Twenty Minutes of Love (He Loved Her So; Cops and Watches) (Sennett) (as Charlie, + sc); The Knockout (Counted Out; The Pugilist) (Arbuckle); Tillie’s Punctured Romance (Tillie’s Nightmare; For the Love of Tillie; Marie’s Millions) (Sennett—feature)

(Other films)

1914 His Regeneration (Anderson) (guest appearance) 1921 The Nut (Reed) (guest appearance)

1923 Souls for Sale (Hughes) (guest appearance) 1928 Show People (King Vidor) (guest appearance)

Films as Actor, Director, and Scriptwriter:

(Shorts for Keystone Film Company)

1914 Caught in a Cabaret (Jazz Waiter; Faking with Society) (co-d, co-sc); Caught in the Rain (At It Again; Who Got Stung?); A Busy Day (Lady Charlie; Militant Suffragette); The Fatal Mallet (The Pile Driver; The Rival Suitors; Hit Him Again) (co-d, co-sc); Her Friend the Bandit (Mabel’s Flirtation; A Thief Catcher) (co-d with Normand, co-sc); Mabel’s Busy Day (Charlie and the Sausages; Love and Lunch; Hot Dogs) (co-d with Normand, co-sc); Mabel’s Married Life (When You’re Married; The Squarehead) (co-d with Normand); Laughing Gas (Tuning His Ivories; The Dentist); The Property Man (Getting His Goat; The Rousta-bout; Vamping Venus); The Face on the Bar-Room Floor (The Ham Artist); Recreation (Spring Fever); The Masquerader (Putting One Over; The Female Impersonator); His New Profession (The Good-for-Nothing; Helping Himself); The Rounder (Two of a Kind; The Love Thief; Oh, What a Night!); The New Janitor (The Porter; The Blundering Boob); Those Love Pangs (The Rival Matchers; Busted Hearts); Dough and Dynamite (The Doughnut Designer; The Cook); Gentlemen of Nerve (Some Nerve; Charlie at the Races); His Musical Career (The Piano Movers; Musical Tramps); His Trysting Place (Family Home); Getting Acquainted (A Fair Exchange; Hallo Everybody); His Prehistoric Past (A Dream; King Charlie; The Caveman)

(Shorts, two-reelers unless noted otherwise, for Essanay Film Company)

1915 His New Job; A Night Out (Champagne Charlie); The Champion (Battling Charlie); In the Park (Charlie on the Spree) (one reel); A Jimey Elijah (Marrying in Haste); The Tramp (Charlie the Hobo); By the Sea (Charlie’s Day Out) (one reel); Work (The Paper Hanger; The Plumber); A Woman (The Perfect Lady); The Bank; Shanghaied (Charlie the Sailor; Charlie on the Ocean); A Night in the Show

1916 Carmen (Charlie Chaplin’s Burlesque on Carmen); Police! (Charlie the Burglar)

(Two-reelers for Mutual Films)

1916 The Floorwalker (The Store); The Fireman; The Vagabond; One A.M.; The Count; The Pawnshop; Behind the Screen; The Rink

1917 Easy Street; The Cure; The Immigrant; The Adventurer

1918 Triple Trouble (an Essanay compilation release of 1915 Chaplin footage plus non-Chaplin footage)

(For First National Film Company)

1918 A Dog’s Life (three reels); The Bond (half-reel for Liberty Loan Committee); Shoulder Arms (three reels)

1919 Sunnyside (three reels); A Day’s Pleasure (two reels)
Charlie Chaplin in The Great Dictator

1921 The Kid (+ pr); The Idle Class (two reels) (+ pr)
1922 Pay Day (two reels) (+ pr); Nice and Friendly (+ pr) (made privately and unreleased)
1923 The Pilgrim (four reels) (+ pr)

(features for United Artists Company)

1923 A Woman of Paris (+ pr)
1925 The Gold Rush (+ pr, narration, mus for sound reissue)
1928 The Circus (+ pr, mus, song for sound reissue)
1931 City Lights (+ pr, mus)
1936 Modern Times (+ pr, mus)
1940 The Great Dictator (+ pr, mus)
1947 Monsieur Verdoux (+ pr, mus)
1952 Limelight (+ pr, co-mus, co-choreographer)

(feature for Attic-Archway Company)

1957 A King in New York (+ pr, mus)

(feature for Universal)

1967 A Countess from Hong Kong (+ mus)

Publications

By CHAPLIN: books—

Charlie Chaplin’s Own Story, Indianapolis, 1916.
My Trip Abroad, New York, 1922.
A Comedian Sees the World, New York, 1933.

By CHAPLIN: articles—

‘‘How I Made My Success,’’ in The Theatre (New York), September 1915.
‘‘What People Laugh At,’’ in American Magazine (New York), 1918.
‘‘In Defense of Myself,’’ in Colliers (New York), 11 November 1922.
Interview with Margaret Hinxman, in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1957.
On CHAPLIN: books—

Tyler, Parker, Chaplin, the Last of the Clowns, New York, 1947.

Minney, R. J., Chaplin, the Immortal Tramp, London, 1954.

Manvell, Roger, Chaplin, Boston, 1974.

Kamin, Dan, Charlie Chaplin’s One-Man Show, Metuchen, New Jersey, 1984.

Smith, Julian, Chaplin, Boston, 1984.

On CHAPLIN: articles—

Ramsaye, Terry, “Chaplin—And How He Does It,” in Photoplay (New York), September 1917.

Hilbert, James E., “A Day with Charlie Chaplin on Location,” in Motion Picture Classic (New York), November 1917.

Young, Stark, “Dear Mr. Chaplin,” in New Republic (New York), 23 August 1922.

Carr, Harry, “Chaplin vs. Lloyd, a Comparison,” in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), November 1922.

Seldes, Gilbert, “‘I Am Here Today’: Charlie Chaplin,” in The 7 Lively Arts, New York, 1924; reprinted, 1957.

“Chaplin” issue of Film Comment (New York), September/October 1972.

“Chaplin” issue of University Film Association Journal (Houston), no. 1, 1979.

“Chaplin” section of American Film (Washington, D.C.), September 1984.

Winokur, Mark, “‘Modern Times and the Comedy of Transformation,’” in Film/Literature Quarterly (Salisbury, Maryland), vol. 15, no. 3, 1987.

Jones, Chuck, “Journal” (on Chaplin), in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1989.

Weisman, S.M. “Charlie Chaplin’s Film Heroines,” Film History (London), vol. 8, no. 4, 1996.

On CHAPLIN: films—

Chaplinesque, My Life and Hard Times, documentary directed by Harry Hurwitz, 1972.

Unknown Chaplin, television documentary directed by Kevin Brownlow and David Gill, 1983.

Young Charlie Chaplin, television film biography directed by Baz Taylor, 1989.

* * *

It took only a very busy year of acting and directing short films for Charles Chaplin to launch his own career and alter the format of the Mack Sennett comic film. While the famous comedian owed much to the Sennett tradition—the story material and plotting, the techniques of the medium, and the comic vigor—he had his own contribution to make to the comic film. The more subtle humor of this English music hall entertainer was thwarted by the fast pace and farcical plotting of the Sennett comedies. He teeters and leans askant as his locomotion becomes comically askew. And, of course, his mind also reveals it is askew. When he is pushed into the gym to receive physical therapy he sees the masseur as an attacker and strikes the pose of a wrestler. He then begins a series of moves to avoid what he thinks is an opponent. The comedian handles this pantomime adroitly with the grace of a dancer. It is little wonder then that W. C. Fields is reported to have declared in a fit of jealousy: “The son of a bitch is a ballet dancer!”

When Chaplin moved to the feature length film with The Kid in 1921, the richness of his character and acting sprang forth. A greater range of humor was finally achieved because the feature allowed the actor the total dimension of the little tramp. While his two-reelers often moved in the rapid, farcical, slapstick style of Mack Sennett, his full-length films explored the spectrum of his little man-child clown. The quiet, personal moments of the social outcast blossomed, and what critics called “Chaplin’s pathos” was born. The little tramp raises a foundling to have many of the awry social values of a social outcast—providing the viewer with some understanding of survival necessities. The kid breaks windows with a pocketful of rocks as the little tramp follows behind as a glazer who repairs the damage for a fee. When an orphanage official takes the kid away in a truck, the tramp pursues and stops the abduction. In an emotional embrace of his adopted son, Chaplin underplays the joy of the moment in a powerful shot of the scene. It may not be what has been called “pathos”—more like sympathy—nevertheless, this shows the essence of a subtle tone without moving to sentimentality.

Other examples of the range of Chaplin’s acting deftness display his skill. Critics often point to turns of Chaplin’s innovation, such as the oceanic roll dance when he entertains a guest with a routine that shows his head hovering over rolls on forks executing a ballet—an unusual bit in The Gold Rush. There are also more subtle scenes such as one when the little fellow is staring in a remote cabin in Alaska. With delicate, facile pantomime the hollow-eyed, comic hero eyes the stub of a candle. Sadly, the little tramp picks it up and nibbles it with rabbit bites—as if the candle were a piece of carrot or celery. And with a deft touch that again shows Chaplin’s genius, he sprinkles salt on the morsel of wax, finds that it tastes better, and pops it into his mouth. With such actions a new depth in comic character was added, a dimension that was to make Chaplin the darling of the critics.
Evaluators of the comedian’s work have been most generous in the hundreds of articles published and more than 25 major books solely devoted to his life and films. Sometimes critics believe comedy films do not receive recognition for social significance and employ sweeping symbols and allusions to elevate them. Theodore Huff, usually detached and low-key in his 1951 work, Charlie Chaplin, writes that the comedian has become “a symbol of the age, the twentieth-century Everyman.” In The Little Fellow, Peter Cotes and Thelma Niklaus try to give the comedian the position of the champion of the poor and oppressed by stating: “He and Dickens are of the same stock, filled with the same humanism, the same passionate pity for the underdog, the same blaze of anger against persecution, exploitation, and injustice.” Such statements strain credulity because the majority of evaluators see Modern Times and The Great Dictator as designed or intended to be satires but end up being lampoons. By far the most rhapsodic commentary comes from Robert Payne who uses the pretentious title The Great God Pan for a biography of Chaplin. He writes: “Far more than Sir Galahad, he [Chaplin] represents the heroic figure of the man pure and undefiled.”

These three statements by writers of major works in the early 1950s use allusions that touch upon themes and not the acting, which was the major quality that places Chaplin as the leading king of comedy of the 1920s. For subtle nuances in humor he is the champion. Both Harold Lloyd and Buster Keaton were his equal in the broad, athletic comic moments, but only in a few flickering moments in their features did these two rival the master. Much of this early affection for Chaplin resulted from the continued showing of his films and the fact that much of the work of Keaton did not see the light until the 1960s. Since then, 8 studies of Lloyd and 11 evaluations of Keaton focused on the life and films of these two comedians.

One of the most neglected of the kings of silent screen comedy, Harry Langdon, was the one actor most often compared with Chaplin’s character—because Langdon employed a tramplike and childman person. Nevertheless, Langdon’s character falls into the class of “dumb” clowns—low mental ability. Most of the humor of his best films, The Strong Man and Long Pants, directed by Frank Capra, springs from a childlike man who is lost in a sophisticated world. Much of the complicated world is a wonder to this wide-eyed person who tries to figure out things that baffle him, like a four year old. Also, Langdon’s character does not have the joy and enthusiasm that Chaplin exhibits in his relationship with another person, as in The Kid with his child and in Modern Times with a girlfriend waif.

The type of enthusiasm and joy Chaplin gave to his character is another distinguishing feature. Granted, Harold Lloyd possessed it—like the boy-next-door—but Chaplin had it in the manner of the child in slums who finds a quarter. As critics have pointed out, Chaplin followed in the tradition of the commedia dell’arte. He combined many characteristics of the sad and joyful clowns as he acted in various scenes of his movies. He almost seemed to be the reincarnation of the famous nineteenth-century French clown, Jean-Gaspard Debureau, a renowned Pierrot, blended with all the rollicking good spirit of the Clown created by the English music hall’s favorite comedian, Grimaldi.

—Donald W. McCaffrey

CHAPLIN, Geraldine

Films as Actress:

1952 Limelight (Chaplin) (as street urchin)
1954 Dernier soir (Pourtale); Par un beau matin d’été (Deray)
1965 Doctor Zhivago (Lean) (as Tonia)
1966 Andremo in città (Nelo Risi)
1967 A Countess from Hong Kong (Chaplin) (as girl at dance); J’ai tué Raspoutine (I Killed Raspoutine) ( Hossein); Stranger in the House (Cop-Out) (Rouve) (as Angela Sawyer); Peppermint frappé (Saura) (as Elena)
1968 Stress es tres tres (Saura)
1969 La madriguera (The Honeycomb) (Saura) (as Teresa, + co-sc)
1970 El jardin de las delicias (Saura); The Hawaiians (Master of the Islands) (Gries) (as Purity Hoxworth)
1971 Sur un arbre perché (Korber); Carlos (Geissendörfer)
1972 Innocent Bystanders (Collinson); La casa sin fronteras (Olea); Z.P.G. (Zero Population Growth) (Campus) (as Carole McNeil)
1973 Aña y los lobos (Aña and the Wolves) (Saura) (as Aña); The Three Musketeers (The Queen’s Diamonds) (Lester) (as Anne of Austria); Y el projimo? (del Pozo); Verflucht dies Amerika (La banda de Jaider) (Vogeler) (as Kate Elder)
1974 Le mariage à la mode (Mardore); Sommerfuglene (Summer of Silence) (Boger); The Four Musketeers (The Revenge of Milady) (Lester) (as Queen Anne of Austria)
1975 Nashville (Altman) (as Opal); The Gentlemen Tramp (Patterson—doc)
1976 Cria Cuervos (Secret of Anna; Raise Ravens; Cria!) (Saura) (as Ana as an adult/her mother Maria); Buffalo Bill and the Indians, or Sitting Bull’s History Lesson (Altman) (as Annie Oakley); Noroît (Scènes de la vie parallèle; 3 Noroît; Une Vengeance) (Rivette); Welcome to L.A. (Rudolph) (as Karen Hood); Scrim (Bijj)
1977 Elisa, vida mía (Elisa, My Life) (Saura) (as Elisa); “The Hustle” ep. of Roseland (Ivory) (as Marilyn); In Memoriam
Geraldine Chaplin with Omar Sharif in Dr. Zhivago

(Brasó) (as Paulina Arevalo); Une page d’amour (Rabinowicz)

1978 Los ajos vandados (Saura); A Wedding (Altman) (as Rita Billingsley); Remember My Name (Rudolph) (as Emily); L’Adoption (The Adoption) (Grunebaum) (as wife); The Masked Bride; Mais où et donc Ornica? (van Effenterre) (as Isabelle)

1979 Tout est à nous; Mama cumple cien años (Mama Turns 100) (Saura) (as Ana)

1980 La Viuda de Montiel (Liittin); The Mirror Crack’d (Hamilton) (as Ella Zielinsky)

1981 Les Uns et les autres (Bolero; Within Memory) (Lelouch) (as Suzan/Sara Glenn); Voyage en douce (Deville) (as Lucie)

1984 L’Amour par terre (Love on the Ground) (Rivette) (as Charlotte); La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) (Resnais) (as Nora)

1985 The Corsican Brothers (Sharp—for TV); Gentile Alouette (Castilla) (as Angela Duverger)

1988 White Mischief (Radford) (as Nina Soames); The Moderns (Rudolph) (as Nathalie de Ville)

1989 The Return of the Musketeers (Lester) (as Queen Anne of Austria); Je veux rentrer à la maison (I Want to Go Home) (Resnais) (as Terry Armstrong)

1990 The Children (Tony Palmer) (as Joyce Wheater); Buster’s Bedroom (Horn) (as Diana Daniels); Duel of Hearts (Hough—for TV) (as Mrs. Miller)

1992 Chaplin (Attenborough) (as Hannah Chaplin); Zwischensaison (Hors Saison; Off Season) (Schmid) (as anarchist)

1993 The Age of Innocence (Scorsese) (as Mrs. Welland); A Foreign Field (Sturridge—for TV) (as Beverley)

1994 Words upon the Window Pane (McGuckian) (as Miss MacKenna)

1995 Para recibir el canto de los pajaros (The Bird’s Singing) (Sanjines) (as Catherine); Home for the Holidays (Jodie Foster) (as Aunt Glady)

1996 Jane Eyre (Zeffirelli) (as Miss Scatcherd); Gulliver’s Travels (Sturridge—for TV) (as Empress Munodi)

1997 Mother Theresa: In the Name of God’s Poor (Connor) (as Mother Theresa); The Odyssey (Konchalovsky for TV) (as Eurycleia)
1998  Cousin Bette (McAnuff) (as Adeline Hulot); Finisterre, donde termina el mundo (Villaverde) (as Mother)

1999  To Walk with Lions (Schultz) (as Victoria Andrecelli); Mary, Mother of Jesus (Conner) (as Elizabeth); ¿Y tu qué harías por amor? (Just Run!) (Saura Medrano) (as Madre); Beresina oder Die letzten Tage der Schweiz (The Last Days of Switzerland) (Schmid) (as Beresina)

2000  ‘‘In the Beginning’’ (Connor—for TV) (as Yocheved)

Publications

By CHAPLIN: articles—

Interview with Jonathan Rosenbaum, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1975.

‘‘Geraldine Chaplin: el recuerdo de su padre,’’ interview with M. Pereira, in Cine Cubano (Havana), no. 99, 1981; see also no. 106, 1983.

‘‘Entretien avec Geraldine Chaplin,’’ interview with J. Lefebvre, in Jeune Cinema, April/May 1993.

On CHAPLIN: articles—

Ecran (Paris), October 1978.

Michiels, D., ‘‘Geraldine Chaplin,’’ in Film en Televisie (Brussels), July-August 1981.

Francke, Linda Bird, ‘‘Life with Charlie,’’ in Interview (New York), September 1989.

Guérin, N., ‘‘Geraldine Chaplin et la Camera d’Or,’’ in Cinema 91, July/August 1991.

Pašádná, Stanislava, ‘‘Ètyøikát dva Kapitola IV: Saura Chaplinová,’’ in Film a Doba (Prague), Winter 1994.

On CHAPLIN: film—

As the oldest daughter of the legendary Charlie Chaplin, Geraldine Chaplin’s career in films would doubtless have attracted a considerable degree of attention regardless of her own merits as an actress. In the years since her portrayal of Tonia in Doctor Zhivago, however, Chaplin has established herself as a talented—if somewhat limited—performer with an intriguing on-screen appeal. Her dark, waiflike beauty, reminiscent of her mother, Oona O’Neill Chaplin, and her graceful, enigmatic qualities have made her a favorite of directors Robert Altman, Alan Rudolph, and Carlos Saura, while her facility for languages has enabled her to move with ease between American and European films.

It is perhaps ironic that, as the child of one of the world’s greatest comedians, Chaplin has worked primarily in the realm of serious drama. Even her performance as the affected journalist in Altman’s Nashville falls into the area of satire rather than straightforward comedy, and her particular strength as an actress has been the combination of dramatic intensity and a certain ethereal quality that she brings to her characters. Much of her best work has resulted from her collaboration with Saura, her longtime companion and one of Spain’s leading filmmakers. Under his direction in such films as Cria, Aña y los lobos, and Elisa, vida mía, Chaplin gives sensitively drawn performances of depth and feeling.

Chaplin’s vulnerable physical appearance also can work to her advantage when contrasted with a strong inner character. In Alan Rudolph’s disturbing Remember My Name, she plays a revenge-obsessed woman whose seeming delicacy belies her ruthless, street-smart nature. It is one of her finest performances, and a startling departure from her usual screen roles.

Chaplin has had the good fortune throughout her career to work with directors who have utilized her unique talents and provided her with roles which complement her striking personal style. With strong films to display her abilities, she has created a professional identity apart from her early one as “Charlie Chaplin’s daughter.” Yet at the same time, in Chaplin, Richard Attenborough’s celluloid biography of the Little Tramp, she was called upon to portray her own intensely, tragically disturbed grandmother. No actress in the world would have been a more logical and appropriate choice for the role.

—Janet E. Lorenz, updated by Rob Edelman

CHARISSE, Cyd

Nationality: American. Born: Tula Ellice Finklea in Amarillo, Texas, 8 March 1921 (some sources list 1922). Family: Married 1) the dancer Nico Charisse, 1939 (divorced 1947); 2) the singer Tony Martin, 1948. Career: 1934—joined Ballet Russe; late 1930s-early 1940s—European tour with Ballet Russe interrupted by World War II; 1943—began working in films as bit player under the name Lily Norwood; 1946—contract with MGM as Cyd Charisse; 1960s—begins appearing in European films; appeared in nightclub revue with husband Tony Martin; 1972—in Australian stage production of No, No Nanette; 1992—Broadway debut in Grand Hotel. Address: 10390 Wilshire Boulevard #1507, Los Angeles, CA 90024, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1943    Something to Shout About (Ratoff) (as Lily Norwood); Mission to Moscow (Curtiz) (as specialty dancer); Thousands Cheer (Sidney)

1946    The Harvey Girls (Sidney) (as Deborah); “Meet the Ladies” ep. of Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli or Sidney) (as ballet dancer); Three Wise Fools (Buzzell) (as Rena Fairchild); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorf)

1947    Fiesta (Thorpe) (as Conchita); The Unfinished Dance (Koster) (as Mlle. Ariane Bouchet)

1948    On an Island with You (Thorpe) (as Yvonne Torro); The Kissing Bandit (Benedek) (as fiesta dancer); Words and Music (Taurog) (as Margo Grant)

1949    Tension (Berry) (as Mary Chanler); East Side, West Side (LeRoy) (as Rosa Senta)

1951    Mark of the Renegade (Fregonese) (as Manuela)
A dancer of formidable talent, Cyd Charisse was a major presence in several important musicals of the 1950s. At MGM she worked within the Arthur Freed unit where her special abilities were successfully exploited. Classically trained, Charisse always played characters tailored to her natural elegance and sophistication. Since her background was in ballet rather than in the dance forms of musical comedy, her roles often drew on the conventional associations of ballet in film, such as high art, dreaminess, and aloofness. Her work in five films—Singin’ in the Rain, The Band Wagon, Brigadoon, It’s Always Fair Weather, and Silk Stockings—epitomized her contribution to the genre.

As Gene Kelly’s unapproachable femme fatale in the ‘Broadway Melody’ sequence in Singin’ in the Rain, Charisse establishes an image continued through the other four films, although in the course of each her character is modified—and she usually becomes a less balletic performer as well. In Singin’ in the Rain she does not play a character, but rather is a torrid stage image who dances with Kelly.

Publications

By CHARISSE: book—

On CHARISSE: books—

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1993.

On CHARISSE: articles—

Ecran (Paris), March 1978.

* * *
In the other films she plays characters who are part of the plots; in each, she must lose her distance and stiffness before becoming an impassioned dancer and suitable romantic partner. Playing a ballet star in An American in Paris, she cannot fall in love with Fred Astaire until she abandons her high art pretensions. In Silk Stockings she is the woman Kelly loves, but she lives (and dances) in a town that comes to life only once every hundred years. She has an encyclopedic memory in It's Always Fair Weather and uses it at first to intimidate Kelly. And in Silk Stockings she is the remote Russian Ninotchka, the anticapitalist who ultimately capitulates to Fred Astaire's dancing. Charisse could not sing and her vocals were always dubbed, but this does not diminish her performances since their emphasis is on dancing—and she participated in the richest period of musical production in film history.

After her screen career waned in the early 1960s, Charisse and her second husband, Tony Martin, appeared together on the nightclub circuit. She also has starred in musical stage productions that draw on nostalgia for the era with which she was such an integral part.

—Jerome Delamater, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

CHATTERJEE, Soumitra

Nationality: Indian. Born: 1934. Education: Studied acting with Ahindra Choudhury. Career: Amateur actor with Sisir Kumar Bahaduri; 1954—entered films; 1959—first film for the director Satyajit Ray, Apur Sansar; 1962—co-editor of literary magazine Eksham.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Cast</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Apur Sansar</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Apurba Kumar Roy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Devi (The Goddess)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Uma Prasad; Kshudista Pashan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>&quot;Samapti&quot;’ ep. of Teen Kanya (Two Daughters)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Amulya; Swaralipi; Swayambhara; Jhinder Bandi; Punashcha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Abhijan (The Expedition)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Narsingh; Shasti; Atal Jaler Ahwan; Agun; Banaras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Saat Pake Bandha</td>
<td>Ajoy Kar; Shesh Prahbar</td>
<td>Barmali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Charulata (The Lonely Wife)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Amal; Pratinidhi; Kinu Goyalar Gali; Ayananta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Baksha Badal; Ek Tuka Basa; Raj Kanya; Kapurush-o-Mahapurush (The Coward and the Holy Man)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Amitabha Roy; Akash Kasum (Mrinal Sen); Eki Mantramugdha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Jorajitghir Choudhury Paribar; Kanch Kata Hirey</td>
<td>Ajoy Kar</td>
<td>Manihar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Aajna Shapath; Hatbat Dekha; Mahashweta; Prastar Swakshar</td>
<td>Baghini; Parishodh</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Aparichita; Chena Achen; Parineeta; Teen Bhubaner Parey</td>
<td>Aparichita</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Aranyar din Ratri (Days and Nights in the Forest)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Ashim; Aleyar Alo; Padmagolap; Pratham Kadam Phool</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Khunje Berai; Malayadaan; Sansar</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Jiban Saikate; Natun Diner Alor; Strée; Basanta Bilap; Bilet Pherat</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Ashani Sanket (Distant Thunder)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Gangacharan Chakravarti; Epar Opar; Nishi Kanya; Shesh Prithay Dekhun; Agni Bhraman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Sonar Kella (The Golden Fortress)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Felu; Assati; Jadi Jantem; Sangini; Chhutir Phande</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Nishi Mrigaya; Sansar Simantey (Majumdar); Sudar Niharika</td>
<td>Datta; Nandita</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Babu Moshai; Mantramugdha; Pratima</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Joi Baba Felunath (The Elephant God)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Felu; Nadi Theke Sagare; Ganudevata (Majumdar); Job Charnaker Bibi; Pronoy Pasha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>Father; Nyay Anay; Khelar Putul</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Preyasi; Matir Swarg; Agradani; Simanta Raag</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Indira; Chena Achen; Amar Geeti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Achena Mukhi; Kony; Lal Golap; Ghare Baire (The Home and the World)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Sandip Mukherjee; Vasundhara (Sekhar Chatterjee)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Baikunther Will; Tagori; Sandhyu Pradeep</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Urbashe; Shyam Saheb</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Atanka (Sinha); Raj Purush; Nyay Adhikar; Sukumar Ray</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Ekti Jiban (Mitra)</td>
<td>Gaurudas; Nuit Bengali (Bengali Night) (Klotz)</td>
<td>Narendra Sen; Channachara; Agaman; Agni Sanket; Agun; Debidaran; Anjali; Pratik</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Ganashatru (An Enemy of the People)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Ashok Gupta; Maryada; Jankar; Amar Shapath</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Shakha Proshakha (Branches of the Tree)</td>
<td>Satyajit Ray</td>
<td>Proshanto; Manasi; Ekphase Amar Swarg; Apon Amar Apon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Mahapurithivi (as Father)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Uttoran (The Broken Journey)</td>
<td>Sandip Ray</td>
<td>Sengupta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Paromitar Ek Din (House of Memories)</td>
<td>Sen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By CHATTERJEE: articles—

Interview in “Satyajit Ray Issue” of Cinéma (Bombay).

“Talking with the Master—By CHATTERJEE: articles—

Interview with D. Chaterji, in Cinema in India (Bombay), vol. 3, no. 2, 1989.

Interview with B. Datta, in Cinema in India (Bombay), vol. 3, no. 1, 1992.

On CHATTERJEE: articles—

* * *
Soumitra Chatterjee’s name as an actor cannot be evoked without recalling the films of Satyajit Ray, almost as if Chatterjee were synonymous with the Apu trilogy, although he appeared in his first film role only in the final part of the trilogy, as the grown Apu in Apu Sansar. Ray is renowned for being a consistently sensitive director of actors, and Chatterjee became a particular favorite, his chief asset undoubtedly being a naturally sensitive appearance. Robin Wood, in his book on the Apu Trilogy, says that his beauty, which is “at once physical and spiritual, seems an ideal incarnation of Ray’s belief in human potential.”

Chatterjee had some theatrical experience before his first film role, and subsequently became a star in numerous films made by other directors, mainly in the Bengali cinema. While the memory of his performances in those films has faded, the roles he has played in Ray’s films—as the husband in Devi, the suitor with tartan socks in Teen Kanya, the thinly veiled portrait of Rabindranath Tagore in Charulata, the arrogant leader in Aranyar din Ratri, or the revolutionary in the more recent Ghare Baire—have left a lasting impression. Chatterjee’s last collaborations with Ray have also been impressive, such as in Ganashatru, where Chatterjee, as Dr. Ashok Gupta, emotionalizes the conflicting pulls of the beliefs of the orthodox society, and the mechanics of modern science, where eventually no one is the winner. And in Uttoran, the last script penned by Satyajit Ray and directed by his son Sandip Ray, the talents of Soumitra Chatterjee are showcased, again. He brings a new depth to the character of Dr. Sengupta, the cardiologist, who is cosmopolitan in living and outlook. Satyajit Ray’s intention of making a commentary on modern medicine losing the values of humaneness, was realized by the complexity that Chatterjee brought to the portrayal. When the doctor is stuck in a village due to a flat tire, his experiences change his outlook. Drawn irrevocably into the life of a sick peasant and his family, the doctor decides it is time for him to do a good deed. It is Chatterjee’s talents that makes us question if this conventional climax is an end at all, or only a beginning.

Indian actors and actresses have often been accused of one-dimensional performance, either heroic or villainous, with no subtlety of nuance or gesture. It is a tradition inherited from the theatrical origins of Indian cinema, whereas Ray’s cinema, imbibing the values of his colonial overlords and firmly rooted within the tradition of Western humanism, set out to create psychologically rounded characters and thus changed the whole style of cinema acting in India. According to Chatterjee, “Ray’s films brought about a real change from the acting point of view—actors began trying to be cinema actors. I didn’t know what to do when Mr. Ray first asked me. I didn’t know the real difference between stage and screen acting.” He seemed to have quickly mastered the difference, for Ray regularly returned to Chatterjee with more and more challenging roles.

—Behroze Gandhy, updated by Usha Venkatachallam

CHER

Nationality: American. Born: Cherilyn Sarkisian in Southern California, 20 May 1946. Education: Trained for the stage with Jeff Corey. Family: Married 1) Sonny Bono, 1964 (some sources say 1969) (divorced 1974), daughter: Chastity; 2) Gregg Allman, 1975 (divorced), son: Elijah Blue. Career: With husband, as Sonny and Cher, had first U.S. hit, Baby Don’t Go, 1965; co-hosted The Sonny and Cher Comedy Hour for CBS, 1971–74; had her own TV show, Cher, 1975–76; co-hosted The Sonny and Cher Show, 1976–77; appeared on stage (then on film) in Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean, 1982; won international success as a film actress, mid-late 1980s. Awards: Best TV Actress—Musical/Comedy Golden Globe, for The Sonny and Cher Comedy Hour, 1971; Best Performance by an Actress in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture—Golden Globe, for Silkwood, 1983; Best Actress Cannes Film Festival, for Mask, 1985; Best Actress Academy Award, Best Performance by an Actress in a Motion Picture—Comedy/Musical Golden Globe, for Moonstruck, 1987. Address: c/o Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1965 Wild on the Beach (Dexter) (as herself)
1967 Good Times (Friedkin) (as herself)
1969 Chastity (De Paola) (title role)
1982 Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean (Altman) (as Sissy)
1983 Silkwood (Nichols) (as Dolly Pelliker)
1985 Mask (Bogdanovich) (as Rusty Dennis)
1987 The Witches of Eastwick (Miller) (as Alexandra Medford); Suspect (Yates) (as Kathleen Riley, Public Defender); Moonstruck (Jewison) (as Loretta Castorini)
1990 Mermaids (Benjamin) (as Mrs. Flax)
1992 The Player (Altman) (as herself)
1994 Ready to Wear (Pret-a-Porter) (Altman) (as herself)
1996 Faithful (Mazursky) (as Margaret O’Donnell)
1999 Tea With Mussolini (Zeffirelli) (as Elsa); Cher: Live in Concert from Las Vegas (doc) (as herself)

Films as Director:

1996 If These Walls Could Talk (for TV) (co-d, + ro)

Publications

By CHER: book—

Cher in Her Own Words, compiled by Nigel Goodall, London, 1992.

By CHER: articles—

Cher is an unpredictable woman, a talented entertainer who seems to enjoy sampling various show business venues without getting attached to any one. It might be unfair to categorize her as a movie star, since her active on-screen career has been limited to relatively few films. One is on more secure ground calling Cher a celebrity. Her emergence as a critically acclaimed screen actress in the 1980s is surprising not only because few would have guessed she could be a talented actress, but also because the roles she has taken are so different from her celebrity image. In most of her films, she plays distinctly unglamorous women, a far cry from the glittery persona associated with her long-standing fame.

On CHER: books—

On CHER: articles—

* * *

Cher is an unpredictable woman, a talented entertainer who seems to enjoy sampling various show business venues without getting attached to any one. It might be unfair to categorize her as a movie star, since her active on-screen career has been limited to relatively few films. One is on more secure ground calling Cher a celebrity.

Her emergence as a critically acclaimed screen actress in the 1980s is surprising not only because few would have guessed she could be a talented actress, but also because the roles she has taken are so different from her celebrity image. In most of her films, she plays distinctly unglamorous women, a far cry from the glittery persona associated with her long-standing fame.
For a decade, 1965–74, she was the overtly talented half of the singing duo Sonny and Cher. After several hit singles and a popular television show, the marriage ended and so the act folded. Cher continued her singing career and had a number of hits (“Gypsies, Tramps and Thieves,” “Half Breed,” “Dark Lady” ) which alluded to a difficult and impoverished upbringing as the daughter of a part Cherokee Indian mother who was married eight times. Aside from buying her records, the public craved information about her love affairs with younger men, her provocative—and quite tacky—scanty clothing, and her face and figure. The tabloids were quick to supply any and all information they could run down or make up. She cashed in on her celebrity in the late 1970s with a solo act in Las Vegas for which she was paid $300,000 per week.

Few performers have made the leap from Las Vegas to art cinema, but Cher managed to do just that when she took the role of Sissy, a good-natured but hard-drinking and rough-talking waitress, in Robert Altman’s screen version of the stage play Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean, whose plot involves the 1975 reunion of the James Dean Fan Club, a group of forlorn women who share the events of their unfulfilled lives. The genesis of her film career came the year before the film was made when she moved to New York City to seek work in the theater, and Altman hired her for the play’s Broadway run.

Mike Nichols was so impressed with Cher’s stage performance as Sissy that he cast her in Silkwood as the blue-collar, frumpy lesbian roommate of Karen Silkwood (Meryl Streep). This was a much more mainstream movie than Jimmy Dean, and Cher’s praised performance led to her being cast as unglamorous leads in other Hollywood films. All of a sudden, baby boomers who had grown to maturity alongside Cher were realizing that Sonny was not the only member of the duo with brains. Scratch Cher’s sequined exterior, and you find an intelligent and insightful actress.

She next starred in Mask as a drug-addicted, foul-mouthed motorcycle mama who is a loving mother to a son suffering from craniodiaphyseal dysplasia, a disease that causes enlargement of the head and disfigurement of the facial features. It was the sort of down-and-dirty role that many stars would refuse. Cher relished the part and became friendly with real-life disease victim Rusty Dennis, and has since raised funds to support victims of this disease. Cher fought with director Peter Bogdanovich throughout the production, insisting on playing the character in her own instinctual way. For her determined efforts, she wound up winning the 1985 Cannes Film Festival Best Actress Award.

In the late 1980s, Cher continued to record hit tunes and appear in a variety of films. The Witches of Eastwick is an entertaining black comedy about three New England sex-starved females who conjure up a charming devil of a man (Jack Nicholson). She also played a public defender in Suspect, a film which did little to further her career. But in Moonstruck, Cher found an outstanding opportunity in the plain-Jane role of Loretta Castorini, who is 37 going on 50. Loretta dresses like a frump. Her frizzy black hair has more than a touch of gray. A widow of seven years, she is a dutiful daughter who lives with her very ethnic Italian-American parents in a very ethnic Italian neighborhood in Brooklyn. She has been dating Johnny Cammareri (Danny Aiello), a respectable but boring fellow. When Johnny proposes marriage, she readily accepts. But Loretta has yet to meet Johnny’s estranged brother Ronny (Nicolai Cage), who causes her to bloom like the cherry blossoms in the Brooklyn Botanic Garden on a sunny spring afternoon. Loretta’s catharsis is the thrust of Moonstruck; by the time she played Loretta, Cher had developed into a solid screen actress. Her performance in the film ranks with her roles in Silkwood and Mask as her best work to date on celluloid, but this time she earned a Best Actress Academy Award.

Mermaids allowed Cher to play a sexy single mom to Winona Ryder, and was a solid comedy hit. She put in a fine performance (and had enough creative leverage to have director Frank Oz replaced by Richard Benjamin), but the role was not in the same league as Moonstruck. The following decade found her mostly absent from the screen. She starred in exercise videos that showed off the fabulous body she claims comes from workouts rather than nips and tucks, and occasionally appeared on infomercials. Aside from cameo appearances as herself in The Player and Ready to Wear, Cher took roles in only two theatrical features: Faithful, a well-intentioned drama in which she plays an unhappy wife whose husband hires a hit man to murder her; and Tea With Mussolini, cast as a wealthy American in 1930s Italy who becomes involved with a group of eccentric British expatriate women. In the film, Cher plays opposite several of the world’s top actresses, including Judi Dench, Maggie Smith, and Joan Plowright. Yet she practically steals the film with her vibrant presence and screen confidence.

Perhaps Cher’s most notable 1990s credit is the three-part made-for-television feature If These Walls Could Talk, a serious-minded drama which explores the issues of unplanned pregnancy and abortion. Cher not only takes an acting role in the film, but also co-directs (with Nancy Savoca).

—H. M. Glancy, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

CHERKASOV, Nikolai

Films as Actor:

1927 Poet i tsar (The Poet and the Czar) (Gardin) (as Sharl); Ego prevoskhotitelstvo (His Excellency) (Roshal)
1928 Moi syn (My Son) (Cheryvakov); Luna sleva (The Moon Is to the Left) (Ivanov) (as Kalugin)
1929 Rodnoi brat (Blood Brother) (Krol)
1930 Vsadniki vetra (Horsesmen of the Wind) (Zhemchuzhnikov)
1932 Schastye (Happiness) (Fainzinger and Soloviev) (as police agent)
1933 Pervaya lyubov (First Love) (Shreiber)
1934 Zhenitha Jana Krukke (Jan Krukke’s Wedding) (Ivanov) (as Pfal); Lyublia tebya? (Do I Love You?) (Gerasimov) (as student)
Nikolai Cherkassov (right) and Yuci Tulubeyer in Don Quixote

1935 Granitsa (Staroye Dudino; Old Dudino) (Dubson) (as Gaidul); Podrugi (Girl Friends) (Arnstam) (as Belyi); Goryachie dyenechki (Hectic Days) (Zarkhi and Heifitz) (as Kolka Loshak)

1936 Deputat Baltiki (Baltic Deputy) (Zarkhi and Heifitz) (as Prof. Polezhaev); Deti kapitana Granta (Captain Grant’s Children) (Vainshtok) (as Paganel)

1937 Ostrov sokrovishch (Treasure Island) (Vainshtok) (as Billy Bones); Ka sovetskuju rodinu (For the Soviet Homeland) (Muzkant)

1937–9 Piotr Pervyi (Peter the Great) (Petrov—in 2 parts) (as Tsarevich Alexei)

1938 Druzya (Friends) (Arnstam); Chelovek s ruzhyom (Man with a Gun) (Yutkevich) (as general); Alexander Nevsky (Eisenstein) (title role)

1939 Koncert na ekrane (Film Concert No. One) (Timoshenko); Lenin i 1918 godu (Lenin in 1918) (Kozintsev and Trauberg) (as Maxim Gorky)

1942 Ego zovut Sukhe-Bator (His Name Is Sukhe-Bator) (Zarkhi and Heifitz) (as Baron Ungern)

1943 Shestdesyat dnei (Sixty Days) (Shapiro) (as Antonov)

1944 Ivan Groznyi (Ivan the Terrible) (Eisenstein) (title role)

1946 Vo imya zhizni (In the Name of Life) (Zarkhi and Heifitz) (as Lukich)

1947 Pirogov (Kozintsev) (as Liadov); Novyi dom (New House) (Korsh-Sablin); Vesna (Spring) (Alexandrov) (as Gromov)

1949 Schastlivogo plavaniya (Bon Voyage) (Lebedev) (as Levashov); Akademik Ivan Pavlov (Academician Ivan Pavlov) (Roshal)

(as Maxim Gorky); Alexander Popov (Rappoport and Eismont) (title role); Stalingradskaya bitva (The Battle of Stalingrad) (Petrov) (as President Roosevelt)

1950 Mussorgsky (Roshal) (as Stasov)

1952 Rimsky-Korsakov (Roshal and Kozansky) (title role)

1955 Oni znali Mayakovsky (They Knew Mayakovsky) (Petrov) (as Mayakovsky)

1957 Don Kikhot (Don Quixote) (Kozintsev) (title role)

1958 Ivan Groznyi II: Boyarsky zagovor (Ivan the Terrible, Part II: The Boyars’ Plot) (Eisenstein—completed 1946) (title role)

1963 Vse ostattsia lyudyam (Everything Remains for the People; Legacy) (Natanson) (as Dronov)

1965 La Nuit des adieux (Petipa) (Dréville)

Publications

By CHERKASSOV: books—

Iz zapisok aktera, Moscow, 1951, translated as Notes of a Soviet Actor, Moscow, 1957.

Chertveryi Don Kikhot, Leningrad, 1958.

By CHERKASSOV: articles—

‘‘Lyubimyi obraz’’ in Deputat Baltiki, Moscow, 1937.

‘‘Rabota nad istoricheskoi roliu’’ in Sovetsky istorichesky film, Moscow, 1939.

‘‘Cherkassov’s Don Quixote,’’ (selections from article in Iskusstvo Kino) and review of Notes of a Soviet Actor, in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1958.

Soviet Film (Moscow), October and November 1958.

On CHERKASSOV: books—

Dreiden, C., Nikolai Cherkassov, Moscow, 1939.

Slaventatov, D., Nikolai Cherkassov, Moscow, 1939.

Benyash, R., Nikolai Konstantinovich Cherkassov, Moscow, 1952.

Gerasimov, Yuri, Cherkassov, Moscow, 1976.

On CHERKASSOV: articles—

On film Everything Remains for the People in Soviet Film (Moscow), January 1964.

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), July 1973.

Soviet Film (Moscow), August 1973.

On CHERKASSOV: film—

Riadom a drugon (Our Friend Is with Us) about Cherkassov, directed by Alexander Abramov, 1970.

* * *
Nikolai Cherkassov, a graduate of the Leningrad Theatre Institute, began his professional career on stage in 1920, developing his skill in burlesque, and subsequently making his first film appearance in 1927 in The Poet and the Czar. Although his basic training had been in ballet, opera, and even the circus as well as the theater, he concentrated in the mid-1920s on legitimate acting and joined the Leningrad Pushkin Theatre, working for much of his career in both theater and film. His international reputation in the cinema was made in the character of Professor Polezhaev in the celebrated film that established ‘‘historic realism’’ in the Soviet Union of the 1930s, Josef Heifitz and Alexander Zarkhi’s Baltic Deputy, in which he played a man of 75; of the part Cherkassov said, ‘‘He was so young in spirit that only a young actor could play him.’’ As he described it, the film presented the attitude of the ‘‘progressive, democratic intelligentsia in the early stages of the Revolution.’’ This part (for which he had so much longed) came at approximately the same time as his interpretation of the Tsarevich Alexei in the first part of Vladimir Petrov’s magnificent, two-part historical spectacle, Peter the Great, and it was for this latter part that he received his first official decoration the same year. In his roster of well-known character parts, he was to appear much later as Franklin D. Roosevelt in Petrov’s The Battle of Stalingrad and in the title role of Grigori Kozintsev’s Don Quixote in 1957.

Cherkassov is primarily known internationally for his magnificent portrayals in the title roles of Eisenstein’s Alexander Nevsky and Ivan the Terrible. These were heavily stylized performances in the heroic mold of historical figures idealized in order to fulfill Soviet reinterpretation of Russian history and legend. Cherkassov had, however, been trained in the traditional mode of Russian realist acting. Once he had submitted himself to the special disciplines of performance imposed by Eisenstein on his players, which tended to turn the actors into a mobile part of the total pictorial design of each shot, Cherkassov gave both Nevsky and Ivan a grandeur on the screen which was as much due to his deep, reverberant voice as it was to his magnificent appearance.

In spite of the difficulties and severe physical trials Cherkassov and his fellow players endured while working on Alexander Nevsky and Ivan the Terrible, he became a close friend of Eisenstein. When invited to play Ivan late in 1941, the year of the Nazi invasion of Russia, Cherkassov had been evacuated with the Pushkin Theatre from besieged Leningrad to Novo Sibirsk in Siberia, from which he had to travel in the winter of early 1942 to the studios of Alma Ata in Central Asia where Eisenstein and his production team had been sent from Moscow. Cherkassov complained that Eisenstein treated his actors ‘‘like wax dummies,’’ and that he was forced to ‘‘practice long and tiringly to produce the tragic bend of Tsar Ivan’s figure.’’ In his Notes of a Soviet Actor he wrote further, ‘‘the general custom is to try to make the historical personage ‘accessible,’ to portray him as an ordinary person sharing the ordinary, human traits of other people. . . . But with Ivan we wanted a different tone. In him we wished chiefly to convey a sense of majesty, and this led us to adopt majestic forms.’’ His makeup was so brilliantly constructed by the makeup artist V. Goryunov that the composer for the film, Sergei Prokofiev, failed to recognize him when they were seated close together at the premiere. When Ivan the Terrible, Part II incurred Stalin’s hostility and the film was banned on ideological grounds, it was Cherkassov who accompanied Eisenstein (then in declining health) to a meeting with Stalin in 1947 at which, after considerable modifications were introduced, permission was granted to resume work. This was never to be, but in February 1948 when Eisenstein died, one of his last notes was a message penned to Cherkassov.

During the period he worked with Eisenstein, Cherkassov became a deputy of the Supreme Soviet, giving him a political as well as acting career. (Note: Nikolai Cherkassov should not be confused with his namesake, the actor Nikolai P. Cherkasov, who starred in many Russian films, most notably Pudovkin’s wartime biographical film, General Savorov.)

—Roger Manvell

CHEVALIER, Maurice

Nationality: French. Born: Maurice Auguste Chevalier in Ménilmontant, Paris, 12 September 1888. Education: Attended the École des Frères, Paris. Military Service: Began military service, 1913, wounded and taken prisoner, 1914, spent two years in German prisoner-of-war camp at Alten Grabow. Family: Married the dancer Yvonne Vallée, 1926 (divorced 1935). Career: 1901—began performing in Paris cafés as ‘‘Le Petit Chevalier’’; three-season contract with Folies Bergères; in second season chosen by star Mistinguett as partner in act, and began ten-year association with her; 1910—beginning of film career, though appeared in bit part in 1908; 1919—in London with Elsie Janis in revue Hullo, America; 1920—suffered breakdown, recuperated at Saujon; 1923–26—at Empire Theatre, Paris; 1928—contract with Paramount; 1929—aft release of The Love Parade, salary tripled; 1933—contract with MGM; 1936–39—made films in France and Britain; 1940–45—in seclusion, performing rarely; performance in Germany for French prisoners gave rise to rumors of collaboration; exonerated after war; 1947—resumed touring in one-man recitals; 1951—refused entry into U.S. for having signed Stockholm Appeal for banning of nuclear weapons; from mid-1950s—numerous TV appearances; 1968—last performance, at Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, Paris. Awards: Croix de Guerre, 1917; Légion d’honneur, 1938; Order of Leopold, Belgium, 1943; Special Academy Award, ‘‘for his contributions to the world of entertainment for more than half a century,’’ 1958; Ordre merite national, France, 1964. Died: 1 January 1972.

Films as Actor:

- 1908 Trop crédules (Durand)
- 1910 Un Marié qui se fait attendre (Gasnier)
- 1911 La Mariée recalitrante (Gasnier)
- 1914 Par habitude (Linder); La Valse renversante (Monca)
- 1917 Une Soirée mondaine (Diamant-Berger)
- 1922 Le Match Criqui-Ledoux (Diamant-Berger); Le Mauvais Garçon (Diamant-Berger)
- 1923 Gonzague (Diamant-Berger); L’Affaire de la Rue de Lourcine (Diamant-Berger); Par habitude (Diamant-Berger); Jim Bougne, boxeur (Diamant-Berger)
1928  Bonjour New York! (Florey)
1929  Innocents of Paris (Wallace) (as Maurice Marny); The Love Parade (Lubitsch) (as Count Alfred Renard)
1930  Paramount on Parade (Lubitsch) (as guest star); The Big Pond (Henley) (as Pierre Mirande); La Grande Mare (Henley and Bataille-Henri—French version of The Big Pond); Playboy of Paris (Berger) (as Albert Loriflan); Le Petit Café (Diamant-Berger—French version of Playboy of Paris)
1931  The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch) (as Niki); El cliente seductor (Rey and Blumenthal—short)
1932  One Hour with You (Lubitsch and Cukor) (as Dr. André Bertier); Make Me a Star (Beaudine) (guest appearance); The Stolen Jools (The Slippery Pearls) (McGann and others—short); Love Me Tonight (Marez-moi ce soir) (Mamoulian) (as Maurice Courtelin); Stopping the Show (Fleischer) (as voice)
1933  A Bedtime Story (Monsieur Bébé) (Taurog) (as René); The Way to Love (Taurog) (as François)
1934  The Merry Widow (The Lady Dances) (Lubitsch) (as Prince Danilo)
1935  Folies Bergère (The Man from the Folies Bergère) (Del Ruth) (as Eugene Charlier/Fernand, the Baron Cassini)
1936  The Beloved Vagabond (Bernhardt) (as Paragot); L’Homme du jour (The Man of the Hour) (Duvivier) (as himself/Alfred Boulard); Avec le sourire (With a Smile) (Maurice Tourneur) (as Victor Larnois)
1937  Break the News (Clair) (as François Verrier)
1939  Pièges (Personal Column) (Siodmak) (as Robert Fleury)
1947  Le Silence est d’or (Man about Town; Silence Is Golden) (Clair) (as Emile)
1949  Le Roi (A Royal Affair; The King) (Sauvajon) (as the King)
1950  Ma Pomme (Just Me; My Apple) (Sauvajon) (title role)
1952  Jouons le jeu . . . L’Avarice (Gillois) (as interviewee)
1953  ‘‘Amore 1954’’ ep. of Cento anni d’amore (De Felice); Schlagerparade (Ode); Chevalier de Ménilmontant (Baratier)
1954  Café Conc 1954 (Barthomieu—short); Sur toute la gamme (Régamey—short); Visite à Maurice Chevalier (Lucot and Folgoas—for TV)
1955  J’avais sept filles (My Seven Little Sins; I Have Seven Daughters) (Boyé) (as Count Andre)
1956  The Happy Road (Kelly) (title song)
1957  Rendez-vous avec Maurice Chevalier (Régamey—6 shorts); Love in the Afternoon (Wildier) (as Claude Chavasse); The Heart of Show Business (Staub) (as guest)
1958  Gigi (Minnelli) (as Honoré Lachaille)
1959  Count Your Blessings (Negulesco) (as Duc de St. Cloud)
1960  Can-Can (Walter Lang) (as Paul Barrière); Un, deux, trois, quatre? (Les Collants noirs; Black Tights) (Terence Young) (as narrator); A Breath of Scandal (Curtiz) (as Prince Philip); Pepe (Sidney) (as himself)
1961  Fanny (Logan) (as Panisse)
1962  Jessica (La Sage-femme, le curé, et le bon Dieu) (Negulesco) (as Father Antonio); In Search of the Castaways (Stevenson) (as Prof. Jacques Paganel)
1963  A New Kind of Love (Shavelson) (as himself)
1964  Panic Button (Sherman) (as Philippe Fontaine); I’d Rather be Rich (Smight) (as Philip Dulaine); linking sequence of La Chance et l’amour (Chabrol) (as interviewee)
1967  Monkeys, Go Home! (McLaglen) (as Father Sylvain)
1970  The Aristocats (Reitherman—animation) (as voice only—singer of title song)
1971  Le Chagrin et la pitié (The Sorrow and the Pity) (Marcel Ophüls) (songs)

Publications

By CHEVALIER: books—

On CHEVALIER: books—

On CHEVALIER: articles—

‘‘Maurice Chevalier’’ issue of Visages (Paris), October 1936.

Beylie, Claude, ‘‘Le Chevalier de carton,’’ in Ecran (Paris), March 1972.

After performing in French cafés as he struggled to establish his career, mixing clown capers with coarse song and dance routines, Maurice Chevalier gradually evolved the sophisticated man-about-town character which was to make him famous and loved by stage and screen audiences. His charismatic presence was enhanced by the attire that became his trademark: a formal or semiformal suit, straw hat, and sometimes a cane. His jaw extended, and sporting an engaging smile, he deftly cocked the hat and swung his cane as he strutted through song and dance numbers. While he did appear in 13 silent films, five of them created by his own production company, the full range of his debonair character could not be realized until the arrival of sound movies.

In 1929 the famous Parisian music hall star was fortunate to have Ernst Lubitsch direct his second American film, The Love Parade. Chevalier was teamed with Jeanette MacDonald in one of the most sophisticated movie musicals made in Hollywood. The breezy Gallic charm of the French singer proved so successful that, as the New York film critic Mordaunt Hall noted, the audience clapped for some scenes at the premiere of the film as if they were witnessing a stage performance. Some of the memorable Chevalier numbers were ‘‘Louise,’’ ‘‘My Ideal,’’ ‘‘You Brought a New Love to Me,’’ and ‘‘One Hour with You’’—songs that became part of the singer’s repertoire. The director Rouben Mamoulian also assisted the development of the French actor’s international reputation by once more using the Chevalier and MacDonald team in Love Me Tonight. Lubitsch’s adaptation of the Franz Lehar operetta, The Merry Widow, is the final entry in the trio of best films from the actor’s first Hollywood period.

Disenchanted with what he considered an endless repetition of the same screen character, Chevalier abandoned Hollywood and attempted to continue his career in France. His 1930s and 1940s films, such as L’Homme du jour and Pièges, reveal a wider range of acting ability because of the variety of his roles. In René Clair’s Le Silence est d’or he played the type of charming, older character role that would be typical of his final film successes in the United States.

As he turned 70, Chevalier had a second career in Hollywood with late 1950s films such as Billy Wilder’s Love in the Afternoon, and the memorable Gigi, a Lerner and Loewe musical. The highlight of Gigi was his beguiling rendition of the song ‘‘Thank Heaven for Little Girls.’’ The energy the actor projected in his early musicals was absent, but the warmth of his portrayal of Honoré Lachaille in Gigi revealed an acting talent that had matured. For years Chevalier was a favorite subject of entertainers doing impressions, who imitated his distinctive style as a singer, though they could never capture his charm.

—Donald McCaffrey
CHRISTIE, Julie

Films as Actress:

1962 Crooks Anonymous (Annakin) (as Babette La Vern)
1963 The Fast Lady (Annakin) (as Claire Chingford); Billy Liar (Schlesinger) (as Liz)
1965 Young Cassidy (Cardiff and Ford) (as Daisy Battles); Darling (Schlesinger) (as Diana Scott); Doctor Zhivago (Lean) (as Lara)
1966 Fahrenheit 451 (Truffaut) (as Linda/Clarisse)
1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger) (as Bathsheba Everdene); Tonite Let’s All Make Love in London (Whitehead—doc)
1968 Petulia (Lester) (title role)
1970 In Search of Gregory (Peter Wood) (as Catherine)
1971 The Go-Between (Losey) (as Marian Maudsley); McCabe and Mrs. Miller (Altman) (as Mrs. Miller)
1973 Don’t Look Now (Roeg) (as Laura Baxter)
1975 Shampoo (Ashby) (as Jackie Shawn); Nashville (Altman) (as herself)
1977 The Demon Seed (Cannell) (as Susan Harris)
1978 Heaven Can Wait (Beatty and Henry) (as Betty Logan)
1981 Memoirs of a Survivor (Gladwell) (as “D”); The Animals Film (Schonfeld and Alaux) (as narrator)
1982 The Return of the Soldier (Bridges) (as Kirry Baldry); Les Quarantièmes Rugissants (de Chalonges)
1983 Heat and Dust (Ivory) (as Anne)
1984 The Gold Diggers (Women Make Movies) (Potter) (as Ruby); Separate Tables (Schlesinger—for TV) (as Mrs. Shankland/Miss Ralitton-Bell); Broadside: Taking on the Bomb (doc for TV) (as narrator); Why Their News Is Bad News (for TV) (as narrator)
1985 Champagne amer (Vert)
1986 Miss Mary (Bemberg) (as Mary Mulligan); Power (Lumet) (as Ellen Freeman)
1987 Agent Orange: Policy of Poison (Iverson—doc) (as narrator); Yilmaz Güney: His Life, His Films (Cousins-Mills—for TV) (as narrator); Secret Obsession (Vert)
1988 La Memoire Tatouée (Beki) (as Betty); Dadah Is Death (Deadly Decision) (London—for TV) (as Barbara Barlow); Vater and Sonhe (Fathers and Sons; Sins of the Fathers) (Sinkel—for TV)
1990 Fools of Fortune (O’Connor) (as Mrs. Quinton)
1991 Short Step (Babenco)
1992 The Railway Station Man (Whyte—for TV) (as Helen Cuffe)
1996 Hamlet (Branagh) (as Gertrude); Dragonheart (Cohen) (as Aislinn)
1997 Afterglow (Rudolph) (as Phyllis Mann)
1999 The Miracle Maker (Hayer, Sokolov—for TV) (as God)
2000 Belphegor (Belphegor, Phantom of the Louvre) (Salomé)

Publications

By CHRISTIE: articles—

Interview in Photoplay (New York), September 1971.
Interview with A. Cockburn, in American Film (New York), January/February 1986.

On CHRISTIE: books—

On CHRISTIE: articles—

Focus on Film (London), Autumn 1973.
Klein, Andy, filmography in American Film, February 1990.
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1993.
Sight & Sound (London), May 1996.

On CHRISTIE: film—

* * *

Julie Christie became an international star in the decade her performances seemed to celebrate. (And a lot of Christie’s star appeal was tied into her youth and associated with the rebellious youth of the 1960s.) Her characters defied convention, joyfully reveling in zoom-lensed sensuality in Billy Liar, selfishly courting the high life in Darling, impetuously pursuing dangerous whims in Petulia. But in the morally schizoid world of 1960s cinema, screenwriters often exacted a high price for their characters’ sexual liberation. For such films—epitomized by her Oscar-winning Darling—Julie Christie was the perfect actress.

Her particular talent appeared double-edged. Her model’s beauty and the slick style in which she was photographed (especially by John Schlesinger), invited the viewer to admire her characters and to covet the glossy worlds they inhabited. But as Darling and later The Go-Between strikingly confirm, numerous Christie performances gradually reveal the enigmatic frost initially concealed by her characters’ husky-voiced charm, thus permitting the viewer to accept, even enjoy, their eventual comeuppance.

Starring roles in three prestigious but overproduced adaptations of novels—two historical (Boris Pasternak’s Doctor Zhivago and Thomas Hardy’s Far from the Madding Crowd), the third futuristic (Ray Bradbury’s Fahrenheit 451)—reflect Christie’s career-long resistance to typecasting. Dual performances as Oskar Werner’s dreadful, book-hating wife and his magnificent, book-loving mistress in Fahrenheit 451 might have broadened public perception of her acting range, but fade into the film’s pretentious moralizing, and are smothered by Truffaut’s apparent discomfort with an English-language film.

Three roles in early 1970s pictures underline more vividly her rejection of glamorous roles in favor of challenging, literate scripts filmed by brilliantly quirky directors. All three movies—Altman’s McCabe and Mrs. Miller, Losey’s The Go-Between, and Roeg’s Don’t Look Now—thrive on narrative ambiguity, and rebel against the filmic genres from which they are derived—Western, English romance, and gothic thriller, respectively—through consistent frustration of audience expectations. In all three, her identity as a star is submerged. In The Go-Between and McCabe and Mrs. Miller (a second Oscar nomination), Christie disappears from view for considerable stretches of time; in Don’t Look Now she is offscreen for more than a quarter of the film. In the movie The Go-Between, adapted by Harold Pinter from L. P. Hartley’s complex novel, her performance is integrated with the remarkable ensemble playing of its all-British cast. Yet in all three films, Christie dominates the frame when she is in it, and she displays a depth and range of acting skill, that in her 1960s work, seemed almost secondary to her beauty.

With enviable control, inner torment pokes through to disclose the characteristic Christie embodiment of the clash between illusion and reality in all three women: frizzy-headed prostitute Mrs. Miller (opposite Warren Beatty’s McCabe) in the eccentric, elliptical world of Robert Altman; radiant aristocrat Marian Maudsley who, by The Go-Between’s end, reveals unforgivable streaks of cruelty; and Laura Baxter, haunted by her husband’s and daughter’s deaths in the terrifying, fractured universe of Don’t Look Now, but regal as she musters her emotional resources. More recently, Christie played... a mother in the 1988 television movie Dadah Is Death. It was a part most would not identify with her early screen persona. She starred in this fact-based story about an Australian woman’s efforts to clear her son of drug charges in Malaysia. It was not a glamorous or offbeat role, but Christie played it with the same kind of intensity.

Christie is committed to political and social causes which, since Heaven Can Wait, have increasingly determined the roles she accepts: nuclear disarmament (Memoirs of a Survivor; Broadside: Taking on the Bomb, a television documentary); animal experimentation (The Animals Film); and feminism (The Gold Diggers, directed by Sally Potter and produced by a crew comprised entirely of women). The specialized, uncommercial nature of the films she tends to select, and her conscious shedding of the star image, have combined in recent years to limit Christie’s audience to that of art houses and cinema societies. The single exception is Heat and Dust, in which the actress portrays a young woman searching for clues to her great-aunt’s life in India, where Christie herself was born. Like The Go-Between, it uses the past to reflect upon the present; as in the three films of the early 1970s, Christie is offscreen for long periods. And like other Christie films, its source is a rich literary text, Ruth Prawer Jhabvala’s novel of the same name, a further example of the actress’s discriminating taste.

—Mark W. Estrin, updated by Linda J. Stewart

CHURIKOVA, Inna

Films as Actress:

1960 Tuchu nad Borškom (Clouds Over Borsk) (Vasili Ordinsky)
1963 Ya shagayu po Moskve (I Step Through Moscow) (Georgi Daneliya)
1964 Morozko (Jack Frost) (Aleksandr Rou) (as Marfushka)
1965 Tridtsat’ tri (Nenauchnaya fantastika) (33) (Georgi Daneliya); Strayapuka (The Cook) (Edmond Keosayan)
1966 Starshaya sestra (Elder Sister) (Georgi Natanson); 1966 Neulovimye mstiteli (The Elusive Revengers) (Edmond Keosayan)
1967 V ogne broda net. (There Is No Crossing in Fire) (Gleb Panfilov) (as Tanya Tyotkina)
1970 Nachalo (Beginning) (Panfilov) (as Pasha Stroganova)
1975 Prsxhu slova (I Want the Floor) (Panfilov) (as Yelisaveta Uvarova)
1979 Tot samyi Myukhgauchen (That Munchhausen) (Mark Zakharov—for TV) (as Jakobina Munchhausen)
1979 Tema (The Theme) (Panfilov) (as Sasha)
1981 Valentina (Valentine) (Panfilov) (as Anna)
1983 Voyenno-polevoy roman (War-Time Romance) (Pyotr Todorovsky); Vassa (Panfilov) (as Vassa Zheleznova)
1984 Myortvye dushi (Dead Souls) (Mikhail Shvejsjer—for TV)
1986 Kurjer (Messenger) (Karen Shakhnazarov) (as Ivan’s mother)
1989 Mat (Mother) (Panfilov) (as Pelageia Nilonova); Gamlet (Hamlet) (Panfilov) (as Gertrud)
1990 Rebro Adama (Adam’s Rib) (Vyacheslav Krishtofovich) (as Nina)
1993 Plashch Kazanovy (Il Mantello di Casanova; Casanova’s Raincoat) (Aleksandr Galin)
1993 God sobaki (The Year of a Dog) (Semyon Aranovich) (as Vera)
1994 Kurochka Ryaba (Ryaba My Chicken) (Andrei Konchalovsky) (as Asya)
1995 Shirli-Myrli (What a Mess!) (Vladimir Menshov) (as Krolliks’ mother)

Publications

On CHURIKOVA: books—

* * *

Inna Churikova’s plain looks and wide-eyed demeanor often obscure the fact that she is a film star of the highest stature. A leading actress of Soviet and Russian cinema, she created a gallery of remarkable female portraits. Her seemingly common protagonists usually show uncommon talents or reveal striking personalities under the surface. Because Churikova’s unique presence in Soviet cinema has done much to strengthen the self-esteem of ordinary women, her oeuvre can be described as a truly feminist project. Her best roles were in films made at the height of the Cold War, which is why her work is little known and insufficiently appreciated in the West.

Churikova first appeared in films in the early 1960s, cast in supporting roles in popular Soviet films like the action-adventure Neulovimye mstiteli (1966) and in comedies by Georgi Danelia. But it was not until she met Gleb Panfilov (1934—), a former chemical engineer from Magnitogorsk who had then studied cinematography and directing at VGIK, that she found her real artistic self. For more than two decades Churikova worked almost exclusively with Panfilov, whom she also married. The couple created a series of remarkable films that centered on strikingly original, strong, and memorable female protagonists. According to film historian Neya Zorkaya, Panfilov and Churikova’s special achievement was in their ability to tell stories of “artistic, unusual and even exceptional women capable of daring actions, even when their individuality was obstructed by everyday routine.”

Churikova’s first big role under Panfilov’s direction was in the 1967 film V ogne broda net. It is the story of Tanya Tyotkina, an ordinary peasant girl and a committed revolutionary who discovers her exclusive talent for naivist painting during the civil war of 1918–1920. The film is about the dilemmas faced by the non-traditional heroine when she has to make choices between the call of history and her own artistic realization. The next Churikova/Panfilov film continued her specialization in roles of ordinary women who have to make extraordinary decisions. The protagonist of Nachalo (1970) is a weaver in a provincial factory who plays in an amateur theater on her free evenings, and who is unexpectedly given the chance to test for the role of Jeanne d’Arc in a forthcoming production. This remarkable story of personal growth and artistic ambition is one of Churikova’s best roles.

In Proshu slova (1975) Churikova played Yelizaveta Uvarova, an idealist and hard working council official in a provincial Russian town, eager to improve the poor living conditions in the worker’s quarters. Uvarova’s contradictions were representative of the problems faced by what has been described by critics as “a Soviet superwoman,” one who is in control of her career and ambitions but who nonetheless remains lonely and unhappy in her personal life. The film, which was one of the Russian examples of what in an Eastern European context was known as a cinema of moral anxiety, introduced a new kind of critical realist reflection on the Soviet socialist reality.

In Tema (1979) Churikova played yet another provincial woman, a literature-loving museum guide in the historic town of Vladimir. At work she accidentally meets a famous writer, played by the great Soviet actor Mikhail Ulyanov, who has withdrawn to Vladimir in order to live through a creative crisis. Theirs is an encounter between the creative personality of the writer, shown here as a conformist and self-obsessed egotist, and Churikova’s ordinary protagonist, who has preserved a much higher moral integrity. Based on the play Last Summer in Chulimsk by Alexander Vampilov and set in a Siberian inn, Panfilov/Churikova’s next film, Valentina (1981), once again treated the topic of choices faced by ordinary women and issues of personal integrity.

The 1980s for Churikova and Panfilov were the time of literary adaptations: two based on Maxim Gorky’s work, and one on Shakespeare. The pre-revolutionary melodrama Vassa (1983) focused on yet another strong character, the shipyard owner Vassa Zheleznova, and her family tragedy. In Mat (1989), Churikova was Pelageia Nilovna, a proletarian woman in a drama of personal revolutionary growth. Based on real events from the time of the 1905 revolution in Russia, this work of Gorky had first been adapted for the screen by Vsevolod Pudovkin in 1926, and then by Mark Donskoy in 1955. Panfilov’s adaptation was acclaimed at Cannes, at the European Film Awards, and won several of the newly established Russian Nika awards. In 1989 Churikova also appeared as Gertrude in an unconventional adaptation of Shakespeare’s Hamlet. In the 1980s Churikova also started appearing in films by other directors, where she mostly had important supporting roles. An example is Pyotr Todorovsky’s drama Voyenno-plevoy roman (1983), which revolved around the post-war traumatic encounter between a former front-line officer, now happily married, and a former field nurse who now faces the harsh realities of life. The film was nominated for an Oscar for best foreign film; Churikova, who played the protagonist’s wife, won an award at the Berlin Film Festival for her performance.

In the 1990s Churikova had several central roles in films made by directors other than Panfilov. Her first high-profile role was in the bittersweet comedy-drama Rebro Adama (1990, directed by Vyacheslav Krishchovitch), in which Churikova played a twice-divorced mother sharing a cramped Moscow apartment with her two grown-up daughters and her old mother. Churikova’s next role was as Vera in God sobaki (1993) where she was a simple-minded middle-aged provincial woman living through a troublesome relationship with a newly released convict. In Plashch Kazanovy (1993), a film which is believed to be an allegory of Russia’s post-communist flirtation with the West, she played a Russian woman who accidentally gets involved with an Italian gigolo. In Andrei Konchalovsky’s Kourotnchka Riaba (1994), Churikova appeared as Assia, an old maid who lives by herself in a remote village and makes a living by selling eggs and brewing home-made spirits. One day she finds a miraculous golden egg, an event which triggers a series of problems for her and her fellow villagers. The film, which is a sequel to Konchalovsky’s celebrated and banned 1966 Istoriya Asi Klyachinoy, kotoraya lyubila, da ne vshla zamuzh (1966), is equally critical of the social realities of post-communist Russia. It was nominated for Golden Palm at the 1994 Cannes film festival.

—Dina Iordanova

CLEESE, John

Films as Actor:

1968 Interlude (Billington) (as TV publicist); The Best House in London (Savile); The Bliss of Mrs. Blossom (McGrath)
1970 The Rise and Rise of Michael Rimmer (Billington) (as Plumer, + co-sc); The Magic Christian (McGrath) (as director in Sotheby’s, + co-sc); The Statue (Amateau) (as Harry)
1971 And Now for Something Completely Different (Macnaughton) (+ co-sc)
1972 It’s a 2’ 6” above the Ground World (The Love Ban) (Thomas)
1974 Romance with a Double Bass (Robert Young) (as Musician Smychikov, + co-sc)
1975 Monty Python and the Holy Grail (Gillian and Terry Jones) (as Sir Lancelot/minor roles, + co-sc)
1977 The Strange Case of the End of Civilisation as We Know It (McGrath—for TV) (as Arthur Sherlock Holmes, + co-sc)
1979 Monty Python’s Life of Brian (Life of Brian) (Terry Jones) (as Reg/minor roles, + co-sc); The Secret Policeman’s Ball (Graef)
1980 The Taming of the Shrew (Jonathan Miller—for TV) (as Petrushko)
1981 Time Bandits (Gilliam) (as Robin Hood); The Great Muppet Caper (Henson) (as Neville)
1982 The Secret Policeman’s Other Ball (Temple); Monty Python Live at the Hollywood Bowl (Terry Hughes and Ian MacNaughton) (various roles, + co-sc); Privates on Parade (Blakemore) (as Major Giles Flack)
1983 Monty Python’s the Meaning of Life (Terry Jones) (as Second Fish/Grim, + co-sc, co-mus); Yellowbeard (Damski) (as Blind Pew)
1985 Silverado (Kasdan) (as Sheriff Langston)
1986 Clockwise (Morahan) (as Brian Stimpson)
1987 The Secret Policeman’s Third Ball
1988 A Fish Called Wanda (Charles Crichton) (as Archie Leach, + exec pr, sc)
1989 The Big Picture (Guest) (as bartender); Erik the Viking (Terry Jones) (as Halfdan the Black)

Other Film:

1972 Rentadick (Jim Clark) (co-sc)

Publications

By CLEESE: books—

The Strange Case of the End of Civilisation as We Know It, with Jack Hobbs and Joe McGrath, London, 1970.

By CLEESE: articles—

Interview in Time Out (London), 5 November 1982.
Interview in Interview (New York), April 1985.
Interview with Quentin Falk, in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1988.
Interview in Premiere (Boulder), January 1997.

On CLEESE: books—

On CLEESE: articles:

Gilliatt, Penelope, “Height’s Delight,” in New Yorker, 2 May 1988.

“John Cleese,” in Film Dope (Nottingham), no. 50, April 1994.

The bulk of John Cleese’s acting career featured his work as a comedian and ranged from an occasional sophisticated stage comedy to surreal, odd humor typical of British comedy linked to the radio Goon Show, the college revue, and the variety stage. Critics lauded as superior his Petruchio in the BBC TV version of The Taming of the Shrew. However, most of the actor’s portraits were in original comedies, some of which he had a hand in writing. Cleese’s most popular and critically successful solo performance—at least in the United States—appeared in 1988 with A Fish Called Wanda. He was the lead actor, writer, and executive producer of this movie in which he played a role close to that of the light, sophisticated male comedian of the thirties—a character with romantic possibilities with the female comedienne. As Archie Leach, a lawyer, the actor played the role of a person who realized he led a staid existence and wanted to break away from such a stuffy life.

The premise of A Fish Called Wanda tends to follow that which was sometimes used by writer-director Preston Sturges who created such witty comedies as Easy Living (1937), as a writer, and The Lady Eve (1941), as a writer-director. This Cleese vehicle uses the kind of picturesque characters that Sturges used for a broader type of comedy. The 1988 comedy features two American con-artist-robbers, Wanda, played by Jamie Lee Curtis, and Otto, enacted by Kevin Kline. These picaresque characters that Sturges used for a broader type of comedy. In his physical demeanor and voice this character that Cleese portrays is another authority figure lampoon. Then, ten years later, the actor creates another picaresque character. As an insane lawyer in Splitting Heirs (1993) the comedian kills a number of people “to clear the path” for the rightful heir to achieve the title of duke. When the heir finds the lawyer is responsible for the deaths, he declares, “You’re mad!” With aplomb the killer joyfully replies, “Well, we are all a bit mad.”

While the inventory of humor in the actor’s craft proves to be his vocal intonations, phrasings, and timing of responses, Cleese has a definite, unusual physical side to his comedy. In his Monty Python period he was noted for his silly walks—exaggerated, eccentric movements of his long legs. A 6’ 4” man, he also created funny movements when frustrated or angry by odd jumps and twists or, when playing an eccentric character, by just walking away with an erratic gait. The former was most often displayed when he portrayed Basil Fawlty in the situation comedy series Fawlty Towers. The latter is evident in Splitting Heirs, with his creation of the quirky, de-ranged lawyer.

In 1994 Cleese portrayed characters removed form his usual comedic personae: Dr. Waldeman in Frankenstein and Dr. Plumford in Rudyard Kipling’s The Jungle Book, a live action cinema version of the novel. However, that same year he would contribute to the cartoon, The Swan Princess, with the voice-over portrait for a frisky frog named Jean-Bob. His most distinctive voice-over portrayal developed when he dubbed in the dialogue for a gorilla named Ape for the 1997 George of the Jungle. This amazing talking primate provides seduce Wanda. Cleese, as Archie, responds in lawyer type terms: “All right. All right. I apologize. I’m really, really sorry—unservingly... I offer a complete and utter retraction. The imputation was totally without basis.”

Less than a decade earlier, broader portraits of the upper-class Englishman show Cleese as a master of depicting this type of comic figure. Critic Anthony Slide lauds the actor’s enactment of a minor role in Time Bandits (1981) and views it as a lampoon of royalty: “Cleese is unquestionably the funniest man in the film, and one can only wish that his sequence had been longer. As Robin Hood, Cleese appears to have based his characterization on the present British Royal Family, patronizingly distributing wealth to the poor. ‘Have you met the poor? Charming people,’ he says.” (Essay on Time Bandits in Magill’s Cinema Annual 1982.)

A few more examples of the variety of roles and the range of John Cleese’s acting deserve a concluding survey. In Monty Python and the Holy Grail (1975) as Lancelot he botches a heroic rescue from the tower of a person he believes is a fair damsel. After he has hacked his way through a crowd of wedding guests, killing a multitude with his sword, he finds out that the prisoner in the tower is the groom who does not want to get married. His discovery is capped with a meek, “Sorry.” As a con man and informer named Blind Pew in a swashbuckling pirate movie, Yellowbeard (1983) Cleese enacts one of his most picaresque parts. With an exaggerated claim that he has such acute hearing he can detect the pirate Yellowbeard from the rustling of his beard, he gives his pronouncements in a harsh voice, using the accent of a growling, low-class cockney. Three years later, in the 1986 Clockwise, Cleese is back playing the would-be cultured gentleman as a headmaster who is a tyrant and an unreasonable disciplinarian, barking reprimands over a public address system as he views questionable activities on a school playground. In his physical demeanor and voice this character that Cleese portrays is another authority figure lampoon. Then, ten years later, the actor creates another picaresque character. As an insane lawyer in Splitting Heirs (1993) the comedian kills a number of people “to clear the path” for the rightful heir to achieve the title of duke. When the heir finds the lawyer is responsible for the deaths, he declares, “You’re mad!” With aplomb the killer joyfully replies, “Well, we are all a bit mad.”

While the inventory of humor in the actor’s craft proves to be his vocal intonations, phrasings, and timing of responses, Cleese has a definite, unusual physical side to his comedy. In his Monty Python period he was noted for his silly walks—exaggerated, eccentric movements of his long legs. A 6’ 4” man, he also created funny movements when frustrated or angry by odd jumps and twists or, when playing an eccentric character, by just walking away with an erratic gait. The former was most often displayed when he portrayed Basil Fawlty in the situation comedy series Fawlty Towers. The latter is evident in Splitting Heirs, with his creation of the quirky, de-ranged lawyer.

In 1994 Cleese portrayed characters removed form his usual comedic personae: Dr. Waldeman in Frankenstein and Dr. Plumford in Rudyard Kipling’s The Jungle Book, a live action cinema version of the novel. However, that same year he would contribute to the cartoon, The Swan Princess, with the voice-over portrait for a frisky frog named Jean-Bob. His most distinctive voice-over portrayal developed when he dubbed in the dialogue for a gorilla named Ape for the 1997 George of the Jungle. This amazing talking primate provides an officious counselor and cook for a handsome but dense strongman who is a live action lampoon of Tarzan. While this character has the upighted. British pretension Cleese was so famous for in the Monty Python television and film series, his advice to George sometimes lapses into the primitive mating habits of his genes.

Two other enactments reveal some of the famous officious and pretentious characters he employed in his Monty Python and Fawlty Towers days: A manager of a zoo in Fierce Creatures (1997) with the same cast as the successful film comedy, A Fish Called Wanda, and a hotel manager in a 1999 remake of the 1970 The Out of Towners, a vehicle for Jack Lemmon and Sandy Dennis. In the more recent version starring Steve Martin and Goldie Hawn, critics found this humorous dramatic reinstatement inferior to the original. However, some evaluators gave kudos to Cleese, who provides the most intriguing and risible moments in the movie.

John Cleese has enjoyed a rich and varied career as both a writer and actor for stage, television, and movies. His innovation as a writer obviously makes it possible for him to design parts with which he can exhibit a variety of roles and a range of acting skills. This combination of writing and acting to best show his talent was, of course, most evident in the 12 Fawlty Towers television shows and the feature movie A Fish Called Wanda.

—Donald W. McCaffrey

CLIFT, Montgomery

On CLIFT: books—

On CLIFT: articles—

Films as Actor:

1948 The Search (Zinnemann) (as Ralph Stevenson); Red River (Hawks) (as Matthew Garth)
1949 The Heiress (Wyler) (as Morris Townsend)
1950 The Big Lift (Seaton) (as Danny MacCullough)
1951 A Place in the Sun (Stevens) (as George Eastman)
1953 I Confess (Hitchcock) (as Father Michael William Logan);
From Here to Eternity (Zinnemann) (as Robert E. Lee “Prew” Prewitt); Stazione termini (Indiscretion of an American Wife; Terminal Station; Indiscretion) (de Sica) in the more recent version starring Steve Martin and Goldie Hawn, critics found this humorous dramatic reinstatement inferior to the original. However, Montgomery Clift (right) in Judgment at Nuremberg

* * *

Among the 17 films that Montgomery Clift appeared in, it is impossible to point to any one role as “defining” Clift’s image on screen, in the way that A Streetcar Named Desire and Rebel without a Cause established Brando’s and James Dean’s personalities in the public’s mind. Yet Clift was one of the first actors of his generation to capture the attention of moviegoing audiences with performances that were sensitive, complex, and deeply introspective in nature. The combination of intensity and vulnerability that he brought to his characters—qualities magnified in later years by the car accident that destroyed his matinee-idol good looks and compounded the problems of an already troubled personality—was unique in 1948, when Clift was catapulted to stardom by the release of his first two films, The Search (for which he received an Oscar nomination) and Red River.

Red River in particular represents an important juncture in film history, pairing Clift with John Wayne in a genre usually defined by its rigid codes of male behavior. The central conflict in Howard Hawks’s film, however, is between Wayne’s brand of brutal, bullying masculinity and Clift’s quiet blend of toughness and compassion. Theirs is a clash of reason and brute strength, and although their reconciliation takes the form of a violent physical confrontation, the role of Matthew Garth clearly presents Clift as an alternative to the rugged, unyielding protagonists of traditional Westerns. It was a part that heralded a shift in the characteristics that would define screen heroes in the decade to come.

Clift portrayed another man challenging stereotypical views of masculinity—this time in the U.S. military—in From Here to Eternity. As Prewitt, the bugler and former boxer who silently stands up to the harassment of his fellow soldiers when he refuses to reenter the ring after blinding a man, Clift gives one of his strongest performances. In the role that brought him his third Oscar nomination (the second was for A Place in the Sun), he conveys both the courage and the inner torment of a man whose unshakable moral convictions form the heart of his sense of self-worth, yet cause him to be labeled a coward. The complexity that Clift brings to the character is a trait that marks his work as a whole, charging his performances with an underlying pain that few actors of his day dared to reveal.

These qualities were a central part of Clift’s relationships with women in films. Clift never overwhelms women in the manner of Gable or Flynn but attracts them instead with an almost hypnotic emotional power that often seems to arise from some deep inner need. This is especially true of his films with Elizabeth Taylor, whose dark beauty made her an ideal physical match for Clift on the screen. In both A Place in the Sun and Raintree County, the similarity between the two is so striking that they might almost be brother and sister, and there is an erotic tension in their work together that reaches its climax in the former film’s extraordinary close-ups of the couple’s romantic scenes. Clift’s vulnerability is also a factor in his relationship with Donna Reed in From Here to Eternity and, on a platonic level, in the understanding and friendship between his character and that of Marilyn Monroe in The Misfits.

The tension and internal conflict in Clift’s screen persona form the basis for his portrayals of the priest in Hitchcock’s I Confess and Noah Ackerman, the Jewish soldier battling anti-Semitism, in The Young Lions. Each man is placed at odds with society by his religious convictions, and Clift conveys the hidden pain of both Father Michael’s struggle with his conscience and Ackerman’s scrappy refusal to tolerate religious slurs. Clift’s intensity took on an increasingly unsettling quality in the films following his accident (which occurred during the filming of Raintree County), and in Suddenly Last Summer, The Misfits, and Freud, in which he played the title role, there is a tightly wound, neurotic edge to the characters that is both compelling and disturbing. In Stanley Kramer’s Judgment at Nuremberg this quality reaches its peak in Clift’s brief supporting role as a mildly retarded man testifying against Nazi war criminals. It is a riveting performance, jarringly real and often painful to watch, and it brought Clift his fourth Academy Award nomination. It is this sense of emotional risk-taking that makes Clift a magnetic presence in even his less effective roles and which places his best work next to that of the finest actors of his generation.

With the recent revelation of the fact of Clift’s bisexuality, one is able to see more into the correlation between his star personality (that of vulnerability, sensitivity, and almost effeminate masculinity closer to androgyny) and the real-life Clift (whose swinging sexuality and unsettling dissatisfaction throughout life mirrors and projects a troubled soul onto the big screen). Clift’s own claim regarding this uncertainty in him reveals more than a touch of stubbornness and pride: “I don’t want to be labeled as either a pansy or a heterosexual. Labeling is so self-limiting” (quoted by Graham McCann in Rebel Males). Throughout Clift’s career, one sees a wide range of roles played, each of them nothing short of constant erotic tensions coming not only from the dramatic characters or his acting but also from a lifelong felt and lived conflict of an unsettled sexuality.

—Janet E. Lorenz, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

CLOONEY, George

Nationality: American. Born: George Timothy Clooney in Lexington, Kentucky, 6 May 1961; son of television anchor/talk show host Nick Clooney; nephew of singer Rosemary Clooney and actor Jose Ferrer; cousin of actor Miguel Ferrer. Education: Studied at Northern Kentucky University. Family: Married Talia Balsam, 1989; divorced, 1992. Career: Appeared on his father’s talk show, The Nick Clooney Show; at age five, 1966; moved to Los Angeles to pursue an acting career, 1982; won a role on the short-lived TV sitcom E/R, 1984; appeared on such TV series as Riptide, The Golden Girls, Hunter, and Murphy Brown, and had recurring roles on such TV sitcoms as The Facts of Life and Roseanne, 1985–94; won fame as a regular on the television drama ER, 1994; voted Sexiest Man Alive by People magazine, 1997; signed a three-year development deal with Warner Bros., 1998; boycotted the television entertainment news show Entertainment Tonight, when its sister show, Hard Copy, broadcast an unauthorized clip of him and a former girlfriend, 1998; left the cast of ER to focus on feature film work, 1999. Awards: Outstanding Performance by an Ensemble in a Drama Series Screen Actors Guild Award, for ER, 1998; Outstanding Performance by an Ensemble in a Drama Series Screen Actors Guild Award, for ER, 1999. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

- 1986 Combat High (Combat Academy) (Israel—for TV) (as Major Biff Woods); Grizzly II: The Predator
- 1987 Return to Horror High (Froehlich) (as Oliver)
- 1988 Return of the Killer Tomatoes! (De Bello) (as Matt Stevens)
- 1990 Red Surf (Boos) (as Remar)
- 1992 Unbecoming Age (The Magic Bubble) (A. Ringel, D. Ringel) (as Mac)
- 1993 The Harvest (Marconi) (as Lip-Synching Transvestite); Without Warning: Terror in the Towers (Levi—for TV) (as Kevin Shea)
1996  From Dusk Till Dawn (Rodriguez) (as Seth Gecko); One Fine Day (Hoffman) (as Jack Taylor)
1997  Batman & Robin (Schumacher) (as Batman/Bruce Wayne); Full Tilt Boogie (Kelly) (as himself); The Peacemaker (Leder) (as Thomas Devoe)
1998  Waiting for Woody (Heslov) (as himself); Out of Sight (Soderbergh) (as Jack Foley); The Thin Red Line (Malick) (as Captain Charles Bosche)
1999  South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut (Parker) (as Voice of Dr. Gouache); Three Kings (Russell) (as Archie Gates)
2000  O Brother, Where Art Thou? (Coen) (as Ulysses Everett McGill); The Perfect Storm (Petersen) (as Captain Billy Tyne); Fail Safe (Fears—for TV) (+ pr)
2001  Ocean's Eleven (Soderbergh) (as Danny Ocean)

Other Films:
2000  Metal God (Herek) (pr)

Publications

By Clooney: articles—

“Je m’appelle George,” interview with Cecilia Peck, in Premiere (France), August 1997.

On CLOONEY: books—

On CLOONEY: articles—

Conant, J., “Heartthrob Hotel,” in Vanity Fair (New York), December 1996.
Rader, Dotson, “It’s Finally About Friendship,” in Parade (New York), 7 June 1998.

* * *

George Clooney’s magnetism and smoldering good looks made him one of the heartthrobs of 1990s movies and television. With a show business pedigree—his father is Nick Clooney, longtime television anchor-talk show host, and his aunt is singer Rosemary—Clooney initially earned stardom playing Dr. Doug Ross on the hit television drama, ER. He then emulated Bruce Willis rather than Tom Selleck as a popular television actor who successfully segued into starring screen roles.

Pre-ER—and despite his professional connections—Clooney was just one of the countless Tinseltown hopefuls who found small and not-so-small parts on television series and in made-for-TV and theatrical features. The quality of his projects is reflected in their less-than-A-list titles: Combat High; Return to Horror High; and Return of the Killer Tomatoes! In The Harvest, a wobbly thriller starring his cousin, Miguel Ferrer, Clooney is billed near the bottom of the credits as a “lip-synching transvestite.” He did appear as a regular on a number of TV series, the best of which were The Facts of Life (cast during the 1985–87 television season) and Roseanne (in 1988–89); interestingly, his very first TV series also was titled ER (albeit with slightly different punctuation). This show was a short-lived sitcom that starred Elliott Gould.

Clooney’s success on the drama ER allowed him to win lead roles on the big screen; had it not been for the TV series, it is doubtful that he would have earned his shot at movie stardom. The actor has been cast in films of all genres. While he was merely a presence as Batman/Bruce Wayne in Batman & Robin, a drab, by-the-numbers Hollywood action-adventure fantasy, he was far more effective in two very different (albeit formulaic) films: the action thriller The Peacemaker, cast as a cocky, take-charge U.S. Army Special Forces intelligence operative; and the romantic comedy One Fine Day, playing a New York newspaper columnist-single parent who finds love with a divorced single mom.

To date, Clooney’s most distinctive and memorable screen roles have been in quirky, cutting-edge films of varying quality, in which he played lawbreakers or lawbreaker wannabes. In each, his characters are slightly off-center, and tinged with a streak of devilish, anarchic insanity. In Robert Rodriguez’s pointlessly violent From Dusk Till Dawn, Clooney is a murderous desperado making his way across the American Southwest and into Mexico; here, his mere presence transcends the overblown material and set pieces that play through to their gratuitously bloody conclusions. He is perfectly cast as an Elmore Leonard character, a just-escaped-from-jail bank robber who flirts and tangles with a sexy FBI agent, in Steven Soderbergh’s Out of Sight. By far Clooney’s best film to date is David O. Russell’s sharp, entertaining Three Kings, set at the end of the Gulf War, in which he is completely believable as a likable yet larcenous American soldier.

In 1999, Clooney left ER to work full-time on screen. Given his looks and talent, he can expect a long and successful big-screen career—if he chooses the right roles in the right projects.

—Rob Edelman

CLOSE, Glenn

Films as Actress:

1979 The Orphan Train (William A. Graham—for TV) (as Jessica); Too Far to Go (Fielder Cook—for TV) (as Rebecca Kuehn)
1982 The World According to Garp (George Roy Hill) (as Jenny Fields)
1983 The Big Chill (Kasdan) (as Sarah Cooper)
1984 The Stone Boy (Cain) (as Ruth Hillerman); The Natural (Levinson) (as Iris Raines); Something about Amelia (Haines—for TV) (as Gail Bennett); Greystoke: The Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes (Hudon) (voice only, dubbed Andie MacDowell’s voice)
1985 Jagged Edge (Marquand) (as Teddie Barnes); Maxie (Free Spirit) (Aaron) (as Jan/Maxie)
1987 Fatal Attraction (Lyne) (as Alex Forrest); Gandahar (Light Years) (Wernstein—animation) (voice only)
1988 Stones for Ibarra (Gold—for TV) (as Sara Everton); Dangerous Liaisons (Frears) (as Marquise de Merteuil)
1989 Immediate Family (Parental Guidance) (Kaplan) (as Linda Spector)
1990 Hamlet (Zeffirelli) (as Gertrude); Reversal of Fortune (Schroeder) (as Martha “Sunny” von Bulow); I’ll Take Romance (Haggard—for TV)
1991 Sarah, Plain and Tall (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (title role, co-exec pr); Meeting Venus (Szabo) (as Karin Anderson); Hook (Spielberg) (as pirate); Brooklyn Laundry (as Birdie)
1992 Lincoln (Kunhardt—for TV doc) (as voice of Mary Todd Lincoln)
1993 Skylark (Sargent—for TV) (as Sarah Witting + exec pr)
1993 The House of the Spirits (August) (as Ferula)
1994 The Paper (Ron Howard) (as Alicia Clark)
1995 Serving in Silence: The Margarethe Cammermeyer Story (Bleckner—for TV) (title role + exec pr)
1996 Mary Reilly (Fears) (as Mrs. Farraday); 101 Dalmations (as Cruella De Vil); Mars Attacks! (Tim Burton) (as First Lady Martha Dale)
1997 Paradise Road(Beresford) (as Adrienne Pargiter); Air Force One (Peter sen) (as Vice President Kathryn Bennett); In the Gloaming (Reeve—for TV) (as Janet)
1999 Tarzan (Buck & Lima) (voice of Kala); Sarah, Plain and Tall; Winter’s End (Jordan—for TV) (title role + exec pr); Cookie’s Fortune (Altman) (as Camille Dixon); The Lady with the Torch (Heeley—doc) (herself as host)
2000 102 Dalmations (Lima) (as Cruella De Vil); Things You Can Tell Just By Looking at Her (Garcia) (as Dr. Elaine Keener)
2001 South Pacific (Richard Pearce)

Other Films:

1987 Do You Mean There Are Still Real Cowboys? (Blair—doc) (pr)
1995 Journey (McLoughlin—for TV) (exec pr)

Publications

By CLOSE: articles—

Interview with B. Hadleigh, in Film Monthly, July 1990.
Interview with Frank Spotnik, in American Film, November/December 1991.
‘‘Glenn Close, Opera Queen: The Diva of Meeting Venus Is Game for Anything Gay,’’ in Advocate (Los Angeles), 3 December 1991.
‘‘Playing the Diva,’’ interview with Stephen Schiff, in New Yorker, 14 November 1994.
‘‘Leaving the Role,’’ in New Yorker, 10 July 1995.

On CLOSE: book—

On CLOSE: articles—

‘‘Close Call,’’ in Moveline (Escondido), November 1996.
Thomson, D., and others, ‘‘Who’s the Best Actress in Hollywood,’’ in Moveline (Escondido), November 1996.

* * * *

The early 1980s witnessed the emergence of three actresses who still enjoy great popularity and critical acclaim: Meryl Streep, Jessica Lange, and Glenn Close. Graduating from five years of stage experience, Close earned five Academy Award nominations between 1982 and 1988 in five of the most popular and successful films of the decade. During this period, Close also firmly established her credentials as a distinguished actress on Broadway (winning a Tony Award for The Real Thing) and on television (receiving an Emmy nomination for Something About Amelia). From this explosive start, her superb skills as an actress continually grew while her roles reflected the cultural priorities of the times.

Close’s early 1980s films created an image of conservative femininity: a nurturing, virtuous, attractive, and vulnerable woman. She plays an overly protective mother in The World According to Garp, a serene and loving wife in The Big Chill, and a defied muse in The Natural. This stereotype (which won Close her first three Academy Award nominations) also underscores the dilemma of women’s roles during a decade that championed masculine heroism. Actresses found themselves playing characters who often merely supported the male lead in his endeavors. When this stereotype of the feminine ideal becomes threatened in The World According to Garp (Jenny Field’s mothering leads her to a radical feminism) or questioned in Jagged Edge (Teddie Barnes improperly uses the legal system to protect her lover, the killer), the character is punished by assassination or physical and emotional trauma.

Jagged Edge introduced the opposite side of Close’s stardom: the feminine threat. Her next two roles, Alex in Fatal Attraction and the Marquise de Merteuil in Dangerous Liaisons, unleashed characters who follow the tradition of the femme fatale; women who are sexy, independent, manipulative, and duplicitous. Alex is a successful businesswoman, but unmarried and childless. Her desire to achieve a ‘‘traditional’’ family initiates a perverse drive to replace the legitimate wife. Her unsuccessful attempt results in Alex’s death (at the hands of the legitimate wife), the punishment of the adulterous husband, and the reestablishment of the nuclear family. The Marquise’s social and sexual machinations, based upon contempt for love and masculine power, destroy everyone including herself. Utterly alone, she recognizes her contempt has denied her any chance of happiness. This second stereotype (which won Close her next two Academy Award nominations) again underscores the dilemma of women’s roles in 1980s Hollywood. Actresses found themselves playing characters who often threatened the male lead and deserved punishment for their aggression.

The tension between these two stereotypes reached its apex in Maxie. Close plays a character who literally manifests the notion of feminine duality. Portraying a dedicated wife possessed by the spirit of a freewheeling ‘‘flapper,’’ she must synthesize the contradictions of these two characters to achieve peace and emerge as an ideal figure of womanhood.

Close’s early difficulty in finding films that did not perpetuate the two extremes of the feminine stereotype found resolution during the 1990s. She combined attributes of the strong, determined woman with a more traditional femininity and created characters with complex psychological motivations. This synthesis links her to Bette Davis, whom she admits emulating. Davis always played a powerful woman inflected in two ways: a self-sacrificing and maternal figure or a manipulative and destructive one. Close continues this tradition but in a way that doesn’t necessarily present these two types as mutually exclusive. In Immediate Family, Hamlet, The House of the Spirits, In the Gloaming, Serving in Silence, Paradise Road, and the Sarah, Plain and Tall trilogy (Sarah, Plain and Tall, Skylark, and Sarah, Plain and Tall: Winter’s End) she plays strong, nurturing, virtuous, and yet vulnerable women. Each character offers a different facet of this model, from lesbian mother to repressed spinster, but the results ultimately reaffirm feminine strength, love, and determination. Even her “role” as Kala in the animated Tarzan emphasizes these culturally important characteristics of nurturing. In Reversal of Fortune, Meeting Venus, The Paper, Cookie’s Fortune, and 101 Dalmations she plays strong, sexy, independent, and manipulative women who are punished in some way for the problems they create. In Reversal of Fortune she plays “Sunny” von Bulow whose “failure” to be a traditional mother offers another explanation why her husband attempts to kill her. In Meeting Venus she plays Karin Anderson, an opera diva whose affair with a conductor destroys the conductor’s marriage. In The Paper she plays Alicia Clark, the managing editor of a New York daily newspaper. She engages in a surprisingly physical brawl with Michael Keaton, an altercation she ultimately wins. Yet when accidentally shot, parallel editing equates her helplessness to Michael Keaton’s wife’s emergency C-section. In Cookie’s Fortune she plays Camille Dixon whose secret past, over-mothering, and class consciousness leads to her nervous breakdown and imprisonment. Occasionally this model is pushed to extremes, either for comic effect (Cruella De Vil in 101 Dalmations) or melodramatic excess (Norma Desmond in the stage version of Sunset Boulevard) allowed Close to turn in a stunningly psychotic—and musical—performance as a deranged silent film star.

And like Davis, Close is both an actress and a star; finding a new mannerism and vocal quality to make each character unique and memorable, yet retaining that core persona which quietly states “this is Glenn Close.” Her most interesting films include Reversal of Fortune, Meeting Venus, In the Gloaming, Paradise Road, the Sarah, Plain and Tall trilogy, and Serving in Silence. In Reversal of Fortune, playing a comatose Sunny von Bulow, Close appears in flashbacks as a woman who suffers emotionally and physically from a difﬁdent husband, alienated children, diabetes, alcoholism, and a bourgeois ennui. In Meeting Venus, Close portrays a celebrated artist conﬁdent with her career but less certain about her romantic relationships. In In the Gloaming, Close’s touching performance as an upper-class mother re-connecting with her dying son at the expense of her husband and daughter earned her an Emmy nomination. In Paradise Road, Close’s coolly detached patrician attitude disappears to reveal a warm and caring leader, a survivor who keeps a group of women alive during their years as prisoners of war. In the Sarah, Plain and Tall trilogy she authors one of her most complex characters; an obdurate New England spinster who answers a mail-order wife ad, moves to Kansas, falls in love, and raises her new husband’s two children. Ostensibly a Western, the films allow Close that rare opportunity to play a woman who embodies the characteristics of both a nurturing mother and a ﬁercely independent woman without lapsing into either stereotype. In Serving in Silence, Close masterfully creates another complex character: a woman torn between her homosexual desire, her military career, and her sons. That her performance never falls into caricature and that the film allows a believable merger of these conﬂicting drives (never forcing a choice) shows the maturity of Close’s acting techniques and the ﬁlm’s willingness to reﬂect more culturally (and personally) diverse solutions to real problems. Close’s 20 year career nicely parallels Hollywood’s shift from limited stereotypes in the 1980s to a wider range of social beings in the 1990s. Her talents have contributed to and beneﬁted from this change.

—Greg S. Faller

COBB, Lee J.

Films as Actor:

1934 Vanishing Shadow (serial)
1937 North of the Rio Grande (Watt) (as Goodwin); Rustler’s Valley (Watt) (as Cal Howard); Ali Baba Goes to Town (David Butler)
1938 Danger on the Air (Garrett) (as Tony)
1939 Golden Boy (Mamoulian) (as Mr. Bonaparte); The Phantom Creeps (serial)
1941 This Thing Called Love (Married but Single) (Hall) (as Julio Diestro); Men of Boys Town (Tauron) (as Dave Morris); Paris Call girl (Marin) (as Schwabe)
1943 The Moon Is Down (Pichel) (as Dr. Winter); Tonight We Raid Calais (Brahm) (as Bonnard); The Song of Bernadette (Henry King) (as Dr. Dozous); Buckskin Frontier (The Iron Road) (Selander) (as Jepha Marr)
1944 Winged Victory (Cukor) (as doctor)
1946 Anna and the King of Siam (Cromwell) (as Kralahome)
1947 Boomerang (Kazan) (as Chief Robinson); Captain from Castille (Henry King) (as Juan Garcia); Johnny O’Clock (Rossen) (as Inspector Koch); Carnival in Costa Rica (Ratoff)
1948 The Miracle of the Bells (Pichel) (as Marcus Harris); Call Northside 777 (Hathaway) (as Brian Kelly); The Luck of the Irish (Koster) (as C. Augur)
1949 The Dark Past (Maté) (as Dr. Andrew Collins); Thieves’ Highway (Dassin) (as Mike Figlia)
1950 The Man Who Cheated Himself (Feist) (as Ed Cullen)
1951 Sirocco (Bernhardt) (as Col. Feroud); The Family Secret (Levin) (as Howard Clark)
1952 The Fighter (Kline) (as Durango)
1953 The Tall Texan (Williams) (as Capt. Theodore Bess)
Lee J. Cobb, Yul Brynner, William Shatner, and Richard Basehart in The Brothers Karamazov

---

1954
Yankee Pasha (Pevney) (as Sultan); Gorilla at Large (Harmon Jones) (as Det. Sgt. Garrison); On the Waterfront (Kazan) (as Johnny Friendly); Day of Triumph (Pichel and Coyle) (as Zadok)

1955
The Racers (Such Men Are Dangerous) (Hathaway) (as Maglio); The Road to Denver (Kane) (as Jim Donovan); The Left Hand of God (Dmytryk) (as Mieh Yang)

1956
The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit (Johnson) (as Judge Bernstein); Miami Exposé (Sears) (as Bart Scott)

1957
Twelve Angry Men (Lumet) (as Juror no. 3); The Three Faces of Eve (Johnson) (as Dr. Luther); The Garment Jungle (Aldrich and Vincent Sherman) (as Walter Mitchell)

1958
The Brothers Karamazov (Richard Brooks) (as Fyodor Karamazov); Man of the West (Anthony Mann) (as Dock Tobin); Party Girl (Nicholas Ray) (as Rico Angelo)

1959
But Not for Me (Walter Lang) (as Jeremiah MacDonald); The Trap (The Baited Trap) (Panama) (as Victor Massonetii); Green Mansions (Mel Ferrer) (as Nuflo)

1960
Exodus (Preminger) (as Barak Ben Canaan)

1962
The Brazen Bell (Sheldon—for TV); The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) (as Julio Madariaga)

1963
“The Outlaws” ep. of How the West Was Won (Hathaway) (as Lou Ramsey); Come Blow Your Horn (Yorkin) (as Mr. Baker)

1964
Our Man Flint (Daniel Mann) (as Crandem)

1965
In Like Flint (Gordon Douglas) (as Crandem)

1966
Las Vegas 500 milliones (They Came to Rob Las Vegas; Les Hommes de Las Vegas) (Isasi) (as Skorsky); Il giorno della civetta (The Day of the Owl; La Maffia fait la loi; Mafia) (Damiani) (as Don Mariano Arena); MacKenna’s Gold (J. Lee Thompson) (as the editor); Coogan’s Bluff (Siegel) (as Sheriff McElroy)

1967
The Liberation of L. B. Jones (Wyler) (as Oman Hedgepath); Macho Callahan (Kowalski) (as Duffy)

1968
Heat of Anger (Taylor—for TV); Lawman (Winner) (as Vincent Bronson)

1969
Double Indemnity (Smight—for TV); The Man Who Loved Cat Dancing (Saraian) (as Lapchance); La polizia sta a guardare (Infascelli); The Exorcist (Friedkin) (as Lt. Kinderman)

1970
Dr. Max (Goldstone—for TV) (title role); The Great Ice Ripoff (Curtis—for TV); Trapped beneath the Sea (Graham—for TV) (as Victor Bateman); Venditore di palloncini (The Last Circus Show; The Balloon Vendor; Last Moments) (Gariazzo)

1971
Mark il poliziotto (Blood, Sweat and Fear) (Massi); Ultimatum alla città (Ultimatum); That Lucky Touch (Miles) (as Lt. Gen. Henry Steedman)
Lee J. Cobb died while preparing to repeat in Exorcist II: The Heretic the role of investigating detective he played in the original film. It was an ironic end for an actor whose impeccable credentials would, on any European stage, have earned him fame and honor. Unfortunately, this fine character actor, who appeared in the early plays of Odets for the Group Theatre and created Willy Loman in Arthur Miller’s Death of a Salesman, spent most of a long screen career in distinctive but undemanding work.

On occasion, Cobb would play thoughtful, supportive characters, such as the psychiatrist who attempts to cure Joanne Woodward of her psychological disorder in The Three Faces of Eve. But in his best screen roles, he was effectively cast as an urban predator paradoxically tormented by twentieth-century anxieties: a wolf with an ulcer. Cobb redeemed a score of routine roles as gang boss, cop, or rancher with his capacity for conveying disquiet or a residual sensitivity. Behind his snarl lurked a weakness that already had betrayed him or would do so in the last reel. Gang-boss Rico Angelo in Party Girl is softened by a fugitive sentimentality toward Robert Taylor’s tame cultivated attorney, while loneliness for the son he terrorized away from him racks the bigot in Twelve Angry Men.

In comedy Cobb seldom convinced. His Jewish father in Come Blow Your Horn is a performance anyone might have given. But in Don Siegel’s Coogan’s Bluff he played a weary and impatient New York detective to some effect against Eastwood’s Arizona cowboy cop.

Sensitive or not, Cobb had the crooked mouth that allowed him to play pure evil. Pouring acid over a paper party decoration in Party Girl to demonstrate what might happen to Cyd Charisse’s face, blustering himself into exhausted acquiescence to Henry Fonda’s intelligence and logic in Twelve Angry Men or, most memorably, as union racketeer Johnny Friendly, ranting at the longshoremen whom Marlon Brando leads back to work in On the Waterfront, he defined for all time a sector in the outer limits of urban desperation.

From an acting standpoint, On the Waterfront is most fondly recalled for the legendary “I coulda been a contender” taxicab scene between Marlon Brando and Rod Steiger. But Cobb’s electrifying performance as Friendly—a bully destined to crumble and fall when one man becomes determined to defy him—remains every bit as impressive as those of Brando and Steiger.

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

COBURN, James

Films as Actor:

1959 Ride Lonesome (Boetticher) (as Wid); Face of a Fugitive (Wendkos) (as Purdy)
1960 The Magnificent Seven (John Sturges) (as Britt)
1962 Hell Is for Heroes (Siegel) (as Cpl. Henshaw); The Murderer (Peyser—for TV)
1963 The Great Escape (John Sturges) (as “The Manufacturer” Sedgwick); Charade (Donen) (as Tex Panthollow); The Man from Galveston (Conrad) (as Boyd Palmer)
1964 The Americanization of Emily (Hiller) (as Lt. Cmdr. “Bus” Cummings)
1965 Major Dundee (Peckinpah) (as Samuel Potts); A High Wind in Jamaica (Mackendrick) (as Zac); The Loved One (Richardson) (as immigration officer)
1966 Our Man Flint (Daniel Mann) (as Derek Flint); What Did You Do in the War, Daddy? (Edwards) (as Lt. Christian); Dead Heat on a Merry-Go-Round (Girard) (as Eli Kotch)
1967 In Like Flint (Gordon Douglas) (as Derek Flint); Waterhole #3 (Graham) (as Lewton Cole); The President’s Analyst (Flicker) (as Dr. Sidney Schaefer)
1968 Daffy (Parrish) (title role); Candy (Marquand) (as Dr. Kranket)
1969 Hard Contract (Pogostin) (as John Cunningham); Blood Kin (The Last of the Mobile Hot-Shots) (Lumet)
1972 Güi la testa (Duck, You Sucker!; A Fistful of Dynamite) (Leone) (as Sean Mallory); The Honkers (Inhat) (as Lew Lathrop); The Carey Treatment (Edwards) (as Peter Carey)
1973 The Last of Sheila (Ross) (as Clinton); Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid (Peckinpah) (as Pat Garrett); Harry in Your Pocket (Harry Never Holds) (Geller) (title role); Una ragione per vivere e una per morire (A Reason to Live, a Reason to Die; Massacre at Fort Holman) (Valerii) (as Col. Pembrooke)
1974 The Intercinece Project (Ken Hughes) (as Robert Elliot)
1975 Bite the Bullet (Richard Brooks) (as Luke Matthews); Hard Times (The Streetfighter) (Walter Hill) (as Spencer “Speed” Weed)
1976 Sky Riders (Hickox) (as Jim McCabe); Midway (The Battle of Midway) (Smight) (as Capt. Vinton Maddox); The Last Hard Men (McLagen) (as Zach Provo); White Rock (Maylam) (as narrator); A Fast Drive in the Country: The Heydays of Le Mans (Maylam) (as narrator)

1977 Cross of Iron (Peckinpah) (as Steiner)

1979 Firepower (Winner) (as Jerry Fanon/Eddie); The Muppet Movie (Frawley) (as El Sleezo Cafe Owner); Goldengirl (Sargent) (as Jack Dryden)

1980 Mr. Patman (Guillermin) (title role); Loving Couples (Smight) (as Walter); The Baltimore Bullet (Robert Ellis Miller) (as Nick Casey)

1981 High Risk (Raffill) (as Serrano); Looker (Michael Crichton) (as John Reston); Jacqueline Susann’s Valley of the Dolls (Valley of the Dolls) (Grauman—for TV) (as Henry Bellamy)

1983 Malibu (Swackhamer—for TV); Digital Dreams (Dornhelm)

1984 Draw! (Steven Hilliard Stern—for TV) (as Sam Starret)

1985 Martin’s Day (Alan Gibson) (as Lt. Lardner); Sins of the Father (Sinkel—for TV) (as Frank Murchison)

1986 Death of a Soldier (Mora) (as Maj. Patrick Danneberg); Mackendrick (Quarrie—for TV)

1988 Walking after Midnight (Kay)

1989 Place of Skulls (Logan—for TV); Tag till Himlen (Anderberg); Call from Space (Fleischer)

1990 Young Guns II (Murphy) (as John Chisum)

1991 Hudson Hawk (Lehmann) (as George Kaplan); Helicon (Eng)

1992 The Player (Altman) (as himself); Hugh Hefner: Once upon a Time (Heath—doc) (as narrator); Crash Landing: The Rescue of Flight 232 (A Thousand Heroes) (Lamont Johnson—for TV) (as Jim Hathaway)

1993 Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit (Duke) (as Mr. Crisp); Deadfall (Christopher Coppola) (as Mike Donan); The Hit List (Webb—for TV) (as Peter Mayhew)

1994 Ray Alexander: A Taste for Justice (Gary Nelson—for TV) (as Jeffrey Winslow); Greyhounds (Manners—for TV) (as John Dolan); A Christmas Reunion (as Santa Claus); Maverick (Richard Donner) (as Commodore)

1995 The Set Up (as Jeremia Cole); The Avenging Angel (Baxley—for TV) (as Porter Rockwell); Ray Alexander: A Menu for Murder (Gary Nelson—for TV) (as Jeffrey Winslow)

1996 Eraser (Chuck Russell)

1996 The Nutty Professor (Shadyac) (as Harlan Hartley)

1997 The Second World War (Dante—for TV) (as Jack Buchanan); Keys to Tulsa (Greif) (as Harman Shaw)

1998 Mr. Murder (Lowry—for TV) (as Drew Oslett Sr.); Affliction (Schrader) (as Glen Whitehouse); Payback (Helgeland) (as Fairfax)

1999 The Good Doctor (Orkin—short) (as Dr. Samuel Roberts); Noah’s Ark (Irvin—for TV) (as Peddler); Shake, Rattle and Roll: An American Love Story (Robe—for TV) (as Morris Gunn); Arnold Schwarzenegger: Hollywood Hero (Baker—for TV) (as Himsself)
2000 Missing Pieces (Schenkel—for TV) (as Atticus Cody); Intrepid (Putch) (as Captain Hal Josephson); The Good Doctor (Orkin) (as Samuel Roberts)
2001 Proximity (Zielh); Monsters, Inc. (Docter and Silverman—animation) (as voice of Henry J. Waternoose)

Other Films:

1978 Convoy (Peckinpah) (second unit d)
1979 Circle of Iron (The Silent Flute) (Richard Moore) (co-story)

Publications

By COBURN: articles—

‘‘James Coburn: His Life and Hard Times,’’ interview with J. Leydon, in Take One (Montreal), December 1975.
‘‘Becoming Involved,’’ interview with G. Gow, in Films and Filming (London), November 1978.

On COBURN: articles—

‘‘Cool Killer,’’ in Films Illustrated (London), September 1974.
Ecran (Paris), May 1978.

* * *

Coburn began his film career with supporting roles in that most American genre, the Western, and found much success playing quiet but rugged (and usually deadly) gunslingers. His poised, laconic knife thrower in the box office hit The Magnificent Seven prompted director John Sturges to give Coburn an even meatier role in the classic war film, The Great Escape, another genre in which Coburn’s screen personal fit comfortably well—although he, and everyone else in the respective casts of both films, were overshadowed by the scene stealing Steve McQueen, who was then on the verge or superstardom. His roles in Dead Heat on a Merry-Go-Round, Harry in Your Pocket, and Hard Times were as talkative con men and hustlers. Coburn’s pace, so restrained and controlled in the Westerns, is in high gear in these films. Words fly out of his mouth at such speed that one can barely keep up, let alone understand the plans, logic, or details being given.

Coburn’s association with Peckinpah, a close friend as well as a filmmaker the actor particularly admired, extended to Coburn’s taking over some of the directorial chores on Peckinpah’s modern day Western Convoy when Peckinpah’s alcoholism, drug taking, and other eccentricities rendered him incapable of carrying on.

Coburn branched out from the Western and War film by playing an American hero different from the strong silent type. His roles in Dead Heat on a Merry-Go-Round, Harry in Your Pocket, and Hard Times were as talkative con men and hustlers. Coburn’s pace, so restrained and controlled in the Westerns, is in high gear in these films. Words fly out of his mouth at such speed that one can barely keep up, let alone understand the plans, logic, or details being given.

Coburn is not limited to these basic types. Audiences have accepted him in roles that placed him in operating rooms, gambling casinos, and even a boxing gym. His versatility has allowed him to resist being typecast as an action hero, and Coburn’s career is noteworthy for balancing lead and character parts. The common denominator of his roles is the character’s air of confidence, often coupled with sophistication. This characteristic combination is probably at the root of his success in comic roles which are often parodies of his serious ones. Much like Marvin in Cat Ballou, Coburn can reprise the serious types he has successfully portrayed, playing them for laughs. One of his most popular films, the James Bond spoof In Like Flint, displays this ability. Derek Flint, ace of spies, deftly conquers every obstacle and villain. His victories are achieved so easily that the battles become humorous. This effortlessness must be accepted by the audience, and it is here that the confidence and sophistication come into play, as Coburn makes saving the world look like a relaxed weekend romp in the tropics.

As the Western began to make another of its short-lived comebacks following the success of Costner’s Dances with Wolves and Eastwood’s Unforgiven, Coburn returned to the genre in which he had made his name early on—in Donner’s Maverick, a bloated homage to the classic television series, appearing along with many other movie and television Western stars of the past in a cameo role. Now one of the old guard in Hollywood who has been around long enough to earn mostly life achievement and other career acknowledgment awards, he broke through in 1999 with a bonafide Academy Award nomination (his first) as Best Supporting Actor in Paul Schrader’s adaptation of the Russell Banks novel Affliction. For his searing portrayal of Nick Nolte’s alcoholic, abusive father in that film, Coburn was voted a shoe-in for taking home the prize by Hollywood odds-makers. And they were right. He did.

—Ray Narducy, updated by John McCarty

COBURN, Claudette

Films as Actress:

1927 For the Love of Mike (Capra) (as Mary)
1929 The Hole in the Wall (Florey) (as Jean Oliver); The Lady Lies (Henley) (as Joyce Roamer)

1930 The Big Pond (Henley) (as Barbara Billings); La Grande Mare (Henley—French version of The Big Pond); Young Man of Manhattan (Bell) (as Ann Vaughn); Manslaughter (Abbott) (as Lydia Thorne); L’Enigmatique Monsieur Parkes (Gasnier—French version of Slightly Scarlet) (as Lucy de Stavrin)

1931 Honor among Lovers (Arzner) (as Julia Traynor); The Smiling Lieutenant (Lubitsch) (as Franzi); Le Lieutenant souriant (Lubitsch—French version of The Smiling Lieutenant); Secrets of a Secretary (Abbott) (as Helen Blake); His Woman (Sloman) (as Sally Clark)

1932 The Wiser Sex (Viertel) (as Margaret Hughes); The Misleading Lady (Walker) (as Helen Steele); The Man from Yesterday (Viertel) (as Sylvia Suffolk); Phantom President (Taurog) (as Felicia Hammond); The Sign of the Cross (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Empress Poppaea); Make Me a Star (Beaudine) (as guest star)

1933 Tonight Is Ours (Walker) (as Princess Nadja); I Cover the Waterfront (Cruze) (as Julie Kirk); Three-Cornered Moon (Nugent) (as Elizabeth Rimpelgar); Torch Singer (Broadway Singer) (Hall and Somnes) (as Sally Trent/Mimi Barton)
1934 Four Frightened People (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Judy Cavendish); It Happened One Night (Capra) (as Ellie Andrews); Cleopatra (Cecil B. DeMille) (title role); Imitation of Life (Stahl) (as Beatrice Pullman)

1935 The Gilded Lily (Ruggles) (as Lillian David); Private Worlds (La Cava) (as Dr. Jane Everest); She Married Her Boss (La Cava) (as Julia Scott); The Bride Comes Home (Ruggles) (as Jeanette Desmereau)

1936 Under Two Flags (Lloyd) (as Cigarette)

1937 Maid of Salem (Lloyd) (as Barbara Clarke); I Met Him in Paris (Ruggles) (as Kay Denham); Tovarich (Litvak) (as Grand Duchess Tatiana Petrovna)

1938 Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (Lubitsch) (as Nicole de Loiselle)

1939 Zaza (Cukor) (title role); Midnight (Leisen) (as Eve Peabody/“Baroness Czerny”); It’s a Wonderful World (Van Dyke) (as Edwina Corday); Drums along the Mohawk (Ford) (as Lana “Magdelana” Martin)

1940 Boom Town (Conway) (as Betsy Bartlett); Arise My Love (Leisen) (as Augusta Nash)

1941 Skylark (Sandrich) (as Lydia Kenyon); Remember the Day (Henry King) (as Nora Trinell)

1942 The Palm Beach Story (Preston Sturges) (as Gerry Jeffers); Hedda Hopper’s Hollywood No. 6

1943 So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich) (as Lt. Janet Davidson); No Time for Love (Leisen) (as Katherine Grant)

1944 Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (as Anne Hilton); Practically Yours (Leisen) (as Peggy Martin)

1945 Guest Wife (Wood) (as Mary)

1946 Tomorrow Is Forever (Pichel) (as Elizabeth MacDonald Hamilton); Without Reservations (LeRoy) (as Christopher “Kit” Madden); The Secret Heart (Leonard) (as Lee Addams)

1947 The Egg and I (Erskine) (as Betty MacDonald)

1948 Sleep, My Love (Sirk) (as Alison Courtland); Family Honeymoon (Binyon) (as Katie Armstrong Jordan)

1949 Bride for Sale (William D. Russell) (as Nora Shelly)

1950 Three Came Home (Negulesco) (as Agnes Keith); The Secret Fury (Mel Ferrer) (as Ellen)

1951 Thunder on the Hill (Bonaventure) (Sirk) (as Sister Mary Bonaventure); Let’s Make It Legal (Sale) (as Miriam Halsworth)

1952 The Planter’s Wife (Outpost in Malaya) (Annakin) (as Liz Frazer)

1953 Si Versailles m’était conté (Affairs in Versailles); Royal Affairs in Versailles (Guity) (as Mme. de Montespan)

1954 “Elizabeth” ep. of Destinées (Daughters of Destiny); Love, Soldiers and Women; Lysistrata (Paglieri) (as Elizabeth I)

1955 Texas Lady (Weland) (as Prudence Webb)

1960 Parrish (Daves) (as Ellen McLean)

1986 Three Came Home (Negulesco—for TV)

Publications

By COLBERT: article—

On COLBERT: books—

On COLBERT: articles—

Harvey, S., “Legs,” in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1984.

Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), September 1996.

Obituary in Variety, 5 August 1996.

Obituary in Sight and Sound (London), March 1997.

*   *   *

Claudette Colbert is the epitome of Hollywood glamour, but not the glamour that comes bolstered by furs and feathers like Dietrich’s or by mystery and aloneness like Garbo’s. Colbert’s glamour is the sort that women attain for themselves by using their intelligence to create a timeless personal style. It is an attainable kind of glamour, but only if one has the natural gifts of brains and beauty associated with Colbert.

Colbert is most often remembered for her expert comic timing, which was displayed in a series of screwball comedies she made throughout the 1930s and 1940s, chief among them her Academy Award-winning performance in Frank Capra’s It Happened One Night. In that film, Colbert took out a patent on the runaway heiress character, and anyone else who played such a role did so in her shadow. All her comedies present her as a well-dressed modern woman who can handle any situation. Midnight opens on a rainy night in which a train pulls into a Paris station, bearing Colbert, asleep, in a third-class coach. She is without funds, without luggage, and without contacts, but she is nevertheless wearing a fabulous silver lamé evening gown. She wakes up, picks the straw out of her hair, and steps confidently out into the lousy weather, her wits sharp and her wardrobe up to whatever social advantage she can promote. This illustrates a typical Colbert comedy character—the woman of resource, humor, style, and, above all else, confidence.

Despite her association with comedy, Colbert played a wide range of roles. Her versatility is seldom commented on, but it is reflected in her other two Oscar nominations: for her role as a psychiatrist in Private Worlds, and as a wartime wife in Since You Went Away. She appeared in mysteries, costume dramas, melodramas, musicals, and epics. She portrayed everyone from Cleopatra to a modern egg farmer, a villainess to a maid of Salem, an authoress to a nun. Whatever the role, her grace and timing always prevented her from seeming to be humiliated or defeated. Thus, she could endure a prison camp, as in Three Came Home, go out of control on a bobsled in I Met Him in Paris, or fall about in a ship's galley while trying to fry a fish in Skylark, without ever seeming to lose her ladylike grace. This quality, coupled with her delicate features, might have doomed her to stuffy roles had she not also projected a genuine warmth, enhanced by an unforgettable laugh, a delicious speaking voice, and a sparkling quality that humanized her.

At first Colbert planned to become a fashion designer, but a growing interest in dramatics led her to Broadway. She became respected and popular primarily as a result of her 1927 performance as a carnivval snake charmer in The Barker, a success which led inevitably to a film career. Her first big hit was as the seductress, Empress Poppaea, in Cecil B. DeMille's The Sign of the Cross, and she might have become typed as a villainess had she not been assigned to It Happened One Night.

Colbert became known in Hollywood for her shrewd business sense, and the successful direction of her career is said to be largely due to her own good instincts. She left the comforts of a Paramount contract after appearing in Practically Yours in 1944, and spent the rest of her Hollywood years as a freelance artist. Her one big career disappointment was due to an illness which forced her to step out of the leading role in All about Eve, which then went to Bette Davis. Otherwise Colbert maintained a steady pace until she chose to retire after playing a mother in Parrish. Although that remains her last feature film, she found continuing popularity and acceptance in the theater, having returned to leading roles in New York and London. After a 25-year hiatus from movies, she gave a heralded performance in the television mini-series The Two Mrs. Grenvilles, playing the matriarch of a socially prominent family.

Claudette Colbert is the sort of actress whose best qualities were those that the passage of time could not date or diminish: a sense of wit, a core of strength, and, above all, a strong projection of intelligence. Had she been only a clotheshorse, or a model of whatever glamorous style was currently in fashion, she would not have lasted. Yet her good looks, slim figure, and timeless chic endured over seven decades of work in film and theater. She herself said it best, "I don’t need that awful artificial glamour that Hollywood devises for people who don’t have any personalities." Colbert’s ability to create her own brand of glamour helped her outlast many of her less self-sufficient contemporaries.

—Jeanine Basinger, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

COLMAN, Ronald

Nationality: British. Born: Richmond, Surrey, 9 February 1891.
Education: Attended London University. Family: Married 1) the actress Thelma Victoria Maud, 1918 (divorced 1935); 2) the actress Benita Hume, 1938, daughter: Julia Benita Colman. Military Service: Served with London Scottish during World War I; wounded at Messines and decorated with Mons medal, invalided out of service. Career: 1908—office boy with British Steamship Company while performing with Bancroft Amateur Dramatic Society; 1916–20—on London stage; 1919—feature film debut in The Toilers; 1920—emigrated to America and appeared in various stage roles, including small part with George Arliss in The Green Goddess; 1923—chosen by Lillian Gish as leading man in film The White Sister; 1924—invited to Hollywood by Samuel Goldwyn; early 1930s—star status acknowledged when Goldwyn allows him luxury of making only one film per year; 1933—sued Goldwyn for false publicity concerning rumors of his drinking on set of The Masquerader, 1940s—began working on radio, including regular guest spots with wife Benita Hume on Jack Benny's program; 1950–52—starred with Benita Hume in radio series The Halls of Ivy, and in TV series, 1954–55.
Awards: Best Actor Academy Award, for A Double Life, 1947. Died: In Santa Barbara, California, 19 May 1958.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1917</td>
<td>The Live Wire (Dewhurst)—short, never released</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>The Toilers (Watts) (as Bob); A Daughter of Eve (Walter West); Sheba (Hepworth); Snow in the Desert (Walter West) (as Rupert Sylvester)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>A Son of David (Plumb) (as Maurice Phillips); Anna the Adventuress (Hepworth) (as Walter Brendan); The Black Spider (Humphrey) (as Vicomte de Beauvais)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1921</td>
<td>Handcuffs or Kisses? (Archainbaut) (as Lodyard)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>The White Sister (Henry King) (as Capt. Giovanni Severi); The Eternal City (Fitzmaurice)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>$20 a Week (Weight) (as Chester Reeves); Tarnish (Fitzmaurice) (as Emmet Carr); Romola (Henry King) (as Carlo Bucellini)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1925</td>
<td>Her Night of Romance (Franklin) (as Paul Menford); A Thief in Paradise (Fitzmaurice) (as Maurice Blake); The Sporting Venus (Neilan) (as Donald MacAllan); His Supreme Moment (Fitzmaurice) (as John Douglas); Her Sister from Paris (Franklin) (as Joseph Weyringer); The Dark Angel (Fitzmaurice) (as Capt. Alan Trent); Stella Dallas (Henry King) (as Stephen Dallas); Lady Windermere’s Fan (Lubitsch) (as Lord Darlington)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Kiki (Clarence Brown) (as Victor Renal); Beau Geste (Brenon) (as Michael “Beau” Geste); The Winning of Barbara Worth (Henry King) (as Willard Holmes)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>The Night of Love (Fitzmaurice) (as Montero); The Magic Flame (Henry King) (as Tito the Clown/Cassati the Count)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Two Lovers (Niblo) (as Mark Van Rycke)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>The Rescue (Brenon) (as Tom Lingard); Bulldog Drummond (F. Richard Jones) (title role); Condemned! (Ruggles) (as Michel Auban)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Raffles (Fitzmaurice and d’Arrast) (as A. J. Raffles); The Devil to Pay (Fitzmaurice) (as Willie Hale)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>The Unholy Garden (Fitzmaurice) (as Barrington Hunt); Arrowsmith (John Ford) (as Dr. Martin Arrowsmith)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Cynara (I Was Faithless) (King Vidor) (as Jim Warlock)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>The Masquerader (Wallace) (as Sir John Chilcote/John Loder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back (Del Ruth) (as Hugh Drummond)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1935  Clive of India (Boleslawski) (as Robert Clive); The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo (Roberts) (as Paul Gallard); A Tale of Two Cities (Conway) (as Sydney Carton)

1936  Under Two Flags (Lloyd) (as Sgt. Victor)

1937  Lost Horizon (Capra) (as Robert Conway); The Prisoner of Zenda (Cromwell) (as Rudolf Rassendyll/King Rudolph V)

1938  If I Were King (Lloyd) (as François Villon)

1939  The Light that Failed (Wellman) (as Dick Heldar)

1940  Lucky Partners (Milestone) (as David Grant/Paul Knight Somerset)

1941  My Life with Caroline (Milestone) (as Anthony Mason)

1942  The Talk of the Town (Stevens) (as Michael Lightcap); Random Harvest (LeRoy) (as Charles Rainier/John “Smithy” Smith)

1944  Kismet (Oriental Dream) (Dieterle) (as Hafiz)

1947  The Late George Apley (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (title role); A Double Life (Cukor) (as Anthony John)

1950  Champagne for Caesar (Whorf) (as Beauregard Bottomley); Shakespeare’s Theater: The Globe Playhouse (W. and M. Jordan) (as narrator)

1956  Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as railway official)

1957  The Story of Mankind (Irwin Allen) (as Spirit of Man)

Publications

On COLMAN: books—

On COLMAN: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

Richards, Jeffrey, “Ronald Colman and the Cinema of Empire,” in Focus on Film (London), September/October 1970.

Fox, Julian, in Films and Filming (London), March and April 1972.
Suave, debonair, a gentleman hero with dashing good looks, Ronald Colman is the quintessential Hollywood-Englishman. One of the few stars of the silent era to maintain and even increase their popularity after the transition to sound, Colman was a leading man for more than 20 years, for in addition to his handsome grace, Colman possessed a beautifully cultured and modulated voice. Colman is known for roles where he is above all polite and well-mannered, but the source of his success may lie beyond his ability to portray characters who are refined but sentimental, mysterious but thoughtful. As Sheridan Morley points out, Colman’s sense of humor made him stand out from other good-looking Englishmen. Moreover, Colman was a consummate craftsman; director George Cukor explains that Colman knew more about acting for the camera than any actor he had worked with.

Colman began with small parts in the theater. His (silent) film career received its greatest impetus in the two films he made with Lillian Gish, The White Sister and Romola. Handsome, graceful, exuding good nature, he complemented Gish, and demonstrated the magnetism that captured the public in subsequent starring vehicles such as The Dark Angel and Beau Geste. Reviewers of the time noted that Colman was stepping into the shoes of Rudolph Valentino and John Gilbert.

Colman’s first sound film, Bulldog Drummond, for which he received an Academy Award nomination, might be a surprise to viewers who know the actor primarily for his later films, because he races through this rather madcap detective story with a verve and athleticism that recall Douglas Fairbanks, and his dialogue delivery matches the humor and panache of his physical presence. That same vibrant intensity informs his portrayal of Robert Clive’s rise from office boy to British officer in Clive of India.

By the mid-1930s, Colman’s performances in such films as Clive of India, Arrowsmith, A Tale of Two Cities, Lost Horizon, The Prisoner of Zenda had made him one of the most popular male stars in Hollywood. Sought after for “important” pictures, Colman played the selfless hero and the noble Englishman in film after film. In A Tale of Two Cities, Colman comforts Elizabeth Allan on the way to the guillotine, richly atoning, “It is a far, far better thing I do”; in Lost Horizon he incarnates the idealism of author James Hilton and director Frank Capra.

There was no diminution of Colman’s romantic appeal in the 1940s. Exemplary of MGM’s Angliphilia, Random Harvest proved to be one of the most popular films of the war years, and it united Colman with a particularly congenial co-star, Greer Garson. Colman’s star image, in part that of the Englishman who is reserved to the point of shyness, contributes to the film, as do his intelligent choices in representing Smithy/Rainer—Colman conveys the profound impact of finally, suddenly recognizing Paula’s voice as the voice of his long-lost love in one simple move: with his back to us, he simply raises his head.

A Double Life, the film for which Colman received an Academy Award, is an intriguing commentary on acting, and, in particular, the performances of a star such as Colman, a “movie” actor par excellence, who in this film plays a “legitimate” actor who becomes so immersed in the role of Othello that he is pushed to murder. Here, Colman, the dashing romantic lead, is measured against one of the great tragic roles in the Western tradition. Our sense of Colman having a go at Shakespeare is fully tested twice in the film: on opening night, when his style is conventionally theatrical, and near the end, when he replays the same scene, prey to guilt and madness, in rhythms and tones that are decidedly cinematic. The film suggests that Colman, and others like him, depend on their charm, wit, grace, but that they labor, sometimes even to their own detriment to be “good actors.” The film not only plays on Colman’s star image, it also provides an occasion for us to see the actor at the height of his craft, for Colman’s meticulous preparation and execution is apparent even in small scenes. Early in the film, as the character recalls how he had already come a long way with his ambition, Colman caricatures the juvenile in tennis shorts “he” used to be, then performs a remembered scene with “his father,” then comes back to “himself” as he remembers having to teach himself how to talk, how to move, how to think. Like so many scenes in Colman’s career, it is a passage of seamless virtuosity.

In the 1950s, Colman turned in a marvelously funny portrayal of a television quiz show sensation in Champagne for Caesar, co-starred in a radio series, “Halls of Ivy,” the Best New Radio Show for 1950, and moved to television with the series which was named Best New Television Show for 1954.

—Charles Affron, updated by Cynthia Baron

CONNERY, Sean

Nationality: British. Born: Thomas Connery in Edinburgh, Scotland, 25 August 1930. Education: Attended Edinburgh School of Art. Family: Married 1) the actress Diane Cilento, 1962 (divorced 1973), children: Jason and Giovana; 2) Micheline Roquebrun, 1975, stepson: Stefan. Career: 1945—in Royal Navy but discharged because of ulcers; late 1940s—early 1950s—bodybuilder and model; 1951–53—toured in chorus of South Pacific; mid-1950s—gained acting experience in repertory theater; 1955—first film, Lilacs in the Spring; contract with 20th Century-Fox the following year; 1957—entered small and featured roles in non-Fox productions; 1962—first appearance as James Bond; 1969—directed unreleased documentary film The Bowler and the Bonnet; 1972—formed production company Tantallon Productions. Awards: Golden Globe Award for World Film Favorite-Male, 1972; ShoWest Worldwide Star of the Year, 1982; D. W. Griffith Award and Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor, National Board of Review Best Supporting Actor Award, and Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture, for The Untouchables, 1987; British Academy of Film and Television Arts Award for Best Actor, for The Name of the Rose, 1988; Légion d’honneur (France); National Board of Review Career Achievement Award, 1993; Cecil B. DeMille Lifetime Achievement Award, Hollywood Foreign Press Association, 1995; Academy Fellowship, British Academy Awards, 1998; European Film Awards Audience Award for Best Actor, for Entrapment, 1999; ShoWest Lifetime Achievement Award, 1999. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.
Films as Actor:

1955  Lilacs in the Spring (Let’s Make Up) (Wilcox) (bit part)
1956  No Road Back (Tully) (as Spike)
1957  Hell Drivers (Endfield) (as Johnny); Time Lock (Thomas) (as welder); Action of the Tiger (Terence Young) (as Mike)
1958  Another Time, Another Place (Lewis Allen) (as Mark Trevor); A Night to Remember (Baker)
1959  Darby O’Gill and the Little People (Stevenson) (as Michael McBride); Tarzan’s Greatest Adventure (Guillermin) (as O’Bannion)
1961  The Frightened City (Lemont) (as Paddy Damin); On the Fiddle (Operation Snafu) (Frankel) (as Pedlar Pascoe)
1962  The Longest Day (Annakin, Marton, Wicki, and Zamuck) (as Pvt. Flanagan); Dr. No (Terence Young) (as James Bond)
1963  From Russia with Love (Terence Young) (as James Bond)
1964  Woman of Straw (Dearden) (as Anthony Richmond); Marnie (Hitchcock) (as Mark Rutland); Goldfinger (Hamilton) (as James Bond)
1965  The Hill (Lumet) (as Joe Roberts); Thunderball (Terence Young) (as James Bond)
1966  A Fine Madness (Kershner) (as Samson Shillitoe)
1967  You Only Live Twice (Lewis Gilbert) (as James Bond)
1968  Shalako (Dmytryk) (title role)
1969  The Molly McGuires (Ritt) (as Jack Kehoe); La tenda rossa (The Red Tent) (Kalatozov) (as Amundsen)
1971  The Anderson Tapes (Lumet) (as Duke Anderson); Diamonds Are Forever (Hamilton) (as James Bond)
1972  The Offence (Lumet) (as Johnson)
1973  Zardoz (Boorman) (as Zed)
1974  The Terrorists (Ransom) (Wrede) (as Nils Tahlvik); Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Col. Arbuthnott)
1975  The Wind and the Lion (Milius) (as Mulay El Raisuli); The Man Who Would Be King (Huston) (as Daniel Dravot)
1976  Robin and Marian (Lester) (as Robin Hood); The Next Man (Serafian) (as Khalif Abdul-Mulhsen)
1978  The Great Train Robbery (The First Great Train Robbery) (Michael Crichton) (as Edward Pierce)
1979  Meteor (Neame) (as Bradley); Cuba (Lester) (as Robert Dapes)
1981  Time Bandits (Gilliam) (as King Agamemnon); Outland (Hyams) (as O’Neil)
1982  Wrong Is Right (The Man with the Deadly Lens) (Richard Brooks) (as Patrick Hale); Five Days One Summer (Zimmern—re-edited version released 1988) (as Douglas)
1983  Never Say Never Again (Kershner) (as James Bond); Sword of the Valiant (Weeks) (as the Green Knight)
1986  Highlander (Mulcahy) (as Ramirez); The Name of the Rose (Rosa dei nomi) (Amnaud) (as William of Baskerville)
1987  The Untouchables (De Palma) (as James Malone)
1988  The Presidio (Hyams) (as Lt. Col. Alan Caldwell); Memories of Me (Henry Winkler) (as himself)
1989  Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg) (as Professor Henry Jones)
1990  The Russia House (Schepisi) (as Barley Blair); The Hunt for Red October (McTiernan) (as Marko Ramius)
1991  Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves (Kevin Reynolds) (as King Richard); Highlander II (Mulcahy) (as Ramirez)
1992  Medicine Man (McTiernan) (as Dr. Robert Campbell, + exec pr)
1993  Rising Sun (Kaufman) (as John Connor, + exec pr)
1994  A Good Man in Africa (Beresford) (as Lord Richard); Highlander II (as King Arthur)
1995  Just Cause (Glimcher) (as Paul Armstrong, + exec pr); First Knight (Zucker) (as King Arthur)
1996  Dragonheart (Cohen) (as voice of Draco); The Rock (Bay) (as John Patrick Mason, + exec pr)
1998  The Avengers (Chechik) (as Sir August de Wynter); Playing by Heart (Carroll) (as Paul)
1999  Entrapment (Cohen) (as Robert “Mac” MacDougal, + pr); The James Bond Story (doc) (Hunt—for TV) (as himself)
2000  Finding Forrester (Van Sant)

Publications

By CONNERY: articles—

Interview in Playboy (Chicago), November 1965.
Interview with Ben Fong-Torres, in American Film (Hollywood), May 1989.

On CONNERY: books—

Brosnan, John, James Bond in the Cinema, San Diego, 1981.

Parker, John, Sean Connery, Chicago, 1993.

On CONNERY: articles—

Films Illustrated (London), October 1981.
Radio Times (London), 14 September 1996.
Murphy, Kathleen, “The Man Who Would be King,” in Film Comment (New York), May-June 1997.

“There’s nothing special about being an actor,” Sean Connery once remarked. “It’s a job, like being a carpenter or a bricklayer, and I’ve never stopped being amazed at the mystique people attach to my business.” There is about all his roles—even kings, even desert chieftains, even the suave and supercilious James Bond—an attractively down-to-earth roughness, his Scots burr and robust physique anchoring the wilder flights of fantasy. In the early years of his stardom, he was often dismissed as a clumsy, limited player who had struck lucky. As evidence to the contrary built up, the critical consensus veered round: he came to be seen as a fine actor whose career had become shadowed by the unworthy role of Bond. But this, too, may be something of an oversimplification.

That Bond made Connery’s career is undeniable. He was 32 when he was chosen for Dr. No, with an undistinguished batch of supporting parts to his credit. Had he not landed the role, it’s hard to imagine him attaining super-stardom so fast, or perhaps at all; more likely, he’d have turned increasingly to television, which had always used him better. And for all the limitations of the Bond character, it allowed Connery to develop and explore his own potential, refining techniques that he would put to more varied use elsewhere.

At the same time, Connery made Bond. Probably no other British actor—with the exception of James Mason, also at one point considered for the role—could have matched the cool, insolent sexuality that Connery brought to his portrayal. And without his intensely physical presence fleshing out Fleming’s “cardboard booby” (the author’s own description) the cycle could scarcely have taken off as it did. Connery’s Bond moved with a tensile grace, a feral virility touched with a disturbing edge of danger. Yet the suggestion of cruelty was set off—and made all the more attractive—by a glint of sardonic complicity, inviting the audience in on the joke. The balance was finely gauged. A straighter performance would have made the comic-strip violence distasteful; a more flippant one would have defused the menace.

The films themselves may be little more than glossy escapist trash, and Connery has grown weary of being tagged with the role that made him famous. Still, his achievement shouldn’t be underestimated: he created a lasting cinematic icon, and effectively spoiled the part for his successors, who all appear lumbering or lightweight by comparison. Even as a jowly 53-year-old returning for what must surely (despite the title) be his last outing in the role in Never Say Never Again, he exuded an unmistakable authority; this, beyond the least doubt, was the real James Bond.

Connery’s initial attempts to assert a wider range seemed inhibited by the 007 persona, either playing variations on it—Hitchcock’s predatory sadist in Marnie—or self-consciously striving to look as unlike as possible: the sweaty imprisoned NCO of The Hill, or the boozy, irredeemable poet in A Fine Madness. Only with the Bond cycle (barring his late comeback) safely behind him, did a distinct cinematic identity, inherent rather than willed, start to emerge. And in many ways it was the antithesis of everything Bond had stood for.

Where Bond was firmly on the winning side, smoothly amoral, arrogant, and assured, the emergent Connery appared a noble, shaggy anarchonism, upholshing lost-cause moralities in a cynical world. Dreams of outmoded heroism, splendid and futile, alike entice his Arab chieftain in The Wind and the Lion, the backwoods empire-builder of The Man Who Would Be King, the space marshal of Outland, and the ageing Robin Hood of Robin and Marian. Skillfully varying the tone from the tongue-in-cheek whirlwind rhetoric of Milius’s Raisuli to the poignantly elegiac Robin, a man struggling to inhabit his own legend, Connery invests such roles with a “strong innocence” (Richard Lester’s phrase), a relaxed grandeur which always retains its edge of incipient violence.

And while Bond might be a loose cannon, his shots were always fired for the benefit of the (British) establishment. Post-Bond Connery was an instinctive rebel, reaching back to his own staunchly working-class background. The defiant NCO of The Hill paved the way for Connery’s grim activist miner in The Molly Maguires, and for the disruptive sexuality of Zed the Exterminator in John Boorman’s sci-fi parable Zardoz, invading the en clave of the flaccid elite like sperm into an ovum.

Growing age and eminence have inevitably blunted the edge of rebellion. Increasingly Connery has found himself playing authority figures, often monarchs: Agamemnon in Terry Gilliam’s quirky Time Bandits, King Arthur (touchingly tender in his October-and-April romance with Julia Ormond) in First Knight, stealing the whole film with an unbillmed cameo as Cœur-de-Lion at the end of Kevin Costner’s Robin Hood. The authority is instinctive, never pompous: in The Hunt for Red October his Russian submarine captain exudes the same effortless confidence as his veteran cop in The Untouchables, the astute William of Baskerville in The Name of the Rose, and the 2,000-year-old warrior in the mystical tosh of Highlander. The teasing, knowing grin is rarely far from the surface, nor is the sexual magnetism. Connery has never troubled to maintain the illusion of youth; he’s aged gracefully and handsomely, still capable of playing sexy with wit and style, every bit a match (as Indy’s dad) for Harrison Ford in Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade. By this stage in his career, Connery can do what he likes. He can play the voice of an animatronic dragon (Dargonheart), give a lazy performance in a mediocre film, such as Lumet’s Family Business, or a downright bad performance in a terrible film (The Avengers). None of it matters, or can dent his status even fractionally. Sean Connery, in short, has gone beyond mere stardom to become an icon.

—Philip Kemp

CONSTANTINE, Eddie

Nationality: American/French. Born: Los Angeles, 29 October 1917; became French citizen. Education: Vienna Conservatory. Family: Married 1) the ballet dancer Helene Mussel; 3) Maja Faber-Troni, children: Tania, Barbara, Lemmy, and Mia Bella Marie. Career: 1936—taken to Vienna by singing teacher Igor Gorin; while studying at Vienna Conservatory earned tuition by singing in cafes; 1938—worked in New York City and Newark at odd jobs; singing debut in Bayonne, New Jersey, theater in trio; trio joined by two others to form “The 5 Musketeers,” performed in burlesque theaters and with swing bands; 1939—single dates in nightclubs; 1940—worked in Los Angeles singing and as movie extra; early 1940s—worked in radio in New York; 1949—first big success in Rio de Janeiro, nightclub dates and recordings in Paris after moving to France with first wife; 1952—signed to do gangster film by producer Victor Stoloff, Egypt by Three; 1953—cast by director Bernard Borderie in breakthrough role as Detective Lemmy Caution in first of series of low-budget films; 1956—formed Belmont Productions; 1967—formed Panda Films with Robert Kronenberg and James Henaghan; 1970s—revived career with roles in films by new generation of German filmmakers, such as Fassbinder’s Beware of a Holy Whore; 1978—moved to Weisbaden, West Germany, to live with third wife; 1986—in TV series Roncalli; 1990s—subject of a film retrospective in Germany shortly before his death. Died: Of heart attack, in Weisbaden, Germany, 25 February 1993.

Films as Actor:

1953 Egypt by Three (Stoloff) (as Nick); La Môme vert-de-gris (Poison Ivy) (Borderie) (as Lemmy Caution); Cet homme est dangereux (This Man Is Dangerous) (Sacha) (as Lemmy Caution)

1954 Les Femmes s’en balancent (Borderie) (as Lemmy Caution); Votre Devoue, Blake (Laviron) (as Captain Blake)

1955 Ça va barder! (Berry); Avanz di galera (Cottafavi); Je suis un sentimental (Headlines of Destruction) (Berry)
1956 Vous pigez? (Chevalier) (as Lemmy Caution); Les Truands (Rim); “Paris after Dark” ep. of Around the World with Orson Welles (as himself); L’Homme et l’enfant (Andre)
1957 Folies-Bergère (Decoin) (as Bob Hardie); Le Grand Bluff (Dally)
1958 Ces dames préfèrent le Mambo (Dishonorable Discharge) (Borderie); Incognito (Dally); Hoppla, jetzt kommt Eddie! (Kingler) (as Eddie Petersen)
1959 Passport to Shame (Room 43; The Girl in Room 43) (Rakoff) (as Johnny); Du Riffh ds las famées (Riff Raff Girls) (Joffé) (as Williams); S.O.S. Pacific (Guy Green) (as Mark); The Treasure of San Teresa (Hot Money Girl; Rhapsodie in Blei) (Rakoff) (as Larry Brennan)
1960 Bomben auf Monte Carlo (Jacoby); Comment qu’elle est! (Borderie) (as Lemmy Caution); Le Chien de pique (Yves Allégret)
1961 Ca va etre ta fête (Tout feu, tout flamme; It’s Your Birthday) (Montazel); Me faire ça à moi! (Grimbalt); En pleine bagarre (Haut les mains!; Destination Fury) (Bianchi); Cause toujours, mon lapin (Montazel)
1962 “La Paresse” (“Laziness”) ep. of Les Sept Péchés capitaux (The Seven Capital Sins) (Goddard) (as himself); Lemmy pour les dames (Borderie) (as Lemmy Caution); Cléo de cinq à sept (Cleo from 5 to 7) (Varda); Une Grosse Tête (La Guerre des carts) (de Givray); Bonne Chance, Charlie (De la poudre et des balles) (Richard); L’Empire de la nuit (The Empire of Night) (Grimblat) (as Eddie); Nous irons à Deauville (Rigaud) (bit role)
1963 Les Femmes d’abord (Andre) (as Bobby Caro); Comme s’il en pleuvait (If It Were Raining) (Monter); A toi de faire, Mignonne (Your Turn, Darling) (Borderie) (as Lemmy Caution)
1964 Des frissons partout (Andre) (as Jeff Gordon); Nick Carter va tout casser (Nick Carter casse tout; License to Kill) (Decoin) (as Nick Carter); Laissez tirer les tireurs (LeFranc) (as Jeff Gordon); Lucky Jo (Deville) (title role)
1965 Ces Dames s’en melent (Andre) (as Jeff Gordon); Alphaville (Une étrange aventure de Lemmy Caution; Alphaville: A Strange Adventure of Lemmy Caution; Tarzan versus I.B.M.) (Goddard) (as Lemmy Caution); Feu à volonté (Faites vos jeux, mesdames) (Marcel Ophuls) (as Mike Warner); Je vous salue, Mafia (Hail, Mafia) (Lévy) (as Rudy); Nick Carter et le trefle rouge (Savignac) (as Nick Carter); Cartes sur table (Attack of the Robots) (Franco) (as Al Pereira)
1966 Residencia para espias (Dan chez les gentlemen) (Franco) (as Dan Layton)
1968 Le Consortium (Spara per primo vivrai di più; A tout casser) (Berry)
1969 Lion’s Love (Varda)
1970 Malatesta (Lilenthal); Eine Rose für Jane (Geisendörfer—for TV)
1971 Warnung vor einer heiligen Natte (Beware of a Holy Whore) (Fassbinder)
1973 Welt am Draht (Fassbinder—for TV) (as man in Rolls Royce)
1975 Der Zweite Frühling (Lommel) (as Frank Cabot); Souvenir de Gibraltar
1977 Le Couple témoin (Klein); Raid on Entebbe (Kershner—for TV) (as Capt. Michel Bacos)
1978 It Lives Again (It’s Alive II) (Cohen) (as Dr. Forrest)
1979 Die dritte Generation (The Third Generation) (Fassbinder) (as Lenz); Bestellt—Geklaut—Geliftert (Car-napping) (Wicker) (as Lauroux, police officer)
1980 The Long Good Friday (Mackenzie) (as Charlie); Exit . . . nur Keine Panik (Novotny); Panische Zeiten (Fratzsch and Lindenberg)
1982 Rote Liebe (Von Prauheim); Boxoffice (Josef Bogdanovich) (as Hugh Barren)
1983 Der Schnüffler (Runze); La Bète noire (Chaput)
1984 Fluchtpunkt Berlin (Flight to Berlin) (Petit); J’ai bien l’homme (Ruffio); Dorian Grey im Spiegel des Boulevardpresse (Ottinger)
1985 Tiger—Frühling in Wien (Partzak); Paul Chevrolet en de ultieme hallucinatie (Paul Chevrolet and the Ultimate Hallucination) (de la Parra) (as Boy Pappa, a gangster)
1986 Elanprotestk nr. 4 (Macaroni Blues) (Csépcsanyi) (as a bootlegger); Frankensteins’ Aunt
1987 Nouvelle brigades du tigre (Vieds); Helsinki Napoli: All Night Long (Mika Kaurismäki) (as old gangster)
1988 Pehavy Max a Strasilda (Jakubisco)
1989 Europa Abends (Schroder)
1991 Allemagne année 90 neuf zero (Germany Year 90 Nine Zero) (Goddard) (as Lemmy Caution)
1992 Zentropa (Europa) (von Trier) (as Col. Harris)
1993 Three Shake-a-Leg Steps to Heaven (Bausch)

Publications

By CONSTANTINE: book—

By CONSTANTINE: articles—

Interview with M. Lindsay, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), no. 4, 1968.

Interview with A. Le Guay, in Cinématographe (Paris), December 1980.

On CONSTANTINE: books—

On CONSTANTINE: articles—

Seesslen, G., “Eddie Constantine,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt), September 1991.
Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), Spring 1993; see also Autumn 1993.
Obituary in Classic Images (Muscatine, Iowa), April 1993.
Obituary in EPD Film (Frankfurt), April 1993.

* * *

Eddie Constantine’s film roles are primarily in one of two categories: two-dimensional, hard-boiled American detectives in fast-paced French action thrillers or variations on these sleuths in politically and aesthetically provocative films by French new wave and new German filmmakers. There are exceptions—such as his down-and-out American loser in Lucky Jo—but the exceptions prove the rule.

Constantine was born in Los Angeles. As a young man he studied opera in Vienna, but on his return to America he achieved nothing more exalted than the chorus at the Radio City Music Hall in New York. He went back to Europe in 1947, settled in Paris, began singing in nightclubs there, became a protégé of Edith Piaf, and before long had become a popular French recording star. The French director Bernard Borderie gave him his first real opportunity in films in 1953, not as a musical performer but as Lemmy Caution, the hero of La Môme vert-de-gris, derived from Peter Cheyney’s mystery novels. Constantine went on to play Lemmy—sometimes as a private eye, sometimes as an instrument of the FBI—in several other films by Borderie (the importance of the role to the actor is evidenced by the naming of Constantine’s son Lemmy). The popularity of his screen persona determined the roles he played in films by other directors such as Yves Allégret, Henri Decoin, and Marcel Ophüls.

In the late 1960s various of the more “cerebral” directors began to use the Constantine persona, well known to European audiences, to make their avant-garde political films more accessible. This easily recognized actor played an actor in several self-reflexive films, such as Agnes Varda’s Cleo from 5 to 7, Godard’s “Laziness” episode of The Seven Capital Sins, and Fassbinder’s Beware of a Holy Whore. These films are far removed from the transparent genre films for which Constantine had become famous.

He once again played Lemmy Caution—or rather a parody of Lemmy—in Godard’s Alphaville, an aggressive political parody of the science-fiction and detective genres. He portrays the quiet but firm anarchist leader in Peter Lilienthal’s conventional but politically charged Malatesta. Fassbinder goes further in The Third Generation. He uses the Constantine screen persona in this instance as a wealthy industrialist who arranges his own kidnapping by leftist terrorists in order to consolidate his own power. There is method in the transposition; Constantine had moved in his film career from the individualistic private eye or FBI operative to the omnipotent head of a multinational corporation.

In one of Constantine’s last films before his death in 1993, however, he was able to bring a more explicit, and perhaps more fitting, culmination to his career through one last reprise of Lemmy Caution in another Godard film, 1991’s Germany Year 90 Nine Zero. Here, Caution is “the last spy” lost in a post-Cold War Germany bereft of conflict, yes, but also bereft of any meaning beyond that of commerce. With this transition, the easily recognized Constantine image is effectively shown to be obsolete and irrelevant, climaxing with Constantine/Caution’s epigrammatic cry of “The bastards!” at film’s end.

—Howard Feinstein, updated by David E. Salamie

COOPER, Gary

Nationality: American. Born: Frank James Cooper in Helena, Montana, 7 May 1901. Education: Dunstable College, England, until WWI; Wesleyan College, Bozeman, Montana; Grinnell College, Iowa. Family: Married Veronica Balfe, 1933, daughter: Maria. Career: 1924—worked as political cartoonist for newspapers in Los Angeles; began working as extra and stunt rider in Westerns; 1925—appeared as villain in Marilyn Mills’s Western shorts; 1926—first major featured role in The Winning of Barbara Worth; contract with Paramount; 1928—first appearance in sound film, The Shopworn Angel; 1937—named by New York Times as highest paid entertainer; contract with Samuel Goldwyn; 1944—formed own production company, International Pictures; 1947—testified before House Un-American Activities Committee, but named no names; contract with Warners; 1952—critical comeback in High Noon after several unsuccessful films; formed production company, Baroda Productions; 1961—narrated “The Real West” episode of Project 20 for television, his last media appearance. Awards: Best Actor Academy Award, and Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for Sergeant York, 1941; Best

Gary Cooper in The Plainsman
Actor Academy Award for High Noon, 1952; Special Academy Award 1961. Died: 13 May 1961.

Films as Actor:

(also appeared as extra in about 30 films during 1925–26 including: 1925–26 Dick Turpin; The Thundering Herd; Wild Horse Mesa; The Lucky Horseshoe; The Vanishing American; The Eagle; The Enchanted Hill; Watch Your Wife)

1926 Tricks (Mitchell); Three Pals (Mitchell); Lightnin’ Wins (Tiesler); The Winning of Barbara Worth (King) (as Abe Lee)

1927 It (Badger) (as reporter); Children of Divorce (Lloyd) (as Ted Larrabee); Arizona Bound (Waters) (as the Cowboy); Wings (Wellman) (as Cadet White); Nevada (Waters) (as Jim Lacy); The Last Outlaw (Rosen) (as Sheriff Buddy Hale)

1928 Beau Sabreur (Waters) (as MajorHenri de Beaujolais); Legion of the Condemned (Wellman) (as Gale Price); Doomsday (Rowland V. Lee) (as Arnold Furze); Half a Bride (La Cava) (as Captain Edmunds); Lilac Time (Fitzmaurice) (as Captain Philip Blythe); The First Kiss (Rowland V. Lee) (as Mulligan Talbot); The Shopworn Angel (Wallace) (as William Tyler)

1929 Wolf Song (Fleming) (as Sam Lash); Betrayal (Milestone) (as Andre Frey); The Virginian (Fleming) (title role)

1930 Only the Brave (Tuttle) (as Captain James Braydon); Paramount on Parade (Arzner and others) (as himself); The Texan (Cromwell) (as Enrique “Quico”); Seven Days Leave (Wallace) (as Kenneth Dowey); The Man from Wyoming (Rowland V. Lee) (as Jim Baker); The Spoilers (Carewe) (as Glenister); Morocco (von Sternberg) (as Tom Brown)

1931 Fighting Caravans (Brower and Burton) (as Clint Belmet); City Streets (Manouelian) (as The Kid); I Take This Woman (Gering) (as Tom McNair); His Woman (Sloman) (as Captain Sam Whalan)

1932 Make Me a Star (Beaudine) (as himself); The Devil and the Deep (Gering) (as Lieutenant Sempeter); If I Had a Million (Lubitsch and others) (as Gallagher); A Farewell to Arms (Borzage) (as Frederic Henry); The Slippery Pearls (short); Voice of Hollywood (short) (as himself)

1933 Today We Live (Hawks) (as Bogard); One Sunday Afternoon (Roberts) (as Biff Grimes); Design for Living (Lubitsch) (as George Curtis); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod) (as The White Knight); Operator Thirteen (Boleslawsky) (as Captain Jack Gaillard)

1934 Now and Forever (Hathaway) (as Jerry Day)

1935 The Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Hathaway) (as Lieutenant McGregor); The Wedding Night (Vidor) (as Tony Barrett); Peter Ibbetson (Hathaway) (title role); Star Night at the Coconut Grove (short) (as himself)

1936 Desire (Borzage) (as Tom Bradley); Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (Capra) (as Longfellow Deeds); Hollywood Boulevard (Florey) (as guest at bar); The General Died at Dawn (Milestone) (as O’Hara); The Plainsman (DeMille) (as Wild Bill Hickok); La Fiesta De Santa Barbara (short)

1937 Souls at Sea (Hathaway) (as “Nuggin” Taylor); Lest We Forget (short) (as himself)

1938 The Adventures of Marco Polo (Mayo) (as Marco Polo); Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife (Lubitsch) (as Michael Brandon); The Cowboy and the Lady (Potter) (as Stretch)

1939 Beau Geste (Wellman) (title role); The Real Glory (Hathaway) (as Dr. Bill Canavan)

1940 The Westerner (Wyler) (as Cole Hardin); Northwest Mounted Police (DeMille) (as Dusty Rivers); Meet John Doe (Capra) (as John Doe or Long John Willoughby)

1941 Sergeant York (Hawks) (title role); Ball of Fire (Hawks) (as Prof. Bertram Potts)

1942 The Pride of the Yankees (Wood) (as Lou Gehrig)

1943 For Whom the Bell Tolls (Wood) (as Robert Jordan)

1944 Memo for Joe (Richard Fleischer) (as himself); The Story of Dr. Wassell (DeMille) (as Dr. Corydon M. Wassell); Casanova Brown (Wood) (title role)

1945 Along Came Jones (Heisler) (as Melody Jones, + pr); Saratoga Trunk (Wood) (as Col. Clint Maroon)

1946 Cloak and Dagger (Fritz Lang) (as Prof. Alvah Jesper)

1947 Unconquered (DeMille) (as Captain Christopher Holden); Variety Girl (Marshall) (as himself)

1948 Good Sam (McCarey) (as Sam Clayton); The Fountainhead (King Vidor) (as Howard Roark)

1949 It’s a Great Feeling (Butler) (as himself); Task Force (Daves) (as Jonathan L. Scott); Snow Carnival (short) (as narrator, + pr); Bright Leaf (Curtiz) (as Brant Royle); Dallas (Heisler) (as Blaye “Reb” Hollister)

1950 You’re in the Navy Now (Hathaway) (as Lt. John Harkness); Starlift (Del Ruth) (as guest star); It’s a Big Country (Thorpe and others) (as Texas); Distant Drums (Walsh) (as Capt. Quincy Wyatt)

1952 High Noon (Zinnemann) (as Will Kane); Springfield Rifle (deToth) (as Major Alex Kearney)

1953 Return to Paradise (Robson) (as Mr. Morgan); Blowing Wild (Fregonese) (as Jeff Dawson)

1954 Garden of Evil (Hathaway) (as Hooker); Vera Cruz (Aldrich) (as Benjamin Trane)

1955 The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell (Preminger) (as Billy Mitchell)

1956 Friendly Persuasion (Wyler) (as Jess Birdwell)

1957 Love in the Afternoon (Wilders) (as Frank Flanagan)

1958 Ten North Frederick (Dunne) (as Joe Chapin); Man of the West (Anthony Mann) (as Link Jones)

1959 The Hanging Tree (Daves) (as Doc Joseph Frail); Alias Jesse James (McLeod) (as himself); The Wreck of the Mary Deare (Anderson) (as Gideon Patch); They Came to Cordura (Rossen) (as Major Thomas Thorn)

1961 The Naked Edge (Anderson) (as George Ratcliffe)

Publications

By COOPER: articles—

“‘The Big Boy Tells His Story,’” in Photoplay (New York), April and May 1929.

“‘The Role I Liked Best,’” in the Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 6 May 1950.

“Well It Was This Way,” in the Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 18 and 25 February, 3, 10, 17, 24 and 31 March, and 7 April 1956.
On COOPER: books—

On COOPER: articles—

The film career of Gary Cooper seems to fall into six distinct periods:

1926–30: The Naive Young Hero. In this four-year period Cooper made 23 films, an average of five a year from The Winning of Barbara Worth to The Spoilers. More than half of them are Westerns or military pictures, films in which Cooper appeared as the tentative, shy young man, loose and limber of body, sure of the moral position he shared with the world. In this pre-Depression era, Cooper represented the young American who believed in the triumph of simple virtues and his commitment to them. In his own life, Cooper was, in fact, developing more and more confidence, was at the peak of his physical appearance and health, and was by the conclusion of this period not a tentative, shy man at all.

1930–36: Cynicism and Disillusion. In this six-year period Cooper made 19 films, an average of about three a year, from Morocco to Desire. Only one of these films is a Western. The Western image of affirmation was submerged by the Depression. In these films Cooper emerges as a tense and cautious figure, one who distrusts others or is loath to commit himself to others, though he can be touched.

1936–41: Altruism and Dedication. In this four-year period Cooper made 14 films, from Mr. Deeds Goes to Town to Sergeant York. Cooper’s character is now that of a determined man, a man who sees hope in the future and is willing to sacrifice himself for the future of mankind. Many of these films are set in the past.

1942–47: Intellect and Purpose. In this five-year period Cooper made eight films, from Ball of Fire through Unconquered. In these films made during and immediately after World War II Cooper is a man out of his natural environment, a man who must deal with the riddles of an unfamiliar world and triumph by his native wit and determination, even when others distrust him. The only exceptions to this pattern are the two films his production company or Cooper himself produced, Casanova Brown and Along Came Jones, both of which represent an earlier Cooper image, an attempt to create a variation on what he had done before. It seems that the public image of Cooper changed slowly, even though he himself wanted to try broader variations on that image. It was surely a source of unhappiness to him that whenever he strayed from his accepted image in a particular period, the public failed to respond.

1948–56: The Man Alone. In this eight-year period Cooper made 16 films, from The Fountainhead to The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell. It is significant that half of the films he made in this period are Westerns, often harking back to the period of his tentative shyness. Now however, Cooper was a rapidly aging man who stood resolutely against the world. That The Virginian should be the culmination of his earlier Western period and High Noon the peak of his second Western period is not a coincidence. Cooper as well as others saw the similarity of the two films. The differences between them are equally striking. Will Kane in High Noon seeks help from his society; the Virginian wanted to be on his own. Will Kane learns the bitter lesson of having to be alone; the Virginian never has to face this problem. Throughout this period, the Cooper character is faced with defeat and indecision—a character alone by choice, as in The Fountainhead, or because his society rejects him, as in The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell. It is the time of the Cold War, in which the Cooper character’s old values were rejected.

1956–61: Questioning the Past. In this five-year period Cooper made eight films, from Love in the Afternoon through The Naked Edge. This period is ushered in by a transition film, Friendly Persuasion, a film in which Cooper’s character discarded his guns and rejected the violence that characters in the other periods had accepted with little question. This questioning of the past continues to the end of Cooper’s life. It is significant that this is the period in which Cooper had the most control of his parts, was producing his own films, but felt he had let his public down. He was now trying to extend his range as an actor and was willing to do so by questioning his image in the past. His role as the lover in Love in the Afternoon is an ironic comment on his past comedy images. In his Westerns of this period, he is a self-sufficient but highly reluctant, somber man. His final films constantly question his past. In They Came to Cordura the very essence of filmic courage that Cooper had represented is questioned, and in his final film, The Naked Edge, the possibility of Cooper being a vicious murderer is proposed. It is true that in all these films the Cooper character is ultimately heroic, but the films play with the image, toy with the possibilities of that image. Cooper’s work is certainly no less good in this period. What was reacted to by critics and public was what Cooper now represented, the weary questioner of the American mythic past.

It is perhaps appropriate that Cooper’s two Academy Awards (for Sergeant York and High Noon) should be for two separate periods, one in which he was the optimistic hero of the past and the other in which he was the pessimistic retainer of the past. In fact, more than 60 of Cooper’s films were set in the past. It may well have been that it was what he represented in American history and culture as well as his performances in these films for which he was honored.

As one critic said, Gary Cooper’s face was the map of America. In it, we read our past. We liked it or did not like it, but we could not turn away from the compelling man who represented it.

—Stuart M. Kaminsky

COOPER, Jackie

Films as Actor:

1929 8 Our Gang comedy shorts; Fox Movietone Follies of 1929 (Butler); Sunny Side Up (David Butler) (as tenement boy); Boxing Gloves (Mack and McGowan—short) (as Jackie)
1931 Skippy (Taurog) (title role); Donovan’s Kid (Young Donovan’s Kid) (Niblo) (as Midge Murray); The Champ (King Vidor) (as Dink); Sooky (Taurog) (as Skippy Skinner)
1932 When a Feller Needs a Friend (Pollard) (as Eddie Randall); Divorce in the Family (Reisner) (as Terry Parker)
1933 Broadway to Hollywood (Ring Up the Curtain) (Mack) (as Ted Hackett Jr. as child); The Bowery (Walsh) (as Swipes McGurk)
1934 Lone Cowboy (Sloane) (as Scooter O’Neal); Treasure Island (Fleming) (as Jim Hawkins); Peck’s Bad Boy (Cline) (as Bill Peck)
1935 Dinky (Bretherton and Lederman) (title role); O’Shaughnessy’s Boy (Boleslawski) (as Stubby); Tough Guy (Franklin) (as Freddie)
1936 The Devil Is a Sissy (The Devil Takes the Count) (Van Dyke) (as “Buck” Murphy)
1937 Boy of the Streets (Nigh) (as Chuck)
1938 White Banners (Goulding) (as Peter Trimble); Gangster’s Boy (Nigh) (as Larry Kelly); That Certain Age (Ludwig) (as Ken); Newsboys’ Home (Harold Young) (as “Rifle” Edwards)
1939 Scouts to the Rescue (Taylor and James—serial); The Spirit of Culver (Man’s Heritage) (Taurog) (as Tom Allen); Streets of New York (The Abe Lincoln of Ninth Avenue) (Nigh) (as Jimmy); Two Bright Boys (Santley) (as Roy O’Donnell); The Big Guy (Lubin) (as Timmy Hutchins); What a Life! (Reed) (as Henry Aldrich)
1940 Gallant Sons (Seitz) (as Byron “By” Newbold); The Return of Frank James (Fritz Lang) (as Clem/Tom Grayson); Seventeen (Louis King) (as William Sylvanus Baxter)
1941 Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard) (as Jerry Regan); Her First Beau (Reed) (as Chuck Harris); Glamour Boy (Hearts in Springtime) (Murphy) (as Tiny Barlow); Life with Henry (Reed) (as Henry Aldrich)
Films as Director:

1972  * Stand Up and Be Counted
1978  Having Babies III (for TV); Perfect Gentlemen (for TV) (+ pr); Rainbow (for TV)

1979  * Sex and the Single Parent (for TV)
1980  * Marathon (for TV); Rodeo Girl (for TV); White Mama (for TV)

1981  * Leave ‘em Laughing (for TV)
1982  * Rosie: The Rosemary Clooney Story (for TV)
1984  * The Ladies (for TV); The Night They Saved Christmas (for TV)
1985  * Izzy and Moe (for TV)

Publications

By COOPER: book—

* Please Don’t Shoot My Dog (autobiography), with Dick Kleiner, New York, 1981.

By COOPER: article—

On COOPER: articles—

De Roos, Robert, ‘‘When the Wise Guys Were Wrong,’’ and ‘‘How Did Jackie Cooper Escape the Classic Child-Star Fate?,’’ in TV Guide (New York), 6 and 13 October 1968.

child actors as stars and protagonists in features had become an important part of movie fare by the mid-1930s. Jackie Cooper, a boy who had gained audience approval in the ‘‘Our Gang’’ comedies when this series switched to sound in 1929, became a star in 1931 with the full-length films Skippy and The Champ, well before such moppet actors as Shirley Temple, Mickey Rooney, and Judy Garland were cast in leading roles.

In Skippy Cooper plays an enterprising boy able to manipulate his middle-class parents, who do not always approve of his adventures with boys from the ‘‘wrong side of the tracks.’’ Cooper’s skills were even more evident in The Champ in which he portrays the son of a prizefighter on the skids. Although this work lapses into sentimentality, the combined talents of Wallace Beery (‘‘The Champ’’) and Cooper helped to make this work an important film of the early 1930s. Because their names were similar, Cooper was sometimes confused with Jackie Coogan. In fact there was another connection: in 1934 Jackie Cooper played the lead in the film Peck’s Bad Boy, a role that Coogan had created in a silent version 13 years earlier.

Cooper went on to play Jim Hawkins to Beery’s Long John Silver in the screen adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson’s Treasure Island. At the age of 17 he played opposite Deanna Durbin in That Certain Age, the kind of film that Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland were handling more successfully in the ‘‘Andy Hardy’’ series. As Cooper grew older, his acting became less fresh and natural.

After establishing himself as an actor and director in television, Cooper returned to the medium that had made him a star when he released his Stand Up and Be Counted in 1972, his debut as a film director. Still active today as both an actor and director, Cooper remains best known for the roles he created as a child star in the early 1930s.

—Donald McCaffrey

Costello, Lou

See Abbott, Bud, and Lou COSTELLO

COSTNER, Kevin

Kevin Costner in Waterworld

and became stage manager at Raleigh Movie Studios; made film debut in small nonunion picture, Stacey’s Knights, 1981; was cast in, but edited out of, Lawrence Kasdan’s The Big Chill, 1983; set up own production company, TIG, late 1980s; executive producer and narrator of TV series 500 Nations, 1995. Awards: Academy Award for Best Director, Directors Guild of America Award for Outstanding Directorial Achievement in Motion Pictures, Silver Bear Award, Berlin Film Festival, Golden Globe Award for Best Director, National Board of Review NBR Award for Best Director, and PGA Golden Laurel Award as Motion Picture Producer of the Year, all for Dances with Wolves, 1990. Office: TIG Productions, 4000 Warner Blvd., Burbank, CA 91523.

Films as Actor:

1981 Stacey’s Knights (Winning Steak) (Wilson) (as Will Bonner); Shadows Run Black (Heard) (as Jimmy Scott); Chasing Dreams (Roche and Conte) (as Ed)
1982 Frances (Clifford) (as Man in Alley); Night Shift (Ron Howard) (as Frat Boy #1)
1983 The Big Chill (Kasdan) (as Alex; scenes deleted); Testament (Littman) (as Phil Pitkin); Table for Five (Lieberman) (as Newlywed Husband)
1984 American Flyers (Badham) (as Marcus Sommers)
1985 Silverado (Kasdan) (as Jake); Fandango (Reynolds) (as Gardner Barnes)
1986 Sizzle Beach U.S.A. (Malibu Hot Summer) (Brander—produced in 1974) (as John Logan)
1987 The Untouchables (De Palma) (as Eliot Ness); No Way Out (Donaldson) (as Lt. Cmdr. Tom Farrell)
1988 Bull Durham (Shelton) (as Crash Davis)
1989 Field of Dreams (Robinson) (as Ray Kinsella); The Gunrunner (Castillo—produced in 1983) (as Ted Beaubien)
1990 Revenge (Scott) (as Cochran, + co-pr)
1991 Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves (Reynolds) (title ro, + co-pr); JFK (Stone) (as Jim Garrison); Truth or Dare (Keshishian—doc) (as Himself)
1992 The Bodyguard (Jackson) (as Frank Farmer, + co-pr); Beyond ‘JFK’: A Question of Conspiracy (Kopple, Schechter—doc) (as Interviewee); John Barry-Moviola (Brien—doc) (as Himself)
At the beginning of his career, Kevin Costner spent several years knocking around the edges of the film industry. Some of his roles were so small that his presence was barely noticed. Others were bigger parts in dreadful low-budget potboilers that later came back to haunt him when they ingloriously appeared in video stores. He caught the attention of critics and audiences with his scene-stealing, star-making supporting performance as Jake, a roguish gunslinging cowboy, in the Lawrence Kasdan Western Silverado. The plum role was a payback of sorts from Kasdan; Costner earlier had played Alex, whose suicide sparks the chain of events which unfolds in The Big Chill, but the director decided to cut the character from the film’s final edit. All that remains of Costner in The Big Chill are his feet in the opening sequence, as Alex is being prepared for his funeral. Costner similarly had been cut from Frances, a biography of Frances Farmer, appearing on-screen ever so briefly in a scene in an alley in which he has one line.

Costner was to solidify his stardom playing square-jawed, true-blue all-American heroes. He specialized in such character types early on, playing Eliot Ness in The Untouchables, a remake of the classic television series, and a stalwart naval officer who uncovers corruption in No Way Out. Both these characters are generic Hollywood good guys who remain uncorrupted as they take on the scenario’s villains. Around this time, Costner expressed his desire to be linked to the Frank Capra-Jimmy Stewart tradition, playing boyish and stable leads, and he did just that in the baseball films Bull Durham and Field of Dreams. In the former, he is aging catcher Crash Davis, a ballyard purist who understands and loves the game, but whose limited talent has kept him in the minor leagues for most of his career, with only brief appearances in “The Show.” In the latter, by far his most Capraesque film, he is Ray Kinsella, a Midwest farmer who is told by a divine voice to replace his corn stalks with a baseball field. Both these heroes are in the classic Hollywood tradition. In an earlier era, each might have been played by Stewart; indeed, during its publicity tour, Costner touted Field of Dreams as “our generation’s It's a Wonderful Life.” Furthermore, Costner’s Jim Garrison in JFK may lack the outright innocence of Stewart’s Jefferson Smith in Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, but they remain linked in their idealism and vigor. As Costner orates in court on how the facts of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy have been concealed from the American public, he becomes reminiscent of Stewart filibustering on the Senate floor and exposing venal Washington politicians.

Nevertheless, the appealing boyishness of Costner’s characters was not always Capraesque. It may be in Field of Dreams, where Ray Kinsella’s true-blue idealism becomes one of the scenario’s overriding factors. But in Silverado, that innocence is portrayed as outright immaturity, as his character acts recklessly (and easily might have come to be known as “Jake the Kid”). At the same time, Costner has more than adequately played the contemporary male sex symbol. His characters are anything but boyish when tangling with their female counterparts. In No Way Out, he and Sean Young share a headline-making rendezvous in the back seat of a limousine, and his between-the-sheets antics with Susan Sarandon in Bull Durham are no less erotically charged.

Costner’s heroes also are contemporary in that they are alienated souls who occasionally take on subversive edges. His Lt. John Dunbar, the Civil War soldier in Dances with Wolves, is anything but the traditional American Western hero in that he is as deeply troubled as highly principled, and he goes on to renounce western civilization and join (rather than fight) a Lakota Sioux Indian tribe. Overall, in the first section of his career, Costner embodied the traditional Hollywood hero. The actors surrounding him may be cast in the juicer and more colorful roles: Robert De Niro and Sean Connery in The Untouchables; Gene Hackman in No Way Out; Tim Robbins in Bull Durham; Graham Greene and Rodney A. Grant in Dances with Wolves; and, later on, Alan Rickman and Morgan Freeman in Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves. But Costner’s presence in each film is essential, as it serves as a consistent calming and stabilizing force at the scenario’s center.

Dances with Wolves is to date the summit of Costner’s career, if only because he directed as well as starred in the film—and won Oscars for Best Picture and Best Director. As a film, it is deeply flawed. With the exception of Dunbar, the whites all are depicted as grumpy, crazy, sadistic, or (in the case of the Civil War general who travels with his own personal surgeon) products of a class system. Meanwhile, the Lakota Sioux are, to a person, attractive, squeaky-clean models of reason. Dances with Wolves is almost laughable in its superficial political correctness. And why so much graphic, stomach-churning violence? Perhaps Costner was trying to contrast the harsh reality of life on the American frontier with its breathtaking natural beauty. This could have been accomplished in one poignant, cleverly directed sequence. In Dances with Wolves, there is a distasteful overdose of blood and pain.

Costner slipped somewhat in his immediate post-Dances with Wolves career, in that he was unable to find an interesting role in a commercially successful film. By far his two best mid-1990s parts came in A Perfect World and The War. In each, he plays a character with a deeply troubled past who attempts to be a positive role model to children. Costner may have given an excellent performance—arguably the best of his career—in A Perfect World, playing Butch Haynes, a sympathetic prison escapee who takes a young boy hostage. The film’s director, Clint Eastwood, has the standard hero role, that of the Texas Ranger who sets out on Haynes’s trail. But audiences rejected Costner in A Perfect World, and the film was a financial failure. He also is fine in The War, playing an unstable but well-intentioned Vietnam veteran. Moviegoers did not flock to see the film, however, preferring him instead in The Bodyguard, in which he stars as an icy-cold professional bodyguard who falls for the superstar singer he has been hired to protect. Aside from its wide popularity, The Bodyguard is an overripe exercise in Hollywood corn.

In spite of the prominence of his role in JFK, that film is a star vehicle for its director, Oliver Stone, rather than any of the actors in its cast. Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves (despite a delightfully campy performance from Alan Rickman as the Sheriff of Nottingham) pales in comparison to similar films of an earlier era; the same might be said for Wyatt Earp, featuring Costner in the title role, in which he is reteamed with Silverado director Kasdan.

In Waterworld, Costner attempted to enter Stallone-Schwarzenegger territory as a cartoon hero in a special effects-laden action movie extravaganza. But the film will be remembered not for its entertainment value but for the reams of negative publicity it earned as the costliest movie made to date. While not the fiasco of a Heaven’s Gate or Ishtar, Waterworld did nothing to enhance Costner’s career. Yet the film was the equal of Star Wars when contrasted to his career nadir: The Postman, a laughably ludicrous post-apocalyptic allegory that was a critically skewed box office disaster. Costner directed as well as starred, playing a drifter-loner who impersonates a postman and becomes the savior of a war-ravaged populace.

If he is to remain a bankable movie personality, Costner would be advised to seek out roles that are aging versions of the ones that firmly up his stardom. This is precisely what he did in two of his late 1990s releases, both reminiscent of Bull Durham and Field of Dreams in that their scenarios reflect on sports as a metaphor for life. The first is Tin Cup, in which he was reunited with Bull Durham director Ron Shelton. Costner exudes charm as a broken-down golf pro who operates a dinky driving range and sets out to qualify for the United States Open, but is done in by his lack of discipline and obsession with hitting the perfect golf ball. Adding to his appeal is his romantic pairing and verbal sparring with a talented and attractive co-star, Rene Russo. In For Love of the Game, the final installment in what may be considered Costner’s baseball trilogy, the actor plays an aging Detroit Tigers pitcher and future Hall of Famer who hurls a perfect game in Yankee Stadium. While not in the same league as Bull Durham and Field of Dreams, For Love of the Game is a fine companion piece that is a knowing story of baseball and baseball psychology, of team effort, time passing, and bonds between fathers and sons. Off the field, when the scenario spotlights Costner’s character and his girlfriend, played by Kelly Preston, the film works as a love story featuring fully fleshed-out characters in a believable relationship.

In between Tin Cup and For Love of the Game, Costner faltered in the less-successful Message in a Bottle, a contrived tearjerker casting him as a grieving widower who tentatively becomes involved in a new romantic relationship. So in addition to finding good roles, he also must look for good scripts.

—Mark Walker, updated by Rob Edelman

COTTEN, Joseph

Nationality: American. Born: Joseph Cheshire Cotten in Petersburg, Virginia, 15 May 1905. Education: Studied at Hickman School of Expression, Washington, D.C. Family: Married 1) Lenore Kipp Lamont, 1931 (died 1960), one stepdaughter; 2) the actress Patricia
Herald while selling paint and later advertising space in Miami;
1930—engaged by Belasco Theatre as understudy and assistant stage manager in New York; 1931—actor with Copley Square Theatre; worked in summer stock; 1932—Broadway debut with small screen role in Absent Father; 1936—joined Orson Welles’s Federal Theater project; 1938—joined Welles and John Houseman’s Mercury Theater; 1939—critical acclaim for role opposite Katharine Hepburn in
The Philadelphia Story on Broadway; 1941—film debut in Citizen
Kane; 1942—seven-year contract with David O. Selznick after Merrowdy friends forced to leave RKO; 1948—contract sold to Warners;
1949—began to freelance for other studios; 1950–53—contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1953–54—returned to Broadway for starring role in Journey into Fear (Dieterle) (as Dr. Lewis Moline); 1955–56—host on TV series
The Joseph Cotten Show, produced by his own company,
Fordyce Productions; 1963–64—host on TV series Hollywood and Actor, Venice Festival, for Portrait of Jennie, 1949. Died: In Westwood, California, 6 February 1994.

Films as Actor:

1941 Citizen Kane (Welles) (as Jed Leland); Lydia (Duuvier) (as Michael Fitzpatrick)
1942 The Magnificent Ambersons (Welles) (as Eugene Morgan);
Journey into Fear (Norman Foster) (as Graham, + co-sc)
1943 Shadow of a Doubt (Hitchcock) (as Uncle Charlie); Hers to Hold (Ryan) (as Bill Morley)
1944 Gaslight (The Murder in Thornton Square) (Cukor) (as Brian Cameron); Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (as Lt. Anthony Willett); I’ll Be Seeing You (Dieterle) (as Zachary Morgan)
1945 Love Letters (Dieterle) (as Alan Quinton)
1946 Duel in the Sun (King Vidor and others) (as Jesse McCanles)
1947 The Farmer’s Daughter (Potter) (as Glenn Morley)
1948 Portrait of Jennie (Jennie) (Dieterle) (as Ebene Adams)
1949 The Third Man (Reed) (as Holly Martins); Under Capricorn (Hitchcock) (as Sam Flusky); Beyond the Forest (King Vidor) (as Dr. Lewis Moline)
1950 Walk Softly, Stranger (Stevenson) (as Chris Hale); Two Flags
West (Wise) (as Col. Clay Tucker); September Affair
(Dieterle) (as David Lawrence)

1951 Half Angel (Sale) (as John Raymond); Peking Express (Dieterle)
(as Michael Bachlin); The Man with a Cloak (Markle)
(as Dupin)
1952 Untamed Frontier (Fregonesi) (as Kirk Denbow); Gone to Earth (Powell) (as narrator); The Wild Heart (Powell and Pressburger—revised version of Gone to Earth, shortened)
(as narrator); The Steel Trap (Andrew L. Stone) (as Jim Osborne); Othello (Welles) (as Senator)
1953 Niagara (Hathaway) (as George Loomis); A Blueprint for Murder (Andrew L. Stone) (as Whitney Cameron); Egypt
by Three (Stoloff) (as narrator) 1955 Special Delivery ( Von Himmel gefallen) (Brahm) (as Jonathan Adams)
1956 The Killer Is Loose (Boetticher) (as Sam Wagner); The Bottom of the Bottle (Beyond the River) (Hathaway) (as
P. M.); Nobody Runs Away (Parker—short)
1957 The Halliday Brand (Joseph H. Lewis) (as Daniel) 1958 Touch of Evil (Welles) (as Detective); From Earth to the Moon (Haskin) (as Victor Barbiacine)
1960 The Angel Wore Red (Nunnally Johnson) (as Hawthorne)
1961 The Last Sunst (Aldrich) (as John Breckenridge); The Karma (for U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare) (as narrator)
1964 Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Aldrich) (as Drew)
1965 The Great Sioux Massacre (Salkow) (as Maj. Reno); Krakatoo
(Izard) (re-edited version of 1933 film) (as narrator)
1966 The Oscar (Rouse) (as Kenneth H. Regan); The Money Trap
(Kennedy) (as Dr. Horace Van Tilden); Gli uomini dal passo pesante (The Trampers) (Sequi and Antonini, English-language copies: Band) (as Temple Cordean) 1967 Some May Live (In Saigon, Some May Live) (Sewell) (as Col.
Woodward); Brightly of the Grand Canyon (Norman Foster) (as Jim Owen); Jack of Diamonds (Taylor) (as Ace of Diamonds); I crudeli (The Hellbenders) (Corbucci) (as Jonas); Comancho blanco (White Comanche; Rio Hondo)
(Briz, English-language copies: Kay)
1968 Petulia (Lester) (as Mr. Danner); Split Second to an Epitaph
(Horn—for TV); Gangster ’70 (Guerini)
1969 The Lonely Profession (Heyes—for TV); Cutter’s Trail
(McEveety—for TV); Keene
1970 The Grasshopper (Paris) (as Richard Morgan); E venne l’ora della vendetta; Do You Take This Stranger? (Heffron—for TV); Assault on the Wayne (Chomsky—for TV) (as Admiral); Ido zero daikusaken (Latitude Zero) (Honda) (as Capt.
Craig McKenzie); Tora! Tora! Tora! (Flesicher) (as Henry Stimson); City beneath the Sea (One Hour to Doomsday)
(Irwin Allen—for TV)
1971 The Abominable Dr. Phibes (Fuest) (as Dr. Vesalius); La figlia di Frankenstein (Lady Frankenstein) (Mel Welles)
(as Baron)
1972 The Devil’s Daughter (Szwarc—for TV) (as Judge Wetherby);
The Screaming Woman (Smith—for TV); Lo scopone scientifico (The Scientific Cardplayer) (Comencini) (as George); Gli orrori del castello di Norimberga (Baron Blood) (Bava) (as Becker/the Baron); Doomsday Voyage
(Vidette) (as Capt. Jason)
1973 Soylent Green (Flesicher) (as William Simonson); A Delicate Balance (Richardson) (as Harry)
Joseph Cotten (right) with Jennifer Jones and Robert Walker in Since You Went Away

1975  Timber Tramps (Garnett); F for Fake (Vérités et mensonges; About Fakes; Nothing but the Truth) (Welles); Il giustiziere sfida la città (Lenzi)
1976  The Lindbergh Kidnapping Case (Kulik—for TV); Un sussurro nel buio (A Whisper in the Dark) (Aliprandi)
1977  Twilight’s Last Gleaming (Aldrich) (as Arthur Renfrew); Airport ’77 (Jameson) (as Nicholas St. Downs II)
1978  Screamers (The Island of the Fish Men; L’isola degli uomini Pesci) (Martino and Miller) (as Prof. Marvin); L’Ordre et la sécurité du monde (Martino and Miller); Caravans (Fargo) (as Crandall); Return to Fantasy Island (McGowan—for TV)
1979  Trauma (Beattie); Churchill and the Generals (Gibson—for TV); Concorde affaire (S.O.S. Concorde) (Desdato)
1980  Guyana: Cult of the Damned (Guyana: Crime of the Century) (Cardona Jr.) (as Richard Gable); Heaven’s Gate (Cimino) (as the Reverend Doctor); The Hearse (Bowers) (as Walter Pritchard); Survivor (Hemmings) (as priest); Casino (Chaffey—for TV) (as Ed Booker)

Publications

By COTTEN: book—

By COTTEN: articles—

On COTTEN: books—

On COTTEN: articles—

Current Biography 1943, New York, 1943.

* * *

Self-effacing to the point of never drawing attention away from his healthy-egoed leading ladies, Joseph Cotten was an indispensable part of forties romantic hagiography. When Cotten stared soulfully at a woman, his eyes revealed a man consumed by his feelings—not to the point of traditional derring-do or fancy declarations of love, but to the level of psychological breakdown. The term lovesick could have been coined for him. With the burgeoning fascination with psychoanalysis (given impetus by Spellbound), Freudians could study Cotten as the era’s prime symbol of emotional defeat and sublimation. If only one of his roles (I’ll Be Seeing You) featured an actual victim of shell-shock, many of his other opuses (Love Letters, Since You Went Away, The Magnificent Ambersons, Portrait of Jennie) could be considered studies of a love-shocked martyr in thrall to elusive women on pedestals. That above list includes some of the period’s most winsome classics and one masterpiece, Welles’s studio-mauled Ambersons, in which Cotten loses his lady fair while regretting the progress he has implemented, aware that his mechanical forward-strides have destroyed his beloved Isabelle’s family. Even in his debut film, Citizen Kane, always complaisant Cotten is a fence-sitting wag content to criticize and conjecture regarding someone else, but not forcefully pursuing his own goals. In the mythology of Hollywood, the reactive Cotten is a Cupid-struck Sisyphus forever pushing his own heart up that hill. Usually proving that the good guy finishes, if not last, at least lovelorn, Cotten spends World War II waiting for Claudette Colbert to have a weak adulterous moment in Since You Went Away but surrenders never comes. In Portrait of Jennie (a movie immeasurably enhanced by its dreamy score and iridescent black and white cinematography), the unrequited suitor Cotten does not have a ghost of a chance with his spectral love object. But real or otherwise, all this leading man’s dream girls turn out to be figurative if not literal phantoms.

The downside of Cotten’s ineffectuality is that his innate decency is never backed up by action. Thus, while typifying all the cherished virtues of modern times in the adult sagebrusher Duel in the Sun, Cotten is helpless to save his heart’s desire, Pearl, from the call of the wild represented by his compunction-free brother, Lewt. Complexly, the scenario of this Western epic makes it crystal clear that Cotten is a catalyst in the film’s tragic ending. Hawking the necessity of goodness is not enough when villains run helter-skelter in the devil’s employ.

After his peak period, watch-and-wait Cotten’s lack of willfulness takes on a more pejorative coloring. In two fifties classics of cuckoldry, he is cast as the middle-aged good provider who is less slow-burning than burned out. Unable to curb his wife’s infantile pining for a flashy lifestyle in Beyond the Forest, Cotten is Stoicism incarnate but playing second banana to Bette Davis’s mood shifts ends up being a career misstep into character roles. Visibly older by the time he visits Niagara to punish the bombshell wife he craves but cannot satisfy, Cotten’s screen alter ego finally takes steps, but homicide brings the spineless spouse no vengeful joy.

On one previous occasion—the high point of Cotten’s acting career—Hitchcock divined the underside to Cotten’s sober nobility and cast him, atypically, as a man of confident action. In Shadow of a Doubt, Cotten’s Uncle Charlie pursues women not for their beauty but for their pocketbooks. Contemptuous of humanity in general, this terminator of wealthy widows kills for fun and profit. Pitilessly zeroing in on the killer’s self-loathing, Hitchcock and Cotten characterize cold-blooded Uncle Charlie’s strangleholds as a reaction to his basic impotence. It is as if each killing was a shameful admittance of lack of character.

Sadly, for a career that includes the superb postwar thriller The Third Man and roles or cameos in five Welles classics, Cotten seemed to give up on stardom with the same lack of coyness his characters suffered from. He was lucky to average two good movies a decade from the fifties onward. In addition to a memorable appearance as the Reverend Doctor failing to inspire a graduating class in Heaven’s Gate, Cotten was supremely swinish as a greedy plotter in Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte, and stomach-churningly class conscious as an overprotective father in Petulia. Perhaps it is merciful to overlook those decades of perfectly intoned line deliveries that he palmed off as performances and concentrate on his glory days as a luckless Lothario forever reaching for the unattainable woman. Falling short or pulling fatefully back, Cotten is remembered as the hero-in-stasis, a man whose goodness ultimately proved ineffective in his pursuit of happiness.

—Robert Pardi

CRAWFORD, Broderick

Films as Actor:

1937 Woman Chases Man (Blystone); Submarine D-I (Bacon)
1938 Start Cheering (Rogell)
1939 Ambush (Neumann); Sudden Money (Grinde); Undercover Doctor (Louis King); Island of Lost Men (Neumann); Beau Geste (Wellman); The Real Glory (Hathaway); Eternally Yours (Garnett)
1940 Slightly Honorable (Garnett); I Can’t Give You Anything but Love, Baby (Rogell); When the Daltons Rode (Marshall); Seven Sinners (Garnett); Trail of the Vigilantes (Dwan); The Texas Rangers Ride Again (Hogan)
1941 The Black Cat (Rogell); Tight Shoes (Rogell) (as Speedy Miller); Badlands of Dakota (Green); South of Tahiti (Waggener)
1942 North to the Klondike (Kenton); Butch Minds the Baby (Rogell) (as Aloysius “Butch” Grogan); Larceny, Inc. (Bacon); Broadway (Seiter); Men of Texas (Men of Destiny) (Enright); Sin Town (Enright); Keeping Fit (Lubin—short)
1946 The Runaround (Lamont); The Black Angel (Neill)
1947 Slave Girl (Lamont); The Flame (Auer)
1948 The Time of Your Life (Potter); Sealed Verdict (Allen); Bad Men of Tombstone (Neumann)
1949 Night unto Night (Siegel); A Kiss in the Dark (Daves); Anna Lucasta (Rapper); All the King’s Men (Rosseen) (as Willie Stark)

1950 Cargo to Capetown (McEvoy); Convicted (Levin); Born Yesterday (Cukor) (as Harry Brock)
1951 The Mob (Remember That Face) (Parrish)
1952 Lone Star (Sherman); Scandal Sheet (The Dark Page) (Karlson); Last of the Comanchees (The Sabre and the Arrow) (de Toth); Stop, You’re Killing Me (Del Ruth)
1953 The Last Posse (Werker)
1954 Night People (Johnson); Human Desire (Fritz Lang); Down Three Dark Streets (Laven)
1955 Big House, U.S.A. (Koch); New York Confidential (Rouse); Not as a Stranger (Kramer); Il bidone (The Swindlers) (Fellini); Man on a Bus (Lewis—for United Jewish Appeal Fund)
1956 The Fastest Gun Alive (Rouse); Between Heaven and Hell (Fleischer)
1958 The Decks Ran Red (Stone)
1960 La vendetta di Ercole (Goliath and the Dragon; The Revenge of Hercules) (Cottafavi)
1961 Nasilje na trgu (Square of Violence) (Bercovici)
1962 Convicts Four (Reprieve) (Kaufman); The Castilian (Setò)
1964 A House Is Not a Home (Rouse)
1965 Up from the Beach (Parrish); Kid Rodeo (Carlson)
1966 The Oscar (Rouse); El escuadrón de la muerte (Per un dollaro di gloria; Mutiny at Fort Sharp) (Cerchio); The Texican (Selander); The Vulture (Huntington)
1967 Red Tomahawk (Springsteen)
1970 Wie kommt ein so reizendes Mädchen zu diesem Gewerbe? (How Did a Nice Girl Like You Get into This Business?) (Tremper); Maharlika (Hopper); The Challenge (Smilie—for TV)
1971 A Tattered Web (Wendkos—for TV)
1972 Embassy (Hessler); House of Dracula’s Daughter (Hessler); The Candidate (Ritchie) (as voice)
1973 Hell’s Bloody Devils (Smashing the Crime Syndicate) (Adams); Terror in the Wax Museum (Fenady); The Adventures of Nick Carter (Krasny—for TV)
1974 The Phantom of Hollywood (Levitt—for TV)
1976 Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner) Mayday at Forty Thousand Feet (Butler—for TV); Look What’s Happened to Rosemary’s Baby (O’Stein—for TV)
1977 The Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover (J. Edgar Hoover) (Cohen) (title role); Ningen no shomei (Proof of the Man) (Sato)
1979 A Little Romance (George Roy Hill) (as Brod); Supertrain (Curtis—for TV)
1980 Harlequin (Wincer); There Goes the Bride (Marcel)
1981 The Upper Crust (Patzak)
1982 Liar’s Moon (Fisher)

Publications

On Crawford: articles—

Herald Tribune (New York), 28 November 1937.
Howard, T. “All the King’s Men,” Reid’s Film Index (Australia), no. 16, 1995.

* * *
During the Eisenhower era, Broderick Crawford was everyone’s favorite “authority figure” on television. With his bulldog face and barking voice, he roared down the highway after lawbreakers as Chief Dan Matthews in Highway Patrol. Prior to his television success, however, it was Crawford’s performance as Willie Stark in the film All the King’s Men that had established his reputation as an actor. As the honest country lawyer who becomes a ruthless demagogue, Crawford is frighteningly convincing in his transformation of character. His physical gifts as an actor—the beefy physique, the aggressive stance, the gruff voice—were never more perfectly exploited than in his portrayal of the dichotomous nature of Stark. Crawford’s intelligent performance will always stand as a model interpretation of how power can corrupt the individual. He was later to draw on this same persona in his perversely sympathetic portrayal of J. Edgar Hoover in The Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover, a comic-book style fantasy that depicts Hoover as a sexually repressed neurotic who freely violated the law.

After his screen debut in 1937 Crawford appeared in supporting roles and as an occasional lead in “B” pictures such as Sin Town and The Runaround. It was his experience in vaudeville and on Broadway that prepared him for his success in his first lead roles, as Speedy Miller in Tight Shoes and Aloysius “Butch” Grogan in Butch Minds the Baby. In these two broad theatrical comedies by Damon Runyon, Crawford established himself as the quintessential Runyon hero—the soft-hearted, streetwise mobster. His familiarity with the underworld personality, the result of his portrayal of these amiable rogues, served him well when he gave a brilliant comic performance as Harry Brock, the arrogant self-made tycoon in Tight Shoes.

Crawford is never more likable than when he plays against type, as in The Time of Your Life. It was his experience in vaudeville and on Broadway that prepared him for his success in his first lead roles, as Speedy Miller in Tight Shoes and Aloysius “Butch” Grogan in Butch Minds the Baby. In these two broad theatrical comedies by Damon Runyon, Crawford established himself as the quintessential Runyon hero—the soft-hearted, streetwise mobster. His familiarity with the underworld personality, the result of his portrayal of these amiable rogues, served him well when he gave a brilliant comic performance as Harry Brock, the arrogant self-made tycoon in Born Yesterday.

Crawford's performance will always stand as a model interpretation of how power can corrupt the individual. He was later to draw on this same persona in his perversely sympathetic portrayal of J. Edgar Hoover in The Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover, a comic-book style fantasy that depicts Hoover as a sexually repressed neurotic who freely violated the law.

Apart from his acclaimed performances in All the King’s Men, Born Yesterday, and The Mob (in which he plays a tough undercover cop), however, most of Crawford’s fine work has been ignored by critics. Two of his most memorable performances are in this category: Fritz Lang’s Human Desire and Federico Fellini’s Il bidone. In the Lang film, Crawford commands pity and fear as the tormented railway engineer driven to insane jealousy and murder by his unfaithful wife. In the Fellini film, he is eloquent and moving as the petty thief who attempts to redeem himself for the sake of his adoring daughter. The tragic final image of Il bidone, Crawford alone and dying on a deserted mountain road, is one of the most heartrending in the history of the cinema.

—Jeff Stafford

CRAWFORD, Joan

Nationality: American. Born: Lucille LeSueur in San Antonio, Texas, 23 March 1908; adopted name of stepfather, Cassin, as a child. Education: Attended St. Agnes School and Rockingham; Stephens College, Columbia, Missouri, for about three months. Family: Married 1) the actor Douglas Fairbanks Jr., 1929 (divorced 1933); 2) the actor Franchot Tone, 1935 (divorced 1939); 3) Phillip Terry, 1942 (divorced 1946), adopted children: Christina, Christopher, Cynthia, and Cathy; 4) Alfred N. Steele, 1955 (died 1959). Career: Took dancing lessons as a child, and became a dancer; 1923—dancer at Oriole Terrace Club, Detroit; 1924—in chorus of Broadway revue Innocent Eyes and The Passing Show of 1924; spotted by MGM talent scout; 1925—contract with MGM, and given name “Joan Crawford,” prize-winning name in movie magazine contest; 1928—dancer in film Our Dancing Daughters; 1929—first talkie, Untamed; 1943—left MGM, signed with Warner Brothers; occasional TV appearances from 1953; 1955—after marriage to Alfred Steele, chairman of Pepsi-Cola Company, began making promotional appearances for company; 1959—following death of Steele, became first woman member of company’s board of directors, and later became company’s official hostess and vice president; 1964—suffered pneumonia while working on Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte, replaced by Olivia de Havilland. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award, for Mildred Pierce, 1945. Died: In New York City, 13 May 1977.

Films as Actress:

(as Lucille LeSueur)

1925 Lady of the Night (Bell) (as double for Norma Shearer); Proud Flesh (King Vidor) (as party guest); Pretty Ladies (Bell) (as Bobby)

(as Joan Crawford)

1925 The Circle (Borzage) (as young Lady Catharine); Old Clothes (Cline) (as Mary Riley); Sally, Irene, and Mary (Goulding) (as Irene)

1926 The Boob (Wellman) (as Jane); Tramp, Tramp, Tramp (Edwards and Capra) (as Betty Burton); Paris (Goulding) (as the Girl)

1927 The Taxi Dancer (Millarde) (as Joslyn Poe); Winners of the Wilderness (Van Dyke) (as Renee Contrecoeur); The Understanding Heart (Conway) (as Monica Dale); The Unknown (Browning) (as Estrellita); Twelve Miles Out (Conway) (as Jane); Spring Fever (Sedgwick) (as Allie Monte)

1928 West Point (Sedgwick) (as Betty Channing); Rose-Marie (Hubbard) (as Marie); Across to Singapore (Nigh) (as Priscilla Crownshield); The Law of the Range (Nigh) (as Betty Dallas); Four Walls (Nigh) (as Frieda); Our Dancing Daughters (Beaumont) (as Diana Medford); Dream of Love (Nibo) (as Adrienne)

1929 The Duke Steps Out (Cruse) (as Susie); Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Riesner); Our Modern Maidens (Conway) (as Billie Brown); Untamed (Conway) (as Bingo)

1930 Montana Moon (St. Clair) (as Joan); Our Blushing Brides (Beaumont) (as Jerry Marsh); Paid (Wood) (as Mary Turner)

1931 Dance, Fools, Dance (Beaumont) (as Bonnie Jordan); Laughing Sinners (Beaumont) (as Ivy Stevens); This Modern Age (Grinde) (as Valentine Winters); Possessed (Brown) (as Marian Martin)
1932  Grand Hotel (Goulding) (as Flaemmchen); Letty Lynton (Browning) (title role); Rain (Milestone) (as Sadie Thompson)
1933  Today We Live (Hawks) (as Diana Boyce-Smith); Dancing Lady (Leonard) (as Janie Barlow)
1934  Sadie McKee (Brown) (title role); Chained (Brown) (as Diane Lovering)
1935  Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke) (as Mary Clay); No More Ladies (Edward H. Griffith and Cukor) (as Marcia Townsend); I Live My Life (Van Dyke) (as Kay)
1936  The Gorgeous Hussy (Brown) (as Peggy O’Neal Eaton); Love on the Run (Van Dyke) (as Sally Parker)
1937  The Last of Mrs. Cheyney (Boleslawski) (as Fay Cheyney); The Bride Wore Red (Arzner) (as Annie Palowitz/Signorina Vivaldi); Mannequin (Borzage) (as Jessie Cassidy)
1938  The Shining Hour (Borzage) (as Olivia Riley)
1939  Ice Follies of 1939 (Schunzel) (as Mary McKay); The Women (Cukor) (as Crystal Allen)
1940  Strange Cargo (Borzage) (as Julie); Susan and God (Cukor) (as Susan Trexel)
1941  A Woman’s Face (Cukor) (as Anna Holm); When Ladies Meet (Leonard) (as Mary Howard)
1942  They All Kissed the Bride (Hall) (as Margaret J. Drew); Reunion in France (Dassin) (as Michele de la Becque)
1943  Above Suspicion (Thorpe) (as Frances Myles)
1944  Hollywood Canteen (Daves)
1945  Mildred Pierce (Curtiz) (title role)
1946  Humoresque (Negulesco) (as Helen Wright)
1947  Possessed (Bernhardt) (as Louise Howell); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger) (title role)
1949  Flamingo Road (Curtiz) (as Lane Bellamy); It’s a Great Feeling (David Butler) (as guest)
1950  The Damned Don’t Cry (Sherman) (as Ethel Whitehead/Lorna Hansen Forbes); Harriet Craig (Sherman) (title role)
1951  Goodbye, My Fancy (Sherman) (as Agatha Reed)
1952  This Man Is Dangerous (Feist) (as Beth Austin); Sudden Fear (Miller) (as Myra Hudson)
1953  Torch Song (Walters) (as Jenny Stewart)
1954  Johnny Guitar (Nicholas Ray) (as Vienna)
1955  Female on the Beach (Pevney) (as Lynn Markham); Queen Bee (MacDougall) (as Eva Phillips)
1956  Autumn Leaves (Aldrich) (as Milly)
1957  The Golden Virgin (Miller); The Story of Esther Costello (Miller) (as Margaret Landi)
1959  The Best of Everything (Negulesco) (as Amanda Farrow)
1962  Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? (Aldrich) (as Blanche Hudson)
1963  The Caretakers (Bartlett) (as Lucretia Terry)
1964 Strait-Jacket (Castle) (as Lucy Harbin)
1965 I Saw What You Did (Castle) (as Amy Nelson); Della (Gist) (title role)
1967 The Karate Killers (Shear—compilation of The Man from U.N.C.L.E. eps.) (as Amanda True)
1968 Berserk! (O’Connolly) (as Monica Rivers)
1969 “Eyes” segment of Night Gallery (Spielberg—for TV) (as Miss Menlo)
1970 Trog (Francis) (as Dr. Brockton)

Publications

By CRAWFORD: books—

By CRAWFORD: article—

“The Job of Keeping at the Top,” in Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 17 June 1933.

On CRAWFORD: books—

On CRAWFORD: articles—

“Joan Crawford,” in Sight and Sound (London), April-June 1952.

Harvey, S., “In Memoriam: Joan Crawford,” in Film Comment (New York), July-August 1977.

* * *

Dismissed by Bette Davis as a Star (rather than an Actress like Bette), taken for granted by MGM, ignored as an aging legend, and trashed in a tell-all bio by her daughter (who claims Joan was an Actress rather than a Mother), Joan Crawford survives the contumely of others. This controversial patron saint of fan magazines, who has been labeled everything from a porn-star to child-beater to spitefully jealous co-star to closet alcoholic, is undisputably one thing, a great film star. Whatever Crawford was offscreen, she is our most representative American film icon because she wanted it more than all the others.

Free-spiriting her way through the silent era in true flapper fashion, Crawford thought nothing of altering her look or jumping on a promising trend whenever she needed to pump plasma into an... anemic career. Directors are on record as stating she needed careful reining because she lacked the technique to control her emotions; critics point to her forties performances as evidence of the misty staleness of the studio system. But the woman who never let a fan letter go unanswered always respected her public and tried to give them what they wanted. When they tired of Joan, the Blue-Collar Goddess, she gave them Joan, the Domestic Martyr, and when that image ran out of vim, Crawford restyled herself as the Untamable Shrew. What the many faces of Crawford had in common is glamour; it is a quality that is missing in modern films which kow-tow to naturalism and have little to do with theatrical notions of acting but a lot to do with great screen acting in which the star must communicate her intense belief in her own make-believe image to the movie public. In big hits such as Possessed (1931) and Mannequin (1937), she offered the shop girl’s fantasy of herself, with upward mobility in a good man’s arms—the ultimate prize. Later in her career, while still exuding that movie star je ne sais quoi, she became a menopausal everywoman living out the worst fears of an audience that had aged with her. Naturally, the gloved hand choking back Crawford’s tears was encircled in a haul from Harry Winston’s.

Yet, the number one Hurrell-photographed drone in the Tinseltown film factory could step out of her Joan-ness with stunning results (a fiery Sadie Thompson in Rain, a performance which the passage of time has vindicated). Even her acting triumphs in offbeat roles capitalized on her trademark stoic chic—a poised demeanor whose formidable sensibilities were softened by those mascara-lashed eyes widening in apprehension about what emotional dark woods attractive screenladies might lead her into. In the forties especially, the Crawford visage was a study in face-saving willfulness—expansive lips for quivering, lighthouse eyes for staring unfathomably, luxurious eyebrows for arching disdainfully; these features seldom acted in concert but were often immobile as if her face was on strike against appearing vulnerable. When emotions finally galvanized that paralyzed pan, all histrionic hell broke loose. More than any other screen icon, Crawford made suffering attractive. Comfortable with being the Queen of masochism, versatile Joan could also be spikily funny as the other histrionic hell broke loose. More than any other screen icon, Crawford made suffering attractive. Comfortable with being the Queen of masochism, versatile Joan could also be spikily funny as the other Dunaway’s Crawford tells Pepsi executives that she fought bigger monsters than them in Hollywood and won, cinemaphiles laugh and then they cry, at the sacrifices this warrior-star made in a fool’s quest to stay a star at the top.

Throughout the fifties in her mannish period, Crawford became a bitch-on-wheels forever at the mercy of a gigolo (Female on the Beach) or disturbed younger man (Autumn Leaves) or even a repression lesbian (Johnny Guitar) but the constant in all these films is the ongoing punishment of Joan Crawford who seemed to be a female Christ-figure paying for the sins of every love-starved fan in the audience. Glamorous to the end, Crawford still had those massive shoulders for bearing such a burden.

What shines through all these bizarre melodramas is Crawford’s unchecked fever for adulation; what the teary-eyed spectators accepted as Joan’s desire for fade-out surrender to a man was actually Joan’s love affair with her own career. Those who still respond to Crawford’s icy soap operas regard Harriet Craig as her most characteristic role. Substitute a movie career for the symbolic dream house and you can appreciate the essence of The Joan Crawford Story. Although lovers were fickle and friends had the effrontery to snag better roles, only a legendary film career could bring the joy few mortals know, or so Joan thought. Rejected by the industry in the last years of her life, Crawford had too much spare time to contemplate the drawbacks of the choice she had made.

—Robert Pardi

CRISP, Donald

Nationality: British. Born: Aberfeldy, Perthshire, Scotland, 27 July 1880. Education: Eton College and Oxford University. Military Service: 1899–1902—trooper in Boer War; wounded; during World War I—served as British Intelligence Officer, providing information on conditions in Russia. Family: Married 1) Marie Stark (divorced 1919); 2) the screenwriter Jane Murfin, 1932 (divorced 1944). Career: 1906—moved to U.S.; hired for musical Floradora; also sang for Fisher-Reilly Opera Company; 1906–09—produced and appeared in some Mutascopes in New York; c. 1909—joined Biograph as actor; 1910s—became part of D. W. Griffith’s stock company and later served as Griffith’s assistant director on several films. 1914–30—worked as both director and actor; 1922—supervised Famous-Lasky studios in Bombay, India; 1920s–1950s—served as loan adviser to film companies for Bank of Italy. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Academy Award for How Green Was My Valley, 1941. Died: In Van Nuys, California, 25 May 1974.

Films as Actor:

1907  The French Maid
1910  Sunshine Sue (Griffith); Winning Back His Love (Griffith)
1911  The Two Paths (Griffith); Fate’s Turning (Griffith); A Wreath of Orange Blossoms (Griffith); What Shall We Do with Our Donald Crisp (center) with Anna Lee and John Loder in How Green Was My Valley

Old (Griffith); The Primal Call (Griffith); Out of the Shadow (Griffith); The Diving Girl; The Adventures of Billy (Griffith); The Battle (Griffith); The Failure (Griffith)

1912 When Kings Were the Law (Griffith)

1913 The Best Man Wins (Cabanne); Drink’s Lure (Cabanne); The Daylight Burglar (Cabanne); Two Men of the Desert (Griffith); Intolerance (Griffith)

1914 The Battle of the Sexes (Griffith); The Avenging Conscience; The Escape (Griffith); Home, Sweet Home (Griffith); The Great Leap (Cabanne); The Different Man; The Mountain Rat (Kirkwood); The Sisters (Davis); A Question of Courage (Cabanne)

1915 The Birth of a Nation (Griffith); Bred in the Bone (Powell); Such a Little Queen (Hugh Ford); The Love Route (Dwan); The Commanding Officer (Dwan); May Blossom (Dwan); A Girl of Yesterday (Dwan); The Foundling (Dwan); Joan the Woman (DeMille) (+ uncredited 2nd unit d)

1918 One More American (DeMille)

1919 Broken Blossoms (Griffith)

1926 The Black Pirate (Parker)

1928 The River Pirate (Howard)

1929 Trent’s Last Case (Hawks); The Pagan (W. S. Van Dyke); The Viking (Neill); The Return of Sherlock Holmes (Dean)

1930 Scotland Yard (Detective Clive, Bart) (Howard)

1931 Svengali (Mayo); Kick In (Wallace)

1932 A Passport to Hell (Burns Offering) (Lloyd); Red Dust (Fleming)

1933 Broadway Bad (Her Reputation) (Lanfield)

1934 The Crime Doctor (Robertson); The Key (Curtiz); The Life of Vergie Winters (Santell); What Every Woman Knows (La Cava); The Little Minister (Wallace)

1935 Vanessa, Her Love Story (Howard); Laddie (Stevens); Oil for the Lamps of China (LeRoy); Mutiny on the Bounty (Lloyd)

1936 The White Angel (Dieterle); Mary of Scotland (John Ford); A Woman Rebels (Sandrich); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz); The Great O’Malley (Dieterle); Beloved Enemy (Potter)

1937 Parnell (Stahl); The Life of Emilie Zola (Dieterle); That Certain Woman (Goulding); Confession (May); Sergeant Murphy (Eason)

1938 Jezebel (Wyler); The Beloved Brat (A Dangerous Age) (Lubin); The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse (Litvak); Valley of the Giants (Keighley); The Sisters (Litvak); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding); Comet over Broadway (Berkeley)

1939 The Oklahoma Kid (Bacon); Wuthering Heights (Wyler); Juarez (Dieterle); Daughters Courageous (Curtiz); The Old Maid (Goulding); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz)

1940 The Story of Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet (Dr. Ehrlich’s Magic Bullet) (Dieterle); Brother Orchid (Bacon); City for Conquest (Litvak); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz); Knute Rockne—All American (Bacon)

1941 Shining Victory (Rapper); Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Fleming); How Green Was My Valley (John Ford)

1942 The Battle of Midway (John Ford—short) (as narrator); The Gay Sisters (Rapper)

1943 Forever and a Day (John Ford); Lassie Come Home (Wilcox)

1944 The Uninvited (Allen); The Adventure of Mark Twain (Rapper); National Velvet (Brown)

1945 Son of Lassie (Simons); The Valley of Decision (Garnett)

1947 Ramrod (De Toth)

1948 Hills of Home (Master of Lassie) (Wilcox); Whispering Smith (Fenton)

1949 Challenge to Lassie (Thorpe)

1950 Bright Leaf (Curtiz)

1951 Home Town Story (Pierson)

1954 Prince Valiant (Hathaway); The Long Gray Line (John Ford)

1955 The Man from Laramie (Anthony Mann)

1958 Saddle the Wind (Parrish); The Last Hurrah (John Ford)

1959 A Dog of Flanders (Clark)

1960 Pollyanna (Swift)

1961 Greyfriar’s Bobby (Chaffey)

1963 Spencer’s Mountain (Daves)

Films as Director:

1914 Her Father’s Silent Partner; The Dawn; The Mysterious Shot (+ to); The Newer Woman (+ to); Her Birthday Present; Their First Acquaintance; The Idiot; The Tavern of Tragedy; Her Mother’s Necklace; Frenchy; The Milkfed Boy; Down the Hill to Creditville; The Warning (+ to); His Mother’s Trust; * Sands of Fate*; The Avenging Conscience; His Lesson (uncredited direction)
1916  Ramona (+ ro under pseudonym James Needham)
1917  His Sweetheart; The Bond Between; The Marcellini Millions; The Cook of Canyon Camp (+ co-sc); Lost in Transit; The Countess Charming (+ ro); The Clever Mrs. Carfax; A Roadside Impresario
1918  Jules of the Strong Heart; Rimrock Jones; The House of Silence; Believe Me Xant(h)ipe; The Firefly of France; Less Than Kin; The Goat; The Way of a Man with a Maid; Under the Top; Venus in the East
1919  Johnny Get Your Gun; Poor Boob; Something to Do; Putting It Over; A Very Good Young Man; Love Insurance; Why Smith Left Home; It Pays to Advertise; Too Much Johnson
1920  The Six Best Cellars; Miss Hobbs; Held by the Enemy
1921  The Barbarian; Appearances; The Princess of New York; Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (The Bonnie Brier Bush) (+ ro)
1923  Ponjola
1924  The Navigator (co-d only, with Buster Keaton); Tell Your Children
1925  Don Q of Zorro (+ ro)
1926  Sunny Side Up (Footlights); Young April; Man Bait
1927  Nobody's Widow; Vanity; The Fighting Eagle (Brigadier Gerard); Dress Parade
1928  Stand and Deliver; The Cop
1930  The Runaway Bride

Publications

By CRISP: article—

“We Lost So Much Dignity as We Came of Age,” interview in Films and Filming (London), December 1960.

On CRISP: articles—

One of the unassuming pillars of the industry, Donald Crisp had a very long and successful career in motion pictures. A Scot who was educated at Oxford and served as a soldier in the Boer War, he emigrated to New York and appeared in opera as a leading tenor in 1906. He also acted in stage plays before joining the Biograph Company as an extra in 1909. He moved with D. W. Griffith to Majestic as a director, and made 35 one- and two-reelers in a little over one year. He never stopped working; he also acted in several of these films and served as assistant director to Griffith on The Birth of a Nation and Broken Blossoms. His performance as Lillian Gish’s brutal father in the latter brought him much acclaim.

Throughout the 1920s, Crisp continued his hectic schedule, directing a few films in Britain; serving on the board of directors of the Bank of Italy (later Bank of America) which approved loans for film productions; acting in several dozen more films opposite Vilma Banky, Douglas Fairbanks, and other major stars; and serving as Buster Keaton’s co-director.

Because of his sonorous voice and long experience in film, Crisp adapted easily to sound and became one of the favorite character actors of the 1930s and 1940s. For a while he was under contract to Warner Brothers, appearing in Jezebel, playing Francis Bacon in The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex, and playing the kindly doctor in The Old Maid. He was equally good in adventure stories such as Mutiny on the Bounty and action films such as The Dawn Patrol and Juarez, but his personal amiability, to which everyone attested, communicated itself superbly on-screen, and he evolved as the character actor perfectly suited to play wise doctors, good friends, and loyal confidants. He is especially remembered as the kindly, benevolent father in the Lassie films of the 1940s and in National Velvet.

Although the type remained the same, Crisp brought a freshness to each role, never falling into repetitive portrayals and always inventing original gestures. Perhaps the best example is his performance in How Green Was My Valley for which he received the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor at the age of 61. Retirement was far from his mind, and he continued to act in a few dozen more films in the 1950s and 1960s. He was lovable and understanding in Pollyanna, in a minor role, and gave a performance full of pathos as the leading role of the old man in Greyfriar’s Bobby. He died in California at the age of 93, a respected and well-liked veteran of more than 400 productions spanning 55 years in the film industry.

—Elaine Mancini

CROSBY, Bing

Best Actor, Academy Award for Going My Way, 1944. Died: 14 October 1977.

Films as Actor:

1930 Two Plus Fours (Ray McCarey—short); Ripstitch the Tailor (Ray Mc Carey—short, unreleased); King of Jazz (Anderson); Check and Double Check (Brown) (cameo role); Reaching for the Moon (Goulding)
1931 Confessions of a Co-ed (Burton and Murphy) (as voice); I Surrender Dear (Sennett—short); One More Chance (Sennett—short)
1932 Dream House (Lord—short); Billboard Girl (Pearce—short); The Big Broadcast (Tuttle)
1933 Blue of the Night (Pearce—short); Sing, Bing, Sing (Stafford—short); College Humor (Ruggles); Too Much Harmony (Sutherland); Please (Gillstrom—short); Going Hollywood (Walsh)
1934 Just an Echo (Gillstrom—short); We’re Not Dressing (Taurог); She Loves Me Not (Nugent); Here Is My Heart (Tuttle)
1935 Star Night at the Coconut Grove (Lewyn—short); Mississippi (Sutherland); Two for Tonight (Tuttle); The Big Broadcast of 1936 (Taurог)
1936 Anything Goes (Milestone); Rhythm on the Range (Taurог); Pennies from Heaven (McLeod)
1937 Waikiki Wedding (Tuttle); Double or Nothing (Reed)
1938 Doctor Rhythm (Tuttle); Sing You Sinners (Ruggles); Don’t Hook Now (Short)
1939 Paris Honeymoon (Tuttle); East Side of Heaven (Butler); The Star Maker (Del Ruth)
1940 Road to Singapore (Schertzinger); If I Had My Way (Butler); Swing with Bing (Polesie—short); Rhythm on the River (Schertzinger)
1941 Road to Zanzibar (Schertzinger); Birth of the Blues (Schertzinger)
1942 Angels of Mercy (short); My Favorite Blonde (Lanfield) (as guest); Holiday Inn (Sandrich); Road to Morocco (Butler) (guest)
1943 Dixie (Sutherland)
1944 Going My Way (McCarey) (as Father O’Malley); The Road to Victory (Prinz—short); The Princess and the Pirate (Butler) (as guest); Here Come the Waves (Sandrich); The Shining Future (Prinz—short)
1945 All Star Bond Rally (Audley—short); Hollywood Victory Caravan (Russell—short); Out of this World (Walker) (as voice); Duffy’s Tavern (Walker) (as guest); The Bells of St. Mary’s (McCarey) (as Father O’Malley); Road to Utopia (Walker)
1946 Monseur Beaucaire (Marshall) (as guest); Blue Skies (Heisler); The Road to Hollywood (compilation of early Crosby shorts)
1947 My Favorite Brunette (Nugent) (as guest); Welcome Stranger (Nugent); Road to Rio (McLeod); Variety Girl (Marshall) (as guest)
1948 The Emperor Waltz (Wilder)
1949 A Connecticut Yankee (A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court; A Yankee in King Arthur’s Court) (Garnett); ‘Ichabod Crane’ ep. of The Adventures of Ichabod and Mr. Toad (Geronimi and Algar) (as narrator); Top o’ the Morning (Miller); The Road to Peace (Webb—short); You Can Change the World (McCarey) (as guest)
1950 Riding High (Capra); Mr. Music (Haydn)
1951 Angels in the Outfield (Angels and the Pirates) (Brown) (as guest); Here Comes the Groom (Capra); A Millionaire for Christy (Marshall) (as voice)
1952 The Greatest Show on Earth (DeMille) (as guest); Son of Paleface (Tashlin) (as guest); Just for You (Nugent); Off Limits (Military Policemen) (Marshall) (as guest)
1953 Scared Stiff (Marshall) (as guest); Little Boy Lost (Seaton); Faith, Hope and Hogan (Denove—short) (as guest)
1954 White Christmas (Curitz); The Country Girl (Seaton)
1955 Bing Presents Orreste (Dmytryk—short)
1956 High Society (Walters); Anything Goes (Lewis—not a remake of 1936 film)
1957 Man on Fire (MacDougall); The Heart of Show Business (Staub) (as narrator)
1958 Showdown at Ucelr Gulch (Culhane—short)
1959 Alias Jesse James (McLeod) (as guest); Say One for Me (Tashlin)
1960 Let’s Make Love (Cukor) (as guest); High Time (Edwards); Pepé (Sidney) (as guest)
1961 The Road to Hong Kong (Panama)
1964 Robin and the Seven Hoods (Douglas)
1965  Cinerama’s Russian Adventure (Bing Crosby in Cinerama’s Russian Adventure) (doc) (as narrator)
1966  Stagecoach (Douglas)
1968  Bing Crosby’s Washington State (Gardner—short) (as narrator)
1970  Golf’s Golden Years (Evans—short) (as narrator)
1971  Dr. Cook’s Garden (Post—for TV) (title role)
1972  Cancel My Reservation (Bogart) (as guest); The World of Sport Fishing (Morgan—for TV)
1974  That’s Entertainment! (Haley Jr.) (as narrator)

Publications

By CROSBY: book—

Call Me Lucky, as told to Pete Martin, New York, 1953.

By CROSBY: article—

On CROSBY: books—

On CROSBY: articles—

Although Bing Crosby had made films for Paramount Pictures from the early 1930s to the mid-1950s, it was during the 1940s with his “Road” films that he achieved major box-office status. In 1944 he reached the acme of star ranking in Hollywood and remained there for five consecutive years. All his “Road” films with Bob Hope ranked among the top grossers for their respective years. But so did Going My Way, Here Come the Waves, Blue Skies, Welcome Strangers, and A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court, all Crosby films sans Hope. Indeed, in 1944 Crosby stood as the American film industry’s number one star, earned an Academy Award, and recorded “Swinging on a Star,” a record that sold a million copies.

Bing Crosby retained his ranking as a top movie star until 1954. Throughout the early 1950s, he continued to win awards and generate millions for Paramount, the studio for which he had labored so long. In 1954, for example, he earned an Academy Award nomination for The Country Girl and starred in White Christmas, the highest grossing film of the year. It was in 1956, with Anything Goes, that he terminated a 24-year association with Paramount, and began to freelance as a movie actor working for Twentieth Century-Fox, Columbia, United Artists, and Warner Brothers. In the mid-1960s he ended his movie career, and turned to full-time work in television with his second wife and new brood of children.

Surprisingly, his success in the new visual medium of television never matched his popularity in films. There were the annual specials featuring family and guest star, Bob Hope. But his only weekly television series, a domestic situation comedy for ABC entitled The Bing Crosby Show, proved a major disappointment, and was canceled in 1964 after only one season. In the long run, Crosby’s greatest success in television came through his production company with such popular series hits as Ben Casey, The Wild, Wild West, and Hogan’s Heroes.

Crosby first achieved national popularity on the radio, and would never forget these origins: he continued with a weekly radio show well into the 1950s. His popularity on radio during the Great Depression ignited his career as a phonograph recording star. It was in this sector of American show business that Crosby’s impact was truly staggering. He sold 22 million single records; he recorded more than 2,600 different songs; he sold 400 million records total (by 1975). And one recording, “‘White Christmas,’” went on to sell more than 30 million copies alone.

His radio, record, movie, and television activities made Bing Crosby one of the richest persons in the history of American show business. He was one of the first stars of any media to incorporate himself—in 1936. Once his show business success was assured, he began to invest in real estate, mines, oil wells, cattle ranches, race horses, music publishing, baseball teams, and the aforementioned television production company. But his greatest wealth probably did not even come from his extraordinary movie and singing career but from his financing of what later became the Minute Maid Orange Juice Corporation. This investment alone made him a multimillionaire.
CROWE ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

Crosby’s successes as a movie star should best be thought of as an extension of his enormous popularity as a singer and radio star. Through hundreds and hundreds of “performances,” he was able to project an image as the unexceptional, even lazy character who sang effortlessly, always playing himself. He became an extension of the icon of the “bashful hero.” Along with Jimmy Stewart and Gary Cooper he represented the “average American male,” who always seemed to stumble toward success. With his stable, solid image in a world of depressions, world wars, and cold wars, Bing Crosby more than any star became a symbol for his generation.

—Douglas Gomery

CROWE, Russell

Nationality: New Zealander. Born: Russell Ira Crowe, Strathmore Park, New Zealand, 7 April 1964. Career: Began appearing in television programs at age six, in the Australian TV series Spyforce; appeared on TV series The Young Doctors, 1976, and Police Rescue, 1992; stage actor, beginning in the mid-1980s; appeared in a touring production of The Rocky Horror Picture Show. Awards: Australian Film Institute Award for Best Performance in a Supporting Role, for Proof, 1991; Australian Film Institute Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role, 1991, and Australian Film Critics Circle Best Actor Award, 1992, for Romper Stomper; National Board of Review Award for Best Actor and National Society of Film Critics Award for Best Actor, 1999, and Broadcast Film Critics Association Award for Best Actor and Los Angeles Film Critics Association Award for Best Actor, 2000, for The Insider. Agent: c/o George Freeman, William Morris Agency Inc., 151 S. El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1990 Blood Oath (Prisoners of the Sun) (Wallace) (as Lieutenant Jack Corbett); The Crossing (Ogilvie) (as Johnny)
1991 Brides of Christ (Cameron) (as Dominic Maloney); Spotswood (The Efficiency Expert) (Joffe) (as Kim Barrett); Hammers over the Anvil (Turner) (as East Driscoll); Proof (Moorthouse) (as Andy)
1992 For the Moment (Johnston) (as Lachlan); Romper Stomper (Wright) (as Hando)
1993 Silver Brumby (The Silver Stallion: King of the Wild Brumbies) (Tatoulis) (as The Man); Love in Limbo (Ellick) (as Arthur Baskin)
1994 The Sum of Us (Dowling) (as Jeff Mitchell)
1995 The Quick and the Dead (Raimi) (as Cort); Virtuosity (Leonard) (as Sid 6.7); Rough Magic (Peploe) (as Alex Ross)
1996 No Way Back (Cappello) (as Zack Grant)
1997 Breaking Up (Greenwald) (as Steve); Heaven’s Burning (Lahiff) (as Colin O’Brien); L.A. Confidential (Hanson) (as Bud White)

1999 Mystery, Alaska (Roach) (as John Biebe); The Insider (Mann) (as Jeffrey Wigand)
2000 Gladiator (Scott) (as Maximus Decimus Meridius); Proof of Life (Hackford)
2001 Flora Plum (Jodie Foster)

Publications

By CROWE: articles—

On CROWE: articles—

* * *

Russell Crowe has been smoking cigarettes since he was ten years old, and did not feel compelled to alter this habit before, during, or after playing the role of an anti-tobacco activist in The Insider. As an actor though, he did alter much else about himself to become Jeffrey Wigand, the middle-aged former head of research and development at a tobacco company who decided to release secret studies exposing the duplicity of his employer. He successfully transformed himself from an athletic, healthy 35-year-old into a paunchy, gray middle-aged man.

This outward transformation, for which he gained 35 pounds, was not the only way Crowe inhabited the role, and he ultimately won widespread acclamation and an Oscar nomination for this performance. The actor already had developed a phenomenal ability to portray with great subtlety the interior conflicts of a variety of men, which first became apparent to American audiences when two Australian films in which he starred, The Sum of Us and Romper Stomper, were released here.

In the former film, Crowe played an affable young gay man whose father lives with him, and who is feeling a little crowded by the father’s enthusiastic acceptance of his love life. This tension is not expressed so much in confrontations as in the edgy ways Crowe moves his body and uses his eyes as his father interacts with his current boyfriend. In Romper Stomper he plays a young man on the other end of the spectrum, a seething skinhead who charismatically leads his friends to follow him into racist attacks on Asians and others whom he feels are crowding his already constricted environment.
Crowe was born in New Zealand, and his parents moved the family to Australia when he was four. His mother became a caterer on movie sets, and took her young son along on her assignments, which led to his early feeling of comfort around the apparatus of filmmaking; he started acting in a television series when he was six years old. The star of that series was Jack Thompson, who would later play the father in The Sum of Us. Crowe continued to act, and as a young adult his work began to attract more and more critical attention. At 19 he broke into musical theater, where he received one of his favorite roles, that of Dr. Frankenfurter in The Rocky Horror Picture Show in which he delivered 415 performances. He was nominated for an Australian Film Institute (AFI) Award as Best Supporting Actor in 1990 for The Crossing, and won that award the following year for his performance in Proof. Then came Romper Stomper in 1992, for which he won both the AFI and Australian Film Critics Award for Best Actor, but also endured along with the film a barrage of criticism for seeming to make racist aggression attractive.

The intensity of his Romper Stomper performance attracted the attention of Sharon Stone, who was at the time putting together a package called The Quick and the Dead, in which she would star as a female gunfighter. Stone was so impressed with Crowe that she held up production of her film to allow him to finish his work on The Sum of Us. Unfortunately for Crowe, both The Quick and the Dead and his next film, Rough Magic, won almost no attention at the box office.

Then came L. A. Confidential. In retrospect it seems almost miraculous that such a movie could come out of the Hollywood production system. Based on a James Ellroy novel, typically for that author dark and convoluted, the story seemed to many untransformable into film. It also cast the movie capital in an unsavory light, exposed many of the illusions that keep the industry going, and argued that the environment in which Hollywood functioned was also riddled with corruption.

Furthermore, the director, Curtis Hanson, had only helmed a couple of relatively low-budget projects (The Hand That Rocks the Cradle and The River Wild), and he had put together a cast of largely unknown actors. But through the strength of its unrelenting vision and the over-all excellence of its ensemble performance, L. A. Confidential garnered widespread critical acclaim, multiple awards and nominations, and was included on more than 100 critics’ Top Ten lists.

Among the ensemble cast, Crowe was frequently singled out for his portrayal of the conflicted police detective, Bud White, whose visceral reaction to violence against women frequently erupted into violence against the perpetrators. Crowe says of Bud White that “he makes a very healthy statement through his anger and his fighting and his resolve at the end. There’s a purity about him.” The opportunity to make statements about social issues is part of what has attracted Crowe to such varied projects as Romper Stomper, The Sum of Us, L. A. Confidential, and The Insider. While Crowe is widely viewed as a rising star, he does not fully embrace the movie establishment. He lives on a station (ranch) in northern Australia with his parents and brother, and spends part of his energy in a rock band named Thirty Odd Food of Grunts, which mostly tours Australia and New Zealand. While he is attractively diffident about his own work—“I’ve made 18 movies and I think I’ve given 18 bad performances,” he told Kim Basinger in an interview published in Interview—other film professionals are much more enthusiastic.

“He reminds me of myself as a young actor,” says Sir Anthony Hopkins, who acted with him in The Efficiency Expert. George Ogilvie, who directed Crowe in The Crossing, compares him with James Dean. Most tellingly many people, including The Insider director Michael Mann, see hints of the young Marlon Brando in Crowe’s work. Perhaps Crowe agrees. “Generally I’m not somebody who covets roles, even if someone else gets a part that I’d like to play,” he told Basinger. “However, I would have liked to do the first run of A Streetcar Named Desire.”

—Stephen Brophy

CRUISE, Tom

Awards: Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Drama, for Born on the Fourth of July, 1990; Hasty Pudding Theatricals Man of the Year, 1992; Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Comedy/Musical, National Board of Review Best Actor Award, and Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Comedy or Musical, for Jerry Maguire, 1997; Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture, and Chicago Film Critics Association Best Supporting Actor Award, for Magnolia, 2000. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1981 Endless Love (Zeffirelli) (as Billy); Taps (Becker) (as David Shawn)
1983 Losin’ It (Hanson) (as Woody); The Outsiders (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Steven Randall); Risky Business (Brickman)
1985 Legend (Ridley Scott) (as Jack)
1986 Top Gun (Tony Scott) (as Lt. Pete Mitchell); The Color of Money (Scorsese) (as Vincent)
1988 Cocktail (Donaldson) (as Doug Coughlin); Rain Man (Levinson) (as Charlie Babbitt)
1989 Born on the Fourth of July (Oliver Stone) (as Ron Kovic)
1990 Days of Thunder (Tony Scott) (as Cole Trickle)
1992 A Few Good Men (Reiner) (as Lt. J. G. Daniel Kaffe); Far and Away (Ron Howard) (as Joseph Donnelly)
1993 The Firm (Pollack) (as Mitch McDeere)
1994 Interview with the Vampire (Lestat de Lioncourt) (as Ethan Hunt, + pr)
1997 Jerry Maguire (Crowe) (as title role)
1999 Eyes Wide Shut (Kubrick); Magnolia (Anderson) (as Dr. William Harford)
2000 Mission Impossible 2 (as Ethan Hunt)
2002 Minority Report (Spielberg) (as John Anderton)

Publications

By CRUISE: articles—

Interview in Ecran Fantastique (Paris), August 1985.
Interview in Interview (New York), May 1986.

“The Interview, the Vampire, the Actor,” interview with Ingrid Sischy, in Interview (New York), November 1994.

On CRUISE: books—

On CRUISE: articles—

Radio Times (London), 24 February 1996.

Friend, T., “Man with a Mission,” in Premiere (Boulder), June 1996.

* * *

Despite his male model features and proven box-office clout, there is something thin and underdeveloped about Tom Cruise’s screen image. Has any leading man gotten so much mileage out of playing variations on the same theme in such a relatively short time span? Immensely likable, Cruise calculatedly plays the cocky all-American overachiever who is ultimately humbled by life-lessons learned at the knee of an older male mentor and eventually humanized by the love of the proverbial good woman. Capable of bending the law slightly on occasion, this self-assured locker room antihero gets knocked down a few pegs in formulaic fashion; it is a neatly stage-managed persona that has served Cruise well in Risky Business, Cocktail, Top Gun, The Color of Money, Rain Man, Days of Thunder, A Few Good Men, Far and Away, and The Firm. Incredibly, the only clinker marring this track record is the meandering fairy tale, Legend. When required to stretch, Cruise can perform with sleek assuredness matching Paul Newman shot for shot in The Color of Money and outclassing the contemporary cinema’s Paul Muni—Dustin Hoffman—in the sappy Rain Man.

If Cruise’s career seems less the by-product of a thespic drive than the inspiration of well-connected business managers, Cruise has tried to stretch himself although not with any of the daring movies associated with Richard Gere, for example. Still, in Born on the Fourth of July, the Vietnam War film based on Ron Kovic’s book of the same name, Cruise convincingly and effectively portrays a Ron Kovic who moves from naive recruit to angry, wheelchair-bound paraplegic. Although the movie version of Interview with the Vampire guts the homoerotic content of the novel, this profitable bloodbath was a bold move on Cruise’s part, and he rises to the challenge with an atypically flamboyant turn as a hedonist bloodsucker for whom no standard Cruise-ian redemption awaits. Modulating his usually strained vocal resources, Cruise, for the first time in his career, etches an eerily believable characterization far removed from his heel-reborn-as hero image. Although this Interview is too glumly serious, deficient in mystery, and sadistic to be scarily entertaining, Cruise does pump it full of vampiric glee.

Still young and shrewdly determined to keep the machinery of his success oiled, Cruise carries out a Mission Impossible in order to upgrade his stature as a film star who can play with the big boys (Ford, Schwarzenegger) in the action flick arena. Thus far, his mainstream success stands as a monument to the never-ending adolescence of men who enjoy exercising their braggadocio, treating women like trophies, and egotistically excelling at various sports. Whether flying MIGs, racing cars, playing pool, boxing bare-knuckled, footballing for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan for a scholarship, or shaking a cocktail, Cruise taps into the American male’s unconscious desires. What this really amounts to is Peter Pan.

That’s why it’s so reassuring to observe Cruise reconnecting with his fans in a role that exercised his acting muscles without dampening his magnetism. After toiling profitably in the most poorly designed blockbuster of the 90s, Mission Impossible, Cruise puts his magnetism to better use as a sports agent in the quirky seriocomedy, Jerry McGuire. Relaxed yet authoritative, Cruise is more believable than he is with showier roles that require “acting.” Part con man, part cheerleader, McGuire makes a living by massaging the egos of petulant athletes. Whether he’s pitching himself to clients or wooing Renee Zelwegger, Cruise reveals an astounding command over the audience’s goodwill. The role marks a defining moment in Cruise’s stardom.

Tight-lipped about his private life, Cruise, nonetheless, chose to expose himself in provocative fare that was a far cry from the safety of Mission Impossible 2. Devoting an inordinate amount of time to notoriously finicky Stanley Kubrick’s Eyes Wide Shut, Cruise submerges his ego to serve the director’s swan song. Although one vainly hoped Kubrick would do for Cruise what Bertolucci did for Brando in Last Tango in Paris, Cruise deserves credit for lending his star-power to this circumspect exploration of sexuality. If there seems to be too much ice and not enough fire in the Kubrick project, there is altogether too much heat in Cruise’s performance as a self-help huckster in the pretentious Magnolia. Structurally intricate, the film wants to bowl you over by fitting mega-star Cruise into its ensemble, but it actually positions him as a sun surrounded by lesser stars. (Imagine if Tyrone Power had tried to upstage everyone in Nightmare Alley, and you get an idea of the magnitude of the problem.) Unfortunately, Cruise’s performance doesn’t showcase his quiet magnanimity, even as it appeals to awards voters, impressed by sound and fury signifying nothing. And yet, not one of Cruise’s male contemporaries has dared similar challenges at the height of popularity. Still youthful looking, Cruise can afford to take vacations from stardom to stretch himself instead of accepting something like Top Gun Hits Middle Age. One hopes, however, that he realizes there’s more art and less artfulness in the laid-back environment of Jerry McGuire, than there is in the symbol-laden landscapes of directors uninspired by Cruise’s greatest strength, which is his covert vulnerability.

—Robert Pardi

CRYSTAL, Billy

Publications

By CRYSTAL: books—

By CRYSTAL: articles—

On CRYSTAL: articles—

Films as Actor:

1977  SST: Death Flight (SST: Disaster in the Sky) (Rich—for TV) (as David)

1978  Human Feelings (Pintoff—for TV); Rabbit Test (Joan Rivers) (as Lionel Carpenter)
The poster art for Billy Crystal’s hit movie City Slickers (1991)—with Crystal in saddle and spurs, wearing a New York Mets cap on his head—succinctly captures Crystal’s ability to reconcile classic Hollywood imagery with his own persona. His wry, skeptical attitude has made him an unlikely romantic hero, and his ability to combine nostalgia has led him to encee the epitome of schmaltz and sincerity, the Academy Awards.

Crystal was born in showbiz; his father managed the Colony record store in midtown Manhattan, and an uncle, Milt Gabler, was a jazz producer (according to family legend, Crystal was named for family friend Billie Holliday). Crystal attended Marshall University on a baseball scholarship, and later studied film at New York University under Martin Scorsese. His early professional work was as a mimic, and his loving impressions of Muhammad Ali and Howard Cosell drew praise across the board. Steve Allen noted, ‘‘(H)e is more than merely an impressionist, because his essential comic quality is dominant, whereas most impressionists could not succeed as comedians if they did not employ the voices of well-known figures.’’

Crystal was willing to risk embarrassment in his first major acting roles, playing the TV sitcom’s first gay character on ABC’s Soap (1977–81) and a pregnant male in Joan Rivers’ over-the-top misfire Rabbit Test (1978). During the late 1970s Crystal developed a rapport with a group of cutting-edge comedians and satirists in Southern California, including Albert Brooks and Rob Reiner. And Crystal’s monologues included such original characters as jazz musician ‘‘Face’’ and transsexual cabaret singer Penny Lane.

In 1984 Crystal spent a productive season on NBC’s Saturday Night Live, where his impressions of TV host Joe Franklin, laid-back actor Fernando Lamas, and superstar Sammy Davis, Jr. earned him widespread acclaim. Crystal immediately left the series to develop his film career. Running Scared (1986), directed by Peter Hyams, gave Crystal the chance to trade smart one-liners with cop sidekick Gregory Hines, and resolve his conflict with his estranged wife. Crystal gave Hines room to act, and he also was effective in the film’s romantic scenes. The Beverly Hills Cop-knockoff was a critical and box-office success.

Crystal scored again in Danny DeVito’s Throw Momma from the Train (1987), where his detachment on-screen played well opposite DeVito’s matricidal character and Anne Ramsay’s passive-aggressive mother. An often-overlooked Crystal movie is Memories of Me (1988, Henry Winkler), where his doctor character reconciles with his aging actor father (Alan King). Crystal co-wrote the script with Eric Roth, and the screenplay effectively switches between Borscht Belt humor and melodrama. Roger Ebert complimented King and Crystal’s rapport: ‘‘Their timing has the almost effortless music of two professionals who have spent their lifetimes learning how to put the right spin on a word. . . . Crystal is very good in a role that must have been second nature to him.’’ Crystal would further explore the life of a middling Jewish-American showbiz character in his directorial debut, Mr. Saturday Night (1992), which resurrected his standup persona of insult-comic extraordinaire Buddy Young, Jr. ("Nice body odor, lady—you smell like landfill").

Crystal’s biggest hit to date was When Harry Met Sally... (1989), in which he winningly played Meg Ryan’s platonic male friend over a 15-year span. Again, Crystal’s generosity shone through; he con-ciously encouraged director Rob Reiner to make Ryan, not himself, the center of the movie’s famous deli scene, a scene which catapulted Ryan to stardom. The Nora Ephron-scripted film owed much to Woody Allen films, but When Harry Met Sally... demanded more than one-liners to succeed. Crystal’s genuinely touching reconciliation with Ryan the night after consummating their relationship gave the movie its strength.

City Slickers (1991) allowed Crystal to hilariously explore the psyche of middle-aged men in the 1990s, as Crystal and his childhood buddies herd cattle as a metaphor for organizing their messy personal lives. In a potent early scene, Crystal poignantly describes the stages of life to his son’s grade-school class; to paraphrase Lincoln, he acks jokes because he must not cry. While out West he and his buddies reminisce about the past (including a touching discussion about baseball), match wits with mythical cowboy Jack Palance (Crystal: ‘‘Kill anybody today?’’ Palance, coldly: ‘‘Day ain’t over yet’’), and reconnect with their wives and families.

Crystal scored his biggest hit of the late 1990s as the shrink of a neurotic Mob don in the Anayze This (1999). Once again, Crystal willingly allowed his costar to get the laughs. In this case it was Robert De Niro, the protégé of Crystal’s former mentor, Martin Scorsese. Crystal’s reactions to De Niro’s deadpan quips were priceless, and his presence complemented De Niro’s. Though not in the same class with the similarly-themed TV series The Sopranos,
Analyse This was a well-produced contemporary movie comedy.

In 1990 Crystal was pegged to host the Academy Awards, a task that had daunted bigger names. In a series of hosting gigs during the 1990s Crystal proved to be the ceremony’s best host since Bob Hope, with a crack writing staff backstage to take advantage of spontaneous on-stage goofs, the dexterity to sing and dance elaborate production costumes as well as a spiritless reworking of the original, and which catapulted

In a potent early scene, Crystal poignantly describes the stages of life to his son’s grade-school class; to paraphrase Lincoln, he

CUNY ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

CUNY, Alain

Nationality: French. Born: René Xavier Marie in Saint-Malo, 12
July 1908. Education: Attended Insitut Libre de Saint-Lô and the Collège Locroi-Saint-Leon; studied architecture at Ecole Nationale Supérieure des Beaux-Arts, Paris; studied drama with Charles Dullin. career in film as costume and set designer for Cavalcanti, Feyder, and Renoi; late 1930s—began acting on stage; 1941—film debut in Jean Grémillon’s Remorques; early 1950s—began starring in Italian in addition to French films; 1960—international recognition for role of

Films as Actor:

1941 Remorques (Stormy Waters) (Grémillon)
1942 Les Visiteurs du soir (The Devil’s Envoy; The Devil’s Own Envoy) (Carné) (as Giles)
1943 Le Baron fantôme (The Phantom Baron) (Poligny); Madame
Sans-Gêne (Richebé)
1946 Solita de Cordoue (Koster)
1951 Il Cristo proibito (Forbidden Christ; Strange Deception)
(Malaparte) (as Mastro Antonio); Camicie rosse (Anita Garibaldi; Red Shirts) (Rosi and Alessandroni) (as Bueno)
1952 Les Conquérants solitaires (Vermoral); “Minna de Vanghel” ep. of Le Rideau carmomoisi (Les Crimes de l’amour; The Crimson Curtain) (Astruc)
1953 La signora senza camelia (The Lady without Camelias)
(Antonioni)—released in U.S. in 1981) (as Lodi)
1956 Notre Dame de Paris (The Hunchback of Notre Dame)
(Delannoy) (as Claude Frollo)
1958 Les Amants (The Lovers) (Malle) (as Henri Tournier)
1960 La dolce vita (Fellini) (as Steiner)
1961 Scano boa (Dall’Ar) (as Cavarazan)
1962 La Croix de vivants (Cross of the Living) (Govar) (as Count)
1963 La corruczione (Corruption) (Bolognini) (as Leonardo)
1964 Peau de banane (Banana Peel) (Marcel Ophüls) (as Bontemps)
1965 Le Festin des mots (Dansereau) 1969 La Voie lactée (The Milky Way; Via Lattea) (Buñuel) (as man with cape); Fellini Satyricon (Satyricon) (Fellini)
(as Lichas)
1970 Uomini contro (Roski) (as General Leone)
1971 Valparaiso, Valparrayo (Aubier)
1972 L’udienza (Ferreri); La grande scrofa nera (Onioni); Il maestro
i Margarita (Petrovic)
1973 La rosa rossa (Giraldi)
1974 Emmanuelle (Jacek); Touche pas la femme blanche (Don’t Touch White Women) (Ferreri)
1975 El recurso del metodo (Littin); Il contesto (Roski); I prosenetini (Rondi)
1976 Cadaveri eccellenti (Illustrious Corpses) (Roski); Irene, Irene
(Del Monte)
1978 La Chanson de Roland (Cassenti)
1979 Cristo si è fermato a Eboli (Christ Stopped at Eboli) (Roski)
(as Baron Rotundo)
1980 Les Jeux de la comtesse; Semmelweis (Bettettni)
1984 Basileus Quartet (Carpi) (as Finkel)
1985 Détective (Goddard) (as Old Mafioso)
1987 Cronaca di una morte annunciata (Chronicle of a Death Foretold) (Roski) (as Widower)
Curtis, Jamie Lee

Jamie Lee Curtis in Halloween H2O

Films as Actress:

1977 Columbo: The Bye-Bye Sky-High I.Q. Murder Case (Wanamaker—for TV) (as Waitress); Operation Petticoat (Life in the Pink) (Astin—for TV) (as Lieutenant Barbara Duran)

1978 Halloween (Carpenter) (as Laurie Strode)

1980 The Fog (Carpenter) (as Elizabeth Solley); Prom Night (Lynch) (as Kim); Terror Train (Spottiswoode) (as Alana)

1981 Road Games (Franklin) (as Pamela Rushworth); Halloween II (Carpenter) (as Laurie Strode); Escape from New York (Carpenter) (as opening narrator/voice of computer); Death of a Centerfold: The Dorothy Stratten Story (Beaumont—for TV) (title role); She's in the Army Now (Averback—for TV) (as Rita Jennings)

1982 Money on the Side (Collins—for TV) (as Michelle Jamison)

1983 Trading Places (Landis) (as Ophelia); Love Letters (My Love Letters) (Amy Jones) (as Anna Winter)

1984 The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai: Across the Eighth Dimension (Richter) (as Dr. Sandra Banzai); Grandview, U.S.A. (Kleiser) (as Michelle “Mike” Cody)

1985 Perfect (Bridges) (as Jessica Wilson); 8 Million Ways to Die (Ashby); Annie Oakley (Shelley Duvall's Tall Tales and Legends: Annie Oakley) (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV)

1986 As Summer Dies (Tramont—for TV) (as Whitsey Loftin)

1987 Amazing Grace and Chuck (Silent Voice) (Newell) (as Lynn Taylor); A Man in Love (Un Homme amoureux) (Kurys) (as Susan Elliot)

1988 Dominick and Eugene (Robert M. Young) (as Jennifer Reston); A Fish Called Wanda (Charles Crichton) (as Wanda Gershwitz)

1990 Blue Steel (Bigelow) (as Megan Turner)

1991 Queens Logic (Rash) (as Grace); My Girl (Zieff) (as Shelly DeVoto)

1992 Forever Young (Miner) (as Claire)

1994 My Girl 2 (Zieff) (as Shelly Sullenfuss); Mother’s Boys (Simoneau) (as Jude); True Lies (Cameron) (as Helen Tasker)

1995 The Heidi Chronicles (for TV) (as Heidi Holland)

1996 House Arrest (Winer) (as Janet Beindorf); Ellen’s Energy Adventure (short) (as Dr. Judy Peterson—uncredited)

1997 Fierce Creatures (Young, Schepisi) (as Willa Weston); Homegrown (Gyllenhaal) (as Sierra Kazan)

1998 Halloween H2O: Twenty Years Later (Miner) (as Laurie Strode/Keri Tate); Nicholas’ Gift (Markowitz—for TV) (as Maggie Green)

1999 Virus (Bruno) (as Kit Foster)

2000 Drowning Mona (Gomez) (as Rona Cale); The Tailor of Panama (Boorman); Daddy and Them (Thornton)
Other Films:

1977  Murder at the World Series (McLaglen—for TV) (dialogue coach)

Publications

By CURTIS: books—

By CURTIS: articles—

Interview in Premiere (New York), February/March 1990.

On CURTIS: articles—

Clark, John, filmography in Premiere (New York), September 1989.

Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1995.

Like many a cinematic ingenue, Jamie Lee Curtis started out as a heroine of horror/terror films: John Carpenter’s Halloween, The Fog, and Halloween II; Paul Lynch’s Prom Night; and Roger Spottiswoode’s Terror Train. But unlike scores of attractive but inexperienced young actresses, she never was forced to make films that were strictly cheesy, Grade D exploitation. Similarly, unlike countless performers whose careers never transcend their roots, she has been able to secure a series of showy supporting and starring roles in A-list films. Perhaps her career progressed in this direction because of her lineage: her parents are, of course, Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh. Keeping in mind her parents, Curtis’s casting in horror films may be linked to the shower her mother took in Psycho; prior to debuting in Halloween, Curtis appeared in a television series based on the film Operation Petticoat, the original of which had starred her father.

This is not to imply that Curtis simply inherited her fame. Early in her career, she “paid her dues” in television movies which were variously stupid (She’s in the Army Now, a tepid reworking of Private Benjamin, exploitative (Death of a Centerfold: The Dorothy Stratten Story, or stupid and exploitative (Money on the Side, playing a suburban housewife who becomes a prostitute—a film which never would be confused with Buñuel’s Belle du jour). In all these films, Curtis imbued her characters with an intelligence far greater than that supplied by the scriptwriters.

Having the proper connections may have helped her early on, but Curtis’s acting ability and on-screen appeal, coupled with her undeniable sexiness, are what have sustained her. In Halloween, for instance, her talent is showcased to good advantage. As the likable, partnerless member of a trio of young women, she manages to convey her character’s repressed sexuality—an irony, considering the in-your-face eroticism inherent in so many of her future roles. Indeed, in some of Curtis’s biggest box-office hits, she has traded on a combination of her natural effervescence and sex appeal. In Trading Places, one of her earlier films, she is memorable in her supporting role as a Bronx-accented hooker-with-a-heart-of-gold. It was here where she first displayed her flair for comedy. In A Fish Called Wanda, she blends seamlessly with a choice cast (John Cleese, Kevin Kline, Michael Palin) as a sexy con woman. Her instant-classic striptease scene in True Lies (in which she is cast as Arnold Schwarzenegger’s wife) is as eye-popping as any of the film’s special effects.

While she was taking showy roles in Trading Places, A Fish Called Wanda, and True Lies, Curtis also was tackling parts that stretched her as an actress—most successfully, as the young woman who comes upon her late mother’s romantic correspondence with a married man in Love Letters, and the title role in the television adaptation of Wendy Wasserstein’s The Heidi Chronicles. She also has played characters of integrity in films that were simply unsuccessful: the aerobics instructor in the inane Perfect, and the cop in the muddled Blue Steel. And she has taken supporting roles in projects she has believed in: A Man in Love, Dominick and Eugene, and Amazing Grace and Chuck.

Because her highest-profile roles have been supporting ones (Trading Places, True Lies) or as a part of an ensemble (A Fish Called Wanda), Curtis never has won a place in the inner circle of actress-stars, alongside the likes of Demi Moore and Julia Roberts. This is unfortunate, as she is every bit as attractive as (and, in some ways, far more charismatic than) Moore and Roberts. Curtis’s full-bodied performance in The Heidi Chronicles serves as evidence that she has matured as an actress, and is quite capable of playing characters whose intelligence and vulnerability transcend their sexuality.

Yet at the time she made The Heidi Chronicles, her most fully evolved and heartfelt projects were made-for-TV; she also starred in Nicholas’ Gift as a parent forced to make a life-giving decision regarding the donation of her brain-dead son’s organs. Otherwise, Curtis was lost in the dreadful sci-fi thriller Virus; her role in the ensemble farce Homegrown was virtually a cameo; and she had what might have been a solid part as a comically sexy small town waitress in Drowning Mona, only the character was underwritten. Meanwhile, she was linked to her cinematic past. In 1997, Curtis was reunited with her Fish Called Wanda co-stars in the less-than-memorable Fierce Creatures; the film was shot in 1995 by Robert M. Young, and then rewritten and re-filmed by Fred Schepisi the following year. Then in 1998, she reprised her screen debut in the self-explanatorily-titled Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later.

—Rob Edelman

CURTIS, Tony

Films as Actor:

1948  Criss Cross (Sidney) (as gigolo)
1949  City across the River (Shane) (as Mitch); The Lady Gambles (Gordon) (as bellboy); Johnny Stool Pigeon (Castle) (as Joey Hyatt); Francis (Lubin) (as Capt. Jones)
1950  Sierra (Green) (as Brent Coulter); I Was a Shoplifter (Lamont) (as Pepe); Winchester ’73 (Anthony Mann) (as Doan); Kansas Raiders (Enright) (as Kit Dalton)
1951  The Prince Who Was a Thief (Maté) (as Julna); Flesh and Fury (Pevney) (as Paul Callan)
1952  No Room for the Groom (Sirk) (as Alvah Morrell); Son of Ali Baba (Newmann) (as Kashma Baba)
1953  Houdini (George Marshall) (title role); The All-American (The Winning Way) (Hibbs) (as Nick Bonelli); Forbidden (Maté) (as Eddie Darrow)
1954  Beachhead (Heisler) (as Burke); Johnny Dark (Sherman) (title role); The Black Shield of Falworth (Maté) (as Myles Falworth); So This Is Paris (Quine) (as Joe Maxwell)
1955  Six Bridges to Cross (Pevney) (as Jerry Florea); The Purple Mask (Humberstone) (as René); The Square Jungle (Jerry Hopper) (as Eddie Quaid)
1956  The Rawhide Years (Maté) (as Ben Matthews); Trapeze (Reed) (as Tino Orsini)
1957  Mister Cory (Edwards) (title role); The Sweet Smell of Success (Mackendrick) (as Sidney Falco); The Midnight Story (Appointment with a Shadow) (Pevney) (as Joe Martini)
1958  The Vikings (Fleischer) (as Eric); Kings Go Forth (Daves) (as Britt Harris); The Defiant Ones (Kramer) (as John Jackson); The Perfect Furlough (Strictly for Pleasure) (Edwards) (as Cpl. Paul Hodges)
1959  Some Like It Hot (Wild) (as Joe/Josephine); Operation Petticoat (Edwards) (as Lt. Nick Holden); Who Was That Lady? (Sidney) (as David Wilson)
1960  The Rat Race (Mulligan) (as Pete Hammond Jr.); Spartacus (Kubrick) (as Antoninus); The Great Impostor (Mulligan) (as Ferdinand Waldo Demara Jr.); Pepe (Sidney) (guest)
1961  The Outsider (Delbert Mann) (as Ira Hamilton Hayes)
1962  Forty Pounds of Trouble (Jewison) (as Steve McCluskey); Taras Bulba (Thompson) (as Andrei Bulba)

Tony Curtis (left) and Jack Lemmon in Some Like It Hot
1963  The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston) (as Italian); Captain Newman, M.D. (Miller) (as Cpl. Jackson Laiowitz); Paris When It Sizzles (Quine) (as second policeman)
1964  Wild and Wonderful (Anderson) (as Terry Williams); Goodbye Charlie (Minnelli) (as George Tracy); Sex and the Single Girl (Quine) (as Bob Weston)
1965  The Great Race (Edwards) (as The Great Leslie); Boeing-Boeing (Rich) (as Bernard Lawrence)
1966  Not with My Wife, You Don’t (Panama) (as Tom Ferris); Chamber of Horrors (Averback) (as Mr. Julian); Arrivederci, Baby (Drop Dead, Darling) (Hughes) (as Nick)
1967  La cintura di castità (A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Crusades; The Chastity Belt) (Campanile) (as Guerrando da Montone); Don’t Make Waves (Mackendrick) (as Carlo Cofield)
1968  Rosemary’s Baby (Polanski) (as voice of Donald Baumgart); The Boston Strangler (Fleischer) (as Albert de Salvo)
1969  Quei temerari sulle loro pazze, scatenate, scalinate carroie (Those Daring Young Men in Their Jaunty Jalopies; Monte Carlo or Bust?) (Annakin) (as Chester Schofield)
1970  Suppose They Gave a War and Nobody Came? (Averback) (as Shannon Gambroni); You Can’t Win ’em All (Collinson) (as Adam Dyer)
1973  The Third Girl from the Left (Medak—for TV)
1974  Lepke (Golan) (title role)
1975  The Count of Monte Cristo (Greene—for TV) (as Mondego); The Big Rip-Off (Hardgrove—for TV)
1976  The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as Rodriguez)
1977  Casanova & Co. (The Rise and Rise of Casanova; Some Like It Cool) (Legrand, i.e., Franz Antel) (title role); The Manitou (Girdler) (as Harry Erskine)
1978  Sexette (Hughes) (as Alexei); The Bad News Bears Go to Japan (Berry) (as Marvin); The Users (Hardy—for TV); Vegas (Richard Lang—for TV) (as Phillip Roth)
1979  It Rained All Night the Day I Left (Gessner) (as Robert Talbot); Title Shot (Rose) (as Frank Renzetti)
1980  Suppose They Gave a War and Nobody Came? (Averback) (as Shannon Gambroni); You Can’t Win ’em All (Collinson) (as Adam Dyer)
1981  The Million Dollar Face (O’Herlihy—for TV); Inmates: A Love Story (Green—for TV)
1982  Brainwaves (Lommel) (as Dr. Clavius); Portrait of a Showgirl (Stern—for TV); Othello (Boulouis) (as Iago); Balboa (Polakof) (as Ernie Stoddard)
1984  Where Is Parsifal? (Helman) (as Parsifal Katzenellenbogen)
1985  Insignificance (Roeg) (as the Senator)
1986  The Last of Philip Banter (Hachuel) (as Charles Foster); Mafia Princess (Collins—for TV) (as Salvatore “Sam” Giancana); Balboa (Polakof) (as Ernie Stoddard)
1987  Club Life (Vane) (as Hector)
1988  Paschasiger—Welcome to Germany (Brasch) (as Cornfield)
1989  Lobster Man from Mars (Sheff) (as J. P. Shelldrake); Midnight (Vane); Walter & Carlo i Amerika (Friis-Mikkelsen) (as Wally La Rouge)
1990  Tarzan in Manhattan (Schultz—for TV) (as Archimedes Porter); Bloodlaw (Heavenar); Thanksgiving Day (Tanasescu—for TV) (as Max Schloss)

1991  Prime Target (Heavener) (as Marretta Copella)
1992  Center of the Web (Prior) (as Stephen Moore); Christmas in Connecticut (Schwarzenegger—for TV) (as Alex Yardley)
1994  The Mummy Lives (Gerry O’Hara) (as Aziru/Dr. Mohassid); Bandit: Beauty and The Bandit (Needham—for TV) (as Lucky Bergstrom); A Perry Mason Mystery: The Case of the Grimacing Governor (Tash—for TV) (as Johnny Steele); Naked in New York (Algrant) (as Carl Fisher)
1995  The Immortals (for TV); The Celluloid Closet (Epstein and Friedman—doc) (as interviewee); Roger Moore: A Matter of Class (for TV) (as himself)
1997  Elvis Meets Nixon (Arkush) (uncredited—as himself); Hardball (Erschbamer) (as Wal); Brittle Glory (Schill) (as Jack Steele); Alien X Factor (Sondberg) (as Dr. Lancaster)
1998  Louis & Frank (Rockwell); Stargames (Gordon Clark)
1999  Play It to the Bone (Shelton) (as Ringside Fan)

Publications

By CURTIS: books—

Kid Andrew Cody and Julie Sparrow (novel), 1977.

By CURTIS: articles—

Interview with G. Fuller, in Interview, June 1991.

Interview with Maria Lexton, in Time Out (London), 16 November 1994.

On CURTIS: books—

On CURTIS: articles—

Cusack, Cyril

Films as Actor:

1918 Knocknagow (Homes of Tipperary) (O’Donovan) (as Young O’Brien)
1935 Guests of the Nation (Johnston); Late Extra (Albert Parker) (as Jules); The Man without a Face (G. King) (as Billy Desmond)
1936 Servants All (Bryce) (as Billy)
1938 The Shadow of the Glen (for TV)
1941 Inspector Hornleigh Goes to It (Mail Train) (Forde); Once a Crook (Mason) (as Bill Hopkins)
1947 Odd Man Out (Gang War) (Reed) (as Pat)
1948 Esther Waters (Dalrymple) (as Fred Parsons); Escape (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Rogers); Once a Jolly Swagman (Maniacs on Wheels) (Jack Lee and McNaughton) (as Duggie Lewis); Highland Fling (for TV); Ship Day
1949 The Small Back Room (Hour of Glory) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Cpl. Taylor); The Blue Lagoon (Lauder) (as James Carter); All over the Town (Twist) (as Gerald Vane); Christopher Columbus (McDonald); The Sensible Man (for TV)

Ecran (Paris), September 1978.

* * *

Ironically, Tony Curtis is today best known as the father of actress Jamie Lee Curtis. But in a career that spans more than five dozen films and a panorama of genres, he has proved to be an engaging light comedian—particularly when guided by Blake Edwards or Billy Wilder; he has also startled critics with a smattering of sharp-edged dramatic portrayals. Sadly, his acting reputation has long been eclipsed by that of his personal life, most notably his marriages (which proved fodder for fan magazines during their heyday). Even his physical qualities, his “pretty-boy” looks, which initially propelled him to stardom during the glamour-obsessed late 1950s and early 1960s, have worked against him.

Certainly, he was badly miscast early in his career: with his Bronx accent, the former Bernard Schwartz stuck out like the proverbial sore thumb in a string of Westerns, swashbucklers, and Arabian Nights-induced flights of fancy, wherein he uttered such immortal lines as “Yonda is the castle uv my fodd.”

The critical sniggering that dogged those early performances came to a halt in 1957 with Curtis’s stunning portrayal of oily press agent Sidney Falco in the gritty film noir The Sweet Smell of Success. Incomprehensibly, Curtis was not nominated for an Oscar in that performance. A year later, however, he was Best Actor nominee for The Defiant Ones, a chase film about racial prejudice directed by Stanley Kramer. Armed with critical acclaim, Curtis gave confident performances (sans Bronx accent) in the memorable period spectacles, The Vikings and Spartacus.

It was the back-to-back release in 1959 of two frantic comedies—Some Like It Hot, directed by Wilder, and Operation Petticoat, one of his many collaborations with Edwards (they also teamed up for such films as Mister Cory and The Great Race)—that displayed his impeccable comic timing. At his most convincing when cast opposite strong (or, at the very least, ingratiating) performers, Curtis proved a deft foil for Jack Lemmon and a charming romantic lead opposite Marilyn Monroe in the Wilder comedy. In Operation Petticoat he more than held his own with Cary Grant (whose distinctive voice he successfully parodied in Some Like It Hot).

Curtis went on to breezy work in so-called sophisticated comedies such as Sex and the Single Girl, then reinforced his dramatic reputation with his chilling portrayal of Albert de Salvo in The Boston Strangler (1968). Curtis campaigned long and hard to win the role, knowing it was a long shot; he gained almost 30 pounds and had his face rebuilt with a false nose to look like de Salvo. His perseverance earned him the role and good reviews, but not the Oscar nomination he sought and expected. The academy did not like serial killers, regardless of how persuasively they were played on the screen; it had previously ignored Anthony Perkins’s now-classic performance in Psycho. Not until Anthony Hopkins’s Hannibal the Cannibal in Silence of the Lambs in 1991 would such an honor be bestowed—not only was Hopkins nominated, he won.

The Boston Strangler proved to be Curtis’s last major film role. He has since appeared mostly in low-budget and foreign films and in various television productions, often playing aging Sicilian godfathers and other Mafioso types.

—Pat H. Broeske, updated by John McCarty
1950 Gone to Earth (Powell) (as Edward Marston); The Wild Heart (Powell and Pressburger—revised version of Gone to Earth, shortened); The Elusive Pimpernel (The Fighting Pimpernel) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Chauvelin); W. B. Yeats—A Tribute (Fleischmann—doc) (as narrator, with others)
1951 The Blue Veil (Bernhardt) (as Frank Hutchins); The Secret of Convict Lake (Michael Gordon) (as Limey); Soldiers Three (Garnett) (as Pvt. Dennis Malloy)
1953 Oedipus Complex (for TV)
1954 Destination Milan (Huntington) (as Paddy O’Clafferty); The Last Moment (Comfort) (as Daniel O’Driscoll); Saadia (Lewin) (as Khadir)
1955 Passage Home (Roy Ward Baker) (as Bohannon); The Thoroughbred (Huth—for TV)
1956 Jacqueline (Roy Ward Baker) (as Mr. Flannagan); The Man in the Road (Comfort) (as Dr. Kelly); The Man Who Never Was (Neame) (as taxi driver); The March Hare (Gamblers Sometimes Win) (O’Ferrall) (as Lazy Mangan); The Spanish Gardener (Leacock) (as Garcia); Deirdre (for TV)
1957 Ill Met by Moonlight (Night Ambush) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Sandy); Miracle in Soho (Aymes) (as Sam Bishop); “The Majesty of the Law” ep. of The Rising of the Moon (Ford) (as Inspector Michael Dillon); The Moon and Sixpence (Mulligan—for TV) (as Dr. Coutras)
1958 Cradle of Genius (Rothe—doc) (as himself)
1959 Floods of Fear (Charles Crichton) (as Peebles); Gideon’s Day (Gideon of Scotland Yard) (Ford) (as Herbert “Birdy” Sparrow); Shake Hands with the Devil (Anderson) (as Chris Noonan); The Enchanted (for TV); What Every Woman Knows (Mulligan—for TV)
1960 Johnny Nobody (Patrick—released in U.S. in 1965) (as Prosecuting Counsel); Once upon a Tram (Sarsfield and Maguire—doc) (as narrator); A Terrible Beauty (The Night Fighters) (Garnett) (as Jimmy Hannafin)
1962 I Thank a Fool (Stevens) (as Capt. Ferris); Waltz of the Toreadors (The Amorous General) (Guillermin) (as Dr. Grogan); The Chairs (for TV); Don Juan in Hell (for TV); The Dummy (for TV); The Lotus Eater (for TV); The Wedding Dress (for TV)
1963 80,000 Suspects (Guest) (as Father Maguire); Accidental Death (for TV); In the Train (for TV); Krapp’s Last Tape (for TV) (as Krapp); Tryptych (for TV); The Workhouse Ward (for TV) (as Michael McNerney)
1964 The Big Toe (for TV) (as Petley; Murder in the Cathedral (Foà—for TV) (as Thomas à Becket); Six Characters in Search of an Author (for TV) (as the father)
1965 The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (Ritt) (as narrator, with others); The Taming of the Shrew (La Bisbetica Domata) (Zeffirelli) (as Grumio); Dial M for Murder (Moxey—for TV) (as Inspector Hubbard); Oedipus the King (Oedipus Rex) (Saville) (as Messenger)
1966 Fahrenheit 451 (Truffaut) (as Captain)
1967 Jonathan Swift (Hickey—doc) (as narrator, with others); The Taming of the Shrew (La Bisbetica Domata) (Zeffirelli) (as Grumio); Dial M for Murder (Moxey—for TV) (as Inspector Hubbard); Oedipus the King (Oedipus Rex) (Saville) (as Messenger)
1968 Galileo (Cavani) (title role); Stage Irishman (Hickey—doc) (as himself)
1969 Country Dance (Brotherly Love) (J. Lee Thompson) (as Dr. Maitland)
1970 David Copperfield (Delbert Mann—for TV) (as Barkis)
1971 Harold and Maude (Ashby) (as sculptor); King Lear (Peter Brook) (as Duke of Albany); Sacco e Vanzetti (Sacco and Vanzetti) (Montaldo) (as Frederick Katzmann); Tam Lin (The Devil’s Widow) (McDowall) (as Vicar Julian Ainsley)
1972 La polizia ringrazia (From the Police, with Thanks; The Law Enforcers; Execution Squad) (Steno) (as Stoli); Piu forte ragazzi! (All the Way, Boys) (Colizzi) (as Matto); Clochmerle (Mills—for TV); The Hands of Cormac Joyce (Cook—for TV) (as Mr. Reese)
1973 The Day of the Jackal (Zinnemann) (as Gozzi the gunsmith); The Homecoming (Hall) (as Sam); La ‘mala’’ ordina (Manhunt; Manhunt in Milan; The Italian Connection) (Di Leo) (as Corso); Tristan et Isold (Tristan and Isolde) (Legrange); Catholics, a Fable for the Future (Gold—for TV) (as Father Manus); The Reunion (for TV)
1974 The Abdication (Harvey) (as Chancellor Oxenstierna); Arrivano Joe e Margherito (Joe y Margherito; Run, Run, Joe) (Colizzi); Jugernaut (Lester) (as Maj. O’Neill); Venditore di palloncini (The Last Circus Show; The Balloon Vendor; Last Moments) (Gariazzo) (as balloon vender); The Good and Faithful Servant (for TV)
1975 Children of Rage (Arthur Alan Seidelman) (as David’s father); Crystal and Fox (for TV)
1976 Lo mano svieta della legge (The Bloody Hands of the Law; Execution Squad) (Gariazzo) (as Frederick Katzmann); Paura in città (Hot Stuff; Fear in the City; Street War) (Rosati); Portrait of a Library (Hickey—doc) (as narrator)
1978 Les Misérables (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Fauchelevent); Cry of the Innocent (O’Herlihy—for TV)
1979 Pottin (Poteen) (Quinn) (as a poteen maker); Love Spell (Tristan and Isolde) (Donovan) (as Gorman of Ireland); The Hitchhiker (Reid—for TV)
1980 Cry of the Innocent (O’Herlihy) (as Detective Inspector Tom Moloney); Strumpet City (for TV)

1981 True Confessions (Grosbard) (as Cardinal Danaher); Andrina (Forsyth—for TV) (as retired sea captain); No Country for Old Men (Powell—for TV)
1982 The Ballroom of Romance (O’Connor—for TV) (as Mr. Dwyer); The Ghost Downstairs (The Neighbour Downstairs) (Gosling—for TV); The Plough and the Stars (for TV); The Search for Shaw (Cash—for TV) (as the voice of Bernard Shaw)
1983 Don Camillo (Hill); Comedy of Errors (James Cellan Jones—for TV) (as Aegon); Death of an Expert Witness (Wise—for TV) (as Mr. Lorrimer); One of Ourselves (O’Connor—for TV) (as Quigley); Wagner (Tony Palmer—for TV) (as Sulzer); The Kings Fisher (James Cellan Jones—for TV)
1984 1984 (Radford) (as Charrington); At the Cinema Palace—Liam O’Leary (Taylor—doc) (as himself); 2 x Forsyth (No Comebacks): A Careful Man (O’Herlihy—for TV) (as Martin Pound); Dr. Fischer of Geneva (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (as Steiner); Introduction to English Poetry, 1384- Present (doc for TV) (poetry read by Cusack and others); Rainy Day Women (Bolt—for TV) (as Reed); Restoration and Augustan Poetry (Mervyn—for TV) (poetry read by Cusack and others)
1985 The Theban Plays: Oedipus the King (Don Taylor—for TV) (as the priest)
1987 Little Dorrit (Part I: Nobody’s Fault and Part II: Little Dorrit’s Story) (Edvard) (as Frederick Dorrit); Cusack by Cusack (doc for TV)
1988 Menance Unseen (for TV); The Tenth Man (Gold—for TV) (as the parish priest)
1989 My Left Foot (Sheridan) (as Lord Castlereagh); Danny, the Champion of the World (Millar—for TV) (as Doc Spencer)
1990 The Fool (Edvard) (as the Ballad Seller)
1991 The Company: Inigo and His Jesuits (Fenton) (as host)
1992 Far and Away (Ron Howard) (as Danty Duff); As You Like It (Edvard) (as Adam); Memento Mori (Clayton and Hubbard—for TV) (for TV) (as the poet Percy Manning)
1993 Young Indiana Jones Chronicles: Paris, May 1919 (Hare—for TV) (as Georges Clemenceau)

Publications

By CUSACK: books—

Timepieces (verse), Dublin, 1970.

By CUSACK: articles—

Focus (London), March 1953.
Interview with Elliot Norton, in Boston Record, 14 May 1957.

On CUSACK: articles—

Obituary in Irish Independent (Dublin), 8 October 1993.

* * *

In a life of almost 83 years Cyril Cusack spent 77 of those years active in the theater, film, radio, television, recordings, and publishing, with well over 100 theatrical productions, 90 films, and 75 television productions to his credit.

After his birth in Durban, Natal, South Africa, his actress mother brought him to Ireland at any early age. He was a devoted Irishman—as actor and nationalist—and in many ways his theatrical and film work reflects this. In an incident recounted in Cinema and Ireland (1988), Cusack and a group of fellow actors and students, offended by what they considered to be a stereotypical depiction of the Irish shouted down a screening of the American film Smiling Irish Eyes (1929) in a Dublin theater. He was fluent in the Irish language, sent his children to Irish language schools, and wrote a play in Gaelic, Tar eis an aifrin, which was staged in 1942. At the age of eight he was cast in the early silent Irish film Knocknagow which dealt with the Irish famine. In 1979 he starred as a poteen maker in Poitin (Poteen), which is considered the first Irish feature film in Gaelic. Many of the films in which he appeared are about the Irish fight for independence: Guests of the Nation, Odd Man Out, The Rising of the Moon, and Shake Hands with the Devil.

He often said that his movie career supported his primary interest of mounting theatrical productions. While long associated with the Abbey Theatre he also ran his own company, Cyril Cusack Productions. His theatrical contributions included the major Irish figures of the stage from Boucicault to Beckett. His favorite roles included The Covey in O’Casey’s The Plough and the Stars and Christy Mahon in Synge’s The Playboy of the Western World. The full extent of his abilities as a stage actor are not always captured on film. But his long association with Caedmon Records provides one with an opportunity to at least hear him in some of his important Shakespearean and Irish roles, and the plays of Genet and Ionesco. (He also recorded the poetry and writings of Hopkins, Yeats, Joyce, and Beckett). One of Cusack’s proudest moments was the production of The Three Sisters (Royal Court Theatre, London, 1990) in which he acted with his three actress daughters, who through their active stage and screen careers have extended the Cusack acting dynasty into its fourth generation.

While Cusack’s film career has included some major roles: Chauvelin in The Elusive Pimpernel, the title role in Galileo, and as Frederick Katzmann in Sacco and Vanzetti, virtually his whole body of film work has been devoted to the portrayal of character roles. In a way this is a pity, because Cusack was a major actor, of great talent, who had honed his craft through long years of experience. (He had great confidence in his acting abilities and did not particularly appreciate directors who wanted to tell him how to act the parts.) On the other hand one has the opportunity of experiencing this great talent in relatively short, concentrated scenes. Some of these are gems of acting skill. The two short scenes as Control with Richard Burton in The Spy Who Came in from the Cold underline the subtlety of his acting. In the theme and plot of this wonderfully complex film, his role is extremely important to the action. There is subtlety of interpretation, an almost “minimalist” approach of expression, movement, speech, and body language that projects the depth of character. Here is Cusack as a prissy, meticulous, almost insufferable bore, irritated because the “office girl” did not warm the teapot. He was able to project an exterior of extreme propriety, a person meticulously dressed, while underneath it there is a ruthless schemer. Other movies in which this ability to flesh out the role of a minor character who often has an impact on the plot of the film are: Odd Man Out, The Passage Home, Fahrenheit 451, Day of the Jackal, Juggernaut, True Confessions, “A Careful Man” sequence in 2 x Forsyth, and The Tenth Man.

—Allen Cohen

CUSACK, John

Films as Actor:

1983 Class (Carlino) (as Roscoe)
1984 Sixteen Candles (Hughes) (as Bryce); Grandview, U.S.A. (Kleiser) (as Johnny Maine)
1985 The Journey of Natty Gann (Kagan) (as Harry); Better Off Dead. . . (Holland) (as Lane Myer); The Sure Thing (Reiner) (as Walter “Gib” Gibson)
The myriad adjectives used to describe actor John Cusack seem to mirror traits of his many film characters: highly intelligent, quirky, wry, cynical, wise, ambitious, sensitive, likable, arrogant, serious, soulful, funny. This wide range of intriguing attributes has made Cusack one of the most versatile actors of his generation. A movie star since his late teens, the darkly handsome Cusack can carry a film, but he will probably never earn a Cruise or Pitt-like fee for doing so.
Undoubtedly this is because Cusack has always eschewed the obvious in favor of characters that Caren Weiner Campbell categorizes as typically ranging between “the extremes of Smirking Daredevil and Neurotic Ditherer.”

As a child actor in Chicago’s Piven Theater Workshop, John Cusack learned his acting chops and a disdain for the Establishment. Nonetheless, as a sixteen-year-old, he made his screen debut in the frothy Rob Lowe-Andrew McCarthy feature, Class, and followed up with a small role in another dubious Brat Pack classic, Sixteen Candles. But it was director Rob Reiner who saw Cusack’s potential, casting the teenager in the starring role in the 1985 It Happened One Night update, The Sure Thing. As college freshman Walter “Gib” Gibson traveling across country in search of love, Cusack brought depth and a winning decency to what might have been a merely cloying role, and proved himself a romantic lead. This uncommon depth of character in a teen film would become the hallmark of Cusack’s early career.

But it was Cusack’s nuanced portrayal of the soulful Lloyd Dobler in Cameron Crowe’s Say Anything (1989) that elevated the Chicago-based actor to cult stardom. As the kickboxing, misfit, high school senior, who wooed and won the beautiful class brain by playing Peter Gabriel outside her window on a boom box, Cusack became the thinking woman’s screen idol of his generation. He also won the respect of the movie community. Critic Pauline Kael wrote of his performance, “Cusack is a wonder: Lloyd’s (nearly) blank look tells you that a lot of things are going on inside him—he has a buzz in his blank face.”

Cusack followed up Say Anything with his first adult role, as Chicago “Black Sox” third baseman, Buck Weaver, in John Sayles’s dark baseball drama, Eight Men Out. As the lone player who knew of the scandal but refused to go along with the conspiracy, Cusack turned in a poignant and movie-stealing performance in a cast featuring some of Hollywood’s hottest young actors.

Throughout his twenties, Cusack landed on his feet in small roles in some of Hollywood’s most ambitious films, such as Fat Man and Little Boy, Bob Roberts, and The Player. The good-looking yet quirky actor became a favorite of many of cinema’s most lauded auteurs, including Woody Allen, Robert Altman, Stephen Frears, and John Sayles. Cusack’s most memorable roles from this period were youthful con artist Roy Dillon in the contemporary noir, The Grifters (1990), and earnest playwright David Shane in Woody Allen’s period farce Bullets Over Broadway (1994).

More than holding his own in the formidable company of Angelica Huston and Annette Bening, Cusack was the emotional center of The Grifters. Caught in the emotional warfare between the grifter mother who abandoned him (Huston) and his glamorous grifter girlfriend (Bening), Cusack takes the film to its ugly and cathartic climax by doing less rather than more. As one critic noted, “Cusack makes a style out of recessiveness.”

Bullets Over Broadway marked Cusack’s full maturation as an actor, leaving behind the teen idols and troubled young men, and brilliantly assuming the role of an exceedingly serious and self-absorbed playwright who sells out for success. In a cast of brilliantly outlandish performances, Cusack’s earnestness once again became a cinematic anchor.

After making a series of less-than-successful films such as The Road to Wellville and City Hall, Cusack took the role of sanguine U.S. Marshall Vince Larkin—the voice of reason in the smash ‘em up Nicolas Cage blockbuster, Con Air.

The success of Con Air allowed Cusack to bankroll the first film from his own production company, New Crime. In Grosse Pointe Blank, Cusack plays humane and psychologically confused hit man Martin Blank, who returns home for his high school reunion. At the crux of the film is Blank’s contentious and electric relationship with his high school girlfriend, played by Minnie Driver, and once again Cusack proves himself a charismatic, if rather dark, leading man.

Throughout the late 1990s, Cusack alternated Hollywood films with independent efforts. For every Pushing Tin, there was a New Crime production such as High Fidelity. Consequently, Cusack’s popularity with audiences grew even as he continued to be a favorite of filmmakers such as Spike Jonze, Terence Malick, and Tim Robbins.

In Pushing Tin, Cusack plays Nick Falzone, a hotheaded air traffic controller who thrives on stress. When a renegade Zen-like controller, played by Billy Bob Thornton, joins their team, high testosterone high jinks ensue and Nick’s world falls apart. Again, it is Cusack’s underlying integrity that keeps audiences believing and empathizing with his character.

Spike Jonze cast Cusack in the leading role of out-of-work, down-and-out performance art puppeteer Craig Schwartz in the surrealistic Being John Malkovich. With his unkempt beard and greasy ponytail, Schwartz is an anti-leading man who falls obsessively in lust with the mysterious Maxine, even as Maxine and his wife fall in love with each other. Cusack’s seethingly dissolute and simultaneously bleak performance as Schwartz bears resemblance to nothing so much as his starring role as used record store owner Rob Gordon in his next New Crime effort, High Fidelity. Although Gordon is much better looking than Schwartz and infinitely more attractive to women, his inability to come to terms with his own adulthood propels him into one hopeless relationship after another. In both performances, Cusack willingly plays against his own attractiveness in order to create characters that are both utterly lost and curiously powerful.

As Cusack enters his mid-thirties, he seems to be experimenting with his own persona even as he is pushing the limits of the Hollywood system. He is, as Time magazine dubbed him, “the hip, cutting-edge, counterculture-but-inside-the-Establishment, Trojan horse guy.”

—Victoria Price

CUSHING, Peter

Films as Actor:

1939  The Man in the Iron Mask (Whale)
1940  Hidden Master (short); Dreams (short); Laddie (Hively) (as Robert Pryor); Women in War (Auer) (as Capt. Evans); A Champ at Oxford (Goulding) (as student); Vigil in the Night (Stevens) (as Joe Shand)
1941  They Dare Not Love (Whale); We All Help (short); The New Teacher (short); Safety First (short)
1947  It Might Be You (short)
1948  Hamlet (Olivier) (as Osric)
1952  Moulin Rouge (Huston) (as Marcel de la Voisier)

1954  The Black Knight (Garnett) (as Sir Palamides)
1955  The End of the Affair (Dmytryk) (as Henry Miles)
1956  Magic Fire (Dieterle) (as Otto Wesendonk); Alexander the Great (Rosen) (as Memnon); Time without Pity (Losey) (as Jeremy Clayton)
1957  The Abominable Snowman (The Abominable Snowman of the Himalayas) (Guest) (as Dr. John Rollason); The Curse of Frankenstein (Fisher) (as Victor Frankenstein)
1958  Violent Playground (Dearden) (as priest); Dracula (The Horror of Dracula) (Fisher) (as Dr. Van Helsing)
1959  The Mummy (Fisher) (as John Banning); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Fisher) (as Sherlock Holmes); John Paul Jones (Farrow) (as Capt. Pearson)
1960  The Flesh and the Fiends (Mania; Psycho Killers; The Fiendish Ghouls) (Gilling) (as Dr. Robert Knox); Code of Silence (Trouble in the Sky) (Frend) (as Captain Clive Judd); Suspect (The Risk) (Boulting) (as Prof. Sewell); The Brides of Dracula (Fisher) (as Dr. Van Helsing); Sword of Sherwood Forest (Fisher) (as Sheriff of Nottingham)
1961  Fury at Smuggler’s Bay (Gilling) (as Squire Trevenyan); The Naked Edge (Anderson) (as Wrack); The Hellfire Club
(Baker) (as Merryweather); Cash on Demand (Lawrence) (as Fordyce)
1962 The Devil’s Agent (Carstairs); Captain Clegg (Night Creatures) (Scott) (as Dr. Blaise/Capt. Nathaniel Clegg); The Man Who Finally Died (Fisher) (as Dr. von Brecht)
1964 The Evil of Frankenstein (Fisher) (as Baron Frankenstein); Dr. Terror’s House of Horrors (Francis) (as Sandor Schreck); The Gorgon (Fisher) (as Dr. Namaroff)
1965 She (Day) (as Major Horace Holly); The Skull (Francis) (as Prof. Christopher Maitland); Dr. Who and the Daleks (Fleming) (as Dr. Who)
1966 Island of Terror (Fisher) (as Dr. Brian Stanley); Daleks—Invasion Earth A.D. 2150 (Fleming) (as Dr. Who)
1967 Frankenstein Created Woman (Fisher) (as Baron Frankenstein); Torture Garden (Francis) (as Canning); The Mummy’s Shroud (Gilling) (as narrator); Some May Live (They Also Kill) (Sewell—for TV) (as John Meredith); Night of the Big Heat (Island of the Burning Damned) (Fisher) (as Dr. Stone); Caves of Steel
1968 The Blood Beast Terror (The Vampire Beast Craves Blood) (Sewell) (as Inspector Quennell); Corruption (Hartford-Davis) (as Sir John Brown)
1969 Frankenstein Must Be Destroyed (Fisher) (as Baron Frankenstein); Scream and Scream Again (Hessler) (as Major Heinrich); One More Time (Lewis) (as Frankenstein)
1970 The Vampire Lovers (Baker) (as General Spielsdorf); The House That Dripped Blood (Duffell) (as Philip Grayson); Incense for the Damned (Bloodsuckers) (Hartford-Davis) (as Dr. Goodrich)
1971 Twins of Evil (Hough) (as Gustav Weil)
1972 I, Monster (Weeks) (as Uterson); “Poetic Justice” ep. of Tales from the Crypt (Francis) (as Mr. Grimsdyke); Nothing but the Night (Sasdy) (as Sir Mark Ashley); Michael Carmichael (Fear in the Night) (Sangster); Asylum (Baker) (as Smith); Dr. Phibes Rises Again (Fuest) (as Captain); Dracula A.D. 1972 (Gibson) (as Van Helsing); Panico en el Transiberiano (Horror Express) (Martin) (as Dr. Wells)
1973 The Satanic Rites of Dracula (Count Dracula and His Vampire Bride) (Gibson) (as Van Helsing); Frankenstein and the Monster from Hell (Fisher) (as Dr. Frankenstein); The Creeping Flesh (Francis) (as Emmanuel Hildern); And Now the Screaming Starts (Baker) (as Dr. Pope); From Beyond the Grave (Connor) (as shopkeeper)
1974 Legend of the Werewolf (Francis) (as Paul Cataflangue); The Golden Vampire (The Seven Brothers Meet Dracula; The Legend of the Seven Golden Vampires) (Baker) (as Van Helsing); Madhouse (Clark) (as Herbert Flay); La Grande Trouille (Tendre Dracula) (Grunstein) (as voice); The Beast Must Die (Annett) (as Dr. Lungren)
1975 Call Him Mr. Shatter (Shatter) (Carreras); The Ghouls (Francis) (as Dr. Lawrence); Shock Waves (Almost Human; Death Corps) (Wiederhorn) (as Scar)
1976 The Devil’s Men (Land of the Minotaur) (Carayiannis) (as Baron Corofax); Trial by Combat (Choice of Weapons; Dirty Knight’s Work) (Connor) (as Sir Edward Gifford); At the Earth’s Core (Connor) (as Dr. Abner Perry); The Great Houdinis (Shavelson—for TV)
1977 The Uncanny (Heros) (as Wilbur Gray); Die Standarte (Battle Flag) (Runze) (as Maj. von Hackenberg); Star Wars (Lucas) (as Grand Moff Tarkin)
1978 Hitler’s Son (Amateau) (as Heinrich Hussner); The Detour
1979 Touch of the Sun (Curran) (as Commissioner Potts); Arabian Adventure (Connor) (as Wazir Al Wurzara)
1980 A Tale of Two Cities (Jim Goddard—for TV) (as Dr. Manette); Mysterio en la isla de los monstruos (Monster Island; Mystery of Monster Island) (Piquer) (as Colderup); Black Jack (Boulois)
1982 House of the Long Shadows (Walker) (as Sebastian)
1983 Sword of the Valiant (Weeks) (as Seneschal)
1984 Top Secret! (Abrahams, Zucker, and Zucker) (as Sven Jorgensen); The Silent Scream (Alan Gibson); Sherlock Holmes and the Masks of Death (Masks of Death) (Roy Ward Baker—for TV); Helen Keller: The Miracle Continues (Alan Gibson—for TV) (as Prof. Charles Copeland)
1985 Biggles: Adventures in Time (Biggles) (Hough) (as Colonel Raymond)

Publications

By CUSHING: books—

Tales of a Monster Hunter (horror tales selected by Peter Cushing), London, 1977.

By CUSHING: articles—

Interviews in Cinéma (Paris), July-August 1972.
Film Review, September 1976.
Films Illustrated (London), December 1980.

On CUSHING: books—

On CUSHING: articles—

Article about Peter Cushing and Christopher Lee in Photoplay (New York), June 1972.

Kelley, B. “Peter Cushing on His Stylish Villainy in Star Wars,” Cinefantastique (Forest Park, Illinois), vol. 28, no. 9, 1997.

* * * *

Peter Cushing was identifiable by his noble air and refined manner, by all appearances a gentleman. Yet he is best remembered for those moments in film where he plunges the stake, without reservation or mercy, into the waiting chest of the sleeping vampire, amid deafening screams from the dying and a pool of blood to reassure us that the deed is done. For Cushing was one of the mainstays of the British horror film, as defined by Hammer Films. His frequent pairing with Christopher Lee in dozens of horror films over several decades was the most famous “scream team” since Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi went to their great rewards.

Beginning in the late 1950s, Hammer began turning out loose remakes, in color, of the classic Universal horror films of the 1930s under the guidance of house directors such as Terence Fisher and Freddie Francis. In these films Hammer created a fairy tale gothic atmosphere distinctively its own. It combined this with unprecedentedly graphic violence and sexual exploitation which contributed much to breaking down the walls of screen censorship in Britain and elsewhere. Cushing brought to the title character of The Curse of Frankenstein—the first of Hammer’s gothic horrors—a touch of nastiness that audiences weaned on Colin Clive’s portrayal in the 1931 original had never seen before. No mere mad scientist, Cushing’s Baron von Frankenstein was the ultimate narcissist: cold, ruthless, remorseless, and a murderer to boot—the true monster of the film. He played the part, with which he is most identified by horror fans, in five Hammer sequels, the last of which, Frankenstein and the Monster from Hell, found him the chief lunatic in charge of his private asylum.

Cushing’s other famous role was that of Dracula’s arch nemesis, the vampire destroyer Dr. Abraham Van Helsing. Cushing injected the character with a degree of neurotic obsession barely hinted at in Bram Stoker’s novel. He first played the role in Hammer’s Horror of Dracula, the studio’s smash hit follow-up to The Curse of Frankenstein. It remains the studio’s most celebrated film. Cushing played Van Helsing (as well as Van Helsing’s nephew, Lorimar) in five Hammer sequels, the odd of which was 1974’s The Legend of the Seven Golden Vampires produced by the Shaw brothers in Hong Kong. Here, the martial arts meet the black arts, as Cushing allies himself with sibling martial artists to fight a horde of kung-fu vampires created by Dracula.

Cushing also made an indelible mark as Sherlock Holmes in Hammer’s The Hound of the Baskervilles, one of the best screen versions of Conan Doyle’s oft-filmed tale. Cushing’s Holmes was an intellectual neurotic whose obsession with solving the mystery almost leads to his client’s death. The screen had never presented Holmes in such a light, but this was precisely as Conan Doyle had written the character; thus, Cushing’s Holmes, like his Baron Frankenstein and Van Helsing before it, was a groundbreaker, paving the way for a host of similarly authentic Holmes interpretations, culminating with the late Jeremy Brett’s even more neurotic (and obsessive) incarnation a quarter of a century later on television. Cushing also played the character on television in a series of 16 Holmes adventures produced for the BBC in the 1960s, one of them yet another remake of The Hound of the Baskervilles, trimmed to an hour-long format.

In addition to Lee, Cushing teamed with another icon of modern horror cinema, Vincent Price, in several films, most notably House of the Long Shadows, an homage to the gothic “old dark house” genre of horror films based on the oft-filmed Earl Derr Bigger’s thriller Seven Keys to Baldpate.

Cushing and Lee’s final teaming was a documentary on Hammer Films, Flesh and Blood, which they hosted and narrated for producer-director Ted Newsom. The documentary aired in two parts on the BBC in August 1994. Ill at the time, Cushing’s spirits were buoyed by the arrival of thousands of fan letters after the first episode aired. His death (from cancer) on 11 August 1994, before the second episode reached the airwaves, marked the end of an era for horror fans, young and old, around the world.

—Rob Winning, updated by John McCarty
DAFOE, Willem

Films as Actor:

1980 Heaven’s Gate (Cimino)
1982 The Loveless (Bigelow) (as Vance)
1984 The Hunger (Tony Scott) (as phone booth youth); New York Nights (Nuchtern) (as punk boyfriend); Roadhouse 66 (John Mark Robinson) (as Johnny Harte); Streets of Fire (Walter Hill) (as Raven)
1985 To Live and Die in L.A. (Friedkin) (as Eric Masters); The Communists Are Comfortable (Kobland)
1986 Platoon (Oliver Stone) (as Sgt. Elias)
1987 Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Couturie—doc, for TV) (as co-narrator); Hitchhiker 3 (for TV)
1988 The Last Temptation of Christ (Scorsese) (as Jesus Christ); Mississippi Burning (Alan Parker) (as Alan Ward); Off Limits (Saigon) (as Crowe) (as Buck McGiff)
1989 Born on the Fourth of July (Oliver Stone) (as Charlie); Triumph of the Spirit (Robert M. Young) (as Salamo Arouch)
1990 Cry-Baby ( Waters) (as hateful guard); Wild at Heart (Lynch) (as Bobby Peru)
1991 Flight of the Intruder (Milius) (as Lt. Commander Virgil Cole)
1992 Light Sleeper (Schrader) (as John LeTour); White Sands (Donaldson) (as Ray Dolezal)
1993 Body of Evidence (Edel) (as Frank Dulaney); Faraway, So Close (In Weiter Ferne, So Nah!) (Wenders) (as Emit Flesi)
1994 Clear and Present Danger (Noyce) (as Clark); The Night and the Moment (Tato) (as the writer); Tom & Viv (Brian Gilbert) (as T. S. Eliot)
1995 The English Patient (Minghella) (as Caravaggio); Victory (Peplow)
1996 Basquiat (Build a Fort, Set It on Fire) (Schnabel); The Foolish Heart (Babenco)
1997 Speed 2: Cruise Control (De Bont) (as John Geiger)
1998 Affliction (Schrader) (as Rolfe Whitehouse); New Rose Hotel (Ferrara) (as X); eXistenZ (Cronenberg) (as Gas)
1999 The Boondock Saints (Duffy) (as FBI Agent Paul Smecker)
2000 American Psycho (Harron) (as Detective Donald Kimball); The Animal Factory (Buscemi) (as Earl Copen); Shadow of the Vampire (Merhige) (as Max Schreck); Pavilion of Women (Yim); Bullfighter (Bendixen) (as Father Ramirez)

Publications

By DAFOE: articles—

“Willem Dafoe: Center Stage,” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), May 1990.

Interview in Mensuel du Cinéma (Nice), no. 8, July-August 1993.

Interview with Frances McDormand, in Bomb, no. 55, Spring 1996.

On DAFOE: articles—

* * *

Although one has a vivid mental image of Willem Dafoe, and the impression of a strong and striking presence, the more one thinks about his performances and the range of his roles (from demonic biker to Jesus Christ, with many variables in between), the more complex the persona appears, the more difficult to fix upon a stable core. Certain patterns form, but they are often contradictory.

One may begin by defining him negatively, by what he does not do. Aside from the grotesquerie of his small roles in Cry-Baby and Wild at Heart, he never plays comedy; he is seldom permitted a happy ending, especially the traditional one of lovers united; he is only slightly more frequently involved in love stories; although he has played in “action” movies he is far from a typical “action” hero. He is the kind of actor, in fact, that Hollywood needs but does not quite know what to do with. There is his unusual and expressive face, far from the conventional good looks that get inferior actors cast as romantic leads, which can be at times incredibly beautiful (Off Limits), intensely malevolent (Streets of Fire), or intriguingly decadent (To Live and Die in L.A.).

He has appeared most frequently in “dark” movies: contemporary variants on film noir (White Sands, Light Sleeper) or films of notably grim subject matter (Platoon, Triumph of the Spirit). His roles in these, however, have been extremely varied, running the gamut from villainy and evil to heroism and Christlike martyrdom. The first films in which he made a strong impression established the former. Streets of Fire is a misguided, deliriously stylized, homage to/parody of bad fifties B movies, that ends being at least as empty as what it parodies. The two leads, Michael Paré (doing a Sylvester Stallone imitation) and Diane Lane (looking sulky), form an ideal context in which Dafoe’s demon biker can shine: he looks like a juvenile Frankenstein’s monster gone berserk, and easily steals the film. The far more interesting To Live and Die in L.A. gives him a richer context and a much more complex role. His murderous counterfeiter, associated with art and (in the film’s strangest moment) sexual ambiguity, is only ambiguously the villain in a film in which the nominally good/moral can easily (as in certain other Friedkin movies, notably Cruising) switch places with the nominally evil/moral, within a world where everyone is implicated in corruption.

Only one year later Oliver Stone cast him in Platoon, initiating the series of “Christ” roles, as Stone’s treatment of his death scene makes quite explicit. This is followed by two more “hero” roles: his purification through experience and the love of a good nun in Off Limits, and his naive and idealistic young civil rights worker from the North coming South to teach the helpless blacks how to take a stand in Alan Parker’s Mississippi Burning, an eloquent example of those good intentions to which the road to hell is said to be paved. These in turn are followed by the culmination of this particular career trajectory, his selection by Scorsese to play Jesus himself in The Last Temptation of Christ. Despite the evident commitment and the all-too-obviously strenuous effort, this seems to me Scorsese’s one serious failure. But how do you present Christ on the screen? What course to steer between the human and the divine, between skepticism and belief? Significantly it is Dafoe’s least memorable performance in a major role. Triumph of the Spirit, a year later, offered him more practicable opportunities in a variation on the “savior” role: a concentration camp inmate who both survives, and helps others to survive, through his prowess as a boxer, driving himself to ever greater exertions in order to stay alive.

Three years later, after a period in which it appeared that Dafoe had been relegated to the status of supporting player, taking variously grotesque roles in films ranging from the distinguished but compromised Born on the Fourth of July to the relentlessly atrocious Wild at Heart, his great moment arrived, in that unpredictable way in which such things occasionally happen in Hollywood: the central roles, and two of his best performances, in two films of considerable distinction, both released in 1992, White Sands and Light Sleeper. Unfortunately (as far as Dafoe’s future career is concerned), the former performed at the box office indifferently, the latter disastrously.

All the negatives by which I defined Dafoe at the outset are contradicted in White Sands. This critically underrated film is among the most interesting of contemporary attempts to revive (by updating) film noir: it exceeds expectations in one direction while negating them in others. The image of America as a nation characterized by all-pervasive corruption and the resulting paranoia was a given of classical film noir but is here pushed further: the FBI are as criminal as the nominal criminals, and the ultimate figure of evil (Mickey Rourke) is finally revealed as a representative of the CIA. On the other hand, the apparent femme fatale (Mary Elizabeth Mastroantonio) emerges as (although not uncontaminated—as she says, “It’s a fine line”) one of the film’s most admirable characters, and the hero (Dafoe), whom we constantly expect to be sucked into the seemingly inescapable corruption, emerges intact (even if guilty of brief marital infidelity). Dafoe navigates the film’s quicksands with splendid assurance, often as bewildered as the traditional noir protagonist (not to mention the audience) by the web of intrigue and double-dealing, but through a combination of pragmatism and integrity managing (just) to survive its pitfalls and temptations, his self-respect intact.

Light Sleeper (more central to the noir tradition with its urban setting, criminal underworld, and fallible and corrupt protagonist), offers him even greater opportunities to develop a complex character, here a drug dealer, tired and beginning to feel his age, attempting to extricate himself from a life he has come to find oppressive, but the forces of which, set in motion, are all-but-impossible to combat. Specifically, he is an apparently lost soul struggling upward toward salvation. The two films in juxtaposition might be taken as summing up two sides of the Dafoe persona, the innocent and the corrupt, striving for life within a dark, menacing, and hostile world.

Unfortunately, the following year (after a brief, indecisive venture into international co-production for Wenders’s Faraway, So Close) marked the nadir of Dafoe’s career so far: Body of Evidence, in which his ignominious function was to “support” the insupportable. Doubtless it seemed a good career move at the time, but it rebounded disastrously, as such things tend to do.

In recent years Dafoe has had the most distressingly bad fortune of any comparable contemporary American film actor. Three of the four films in which he has starred have failed to get a theatrical release. Victory (from Joseph Conrad’s splendid novel) is apparently considered unreleasable and has not even appeared on video, a fact greatly to be regretted as Axel Heyst would be a perfect role for Dafoe. Night and the Moment is allegedly available on video, but stores deny all knowledge of it. New Rose Hotel is at least available on both video (incorrectly formatted) and DVD (in widescreen). Even aside from this major catastrophe within a distinguished career, Dafoe’s supporting roles have not been especially rewarding, though he is never uninteresting. His role in The English Patient (Caravaggio) was greatly reduced in importance from the novel, the film concentrating on the central love story; Affliction (arguably the best film in which he has appeared in this period) gave him little to do; he accepted the role of the villain in Speed 2: Cruise Control, but even actors have to eat. His cameo in Cronenberg’s Existenz (he is prominent in only one sequence) allows him to pass within a few minutes between the two extremes of his persona, from amiable nice guy to malicious villain, and one admires the subtlety with which the latter is hinted at in the former, the friendly smiles just a trifle strained. This leaves us with his two available major roles, in Tom & Viv and New Rose Hotel. It was a shock to find this actor, so often associated with crime movies and lowlife characters, cast as T.S. Eliot. The title Tom & Viv suggests equal status, but in fact it is really Amanda Richardson’s film, dedicated to the memory of Vivienne Haigh-Wood and clearly concerned to express a feminist viewpoint. But Dafoe is superb, in a role far less showy than that of his co-star. The film tells us little about Eliot’s poetry, ignoring its prominent sexual disgust, its antisemitism, and its occasional homophobia. Dafoe gives us a decent, troubled man who genuinely cares for his disturbed, passionate wife and acts responsibly within his own limitations, quite unable to see that her alleged insanity is a perfectly understandable response to her dull and unimaginative family and the stultifying upperclass British milieu that has created it. He says, near the end of the film, after Vivienne’s commitment to a “home,” “I love this family. I’ve always wanted to be a part of it,” and the line as Dafoe delivers it carries great pathos, his entrapment subsequently visualized in the repeated image of his face behind the bars of the elevator “cage.”

Reactions to New Rose Hotel will depend upon one’s estimate of Abel Ferrara: the film is fully characteristic of his work, in its sense of human beings trapped within a thoroughly corrupt world, either trying (Dafoe) or not trying (Christopher Walken) to retain a little dignity and decency. Clearly the film was a very difficult commercial proposition: essentially a “modernist” art-house movie, formally and stylistically ambitious, constructed upon a basically elementary generic plot. It deserved far better treatment than it has received. It also contains Dafoe’s finest performance in years, allowing him a wide range of expression. His love scenes with Asia Argento have a touching erotic tenderness, and he beautifully conveys his character’s fundamental (if threatened) innocence. He is still able, in his forties, convincingly to project a boyish vulnerability.

—Robin Wood

---

DAGOVER, Lil

Nationality: Dutch. Born: Marie Antonia Siegeline Marta Liletts in Madiven, Java (now Djawa), 30 September 1897 (or 1894). Education: Boarding schools in Baden-Baden and Weimar, Germany, Lausanne and Geneva, Switzerland. Family: Married 1) the actor Fritz Daghofer, 1917 (divorced 1919), daughter: Eva Marie; 2) the producer George Witt, 1936. Career: 1919—film debut in Fritz Lang’s Harakiri; 1925—stage debut under the direction of Max Reinhardt in Salzburg; 1926–27—appeared in a few Swedish films; 1927—visited Hollywood; 1928–29—appeared in several French films; 1932—in only U.S. film, The Woman from Monte Carlo; 1940s-1979—acted occasionally on stage and television, and in films.

Films as Actress:

1919 Harakiri (Lang) (as Butterfly); Die Spinnen, Part 1: Der goldene See (The Spiders, Part 1: The Golden Lake) (Lang)
1920 Das Kabinett des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Doctor Caligari) (Wiene) (as Jane); Die Spinnen, Part 2: Das Brilliantschiff (The Spiders, Part 2: The Diamond Ship) (Lang); Das Blut der Ahnen (Gerhardt); Die Jagd nach dem Tote (Gerhardt); Das Geheimnis von Bombay (Holz); Spiritismus (Zelnik); Die Totenson (Froelich)
1921 Der müde Tod (Destiny; Between Two Worlds; Beyond the Wall) (Lang); Der Richter von Zalamea (Berger); Das Medium (Rosenfeld)
1922 Phantom (Murnau); Luise Millerin (Kabale und Liebe) (Froelich) (title role); Dr. Mabuse, der Spieler (Dr. Mabuse, The Gambler) (Lang); Tiefland (Licho); Macht der Versuchung (Stein)
1923 Seine Frau, die Unbekannte (Wilbur Crawfords wundersames Abenteuer) (Christensen); Liebe macht Blind (Love Makes Us Blind) (Mendes); Die Princessin Savarin (Guter)
1924 Komödie des Herzens (Gliese)
1925 Tartuffe (Tartuffe) (Murnau) (as Elmira); Zur Chronik von Grieshaus (Chronicles of the Grey House; At the Grey House) (von Gerlach); Die Doppelgängerin; Der Demütiger und die Sängerin (Dupont)
1926 Der geheime Kurier (Red and the Black) (Righelli); Die Brüder Schellenberg (The Two Brothers) (Grüne); Der Veilchenfresser (Zelnik); Hans engelska frau (His English Wife; Discord) (Molander)
1927 Bara en danserska (Only a Dancing Girl) (Morel); Der Anwalt des Herzens (Thiele); Ein moderner Don Juan; Orient-Express (Thiele)
1928 Der Ungarische Rhapsodie (Hungarian Rhapsody) (Schwarz); Monte Cristo (Fescourt); Le Tourbillon de Paris (Duvivier)
1929 La Grande Passion (The Grand Passion) (Hugon); Der Günstling von Schönbrunn (Waschneck); Spielleier einer Kaserin (Strijewski); Die Ehe (Frowein); Es flüstert die Nacht (Hungarian Nights) (Janson); Melodie des Herzens (Melody of the Heart) (Schwarz); Der weisse Teufel (The White Devil) (Volkoff)
1930 Der grosse Sehnsucht (Szekely); Das alte Lied (Zu jedem kommt einmal die Liebe) (Waschneck); Boykott (Primanerehe) (Land); Es gibt eine Frau, die Dich niemals vergisst (Müller); Va bangue (Waschneck)
1931 Der Fall des Generalsbroschert Redl (The Case of Colonel Redl) (Anton); Elisabeth von Österreich (Elizabeth of Austria) (Trotz); Der Kongress tanzt (The Congress Dances) (Charell)
1932 The Woman from Monte Carlo (Curtiz); Die letzte Illusion (Waschneck); Das Schicksal einer schönen Frau (Conrad Wiene) (as Madame Blaubart)
1933 Johannistscht (Reiber); Die Tänzerin von Sansossuci (Barberina, die Tänzerin von Sansossuci; The King’s Dancer) (Zelnik); Der Storch hat uns getraut (Married by the Stork); Das Abenteuer der Thea Roland (Das Abenteuer einer schönen Frau) (Köstleritz)
1934 Ich heirate meine Frau (Riemann); Einer Frau, die weiss, was sie will (Janson); Der Flüchtling aus Chicago (The Fugitive from Chicago) (Meyer)
1935 Der höhere Befehl (Lamprecht); Der Vogelhändler (Emo); Lady Windermeres Fächer (Lady Windermere’s Fan) (Hilpert)
1936 Schlussakkord (Final Accord) (Sierck, i.e., Sirk); Fridericus (Meyer); August der Starke (Wegener); Das Mädchen Irene (Schünzel)
1937 Streit um den Knaben Jo (Strife over the Boy Jo) (Waschneck); Das Schönheit-spüflasterchen (The Beauty Shop) (Hans); Die Kreutzer Sonate (The Kreutzer Sonata) (Harlan)
1938 Dreiklang (Hinrich); Maja zwischen zwei Ehen (Kirchhoff); Rätsel um Beate (Meyer)
1939 Umwege zum Glück (Buch)
1940 Friedrich Schiller (Der Triumph eines Genies) (Maisch); Bismarck (Liebeneiner)
1942 Wien 1910 (Emo); Kleine Residenz (Zerlett)
1944 Musik in Salzburg (Maisch)
1948 Die Söhne des Herrn Gaspari (Meyer)
1949 Man spielt nicht mit der Liebe (Deppe)
1950 Das Geheimnis von Bergsee; Es kommt ein Tag (A Day Will Come) (Jugert); Vorn Teufel gejagt (Tourjansky)
1953 Rote Rosen, rote Lippen, roter Wein (Martin); Königliche Hoheit (Braun)
1955 Schloss Hubertus: Der Fischer von Heiligensee (The Big Barrier) (Weiss); Die Barrings (Thiele); Ich wiess, wofür ich lebe (Verhoeven); Rosen im Herbst (Effi Briest) (Jugert); Meine 16 Söhne (Dommick)
1956 Kronprinz Rudolfs letzte Liebe (Jugert); Verwegen Musikanten (Dommick)
1957 Unter Palmen am blauen Meer (Deppe); Bekennnisse des Hochstaplers Felix Krull (The Confessions of Felix Krull) (Hoffmann)
1959 Buddenbrooks (Weidenmann—for TV)
1961 Die seltsame Gönner (von Baky)
1974 Karl May (Syberberg); Der Fussgänger (The Pedestrian) (Schell)
1975 Der Richter und sein Henker (End of the Game; Deception; Murder on the Bridge; The Judge and His Hangman) (Schell)
1977 Die Standarte (Battle Flag) (Runze)
1979 Geschichten aus den Wienerwald (Tales from the Vienna Woods) (Szekely)

Publications

By DAGOVER: book—
Ich war die Dame, Rastatt, West Germany, 1980.

By DAGOVER: article—
Interview with John Kobal, in Films and Filming (London), September 1983.
On DAGOVER: book—

Romani, Cinzia, Le dive del Terzo Reich, Rome, 1981.

On DAGOVER: article—

Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), March 1980.

* * *

Lil Dagover’s dark beauty, heavily outlined by makeup, featured prominently during the so-called golden age of the German silent cinema after World War I. The daughter of a Dutchman working in Java, she was educated in Germany and was introduced to films after marrying, at age 20, the well-established actor Fritz Daghofer, a man more than twice her age whom she divorced in 1919, before starring in the celebrated German expressionist film, Robert Wiene’s The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. In this film, her jet-black hair, parted in the middle and flattened to the shape of her head, her long, white face, and her huge, expressive eyes all served to create the archetypical, victimized heroine of the expressionist melodramas of the early 1920s.

Dagover was most often employed by Fritz Lang at this stage in her career (she had appeared in his Harakiri just before Caligari): for Lang she went on to repeat the same, semi-idealized, artificial feminine image in a succession of stylized films, Die Spinnen, Der müde Tod, and Dr. Mabuse, The Gambler. After these films, among a wide range of parts in German, Swedish, and French films, she appeared in two outstanding productions of the German cinema of the mid-1920s: Murnau’s Tartuffe (with Emil Jannings) and Arthur von Gerlach’s Zur Chronik von Grieshus.

Lil Dagover survived professionally both the coming of sound and the period of the Third Reich, appearing mostly in costume, period films such as The Congress Dances, Lady Windermere’s Fan, Fredericus, Friedrich Schiller, and Bismarck and, after World War II, in The Confessions of Felix Krull and Buddenbrooks. Her career in film lasted over half a century from 1919 to 1979, during which she appeared in only one American film, The Woman from Monte Carlo.

—Roger Manvell

DAHLBECK, Eva

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>Rid i natt (Ride Tonight!) (Gustaf Molander)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Räkna de lyckliga stunderna blott (Only Count the Happy Moments) (Carlsten)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Oss tjavar emellan eller En burk ananas (Between Us Thieves) (Olaf Molander); Svarta rosor (Black Roses) (Carlsten); Den allvarsamma leken (The Serious Game) (Carlsten)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Pengar—en tragikomisk saga (Money—a Tragicomedy) (Poppé); Brita i grosshandlarhuset (Brita in the Wholesale House’s House) (Ohberg); Kärlek och störlopp (Love and Downhill Skiing) (Husberg); Mitte i natten (Meeting in the Night) (Ekman) (as Marit Rylander)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Nyckeln och ringen (Key and the Ring) (Henriksson); Två kvinnor (Two Women) (Sjöstrand); Folket i Sämtlingsdalen (People of the Sämtling Valley) (Herkison)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>Var sin väg (Each to His Own Way) (Ekman); Lars Hård (Faustman); Eva (Gustaf Molander) (as Susanne); Flickan från fjällbyn (Girl from the Mountain Village) (Herkison)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Kvinna i vitt (Woman in White) (Mattsson); Bara en mor (Only a Mother) (Sjöberg) (as Rya-Rya)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Hjorter Knekt (Jack of Hearts) (Ekman); Kastrullresan (Susanne’s Journey) (Mattsson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>Sköna Helena (Helen of Troy) (Edgren); Bärende hav (Rolling Sea) (Mattsson); Fästmö uthyres (Fiancée for Hire) (Gustaf Molander)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Sabotage (Jonsson); Ubåt 39 (U-Boat 39) (Faustman); Trots (Defiance) (Gustaf Molander); Kvinnors väntan (Secrets of Women; Waiting Women) (Bergman) (as Karin); Kinder in Gottes Hand (Lindberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>Das Pestalozzidorf (The Village) (Lindberg) (as Wanda Pivonska); Skuggan (Shadow) (Fani); Barabbas (Sjöberg); Kvinnohuset (House of Women) (Faustman); Göingehövdingen (The Chief from Göinge) (Ohberg)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>En lektion i kärlek (A Lesson in Love) (Bergman) (as Marianne Erneman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>Resa i natten (Night Journey) (Faustman); Kvinnodröms (Dreams; Journey into Autumn) (Bergman) (as Susanne); Paradiset (Paradise) (Ragneborn); Sommarnattens leende (Smiles of a Summer Night) (Bergman) (as Desiree Arnfelt)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Sista purit ut (Last Pair Out; Last Couple Out) (Sjöberg) (as Susanna Dahlin); Tarps Elin (Fani)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Möten i skymningen (Twilight Meetings) (Kjellin); Sommarnöje sökes (Summer Place Wanted) (Ekman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>Nära livet (Brink of Life; So Close to Life) (Bergman) (as Stina Andersson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Kärlekens decimaler (Decimals of Love) (Ekman); Tre önskningar (Three Wishes) (Ekman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>De sista stegen (A Matter of Morals) (Cromwell) (as Eva Walderman)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>The Counterfeit Traitor (Seaton) (as Ingrid Erickson); Biljett till paradiset (Ticket to Paradise) (Mattsson)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 1964 | För att inte tala om alla dessa kvinnor (All These Women; Now about All These Women) (Bergman) (as Adelaide);
Älskande par (Loving Couples) (Zetterling) (as Mrs. Landborg)
1965

Kattorna (The Cats) (Carlsten); Morianerna (Morianna; I, the Body) (Mattsson) (as Anna Vade) 1966

Les Créatures (Varelserna) (Varda) (as Michele Quellec)
1967

Den rode kappe (The Red Mantle; Hagbard and Signe) (Axel) (as the Queen); Människor mode og sod musik opstår i hjertet (Männskor mötas och ljus musik uppstår i hjärtat); People Meet and Sweet Music Fills the Air (Carlsten) (as Devah Sorensen)
1968

Markarells i Wadköping (Markarells of Wadköping) (Dahlin—for TV)
1970

Tintomara (Abramson)

Film as Scriptwriter:

1966

Yngsjömordet (Woman of Darkness) (Mattsson)

Publications

By DAHLBECK: books—

Dessa mina minsta [My Smallest Ones] (play), 1955.

Föräves Abisag [In Vain Abisag] (play), 1957.

Genom fönstren [Through the Windows] (poems), under pseudonym Lis Edvardson, Stockholm, 1963.

Hem till kaos [Home to Chaos] (novel), Stockholm, 1964.

Sista spegeln [The Last Mirror] (novel), Stockholm, 1965.

Hjärtslagen [The Heart Beats] (novel), Stockholm, 1974.

Saknadens doll [The Valley of Want] (novel), Stockholm, 1976.

I våra tomma rum [In Our Empty Rooms] (novel), Stockholm, 1980.

By DAHLBECK: articles—

‘Framför filmkameran [In Front of the Camera],’ in Filmbooken/The Film Book, Stockholm, 1951–57.
Interview in Cinéma (Paris), July/August 1958.

On DAHLBECK: articles—

Chaplin (Stockholm), December 1965.

Ecran (Paris), November 1979.

---

Eva Dahlbeck was a major figure in Ingmar Bergman’s films of the 1950s, from Waiting Women to Brink of Life. It is significant that her only subsequent appearance for him was in his only late comedy, Now about All These Women. It is essentially as a comic presence—aware, ironic, sophisticated—that Dahlbeck functions in Bergman’s work, and the path he chose at the end of the 1950s led to the virtual abandonment of comedy.

In Waiting Women, A Lesson in Love, and Smiles of a Summer Night Dahlbeck played opposite Gunnar Björnstrand, and they formed a team one might compare without absurdity to the great couples of Hollywood comedy, such as Cary Grant and Katharine Hepburn, playing to each other with extraordinarily refined precision and nuance. Their episode of the three-story Waiting Women takes place almost entirely in an elevator stuck between floors in which, as a couple whose marriage has become stale and routine, they work their way through a series of mutual recriminations to discover a new basis for their relationship; the entire episode is built essentially on the actors’ comic gifts for facial expression, timing, and body language.

All three Björnstrand-Dahlbeck films are concerned with the humiliation of the male, exposing the vulnerability and childishness behind a complacent exterior; in all three Dahlbeck represents poise and maturity, with strong overtones of motherliness. (No doubt part of the sense of frustration one experiences with the curious, unsatisfactory Journey into Autumn derives from the fact that, although Björnstrand and Dahlbeck are both in it, they are never together.)

Bergman’s most telling use of Dahlbeck, and arguably her finest performance, is in Brink of Life. The film draws upon the motherliness more explicitly than before: as one of three women sharing a room in a maternity ward, Dahlbeck exudes health, self-confidence, lovingness, warmth, and pride in her imminent motherhood, to a degree that, while remaining extremely sympathetic, continually threatens to become cloying. But this is central to the film’s theme: the gulf between the images of ourselves we project (and believe in) and the reality that our consciousness can never quite control and that our bodies eventually express. In labor (in the film’s most harrowing sequence) her body refuses to release the baby, finally killing it. Afterwards, her earth-mother image irreparably shattered, her entire comportment has changed: the moment when she viciously slaps the hand of the young woman (Bibi Andersson) who offers her water is among the most unforgettable in Bergman’s cinema.

—Robin Wood

---

DALIO, Marcel

Nationality: French. Born: Israel Moshe Blauschild in Paris, 17 July 1900. Education: Attended the Paris Conservatoire, 1916–18. Family: Married twice, second marriage to Madeleine Lebeau. Military Service: Served in armed forces during World War I. Career: 1920s—appeared in cabarets, revues, and some plays; stage name taken from character Prince Danilo in The Merry Widow; 1933—feature film debut in Mon Chapeau; 1930s—acted in both films and the theater; 1937—author, with Pierre Brasseur, of play Grisou, seen in Paris, and basis of film by Maurice de Canonge; 1939—at outbreak of World War II, forced to flee France; escaped to Canada and then to Hollywood; 1941—began appearing in Hollywood films; after the war returned to France; 1950s—appeared mostly in Hollywood films; 1955–56—in TV series Casablanca; 1960s–1970s—acted in both American and French films, eventually returning to Paris to live.

Died: In Paris, 20 November 1983.
Films as Actor:

1932 Les Quatres Jambes (Marc Allégret—short)

1933 Mon Chapeau (Guissart)

1934 Turandot, princesse de Chine (Lamprecht); Une Nuit à l’hôtel (MITTER); Les Affaires publiques (Bresson)

1936 Quand minuit sonnera (Jonann); L’Or (de Poligny); Un Grand Amour de Beethoven (Beethoven, le voleur de femmes); The Life and Loves of Beethoven (Gance) (as Steiner)

1937 Cargaison blanche (Le Chemin de Rio; French White Cargo); Traffic in Souls; Woman Racket (Siodmak); Naples au baiser de feu (The Kiss of Fire) (Genina) (as the photographer); Les Perles de la couronne (The Pearls of the Crown) (Guiy and Christian-Jaque); L’Homme à abattre (Mathot); Marthe Richard (Bernard); Sarati le terrible (Hugon); Miarka la fille à l’ours (Choux); Gribouille (Heart of Paris) (Marc Allégret); Troïka sur la piste blanche (Drèville); La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoir) (as Rosenthal); Pépé-le-Moko (Duvivier) (as L’Arbi); L’Affaire Lafarge (Chenal)

1938 Chéri-Bibi (Mathot); Mollenaar (Capitaine Mollenaar; Capitaine Corsaire; Hatred) (Siodmak); L’Alibi (Chenal); La Maison du Malais (Sirocco) (Chenal); Les Pirates du rail (Christian-Jaque); Entrée des artistes (The Curtain Rises) (Marc Allégret); Conflit (The Affair Lafont; Conflict) (Moguy); Les Courtes Jambes (short)

1939 La Règle du jeu (Rules of the Game) (Renoir) (as Marquis Robert de la Chesnaye); Le Bois sacré (Mathot); L’Escalve blanche (The Pasha’s Wife) (Sorkin); La Tradition de minuit (Richebé); Le Corsaire (Marc Allégret—not completed)

1940 Tempête sur Paris (Des champs)

1941 The Shanghai Gesture (Shanghai) (von Sternberg) (as croupier); Unholy Partners (LeRoy) (as Molyneaux); One Night in Lisbon (Edward H. Griffith) (as concierge)

1942 Casablanca (Curitz) (as Emil, the croupier); The Pied Piper (Pichel) (as Foquet); Flight Lieutenant (Le Pilote de la morte) (Salkow) (as Faulet); Joan of Paris (Stevenson)

1943 Tonight We Raid Calais (Brahm) (as Jacques Grandet); The Desert Song (Le Chant du départ) (Florey) (as Tarbouch); The Song of Bernadette (Henry King) (as Clet); Paris after Dark (The Night Is Ending) (Mogy) (as Michel); Flesh and Fantasy (Duvivier) (as clown); The Constant Nymph (Edmund Goulding) (as Georges)

1944 Pin-Up Girl (Humberstone) (as headwaiter); The Conspirators (Negulesco) (as croupier); Action in Arabia (Mogy) (as Chakka); To Have and Have Not (Hawks) (as Gerard); Passage to Marseille (Curitz); Wilson (Henry King) (as Georges Clemenceau)

1945 A Bell for Adano (Henry King) (as Zito)

1946 Petrus (Marc Allégret); Son Dernier Rôle (Gourguet); Le Bataillon du ciel (Billon)

1947 Temptation Harbour (Le Port de la tentation) (Comfort) (as Inspector Dupre); Les Maudits (The Damned) (Clément) (as Larga); Erreur judiciaire (de Canonge); Snowbound (McDonald) (as Stefan Valdini)

1948 Hans le Marin (Hans the Sailor; Wicked City) (Villiers) (as Aime); Sombre dimanche (Loubignac); Dédée d’Anvers (Dédée; Woman of Antwerp) (Yves Allégret) (as Marco); Les Amants de Vérone (The Lovers of Verona) (Cayatte) (as Amadeo Maglia)

1949 Maya (Bernard); Captain Blackjack (Black Jack) (Duvivier) (as Capt. Nikarescu); Portrait d’un assassin (Rolland); Mennece de mort (Leboursier); Aventure à Pigalle (Leboursier)

1950 Porte d’Orient (Deray)

1951 On the Riviera (Walter Lang) (as Philippe Lebrix); Rich, Young, and Pretty (Taurig) (as Claude Duval); Nous irons à Monte Carlo (Boyer) (as Polos)

1952 The Happy Time (Fleischer) (as Grandpere Bonnard); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (Henry King) (as Emile); The Merry Widow (Bernhardt) (as police sergeant); Lovely to Look At (LeRoy) (as Pierre)

1953 Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (Hawks) (as Judge); Flight to Tangier (Warren) (as Gogo); M. Scrupule, gangster (Deray)

1954 Sabrina (Sabrina Fair) (Wilder) (as Baron); La Patrouille des sables (Chanas); Lucky Me (Mademoiselle Porte-bonheur) (Donohue) (as Antón)

1955 Jump into Hell (L’Enfer de Dien Bien Phu) (David Butler) (as Sgt. Taite); Les Amants du Tage (Lover’s Net; Port of Shame; Lovers of Lisbon) (Verneuil) (as Porfirio); Razzia sur la chinoise (Razzia) (Decoin)

1956 Miracle in the Rain (L’Immortel Amour) (Maté) (as waiter)

1957 The Sun Also Rises (Henry King) (as Zizi); Ten Thousand Bedrooms (Thorpe) (as Vittorio Cisinì); Lafayette Escadrille (Hell Bent for Glory) (Wellman) (as drillmaster); Tip on a Dead Jockey (Time for Action) (Thorpe) (as Toto del Aro); china Gate (Fuller) (as Father Paul)

1958 Classe tous risques (The Big Risk) (Sautet) (as Gibelin); The Perfect Furlough (Strictly for Pleasure) (Edwards) (as Henri)

1959 Pillow Talk (Michael Gordon) (as Pierot); The Man Who Understood Women (Johnson) (as Le Marne)

1960 Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments) (Duvivier); Can-Can (Lang) (as headwaiter); Song without End (Charles Vidor and Cukor, uncredited) (as Chelard)

1961 Le Petit Garçon de l’ascenseur (Granier-Defrere); The Devil at Four O’Clock (LeRoy) (as Gaston); La Loi des hommes (Gérad)

1962 Jessica (La Sage-femme, le curé et le bon dieu) (Negulesco) (as Luigi Tufi); A couteaux tirés (Gérard); Cartouche (Swords of Blood) (de Broca) (as Malichot)

1963 L’Abominable Homme des douanes (Marc Allégret); Donovan’s Reef (Ford) (as Father Cluzeot); The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston) (as Anton Karoudjian)

1964 Wild and Wonderful (Monsieure Cognac) (Anderson) (as Dr. Reynard); Le Monocle rit Jaune (Lautner) (as drillmaster); Un Monsieure de compagnie (Male Companion) (de Broca) (as Krieg von Spiel)

1965 Made in Paris (Sagal) (as Georges); Lady L (Ustinov) (as Sapper)

1966 Tendre voyou (Tender Scoundrel) (Jean Becker) (as Veronique’s father); Le 17e ciel (Bernard); How to Steal a Million (Wylers) (as Sensor Paravideo)

1967 La 25e Heure (The 25th Hour; La Vingt-cinquième Heure) (Verneuil) (as Strel); “‘Aujourd’hui” (“Paris Today”) ep. of Le Plus Vieux Métier du monde (The Oldest Profession) (Autant-Lara) (as Older Man)
Dalio had earned his air of casual superiority. For Renoir, first in La Grande Illusion as the wealthy and likable Jewish prisoner-of-war on whose largesse his companions depend for the comforts of good food and wine, then as the equally rich and cultivated host of the house party in La Règle du jeu, the diminutive Dalio embodied noblesse oblige. In the Renoir films and also in Duvivier’s Pépé-le-Moko, he trod with wit, taste, and delicacy the narrow line between character and caricature. His nobleman in La Règle du jeu is his masterpiece. A childlike delight in his collection of music machines does not make his pain at the infidelity of his wife or the party’s dislocation by her tormented lover any less poignant.

Despite this success in a leading role, Dalio was destined to remain mainly a character actor. World War II broke out shortly after the completion of La Règle du jeu, and Dalio’s face was used by Nazi propagandists on posters displayed in Paris captioned “the typical Jew.” Forced to flee the country, Dalio eventually arrived in Hollywood, which at first could find nothing for him to do. Dorothy Parker is said to have connived at his salvation by pointing him out at a party as “the great French actor Dalio.” Unfortunately, the parts that came his way those of waiters and domestics, leavened with the occasional curé or military officer, the sort of roles handed out to most accenté émigrés.

With better material he was commensurately more memorable. As the croupier in Casablanca, handing his winnings to a Claude Rains who has just closed down Rick’s Café Américain because gambling is taking place there, he made a good enough impression to play the Rains role in a later television series. His one scene in Sabrina, as the baron returning to cooking school to take a refresher course in soufflés, is a delight. In general, however, his Hollywood career is a monument to the unimaginativeness of casting directors.

—John Baxter

DAMON, Matt

Nationality: American. Born: Cambridge, Massachusetts, 8 October 1970. Education: Studied English at Harvard University for three years. Awards: Academy Award for Best Screenplay Written Directly for the Screen, National Board of Review Award for Special Achievement in Filmmaking, Broadcast Film Critics Association Award for Best Original Screenplay and Breakout Artist, Golden Globe Award for Best Screenplay—Motion Picture, Silver Bear Award for Outstanding Single Achievement (for acting and screenwriting), Berlin International Film Festival, and Golden Satellite Award for Best Motion Picture Screenplay—Original, all for Good Will Hunting, 1997; ShoWest Award for Male Star of Tomorrow, 1998. Agent: PMK, 955 S. Carillo Dr., Suite 200, Los Angeles, CA 90048, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1988 The Good Mother (Nimoy) (uncredited); Mystic Pizza (Petrice) (as Steamer)
1990 Rising Son (Coles—for TV) (as Charlie Robinson)
1992 School Ties (Mandel) (as Charlie Dillon)
1993 Geronimo: An American Legend (Hill) (as Lieutenant Britton Davis)
Matt Damon in Rounders

1995  The Good Old Boys (Tommy Lee Jones—for TV) (as Cotton Calloway)
1996  Courage Under Fire (Zwick) (as Specialist Ilario); Glory Daze (Wilkes) (as Edgar Pudwhacker)
1997  Good Will Hunting (Van Sant) (as Specialist Ilario); Chasing Amy (Kevin Smith) (as Exec #2); The Rainmaker (Coppola) (as Rudy Baylor)
1998  Rounders (Dahl) (as Mike McDermott); Saving Private Ryan (Spielberg) (as Private James Francis Ryan)
1999  The Talented Mr. Ripley (Minghella) (as Tom Ripley); Dogma (Kevin Smith) (as Loki/Larry)
2000  The Legend of Bagger Vance (Redford) (as Rannulph Junuh); Titan A.E. (Titan: After Earth) (Bluth, Goldman, Vitello) (as Cale [voice]); All the Pretty Horses (Thornton) (as John Grady Cole)

Other Films:

2000  A People’s History of the United States (doc—for TV)

Publications

On DAMON: book—

On DAMON: articles—

* * *

On the third of April 1998, 27-year-old Matt Damon and his childhood friend, 25-year-old Ben Affleck, won the Academy Award for Best Original Screenplay for Good Will Hunting. Amid much levity about the youth of the recipients, two stars were born that night. In their personal lives and their careers, Damon and Affleck have often seemed inseparable. In addition to winning the Oscar for their screenplay, the pair acted together in Good Will Hunting, Dogma, and School Ties. But following the 1998 Oscars, it was the affable, sandy-haired Damon who emerged as Hollywood’s millennial Golden Boy, on the heels of a Best Actor nomination for his portrayal of a troubled mathematical genius in the film that he also co-wrote.

Much has been made of Damon’s unusual upbringing in a Cambridge, Massachusetts, commune and his decision to drop out of Harvard University one semester shy of graduation to pursue a career as an actor. In fact, the determined Damon knew he wanted to act from the time he was ten years old, and while still in high school, he landed a bit part in 1988’s Mystic Pizza. But it was a minor role in the 1992 prep school drama, School Ties—the film that launched the careers of Brendan Fraser and Chris O’Donnell—that allowed Damon to believe he had what it took to make it. After dropping out of Harvard and moving to Hollywood, however, Damon’s all-American teen idol good looks brought him little more than bit parts in such little-seen movies as Geronimo: An American Legend. Four years passed before he landed his breakthrough role in the underrated 1996 Gulf War film, Courage Under Fire. Determined to make an impression, Damon lost 40 pounds to play the part of Specialist Ilario, a heroine-addicted Gulf War veteran. Damon’s evocative portrayal of a junkie haunted by his traumatic experience in combat stood out in a film featuring such star players as Meg Ryan, Denzel Washington, and Lou Diamond Phillips. It even attracted the attention of Francis Ford Coppola. The legendary director cast Damon as the lead in John Grisham’s courtroom drama, The Rainmaker. Damon’s solid performance as a crusading, young Southern lawyer caught the attention of Steven Spielberg, who tapped the actor for the title role in Saving Private Ryan. In Spielberg’s World War II epic, Damon’s disarming and understated depiction of a soldier who has lost three of his brothers in combat was the lynchpin that held the Oscar-winning film together. It put Damon on the map. Suddenly studios were clamoring for more of the 26-year-old all-American boy. The savvy Damon used this opportunity to revive interest in a screenplay that he and Affleck had written, and Miramax offered the pair a cool million for Good Will Hunting. Within months, Gus van Sant had signed on to direct.

Good Will Hunting transformed Damon from just another up-and-coming young actor into Hollywood wunderkind. As the South Boston genius delinquent, Damon managed to craft a sympathetic portrayal that ran the gamut of emotions from rough-edge cynicism to youthful sex appeal to heartbreaking optimism. Buoyed by a strong supporting cast that included Robin Williams, Minnie Driver, and Affleck, the independent film earned nine Oscar nominations, including Best Actor, Actress, and Supporting Actor, Best Original Screenplay, and Best Picture.

With a writing Oscar and an acting nomination under his belt, Damon was one of Hollywood’s hottest young male stars with first choice on all of the best projects. Damon began carefully constructing a career that would earn the respect of the acting community. He starred as a reformed gambler and law student in Rounders, with some of acting’s hot young turks, including Edward Norton, John Turturro, and John Malkovich. Next came The Talented Mr. Ripley, a project that Damon had signed on to do prior to Good Will Hunting. This time the young actor chose to play a difficult role, and a potentially unlikable one. As the talented but troubled Tom Ripley, a young man who so desperately wants to be accepted and loved by the beautiful people that he becomes a killer, Damon managed to imbue his character with an unlikely pathos, allowing the audience to empathize with him instead of revile him. His ability to completely throw himself into a role surfaced once again, as he turned his affable, all-American good looks into a detriment instead of an asset. Damon’s Ripley was good-looking but never handsome, personable but never charming.

Damon’s next roles, a cowboy in All the Pretty Horses and war hero turned golfer in The Legend of Bagger Vance, are both star turns in epic films with big name directors—Billy Bob Thornton and Robert Redford. For all of his success, Damon is still unsure of himself as an actor. He knows he has been lucky, and he certainly has been savvy. But intelligence is sometimes the bailiwick of the actor, and Damon will continue to try to prove to himself and to others that he is, indeed, a good actor.

—Victoria Price

DANDRIDGE, Dorothy

Films as Actress:

1936 The Big Broadcast of 1936 (Taurog) (as a member of the Dandridge Sisters)

1937 A Day at the Races (Wood) (uncredited, she appears in a musical number); It Can’t Last Forever (MacFadden) (as a member of the Dandridge Sisters)
Dorothy Dandridge with Sammy Davis Jr. in Porgy and Bess

1939 Going Places (Enright) (as a member of the Dandridge Sisters)
1940 Irene (Wilcox) (uncredited, as a member of the Dandridge Sisters); Four Shall Die (Popkin) (as Helen Fielding)
1941 Bahama Passage (Griffin) (as Thalia); Lady from Louisiana (Vorhaus) (as Felice); Sundown (Hathaway) (as Kipsang’s bride); Sun Valley Serenade (Humberstone) (as Specialty)
1942 Drums of the Congo (Caban) (as Malimi); Lucky Jordan (Tuttle) (uncredited, as maid)
1943 Hit Parade of 1943 (Rogell) (as herself)
1944 Atlantic City (McCary) (as herself); Since You Went Away (Cromwell) (as Officer’s wife)
1945 Pillow to Post (Sherman) (as herself)
1947 Ebony Parade (as herself)
1951 The Harlem Globetrotters (Brown) (as Ann Carpenter); Tarzan’s Peril (also known as Tarzan and the Jungle Queen) (Haskin) (as Melmendi, Queen of the Ashuba)
1953 Bright Road (Mayer) (as Jane Richards); Remains to be Seen (Weis) (as herself)
1954 Carmen Jones (Preminger) (title role)
1956 The Happy Road (Kelly)
1957 Island in the Sun (Rosen) (as Margot Seaton)
1958 The Decks Ran Red (Stone) (as Mahia)
1959 Porgy and Bess (Preminger) (as Bess); Tamango (Berry) (as Aiche)
1960 Moment of Danger (also known as Malaga) (Benedick) (as Gianna)
1962 Cain’s Hundred (TV series); The Murder Men (Peyser)

Publications

By DANDRIDGE: books—

On DANDRIDGE: books—

On DANDRIDGE: articles—

* * *

Considered one of Hollywood’s greatest talents, Dorothy Dandridge was also one of Tinsel-town’s greatest tragedies. Racism impeded the career of this African-American performer, who, nonetheless, set several precedents in the Hollywood motion picture industry. A child actress/performer who went on to star in such films as Carmen Jones and Island in the Sun, and the television series Beulah and Father of the Bride, Dandridge was the first African-American woman to be nominated in the Best Actress category for the Academy Awards and one of the first African-American women to be featured in film about interracial romance.

Dandridge was born on 9 November 1922 to Cyril and Ruby Dandridge. As a child, she performed with her older sister and only sibling, Vivian. Billed as the Wonder Kids, the sisters toured Baptist churches around the country with a two-act show scripted by their mother. In 1934, after moving to Chicago and subsequently Los Angeles, the Wonder Kids changed their stage name to The Dandridge Sisters and added the talents of thirteen-year-old Etta Jones. As a trio, they triumphed in an amateur competition on radio station KNX Los Angeles, defeating twenty-five white contestants.

Two years later they were invited to perform at New York’s famed Cotton Club, a nightclub that featured African-American talent and catered to white audiences. The act was so successful that they were given a spot in the regular program, performing on the same bill as legendary jazz artists Cab Calloway and W. C. Handy. Another prominent act found regularly in the line-up was the dynamic dance team of Harold and Fayard Nicholas, the Nicholas Brothers.

In 1936 The Dandridge Sisters debuted in Hollywood, performing a musical number with theater and film star Bill Robinson in Paramount Picture’s The Big Broadcast of 1936. They followed it up by appearing in the Marx Brothers classic, A Day at the Races, performing with Ivie Anderson and the Crinoline Choir singing “All God’s Chillun Got Rhythm.” After several one-night gigs and recording dates with Jimmie Lunceford and his Orchestra, the trio dissolved. In 1941 and 1942, Dandridge performed solo in several musical film shorts: Yes Indeed, Sing for My Supper, Jungle Jig, Easy Street, Cow Cow Boogie, and Paper Doll. She married dancer Harold Nicholas in 1942. The newlyweds lived in Los Angeles so that they could both pursue careers in motion pictures. Shortly after marrying, Dandridge became pregnant with her daughter Harolyn, who was born in 1943. Several years later, after institutionalizing her daughter, left severely retarded from the misuse of forceps during delivery, Dandridge divorced her adulterous husband and returned to the nightclub circuit, traveling the globe. In 1951 she appeared with the Desi Arnaz Band at the Macombo and, in that same year, became the first African American to perform in the Empire Room of New York’s Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Dandridge continued to work in Hollywood films, and in 1954 obtained the role that would define her career, the lead in Otto Preminger’s all-black musical extravaganza Carmen Jones. The film, which featured Harry Belafonte, as well as Pearl Baily and Diahann Carroll in supporting roles, was a critical success, winning a Golden Globe Award for Best Musical Motion Picture of 1954, an Audience Award from the Berlin Film Festival in 1955, and an Oscar nomination for Best Actress for Dandridge, the first ever received by an African-American woman.

Time magazine thought the success of the film would create more opportunities for African Americans in the film industry, but that was not the case. Rather than being offered a wide variety of roles, Dandridge was typecast into the stereotypical roles commonly given to African-American actresses. As Dandridge explained in an interview in Ebony, “I consider myself an actress, and I have always been a confident one. I interpret a role to the best of my ability, and more often than not, and more often than I’d like, the role calls for a creature of abandon whose desires are stronger than their sense of morality.” Her roles were so sexualized that she was cast mainly as the object of male desire, most often that of white males. In 1957, she was paired with John Justin in the highly controversial film Island in the Sun, which offered not only a romance between a white man and African-American woman, but also the reverse, with a couple played by Harry Belafonte and Joan Fontaine. The trend of interracial romance continued with Dandridge in such features as The Decks Ran Red (1958) and Tamango (1959).

Frustrated by her inability to find challenging roles in feature films, Dandridge returned to live performance. During a tour, she met in Las Vegas restauranteur Jack Dennison, whom she married in 1959. Three years later Dandridge divorced him and found herself bankrupt after a series of bad investments. She tried to resurrect her failing career, but found little opportunity, making only a few television appearances. She died in her West Hollywood apartment on 8 September 1965.

In 1999, the biopic Introducing Dorothy Dandridge, produced by and starring Halle Berry, was broadcast on the cable network Home Box Office (HBO). The made-for-television movie, directed by Martha Coolidge, received popular and critical acclaim—winning the Screen Actor’s Guild and Golden Globe Awards for Berry, the American Society of Cinematographer Award for Outstanding Cinematography, and Coolidge’s nomination for a Best Directing Award from the Directors Guild of America.

—Frances Gateward

DARRIEUX, Danielle

Films as Actress:

1931 Le Bal (Thiele)
1932 Coquercigrole (Berthomieu); Panurge (Bernheim); Le Coffret de laque (Kemm)
1933 Château de rêve (Bolvary and Clouzot)
1934 Mauvaise graine (Bad Blood) (Wilder and Esway) (as Jeanette); Volga en flammes (Tourjansky); La Crise est finie (Siodmak); Dédée (Guissart); L’Or dans la rue (Bernhardt); Mon Coeur t’appelle (Gallone and Veber)
1935 Le Contrôleur des wagon-lits (Eichberg); Quelle drôle de gosse! (Joannon); J’aime toutes les femmes (Lamac); Le Domino vert (Decoin and Selpin); Mademoiselle Mozart (Noé)
1936 Mayerling (Litvak) (as Marie Vetsera); Tarass Boulba (Granowski) (as Marina); Port-Arthur (Farkas); Club de femmes (Deval); Un Mauvais Garçon (Boyer)
1937 Mademoiselle ma mère (Decoin); Abus de confiance (Abused Confidence) (Decoin) (as Lydia)
1938 Katia (Maurice Tourneur); Retour à l’aube (Decoin); The Rage of Paris (Koster) (as Nicole de Cortillon); Avocate D’amour (Counsel for Romance) (Floquin) (as Jacqueline Serval)
1939 Battements de coeur (Decoin)
1941 Premier rendez-vous (Her First Affair) (Decoin) (as Micheline Chevassu); Caprices (Joannon)
1942 La Fausse Maîtresse (Cayatte)
1945 Adieu Chérie (Bernard)
1946 Au petit bonheur (L’Herbier)
1947 Bethsabée (Moguy); Ray Blas (Billon) (as Queen)
1948 Jean de la lune (Achard)
1949 Occupe-toi d’Amélie (Autant-Lara) (as Amélie d’Avranches)
1950 La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Max Ophüls) (as Emma Breitkopf); Romanzo d’amore (Toselli) (Coletti)
1951 Rich, Young, and Pretty (Taurog) (as Marie Deverson); La Maison Bonnadiou (Rim); “La Maison Tellier” (‘‘The House of Madame Tellier’’) ep. of Le Plaisir (House of Pleasure) (Max Ophüls) (as Rosia); La Vérité sur Bébé Donge (Decoin)
1952 Five Fingers (Operation Cicero) (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Anna); Adorables créatures (Adorable Creatures) (Christian-Jaque) (as Christians)
1953
Le Bon Dieu sans confession (Autant-Lara);
Madame de . . . (The Earrings of Madame De . . .; The Diamond Earrings)
(Max Ophüls) (as Countess Louise de);
Châteaux en Espagne
(Wheeler)

1954
Escalier de service (Rim);
Napoléon (Guity) (as Eleonore Denuelle);
Bonnes à tuer (Decoin);
Le Rouge et le noir (The Red and the Black) (Autant-Lara) (as Mme. Louise de Rénal)

1955
L’Affaire des poisons? (One Step to Eternity) (Decoin) (as Mme. de Montespan);
L’Aman de Lady Chatterley (Lady Chatterley’s Lover) (Marc Allégret) (as Constance Chatterley)

1956
Si Paris nous était conté (If Paris Were Told to Us) (Guity) (as Agnes Sorel);
Alexander the Great (Rosen) (as Olympias);
Typhon sur Nagasaki (Typhoon over Nagasaki) (Ciampi);
Le Salaire du péché (de la Patellièce)

1957
Pot-Bouille (The House of Lovers) (Duvivier)

1958
Le Septième Ciel (Bernard);
Le Désordre et la nuit (Night Affair) (Grangier) (as Therese Marken);
La Vie à deux (Life as a Couple) (Dulhour);
Un Drôle de dimanche (Marc Allégret) (as Catherine)

1959
Marie-Octobre (Duvivier);
Les Yeux de l’amour (de la Patellièce)

1960
Meurtre en 45 tours (Death at 45 RPM; Murder at 45 RPM) (Périer) (as Eve Faugeres);
L’Homme à femmes (Cornu)

1961
The Greengate Summer (Loss of Innocence) (Lewis Gilbert) (as Mme. Zisi);
Les Lions sont lâchés (Verneuil);
Les Bras de la nuit (Guymont);
Vive Henri IV, Vive l’Amour
(Autant-Lara)

1962
‘L’Homme de l’avenue’ (“‘The Man on the Avenue’”)
(ep. of Le Crime ne paie pas (Crime Does Not Pay; The Gentle Art of Murder) (Oury)); ‘L’Inceste’ ep. of
Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments)
(Duvivier) (as Clarisse Ardant);
Pourquoi Paris? (de la Patellièce)

1963
Landru (Bluebeard) (Chabrol) (as Berthe Heon);
Du grabuge chez les veuves (Poiteau);
Méfiez-vous, mesdames!
(Hunebelle)

1964
Patate (Friend of the Family) (Thomas) (as Edith Rollo)

1965
Le Coup de grâce (Cayrol and Durand);
L’Or du Duc (Baratier);
Le Dimanche de la vie
(Chabrol)

1966
Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (Demy) (as Yvonne);
L’Homme à la Buick (Grangier)

1968
Les Oiseaux vont mourir au Pérou (Birds Come to Die in Peru; Birds Do In) (Gary) (as Fernande);
Vingt-quatre heures de la vie d’une femme (24 Hours in a Woman’s Life)
(Delouche) (as Alice)

1969
La Maison de campagne (Girault)

1972
No encontre rosas para mi madre (Roses rouges et piments verts) (Belota)

1975
Divine (Delouche)

1976
L’Année sainte (Girault) (as Christina)

1978
Le Cavaleur (Practice Makes Perfect; The Skirt Chaser) (de Broca) (as Suzanne Taylor)

1980
Mort en sautoir (Goutas)

1982
Une Chambre en ville (A Room in Town) (Demy) (as Baronesse de Neuville)

1983
En Haut des marches (Vecchichi) (as Françoise Canavaggia);
Dame aux milles et une vies (Gautas)

1984
L’Age vermeil (Kahane—for TV);
Marie, Marie (Chatel—for TV)

1986
Le Lieu du crime (The Scene of the Crime) (Téchiné) (as Grandmother);
Corps et biens (Jacquot) (as Mme. Krantz)

1987
Lawyers (de la Patellièce);
Quelques jours avec moi (A Few Days with Me) (Sautet) (as Mme. Pasquier)

1988
La Tête dans les nuages (Vecchiali)

1989
Bille en tête (Headstrong) (Cotti) (as L’Arquebuse)

1991
Le Jour des Rois (as Armande)

1996
Les Mille et une recettes du cuisinier amoureux (Djordjadze)

Publications

By DARRIEUX: articles—

Interview in Ciné Revue (Paris), 5 February 1981.
Interview with N. Angel, in Cinémonographe (Paris), October 1983.

On DARRIEUX: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg, Belgium), Spring 1993.

* * *

In a career extending over seven decades and more than 100 films Danielle Darrieux has deployed her considerable talents in an impressive diversity of roles. Though most readily associated with sophisticated comedy or romantic drama, she has also brought depth to melodrama and graced musicals with her fine voice.

After her debut at the age of 14 in Le Bal as a willful adolescent, she was frequently cast during the 1930s as the fractional, wayward teenager who eventually succeeds despite misfortune or social handicap. Her burgeoning vocal talents were heard in musicals such as La Crise est finie, and her innate vitality and sense of timing enlivened lighthearted comedies such as Un Mauvais Garçon, while a controlled passivity in her playing conveyed a tragic quality to period melodramas such as Port-Arthur. International acclaim came with Mayerling in which, as the beautiful and tragic Marie Vetsera, she achieved a deeply moving and seemingly intuitive characterization.

Stardom brought her contracts with many filmmakers in several countries, but Darrieux’s major performances are associated with three directors in particular: Henri Decoin, Claude Autant-Lara, and Max Ophüls. During the 1930s Decoin, then her husband, developed her talents in a variety of films that reflected the different styles of the period. Following her tragic debut in Le Domino vert as the heroine under emotional and financial stress, she appeared in Mademoiselle ma mère, a film of dark poetic realism, in which as a headstrong daughter rejecting parental advice she marries a middle-aged man and then has an affair with his son. The mood is brighter in Abus de confiance where she portrays an orphan who cheerfully dupes her benefactor. In Battements de cœur she confirmed her range by playing an unruly delinquent who is transformed into a sophisticated woman of the world.

Her performances for Decoin, impressive in their variety alone, were never less than convincing, but it was with Autant-Lara in the late 1940s and early 1950s that Darrieux distinguished her film career as a brilliant romantic actress. In Occupé-toi d’Amélie, an unashamedly theatrical Feydeau farce, she played with sparkling vivacity and considerable elegance the beautifully enticing but outrageously self-centered Amélie d’Aranvanches who delights in teasing her many suitors. In complete contrast was her later role as Madame de Rénal in Le Rouge et le noir. Now as a bored provincial falling selflessly in love with a proud and sincere young man, she gave a performance of great tenderness, maturity, and restraint, conveying with tremulous delicacy the powerful but guilty emotion she feels. In films directed by Max Ophüls her interpretation of romantic roles was further extended. In La Ronde her performance as the understanding married woman in bed with her lover beset by temporary impotence is exquisitely subtle in tone and timing. As Rosa, the prostitute of Le Plaisir, she again excelled in a more robust and wickedly ironic part, but perhaps her finest acting came in Madame de . . ., in which, as the elegant aristocrat, she suffers deeply and is ultimately destroyed when a casual affair develops into an impossible passion. To this tragic role she lent a fragile dignity and a sense of resignation which crystallized in unsurpassed romantic acting.

Films made outside France also mark Darrieux’s career, notably those produced in America. Before the war she appeared in a Hollywood star vehicle, The Rage of Paris, as a vulnerable French girl alone in New York seeking a husband. In the 1950s she returned to Resistance dramas such as Plaisir, a film of dark poetic realism, in which as a headstrong daughter rejecting parental advice she marries a middle-aged man and then has an affair with his son. The mood is brighter in Abus de confiance where she portrays an orphan who cheerfully dupes her benefactor. In Battements de cœur she confirmed her range by playing an unruly delinquent who is transformed into a sophisticated woman of the world.

Did not diminish: she played comic parts opposite Bourvil in Les Oiseaux vont mourir au Pérou, and in a delightful once—R. F. Cousins

—R. F. Cousins

DAVIES, Marion

Nationality: American. Born: Marion Cecilia Douras in Brooklyn, New York, 3 January 1897. Education: Convent of the Sacred Heart, Hastings, N.Y., 1910–16; Theodore Kosloff’s Ballet School, Manhattan; Wayburn School; Sargent School; Empire School of Acting. Family: Married Horace Brown, 1951. Career: 1913—began appearing in revues and musicals as dancer; 1914—received billing as “Marion Davis” in Jerome Kern musical Nobody Home; 1916—featured role in the Ziegfeld Follies of 1916; 1917—film debut; contract with William Randolph Hearst; 1918—began starring in films of Hearst-owned Cosmopolitan Pictures; Hearst papers began intensive promotion of Davies films; 1920—last stage appearance; 1922—first film hit, When Knighthood Was in Flower; 1924—Cosmopolitan joined Metro-Goldwyn merger; 1929—first sound picture, The Broadway Melody; 1929–33—president of Motion Picture Relief Fund; 1934—Cosmopolitan severed connection with MGM in favor of Warners; 1937—retired from film; 1951—Hearst died. Died: Of cancer, 23 September 1961.

Films as Actress:

1917 • Runaway Romany (Lederer) (as Romany, + sc); Cecilia of the Pink Roses (Steger and King) (as Cecilia); The Burden of Proof (Steger) (as Elaine Brooks)
1919 • The Belle of New York (Steger) (as Violet Gray); Getting Mary Married (Dwan) (as Mary); The Dark Star (Dwan) (as Rue Carew); The Cinema Murder (Baker) (as Elizabeth Dalston)
1920 • April Folly (Leonard) (as April Poole); The Restless Sex (Leonard and D’Usseau) (as Stephanie Cleland)
1921 • Buried Treasure (Baker); Enchantment (Vignola)
1922 • Beauty’s Worth (Vignola) (as Prudence Cole); When Knighthood Was in Flower (Vignola) (as Mary Tudor); The Bride’s Play (Terwilliger); The Young Diana (Capellani and Vignola); Adam and Eva (Vignola)
1923 • Little Old New York (Olcott) (as Patricia O’Day)
1924 • Yolanda (Vignola) (as Princess Mary of Burgundy/Yolanda); Janice Meredith (The Beautiful Rebel) (Hopper) (title role)
1925 • Lights of Old Broadway (Merry Wives of Gotham) (Bell) (as Fely/Anne); Zander the Great (Hill) (as Mamie Smith)
1926 • Beverly of Graustark (Franklin) (as Beverly Calhoun)
1927 • The Red Mill (Goodrich, i.e. Roscoe Arbuckle) (as Tina); Tillie the Toiler (Henley) (as Tillie Jones); The Fair Co-ed (The Varsity Girl) (Wood) (as Marion); Quality Street (Franklin) (as Phoebe Throssel)
1928 • The Patsy (The Politic Flapper) (Vidor) (as Patricia Harrington); Her Cardboard Lover (Leonard) (as Sally); Show People (Vidor) (as Peggy Pepper)
1929 • The Hollywood Revue of 1929 (Reisner); Marianne (Leonard) (title role); The Five O’Clock Girl (Green— unreleased)
1930 • Not So Dumb (Dulcy) (Vidor) (as Dulcy); The Floradora Girl (The Gay Nineties) (Beaumont) (as Daisy)
1931 • The Bachelor Father (Leonard) (as Tony); It’s a Wise Child (Leonard) (as Joyce); Five and Ten (Daughter of Luxury) (Leonard) (as Jennifer Rarick); The Christmas Party (Jackie Cooper’s Christmas) (Reisner—short) (as guest)
Marion Davies with William Haines in Show People

1932 Polly of the Circus (Santell) (as Polly); Blondie of the Follies (Goulding) (as Blondie McClune)

1933 Peg o’ My Heart (Leonard) (as Peg); Going Hollywood (Walsh) (as Sylvia Bruce)

1934 Operator Thirteen (Spy Thirteen) (Boleslawsky) (as Gale Loveless)

1935 Page Miss Glory (LeRoy) (as Loretta)

1936 Hearts Divided (Borzage) (as Betsy Patterson); Cain and Mabel (Bacon) (as Mabel O’Dare); Pirate Party on Catalina Isle (Lewyn—short)

1937 Ever since Eve (Bacon) (as Marge Winton)

Publications

By DAVIES: book—

By DAVIES: article—

On DAVIES: books—

On DAVIES: articles—

Montayne, Lilian, “Marion of the Golden Hair,” Motion Picture Classic (Brooklyn), September 1919.

Board, Robert, “Meeting Marion Davies,” in Classic Images (Muscatine), May 1995.

* * *

Citizen Kane may have been wickedly accurate in its lampooning of newspaper tycoon William Randolph Hearst, but Dorothy Comingore’s portrayal of Susan Alexander Kane has tended to cast an unfortunate pall on posterity’s view of Marion Davies, Hearst’s mistress. Film scholarship is rife with those who—without benefit of actually having seen any of Davies’s films—are content to dismiss her as a vapid, talent-free beauty who lucked into an association with the biggest Stage-Door Johnny of them all.

In fact, Davies has been unfairly maligned. She was a delightful talent with a fine comedic sense, a flair for mimicry, and a natural, agreeable personality. Her liaison with Hearst may have paid the rent at San Simeon (where she reigned as the ultimate Hollywood hostess) but his overbearing attentions effectively stifled the development of her true gifts. Hearst’s relentless publicity machine made Davies a star but it lost her the respect of the industry and the patience of the public who felt that a truly talented performer would have no need of such a constant media blitz.

If not for the Hearst connection, Davies would almost certainly be regarded more highly now. Few of her films were very bad and there are a surprising number of real gems in her filmography. She shines in comedies such as King Vidor’s The Patsy and Show People (of the former, Vidor wrote that it “even got some good reviews outside of the Hearst Press”). But Hearst’s ideas of her capabilities seldom matched with reality; he saw her as another Lillian Gish: noble, delicate, virginal. Costume spectacles such as Janice Meredith and When Knighthood Was in Flower feature the Davies that Hearst sought to showcase: prim, doll-like, a little dull. Unpretentious comedies such as Tillie the Toiler, Her Cardboard Lover, and Not So Dumb display the bounce and wit that were among Davies’s most obvious attractions.

Her career started to wind down by the time sound pictures came along, but she managed to put her best foot forward in Blondie of the Follies, Going Hollywood, and Page Miss Glory. After the dopey and plodding Ever since Eve, Davies retired from the screen. Her professional reputation has since fallen into neglect. Her career is due for reexamination, though; it remains a classic case of too-often misdirected talent. Hearst was an empire builder. He wanted Marion Davies to be a magnificent cathedral when all she was was a simple country church.

—Frank Thompson

DAVIS, Bette

Bette Davis in Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? quality films and suspended without pay from Warners; attempt to act in Alexander Korda film thwarted by Warners; sued Warners over situation but lost long court battle; 1941—president of The Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences; co-founder and president of Hollywood Canteen; 1946—formed production company B.D., Inc.; 1949—terminated contract with Warners with Jack Warner’s approval after series of unsuccessful films; 1952—returned to stage in musical revue Two’s Company; 1956—television debut; early 1960s—change in direction of career occurs after appearances in low-budget horror films; 1978—in TV mini-series The Dark Secret of Harvest Home, and, briefly, in the TV series Hotel, 1983. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award, for Dangerous, 1935; Best Actress, Venice Festival, for Marked Woman and Kid Galahad, 1937; Best Actress Academy Award, for Jezebel, 1938; Best Actress, New York Film Critics, and Best Actress, Cannes Festival, for All about Eve, 1951; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1977. Died: In Neuilly sur Seine, France, 6 October 1989.

Films as Actress:

1931 Bad Sister (Henley) (as Laura Madison); Seed (Stahl) (as Margaret Carter); Waterloo Bridge (Whale) (as Janet)
1932 Way Back Home (Old Greaterheath) (Seiter) (as Mary Lucy); The Menace (Neill) (as Peggy); Hell’s House (Higgin) (as Peggy Gardner); The Man Who Played God (Adolfi) (as Grace Blair); So Big (Wellman) (as Dallas O’Mara); The Rich Are Always with Us (Alfred E. Green) (as Malbro); The Dark Horse (Alfred E. Green) (as Kay Russell); The Cabin in the Cotton (Curtiz) (as Madge Norwood); Three on a Match (LeRoy) (as Ruth Westcott)
1933 20,000 Years in Sing Sing (Curtiz) (as Fay); Parachute Jumper (Alfred E. Green) (as Alabama); The Working Man (Adolfi) (as Jenny Hartland); Ex-Lady (Florey) (as Helen Bauer); Bureau of Missing Persons (Del Ruth) (as Norma Phillips)
1934 Fashions of 1934 (Dieterle) (as Lynn Mason); The Big Shakedown (Dillon) (as Norma Frank); Jimmy the Gent (Curtiz) (as Joan Martin); Fog over Frisco (Dieterle) (as Arlene Bradford); Of Human Bondage (Cromwell) (as Mildred Rogers); Housewife (Alfred E. Green) (as Patricia Barclay/Ruth Smith)
1935 Bordertown (Mayo) (as Marie Roark); The Girl from Tenth Avenue (Alfred E. Green) (as Miriam Brady); Front Page Woman (Curtiz) (as Ellen Garfield); Special Agent (Keighley) (as Julie Carston)
1936 Dangerous (Alfred E. Green) (as Joyce Heath); The Petrified Forest (Mayo) (as Gabrielle Maple); The Golden Arrow (Alfred E. Green) (as Daisy Appleby); Saturn Met a Lady (Dieterle) (as Valerie Purvis)
1937 Marked Woman (Lloyd Bacon) (as Mary Dwight/Strauber); Kid Galahad (Curtiz) (as Louise “Fluff” Phillips); That Certain Woman (Goulding) (as Mary Donnell); It’s Love I’m After (Mayo) (as Joyce Arden)
1938 Jezebel (Wyler) (as Julie Marsden); The Sisters (Litvak) (as Louise Elliot)
1939 Dark Victory (Goulding) (as Judith Traheme); Juarez (Dieterle) (as Empress Carlotta von Habsburg); The Old Maid (Goulding) (as Charlotte Lovell); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (as Queen Elizabeth)

1940 All This and Heaven Too (Litvak) (as Henriette Deluzy Desportes); The Letter (Wyler) (as Leslie Crobbie)
1941 The Great Lie (Goulding) (as Maggie Patterson); The Bride Came C.O.D. (Keighley) (as Joan Winfield); Shining Victory (Rapper) (as nurse); The Little Foxes (Wyler) (as Regina Hubbard Giddens)
1942 In This Our Life (Huston) (as Stanley Timberlake); Now, Voyager (Rapper) (as Charlotte Vale); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley) (as Maggie Cutler)
1943 Watch on the Rhine (Shumlin) (as Sara Muller); Thank Your Lucky Stars (David Butler) (as herself); Old Acquaintance (Vincent Sherman) (as Kitty Marlowe); Stars on Horseback (Swartz—doc, short); A Present with a Future (Swartz—short)
1944 Mr. Skeffington (Vincent Sherman) (as Fanny Tellis Skeffington); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as herself)
1945 The Corn Is Green (Rapper) (as Miss Lilly Moffat); Second Victory Loan Campaign Fund (Vincent Sherman—short)
1946 A Stolen Life (Bernhardt) (as Kate Bosworth/Pat Bosworth, + pr); Deception (Rapper) (as Christine Radcliffe)
1948 Winter Meeting (Windust) (as Susan Grieve); June Bride (Windust) (as Linda Gilman)
1949 Beyond the Forest (King Vidor) (as Rosa Moline)
1950 All about Eve (Mankiewicz) (as Margo Channing)
1951 Payment on Demand (Bernhardt) (as Joyce Ramsey)
1952 Another Man’s Poison (Rapper) (as Janet Froboisher); Phone Call from a Stranger (Negulesco) (as Marie Hoke); The Star (Heisler) (as Margaret Elliott)
1955 The Virgin Queen (Koster) (as Queen Elizabeth)
1956 Storm Center (Taradash) (as Alicia Hull); The Catered Affair (Wedding Breakfast) (Richard Brooks) (as Aggie Conlon Hurley)
1959 John Paul Jones (Farrow) (as Catherine the Great); The Scapegoat (Hamer) (as the Countess)
1961 Pocketful of Miracles (Capra) (as Apple Annie)
1962 Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? (Aldrich) (as Jane Hudson)
1964 Dead Ringer (Henreid) (as Margaret de Lorca/Edith Philips); La noia (The Empty Canvas) (Damiani) (as Dino’s mother); Where Love Has Gone (Dmytryk) (as Mrs. Gerald Hayden); Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Aldrich) (as Charlotte Hollis)
1965 The Nanny (Holt) (title role)
1968 The Anniversary (Baker) (as Mrs. Taggart)
1971 Connecting Rooms (Gollings) (as Wanda Fleming)
1972 Bunny O’Hare (Oswald) (title role); Madame Sin (David Greene—for TV) (title role); Lo scopone scientifico (The Scientific Cardplayer) (Comencini) (as Millionairess); The Judge and Jake Wyler (Rich—for TV) (as Judge Meredith)
1973 Scream, Pretty Peggy (Hessler—for TV) (as Mrs. Elliott)
1976 Burnt Offerings (Curtis) (as Aunt Elizabeth); The Disappearance of Aimee (Harvey—for TV) (as Aimee’s mother)
1978 Return from Witch Mountain (Hough) (as Letha); The Children of Sanchez (Bartlett); Death on the Nile (Guillermin) (as Mrs. Van Schuyler); Dark Secret of Harvest Home (Penn—for TV) (as Widow Fortune)
1979 Strangers (Katselas—for TV)
1980 The Watcher in the Woods (Hough) (as Mrs. Aylwood); White Mama (Cooper—for TV) (as Adele Malone)
1981 Skyward (Ron Howard—for TV); Family Reunion (Cook—for TV) (as Elizabeth Winfield)
1982  A Piano for Mrs. Cimino (Schaefer—for TV) (as Esther Cimino); Little Gloria . . . Happy at Last (Hussein—for TV) (as Alice Vanderbilt)
1983  Right of Way (Schaefer—for TV)
1985  Murder with Mirrors (Lowry—for TV) (as Carrie Louise Serrocold)
1986  As Summers Die (Tramont—for TV) (as Hannah Loftin); Directed by William Wyler (Slesin—doc) (as herself)
1987  The Whales of August (Lindsay Anderson) (as Libby Strong)
1989  Wicked Stepmother (Cohen) (as Miranda); As Summer Dies (Tramont—for TV) (as herself)
1991  Here’s Looking at You, Warner Bros. (Guenette—doc for TV) (as herself)

Publications

By DAVIS: books—

This ‘n’ That, with Michael Herskowitz, New York, 1987.
I’d Love to Kiss You: Conversations with Bette Davis, with Whitney Stine, New York, 1990.
Bette Davis Speaks (interviews), by Boze Hadleigh, New York, 1996.

By DAVIS: articles—

“I Think . . . ,” in Films and Filming (London), May 1959.

On DAVIS: books—

Hyman, B. D., My Mother’s Keeper, New York, 1985.

Riese, Randall, All about Bette: Her Life from A to Z, Chicago, 1993.
Baxt, George, The Bette Davis Murder Case (fiction), New York, 1994.

On DAVIS: articles—

Flanner, Janet, “Bette Davis,” in New Yorker, February 1943.
“Bette Davis,” in Look (New York), August 1946.
Current Biography 1953, New York, 1953.
“A Toast to Bette Davis!,” in American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1977.
McCourt, J., “Davis,” in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1978.
LaPlace, M., “Bette Davis and the Ideal of Consumption,” in Wide Angle (Baltimore, Maryland), vol. 6, no. 4, 1985.
Clark, John, filmography in Premiere (New York), November 1989.
O'Toole, Lawrence, "Whatever Happened to Bette Davis?" in Sight and Sound (London), Summer 1990.

Shingler, Martin, "Masquerade or Drag?: Bette Davis and the Ambiguities of Gender," in Screen (Oxford), Autumn 1995.

If Warner Brothers’s commitment in the 1930s to films based on "spot news" had any historical justification, it was the creation of Bette Davis as America’s most influential female star. After a generation of desuetude, the working-class heroine became not an occasional feature of American film but the role model by which the women of a new generation could measure themselves. Above all Davis exhibited resilience and resource, taking nothing for granted, accepting no statement without its due degree of scepticism. She typified the kind of woman we now think of as a mid-century standard—tough, ambitious, competent, laconic; yet vulnerable, retaining her femininity even as she competed with men. Both in films and in her dealings with the studios she controlled her environment and the people in it to achieve her ends, always reaffirming her strength and independence.

During the 1930s Davis made a dozen minor pictures which established her as a fighter and a survivor, a type in contradistinction to the other female stars then at Warner Brothers: in Three on a Match Ann Dvorak is the socialite who comes to a bad end, Joan Blondell the showgirl who rises in her place, and Davis the stenographer who is simply lucky to be alive at the end. Davis would always survive. She may suffer as Spencer Tracy’s self-sacrificing mistress in 20,000 Years in Sing Sing, but it is Tracy who goes gallantly to the electric chair for the crime she had committed in an attempt to save him. And in Dangerous, the unjustly excoriated melodrama for which Davis won her first Oscar, FranchoTone willingly toys with destruction to rescue her, however embittered and suicidal she might be.

As her range of roles expanded, her technique and style also developed until by 1939 she could play with conviction a queen in The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex. Davis made three films with William Wyler, a director with a meticulous, exhausting style who changed what had become mannerisms into new and adaptable techniques. Resource became calculation, and determination became command.

In Jezebel, Warner Brothers’s hurried answer to the threatening success of Gone with the Wind, Davis schemed and sacrificed with a new and potent sensuality. As a coldly dissembling tropical murderess in The Letter, she enmeshes husband Herbert Marshall and solicitous policemen in a net as intricate as the lace she wears mantilla-like around her face. And in The Little Foxes as ruthless, self-regarding Regina Giddens, she shows a precisely perfected seductive skill. The final annihilating confession of The Letter, "I still love the man I killed," and the moment in The Little Foxes where she withholds from her husband the medicine that will prevent his heart attack, are insights into a type of character almost unknown in American movies of the time.

The gallery of classic Davis performances is unmatched by any other screen actress because Bette is impossible to dismiss even in the most wretched circumstances. Garbo had more allure; Stanwyck could play comedy with greater ease; the ageless Kate Hepburn perceptively chose better written vehicles from the fifties onward, but none of these titans bears watching in their bombs. In the campy bitterness of Beyond the Forest (in a Morticia Addams wig, Davis induces a miscarriage and blasts a mealy mouthed caretaker to death) or the souped-up melodrama of In This Our Life (rolling her eyes like a human slot machine, seductive Davis plays an incestuously inclined uncle for a sap), Davis is at her most mesmerizing, like a thespic warrior sumo-wrestling with flawed material. A valiant actress, temperamental Davis broke with the convention of her time and prided herself on sacrificing her looks for the honesty of a characterisation; an intuitive grasp of building a role through externals infused her work from Of Human Bondage through Mr. Skeffington all the way up to Whatever Happened to Baby Jane? and beyond. Although Davis’s numerous home runs, such as Empress Carlotta going mad in Juarez or Judith Traherne self-sufficiently facing her Dark Victory are as well—documented as her comeback in the quintessential Davis part of Margo Channing in All about Eve, it is more instructive to examine how the celluloid Duse handled what the industry grudgingly handed her after the title First Lady of the Screen had purely retrospective value. After her unjustly neglected Southern scene-masticsation in Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Kenneth Tynan called hers a great performance), Davis’s silver-screen opportunities evaporated except for being brilliantly restrained in The Nanny and hilariously out of sorts in Death on the Nile. Having had checkered success on Broadway over the years and having struck out repeatedly in launching her own television series, Davis also chickened out of a stage musical Lazarus-act with Miss Moffat, a Dixie transplant of The Corn Is Green. From the 1970s onwards, Davis retreated to the Land of TV Movies, where she was superbly imperious in a tiny role in Little Gloria . . . Happy at Last and heartbreakingly truetuined paired opposite Gena Rowlands in Strangers, for which Davis won an Emmy.

A born scraper, after surviving the traumas of mastectomies, strokes, cancer, inferior television fodder, and a vicious tell-all book by her ungrateful daughter, Bette was a haunting shell of her former self in The Whales of August which would have been a fine artistic capstone to her career. Then, despite a troubled production history and Davis’s unhealthy appearance, The Wicked Stepmother provided a few final rumblings from that Davis volcano. Displeased with the rushes and terminally ill, Davis bowed out of a project that writer-director Larry Cohen had created in response to the movie business’s neglect of her. Against the wishes of the actress, Cohen reshoot around Davis’s existing footage in a manner not seen since Ed Wood Jr.’s heyday. If this legend did not triumph artistically in her swansong, at least willful Davis went out battling a producer/director; that combativeness was the essence of her character and her unassailable artistry.

—John Baxter, updated by Robert Pardi
DAVIS, Geena

Films as Actress:

1982 Tootsie (Pollack) (as April)
1985 Fletch (Ritchie) (as Larry); Transylvania 6–5000 (DeLuca) (as Odette); Secret Weapons (Secrets of the Red Bedroom; Sexpionage) (Don Taylor—for TV) (as Tamara Reshesky)
1986 The Fly (Cronenberg) (as Veronica ‘Ronnie’ Quaife)
1988 Beetlejuice (Burton) (as Barbara Maitland); The Accidental Tourist (Kasdan) (as Muriel Pritchett)
1989 Earth Girls Are Easy (Temple) (as Valerie Dale)
1990 Quick Change (Howard Franklin and Bill Murray) (as Phyllis)
1991 Thelma & Louise (Ridley Scott) (as Thelma Dickinson
1992 Hero (Accidental Hero) (Frears) (as Gale Gayley); A League of Their Own (Penny Marshall) (as Dottie Hinson)
1994 Angie (Coolidge) (as Angie Scacciaopensieri); Speechless (Underwood) (as Julia, + co-pr)
1995 Cutthroat Island (Harlin) (as Morgan Adams)
1996 The Long Kiss Goodnight (Harlin) (as Samantha Caine/Charly Baltimore)
1999 Stuart Little (Minkoff) (as Mrs. Little)

Publications

By DAVIS: articles—

On DAVIS: articles—

* * *

Had Paula Prentiss been working in movies in the 1980s, she would have been up for the same roles as Geena Davis. The two talented actresses shared lanky, long-legged good looks and the ability to project appealing, offbeat personalities. Because neither was mistaken for Marilyn Monroe or Michelle Pfeiffer during her early career, the ingenue roles in which the young actresses were cast suggested capricious types. Prentiss’s film career lost steam in the early 1970s as she entered her mid-thirties; however, the increase in solid, three-dimensional film roles for women a decade-and-a-half later allowed Davis’s career to thrive at the same point.

Her screen debut came in an eye-opening supporting role in Tootsie, playing a soap opera actress who shares a dressing room with Michael Dorsey (Dustin Hoffman), an unemployed character actor secretly taking on a woman’s identity in order to work. After ongoing roles in two television series, Davis returned to making movies. She co-starred with then-husband Jeff Goldblum in three films. The first was Transylvania 6–5000, an unfunny Dracula-themed spoof in which she appeared as a sex-crazed vampiress. But her talent was apparent. According to New York Times critic Janet Maslin, Davis “appears to have wandered in from another, much better movie.” In The Fly she is underutilized as a journalist who has an affair with the fly/man played by Goldblum. And in the imaginative Earth Girls Are Easy she is a harebrained Valley-girl manicurist who falls for a space alien.

The films with Goldblum proved Davis could be credible in fantasy-world films. The most outstanding and appealing of her fantasy cycle is Tim Burton’s Beetlejuice, the now-classic horror tale of a recently deceased couple who attempt to haunt-out a dysfunctional family from the house that had been theirs. Davis is completely at home in Burton’s fanciful, surreal after-death world. An actor has to have a special sense of the absurd in order to evoke emotions while wearing rubber monster masks and prancing around in a sheet (even if it is a designer sheet).

Lawrence Kasdan’s The Accidental Tourist provided Davis with a more substantial role, one which allowed her an opportunity to develop a personality of full measure. From the pages of Kasdan’s adaptation of Anne Tyler’s best-selling novel, Davis brings to life the character of an ingenuous dog trainer whose free-flowing personality unlocks the emotions of a pent-up travel writer she comes to love. The clarity and feeling she applied to the role earned her an Oscar for Best Supporting Actress.

However, the outstanding role in Davis’s career to date is that of Thelma, an Arkansas housewife who takes to the road with her waitress friend (Susan Sarandon) in the highly-touted female buddy film Thelma & Louise. Callie Khouri’s original script presents the full-blooded character of an unhappy ditzy housewife who develops into a determined criminal. Feminist viewers were enthralled as they watched the two women characters travel across the Southwest in their ‘66 T-bird. In Paula Prentiss’s 20-year career, she never once had such a solid role.

The year after Thelma & Louise, Davis gave a well-rounded performance in A League of Their Own as a farm girl who becomes a star baseball player in a women’s league during World War II. Here, her rangy build gave credibility to the character’s athletic prowess. She then played a pair of independent women who face romance and marriage with some amount of trepidation. She has the title role in Angie, playing a free-spirit who is on the verge of marriage and parenthood. In Speechless, she is seen in the timely comedy of a political speech writer who falls for a man who writes speeches for opposing candidates. Critics noted the strength of her performances in both these films.

In the mid-1990s, it could have been said that, with the support of several above-average scripts, Davis had gone from playing zany but one-dimensional characters to winning multifaceted star roles in motion pictures that were both critical and box-office successes. So powerfully did the actress carry off well-written roles that she was able to create a new and different look for female film stars. Unfortunately, she then chose to appear in two high-profile genre films, the action thriller The Long Kiss Goodnight and the swashbuckler Cutthroat Island. Both were directed by Davis’s now ex-husband, Renny Harlin. Not only did they fail to establish the actress as a celluloid action heroine but impeded on her very stardom and marketability. Then, after a three year absence from the screen, Davis reemerged as the mother/homemaker in the kiddie fantasy Stuart.
Little: a colorless role that might have been played by any number of pleasant-looking, anonymous thirty-fortysomething actresses.

—Audrey E. Kupferberg

---

DAVIS, Judy

Nationality: Australian. Born: Perth, Australia, 23 April 1955. Family: Married the actor Colin Friels, 1984; son: Jack. Education: Attended the West Australia Institute of Technology; National Institute of Dramatic Art, Sydney. Career: Joined the South Australia Theatre Company; 1977—film debut in High Rolling. Awards: Australian Film Institute (AFI) Award for Best Actress in a Lead Role, 1979, and British Academy (BAFTA) Awards for Best Actress and Best Newcomer, 1981, for My Brilliant Career; AFI Award for Best Actress in a Lead Role, for Kangaroo, 1986; National Society of Film Critics (NSFC) Award for Best Actress, for High Tide, 1988; New York Film Critics Circle (NYFCC) Award for Best Supporting Actress, for Barton Fink, 1991; Independent Spirit Award, for Impromptu, 1991; NYFCC Award for Best Supporting Actress, for Naked Lunch, 1991; NSFC Award for Best Supporting Actress, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Award for Best Supporting Actress, and National Board of Review Award for Best Supporting Actress, for Husbands and Wives, 1992; AFI Award for Best Actress in a Supporting Role, for On My Own, 1993; AFI Award for Best Actress in a Lead Role, for Children of the Revolution, 1996. Agent: Shanahan Management Proprietary Ltd., P.O. Box 478, Kings Cross, NSW 2011 Australia. Address: c/o Colin Friels, 129 Bourke Street, Woollomooloo, Sydney, NSW 2011, Australia.

Films as Actress:

- 1977 High Rolling (High Rolling in a Hot Corvette) (Auzins) (as Lynn)
- 1979 My Brilliant Career (Gillian Armstrong) (as Sybylla Melvyn)
- 1981 Hoodwink (Whatham) (as Sarah)
- 1982 The Final Option (Who Dares Win) (Ian Sharp) (as Frankie Leith); Winter of Our Dreams (Duigan) (as Lou); The Merry Wives of Windsor (David Jones—for TV) (as Mistress Ford); A Woman Called Golda (Alan Gibbon—for TV) (as the young Golda Meir)
- 1983 Heatwave (Noyce) (as Kate Dean)
- 1984 A Passage to India (Lean) (as Adela Quested)
- 1986 Kangaroo (Burstall) (as Harriet Somers); Rocket to the Moon (John Jacobs—for TV) (as Cleo)
- 1987 Georgia (Lewin) (as Nina Bailey/Georgia); High Tide (Gillian Armstrong) (as Lilli)
- 1990 Alice (Woody Allen) (as Vicki); Impromptu (Lapine) (as George Sand)
- 1991 Barton Fink (Coen) (as Audrey Taylor); Naked Lunch (Cronenberg) (as Joan Frost/Ioan Lee); One against the Wind (Elikann—for TV) (as Mary Lindell)
- 1992 Husbands and Wives (Woody Allen) (as Sally); Where Angels Fear to Tread (Sturridge) (as Harriet Herriton); On My Own (Tibaldi) (as Mother)
- 1994 The New Age (Tolkien) (as Katherine Wittern); The Ref (Ted Demme) (as Caroline)
- 1995 Serving in Silence: The Margarethe Cammermeyer Story (Bleckner—for TV) (as Diane)
- 1996 Children of the Revolution (Peter Duncan)
- 1997 Deconstructing Harry (Allen) (as Lucy); Blood and Wine (Rafelson) (as Suzanne); Absolute Power (Eastwood) (as Gloria Russell)
- 1998 Celebrity (Allen) (Robin Simon); The Echo of Thunder (Wincer—for TV) (as Gladwyn Ritchie)
- 1999 Dash and Lilly (Bates) (Lillian Hellman); A Cooler Climate (Seidelman) (as Paula Tanner)
- 2000 Gaudi Afternoon (Seidelman) (as Cassandra Reilly)

Publications

By DAVIS: articles—

“I Go to the Core,” interview with Gavin Smith, in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1992.

On DAVIS: articles—

* * *

Judy Davis’s intermittently brilliant career effectively began with My Brilliant Career, her first film after drama school and her first starring role, which won her immediate international attention, establishing her as among Australia’s leading stars and opening up prospects beyond. Critics compared her to the young Katharine Hepburn, and although the resemblance has proved transitory (it was a resemblance of role as much as personality) the comparison suggests certain characteristics basic to Davis’s persona: a strength, activeness and determination conventionally perceived as “masculine,” a resistance to domination (especially by men), and a refusal of conformity to social convention. The film itself was overrated, the kind of “safe” feminist movie that threatens no one: Davis’s own comment, though perhaps overly harsh, is accurate enough (“I thought it was a children’s film, it was so simplistic”). The characteristics have remained fairly stable, but Davis has (rather surprisingly) had few opportunities to develop the positive, Hepburn-like aspects of this early role, its exuberance and untrammeled energy. Increasingly, in both the Australian and American films, the strength and nonconformity have been complicated, at times canceled out, by other factors: neurosis, desperation, defeat. It is interesting that, two years after My Brilliant Career, she was chosen to play the young Ingrid Bergman (as Golda Meir) in A Woman Called Golda—her subsequent roles have been, in general, closer to Bergman’s than to Hepburn’s.

It is sometimes the case that an appearance in a bad film can reveal more of an actor’s essence than many performances in better ones; a case in point, in The Final Option. The film’s project is clear: a simpleminded, blatantly right-wing drama about good guys vs. evil terrorists. Davis’s remarkable performance almost turns this on its head: in the context of the colorless and boring spokespersons for law and order and the status quo, she gives such force, conviction, and passion to the leading terrorist that the film comes close to being dangerously subversive.

The most obvious, and least interesting, of her ‘‘neurotic’’ or ‘‘desperate’’ roles are her two appearances in E. M. Forster adaptations (A Passage to India and Where Angels Fear to Tread), where the character is warped by sexual repression. Far more interesting, because they allow her greater range of expression and opportunities to express her energy, are her recent roles in three consecutive films of some distinction: Woody Allen’s Husbands and Wives, Ted Demme’s The Ref, and above all, Michael Tolkin’s The New Age. Allen’s film gives her the chance to ‘‘let rip’’ as a frustrated wife going increasingly out of control: energy expressed as hysteria. The Ref, in which her role is a comic variant on this, allows her a rare opportunity to display a quite wonderful gift for comedy, her impeccable timing matched by that of her two male co-stars. The New Age is very closely related to Tolkin’s previous (and even more remarkable) film The Rapture, which drew from Mimi Rogers one of the greatest performances in all of Hollywood cinema. Davis’s character in The New Age closely resembles that of Rogers, but without allowing the actress to push things quite as far; nevertheless, Davis matches it as far as the film’s relative limitations allow, emerging gradually as its true emotional center, revealing an authenticity in a character defined initially as incorrigibly inauthentic. Both of Tolkin’s films are driven by their characters’ sense of the meaninglessness and emptiness of their lives and the desperate search for meaning in a world that seems to have abandoned its very possibility: a theme that perfectly suits Davis’s persona and abilities.

Davis has frequently played women from real life; since her casting as the young Golda Meir she has taken on two particularly celebrated or notorious historical figures, Frieda Lawrence in Kangaroo (thinly disguised as ‘‘Harriet Somers’’), and George Sand in Impromptu, on both occasions with conspicuous success. Kangaroo is not a satisfactory film; though, to be fair, its weaknesses derive from D. H. Lawrence’s inferior novel, and the filmmakers have made some halfhearted attempts to mitigate them. The subject is Lawrence’s brief flirtation with, and eventual—if perhaps only temporary—repudiation of, fascism (as dramatized in an imaginary Australian political movement). He did not live to witness fascism’s worst consequences, and it might have been possible to regard the flirtation more sympathetically in the 1920s; today it is difficult not to feel very impatient with the time it takes Somers/Lawrence to see through its spurious attractions, and extremely dissatisfied with his grounds for rejecting it. In the novel (as in certain of his others) Lawrence seems to make a determined effort to give his representation of Frieda an effective “voice,” but as usual it tends to be shouted down by his own. In the film—thanks largely to Davis at her most mesmerizing—Harriet/Frieda’s challenge to her husband becomes so strong that our impatience with his obtuseness is intensified. Though she is absent through many of the later episodes, and though Colin Friels (her real-life husband) gives a very intelligent performance as Lawrence, it becomes very much Davis’s film, the triumph of a brilliant actress over dubious material and even more dubious ideology.

Davis’s George Sand is another splendid assumption. Striding through most of the film in men’s clothes and asserting her right to the kinds of recognition that men take for granted, her Mme. Sand falls hopelessly in love with Chopin (Hugh Grant)—clearly because he is gentle, passive, “feminine,” and probably gay. Although the film does not suggest that Sand was other than heterosexual, the gender ambiguity is fascinating in relation to the Davis persona, and it is interesting that Davis eventually played a lesbian (as Glenn Close’s ambiguous character in The Birdcage). However, the film is notove the Davis persona, and it is interesting that Davis eventually played a lesbian (as Glenn Close’s ambiguous character in The Birdcage). However, the film is notove of Sand, and Davis is permitted to bring her characteristic strength and dignity to another potentially hysterical role.

—Robin Wood

Doris Day

Nationality: American. Born: Doris von Kappelhoff in Cincinnati, Ohio, 3 April 1924. Education: Attended Withrow High School, Cincinnati; Fanchon and Marco Dance School, Los Angeles, 1937. Family: Married 1) Al Jorden, 1941 (divorced 1942), son Terry; 2) George Weidlen, 1947; 3) Martin Melcher, 1951 (died 1968); 4) Barry Comden, 1976. Career: 1940—singer with Bob Crosby’s band in Chicago; 1940–46—singer in Les Brown’s band; also became successful recording star; 1947–48—under personal contract to director Michael Curtiz, made film acting debut in Romance on the High Seas; contract with Warners; 1948—appeared with Bob Hope on weekly radio shows and concert tours; 1955—contract with Warner

[Image of Doris Day]
Brothers expired; formed Arwin Productions; 1968—discovered life earnings had been mismanaged and embezzled after death of manager-husband Melcher, sued former lawyer for $22 million; won suit, 1974; 1968–73—star of TV series The Doris Day Show; late 1960s–1970s—involved in animal causes; 1985—host of TV show Doris Day and Friends.

Films as Actress:

1948  Romance on the High Seas (Curtiz) (as Georgia Garrett)
1949  My Dream Is Yours (Curtiz) (as Martha Gibson); It’s a Great Feeling (Butler) (as Judy Adams)
1950  Young Man with a Horn (Young Man of Music) (Curtiz) (as Jo Jordan); Tea for Two (Butler) (as Nanette Carter); The West Point Story (Del Ruth) (as Jan Wilson); Storm Warning (Heisler) (as Lucy Rice)
1951  The Lullaby of Broadway (Butler) (as Melinda Howard); On Moonlight Bay (Del Ruth) (as Marjorie Winfield); I’ll See You in My Dreams (Curtiz) (as Grace LeBoy Kahn); Starlift (Del Ruth) (as Herself)
1952  The Winning Team (Seiler) (as Aimee); April in Paris (Butler) (as Ethel “Dynamite” Jackson)
1953  By the Light of the Silvery Moon (Butler) (as Marjorie Winfield); Calamity Jane (Butler) (title role)
1954  Lucky Me (Donohue) (as Candy)
1955  Young at Heart (Douglas) (as Laurie Tuttle); Love Me or Leave Me (Charles Vidor) (as Ruth Etting)
1956  The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock) (as Jo McKenna); Julie (Stone) (as Julie Benton)
1957  The Pajama Game (Abbott and Donen) (as Katie “Babe” Williams)
1958  Teacher’s Pet (Seaton) (as Erica Stone); The Tunnel of Love (Kelly) (as Isolde Poole)
1959  It Happened to Jane (Quine) (as Jane Osgood); Pillow Talk (Gordon) (as Jan Morrow)
1960  Please Don’t Eat the Daisies (Walters) (as Kate Mackay); Midnight Lace (Miller) (as Kit Preston)
1962  Lover Come Back (Delbert Mann) (as Carol Templeton); That Touch of Mink (Delbert Mann) (as Cathy Timberlake); Billy Rose’s Jumbo (Walters) (as Kitty Wonder)
1963  The Thrill of It All (Jewison) (as Beverly Boyer); Move Over, Darling (Gordon) (as Ellen Wagstaff Arden)
1964  Send Me No Flowers (Jewison) (as Judy)
1965  Do Not Disturb (Levy) (as Janet Harper)
1966  The Glass Bottom Boat (Tashlin) (as Jennifer Nelson)
1967  Caprice (Tashlin) (as Patricia Fowler); The Ballad of Josie (McLaglen) (as Josie Minick)
1968  Where Were You When the Lights Went Out? (Averback) (as Margaret Garrison); With Six You Get Egg Roll (Morris) (as Abby McClure)

Publications

By DAY: book—

On DAY: books—

On DAY: articles—

Having at various times been ridiculed as the vacuous heroine of not very distinguished Warner Brothers musical comedies in the 1950s or as the perpetual virgin of Universal’s sex comedies in the 1960s, Doris Day now finds herself the victim of a critical change of heart; it now appears that she may have been a gifted and unappreciated actress as well as remaining, for most of her career, one of the top two or three attractions at the American box office.

Most of the snide criticism of her work in fact came at the end of it, when from the perspective of the late 1960s and early 1970s Day’s girl next door seemed an affront to the less romance-centric lifestyles of the sexual revolution. No such taint affected her career during the years when she was actually acting, when a Doris Day film was consistent with, and a kind of vindication of, 1950s and early 1960s versions of the ideal woman. By any standard, she was one of the great popular singers of her generation, and that talent at times threatened to overwhelm her work as an actress. Her breath control was exact, her popular singers of her generation, and that talent at times threatened to overwhelm her work as an actress. Her breath control was exact, her unique talent was that she could evoke great emotion (and in the process spellbind her audience) without obvious histrionics. No one who has seen her overwhelmed her work as an actress. Her breath control was exact, her unique talent was that she could evoke great emotion (and in the process spellbind her audience) without obvious histrionics. No one who has seen her as a character—“the American girl, bright, carefree, resilient, honest, caring, tough when she had to be, nobody’s fool, unfailingly optimistic. Day’s personal life throughout the 1940s and 1950s was far from pleasant; the character she portrayed on screen was indeed just that—a persona, the work of an actress, achieved with great cunning. It was an accomplishment of and for its time, perhaps, but it proved more durable than the exotic showgirls of her predecessor, Betty Grable, or the eccentrics of her successor, Julie Andrews.

That persona was so effectively developed and so convincing that her directors were able to "use" Day in opposition to herself (The Pajama Game) or to inject the "character" into other, mildly inappropriate contexts (Hitchcock in The Man Who Knew Too Much) to achieve a subtle resonance. The great transition in Day’s career—from musical star to light comedy performer—is "odd," in retrospect, only if one forgets that persona. At the time of her first great comedy success—Pillow Talk in 1959—Doris Day was already 35 years old, too old for continued success in musical comedies, a form that was dying anyway; her career ought to have ended. Yet the Day persona was so much established in the moviegoer’s consciousness, so much what the American woman was then, rightly or wrongly, imagined to be, that Day’s transition to another genre was, in fact, both painless and successful; the American girl next door of 20 became the American career girl of 30. The new Day was more popular with the audiences than she had ever been.

Stretching her versatility to extremes may have prolonged her stardom, but whereas Day is irreplaceable in musicals and endearing in comedies, she is often uncomfortable in melodrama. One senses her flinging her emotions haphazardly at the camera. Yet, even caught up in the hysteria of Midnight Lace (whimpering while fleeing in her high heels on skyscraper girders from a gaslighting husband) or choking back tears in Julie (while crash-courting in flying a plane after her deranged spouse shoots the pilot), Day arouses our protective instincts.

Today, armed with deconstructive works such as Rock Hudson’s Home Movies, buffs approach the Day-Hudson comedies with smirking knowliness, as if awareness of Rock’s homosexuality somehow invalidated these romantic trifles. While it is doubtful that Pillow Talk or Lover Come Back would ever have had the enduring appeal of Lubitsch’s or Sturges’s escapist wish-fulfilment, it is time to accept these films not as mislabeled sophisticated farces but as double-standard sex romps illuminated by Day’s perky savoir faire. With her bubble-domed coiffure and enviably sleek wardrobe, Day’s career gal was as key an identification figure in the sixties as TV’s Mary Richards was in the seventies. Playing an independent working woman, Day single-handedly removed the stigma from the word "unmarried."

Contractually bound to repeat herself in films handpicked by her husband (who also obligated her to a TV series without her knowledge, a fact she discovered after his death), Day did not end her film career on a high note. As her beloved image faded due to repetition, in A Room with a View (whimpering while fleeing in her high heels on skyscraper girders from a gaslighting husband) or choking back tears in Julie (while crash-courting in flying a plane after her deranged spouse shoots the pilot), Day arouses our protective instincts.

Today, armed with deconstructive works such as Rock Hudson’s (as Cecil Vyse); 1971—film debut as teenager in Sunday, Bloody Sunday; stage work includes Another Country, 1982, Romeo and Juliet for the Royal Shakespeare Company, 1983–84, and Hamlet at the National Theatre, 1989; TV work includes The Insurance Man, 1985. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Award, New York Film Critics, for My Beautiful Laundrette and A Room with a View; Oscar for Best Actor, British Academy of Film and Television Arts, Best Actor Award, and Best Actor Award, New York Film Critics and Los Angeles Film Critics, for My Left Foot, 1989. Agent: c/o William Morris, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1971 Sunday, Bloody Sunday (Schlesinger)
1982 Gandhi (Attenborough) (as Colin)
1984 The Bounty (Donaldson) (as Fryer)
1985 My Beautiful Laundrette (Fears) (as Johnny); The Insurance Man (Eyre—for TV) (as Mr. Kafka)
1986 A Room with a View (Ivory) (as Cecil Vyse); Nanou (Templeman) (as Max)
1988 Stars and Bars (O’Connor) (as Henderson Dores); The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kaufman) (as Tomas)
1989 My Left Foot (Sheridan) (as Christy Brown); Eversmile, New Jersey (Sorin) (as Dr. Fergus O’Connell)
1992 The Last of the Mohicans (Michael Mann) (as Nathaniel Poe/Hawkeye)
1993 In the Name of the Father (Sheridan) (as Gerald Conlon); The Age of Innocence (Scorsese) (as Newland Archer)
1996 The Crucible (Hytner) (as John Proctor)
1997 The Boxer (Sheridan) (as Danny Flynn)

Publications

By DAY-LEWIS: articles—

Interview with Graham Fuller, in American Film (New York), January/February 1988.
Interview in Interview (New York), April 1988.
Interview in American Film (Los Angeles), December 1989.
Interview with Steve Grant, in Time Out (UK), 2 February 1994.
Interview with Brian Case, in Time Out (UK), 5 February 1997.

On DAY-LEWIS: books—

On DAY-LEWIS: articles—

* * *

Daniel Day-Lewis’s instinctive, fiery power is unusual for a stage-trained British actor (something Gary Oldman and David Thewlis can only fake). Day-Lewis’s repertory theater skills allow him to play men of disparate eras, nationalities, and tendencies with more surface... fidelity than, say, De Niro. But at the same time he will go passionately freestyle in voice and movement in order to get at his character’s motivation, a deliberate expense of effort that would have seemed superfluous to Olivier.

Day-Lewis came to moviegoers’ attention with his smashing performance as Johnny in Stephen Frears’s My Beautiful Laundrette, based on Hanif Kureishi’s script. As a fascistic punk tired of his violent, pointless life, Day-Lewis brings fresh comic impulses to the naturalistic view of hopeless English kids and immigrant Pakistanis in depressed South London. When the Pakistani Omar recognizes his old schoolfriend Johnny in a threatening street gang, Johnny does not attack Omar, he falls for him (and for the economic advantage of associating with Omar’s enterprising family). Like Sunday, Bloody Sunday, Laundrette does not load its gay characters with the pathos of unrecognized nobility; but unlike Peter Finch, Day-Lewis is movie-star sexy. His foxy eyes and quiet-confident body language help make Johnny one of the few characters in movie history with sexual imagination. When Johnny spits champagne from his mouth into Omar’s, Day-Lewis creates a gay character more to be envied than censured.

Playing the Irish painter and writer Christy Brown, afflicted from childhood with cerebral palsy, in My Left Foot made Day-Lewis an international star. In such roles actors usually cannot help begging for sympathy. The playwright-director Jim Sheridan enabled Day-Lewis to shoot past pity to get at primal emotions about mother-son love and the rage for expression. Without coordinated movements and barely to shoot past pity to get at primal emotions about mother-son love and international star. In such roles actors usually cannot help begging for censured. Day-Lewis scored again with Sheridan in In the Name of the Father, as Gerry Conlon, a Northern Irishman in London whose false imprisonment on charges of IRA terrorism tears his family apart. The English zealously fabricate evidence of a terror network within Gerry’s family; this adolescent, semicriminal dork, living out a parody of his own futurelessness, ends up sharing a prison cell with his father. In My Left Foot Christy Brown scrawls the word “Mother” on the floor with chalk clenched in his toes. In the Name of the Father is about a young man face-to-face with an unassuming father who never impressed him. The movie comes from headlines, but Sheridan and Day-Lewis push it to a symbolic level: Gerry’s being locked up with his father is a metaphor for how all young men feel locked in the prison upstairs with their dads. In Day-Lewis’s finest speeches he relives his frustration over his father’s weakness. But Gerry comes to appreciate the older man’s nonviolent forbearance; he grows up by witnessing the virtues of the “model” he has been trying to reject.

Before working with Sheridan, Day-Lewis had starred impressively in Philip Kaufman’s adaptation of Milan Kundera’s The Unbearable Lightness of Being, making Tomas’s skirt-chasing seem an existential defiance of a politically dead culture. Day-Lewis played opposite two very different leading ladies, the almost impersonally provocative Lena Olin and Juliette Binoche with her needy hot-baby flesh. Working for Kaufman they brought an experienced tragicomic sensibility to a novel that was a trifle oversketch.

Day-Lewis was also a fine athletic lead in Michael Mann’s handsome, large-scale Harlequinized The Last of the Mohicans. But it did not call on his special skills—he was not inauthentic as Tom Cruise would have been, but there was not anything to be authentic about. He was less interesting in Martin Scorsese’s too well-man-nered adaptation of Edith Wharton’s Age of Innocence, but the fault lies with the source. We never understand what makes Newland Archer superior to his surroundings, and when he does nothing to avoid marriage to a woman he does not love, it is hard to share the movie’s concern for him. Thin roles can expose the calculations behind Day-Lewis’s acting, most notably in his stiff performance as Cecil Vyse in A Room with a View. But he has a hot-spring of inspiration that usually keeps him running high, despite or perhaps because of the hiatuses between pictures. We await his new releases the way we looked forward to De Niro’s in the 1970s.

—Alan Dale

DEAN, James

Nationality: American. Born: James Byron Dean in Marion, Indiana, 8 February 1931. Education: Attended Santa Monica City College (1949–50); attended University of California, Los Angeles approximately one semester (fall 1950); studied at the Actors Studio, New York. Career: 1950—appeared in Pepsi-Cola TV commercial; 1951—attended James Whitmore’s acting workshop in Los Angeles; first role in a nationally broadcast TV program; bit parts in three Hollywood films; moved to New York City; 1952—between 1952 and 1955 appeared in more than two dozen TV programs, beginning with bit parts and graduating to starring roles; at 21 years of age, the youngest actor (at the time) to be admitted to Actors Studio in New York; Broadway debut in the short-lived play See the Jaguar; 1953—appeared in significant roles in numerous TV programs; especially noteworthy: “Bells of Cockaigne” (Armstrong Circle Theatre, NBC), “Harvest” (Robert Montgomery Presents, NBC), and “Something for an Empty Briefcase” (Campbell Soundstage, NBC); 1954—important TV roles continued; received critical acclaim for second Broadway role as the provocative homosexual houseboy in André Gide’s The Immoralist, but gave notice almost immediately to star in Elia Kazan’s film of East of Eden; signed first contract with Warner Bros.; began amateur career as sports car racer; 1955—completed starring roles in Rebel Without a Cause and Giant; cast as Rocky Graziano in MGM’s Somebody Up There Likes Me; negotiated nine-film, six-year contract with Warner Bros. Died: 30 September 1955 in automobile accident while en route to a sports car race, just weeks before the release of Rebel Without a Cause and a year before the release of Giant; buried in Fairmount, Indiana.

Films as Actor:

1951 Fixed Bayonets (Fuller) (bit role as soldier cut from film)
1952 Sailor Beware (Walker) (uncredited bit role as sailor); Has Anybody Seen My Gal? (Sirk) (uncredited bit role as soda shop customer)
1955 East of Eden (Kazan) (as Cal Trask); Rebel Without a Cause (Ray) (as Jim Stark)
1956 Giant (Stevens) (as Jett Rink)
James Dean with Elizabeth Taylor in Giant

Publications

By DEAN: article—

By DEAN: book—

On DEAN: books—

Salgues, Yves, James Dean ou le mal de vivre, Paris, 1957.
Morrisey, Steven, James Dean Is Not Dead, Manchester, 1983.
Roth, Beulah, and Sanford Roth, James Dean, Corte Madera, California, 1983.
DEAN

McCann, Graham, Rebel Males: Clift, Brando, and Dean, New Brunswick, New Jersey, 1993.

On DEAN: articles—

Dos Passos, John, ‘‘The Death of James Dean,’’ in Esquire (New York), October 1958.
Bean, Robin, ‘‘Dean, Ten Years After,’’ in Films and Filming (London), October 1965.
Truffaut, François, ‘‘James Dean est mort,’’ in L’Avant-Scène du Cinéma (Paris), November 1975.
Breen, Ed, ‘‘James Dean’s Indiana: The Stage Along Sand Pike,’’ in Traces of Indiana and Midwestern History (Indianapolis), Fall 1989.
Nall, Adeline (as told to Val Holley), ‘‘Grant County’s Own,’’ in Traces of Indiana and Midwestern History (Indianapolis), Fall 1989.
Dalton, David, ‘‘James Dean: Osiris Rising,’’ in Gadjfly (Charlottesville), May 1998.

On DEAN: films—

The James Dean Story, documentary, directed by Robert Altman, 1957.

James Dean: A Portrait, television documentary, directed by Gary Legon, 1996.
James Dean and Me, television documentary, directed by Ben Strout, 1996.
James Dean at High Speed, documentary on Dean’s love of racing, produced by Lee Raskin and Brock Yates, 1997.

* * *

Ambition and talent took James Dean a very long way in a very short time. In the five-year period between 1950 and 1954, the Indiana farm boy transformed himself into a Hollywood movie star. Then he died. His accidental death at 24 sent the trajectory of his career path into another orbit altogether: through a series of cultural reactions James Dean was transmuted into a dead cult personality and ultimately into a full-blown American icon. While his films may appear dated today, Dean is never passé—neither the actor, the persona, nor the image. As the decades have passed the image has only gotten cooler and hipper; as a pop culture icon James Dean seems to have no expiration date.

In only three film roles Dean presented such a vulnerable image of adolescent alienation that conventional stereotypes of youth and masculinity came tumbling down. He struck a chord in the 1950s, and in each successive decade, with his unique capacity to portray the hero while simultaneously undercutting, questioning, and redefining traditional models of masculinity. James Dean was hero and anti-hero in one appealing package. When Al Pacino said, “I grew up with the Dean thing. Rebel Without a Cause had a very powerful effect on me,’’ Pacino spoke for many of his generation. Dean’s emotional and highly idiosyncratic film performances electrified generations of audiences and aspiring actors around the world.

Unknown to film audiences in 1954, Dean appeared to be an “overnight success” in his film debut as Cal Trask in Elia Kazan’s production of East of Eden. But behind this exquisitely nuanced screen performance lay Dean’s considerable experience in live television and Broadway productions during his “New York years.” Rebel Without a Cause was, and still is, Dean’s signature film, but his portrayal of the unloved son in East of Eden was virtually a self-portrait. It was not a stretch for Dean to play the son of an emotionally wooden father and an absent mother, for in truth, this was his own biography. Kazan gave the role to Dean not because he could play Cal Trask, but because he was Cal Trask.

Dean’s next picture was Rebel Without a Cause, Nicholas Ray’s study of middle-class juvenile delinquency seen from the adolescent perspective. Rebel began as a routine B-picture in black and white, but Warner Bros. quickly upgraded it to a CinemaScope A-production when reviews of East of Eden confirmed that they had a star in Dean. As Jim Stark, Dean created an unforgettable image of a confused misfit in rebellion—against his parents, who recoil from personal acts of courage, and against his teenage peers, who act out meaningless rituals of courage. Premiering one month after Dean’s death, Rebel was a phenomenal hit with its powerful message and its charismatic dead star. Through this film James Dean entered the cultural imagination as the archetypal rebel hero and he has maintained this eminent position ever since.

For his next and last film Dean accepted a smaller role in an epic-sized picture—George Steven’s production of Giant. Dean played a poor, resentful Texas ranch hand who strikes oil, only to become a rich, embittered oil tycoon. Requiring Dean to age about 30 years, the role of Jett Rink had more breadth than depth, but for Dean's introspective style of acting, this was not a good trade-off. He clashed with George Stevens over the interpretation and development of Jett Rink, and ultimately Dean lost his artistic battles with Stevens. But he won the war. By the time Giant premiered in 1956, Dean had been dead a year and Dean delirium had reached a peak. As far as America's teenagers were concerned, Giant starred James Dean in "his" final film. Upon his death, Dean seemed to eclipse the directors of each of his films: their films became known as "James Dean films."

As a pop culture icon Dean has been subjected to a relentless commercial life after death. Commercial exploitation of his image has been so persistent that the public's awareness of Dean's unique acting genius is often overwhelmed by the ready availability of his image. While a number of contemporary critics were quick to label Dean a Marlon Brando imitator, and a poor one at that, Dean eventually escaped Brando's shadow to leave an exceptional acting legacy in his own right. Writing as a film critic in the 1950s, François Truffaut succinctly assessed Dean's impact as an actor: "His acting goes against fifty years of filmmaking. Each gesture, each attitude, each mime, is a slap in the face of tradition." Dean revered Method mentors Montgomery Clift and Marlon Brando and like his mentors was admitted to the Actors Studio, but unlike them he was persistently inhibited by Lee Strasberg's criticism and did little work there. Dean was a Method actor more by instinct than by formal training.

Nonetheless, many of Dean's colleagues and acquaintances considered him an 'oddball' both professionally and personally. He was certainly a risk-taker. He preferred not to know his lines too well so that his performances would be spontaneous and natural, and he rarely played a scene exactly the same way twice. Dean's unconventional approach to acting—whether on television, the stage, or the screen—often threw his acting colleagues off balance. Raymond Massey, who starred with him in East of Eden, complained that he never knew what Dean was going to say or do. Massey hated this unpredictable quality in Dean's acting style; other actors (such as Julie Harris) were more appreciative and tolerant of Dean's unique approach to his craft. Besides acting, Dean's other consuming passion was sports car racing and he won several amateur races. Both racing and acting were vehicles of risk and exhilaration for Dean. The risks he took in acting paid off: he received Best Actor nominations (posthumously) for his performances in East of Eden and Giant. The tenacity of Dean's cultural impact and personal appeal is confirmed by the enormous quantity of biographies, memoirs, tributes, and documentaries produced during the 45 years since his death. In the 1990s alone, a book was published on Dean in every year of the decade, and almost half a dozen documentaries and films were released. Nor has interest waned: another television documentary deal with Paramount; 1951—New York stage debut in Romeo and Juliet; late 1950s—began living in France on semipermanent basis; late 1960s-1970s—occasional film and TV work (e.g., in mini-series Roots: The Next Generation, 1979, North and South II, 1986).

Awards: Best Actress Academy Award, for To Each His Own, 1946; Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for The Snake Pit, 1948; Best Actress Academy Award, and Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for The Heiress, 1949; Best Actress, Venice Festival, for The Snake Pit, 1949.
Address: B.P. 156, 75764 Paris Cedex 16, France.

Films as Actress:

1935 Alibi Ike (Enright) (as Dolly); The Irish in Us (Lloyd Bacon) (as Lucille Jackson); A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Reinhardt and Dieterle) (as Hermia); Captain Blood (Curtiz) (as Arabella Bishop)

1936 Anthony Adverse (LeRoy) (as Angela Guiseppe); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz) (as Elsa Campbell); A Day at Santa Anita (short)

1937 Call It a Day (Mayo) (as Catherine Hilton); The Great Garrick (Whale) (as Germaine De Le Corbe); It’s Love I’m After (Mayo) (as Marcia West)

1938 Gold Is Where You Find It (Curtiz) (as Serena Ferris); The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (as Maid Marian); Four’s a Crowd (Curtiz) (as Lorri Dillingwell); Hard to Get (Enright) (as Margaret Richards)

1939 Wings of the Navy (Lloyd Bacon) (as Irene Dale); Dodge City (Curtiz) (as Abbie Irving); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (as lady Penelope Gray); Gone with the Wind (Fleming—additional scenes directed by Calor, Wood, Mengers, and David O. Selznick) (as Melanie Hamilton)

1940 Raffles (Wood) (as Gwen); My Love Came Back (Bernhardt) (as Amelia Cullen); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz) (as Kit Carson Halliday)

1941 The Strawberry Blonde (Walsh) (as Amy Lind); Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen) (as Emmy Brown); They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh) (as Elizabeth Brown Custer)

1942 The Male Animal (Nugent) (as Ellen Turner); In This Our Life (Huston) (as Roy Timberlake)

1943 Thank Your Lucky Stars (David Butler) (as herself); Princess O'Rourke (Krasna) (as Maria); Government Girl (Dudley Nichols) (as Smokey)

1946 The Well-Groomed Bride (Lanfield) (as Margie); To Each His Own (Leisen) (as Josephine Norris); Devotion (Bernhardt) (as Charlotte Brontë); The Dark Mirror (Siodmak) (as Terry Collins/Ruth Collins)

1948 The Snake Pit (Litvak) (as Virginia Cunningham)

1949 The Heiress (Wyler) (as Catherine Sloper)

1952 My cousin Rachel (Koster) (as Rachel)

1955 That Lady (Terence Young) (as Ana de Mendoza); Not as a Stranger (Kramer) (as Kristina Hedvigson)

1956 The Ambassador’s Daughter (Krasna) (as Joan)

1958 The Proud Rebel (Curtiz) (as Linnett Moore)

1959 Libel (Asquith) (as Lady Maggie Loddon)

1962 Light in the Piazza (Guy Green) (as Margaret Johnson)

1964 Lady in a Cage (Grauman) (as Mrs. Hilyard); Hush … Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Aldrich) (as Miriam Deering)

1970 The Adventurers (Lewis Gilbert) (as Deborah Hadley)

1972 The Screaming Woman (Smight—for TV) (as Laura Wynant); Pope Joan (Michael Anderson) (as Mother Superior)

1977 Airport ’77 (Jameson) (as Emily Livingston); Behind the Iron Mask (The Fifth Musketeer) (Annakin) (as Queen Anne)

1978 The Swarm (Irwin Allen) (as Maureen)

1982 Murder Is Easy (Whatman—for TV) (as Honoria Waynflete); The Royal Romance of Charles and Diana (Levin—for TV) (as the Queen Mother)

1986 Anastasia: The Mystery of Anna (Chomsky—for TV) (as Dowager Emperess Maria)

1988 The Woman He Loved (Jarrott—for TV) (as Bessie Merryman)

Publications

By DE HAVILLAND: book—

Every Frenchman Has One, New York, 1962.

By DE HAVILLAND: articles—

On DE HAVILLAND: books—

On DE HAVILLAND: articles—

* * *

Almost immediately after making her screen debut, Olivia de Havilland was established as a popular actress through her presence in Captain Blood. The film’s pairing of de Havilland and Errol Flynn was a great success, and Warner Brothers, during the next six years, reteamed the two in seven films. Although these films gave de Havilland a leading lady status, her function was essentially that of supporting and adoring the male. The function was carried over into Gone with the Wind, yet this key role gave her at last an opportunity to display her potential as a skillful actress. The assignment was particularly challenging in that Melanie, in contrast to Scarlett O’Hara, is bland and two-dimensional; yet, arguably, de Havilland’s performance is superior to Vivien Leigh’s in conception, modulation, and emotional resonance, convincingly communicating the strength beneath Melanie’s shy and timid outer self.
The characterization, in addition to establishing de Havilland as a major actress, also, to an extent, gave shape to her 1940s screen persona. During the decade, two of de Havilland’s most highly regarded performances are built around seemingly simple women who, unexpectedly, prove to be compelling presences when engaged in emotional interaction. Structurally, both Hold Back the Dawn and The Heiress are centered on narratives in which physically plain and unimaginative women are courted by handsome men who have no interest in what they have to offer—sincerity and virtuousness. De Havilland imparts a forcefulness to the characterizations by making the women self-conscious about their ordinaryness so that the characters’ emotional vulnerability become a crucial factor in these portrayals. In The Heiress in particular, the effectiveness of de Havilland’s performance hinges on the emotional exploitation she willingly submits to and her ultimate response to it.

Essentially, the same persona is the basis of de Havilland’s characterization in the less caustic To Each His Own in which she enacts various stages in the life of a woman who must deny herself the fulfillment of motherhood because her child was illegitimate. While the film’s flashbacks allow de Havilland a greater range (glamour, sophistication) than the above-mentioned films, in the present-day sequences she has a severe physical plainness and projects an intense emotionalism which is held in check through sheer will power.

During the 1940s de Havilland gave two other notable performances in films that can be seen as functioning as implicit commentary on her filmic persona. In The Dark Mirror de Havilland plays identical twins who are opposing embodiments of ‘‘good’’ and ‘‘evil.’’ The film, in effect, splits the character she plays to expose the end result of the oppressions and repressions the de Havilland persona, in part, represents. In the follow-up film, The Snake Pit, she is cast as another ordinary woman who undergoes a mental breakdown because she is not able to fully express her identity.

At the height of her powers, de Havilland seemed to have lost the fighting spirit that enabled her to bring the dreaded seven-year studio contract system to its knees, a court battle previously lost by the redoubtable Bette Davis. Prissily concerned with her star image like Melanie guarding Southern traditions in Gone with the Wind, de Havilland rejected the chance to play Blanche Dubois. Considering her icy brilliance in The Snake Pit, it is interesting to contemplate what dimensions she would have brought to the most challenging role ever written for an actress. Throughout the fifties, she tackled broadway to a lukewarm reception (Romeo and Juliet, Candida) and worked less frequently on-screen—hypnotically ambiguous in My Cousin Rachel and authoritatively embodying pioneer spirit in Proud Rebel, but ludicrously sporting an eye patch and saccharine airs for the period costumer, That Lady, and lading on a thick Swedish meatball accent for Not as a Stranger. Almost all the rest is disappointing with de Havilland making great lady appearances rather than flexing her acting muscles (on televised awards ceremonies, she gushes as if impressed with her own place in film history). If she mainly played it safe as part of all-star disaster ensembles (The Swarm, Airport ’77), her latter-day career is marked with two striking returns to form. In an ABC-TV Stage 67 production of Katherine Anne Porter’s Noon Wine, de Havilland is gravely beautiful as a careworn Texas landowner. Although she had to be coaxed to star after Bette Davis drove rival Joan Crawford to nervous illness while shooting Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte, de Havilland is superb in that juicy Southern Gothic hysteria. Countering Davis’s campy splendor, she builds suspense by undermining her pristine screen image for a change. Whereas Crawford would have telegraphed her duplicity, de Havilland sneaks up on the audience with betrayal up her sleeve. This film demonstrates that de Havilland could have pursued acting in a more complex vein if she had not preferred typecasting herself as the good twin from The Dark Mirror.

—Richard Lippe, updated by Robert Pardi

DELON, Alain

Nationality: French. Born: Sceaux, 8 November 1935 (or 1936).

Films as Actor:

1957 Quand la femme s’en mêle (Send a Woman When the Devil Fails; When the Woman Gets Confused) (Yves Allégret) (as Jo)
1958 Sois belle et taïs-toi (Blonde for Danger; Just Another Pretty Face) (Marc Allégret); Christine (Gaspard-Huit) (as Franz)
1959 Faibles femmes (Women Are Weak; Three Murderesses) (Boisrand) (as Julien); Le Chemin des écoliers (Boisrand) (as Antoine Michaud); Plein soleil (Purple Noon; Lust for Evil) (Clément) (as Tom Ripley)
1960 Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers; Rocco et ses frères) (Visconti) (as Rocco Parondi)
1961 Che gioia vivere (Quelle joie de vivre) (Clément) (as Ulysse Cecconato); ‘‘Agnès Bernauer’’ ep. of Amours célèbres (Boisrand)
1962 L’ecclisse (The Eclipse) (Antonioni) (as Piero); ‘‘L’Incense’’ ep. of Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments) (Duvivier) (as Pierre Messager); Mélodie en sous-sol (The Big Snatch; Any Number Can Play; Big Grab) (Verneuil); Carambolages (Bluwal)
1963 Il gattopardo (The Leopard) (Visconti) (as Tancredi); La Tulipe noire (The Black Tulip) (Christian-Jaque) (as Julien de Saint-Preux)
1964 Les Félin (Joy House; The Love Cage) (Clément) (as Marc); L’Insoumis (Cavalier) (as Thomas); 2nd ep. of The Yellow
1965 Once a Thief (Ralph Nelson) (as Eddie Pedak)
1966 Lost Command (Not for Honor and Glory) (Robson) (as Capt. Philippe Escavier); Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Jacques Chaban-Delmas); Texas across the River (Michael Gordon) (as Don Andrea Baldasar)
1967 Les Aventuriers (The Last Adventure) (Enrico) (as Manu); Le Samouraï (The Godson) (Melville) (as Jef Costello); Diaboliquement vôtre (Diabolically Yours) (Duvivier) (as Pierre)
1968 “William Wilson” ep. of Histoires extraordinaires (Tales of Mystery; Spirits of the Dead) (Malle) (as Wilson); The Girl on a Motorcycle (La Motorcycliste; Naked under Leather) (Cardiff) (as Daniel); Adieu l’ami (Farewell Friend; Honor among Thieves) (Herman) (as Dino Barran); La Piscine (The Sinners) (Deray); Le Clan des Siciliens (The Sicilian Clan) (Verneuil) (as Roger Sartet)
1969 Jeff (Herman); Le Cercle rouge (Melville); Madly (The Love Mates) (Kahane)
1970 Borsalino (Deray) (as Roch Siffredi, + pr)
1971 Doucement les basses! (Deray); Fantasia chez les ploucs (Pirès); Soleil rouge (Red Sun) (Terence Young) (as Gauche); La veuve Couderc (Granier-Defere)
1972 L’Assassinat de Trotsky (The Assassination of Trotsky) (Losey) (as Frank Jackson); Un flic (Dirty Money; A Cop) (Melville) (as Coleman); La prima notte di quiete (Le Professeur) (Zarlini); Traitement du choc (Shock Treatment) (Jessu) (as Deviliers); Il était une fois un flic (Lautner); Big Guns (No Way Out; Tony Arzenta) (Tessari)
1973 Scorpio (Winner) (as Laurier); Deux hommes dans la ville (Two Men in Town; Two against the City) (Giovanni) (as Gino, + pr); Les Granges brûlées (Chapot)
1974 La Race des “Seigneurs” (Granier-Defere); Les Seins de glace (Lautner); Borsalino & Co. (Deray) (as Roch Siffredi, + pr)
1975 Flic Story (Deray) (as Roger Borniche, + pr); Zorro (Tessari); Le Gitan (Giovanni) (title role, + co-pr)
1976 Mr. Klein (Losey) (title role, + pr); Comme un boomerang (Giovanni) (+ co-sc); Le Gang (Deray)
1977 America at the Movies (as narrator); L’Homme presse (Molinaro); Armageddon (Jessu); Mort d’un pourri (Lautner); Attention, les enfants regardent (Attention, the Kids Are Watching) (Leroy) (as Man)
1978 Indian Summer (Zarlini) (as Professor)
1979 Le Toubib (The Medic) (Granier-Defere); The Concorde—Airport ’79 (Airport ’80—The Concorde) (Rich) (as Metrand); Teheran Incident (Teheran 1943; The Eliminator) (Alov and Naumov)
1980 Trois Hommes à abattre (Three Men to Destroy) (Deray) (as Michel Gerfaut)
1982 Le Choc (The Shock) (Davis)
1984 Swann in Love (Un Amour de Swann) (Schlondorff) (as Baron De Charlus)
1985 Notre histoire (Our Story) (Blier); Parole de flic (Pinheiro) (as Daniel Pratt, + co-sc)
1986 Le Passage (Manzor) (as Jean Diaz, + co-pr)
1988 Ne Reveillez pas un flic qui dort (Pinheiro) (as Eugene Grindel, + co-sc)

Films as Producer:
1964 Journal d’un combat (Gilles—short)
1970 Sortie de secours (Kahane)
1986 Le Passage (Manzor)
1992 Le Retour de Casanova (Niermans)

Films as Actor and Director:
1970 Pour la peau d’un flic (For a Cop’s Hide; Whirlpool)
1982 Le Battant (The Cache) (as Darnay, + co-sc)

Publications

By DELON: articles—

Interview in Cinéma Français (Paris), October 1980.

On DELON: books—

On DELON: articles—

Film Français (Paris), 7 January 1983.
Alain Delon is, with Jean-Paul Belmondo, the most popular male star of the contemporary French film. Without previous professional preparation, he came to embody the young, energetic, often morally corrupted man. With his attractive appearance, he was also predestined to play tender lovers and romantic heroes, and for many he was in the beginning a French embodiment of the type created in America by James Dean.

His first outstanding success came with the role of the parasite Tom Ripley in Clément's Plein soleil. Delon presented a psychological portrait of a murderous young cynic who attempts to take on the identity of his victim. A totally different role was offered him by Visconti in Rocco e i suoi fratelli. In this film, Delon plays the devoted Rocco, who accepts the greatest sacrifices to save his characterless brother Simon. After several other films in Italy, he returned to the criminal genre, with Jean Gabin, in Melodie en sous-sol (Verneuil). This work, a classic example of the genre, was distinguished not only by a soundly worked-out screenplay, but also by the careful production and the excellent performances of both Delon and Gabin. Several other films about gangsters or thieves followed, including a historical bandit in La Tulipe noire (Christian-Jaque).

Since 1968, Delon has often participated in his films as a producer. Though he has continued to make crime and thriller films, he has also undoubtedly attempted to extend his range. Two interesting psychological roles—as a judge in Les Granges brûlées (Chapot) and as the self-assured doctor in a luxurious sanatorium in Traitemjet du choc (Jesse)—were followed by his role in Joseph Losey’s pretentious reconstruction of the murder of the revolutionary in exile, The Assassination of Trotsky. In Mr. Klein he took on the ambitious role of an Aryan merchant who throws in his lot with the Jews in occupied France. A serious attempt to consider the imperfect judicial system of contemporary society is made in the film Deux hommes dans la ville, in which he plays a thief who tries in vain to participate in ordinary life after his release from prison. His most unusual role has been in Schlöndorff’s Un Amour de Swann, based on the Proust novel, continued evidence of his genuine acting talent and attempts to seek new expressive opportunities.

—Karel Tabery

DEL RIO, Dolores

Nationality: Mexican.
Born: Lolita Dolores Martínez Asunsolo López Negrette in Durango, 3 August 1905.
Education: Convent of St. Joseph, Mexico City.
Family: Married 1) Jaime Del Rio, 1920 (died 1928); 2) the designer Cedric Gibbons, 1930 or 1932 (divorced 1941); 3) Lewis Riley, 1959.
Career: 1925—personal contract with the director Edwin Carewe; film debut in Joanna; 1926—selected as WAMPAS (Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers) baby star; 1928—critical and public recognition for role in Ramona; worked with United Artists, 1929–31, RKO, 1932–33, Warners, 1934–36, Columbia, 1937, and 20th Century-Fox, 1937–38; 1943—left Hollywood to seek more rewarding career in Mexico; in Flor Silvestre, first of several successful films for director Emilio Fernández.
Awards: Ariele Awards for Best Actress, for Las abandonados, 1944, Doña Perfecta, 1951, and The Boy and the Fog, 1953; Special Ariele Award, 1974.
Died: In Newport Beach, California, 11 April 1983.

Films as Actress:

- 1925 Joanna (Carewe) (as Carlotta de Silva)
- 1926 High Steppers (Carewe) (as Evelyn Iffield); Pals First (Carewe) (as Jeanne Lamont); The Whole Town’s Talking (Edward Laemmle) (as Rita Renault); What Price Glory? (Walsh) (as Charmaine de la Cognac)
- 1927 Resurrection (Carewe) (as Katusha Maslova); The Loves of Carmen (Walsh) (as Carmen)
- 1928 The Gateway of the Moon (Wray) (as Chela “Toni”); The Trail of ’98 (Brown) (as Berna); Ramona (Carewe) (title role); The Red Dance (Walsh) (as Tasia); No Other Woman (Tellegen) (as Carmelita Desano); Revenge (Carewe) (as Rascha)
- 1929 Evangeline (Carewe) (title role)
- 1930 The Bad One (Fitzmaurice) (as Lita)
Dolores Del Rio, born into an aristocratic Mexican family, was the daughter of a banker, and also second cousin to the actor Ramon Novarro. In 1925 she came to the United States to begin an acting career that continued into the 1970s. She worked in American and Mexican films (she won four Arieles, Mexico’s equivalent to the Oscar), and international productions, with such major directors as Edwin Carewe (who discovered her at a Mexico City tea party, brought her to Hollywood, and was instrumental in helping her career), Busby Berkeley, Clarence Brown, Emilio Fernández, Roberto Gavaldón, Francesco Rosi, Don Siegel, Raoul Walsh, and Orson Welles.

Among the reasons for her remarkable staying power were her skill in creating believable characters and a beauty that transcended age—she was as lovely at 65 as she had been at 25. Most importantly, she never allowed herself to be typed as the sexy Mexican spitfire who fractures the English language. She brought dignity to both leading and character parts, portraying with ease women of all social classes.

Silent films had allowed Del Rio great flexibility in the roles she could play, with nationalities ranging from American Indian to Russian, Acadian, Brazilian, French, Spanish, and, of course, Mexican. In sound films she was more often cast as a woman of Mexican or Spanish descent because of her accent. Some of her most memorable roles in American films were as Charmaine in the World War I classic What Price Glory?, the Acadian woman who searches the bayous of Louisiana for her lost love in Evangeline, the stunning Brazilian heiress in Flying Down to Rio, a beautiful Polynesian native in Bird of Paradise, the title role in Madame Du Barry, the dancer Josette in Journey into Fear, Maria Dolores in The Fugitive, and a Kiowa Indian married to a white settler in Flying Star.

The first American phase of her career lasted from Edwin Carewe’s Joanna in 1925 to Orson Welles’s 1942 Journey into Fear, after which she returned to Mexico. She may have seen new opportunities in her native land: by brilliantly assembling a top director, Emilio Fernández, a top cinematographer, Gabriel Figueroa, and a top leading actor, Pedro Armendáriz, Del Rio shortly became one of Mexico’s leading box-office attractions. She continued to appear occasionally in some American films and television programs (for example, John Ford’s Cheyenne Autumn and an episode of Marcus Welby, M.D.). By the 1970s she was devoting less time to performing and more to charity work in Mexico.

In her article “Achieving Stardom” in Breaking into the Movies, Del Rio wrote, “my conception of a great success is... being capable of reflecting and impersonating all the beauty and cleverness of every different type of woman.” In her long and varied career, she conveyed both the inner and outer beauty of her characters, and she did so with authenticity and dignity.

—H. Wayne Schuth

DENCH, Judi

Films as Actress:

1964 The Third Secret (Crichton) [uncredited]
1965 A Study in Terror (Sherlock Holmes Grosster Fall and Fog) (Hill) (as Sally)
1966 He Who Rides a Tiger (Crichton) (as Joanne); Four in the Morning (Simmons) (as Wife); Days to Come (Bridges—on TV) (as Elizabeth)
1968 A Midsummer Night’s Dream (Hall) (as Titania)
1973 Luther (Green) (as Katherine)
1974 Dead Cert (Richardson) (as Laura Davidson)
1978 The Comedy of Errors (Casson and Nunn—for TV) (as Adriana)
1979 On Giant’s Shoulders (Simmons—for TV) (as Hazel Wiles); Macbeth (Nunn—for TV) (as Lady Macbeth)
1980 Love in a Cold Climate (McWhinnie) (mini, for TV) (as Aunt Sadie [Lady Alconleigh])
1983 Saigon: Year of the Cat (Fears—for TV) (as Barbara Dean)
1984 Playing Shakespeare (Barton) (mini, for TV) (as Herself)
1985 Mr. and Mrs. Edgehill (Millar—for TV) (as Dorrie Edgehill); The Browning Version (Simpson—for TV) (as Millie Crocker-Harris); Wetherby (Hare) (as Marcia Pilborough)
1986 A Room with a View (Ivory) (as Miss Lavish); Ghosts (Moshinsky—for TV) (as Mrs. Alving); 48 Charing Cross Road (Jones) (as Nora Doel)
1988 A Handful of Dust (Sturridge) (as Mrs. Beaver); Behaving Badly (Tucker—for TV) (as Bridget)
1989 Henry V (Branagh) (as Mistress Quickly)
1990 Can You Hear Me Thinking? (Morahan—for TV) (as Anne)
1991 Absolute Hell (Page—for TV) (as Christine Foskett)
1995 Jack and Sarah (Sullivan) (as Margaret); GoldenEye (Cammell) (as M)
1996 Hamlet (Branagh) (as Hecuba)
1997 Tomorrow Never Dies (Spottiswoode) (as M); After Murder Park (Birkin) (as Harriet Hawthorne); Mrs. Brown (Her Majesty, Mrs. Brown) (Madden) (as Queen Victoria)
1998 Shakespeare in Love (Madden) (as Queen Elizabeth); Hey Mr. Producer!: The Musical World of Cameron Mackintosh (Hey Mr. Producer) (as Desiree “Send In The Clowns’”)
1999 Tea with Mussolini (Un Te con Mussolini) (Zeffirelli) (as Arabella); The World Is Not Enough (Apted) (as M)
2000 Chocolat (Hallström) (as Armande); The Last of the Blonde Bombshells (for TV)
Films as Director:

1989  Look Back in Anger (for TV)

Publications

By DENCH: books—

Whom Do I Have the Honour of Addressing? (one-woman radio play), Radio 4, 1989

By DENCH: articles—

On DENCH: books—

On DENCH: articles—

* * *

When she won the 1999 Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress for her performance in Shakespeare in Love, it was widely felt that Dame Judi Dench had finally gotten her due. A Best Actress Oscar had eluded the British star of stage and screen two years earlier. for her highly praised performance in Mrs. Brown. Hollywood was quick to pay its debts, and by 1999 Dench was firmly ensconced in the Hollywood pantheon.

Like so many British stars of her generation, Judi Dench earned her acting stripes performing the classics on the British stage. At age 36, she was awarded the Order of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth. Eighteen years later, the British monarch bestowed on Dench a Damehood. Always rather slow on the uptake, Hollywood suddenly sat up and took notice, and Dench began to be cast in films such as A Room with a View, A Handful of Dust, Hamlet, and Tea with Mussolini. But it was her arch portrayal of Queen Elizabeth I in Shakespeare in Love that catapulted 65-year-old Dame Judi to movie stardom.

On stage, Dench has appeared in Shakespearean roles and musicals—she was the original Sally Bowles in Cabaret. She has been equally at home on the small screen, and her ongoing star turn in the Britcom, As Time Goes By, has been popular on both sides of the Atlantic. Her film career, however, was surprisingly sporadic before the mid-1980s.

During the 1960s, she appeared in A Midsummer Night’s Dream as a kittenish and sexy Titania, as well as in a horror film called A Study in Terror. The first film in which most American audiences saw Dench was the Merchant-Ivory favorite, A Room with a View, where Dench’s subtle comic stage timing rounded out a brilliant supporting cast that included Maggie Smith, Denholm Elliot, and Simon Callow. Dench’s supporting role as Anthony Hopkins’ loving wife in cult favorite 84 Charing Cross Road earned Dench more recognition among American audiences. But it wasn’t until the 1990s that Judi Dench made her mark in film history.

In a brilliant bit of casting, Dench played the spymaster M in two James Bond pictures, Tomorrow Never Dies and The World Is Not Enough. But it was her sympathetic portrayal of the steely yet lovelorn Queen Victoria in Mrs. Brown that gave Dench the opportunity to display her acting skills to the larger film public. As director Peter Hall described the actress, “‘She’s five foot nothing, and yet she’s got sex and wit, wit and sex.’”

The Oscar-nominated turn led to two more popular films—Tea with Mussolini and Shakespeare in Love. In Franco Zeffirelli’s evocative look at his childhood, Dench joined Joan Plowright and Maggie Smith as one of the “Scorpionis,” the eccentric, colorful, and strong-willed expatriate women of his youth. But it was Dench’s acerbic evocation of Elizabeth I that earned the 65-year-old actress the Oscar that many felt had long been denied her.

Now on the movie A-list in her mid-sixties, Dench may bask in her newfound cinematic popularity, even as she continues to enjoy her forays into every conceivable acting arena (winning a 1999 Tony Award for Amy’s View)—proving that she is indeed one of acting’s true and rare virtuosos.

—Victoria Price

DENEUVE, Cathérine

Nationality: French. Born: Cathérine Dorléac in Paris, 22 October 1943; daughter of the actors Maurice Teynac and Renee Deneuve; sister of the actress Françoise Dorléac. Education: Attended École Lamazou and Lycée La Fontaine. Family: Married the photographer David Bailey, 1965 (divorced 1972); son with the director Roger Vadim: the actor Christian Vadim; daughter with the actor Marcello Mastroianni: the actress Chiara Mastroianni. Career: Made her film debut in a bit role in Les Collégiennes, 1956; began a personal and professional relationship with director Roger Vadim, 1960; starred in Polanski’s Repulsion, 1964; made her American film debut in Stuart Rosenberg’s The April Fools, 1969; formed the production company Films de la Citrouille, 1971. Awards: Best Actress Cesar Award, for Le Dernier Metro, 1980; Best Actress César Award, for Indochine, 1992; Women in Film Crystal Award, 1993; San Sebastian International Film Festival Golden Seashell for Lifetime Achievement, 1995; Berlin Film Festival Honorary Golden Bear, 1998; Venice Film Festival Volpi Cup as Best Actress, for Place Vendome, 1998. Address: c/o Place St. Sulpice 76, Rue Bonaparte, Paris 75006, France.

Films as Actress:

1956 Les Collégiennes (The Twilight Girls) (Hunebelle)
1959 Les Petits Chats (Wild Roots of Love) (Villa)
1960 Les Portes claquent (The Doors Slam) (Poiret and Fermaud); L’Homme à femmes (Corna)
1961 ‘‘Sophie’’ ep. of Les Parisiennes (Tales of Paris; Of Beds and Broads) (Mallègre) (as Sophie)
1962 . . . et Satan conduit le bal (Satan Leads the Dance) (Dabat); Le Vice et la vertu (Vice and Virtue) (Vadim) (as Justine); Vacances portugaises (Kast)
1964 ‘‘L’Homme qui vendit la tour Eiffel’’ (‘‘Paris’’) ep. of Les Plus Belles Escroqueries du monde (The Beautiful Swindlers; World’s Greatest Swindlers) (Chabrol); Les Parapluies de Cherbourg (The Umbrellas of Cherbourg) (Demy) (as Geneviève Emery); La Chasse à l’homme (The Gentle Art of Seduction; Male Hunt) (Molinaro) (as Denise); Un Monstre de compagnie (Male Companion) (de Broca) (as Isabelle); La costanza della ragione (Avec amour et avec rage) (Campanile)
1965 Le Chant du monde (Camus); ‘‘Der Somnabulle’’ ep. of Das Liebeskarussell (Who Wants to Sleep?) (Thiele)
1966 Les Créatures (Varelserna) (Varla) (as Mylene); La Vie de Château (A Matter of Resistance) (Rappeneau) (as Marie)
1967 Belle de jour (Luis Buñuel) (as Severine Sevigny); Les Demoiselles de Rochefort (The Young Girls of Rochefort) (Demy) (as Delphine Garnier)
1968 Benjamin ou Les mémoires d’un puceau (Benjamin; The Diary of an Innocent Boy) (Deville) (as Anne de Clecy); Manon 70 (Aurel) (title role); La Chamade (Cavaliér); Mayerling (Terence Young) (as Baroness Maria Vetscra)
1969 The April Fools (Rosenberg) (as Cathérine Gunther); La Sirène du Mississippi (Mississippi Mermaid) (Truffaut) (as Julie Roussel/Marion); Tout peut arriver (Don’t Be Blue) (Labro)
1970 Tristana (Luis Buñuel) (title role); Peau d’âne (The Magic Donkey; Donkey Skin) (Demy) (title role/Blue Queen); Henri Langlois (Hershon and Guerra)
1971 Ça n’arrive qu’aux autres (It Only Happens to Others) (Trintignant) (as Cathérine)
1972  La cagna (Lisa) (Ferreri) (as Liza); Un flic (Dirty Money; A Cop) (Melville) (as Cathy)

1973  L’Événement le plus important depuis que l’homme a marché sur la lune (The Slightly Pregnant Man) (Demy); Touche pas à la femme blanche (Don’t Touch White Women) (Ferreri) (as Marie-Elene)

1974  Fatti di gente perbene (La Grande Bourgeoise; The Murri Affair; Drama of the Rich) (Bolognini) (as Linda Murri); La Femme aux bottes rouges (The Lady with the Red Boots; The Woman with the Red Boots) (Juan Buñuel) (as Françoise); Zig-zag (Szabó) (as Marie)

1975  L’Agression (Act of Aggression) (Pirès); Hustle (Aldrich) (as Nicole Britton); Le Sauvage (Lovers Like Us; The Savage) (Rappeneau) (as Nelly)

1976  Si c’était à refaire (Second Chance) (Lelouch) (as Cathérine); Anima persa (Lost Soul; The Forbidden Room) (Risi)

1977  March or Die (Richards) (as Simone Picard); Coup de foudre (Enrico); Il Casotto (The Beach Hut) (Citti) (as woman in the dream)

1978  L’Argent des autres (Dirty Money) (de Chalonge); Si je suis comme ça, c’est la faute de papa (When I Was a Kid, I Didn’t Dare); Ecoute voir … (Look See …) (Santiago) (as Alphanol)

1979  * Ils sont grands ces petits* (These Kids Are Grown-ups) (Santoni) (as Louise); À Nous deux (Adventure for Two) (Lelouch)

1980  * Courage, fuyons* (Robert) (as Eva); Le Dernier Métro (The Last Metro) (Truffaut) (as Marion Steiner); Je vous aime (I Love All of You) (Berri); Abattre

1981  Le Choix des Armes (Choice of Arms) (Corneau) (as Nicole Durieux); A Second Chance (Lelouch) (as Cathérine Berger); Reporters (Depardon)

1982  Le Choc (The Shock) (Robin Davis); Hotel des Amériques (Hotel of the Americas) (Téchiné) (as Hélène)

1983  L’Africain (The African) (de Broca) (as Charlotte); Fort Saganne (Corneau) (as Louise); Le Bon Plaisir (Girod) (as Clair Després)

1984  The Hunger (Tony Scott) (as Miriam); Paroles et musique (Love Songs) (Chouraqui) (as Margaux)

1985  Speriamo che sia femmina (Let’s Hope It’s a Girl) (Monicelli) (as Aunt Claudia)

1986  Le Lieu du crime (The Scene of the Crime) (Téchiné) (as Lili)

1987  Agent Trouble (Mocky) (as Amanda Weber)
1988  Drole d’endroit pour une rencontre (A Strange Place to Meet) (Dupeyron) (as France, + pr); Fréquence meurtre (Rappeneau) (as Jeanne Quester)
1989  Terres jaunes (Wargnier); Helmut Newton: Frames from the Edge (doc) (as Herself)
1990  Fleur de Rubis (Mocky)
1991  La Reine Blanche (Hubert) (as Liliane Ripoche)
1992  Indochine (Wargnier) (as Eliane Devries); Contre l’oubli (Against Oblivion) (Akerman and others) (as Herself)
1993  Ma Saison Préférée (My Favorite Season) (Téchiné) (as Emilie); Les Demoiselles ont eu 25 Ans (The Young Girls Turn 25) (Varda—doc)
1994  La Partie d’echecs (The Chess Game) (Hanchar) (as Marquise); Petits heures du matin
1995  Les Cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Actor for a Day); O Convento (The Convent) (de Oliviera) (as Hélène)
1996  Les Voleurs (Thieves) (Téchiné) (as Marie Leblanc)
1997  Généalogies d’un crime (Genealogies of a Crime) (Ruiz) (as Jeanne/Solange)
1998  Place Vendôme (Garcia) (as Marianne)
1999  Le Temps retrouvé (Ruiz) (as Odette); The Last Nepoleon (as Empress Eugenie); Est-ouest (Wargnier) (as Gabrielle Develay); A Carta (de Oliveira); Le Vent de la nuit (Garrel); Belle Maman (Aghion) (as Léa); Pola X (Carax) (as Marie)
2000  Dancer in the Dark (von Trier) (as Kathy)

On DENEUVE: articles—

* * *

The wit who mistranslated “La Belle Dame sans merci” as “The Beautiful Lady Who Never Says ‘Thank You’” achieved by chance a perfect encapsulation of France’s two most potent female stars of the 1960s. On an axis with Jeanne Moreau at one pole and Cathérine Deneuve at the other, that cinema can be seen to revolve—an industry and art, paradoxically for a nation united under de Gaulle in its respect for family, social formality, and la gloire, which preoccupied itself with the demi-mondaine: gamblers, criminals, soldiers of fortune, and, most of all, its destructive, beguiling, but always unbeholden feminine adventurers.

Of the actresses who played these soiled heroines, none succeeded more stylishly than Deneuve. Moreau’s pouting sourness led her, via an association with the nouvelle vague, to the epicene baroque of late Fassbinder. Deneuve, almost preternaturally beautiful, a confection of peach skin and golden hair, offered little to stimulate the new directors, with the exception of Roger Vadim. She survived two routine films with him (as well as the obligatory domestic entanglement) to become one of France’s most successful star exports, a symbol of lustful purity for forces as disparate as Luis Buñuel and Chanel perfume.

The title of an otherwise unremarkable film, Touche pas à la femme blanche, might be her emblem. Deneuve’s most potent stock in trade has always been a beguiling and complaisant innocence, combined with an ingrained seriousness, even solemnity, that her most unbuttoned action cannot dislodge. To see Deneuve laughing is to see her naked, yet physical nudity reveals no more of this remarkable woman than it would of the young Garbo.

Whether playing a high-priced Los Angeles call girl in Aldrich’s Hustle, a psychopath in Polanski’s Repulsion, the bisexual private eye

On DENEUVE: books—

Publications

By DENEUVE: articles—

Interview with Serge Toubiana, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1986.

On DENEUVE: books—

of Ecoute voir . . ., or a second-rate chanteuse in the trivial farce Courage, j'évas, she remains apparently remote, calm, moving to a private rhythm, occupied with thoughts uniquely her own. As Jacques Siclier wrote of her role as the compromised political wife in Le Bon Plaisir, “Here, where artifice covers everything, Cathérine Deneuve remains honest, natural and disinterested.”

An actress capable of playing, on the one hand, the sentimental provincial heroines of Demy’s musical fantasies Les Parapluies de Cherbourg and Les Demoiselles de Rochefort and the fairy story Pou d’an, and on the other the calculating lovers of Benjamin ou Les mémoires d’un puceau, Manon 70, Mayerling, and Truffaut’s La Sirène du Mississippi, as well as the insolvent anti-Nazi schemer of his Le Dernier Métro, would clearly attract Buñuel. But it was the disinterested Siclier mentions which gave Buñuel the material for Belle de jour and Tristana. Buñuel distilled the essence of Deneuve’s appeal. Calm but never placid, distant but always touchable, subtly or, as the amputee of Tristana, grossly mutilated but confident in her essential concept of self, she epitomized his vision of woman as destroying angel—a whore with a heart, not of gold, but of glass. In particular Belle de jour, Deneuve’s sexuality is self-contained; she is the detached yet eternally sexual (as opposed to romantic) creature. In this film, she was never more beautiful in the role of Severine, a virginal upper-class lady of leisure who has everything a woman who has not embraced feminism could ask for: porcelain good looks, a handsome and successful husband, servants and good clothes, and all the time to spend money she has had no part in earning. But Severine is despondent. She begins having erotic fantasies. And soon, she takes part-time work in a brothel: a job she eventually comes to relish. Severine does not know why she is so attracted to her double life. “But without this I could not live,” she eventually remarks, of her employment. One cannot imagine any actress other than Deneuve in the role of Severine.

Like Moreau, Deneuve decorated her middle years with portraits of surpassing decadence, but characteristically the crumbling exterior of Moreau’s raddled madam in Querelle hid a girlish romantic, while Deneuve as the vampire in Tony Scott’s The Hunger, though outwardly unmarked by age, has decayed to the core with centuries of lust and self-regard. Yet her innocence remained, almost to the end, unsullied, her tenderness for her dying partner David Bowie sincere and touching, her seduction of Susan Sarandon no mere acquisition of fresh meat but an act of carnal and spiritual love. La Belle Dame sans merci, certainly, but also, as so often with this remarkable actress, sans peur et sans reproche.

Deneuve has continued to play the sexual creature, in films ranging in quality from the low of Paroles et musique, in which she has a relationship with an ambitious young rock singer, to the high of Indochine, in which she and her adopted Vietnamese daughter fall for a navy officer. In the latter, she transcends the film’s soap opera storyline, offering a deservedly acclaimed performance. Two of her best 1990s roles came in films directed by Andre Techine, both thoughtful and involving explorations of emotions in which she co-starred with Daniel Auteuil. In Ma Saison Preferee, Deneuve plays a troubled woman who has a passionless relationship with her husband. Her one true soul mate is her younger brother (Auteuil), with whom she has been estranged, and their attempt to reconcile results in a complex psychological tug-of-war as they are forced to deal with their unresolved feelings. In Les Voleurs, Deneuve is a philosophy professor who, along with Auteuil’s no-nonsense police detective, is amorously fixated on the same scruffy, unpredictable yet alluring young woman (Laurence Cote). In both films, Deneuve and Auteuil are able to make even the most rudimentary dramatic sequences pulsate with emotion.

Now well into middle-age, Deneuve has settled in as one of the French cinema’s aristocrats and legends. Any film in which she appears, even in a small role—such as Est-ouest, in which she plays an actress—automatically radiates prestige.

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

---

DE NIRO, Robert

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 17 August 1943.
Awards: National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actor, for Mean Streets, 1973; New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actor, for Bang the Drum Slowly, 1973; Best Supporting Actor, for The Wedding Party, 1969.

---

Robert De Niro in Cape Fear
Academy Award, for The Godfather, Part II, 1974; National Society of Film Critics Best Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actor, for Taxi Driver, 1976; Best Actor Academy Award, New York Film Critics Circle Best Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Actor, National Board of Review Best Actor, Best Motion Picture Actor-Drama Golden Globe, for Raging Bull, 1980; New York Film Critics Circle Best Actor, for Awakenings and Goodfellas, 1990; National Board of Review Best Actor (with Robin Williams), for Awakenings, 1990; Venice Film Festival Golden Lion for Career Achievement, 1993. Agent: Jay Julien, 1501 Broadway, New York, NY 10036, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1969 The Wedding Party (De Palma) (as Cecil); Greetings (De Palma) (as Jon Rubin)
1970 Hi, Mom! (De Palma) (as Jon Rubin); Bloody Mama (Corman) (as Lloyd Barker)
1971 Jennifer on My Mind (Black) (as gypsy cab driver); The Gang That Couldn’t Shoot Straight (Goldstone) (as Mario); Born to Win (Passer) (as Danny)
1973 Bang the Drum Slowly (Hancock) (as Bruce Pearson); Mean Streets (Scorsese) (as Johnny Boy)
1974 The Godfather, Part II (Coppola) (as Vito Corleone)
1976 Taxi Driver (Scorsese) (as Travis Bickle); Novecento (1900) (Bertolucci) (as Alfredo); The Last Tycoon (Kazan) (as Monroe Stahr)
1977 New York, New York (Scorsese) (as Jimmy); The Deer Hunter (Cimino) (as Mike)
1980 Raging Bull (Scorsese) (as Jake LaMotta); The Swap (Shade) (as Sammy)
1981 True Confessions (Grosbard) (as Des Spellacy)
1982 The King of Comedy (Scorsese) (as Rupert Pupkin)
1984 Once Upon a Time in America (Leone) (as Noodles); Falling in Love (Grossbard) (as Frank)
1985 Brazil (Gilliam) (as Tuttle)
1986 The Mission (Joffe) (as Mendoza)
1987 Angel Heart (Parker) (as Louis Cyphre); The Untouchables (De Palma) (as Al Capone); Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Coutaurié—doc for TV)
1988 Jacknife (David Jones) (as Joseph “Megs” Megassey); Midnight Run (Brest) (as Jack Walsh)
1989 Stanley and Iris (Ritt) (as Stanley Cox); We’re No Angels (Neil Jordan) (as Ned/Fr. Reilly, + exec pr)
1990 GoodFellas (Scorsese) (as James Conway); Awakenings (Penny Marshall) (as Leonard Love)
1991 Guilty by Suspicion (Irwin Winkler) (as David Merrill); Backdraft (Ron Howard) (as Donald Ringdale); Cape Fear (Scorsese) (as Max Cady)
1992 Night and the City (Winkler) (as Harry Fabian); Mistress (Primus) (as Evan M. Wright) (+ co-pr)
1993 This Boy’s Life (Caton-Jones) (as Dwight); Mad Dog and Glory (McNaughton) (as Wayne “Mad Dog” Dobie)
1994 Mary Shelley’s Frankenstein (Branagh) (as The Creature/Sharp) (+ assoc pr)
1995 Casino (Scorsese) (as Sam “Ace” Rothstein); Heat (Mann) (as Neil McCauley); Les Cent et une Nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Actor for a Day)
1996 The Fan (Tony Scott) (as Gil Renard); Marvin’s Room (Zaks) (as Dr. Wally) (+ pr); Sleepers (Levinson) (as Father Bobby)
1997 Cop Land (Mangold) (as Moe Tilden); Wag the Dog (Levinson) (as Conrad Brean) (+ co-pr); Jackie Brown (Tarantino) (as Louis Gara)
1998 Great Expectations (Cuaron) (as Arthur Lustig); Ronin (Frankenheimer) (as Sam); Lenny Bruce: Swear to Tell the Truth (Weide—for TV) (doc) (as Narrator)
1999 Analyze This (Ramis) (as Paul Vitti); Flawless (Schumacher) (as Walt Koonzt)
2000 Meet the Parents (Roach) (as Jack Byrnes); The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle (McAnuff) (as Fearless Leader); Fifteen Minutes (Herzfeld) (as Eddie Fleming); Men of Honor (Tillman, Jr.) (as Billy Sunday)
2001 The Score (Oz) (as Nick Wells)

Other Films:

1992 Thunderheart (Apted) (co-pr)
1993 A Bronx Tale (d, co-pr, ro as Lorenzo Anello)

Publications

By DE NIRO: articles—

Interview with Steve Grant, in Time Out (London), 22 May 1991.
Interview with M. Meens, in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), February 1995.

On DE NIRO: books—

On DE NIRO: articles—

Robert De Niro is nearly incapable of a thoughtless performance. Early in his career, he radiated appeal in several carefully devised, vividly realistic supporting roles, notably as the none-too-bright, fatally ill baseball player in Bang the Drum Slowly and young Vito Corleone in The Godfather, Part II, even winning an Oscar for the latter. Still, this stage of his career is best exemplified by the film in which he first gained prominence, Martin Scorsese’s Mean Streets, in which he plays Johnny Boy, a reckless young hood who roams—and invariably finds trouble on—the byways of New York’s Little Italy.

In the tradition of Marlon Brando—who originated the role of Vito Corleone in the first Godfather film—De Niro eschews the Method approach in creating a role. Reportedly, he drove a cab before playing the title character in Taxi Driver, spent hours hitting baseballs prior to Bang the Drum Slowly, and even gained the excess poundage required for his appearance as the aging Jake LaMotta in Raging Bull. His casting as the younger Vito symbolizes the passing of the mantle from one generation of Method actors to the next. Unlike Brando, however, De Niro did not dissipate his talent, ultimately showing up infrequently on-screen and mumbling his way through his roles. If anything, De Niro has been a prolific screen actor, appearing in an astonishing variety of roles both starring and supporting, and playing each with equal aplomb.

Yet De Niro’s career remains most associated with that of Scorsese. In the annals of screen history, the Scorsese-De Niro union rates right alongside the collaboration of von Sternberg and Dietrich. Their director-actor relationship is even visualized on-screen in Taxi Driver, in which Scorsese, in a cameo role as a frenzied passenger in De Niro’s cab, verbalizes the paranoia that motivates the De Niro character and the subsequent, violent bloodbath he will instigate.

In The King of Comedy and Taxi Driver, De Niro superbly plays a classic Scorsese character: the social misfit-psycho who is transformed into a weirdo-celebrity by a society ever willing to elevate oddballs to pop-culture status. In The King of Comedy, the actor perfectly captures the superficial and destructive amiability of Rupert Pupkin, a fame-obsessed nonentity who yearns to be a guest on a late night talk show hosted by a Johnny Carson-like celebrity. While Pupkin does have some talent as a stand-up comic, he really does not want to work at his craft. All he wants is stardom and fame. It is the idea of being a celebrity that appeals to him, not the creative work involved in honing his craft. He eventually wins that celebrity, but only after kidnapping the talk show host. In Taxi Driver, De Niro gives a now-legendary performance as Travis Bickle, an ex-Marine and pill-popping loner from some nameless spot in the Midwest who has come to New York and taken a job driving a cab. The semiarticulate Bickle is an outsider even to the prostitutes, deadbeats, and castoffs who inhabit the Manhattan terrain like rats in a ghetto hovel. There is a void in his brain; although he earnestly tries to communicate with others, he comes off with the charm and coherence of an airplane glue freak. He sets out to assassinate a presidential hopeful—which would link him to the Lee Harvey Oswalds and James Earl Rays of history—but instead kills a vicious pimp who has enslaved a 12-year-old runaway-prostitute, so he is lionized by the media.

In Raging Bull, De Niro’s second Oscar-winning performance, he plays a deeply flawed character who did earn fame based on legitimate merit: real-life boxer Jake LaMotta, the Bronx Bull, who in 1949 capped the middleweight title from Marcel Cerdan. LaMotta is depicted as an inarticulate, insanely jealous man who does not use his mind and cannot control his temper. He starts out as a cocky and confident young fighter and ends up fat, punchdrunk, and pathetic, separated and alienated from the people he loves. As LaMotta, De Niro is nothing short of extraordinary. He simply chews into the role, digests it, and spits it out across the screen.

The actor’s other screen characterizations for Scorsese, all of them fully realized, have placed him within the milieu of gangsters and wiseguys. In GoodFellas, he is a career hoodlum; in Cape Fear, he is a vengeful psychopath; in Casino, he is a bookie-gambler who becomes a Las Vegas casino manager, leaving the muscle to others. Another superlative criminal role came in Heat, directed by Michael Mann, in which he is a cool, disciplined gang boss who is the prey of a determined cop (Al Pacino, whose acting style and city boy charisma inextricably link him to De Niro). These parts can be contrasted to his ingratiatingly comical bounty hunter in Midnight Run; sensitive intellectual in Guilty by Suspicion; patient who awakens from a three-decades-long coma in Awakenings; and, most tellingly, his small town Ukrainian-American steelworker with a firmly rooted sense of honor and duty, who heads off to Vietnam in The Deer.
Hunter. De Niro even has played the Frankenstein monster (in Mary Shelley's Frankenstein), adding an impressive level of depth and feeling to the character. In A Bronx Tale (playing a bus driver), Falling in Love (cast as a suburbanite), and Mad Dog and Glory (playing a cop), the actor showed that he can act average, essentially colorless, and even retiring characters with the same verve and believability as his Al Capone in The Untouchables. Only rarely does De Niro miscalculate a performance. Such a case is We're No Angels, in which he hams it up in his role as a none-too-bright escaped convict.

De Niro made his directorial debut with A Bronx Tale, expanded from Chazz Palminteri's one-character play. It is a story of the coming-of-age of a young Italian-American on the Bronx streets during the early 1960s, and his relationship to two very different men. They are Lorenzo (played by De Niro), his honest, hard-working bus driver father; and Sonny (played by Palminteri), a macho gangster who is feared by all in the neighborhood, and who thinks that working men like Lorenzo are suckers. For a young boy attempting to define his identity, Sonny is a much more appealing role model than Lorenzo. In this regard, the scenario contrasts these two characters: the flashy guy who “pulls the trigger,” and the less glamorous, more anonymous man who actually is the real “tough guy” in that he gets up each morning, goes to work, and supports his family. Additionally, A Bronx Tale examines the roots and meaning of racism as it depicts the changing face of urban America. As the years pass, the turf of the Italian-American Bronx neighborhood in which the film is set is encroached upon by an African-American community. The residents of each are culturally disparate, and their mistrust of each other borders on blind hatred.

Not surprisingly, A Bronx Tale is a New York City drama which, in its best moments, seethes with the same raw emotion found in the De Niro-Scorsese collaborations. “I’m not crazy about directing myself in a film, because for me it takes the joy out of acting,” De Niro declared, at the 1993 Toronto Film Festival. “But I would like to direct more movies. It takes a lot of work and energy to direct. But it’s worth it, if you are able to make something that is good and special.” This last sentiment also might apply to De Niro’s body of work in front of the camera, which ranks among the best of any late twentieth-century American actor.

—Robin Wood

And as the century faded De Niro may not have returned to directing, but he still remained a constant and welcome presence on movie screens. His roles—starring, supporting, and cameo—still were remarkably varied, ranging from a none-too-bright ex-convict (in Jackie Brown) to a slick, cynical political operator/spin doctor (The Wolf of Wall Street); a gun-for-hire mercenary (Ronin) to a medical man with a less-than-reassuring bedside manner (Marvin’s Room); the escaped convict in a modernized version of Great Expectations to an NYPD Internal Affairs officer investigating police corruption (Cop Land); a psycho/loser who stalks a major league baseball star (The Fan) to a retired security guard with a conservative world-view who establishes a bond with his next door neighbor, a drag queen (Flawless). By far his most celebrated role came in Analyze This, Harold Ramis’s amusing farce. Here, De Niro deftly lampooned his tough-guy roles and Scorsese persona, cast as a fabled mobster in dire need of therapy.

—updated by Rob Edelman

DEPARDIEU, Gérard

Films as Actor:

1965 Le Beatinik et le minet (Leenhardt—short); Christmas Carol (Varda)
1970 Le Cri du cormoran, le soir au-dessus des jonques (Audiard)
1971 Un peu de soleil dans l’eau froide (Deray); Le Tueur (de la Patellière)
1972 Nathalie Granger (Duras) (as saleswoman); La Scoumoune (Giovanni) (as burglar); Au rendez-vous de la mort joyeuse (Juan Buñuel); L’Affaire Dominici (Bernardt-Aubert); Le Viager (Tchernia)
1973 Deux hommes dans la ville (Two against the Law) (Giovanni); Rude journée pour la reine (Rough Day for the Queen) (Allio); Les Gaspards (The Holes) (Tchernia); Les Valseuses (Going Places) (Blier) (as Jean-Claude); Stavisky (Resnais); La Femme du Ganges (Duras)
1974 Vincent, François, Paul, et les autres (Sautet); Pas si méchant que ça (The Wonderful Crook) (Goretta) (as Pierre)
1975 Maîtresse (Schroeder) (as Olivier); 7 Morts sur ordonnance (Rouffio); Je t’aime, moi non plus (Gainsbourg) (as René la Canne); Bertolucci secondo il cinema (Amelia—doc); L’ultima donna (La Dernière Femme) (Ferreri)
1976 1900 (Novecento) (Bertolucci) (as Olmo Dalco); Barocco (Tchéhiné) (as Samson); Baxter—Vera Baxter (Duras); René la Canne (Girod)
1977 Le Camion (Duras); Violanta (Schmid); La Nuit tous les chats sont gris (Zingg); Dites-lui que je t’aime (This Sweet
1978 Ciao maschio (Bye Bye Monkey; Reve de Singe) (Ferreri) (as Gérard Lafayette); Le Sucre (Rouffio); Les Chiens (Jessua)
1979 L’Ingorgo (Traffic Jam) (Comencini) (as Franco); Temporale Rosy (Monicelli) (as Raoul); Buffet froid (Blier) (as Alphonse Tram)
1980 Mon Oncle d’Amérique (Resnais) (as Rene Ragueneau); Le Dernier Métro (The Last Metro) (Truffaut) (as Bernard Granger); Inspecteur La Bavure (Zidi) (as Roger Morzini); Je vous aime (I Love All of You) (Berri); Loulou (Pialat) (title role)
1981 Le Chèvre (The Goat) (Veber—released in U.S. in 1985) (as Campana); La Femme d’à côté (The Woman Next Door) (Truffaut) (as Bernard Coudray); Le Choix des armes (Choice of Arms) (Corneau) (as Mickey); Le Retour de Martin Guerre (The Return of Martin Guerre) (Vigne) (title role)
1982 Danton (Wajda) (title role); Le Grand Frère (Girod) (as Gérard Berger/Bernard Vigo)
1983 La Lune dans le caniveau (The Moon in the Gutter) (Beineix) (as Gérard); Les Compères (Veber) (as Jean Lucas, + co-pr); Fort Sagane (Corneau) (as Charles Saganne)
1984 Rive droite, rive gauche (Right Bank, Left Bank) (Labro) (as Paul Senznques)
1985 Police (Pialat) (as Mangin); Une Femme ou deux (One Woman or Two; A Woman or Two) (Vigne) (as Julien Chayssac)
1986 Les Fugitifs (Veber) (as Jean Lucas); Jean de Florette (Berri) (as Cadoret/title role); Rue du départ (Gatlif) (as Dr. Lombart); Tenue de soirée (Menage) (Blier) (as Bob); Je hais les acteurs (I Hate Actors) (Krawczyk) (as prisoner in police station)
1987 Sous le soleil de Satan (Under Satan’s Sun) (Pialat) (as Father Donissan)
1988 Camille Claudel (Nyутten) (as Auguste Rodin); Drole d’endroit pour une rencontre (A Strange Place to Meet) (Dupeyron) (as Charles)
1989 Je veux rentrer à la maison (I Want to Go Home) (Resnais) (as Christian Gauthier); Deux (Two) (Zidi); Trop belle pour toi (Too Beautiful for You) (Blier) (as Bernard Barthélémy)
1990  Cyano de Bergerac (Rappeneau) (title role); Green Card (Weir) (as Georges Fauré); Shakhra Proshakha (Branches of the Tree) (Satyajit Ray)
1991 Uranus (Berri) (as Leopold); Merci la vie (Thanks for Life) (Blier) (as Dr. Worms); Mon Pere ce heros (Lauzier) (as André)
1992 492: The Conquest of Paradise (Ridley Scott) (as Christophe Columbus); Tous les matins du monde (All the Mornings of the World) (Corneau) (as Marin Marais)
1993 Hélas pour moi (Oh, Woe Is Me) (Godard) (as Simon Donnadieu); My Father, the Hero (Miner) (as André); Germinal (Berri) (as Maheu)
1994 Une Pure Formalité (A Pure Formality) (Tornatore) (as Onoff); La Machine (The Machine) (Dupeyrong) (as Dr. Marc Lacroix); Elisa (Jean Becker) (as Jacques Desmoulins); Le Garcu (Pialat) (as Gérard)
1995 Colonel Chabert (Angelo) (title role); Les Cent et une Nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varde) (as Actor for a Day); François Truffaut: Portraits Voles (François Truffaut: Stolen Portraits) (Toubiana and Pascal) (doc) (as Himself); Le Hussard sur le toit (The Horseman on the Roof) (Rappeneau) (as Le commissaire de police)
1996 Les Anges Gardiens (Poiré) (as Antoine Carco); Bogus (Jewison) (as Bogus); La Gaulois; Hamlet (Brannagh) (as Reynaldo); The Secret Agent (Hampton) (as Ossipon); Unhook the Stars (Nick Cassavetes) (as Big Tommy); Le Plus beau meter du monde (Lauzier) (as Laurent Monier)
1997 XXL (Zeitoun) (as Jean Bourdalaou)
1998 The Man in the Iron Mask (Wallace) (as Porthos); La Parola amore existe (Notes of Love) (Calopresti) (as Avv. Levi); Le Comte de Monte Cristo (Dayan—for TV) (as Lord Wilmore/Edmond Dantes/The Count of Monte Cristo); Bimboland (Zeitoun) (as Laurent Gaspard)
1999 Wings Against the Wind (Paley); Passionnément (Nuytten); Balzac (Dayan—for TV) (as Honore de Balzac); Mirka (Benhadj) (as Stix); Asterix et Obelix contre Cesar (Zidi) (as Obelix)
2000 Les Acteurs (Blier) (as Gérard Depardieu); Val Et Jal (as Vallet); Vidocq (Clavier) (as Vidocq); Les Miserables (Dayan—for TV) (as Jean Valjean) (+ pr); 102 Dalmations (Lima) (as Monsieur Le Pelt); Tutto l’amore che c’e (All the Love There Is) (Rubini) (as Molotov); Le Placard (Weber)

By DEPARDIEU: articles—

Interview in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), May 1981.
Interview with Serge Toubiana, in Cahiers du Cinéma (Paris), December 1986.
Interview with Stephen O’Shea, in Interview (New York), December 1990.

On DEPARDIEU: books—

On DEPARDIEU: articles—

Ehrenstein, David, “French Active,” in Advocate (Los Angeles) 3 November 1982.

On DEPARDIEU: book—

Stars (Marienbourg, Belgium), June 1990.

Naddaf, Roswitha, “Ein empfindsamer Brocken,” in Film-dienst (G), 4 June 1996.

* * *

Simply put, Gérard Depardieu is both a consummate actor and his generation’s premier European-born screen star. Like Marcello Mastroianni before him, he has been able to outshine his fellow European leading men and become a respected and valued international star: one of the few actors who primarily appears in non-English language films, but who has name recognition even among those who dismiss “art house” fare in favor of the most commercial Hollywood product.

Also like Mastroianni, Depardieu is an actor with smoldering intensity and a riveting screen presence who is as equally adept in dramas and comedies, serious films and strictly entertaining ones, and both period and contemporary scenarios. In them, he has brilliantly played a rainbow of characters: from peasant to politician; average working- or middle-class hero who finds himself in extraordinary situations to brooding, alienated antihero; idealistic romantic to bullying macho man and despicable, antisocial villain. A glance at Depardieu’s eye-poppingly lengthy filmography serves as a reminder that he has appeared in an extraordinary number of the most praise-worthy motion pictures released since the mid-1970s.

Unlike Mastroianni, however, Depardieu lacks a more traditional movie-star handsomeness. He is a burly man who is inclined to put on weight, and whose facial characteristics might be described as common; his physical presence is closer to that of a Jean Gabin than a Mastroianni. As a type, he is more closely related to Gabin, Lino Ventura, and Harry Baur than suave Charles Boyer and Louis Jouard, two Frenchmen who went on to become Hollywood personalities.

Among Depardieu’s noteworthy early career roles—those that helped solidify his stardom—were ones in which his characters are seethingly sexual, and fashioned to shock middle-class complacency: the amoral hooligan who uses and abuses (sexually and otherwise) everyone he meets, in Going Places; the carefree but brutal working class loit more appealing to a bourgeois young woman than her well-bred lover, in Loulou; and the male chauvinist of classic proportion who is confused by the changing role of women, in The Last Woman. In the latter, he mostly parades about in the nude and, at the finale, cuts off his sex organ. Depardieu’s talent for portraying brute force and vulnerability, in part through the contrast between his massive body and tender voice, has coincided with a femininst-oriented interest in questioning traditional gender roles and identity. And so he has played the sexually-oriented male whose actions are, to say the least, unconventional: the husband who willing finds his sexually unresponsive wife a lover, in Get Out Your Handkerchiefs; the devil-may-care homosexual crook, in Menage; and the businessman who rejects his beautiful wife for his plain, ordinary-looking temporary office worker, in Too Beautiful for You. Like Going Places, these three films were directed by Bertrand Blier; Depardieu has, over the years, consistently worked with the most respected French auteurs, including François Truffaut, Alain Resnais, Marguerite Duras, Maurice Pialat, and Claude Berri.

Perhaps the most striking aspect of Depardieu’s talent is his ability to make believable completely disparate characters. He is perfectly cast as the simple blue-collar Everyman who is the victim of injustice (most especially as the hunchback farmer in Jean de Florette); yet he is as equally mesmerizing as characters who are uncompromisingly hard-boiled (the sexist, racist lawmaker in Police) and brilliantly idealistic (the title characters in Danton and Cyrano de Bergerac, arguably his two greatest screen roles to date). Despite his heady list of intense and serious characterizations, Depardieu’s versatility is further evidenced by his appearances in such undemanding, popular comedies as Les Compères and Les Fugitifs. In a similar vein, he has given charming performances in two English-language comedies, Green Card and My Father, the Hero (a remake of his 1991 French feature Mon Pere ce heros), and the comedy-fantasy Bogus. In each, his charisma allows him to transcend the thinness of the material; his mere presence in Bogus, playing the imaginary friend of a little boy who has just been orphaned, adds a much-needed jolt to the mawkish storyline. To date, Depardieu’s best English-language role is in Unhook the Stars, in which he is cast as a French-Canadian truck driver who becomes infatuated with a suburban Salt Lake City widow (Gena Rowlands). The film is a finely crafted exploration of the tensions and alienation found in quiet, desperate lives. Depardieu’s few brief scenes with Rowlands, in which his character attempts to make a human connection with hers, are nothing short of wonderful.

Among Depardieu’s highest-profile projects at the tail end of the 1990s were a series of impressively mounted made-for-TV adaptations. He had the title roles in The Count of Monte Cristo and the biopic Balzac, and starred as Jean Valjean in Les Miserables. He also was one of the members of the star-laden international casts of a pair of adaptations of literary classics. While he appeared all-too-briefly as Reynaldo in Kenneth Branagh’s Hamlet, he was a colorful Porthos opposite Leonardo DiCaprio, Jeremy Irons, John Malkovich, and Gabriel Byrne in The Man in the Iron Mask. Depardieu’s on-screen output remains as diverse, challenging, and compelling as ever—and there is no indication that, as he ages, he will forfeit his superstar status either at home or abroad.

—Rob Edelman
DEPP, Johnny

Films as Actor:

1980 Friday the 13th (Sean S. Cunningham)
1984 A Nightmare on Elm Street (Craven) (as Glen Lantz)
1985 Private Resort (George Bowers) (as Jack Marshall)
1986 Platoon (Oliver Stone) (as Lerner); Slow Burn (Matthew Chapman—for TV)
1990 Cry-Baby (Waters) (title role); Edward Scissorhands (Tim Burton) (title role)
1991 Freddy’s Dead: The Final Nightmare (Talalay) (cameo)
1992 Arizona Dream (Kusturica) (as Axel Blackmar)
1993 Benny & Joon (Chechik) (as Sam); What’s Eating Gilbert Grape (Hallström) (title role)
1994 Ed Wood (Tim Burton) (title role)
1995 Nick of Time (Badham) (as Gene Watson); Don Juan DeMarco (Jeremy Leven) (title role)
1996 Donnie Brasco (Newell); Dead Man (Jarmusch) (as William Blake)
1998 Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas (Gilliam) (as Raoul Duke); The Astronaut’s Wife (Ravich) (as Spencer Armacost)
1999 Sleepy Hollow (Burton) (as Ichabod Crane); The Ninth Gate (Polanski) (as Dean Corso); The Source (Workman) (as Jack Kerouac)

Publications

By DEPP: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), July 1987.
Interview with John Waters, in Interview (New York), April 1990.
Interview with Anita Chaudhuri, in Time Out (London), 7 July 1993.
Interview with Jamie Diamond, in Cosmopolitan (New York), November 1993.
Interview with Brendan Lemon, in Interview (New York), December 1995.
Interview with Kevin Cook, in Playboy (Chicago), January 1996.

On DEPP: books—

On DEPP: articles—

* * *

In watching Johnny Depp in his early movies, one may have been charmed by his performances, such as that in Cry-Baby, but few would have claimed the young man was destined to become one of the finest actors/stars/presences of his generation. One could not, back then, be aware of his potential range—both emotional range and range of characterization. A mere five years after Cry-Baby, we find him in Don Juan DeMarco, paired with Marlon Brando, no less, and elegantly holding his own. He is perhaps, in his way, Brando’s equal—though an equal as different as can be imagined. Depp’s performance style being far removed from Method-derived acting.

In many respects he seems a strange anomaly in contemporary Hollywood, with its preoccupation with violent action or special effects in movies characterized by the hysterical overvaluation of masculinity in the persons of stars such as Stallone and Schwarzenegger (an obvious response to feminism, and already disintegrating into self-parody). While his image has been consistently rooted in male heterosexuality (even when he cross-dresses in Ed Wood), he is surely the least aggressively masculine of all currently popular stars. His persona is centered upon gentleness, sensitivity, vulnerability, and an emotional as well as physical delicacy. This was already evident in Cry-Baby (and to be capable of expressing delicacy in a John Waters movie is already an achievement), but received its definitive formulation in Edward Scissorhands, made the same year, which is a somewhat disappointing film, but Depp’s pathetic, sweet, and lovable freak, whose inventor (Vincent Price) dies before he could give him “real” hands, is unforgettable poignant and touching. Indeed, the irreducible sweetness is already there in a film Depp would doubtless not care to be reminded of: the 1985 Private Resort, a typically mindless boys-trying-to-get-laid comedy in which he looks about 15 years old and is rather charmingly miscast as a frantic pursuer of tits-and-ass.

The much more textured “Scissorhands” persona was developed further in the two films of 1993, Benny & Joon and What’s Eating Gilbert Grape. The former—a little movie rendered almost irresistible by its three stars—gave Depp’s comedic talents their full expression, especially in his celebrated Buster Keaton routine; like Keaton (and unlike, for example, Jim Carrey), Depp knows that you can only be really funny if you never, never suggest that you know you are being funny. In What’s Eating Gilbert Grape he found, perhaps, his most sympathetic director aside from Tim Burton, Lasse Hallström, a filmmaker with a sensibility of a delicacy to match Depp’s. Any other actor in the role wold surely have been upstaged by Leonardo di Caprio’s extraordinary performance in a far more showy role; Dead Man and Hallström have understood that quietness and understatement can equal a brilliantly told and indelible impression.

Three films released in 1994 and 1995 contain marvelous performances that show a broadening of his range without ever betraying the qualities and values of his basic persona. The most recent of the three, Nick of Time, a silly, gimmicky movie unworthy of Depp’s talents, demands little attention, but Depp gives it what distinction it has in his portrayal of a very ordinary, unimaginative young bureaucrat spurred into activity and inventiveness by the threat to his little daughter’s life—Depp’s first “ordinary” character. Ed Wood and Don Juan DeMarco are another matter; they are, with Gilbert Grape, the most distinguished films in which Depp has appeared so far, and are both (not to belittle the quite marvelous support he gets) essentially carried on his own apparently slender shoulders.

Ed Wood reunites him with Tim Burton, and they have collaborated to develop a character (does anyone really care whether it is factually accurate?) that both takes up and extends the “Scissorhands” persona. Like the earlier Edward, Depp’s Edward D. Wood, Jr. is at once a “freak” and an artist: an artist so caught up in his delight in creation that he is never able to recognize that his products are worthless, and will in fact end up being celebrated as the “worst films ever made.” Yet it is doubtful whether anyone—not even Kirk Douglas’s van Gogh—has been able more convincingly to communicate on screen the sheer joy of creativity. The Burton-Depp Ed Wood is at once funny, touching, and pathetic, yet oddly inspirational; the suggestion is that the delight in creation is sufficient unto itself, irrespective of the value posterity places upon the works. After all, one of our culture’s greatest artists, Schubert, composed a number of his supreme works without the least guarantee or even expectation that they would ever be performed. This is not to collapse Schubert’s great intelligence with Edward D. Wood’s virtually insane delusions of grandeur—we are concerned here with personal pleasure and satisfaction, not objective value.

Depp’s Don Juan DeMarco (in the film of the same name) is an equally remarkable assumption, in certain ways closely paralleling his Ed Wood. Here, creativity is recast in sexual terms, in which the character’s fantasy is no longer that he produces great art, but that he brings a transitory happiness to frustrated women. Depp’s Don Juan can best be defined by juxtaposition with Mozart’s Don Giovanni. Mozart’s Don is an extraordinarily—almost bafflingly—complex figure: a social/sexual revolutionary who breaks all the restrictive conventions of the culture, yet always at the expense of those (especially women) in a socially inferior and vulnerable position. He is at once the hero and the villain of the opera. Against Don Giovanni’s exploitation of women we have Don Juan DeMarco’s total identification with them, his assumed role as “great lover” built less upon personal gratification than on empathy and compassion. Depp’s Don Juan is unlike Ed Wood in that he is not entirely the victim of delusion; he really does change people’s lives. The film clarifies most beautifully the very basis of the persona, its fascination and complexity—strong and unambiguous heterosexual appeal, combined with an extreme and potentially revolutionary femininity.

Depp’s recent work shows him, far from being content to rest on his laurels, fearlessly electing to appear in offbeat and commercial films (Dead Man, Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas) when they offer him roles that extend his range and present him with challenges. His performance in the more mainstream Donnie Brasco carries him into Scorsese territory, as an undercover agent whose task is to infiltrate the Mafia; he brings to it a new emotional maturity. Joe Pistone/“Donnie Brasco” is seen by the ageing mafioso Lefty (Al Pacino) as an alternative son, a role whose implications Joe gradually accepts, his diction and behaviour-patterns changing as he becomes the imaginary person he is supposedly acting. He ends up trying to save the increasingly weary and expendable older man, for whom he has come to feel both respect and compassion, from his inevitable fate. Depp makes us feel that we are watching Joe’s sense of his identity disintegrate before our eyes. His progress from confident activity to a total disillusionment as the clear division between black and white, Mafia and FBI, dissolves into a uniform greyness leads to the film’s ultimate desolation. Depp’s unnerved, understated acting contrasts effectively with Pacino’s equally brilliant, more flamboyant “method” performance, which would overshadow a lesser actor.

Fear and Loathing seems somewhat marginal to Depp’s career: he becomes less an actor than a “performer,” there being barely any character for him to inhabit; what he has to do, he does well. Dead Man is quite another matter, one of the peaks so far both of his and Jim Jarmusch’s work. Jarmusch remains faithful to the minimalist absurdism of his early work, but develops it here to the point where it takes on new depth and resonance. Depp’s characteristic reticence, a kind of modesty of expression and gesture (he appears to be doing so little, yet achieves so much), becomes the perfect vehicle for the realization of the bleakness of the director’s vision. Sleepy Hollow returns him for the third time to Tim Burton; Depp’s Ichabod Crane, outwardly assured, inwardly vulnerable, firmly anchors Burton’s brilliant flights of invention in a calm core of purity.

His two latest films make a somewhat odd pair: The Astronaut’s Wife is a virtual remake of Rosemary’s Baby (with aliens replacing the devil); The Ninth Gate is about devil-worship and is directed by Polanski. The latter received the more favourable critical response, no doubt in deference to the director; although generally scorned, The Astronaut’s Wife is perhaps, by a short margin, the better film, regaining some of the disturbing quality of its famous original. The Ninth Gate, engrossing enough for much of its length, leaves one feeling that it’s well made, but why should anyone want to make it? Depp’s presence lends distinction to both, but neither adds anything significant to his already remarkable achievement.

—Robin Wood

DERN, Bruce

Nationality: American. Born: Bruce MacLeish Dern in Winnetka, Illinois, 4 June 1936. Education: Attended Choate Preparatory School, Connecticut, and New Trier Township High School, Winnetka; University of Pennsylvania; studied acting at the American Foundation of Dramatic Art, Philadelphia, and Actors Studio, New York.

Family: Married 1) actress Diane Ladd (divorced), daughter: actress Laura Elizabeth; 2) Andrea Beckett, 1969. Career: 1958—bit part in stage play Shadow of a Gunman; 1959—in Kazan’s production of Sweet Bird of Youth; 1960—film debut in Kazan’s Wild River; 1962—3—regular on TV series Stoney Burke. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Award, U.S. National Society of Film Critics, for Drive; He Said, 1971; Silver Berlin Bear for Best Actor, Berlin International Film Festival, 1983. Address: c/o K. J. Sparkman, P.O. Box 327, Troy, MT 59935, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1960 Wild River (Kazan) (as Jack Roper)
1961 The Crimebusters (Sagal—for TV)
1963 Bedtime Story (Levy)
1964 Marnie (Hitchcock) (as sailor); Hush . . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte (Aldrich) (as John Mayhew)
1966 The Wild Angels (Corman) (as Loser/Joey Kerns)
1967 The War Wagon (Kennedy) (as Hammond); The St. Valentine’s Day Massacre (Corman) (as John May); Waterhole Number Three (Graham) (as deputy); Will Penny (Gries) (as Rafe Quint); The Trip (Corman) (as John); Hang ‘em High (Post) (as Miller)

1968 Support Your Local Sheriff (Kennedy) (as Joe Danby); Psycho (Rush) (as Steve Davis)
1969 Rebel Rousers (Cohen) (as “J. J.”); Castle Keep (Pollack) (as Lt. Billy Byron Bix); Number One (Gries) (as Richie Fowler); They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack) (as James)
1970 Bloody Mama (Corman) (as Kevin Kirkman); Drive, He Said (Nicholson) (as Coach Bullion); The Incredible Two-Headed Transplant (Lanza) (as Roger); Cycle Savages (Brane) (as Keeg)
1971 The Cowboys (Ryedd) (as Long Hair); Sam Hill: Who Killed the Mysterious Mr. Foster? (Cook—for TV); Silent Running (Trumbull) (as Freeman Lowell)
1972 Thumb Tripping (Masters) (as Smitty); The King of Marvin Gardens (Rafelson) (as Jason Staebler)
1974 The Laughing Policeman (An Investigation of Murder) (Rosenberg) (as Leo Larsen); The Great Gatsby (Clayton) (as Tom Buchanan); Smile (Ritchie) (as “Big Bob” Freelander)
1975 Posse (Kirk Douglas) (as Jack Strawhorn)
1976 Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (Winner) (as Grayson Potchuck); Family Plot (Hitchcock) (as Lumley); Folie Bourgeoisies (The Twist) (Chabrol) (as writer)
1977 Black Sunday (Frankenheimer) (as Lander)
1978 Coming Home (Ashby) (as Capt. Bob Hyde); The Driver (Walter Hill) (as detective)
1980 Middle Age Crazy (Trent) (as Bobby Lee)
1981 Tattoo (Bob Brooks) (as Karl)
1982 That Championship Season (Jason Miller) (as George Sittkowski); Harry Tracy (Graham) (title role)
1985 Tough Love (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Rob Charters); On the Edge (Nilsson) (as Wes Holman)
1987 Big Town (Bolt) (as Mr. Edwards); Roses Are for the Rich (Michael Miller—for TV); Uncle Tom’s Cabin (Lathan)
1988 1969 (Cliff); World Gone Wild (Katzin) (as Ethan); The ‘Burbs (Dante) (as Mark Rumsfield)
1989 Trenchcoat in Paradise (Coolidge—for TV) (as John Hollander)
1990 After Dark, My Sweet (Foley) (as Uncle Bud); The Court-Martial of Jackie Robinson (Peerce—for TV) (as Scout Ed Higgins)
1991 Into the Badlands (for TV) (as T. L. Barston); Carolina Skeletons (for TV) (as Junior Stoker)
1992 Diggstown (Midnight Sting) (Ritchie) (as John Gillon)
1993 It’s Nothing Personal (Bradford May—for TV) (as Billy Archer)
1994 Dead Man’s Revenge (for TV) (as Payton McCoy); Amelia Earhart: The Final Flight (Simoneau—for TV) (as George Putnam)
1995 A Mother’s Prayer (for TV) (as John Walker)
1996 Down Periscope (David S. Ward) (as Admiral Yancy Graham); Mulholland Falls (Tamahori) (as The Chief); Last Man Standing (Hill) (as Sheriff Ed Galt)
1997 Comfort, Texas (Ritchie—for TV); Big Guns Talk: The Story of the Western (Morris for TV) (interviewee)
1999 Perfect Prey (McCain—for TV) (as Capt. Swaggert); Small Soldiers (Dante) (voice of Link Static)
1999 If . . . Dog . . . Rabbit (Matthew Modine) (as McGurdy); Hard Time: The Premonition (Cass, Sr.—for TV) (as Ray Earl Winston); The Haunting (de Bont) (as Mr. Dudley)
2000 All the Pretty Horses (Thornton) (as Judge); The Glass House (Sackheim); Madison (Bindley) (as Harry Volpi)
Bruce Dern seems to have been around forever, but it is impossible to come up with a single film by which to center a portrait of a distinguished career. There were plenty of good roles in the career of this Roger Corman-school-trained actor, with the best still being the lead in Alfred Hitchcock’s final tongue-in-cheek thriller, Family Plot. But with a brief moment in the Oscar sun (for a nomination for Coming Home), Dern’s time as a leading actor passed, although he continued to be steadily employed as a character actor.

Still Dern’s career is dotted with memorable moments. He made his debut in Elia Kazan’s Wild River, singled out for his portrait of a country hoodlum. His roles for Roger Corman in The Wild Angels, and for Alfred Hitchcock in Marnie will long be remembered by those lucky enough to have seen those films during their original theatrical screenings. But sadly these two films seemed to set a trend; Dern has never been able to harness himself out of the image of an unbalanced,

Bruce Dern with Mia Farrow in The Great Gatsby

Publications

By DERN: article—

On DERN: articles—

*   *   *

Bruce Dern seems to have been around forever, but it is impossible to come up with a single film by which to center a portrait of a distinguished career. There were plenty of good roles in the career of this Roger Corman-school-trained actor, with the best still being the lead in Alfred Hitchcock’s final tongue-in-cheek thriller, Family Plot. But with a brief moment in the Oscar sun (for a nomination for Coming Home), Dern’s time as a leading actor passed, although he continued to be steadily employed as a character actor.

Still Dern’s career is dotted with memorable moments. He made his debut in Elia Kazan’s Wild River, singled out for his portrait of a country hoodlum. His roles for Roger Corman in The Wild Angels, and for Alfred Hitchcock in Marnie will long be remembered by those lucky enough to have seen those films during their original theatrical screenings. But sadly these two films seemed to set a trend; Dern has never been able to harness himself out of the image of an unbalanced, frighteningly disturbed man. This is due in part to his high, midwestern twang (he hails from an upper-class suburb of Chicago), narrow, almost gaunt face, and wild, unruly curly hair.

But at one point in the late 1960s and into the early 1970s Dern seemed to become a public favorite as “Mr. Demented.” He played a deranged dancer in Sydney Pollack’s They Shoot Horses, Don’t They?, and a wild-eyed basketball coach in Drive, He Said, directed by Jack Nicholson. This led to his finest roles in Bob Rafelson’s The King of Marvin Gardens, Alfred Hitchcock’s Family Plot, and Michael Ritchie’s Smile. In the latter, Dern proved his ability at comedy in the underrated send-up of American-style beauty pageants.

Through the 1980s Dern worked regularly, but in small parts, too often for secondary studios. In 1988, for instance, he appeared as a father in 1969, a low-budget affair for Atlantic Films in which college classmates go through the times Dern was so much a part of—the late 1960s: dodging the draft, dropping out of school and society alike, splitting apart families. That year he took the lead in World Gone Wild, a low-budget film about a hippie survivor of the apocalyptic who brings peace and love to those in a desert community that was blessed with the only water supply left in the world. Dern played the establishment figure who turns violent to repel the evildoers, led by a character played by teen idol Adam Ant. By the end of the twentieth century, roles were fewer and fewer and so sadly, younger fans only knew Bruce Dern as the father of actress Laura Dern.

—Douglas Gomery

DeVITO, Danny

Films as Actor:

1969  Dreams of Glass (Klouse)
1971  Bananas (Woody Allen) (as subway hood); La Mortadella (Lady Liberty) (Monicelli) (as Fred Mancuso)
1973  Hurry Up, or I’ll Be 30 (Jacoby) (as Petey); Scalawag (Kirk Douglas) (as Fly Speck)

1975  One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Forman) (as Martini); The Money (Workman)
1976  Car Wash (Schultz); Deadly Hero (Nagy); The Van (Grossman) (as Andy)
1977  The World’s Greatest Lover (Gene Wilder) (as the assistant director)
1978  Goin’ South (Nicholson) (as Hog)
1979  Valentine (Philip—for TV)
1981  Going Ape! (Kronberg) (as Lazlo)
1983  Terms of Endearment (James L. Brooks) (as Vernon Dahlart)
1984  Johnny Dangerously (Heckerling) (as Burr); Romancing the Stone (Zemeckis) (as Ralph)
1985  The Jewel of the Nile (Teague) (as Ralph); Happily Ever After (Melendez—for TV) (as voice)
1986  Head Office (Finkelman) (as Stedman); My Little Pony (Joaens) (as voice of Grindle King); Ruthless People (Abrahams, Zucker, and Zucker) (as Sam Stone); Wise Guys (DePalma) (as Harry Valenti)
1987  Tin Men (Levinson) (as Ernest Tilley)
1988  Twins (Reitman) (as Vincent Benedict)
1991  Other People’s Money (Jewison) (as Lawrence Garfield)
1992  Batman Returns (Burton) (as Penguin/Oswald Cobblepot)
1993  Last Action Hero (McTiernan) (as voice of Whiskers, uncredited); Look Who’s Talking Now (Ropelewski) (as voice of Rocks); Jack the Bear (Herskovitz) (as John Leary)
1994  Junior (Reitman) (as Dr. Larry Arbogast); Renaissance Man (Army Intelligence) (Penny Marshall) (as Bill Rago)
1995  Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (as Martin Weir + co-pr)
1996  Space Jam (Pytka) (voice)
1997  Hercules (Musher, Clements) (voice); L.A. Confidential (Hanson) (as Sid Hudgens); The Rainmaker (Coppola) (as Deck Schiell)
1998  Living Out Loud (LaGravene) (as Pat Francato + co-pr)
1999  The Virgin Suicides (Sofia Coppola) (as Dr. Hornicker); Foolproof (Alexander, Karaszewski) (as Grover); The Big Kahuna (Swanbeck) (as Phil); Man on the Moon (Forman) (as George Shapiro + co-pr)

Films as Actor and Director:

1984  The Ratings Game (for TV) (as Vic De Salvo)
1987  Throw Momma from the Train (as Owen Lift)
1989  The War of the Roses (as Gavin D’Amato)
1992  Hoffa (as Bobby Ciaro, + co-pr)
1996  Matilda

Other Films:

1994  Reality Bites (Stiller) (co-pr); Pulp Fiction (Tarantino) (co-exec pr)
1995  Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (co-pr)
1996  Sunset Park (Gomer) (co-pr); Feeling Minnesota (Baigelman) (co-pr)
1997  Gattaca (Niccol) (co-pr)
1998  Out of Sight (Soderbergh) (co-pr); The Pentagon Wars (Benjamin for TV) (exec pr)
Publications

By DeVITO: article—

Interview in Playboy (Chicago), February 1993.

On DeVITO: articles—

Seidenberg, Robert, “Funny as Hell,” in American Film (New York), September 1989.
Séquences (CN), September 1992.

* * *

An actor seemingly proscribed from leading man status by his physical instrument—his five-foot, 150-pound body, his dark-haired, dark-eyed “ethnic” features, and his flat, fast, New Jersey-rooted speech—Danny DeVito over the past decade has established himself as one of the defining screen comics of his generation. Like most recent movie comedians, DeVito first achieved fame in television and continued to work with creative television personnel as he moved into film. But his persona is marked as a product of his times even more by his central theme: the journey of a formerly antiauthoritarian, “freaky”—post-1960s—entrepreneur toward his slice of the American pie. DeVito’s life story and those of his characters neatly cohere around this subject.
While also working on-stage, DeVito spent the 1970s playing background roles in mostly unremarkable films and television shows. Unshakably dedicated, he also produced and directed several short films. DeVito’s biggest movie role of the 1970s was as one of the inmates who take over the asylum in One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest. That film’s sympathy for the socially maladjusted persisted into DeVito’s breakthrough role, as Louie DePalma in the 1978–83 television situation comedy Taxi. With Louie, however, DeVito moved from portraying the odd and exploited to portraying the odd and exploited exploiter—the type to which most of his subsequent movie characters adhere.

The dispatcher in a taxi company full of nice fallout victims from the 1960s (a recovering addict, a divorced mother, a Vietnam veteran), Louie is unfettered capitalism embodied—grasping, volatile, and rude. Stamped by the late 1970s, however, Taxi made Louie less a figure of unmitigated scorn than, for instance, its generic predecessor M*A*S*H made the money-grubbing Frank Burns in the decade’s early years. DeVito’s performances play to this softening, employing his ability to slide between naturalism and cartoonish excess. DeVito conveys not only Louie’s gratingly innocent delight in his gratuitous abusiveness but his fear and loneliness. As he does throughout his career, DeVito in Taxi often treats his own body as a prop; he sparks fresh ideas from the ensemble’s other players; and he fully exploits his voice. DeVito’s thoughtful choices among a subtly wide range of (mostly) East Coast accents, pitches, and volumes individuate his various characters even as they ground these men in the everyday and the middle class.

DeVito’s first showcase supporting movie role came from Taxi producer James Brooks, who cast him in a subdued key in 1983’s Terms of Endearment. (People who work with DeVito once seem inclined to repeat the experience.) The next year DeVito directed his first feature-length project, the made-for-cable The Ratings Game: all his evolving persona’s key traits are present in his leading role as a mob-linked executive from New Jersey who becomes a television star and marries a good woman, played by DeVito’s wife and frequent collaborator, Rhea Perlman. For the well-grossing feature Romancing the Stone and its sequel Jewel of the Nile, DeVito’s crooked small-time businessman type metamorphosed into a true crook, in a supporting role as a goofily unhappy, drug-smuggling kidnapper. DeVito got glowing reviews, and the chance to star in two big-screen vehicles—the organized crime spoof Wise Guys, and the black comedy of big business and marriage, Ruthless People.

With Ruthless People DeVito attained movie stardom. He then moved between sour and soft comedies, acting in and directing the former with Throw Momma from the Train, his theatrical film debut as director, and The War of the Roses; and starring in the latter with Tin Men (as a crazed salesman), Twins (as a gangster), and Other People’s Money (as a corporate raider). Almost all of DeVito’s post-Taxi characters are criminals, either organized, white collar, or both. They are ambivalent figures of mixed pathos and satire, their unlawfulness sometimes standing in for their outsider’s natures, but their ill will more often entwining with their situations as capitalist cogs.

In 1992, DeVito played the supporting role of comic-book villain Penguin in Batman Returns, while also turning his directorial hand to drama with Hoffs, starring his old friend Jack Nicholson; the first was a huge success, though the second fizzled. Jack the Bear, a rare noncrime drama (directed by Marshall Herskovitz, a television veteran), did not receive either critical or commercial recognition. DeVito continued to move away from the criminal type and to work with television-bred comic talent in Renaissance Man (directed by television star Penny Marshall) and Get Shorty (starring television star John Travolta). Both succeeded at the box office, as did Junior, his second pairing with Arnold Schwarzenegger. In 1996 DeVito released Matilda, based on Roald Dahl’s children’s story of a young girl working past her venial and grotesque parents (DeVito and Perlman). As the era’s Hollywood dean of corrupt but salvageable authority, DeVito thus pursues his great theme.

—Susan Knobloch

DIAZ, Cameron

Films as Actor:

1994 The Mask (Russell) (as Tina Carlyl)
1995 The Last Supper (Title) (as Jude)
1996 She’s the One (Burns) (as Heather); Feeling Minnesota (Baigleman) (as Freddie); Head Above Water (Wilson) (as Nathalie)
1997 Keys to Tulsa (Greif) (as Trudy); My Best Friend’s Wedding (Hogan) (as Kimmy Wallace); A Life Less Ordinary (Boyle) (as Celine)
1998 There’s Something About Mary (Bobby and Peter Farrelly) (as Mary Jensen Mathews); Very Bad Things (Berg) (as Laura Garret); Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas (Gilliam) (as the blonde TV reporter)
1999 Being John Malkovich (Jonze) (as Lottie Schwartz); Any Given Sunday (Stone) (as Christina Pagniacci); Things You Can Tell By Looking at Her (Garcia) (as Carol); Man Woman Film (Pearson) (as Random Celebrity)
2000 Charlie’s Angels (McG) (as Natalie); Invisible Circus (Brooks) (as Faith O’Connor); Things You Can Tell by Just Looking at Her (García) (as Carol);

Publications:

By DIAZ: articles—

Cameron Diaz is that type of actor eagerly sought by innovative directors—a natural. Discovered by a modeling agency photographer at a party, she began an international modeling career when she was only sixteen, and fell into acting with no experience outside of high school drama classes.

Her first film role, like her modeling career, was a combination of serendipity, good looks, and her own sometimes painfully difficult work. Her modeling agent suggested she audition for a bit part in Chuck Russell’s upcoming fantasy-adventure blockbuster The Mask, as an adventure. Diaz caught the director’s eye, however, and she found herself cast in the lead, where she made the most of the femme fatale role of Tina, the sultry nightclub singer with the heart of gold who ends up with the hero. Though Diaz’s nervousness about acting left her with an ulcer, critics singled her out for the depth of her savvy portrayal of Tina, who might have been just another comic book character in the comic book film.

Diaz surprised studios, fans, and critics when she did not follow up her success in The Mask by seeking work in other big studio blockbuster films. Instead, she chose to step back from the fast track to fame. She refused several offers of big budget movies and spent several years working in small independent films. Many of these films were dark and quirky, like The Last Supper, about liberals who decide to rid the world of right wing extremists by inviting them to dinner one by one and poisoning them.

Diaz got mixed reviews for her roles in these films. Some critics found it hard not to typecast her as the model-turned-actress bimbo, while others found her subtle and engaging, even pointing her out as the best performer in films like She’s the One that they otherwise hated. Stacy Title, director of The Last Supper, said that Diaz has the “old movie-star glamour of Rita Hayworth and the incredible timing and great physical comedy of Lucille Ball.’’

It is this gift for comedy that helped create one of the biggest sleeper hits of the 1990s. There’s Something About Mary filled movie houses and set staid reviewers from journals as diverse as The New Republic and Variety rolling in the aisles in unwilling laughter over jokes about penis pain and cruelty to animals. The film not only intentionally broke all taboos about good taste and appropriate comedy material, but inspired a series of so-called “gross-out” comedies that competed to find the most offensive subjects of fun. In the midst of it all, Diaz’s sweet, funny, and artful performance as Mary made There’s Something About Mary the single film of the genre that may outlast thefad.

Perhaps to sidestep the blonde bimbo stereotype that followed her since her role in The Mask, Diaz took a much less glamorous role in the off-beat independent film, Being John Malkovich. As Lotte, a mousy veterinarian’s assistant with frizzy brown hair and an entourage of needy animals clinging to her skirts, Diaz turned the ideal of the sex object on its head. Lotte is not only a sweet surprise of a character, showing spirit, sensuality, and loyalty, but also explores her sexual and gender identity with a freedom and irony that typifies the turn of the century.

In many ways, Diaz represents the attitudes of her generation. While certainly not rejecting the glitz and glamour of Hollywood fame, she has resisted the big studio establishment and chosen a more rebellious path toward that fame. While she might often play the bimbo, she manages to give that stereotype a “riot grrl” edge of nerve and self-reliance. It has been her willingness to take the circuitous route, shifting between mainstream Hollywood and the innovative independents, that has given Diaz her depth as an actress. When she was cast in The Mask, Diaz said, “I’m a pretty girl who’s a model who doesn’t suck as an actress.’’ Her good looks and sincere charm may have gotten her into the movies, but it is her adventurous approach to her career that may keep her there.

—Tina Gianoulis

DiCAPRIO, Leonardo

Films as Actor:

1991 Critters 3 (Peterson) (as Josh)
1992 Poison Ivy (Shea) (as Guy)

1993 This Boy’s Life (Caton-Jones) (as Toby); What’s Eating Gilbert Grape (Hallstrom) (as Arnie)
1994 The Foot Shooting Party (Haywood-Carter) (short)
1995 Les Cent et une nuits (Varda) (cameo); The Quick and the Dead (Rainey) (as The Kid); The Basketball Diaries (Kalvert) (as Jim Carroll); Total Eclipse (Holland) (as Arthur Rimbaud); Don’s Plum (Robb—unreleased in North America) (as Derek)
1996 William Shakespeare’s Romeo + Juliet (Lurmann) (as Romeo)
1997 Titanic (Cameron) (as Jack Dawson)
1998 The Man in the Iron Mask (Wallace) (as Louis XIV and Philippe); Celebrity (Allen) (as Brandon Darrow)
2000 The Beach (Boyle) (as Richard)
2001 The Gangs of New York (Scorsese) (as Amsterdam Vallon)

Publications

By DICAPRIO: articles—

Interview with Chris Mundy, in Rolling Stone (New York), 2 March 2000.

On DICAPRIO: books—

On DICAPRIO: articles—

Leonardo DiCaprio is in the curious—and not altogether enviable—situation of a young performer aspiring to do thorny, unconventional films but finding himself labeled a teen heartthrob with a $20 million-a-film price tag. Following his first critical successes in 1993 the responses to his work have often seemed to occupy no middle ground between the idolatry of teenage girls and the disdain of critics for whom the actor has, since 1995, simply played “a variation of the same character: an unformed, slightly androgynous, volatile youth who looks and acts like 15 than 25.” And every new choice of a part is now scrutinized by the media as a major indicator of the spirit of our times, rather than simply an actor’s testing himself with a new challenge.

Rather suddenly, after good notices for television roles and a couple of minor film appearances, DiCaprio achieved major success in two films of 1993. As a teen rebel in This Boy’s Life he held his own against Robert de Niro’s creepy, brutal stepfather, and in What’s Eating Gilbert Grape, as the impish but mentally impaired younger brother of the title character, he was the perfect foil to a brooding Johnny Depp. From the opening moments of This Boy’s Life, where he seems to be around 14 (but was in fact nearly 18), DiCaprio has the right look for an all-American boy, with his slightly plump, slightly squished-in face and naughty good humor. As his character ages several years (with a bit of help from haircuts that range from 1950s hoodlum to 1950s military and back again) he reacts to his mother’s ghastly boyfriend, later husband, in a variety of convincing ways, from grinning mockery, disgust, and sheer incredulity to several degrees of fury. Only in an anguished drunken speech to some delinquent friends does one feel that DiCaprio is being asked unfairly to do a James Dean scene that he can’t quite bring off. In Gilbert Grape, however, there is never a break in character: with his mischievous look and ungainly walk, disturbing peals of laughter and slightly braying voice, DiCaprio creates a plausible and touching character—a sort of Peter Pan caged in a young man’s body—rather than assembling a mere collection of gestures.

DiCaprio’s early success led him to starring roles in 1995 that were daring choices but in some respects beyond his scope, or at least vocal skills. His continued boyish appearance allowed him at 20 to play two real-life teenage writers, Arthur Rimbaud, and a would-be American counterpart, the heroin-addicted diarist Jim Carroll. But his California intonations (and perhaps lack of professional training) keep him from seeming to be a New York street kid in The Basketball Diaries. He does throw himself with impressive abandon into the heroin-withdrawal scenes, but in less intense moments has a tendency to rely upon an all-purpose scowl. In Total Eclipse he calls to mind a famous photo of the historical Rimbaud, but the flatness of many of his line readings (as when the poet-prodigy breezily remarks, “I decided to originate the future”) make him an unlikely revolutionary. Moreover, his facial expressions and body language identify him as altogether American, and thus incongruous with both the largely French supporting cast and the very British (and dazzlingly complex) performance of David Thewlis as a repelling, fascinating Verlaine.

DiCaprio’s lack of professional training may have been even more a liability when he later played another historical Frenchman, Louis XIV, in The Man in the Iron Mask. The dual role of the villainous king and his victimized twin calls for a bravura performance in a classic Hollywood style, but Louis’ aristocratic arrogance seems far beyond DiCaprio’s range: when required to speak lines like “It is good that you watch me, D’Artagnan, but I fear that you watch me too closely,” or (to a woman who has rejected his advances), “You would choose a soldier—a soldier who has not yet proposed—to a king?” he sounds precisely like an American boy in a high school theatrical. At least, as the good Philippe, he looks truly dazed and shaken when the fearsome mask is removed, and his Philippe masquerading as the King does seem like someone nervously, unconvincingly pretending to be haughty.

One might have thought DiCaprio not ready for Shakespeare either, but in fact he is ideally cast in Baz Luhrmann’s extravagant postmodern take on Romeo and Juliet. The camera seems as much in love with DiCaprio’s face as with that of Juliet, Claire Danes; his tousled hair and gangly body, perfectly suited to his loose-hanging costumes, seem all of a piece with the youthful intensity of his performance. First seeing Juliet at the ball, this Romeo is not so much enraptured as purely delighted and astonished, while managing to send teasing glances toward the Capulet girl. Later, his hysterical rage at Tybalt and shock at the latter’s death by his hand are powerfully registered; to be sure, his subsequent outburst to Father Lawrence may sound like teenage whining (“‘Banished! Be merciful, say death!’”), but it is wholly consistent with the film’s vision of contemporary youth. (Lawrence’s rejoinder—‘‘I thought thy disposition better-tempered!’’—would have been welcome at more than one moment in those precocious-artist films.)

As for the role that made him much more a Hollywood star than he was already, his working-class artist Jack Dawson in Titanic is again exactly what the part calls for: appropriately tough and gleeful in the poker scene; plain-talking with a slight overtone of humor (a little in the style of the young Henry Fonda) when he convinces Rose not to commit suicide; amusingly out of his element in white tie and tails but plenty confident talking to the swells at the dinner table; ardent yet never out of control in his romantic scenes. Overall he is dashing but not campily so, in a role that is a pure throwback to the 1930s and 1940s: the down-to-earth American up against the snooty aristocrats.

After a sort of guest appearance in Woody Allen’s Celebrity, where he was suitably obnoxious as a jaded movie idol, DiCaprio chose for his first major role following Titanic superfan the part of a young American traveler searching for the perfect beach in Thailand, finding it, and then not so much descending into madness as wallowing in his own shallowness. It is difficult to draw a simple conclusion about DiCaprio’s performance in The Beach: the role calls for copious displays of youthful irrationality, narcissism, and disillusionment similar to those of Ewan McGregor in the same director’s Trainspotting, but without heroin addiction as a motivation for the displays, and against a backdrop not of gritty realism but of movie fantasy, a realm halfway between Lost Horizon and Apocalypse Now. DiCaprio unquestionably has charisma enough to hold the screen, and is at first convincing as a full-of-himself but dreamy young man right out of MTV’s The Real World. But in later scenes, when a few days alone at a jungle lookout turn his character with utter implausibility into Captain Willard about to dispatch Kurtz, followed by several more histrionic shifts, DiCaprio cannot find any coherence in the part—he just manages to be intense in whatever way the script requires for the moment.

It is of course impossible to predict what course DiCaprio’s career might take once he can no longer play impetuous or bratty youths, but one can certainly hope for a risk-taking character actor rather than a conventional leading man.

—Joseph Milicia

DICKINSON, Angie

Nationality: American. Born: Angeline Brown in Kulm, North Dakota, 30 September 1931. Education: Attended parochial schools; Immaculate Heart College; Glendale College, California. Family: Married 1) Gene Dickinson (divorced 1959); 2) the composer Burt Bacharach, 1965 (divorced 1980), daughter: Nikki. Career: Early 1950s—secretary at aircraft company while taking bit parts in TV and acting lessons; 1954—film debut in Lucky Me; 1962—Broadway appearance in The Perfect Setup; 1974—guest in episode of TV series Police Story; asked to star in spin-off series Police Woman, 1974–78; in TV mini-series Pear; 1982—in TV series Cassie & Company; 1985—in TV mini-series Hollywood Wives, and Wild Palms, 1993; also former Mayor of Universal City, California. Address: c/o Dorothy Howe, 1524 Walgrove Avenue, Mar Vista, CA 90066, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1954 Lucky Me (Donahue) (as party guest)
1955 Man with the Gun (Man without a Gun; The Trouble Shooter) (Wilson) (as Kitty); Tennessee’s Partner (Donahue) (as girl); The Return of Jack Slade (Texas Rose) (Schuster) (as Polly Logan)
1956 Hidden Guns (Gannaway) (as Becky Carter); Tension at Table Rock (Warren) (as Cathy); Gun the Man Down (Arizona Mission) (McLaglen) (as Janice); The Black Whip (Warren) (as Sally)
1957 Run of the Arrow (Hot Lead) (Fuller) (as dubbed voice of Yellow Moccasin, played by Sarita Montiel); Shoot-Out at Medicine Bend (Bare) (as Priscilla); China Gate (Fuller) (as Lucky Legs); Calypso Joe (Dein)
1958 Cry Terror (Andrew L. Stone) (as Eileen Kelly); I Married a Woman (Kanter) (as wife of John Wayne character in film-within-film)
1959 Rio Bravo (Hawks) (as Feathers); I'll Give My Life (Claxton); Frontier Rangers (Jacques Tourneur—for TV)
1960 Ocean’s Eleven (Milestone) (as Beatrice Ocean); The Sins of Rachel Cade (Rachel Cade) (Gordon Douglas) (title role); The Bramble Bush (Petrie) (as Fran)
1961 A Fever in the Blood (Sherman) (as Cathy Simon)
1962 Rome Adventure (Lovers Must Learn) (Daves) (as Lyda); Jessica (La Sage-femme, le curé et le bon Dieu) (Negulesco) (title role)
1963 Captain Newman, M.D. (David Miller) (as Lt. Francie Corum)
1964 The Killers (Ernest Hemingway’s The Killers) (Siegel) (as Sheila Farr)
1965 The Art of Love (Jewison) (as Laurie)
1966 Cast a Giant Shadow (Shavelson) (as Emma Marcus); Danger Grows Wild (The Poppy Is Also a Flower) (Terence Young) (as Linda Benson); The Chase (Arthur Penn) (as Ruby Calder)
1967 Point Blank (Boorman) (as Chris); The Last Challenge (Pistolero of Red River) (Thorro) (as Lisa Denton)
1969 Some Kind of a Nut (Kanin) (as Rachel Amidon); Sam Whiskey (Laven) (as Laura Breckinridge); Young Billy Young (Who Rides with Kane) (Kennedy) (as Lily Beloit)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film / TV Show</th>
<th>Role</th>
<th>Director / Producer</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>The Love War (McCowan—for TV)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Pretty Maids All in a Row (Vadim)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Resurrection of Zachary Wheeler (Wynn)</td>
<td>Dr. Johnson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Thief (Graham—for TV)</td>
<td>Jean Melville</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Love War (McCowan—for TV)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>The Outlaw (Wynn)</td>
<td>Dr. Johnson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>Thief (Graham—for TV)</td>
<td>Jean Melville</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>The Love War (McCowan—for TV)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Pretty Maids All in a Row (Vadim)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>The Love War (McCowan—for TV)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>The Love War (McCowan—for TV)</td>
<td>Miss Smith</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Klondike Fever (Jack London’s Klondike Fever) (Carter)</td>
<td>Belinda McNair</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Death Hunt (Hunt)</td>
<td>Vanessa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>One Shoe Makes It Murder (William Hale—for TV)</td>
<td>(Margot Wendice)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>A Touch of Scandal (Nagy—for TV)</td>
<td>Katherine Gilvay</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Big Bad Mama II (Wynorski)</td>
<td>Wilma McClatchie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Once upon a Texas Train (Kennedy—for TV)</td>
<td>Maggie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Fire and Rain (Jameson—for TV)</td>
<td>Beth Mancini</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Treacherous Crossing (Wharmby—for TV)</td>
<td>Beverly Thomas</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (Van Sant)</td>
<td>Miss Adrian</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>The Crossing Guard (Sean Penn)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>The Sun, the Moon and the Stars (Creed)</td>
<td>Abbie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>The Don’s Analyst (Jablin—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Pay It Forward (Leder)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By DICKINSON: articles—

‘‘Surrogate,’’ interview in New Yorker, 9 December 1991.

On DICKINSON: book—

On DICKINSON: articles—
Reed, J. D., ‘‘Still Sexy After All These Years,’’ in People Weekly (New York), 24 May 1993.

* * *

Like James Caan, Angie Dickinson has never equaled, let alone surpassed, the impression she made early in her career in a Howard Hawks movie, in her case Rio Bravo, though she has given numerous sympathetic performances for other directors. It is a striking phenomenon that many stars have given their most vivid, most definitive performances under Hawks’s direction. That is not to suggest that Dickinson’s ‘‘Feathers’’ was somehow Hawks’s creation, yet one must lament the fact that Dickinson, one of the most potentially (and, in Rio Bravo, actually) vibrant presences of Hollywood cinema since the late 1950s, has so seldom worked with good directors, or directors responsive to her very distinctive personality. Hawks was never interested in what is commonly known as ‘‘great acting,’’ and that is not the issue here. The knack he had with actors was that of eliciting an aliveness of response, not simply to his direction but in mutual interplay. Hence, in Rio Bravo one cannot really talk of Dickinson’s performance in isolation. The inexhaustible delight of her scenes with John Wayne derives, not from ‘‘acting,’’ but from the way they play off each other to create one of the quintessential Hawksian male/female relationships: his silence, stoicism, stiffness, apparent impregnability, set against her continuous nervous talk, emotionalism, spontaneity, vulnerability. Her characterization becomes one of the strategies in the film for developing an affectionate and ironic critique of the Wayne character and the Wayne persona.

It is sad that, with Dickinson yet again, Hawks adhered to his weird principle of never using the same female star twice in a leading role (Lauren Bacall the solitary exception, perhaps because of her partnership with Bogart). Dickinson made a strong impression both before Rio Bravo (Samuel Fuller’s China Gate) and after (Arthur Penn’s The Chase, where her presence transforms what is basically a very conventional role); even reduced to the ignominy of playing a decadent femme fatale bent on seducing Troy Donahue (Rome Adventure), she is not negligible; and her presence added an extra dimension to the complex (or confused) sexual politics of De Palma’s Dressed to Kill. But the magic of her ‘‘Feathers’’ has never quite been recaptured: if she never appeared again, she would deserve a niche in cinema history for that alone.

—Robin Wood

DIETRICH, Marlene

Films as Actress:

1922 So sind die Männer (Napoleons kleiner Brüder; Der kleine Napoleon; Men Are Like This; Napoleon’s Little Brother; The Little Napoleon) (Jacoby) (as Kathrin)
1923 Tragödie der Liebe (Tragedy of Love) (Joe May) (as Lucie); Der Mensch am Wege (Man by the Roadside) (Dieterle)
1924 Der Sprung ins Leben (They Leap into Life) (Guter)
1925 Die freudlose Gasse (Joyless Street; The Street of Sorrow) (Pabst) (as extra)
1926 Manon Lescaut (Robison) (as Micheline); Eine DuBarry von Heute (A Modern DuBarry) (Korda); Kopf hoch, Charly! (Heads Up, Charly) (Wolff) (as Edmée Marchand); Madame wünscht keine Kinder (Madame Wants No Children) (Wolff) (bit part)
1927 Seine grösstest Bluff (Er oder Dich; His Greatest Bluff) (Piel) (as Yvette); Café Electric (Wenn ein Weib den Weg verliert; When a Woman Loses Her Way) (Ucicky) (as Ermi); Der Jaxbaron (The Imaginary Baron) (Wolff) (as Sophie)
1928 Prinzessin Olala (Princess Olala; Art of Love) (Land) (as Chicotte de Gastoné); Die glückliche Mutter (Sieber—short)
1929 Ich küsslie Ihre Hand, Madame (I Kiss Your Hand, Madame) (Land) (as Laurene Gerard); Die Frau, nach der man sich sehnt (The Woman One Longs For; Three Loves) (Bernhardt)

363
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Cast Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>Der blae Engel (The Blue Angel)</td>
<td>(von Sternberg)</td>
<td>as Lola Frohlich; Morocco (von Sternberg) (as Amy Jolly)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Dishonored</td>
<td>(von Sternberg)</td>
<td>as X-27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Shanghai Express</td>
<td>(von Sternberg)</td>
<td>as Shanghai Lilly; Blonde Venus (von Sternberg) (as Helen Faraday)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>Song of Songs</td>
<td>(Mamoulian)</td>
<td>as Lily Czapanek</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>The Scarlet Empress</td>
<td>(von Sternberg)</td>
<td>as Catherine II</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>The Devil Is a Woman</td>
<td>(von Sternberg)</td>
<td>as Concha Perez</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Desire</td>
<td>(Borzage)</td>
<td>as Madeleine de Beaupré; I Loved a Soldier (Hathaway); The Garden of Allah (Boleslawski) (as Domini Enfilden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1937</td>
<td>Knight without Armor</td>
<td>(Feyder)</td>
<td>as Alexandra Vladinoff; Angel (Lubitsch) (as Maria Barker)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>Destry Rides Again</td>
<td>(George Marshall)</td>
<td>as Frenchy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Seven Sinners</td>
<td>(Garnett)</td>
<td>as Bijou</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>The Flame of New Orleans</td>
<td>(Clair)</td>
<td>as Claire Ledeux; Manpower (Walsh) (as Fay Duval)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942</td>
<td>The Lady Is Willing</td>
<td>(Leisen)</td>
<td>as Elizabeth Madden; The Spoilers (Enright) (as Cherry Mallotte); Pittsburgh (Seiler) (as Josie Winters)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Screen Snapshots No. 103</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Follow the Boys</td>
<td>(A. Edward Sutherland)</td>
<td>as Jamilla</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Martin Roumagnac (The Room Upstairs)</td>
<td>(Lacombe)</td>
<td>as Blanche Ferrand</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Golden Earrings</td>
<td>(Leisen)</td>
<td>as Lydia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>A Foreign Affair</td>
<td>(Wilder)</td>
<td>as Erika von Schluetow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>Jigsaw</td>
<td>(Markle)</td>
<td>as nightclub patron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Stage Fright</td>
<td>(Hitchcock)</td>
<td>as Charlotte Inwood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>No Highway in the Sky</td>
<td>(Koster)</td>
<td>as Monica Teasdale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Rancho Notorious</td>
<td>(Fritz Lang)</td>
<td>as altar Keane</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>Around the World in Eighty Days</td>
<td>(Anderson)</td>
<td>as hostess</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>The Monte Carlo Story</td>
<td>(Taylor)</td>
<td>as Marquise Maria de Crevecoeur; Witness for the Prosecution (Wilder) (as Christine Vole)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1958  Touch of Evil (Welles) (as Tanya)
1961  Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer) (as Mme. Bertholt)
1962  The Black Fox (Stoumen) (as narrator)
1963  Paris When It Sizzles (Quine)
1979  Schöner Gigolo—armer Gigolo (Just a Gigolo) (Hemmings) (as Baroness von Semering)

Publications

By DIETRICH: books—

Marlene’s ABC, 1961.
Ich bin, Gott sei dank, Berlinerin, Frankfurt, 1987; as

On DIETRICH: books—

Talky, Jean, Marlene Dietrich, femme énigme, Paris, 1932.
Dickens, Homer, The Films of Marlene Dietrich, New York, 1968; as
The Complete Films of Marlene Dietrich, revised and updated by Kracauer, Siegfried, From Caligari to Hitler: A Psychological History of the German Film, Princeton, New Jersey, 1974.
Higham, Charles, Marlene: The Life of Marlene Dietrich, New Seydel, Renate, Marlene Dietrich: Eine Chronik ihres Lebens in Spoto, Donald, Falling in Love Again: Marlene Dietrich, Bos-
Studlar, Gaylene, In the Realm of Pleasure: Von Sternberg, Dietrich, Lieberman, Alexander, Marlene: An Intimate Photographic Memoir,
Spoto, Donald, Blue Angel: The Life of Marlene Dietrich, New Baxt, George, The Marlene Dietrich Murder Case (fiction), New Hofmann, Barbara, Marlene Dietrich, die Privatsammlung, Frankfurt, 1993.
Riva, Maria, Marlene Dietrich, New York, 1993.

Mentele, Richard, Auf Liebe eingestellt: Marlene Dietrich’s schone
Hanut, Eryk, I Wish You Love: Conversations with Marlene Dietrich,
Berkeley, California, 1996.

On DIETRICH: articles—

George, Manfred, “Marlene Dietrich’s Beginning,” in Films in Sargeant, W., “Dietrich and Her Magic Myth,” and “Tribute to Mamma from Papa Hemingway,” by Ernest Hemingway, in Life
(New York), 18 August 1952.
Knight, Arthur, “Marlene Dietrich,” in Films in Review (New York),
December 1954.
Lane, J. F., “Give Her Dirt—and Hard Work,” in Films and Filming
(London), December 1956.
Kyro, Ado, “Sternberg et Marlène,” in Le Surrealisme au Cinema
(Paris), 1963.
Higham, Charles, “Dietrich in Sydney,” in Sight and Sound (London), Winter 1965–66.
Calendo, J., “Dietrich and the Devil,” in InterView (New York),
October and November 1972.
Rheuban, Joyce, “Josef von Sternberg: The Scientist and the Vamp,” in Sight and Sound (London), Autumn 1972–73.
Gow, Gordon, “Alchemy: Dietrich + Sternberg,” in Films and Flinn, T., “Joe Where Are You?,” in Velvet Light Trap (Madison, Wisconsin), Winter 1977.
von Sternberg, J., and A. Kerr, “Marlene wird geschaffen,” in Film and Fernsehen (Berlin), October 1977.
Baxter, P., “On the Naked Thighs of Miss Dietrich,” in Wide Angle
Lewis, W. W., “‘Marlene Dietrich: From Devil to Angel . . . and Back’” and “Sam Jaffe on Dietrich and Sternberg,” in Close-Ups:
Zucker, C., “Some Observations on Sternberg and Dietrich,” in Cinema Journal (Evanson), Spring 1980.
“Marlene Dietrich—Stationen eines Lebens,” in Film und Fernsehen
(Berlin), December 1980.
Rheinsberg, A., “Hommage,” in Frauen und Film (Frankfurt),
February 1984.
Marlene Dietrich Section of Positif (Paris), September 1984.
Sorel, Nancy Caldwell, “Alexander Fleming and Marlene Dietrich,” Taborska, Agnieszka, “‘Marlana—wieczny wamp’” in Kino (Warsaw), May 1995.
Radio Times (London), 28 September 1996.

On DIETRICH: film—

Marlene, documentary directed by Maximilian Schell, Germany, 1984.

* * *

For decades, filmgoers have clustered to her like moths around a flame, to paraphrase her signature tune “Falling in Love Again.”
That eternal flame burned brightest from the thirties onward, but Dietrich had toiled in the silent cinema for nearly ten years before her discovery as Teuton siren, Garbo-threat, and sphinxlike beauty of the international cinema.

The standard critical line is that without cine-magician von Sternberg, there would be no Dietrich; the less supportable exaggeration of this contention is that only the seven Dietrich-von Sternberg collaborations merit serious discussion. If von Sternberg deserves credit for sculpting her image and breathing life into this goddess, then let us applaud implacable Marlene with variations on a theme of mysterious enticement after The Devil Is a Woman and until Just a Gigolo. Even as a contentious old woman (who refused to appear on camera) in Maximilian Schell’s riveting documentary, Marlene (1984), her mystique was untouched by time, and as someone once said, “her voice alone could break your heart.” Forty years of image maintenance suggests that the provenance of Dietrich’s legend was not the vision of her Svengali but could be found in her own steel will.

Certainly, the von Sternberg/Dietrich combination represents a singular symbiosis of visually oriented auteur and perfect camera subject. If Garbo drew the camera to her like a magnet, Dietrich not only fascinated viewers with her sultry glare but transfixed every other aspect of the mise-en-scène, a smoky world of sequined nets, exotic feathers, and glistening surfaces masked by shadows. It is a cinema in which style is the substance. Whether a plump temptress in The Blue Angel, foreign-legion groupie in Morocco, a fallen angel in Shanghai Express, or Czarina of Russia in The Scarlet Empress, Dietrich the great illusionist helped von Sternberg fabricate a fabulistic ambience where people lived and died for love. Whether impulsively stealing a kiss from a young woman in The Scarlet Empress, clamping on the lips of a young victim in The Devil Is a Woman or defiantly reapplying her lipstick before the firing squad guns her down in Dishonored, the one constant in Dietrich’s persona was her supreme control, a guarded willfulness she only relinquished for the one lover of her dreams. And if some of her less than dynamic co-stars (Clive Brook, Herbert Marshall) seemed hidden in her shadow, they were only props anyway. Dietrich’s sacrificial gestures, however, were in no way lessened by the unworthiness of their recipients. No man could measure up to a divinity (although Morocco’s Gary Cooper is a step in the right direction).

After the peak of the von Sternberg/Dietrich teamwork, the ravishingly decadent The Devil Is a Woman (Dietrich’s favorite movie), the movie’s ultimate apotheosis of the femme fatale, Dietrich floundered a bit, but did not, as some suggest, survive as a mere impersonator of her former exalted self. Are cinephiles supposed to repudiate the von Sternberg/Dietrich collaboration because her beauty, her allure, Dietrich’s decision to prevail as a more democratic love goddess is completely defensible. What Dietrich cleverly did, while her lipstick before the firing squad guns her down in Dishonored, the one constant in Dietrich’s persona was her supreme control, a guarded willfulness she only relinquished for the one lover of her dreams. And if some of her less than dynamic co-stars (Clive Brook, Herbert Marshall) seemed hidden in her shadow, they were only props anyway. Dietrich’s sacrificial gestures, however, were in no way lessened by the unworthiness of their recipients. No man could measure up to a divinity (although Morocco’s Gary Cooper is a step in the right direction).

Rigorously taking care of her beauty, the way champions train their muscles for prize fights, Dietrich cheated time in her postwar film work and in the wildly successful cabaret act that kept her legend alive in an environment of husky-voiced song styling and perfectly positioned stage lighting that burned years off the fabulous face. On-screen, she was still surpassingly lovely as double-crossing dames in Witness for the Prosecution, Stage Fright, and A Foreign Affair. Somehow, the good-time gal of the forties was the aloof temptress of the thirties once more. In our contemporary cinema in which glamour seems to dissolve as soon as it is revealed on-screen, Dietrich remains the movies’ most durable symbol of the power of artifice. Like Swanson and Crawford, her enemy was time but she did not go down without a long fight. When we stare at her perfection even in the gauze-lensed Just a Gigolo, we look into the face of our dreams—nostalgic dreams of a time when stars offered an escape from the commonplace not just a reaffirmation of it.

—Robert Pardi

DILLON, Matt

Nationality: American. Born: New Rochelle, New York, 18 February 1964; brother of actor Kevin Dillon. Education: Attended high school in New Rochelle; studied acting at the Lee Strasberg School. Career: Made his film debut in Over the Edge after being spotted by casting director Vic Ramos, 1979. Awards: Best Male Lead Independent Spirit Award, for Drugstore Cowboy, 1989; Blockbuster Entertainment Award for Favorite Supporting Actor-Comedy, for There’s Something About Mary, 1999. Agent: Ed Limato, William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Over the Edge (Kaplan)</td>
<td>(as Richie)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>Little Darlings (Maxwell)</td>
<td>(as Randy); My Bodyguard (Bill) (as Moody)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Liar’s Moon (Fisher)</td>
<td>(as Jack Duncan); Tex (Hunter) (as Tex McCormick); The Great American Fourth of July and Other Disasters (Bartlett—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>The Outsiders (Copolla)</td>
<td>(as Dallas Winston); Rumble Fish (Francis Ford Copolla) (as Rusty James)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1984</td>
<td>The Flamingo Kid (Marshall)</td>
<td>(as Jeffrey Willis)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Rebel (Jenkins)</td>
<td>(title role); Target (Arthus Penn) (as Chris Lloyd)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Native Son (Freedland)</td>
<td>(as Jan)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>The Big Town (Bolt)</td>
<td>(as I. C. Cullen); Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Couturie—doc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Kansas (Stevens)</td>
<td>(as Doyle Kennedy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>Drugstore Cowboy (Van Sant)</td>
<td>(as Bob Hughes); Bloodhounds of Broadway (Brookner) (as Regret); When He’s Not a Stranger (John Gray—for TV)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>A Kiss before Dying (Dearden)</td>
<td>(as Jonathan Corliss); “Return to Kansas City” ep. of Women &amp; Men II (Women &amp; Men: Leather)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
In Love There Are No Rules) (Bernstein, Figgis, and Zea—for TV) (as Eddie Megeffin)
1992 Singles (Crowe) (as Cliff Poncier); Malcolm X (Spike Lee) (as DJ at the Harlem “Y” Dance)
1993 The Saint of Fort Washington (Hunter) (as Matthew); Mr. Wonderful (Minghella) (as Gus DeMarco)
1994 Golden Gate (Madden) (as Kevin Walker)
1995 To Die For (Van Sant) (as Larry Maretto); Frankie Starlight (Lindsay-Hogg) (as Terry Klout)
1996 Beautiful Girls (Ted Demme) (as Tommy “Birdman” Rowland); Albino Alligator (Spacey) (as Dova); Grace of My Heart (Anders) (as Jay Phillips)
1997 In & Out (Oz) (as Cameron Drake); Pitch (Hotz, Rice) (doc) (as himself)
1998 Wild Things (McNaughton) (as Sam Lombardo); There’s Something About Mary (Peter & Bobby Farrelly) (as Pat Healy)
2000 One Night at McCools (Zwart) (as Randy)

Publications

By DILLON: articles—

Interview in Interview (New York), December 1983.
Interview with Brendan Lemon, in Interview (New York), April 1991.

On DILLON: book—

On DILLON: articles—

Seale, Jim, “Marshaling Dillon Tex,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1982.

Other Films:

2000 City of Ghosts (d, co-sc)
Early in his career, Matt Dillon came to personify the alienated celluloid teen, adept at conveying adolescent angst (if not outright menace). Sometimes, his characters were thoroughly amoral and antisocial, such as Richie, the nihilistic young punk, in his debut feature, Jonathan Kaplan’s much-underrated Over the Edge. As a depiction of disarray among suburban (as opposed to urban) teenagers, Over the Edge may be linked to the classic of the genre, Rebel Without a Cause. Dillon’s presence in the film served as a solid launching pad to screen stardom.

From Over the Edge, he segued into secondary roles as the stereotypical teen bully in Little Darlings and My Bodyguard. In what were his most highly publicized early films, The Outsiders and Rumble Fish (both directed by Francis Coppola, and based on the writings of S. E. Hinton), Dillon played troubled teens who were more complexly drawn. Unfortunately, both films were far from the definitive views of youthful angst intended by the director. Dillon earlier had played a variation of his Outsiders/Rumble Fish characters in Tim Hunter’s Tex, a far more cohesive adaptation of an S. E. Hinton story, in which he effectively conveys his character’s insecurity and vulnerability. But easily the most congenial of his early performances was in The Flamingo Kid. Here, Dillon winningly plays a young man who is an outsider because of class, and who is anything but surly and antisocial. He is the child of a Brooklyn blue-collar family whose upwardly mobile instincts take root when he hires on as a cabana boy at a country club.

The Flamingo Kid might have been a career breakthrough. But what followed for Dillon was a spate of roles in films that were essentially minor in nature (Rebel, The Big Town, and Kansas), or those with higher pedigrees which were outright misfires (Target). During the second half of the 1980s it appeared as if Dillon’s career was in the process of self-destructing; furthermore, he already had entered his twenties, and could not forever play troubled or rebellious (or even likable) young antiheroes.

His celluloid salvation came when he was cast as Bob Hughes, the junkie-thief, in Gus Van Sant’s Drugstore Cowboy. The film is a vivid depiction of life and survival within a drug subculture, and for Dillon it was a transitional role. Upon its release, many critics expressed surprise at the excellence of his performance. But he always had been a fine actor. This misconception regarding his talent was fostered by the fact that too many of his films had been undistinguished, and were quickly forgotten. His films with Coppola were disappointments; Over the Edge was barely seen. So Tex and The Flamingo Kid seemed to be deviations in a lackluster career. Additionally, Dillon may have suffered, in terms of the critical estimate of his acting ability, from having such a handsome face. He was victimized by the widespread prejudice that if you are beautiful you cannot act, and if you can act you cannot be beautiful.

In Drugstore Cowboy, however, Dillon proved that he indeed knew how to act. He followed up by doing nicely as the ill-fated homeless camera buff befriended by Danny Glover in the unfortunately overlooked The Saint of Fort Washington; the ex-husband who tries to avoid paying alimony by marrying off former wife Annabella Sciorra in Mr. Wonderful; and the ill-fated husband of Nicole Kidman in To Die For. The latter role is especially interesting, given the roots of Dillon’s screen persona. His Larry Maretto, a loving and well-adjusted nice guy who is satisfied with his small-town American life and only wants to start a family with his wife, is the antithesis of his early roles. Rather than being the cause of (or conduit for) chaos, Larry is the victim, as his murder is instigated by his wife—and he is bumped off by the type of characters he might have played a decade earlier.

By the mid-1990s, the careers of quite a few of the previous decade’s young celluloid hopefuls had evaporated. C. Thomas Howell, Jim Metzler, Chris Makepeace, Leif Garrett, Vincent Spano, Ralph Macchio, and even Oscar-winner Tatum O’Neal are among Dillon’s early 1980s co-stars who no longer were promising personalities or hot properties; such is the fleeting nature of stardom. Dillon, happily, was an exception. And he insured his industry foothold by offering a nice array of performances in the second half of the decade: a small-town Romeo who cheats on his longtime girlfriend with his old, now-married high school flame (Beautiful Girls); a crazed genius rock musician, a character loosely based on the Beach Boys’ Brian Wilson (Grace of My Heart); an Oscar-winning actor who outs his high school English teacher (In & Out); a thief who is a combination charmer-devil (Albino Alligator); a high school guidance counselor accused of raping two sexpot students (Wild Things); and, most hilariously, an oily private investigator who comes complete with a pencil-thin moustache (There’s Something About Mary).

Unlike Tom Cruise and Demi Moore, his fellow survivors of the 1980s, Matt Dillon has not become a mega-watt star who commands a multimillion-dollar salary. Instead, he is a working actor and all-purpose performer whose solidly reliable on-screen presence has portended his professional staying power.

—Rob Edelman

DONAT, Robert

Nationality: British. Born: Withington, near Manchester, 18 March 1905. Family: Married 1) the dancer Ella Annesey Voysey, 1930 (divorced 1948), three children; 2) the actress Renée Asherson. Career: Left school at 14; toured with elocution teacher James Barnard giving Bible readings and Shakespearean recitals; 1921—joined Henry Baynton touring company as actor, stage manager,
Robert Donat with Greer Garson in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips"

Robert Donat was one of the martyrs of the acting profession, a potentially great actor hampered by ill-health, which he resolutely strove to overcome throughout his career. Though favored with romantic, even dashing good looks and a richly beautiful voice, he had initially to cope in childhood with a serious stutter. Training in elocution gradually controlled this nervous impediment, with the result that, once established as an actor, he became famous alike for his voice and his sensitivity of expression. However, he also suffered from chronic asthma throughout his life.

Before his London debut in 1930, he had had virtually a decade of experience as a youthful actor in repertory and touring companies, performing in a wide range of plays, including those of Shakespeare. He developed a particular gift for reciting verse, which he was later to consolidate through his recordings. After rejecting an offer from Irving Thalberg—he had a particular dread of going to Hollywood—he accepted a contract with Alexander Korda and, like Merle Oberon as Anne Boleyn, achieved stardom in "The Private Life of Henry VIII," in which he played her ill-fated lover. After that he played Edmond Dantes successfully in an American version of "The Count of Monte Cristo," but this single experience only confirmed him in his view that he must remain in England, where until his death in 1958 he was always the much admired star of stage and screen.

He appeared in one of Hitchcock’s best, and most romantic, British films, The 39 Steps, and brought charm and distinction to René Clair’s English film made for Korda, The Ghost Goes West. After working with Marlene Dietrich in Knight without Armour and playing the doctor in the film version of A. J. Cronin’s novel The Citadel, he won an Academy Award for his remarkable achievement spanning youth to extreme old age as the beloved schoolmaster in Goodbye, Mr. Chips. Later roles included the title role in The Young Mr. Pitt, the dedicated lawyer in the film of Rattigan’s play The Winslow Boy, and the British film pioneer William Friese-Greene in The Magic Box.

Donat’s health finally gave way during the filming of The Inn of the Sixth Happiness, which he only managed to complete with the help of oxygen. The last line he spoke in the film became famous for its tragic appositeness: “We shall not see each other again, I think. Farewell.” He died before the picture was released.

—Roger Manvell

DOUGLAS, Kirk

Films as Actor:

1946 The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Milestone) (as Walter O’Neil)
1947 Mourning Becomes Electra (Nichols) (as Peter Niles); Out of the Past (Build My Gallows High) (J. Tourneur) (as Whit); I Walk Alone (Haskin) (as Noll Turner)
1948 The Walls of Jericho (Stahl) (as Tucker Wedge); My Dear Secretary (Martin) (as Owen Waterbury); A Letter to Three Wives (Mankiewicz) (as George Phipps)
1949 Champion (Robson) (as Midge Kelly)
1950 Young Man with a Horn (Young Man of Music) (Curtiz) (as Rick Martin); The Glass Menagerie (Rapper) (as Jim O’Connor)
1951 Along the Great Divide (Walsh) (as U.S. Marshal Clint Merrick); The Big Carnival (Ace in the Hole) (Wildcr) (as Charles Tatum); Detective Story (Wyler) (as Jim McLeod)
1952 The Big Trees (Feist) (as Jim Fallon); The Big Sky (Hawks) (as Deakins); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli) (as Jonathan Shields)
1953 “Equilibrium” ep. of The Story of Three Loves (G. Reinhardt) (as Pierre Narval); The Juggler (Dmytryk) (as Hans Muller); Act of Love (Un Acte d’amour) (Litvak) (as Robert Teller)
1954 Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea (Fleischer) (as Ned Land); Ulysses (Ulysses) (Camerini) (title role)
1955 The Racers (Such Men Are Dangerous) (Hathaway) (as Gino); Man without a Star (King Vidor) (as Dempsey Rae); The Indian Fighter (de Toth) (as Johnny Hawks)
1956 Lust for Life (Minnelli) (as Vincent Van Gogh)
1957 Top Secret Affair (Their Secret Affair) (Potter) (as Major General Melville Goodwin); Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (John Sturges) (as Doc Holliday); Paths of Glory (Kubrick) (as Colonel Dax)
1958 The Vikings (Fleischer) (as Einer)
1959 Last Train from Gun Hill (John Sturges) (as Matt Morgan); The Devil’s Disciple (Hamilton) (as Richard Dudgeon)
1960 Strangers When We Meet (Quine) (as Larry Coe); Spartacus (Kubrick) (title role, + exec pr)
1961 The Last Sunset (Aldrich) (as Brendan O’Malley); Town without Pity (G. Reinhardt) (as Major Steve Garrett)
1962 Lonely Are the Brave (D. Miller) (as Jack Burns); Two Weeks in Another Town (Minnelli) (as Jack Andrus)
1963 The Hook (Seaton) (as First Sergeant P. J. Briscoe); For Love or Money (Gordon) (as Deke Gentry); The List of Adrian Messenger (Huston) (as George Brougham)
1964 Seven Days in May (Frankenheimer) (as Colonel Martin ‘‘Jiggs’’ Casey)
1965 In Harm’s Way (Preminger) (as Commander Paul Eddington); The Heroes of Telemark (Anthony Mann) (as Dr. Rolf Pedersen)
1966 Cast a Giant Shadow (Shavelson) (as David ‘‘Mickey’’ Marcus); Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as General George Patton)
1967 The Way West (McLagen) (as Senator William J. Tadlock); The War Wagon (Kennedy) (as Lomax)
1968 A Lovely Way to Die (A Lovely Way to Go) (Rich) (as Jim Schuyler)
1969 The Brotherhood (Ritt) (as Frank Ginetta, + pr); The Arrangement (Kazan) (as Eddie Anderson); French Lunch (Cox—short)
1970 There Was a Crooked Man (Mankiewicz) (as Paris Pitman Jr.)
1971 A Gunfight (Johnson) (as Will Tenneray); La luz del fin del mundo (The Light at the Edge of the World) (Billington) (as Denton, + pr); Catch Me a Spy (D. Clement) (as Andre)
1974 Un uomo da rispettare (The Master Touch; Hearts and Minds; A Man to Respect) (Lupo) (as Wallace); Mousy (Cat and Mouse) (Petrie) (as George Anderson)
1975 Once Is Not Enough (Green) (as Mike Wayne)
1976 Victory at Entebbe (Chomsky—for TV) (as Hershel Vilnovsky)
1978 The Far Cry (De Palma) (as Peter); The Chosen (De Martino) (as Caine)
1979 The Villain (Needham) (as Cactus Jack)
1980 The Final Countdown (Don Taylor) (as Capt. Matthew Yelland); Saturn Three (Donen) (as Adam); Home Movies (De Palma) (as Dr. Tuttle)
1981 La luz del Fin del Mundo (Billington) (+ pr)
1982 Remembrance of Love (Smight—for TV); The Man from Snowy River (George Miller) (as Spur)
1983 Eddie Macon’s Run (Haley and Rauch) (as Marzack)
1984 Draw! (Stern—for TV) (as Harry H. Holland)
1985 Amos (Tuchner—for TV) (as Amos Lacher)
1986 Tough Guys (Kanev) (as Archie Long)
1988 Inherit the Wind (Greene—for TV) (as William Jennings Bryan)
1990 Money (Stern)
1991 Oscar (Landis) (as Snaps’s father); Bienvenido a Veraz (Welcome to Veraz) (Xavier Castano) (as Quentin)
1992 The Secret (Arthur—for TV) (as Mike Dunmore)
1994 Greedy (Lynn) (as Uncle Joe McTeague); Take Me Home Again (for TV) (as Ed Reece)
1999 Diamonds (Asher) (as Harry)

Films as Director:

1973 Scalawag (+ ro)
1975 Posse (+ ro, pr)

Other Film:

1971 Summertree (Newley and Record) (pr)

Publications

By DOUGLAS: books—

Dance with the Devil (novel), New York, 1990.
Climbing the Mountain: My Search for Meaning (biography), New York, 1997.

By DOUGLAS: articles—

Interview in Films and Filming (London), September 1972.

On DOUGLAS: books—

On DOUGLAS: articles—

Lantos, J., ‘‘The Last Waltz,’’ in American Film (New York), October 1986.

* * *

Now approaching his sixth decade of movie stardom, Kirk Douglas has played lead roles in the vast majority of the 70-odd films he has made. His screen persona has been characterized by resoluteness and ferocity, the typical ingredients of his steadfast, driven heroes, and occasionally the psychological foundation for his formidable and relentless villains. These variations on a theme of perseverance have pleased audiences who have come to know the Douglas face as a movie icon—eyes blazing with anger or resistance, teeth clenched in determination, a distinctive cleft in his firmly planted chin.

Following a brief Broadway career and Navy service during World War II, Douglas made his movie debut in a supporting role as the ineffectual district attorney husband of Barbara Stanwyck in Lewis Milestone’s melodrama The Strange Love of Martha Ivers. After appearing in another half-dozen features, Douglas earned major stardom as an unscrupulous boxer who punches and claws his way to the top in Mark Robson’s Champion, a performance which earned him an Oscar nomination for Best Actor.

The next few years saw him star in a series of exceptional films by front-rank directors, including Michael Curtiz’s Young Man with a Horn, Raoul Walsh’s Along the Great Divide, Billy Wilder’s The Big Carnival, William Wyler’s Detective Story, Howard Hawks’s The Big Sky, Vincente Minnelli’s The Bad and the Beautiful, and King Vidor’s Man without a Star. This series of memorable, strong-willed protagonists fixed the Douglas image firmly in the public’s consciousness.

The actor’s intense portrayal of the tormented Vincent van Gogh in Minnelli’s Lust for Life was followed by that of an idealistic French officer fighting a corrupt military bureaucracy during World War I in Stanley Kubrick’s powerful antiwar film Paths of Glory. Three years later, he again starred for Kubrick in the historical epic Spartacus as a slave who leads an insurrection against the powerful and oppressive leaders of Imperial Rome. In both Kubrick films, Douglas plays a strong-willed, noble leader who suffers an unjust defeat.

Although the 1950s was his most accomplished decade, Douglas continued to star as a rugged individual in respectable, entertaining movies in the 1960s, including David Miller’s Lonely Are the Brave, Minnelli’s Two Weeks in Another Town, and John Frankenheimer’s Seven Days in May. Nevertheless, many of his film projects of that era—including some through the auspices of Bryna Productions, his own production company—were of mediocre quality.

At the end of the 1960s, Douglas starred in what he has referred to as a trilogy: Martin Ritt’s The Brotherhood (as a Mafia leader), Elia Kazan’s The Arrangement (as an advertising executive), and Joseph L. Mankiewicz’s There Was a Crooked Man (as a prison inmate obsessed with escaping). The films were of wildly uneven quality, to be sure, but they served as evidence that Douglas, fast approaching 60, remained a sturdy, effective leading man.

None of his theatrical films since then has made such a strong impact, although as a canny veteran actor Douglas remains a convincing and watchable presence, effortlessly communicating resolve and urgency. Among his better late-career credits are Tough Guys, in which he was cast one final time with longtime friend and frequent co-star Burt Lancaster; the television movie Remembrance of Love, portraying a concentration camp survivor who has an emotional reunion with a woman he had loved decades earlier, in the Warsaw Ghetto; and another television movie, Amos, in which he played an elderly man living against his will in a nursing home.

Finally, in his seventies, Douglas has launched a new career as a writer. In 1988, he published his autobiography, The Ragman’s Son, and since has written several novels.

—Bill Wine, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

DOUGLAS, Melvyn

Nationality: American. Born: Melvyn Edouard Hesselberg in Macon, Georgia, 5 April 1901. Military Service: 1918—served in U.S. Army; enlisted in Army as private, rose to rank of major, serving in India-China-Burma theater. Family: Married the actress (and later politician) Helen Gahagan, 1931 (died 1980), children: Peter and Mary; son Gregory by previous marriage. Career: 1919—joined Owens repertory company, acting debut in Chicago in The Merchant of Venice; changed surname to Douglas; 1920s—toured Midwest with Owens and Jessie Bonstelle companies; 1928—in Broadway production of A Free Soul; 1931—film debut under contract to Goldwyn in Tonight or Never; 1933—requested release from contract and returned to Broadway; 1935—7-year contract with Columbia; late 1930s—with wife became increasingly involved in support of liberal political causes; 1940—delegate to Democratic Convention; signs contract with MGM; 1942—appointed director of the Arts Council of the Office of Civilian Defense; 1946—produced successful musical revue Call Me Mister; 1950s—television work, including Steve Randall series, 1952–53, and Blind Date, 1953; host, Frontier Justice series, 1959; 1951—moved to New York, stage acting successes in Inherit the Wind (1955), The Waltz of the Toreadors (1957), and The Best Man (1960); 1962—resumed film acting. Awards: Best Supporting Actor Academy Award for Hud, 1963; Best Supporting Actor Academy Award and Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics, for Being There, 1979. Died: 4 August 1981.

Films as Actor:

1931 Tonight or Never (LeRoy) (as Fletcher)
1932 As You Desire Me (Fitzmaurice) (as Count Bruno Varelli); Prestige (Garnett) (as Lieutenant Andre Verlaine); The Wiser Sex (Viertel) (as David Rolfe); The Broken Wing (Carrigan) (as Philip Marvin); The Old Dark House (Whale) (as Roger Penderel)
Melvyn Douglas (center) with Brandon DeWilde and Paul Newman (right) in Hud

1933 The Vampire Bat (Strayer) (as Karl Brettschneider); Nagana (Frank) (as Dr. Walt Radnor); Counsellor-at-Law (Wyler) (as Roy Darwin)
1934 Dangerous Corner (Rosen) (as Charles); Woman in the Dark (Rosen) (as Robson)
1935 The People’s Enemy (Wilbur) (as Traps); She Married Her Boss (La Cava) (as Richard Barclay); Annie Oakley (Stevens) (as Jeff Hogarth); Mary Burns, Fugitive (Howard) (as Barton Powell); The Lone Wolf Returns (Neill) (as Michael Lanyard)
1936 And So They Were Married (Nugent) (as Stephen Blake); Theodora Goes Wild (Boleslawski) (as Michael Grant)
1937 Women of Glamour (Wiles) (as Richard Stark); I’ll Take Romance (Griffith) (as James Guthrie); I Met Him in Paris (Ruggles) (as George Potter); Angel (Lubitsch) (as Anthony Halton); Captains Courageous (Fleming)
1938 Arsène Lupin Returns (Fitzmaurice) (as Arsène Lupin); Fast Company (Buzzell) (as Joel Sloane); The Toy Wife (Thorpe) (as George Sartoris); There’s Always a Woman (Hall) (as William Reardon); The Shining Hour (Borzage) (as Henry Linden); That Certain Age (Ludwig) (as Vincent Bulitt)
1939 There’s That Woman Again (Hall) (as William Reardon); Tell No Tales (Fenton) (as Michael Cassidy); Ninotchka (Lubitsch) (as Count Leon Dalga); Good Girls Go to Paris (Hall) (as Ronald Brooke); The Amazing Mr. Williams (Hall) (as Kenny Williams)
1940 Too Many Husbands (Ruggles) (as Henry Lowndes); He Stayed for Breakfast (Hall) (as Paul Boli et); Third Finger Left Hand (Leonard) (as Jeff Thompson)
1941 This Thing Called Love (Hall) (as Tice Collins); That Uncertain Feeling (Lubitsch) (as Larry Baker); A Woman’s Face (Cukor) (as Dr. Gustaf Segert); Our Wife (Stahl) (as Jerry Marvin); Two-Faced Woman (Cukor) (as Larry Blake)
1942 We Were Dancing (Leonard) (as Nicki Prax); They All Kissed the Bride (Hall) (as Michael Holmes)
1943 Three Hearts for Julia (Thorpe) (as Jeff Seabrook)
1947 Sea of Grass (Kazan) (as Bruce Chamberlain); The Guilt of Janet Ames (Levin) (as Smithfield Cobb)
1948 Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House (Potter) (as Bill Cole); My Own True Love (Bennett) (as Clive Heath)
1949 A Woman’s Secret (Ray) (as Luke Jordan); The Great Sinner (Siodmak) (as Armand de Glasse)
1951 My Forbidden Past (Stevenson) (as Paul Beaurevel); On the Loose (Lederer) (as Frank Bradley)
1962 Billy Budd (Ustinov) (as The Dansker)
1963 Hud (Ritt) (as Homer Bannor)
1964 Advance to the Rear (Marshall) (as Col. Brackenby); The Americanization of Emily (Hiller) (as Adm. William Jessup)
Melvyn Douglas's career may be divided into two major periods, each of which earned him a considerable reputation as a skillful performer. Although Douglas began as a dramatic actor and played numerous serious roles during the 1930s, he was most effective in sophisticated comedy. In the latter half of the decade, beginning with She Married Her Boss, Douglas appeared in a series of films in which his suaveness functioned as both a source of romantic appeal and the means by which he became, in reaction to humorous circumstances, the heroine’s foil.

Theodora Goes Wild, an early screwball comedy, confirmed Douglas’s ability, which he shared with Cary Grant, to maintain the credibility of a leading man while having his masculine ego deflated through increasingly foolish behavior. This ability is most fully realized in Ninotchka which, in a way, concerns Douglas’s persona as much as Garbo’s. Lubitsch, in particular, is attuned to the class and gender implications Douglas’s presence carries. In Ninotchka Lubitsch subtly undermines Douglas’s debonair manner through a number of witty verbal exchanges in which Garbo, who, from Douglas’s viewpoint, lacks humor and sophistication, gets the upper hand and then crowns this strategy, in the famous moment when “Garbo laughs,” by having Douglas take a very undignified pratfall. Although Douglas appeared in other successful comedies in the late 1940s, this film remains the highlight of this period of his career.

In the early 1950s, Douglas abandoned Hollywood to devote himself to the theater; after more than 10 years, he returned to filmmaking as a character actor in Billy Budd. In the interim, Douglas had developed into a distinguished dramatic actor and his Academy Award-winning performance in Hud was followed by a series of memorable roles. Of his late films, Tell Me a Riddle, in addition to being a stunning film, contains one of Douglas’s most sensitive, humane, and touching portrayals as an elderly, conservative man, who, on the brink of his wife’s death, is compelled to grapple with her feminist and socialist principles.

—Richard Lippe
Michael Douglas in The Game

Award, 1998. Address: c/o Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1969 Hall, Hero! (Miller) (as Carl Dixon)
1970 Adam at 6 A.M. (Scheerer) (as Adam Gaines)
1971 Summertree (Newley) (as Jerry McAdams); When Michael Calls (Shattered Silence) (Leacock—for TV) (as Craig)
1972 Napoleon and Samantha (McEveety) (as Danny); The Streets of San Francisco (Grauman—for TV) (as Steve Keller)
1978 Coma (Crichton) (as Mark Bellows)
1979 The China Syndrome (Bridges) (as Richard Adams) (+ pr); Running (Steyn) (as Michael Andropolis)
1980 It’s My Turn (Weill) (as Ben Lewin)
1983 The Star Chamber (Hyams) (as Steven Hardin)
1984 Romancing the Stone (Zemeckis) (as Jack C. Colton) (+ pr)
1985 A Chorus Line (Attenborough) (as Zach); The Jewel of the Nile (Teague) (as Jack C. Colton) (+ pr)
1987 Fatal Attraction (Lyne) (as Dan Gallagher); Wall Street (Stone) (as Gordon Gekko)
1989 Black Rain (Scott) (as Nick Conklin); The War of the Roses (DeVito) (as Oliver Rose)
1992 Shining Through (Seltzer) (as Ed Leland); Basic Instinct (Verhoeven) (as Detective Nick Curran)
1993 Falling Down (Schumacher) (as William Foster/D-Fens)
1994 Disclosure (Levinson) (as Tom Sanders)
1995 The American President (Reiner) (as President Andrew Shepherd)
1996 The Ghost and the Darkness (Hopkins) (as Remington) (+ co-exec pr)
1997 The Game (Fincher) (as Nicholas Van Orton)
1998 A Perfect Murder (Davis) (as Steven Taylor)
1999 Forever Hollywood (Glassman, McCarthy) (doc) (as himself)
2000 Wonder Boys (Hanson) (as Grady Tripp); One Night At McCool’s (Zwart) (as Mr. Burmcister) (+ pr); Traffic (Soderbergh) (as Judge Robert Lewis)

Other Films:

1962 Lonely Are the Brave (Miller) (asst d)
1965 The Heroes of Telemark (Anthony Mann) (asst d)
1966 Cast a Giant Shadow (Shavelson) (asst d)
1975 One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Forman) (co-pr)
1984 Starman (John Carpenter’s Starman) (Carpenter) (exec pr)
1990 Flatliners (Schumacher) (co-pr)
1991  Eyes of an Angel (The Tender) (Harmon) (exec pr)
1992  Radio Flyer (Richard Donner) (exec pr)
1993  Made in America (Benjamin) (co-pr)
1997  Face/Off (Woo) (co-exec pr); The Rainmaker (John Grisham’s The Rainmaker) (Coppola) (co-exec pr)
2000  One Night at McCool’s (Zwart) (pr)

Publications

By DOUGLAS: articles—

Interview in Photoplay Film Monthly (London), May 1976.
Interview in Films Illustrated (London), September 1979.
Interview in Ciné Revue (Paris), 5 February 1981.
‘‘Business as Usual,’’ interview with David Thomson, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1990.

On DOUGLAS: books—

On DOUGLAS: articles—

Griffin, N., ‘‘Going the Distance,’’ in Los Angeles, October 1997.

* * *

Son of the equally famous movie icon Kirk Douglas, Michael Douglas has come to personify the contemporary, Caucasian middle-to-upper-class American male who finds himself the brunt of female anger because of real or imagined sexual slights. To this harried representative of his gender, any kind of sexual contact with someone other than his mate and the mother of his children is destined to come at a costly price.

In Fatal Attraction, he is an otherwise happily married man whose one-night stand with a seductress-from-Hell (Glenn Close) transforms his—and his family’s—existence into a never-ending horror movie. In Basic Instinct—a title that purposefully features the same cadence as Fatal Attraction—he is a cop whose sense of professionalism evaporates when he becomes involved with a sexy murder suspect (Sharon Stone). Disclosure is a drama of sexual harassment in the workplace, only the tables are turned: the boss, the sexually aggressive harasser (Demi Moore), is a woman, while the underling, the happily-married nice-guy harassee (Douglas), is a man. The female characters in Fatal Attraction, Basic Instinct, and Disclosure are cutthroat villainesses, an anti-feminist’s fantasy of a man-eating monster. Poor Michael Douglas is the Everyman who must contend with, and be victimized by, these women and their raging, psychotic sexuality.

A fourth film to add to this trio is The War of the Roses, only here Douglas’s tormentor is his wife (Kathleen Turner), with whom he is in the throes of divorce and cannot agree on a property settlement. The War of the Roses extends the Douglas Everyman in that his tormentor does not come from outside the family circle. His character literally digs into the trenches and goes to war with the woman whom he once loved.

Falling Down is a natural extension of The War of the Roses. Here, Douglas plays an alienated powder keg who has lost his job and is estranged from his wife. All of his humanity has been stripped away by an uncaring society. One day, he explodes internally while his car is stuck in a traffic jam on a Los Angeles freeway, and he sets off on a violent odyssey across the urban landscape of Southern California.

Conversely, in Wall Street, Douglas for once gets to play the victimizer rather than the victim. Gordon Gekko is one of his most fascinating characters: the heaviest of heavy hitters, a stock and real estate speculator whose face adorns the cover of Fortune magazine. To Gekko, $800,000 is just another day’s profit. Ambitious young stockbroker Bud Fox (Charlie Sheen) pursues Gekko, and soon becomes the master’s protege. With this position comes a price, because involvement with the ruthless, passionless Gekko means twisting the rules, using insider information to trade stocks and artificially manipulate the market. If Gekko is no nice guy lost in his passions, he is another incarnation of the modern American male: the greedy yuppie personification of the Me generation, a white-collar criminal from skin to soul who is convinced that ‘‘greed is good,’’ and who is a fitting corporate villain for the Reagan years. He is played by Douglas with just the right touch of menace and swagger.

Upon Douglas’s earning major screen stardom in the mid-1980s with his delightful performance as an idealistic soldier of fortune in Romancing the Stone and its sequel, The Jewel of the Nile, it became easy to forget that he previously had enjoyed a successful career both in front of and behind the camera. In the 1970s, he co-starred with Karl Malden in the long-running television series, The Streets of San Francisco. He was the Academy Award-winning co-producer of One Flew Over the Cuckoo’s Nest. He had a nice supporting role in The China Syndrome (which he also produced), a first-rate drama about the attempted cover-up of a nuclear power plant accident and one of the most intelligent Hollywood films of the late 1970s. In 1983 he had an interesting starring role in The Star Chamber, a provocative drama about a judge who has come to regard as inadequate the legal system with which he is such an integral part, and who becomes involved with a diabolical vigilante group. After scoring in Fatal Attraction and Wall Street, Douglas proved he could play a Stallone-like action hero in his role as a New York cop in Black Rain.

During the second half of the 1990s, Douglas still kept playing yuppie victims and victimizers. He was the former in The Game, cast as a wealthy investment banker who becomes immersed in paranoia while participating in the title diversion; he was the latter in A Perfect Murder, an unnecessary remake of Dial M For Murder, playing a merciless commodities trader who schemes to do in his unfaithful wife (Gwyneth Paltrow). Douglas returned to the thriller genre in The Ghost and the Darkness, cast as a fabled American game hunter in 1896 East Africa. But in his best roles of the period, he deviates from these personas. First he reinvented himself as a suave, Clintonesque chief executive, a widower who begins dating a feisty environmental lobbyist (Annette Bening), in The American President. Then he gave his most acclaimed performance in years in Wonder Boys, cast as a disheveled, pot-smoking college English professor/writer who fears that he will be unable to repeat the success of his first novel.

—Rob Edelman

DOWNEY, Robert Jr.

Nationality: American. Born: New York, New York, 4 April 1965; son of Robert Downey, film director and producer. Family: Married Deborah Falconer (an actress, singer, and songwriter), 1993; children: Indio (son). Career: Actor; appeared on Saturday Night Live, 1985–86; partner, Herd of Turtles production company. Awards: British Academy of Film and Television Arts (BAFTA) Award for Best Actor, for Chaplin, 1993; Boston Society of Film Critics Award (Third Place) for Best Supporting Actor, for One Night Stand, 1997. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90212–4183, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1970 Pound (Downey, Sr.) (as Puppy)
1972 Greaser’s Palace (Downey, Sr.) (uncredited)
1980 Up the Academy (Downey, Sr.) (uncredited)
1983 Baby, It’s You (Sayles) (as Stewart)
1984 Firstborn (Apted) (as Lee)
1985 Weird Science (as Robert Downey) (Hughes) (as Ian); Tuff Turf (as Robert Downey) (Kiernsh) (as Jimmy Parker); Mussolini: The Untold Story (Graham—mini for TV) (as Bruno Mussolini)
1986 Back to School (Metter) (as Derek); America (Moonbeam) (Downey, Sr.)
1987 Less Than Zero (Kanievska) (as Julian Wells); Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam (Couturé—doc, for TV) (as voice); The Pick-up Artist (Toback) (as Jack Jericho)

---

Robert Downey, Jr. with Natasha Gregson Wagner (left) and Heather Graham in Two Girls and a Guy
1998  U.S. Marshals (Baird) (as John Royce); The Gingerbread Man (Altman) (as Clyde Pell)
1999  Black and White (Toback) (as Terry); Bowfinger (Oz) (as Jerry Renfro); Friends & Lovers (Haas) (as Hans); In Dreams (Jordan) (as Vivian Thompson)
2000  Wonder Boys (Hanson) (as Terry Crabtree); Last Party 2000 (Leitch)

Publications

On DONNEY: articles—

Seidenberg, R., “Air America,” in American Film (Farmingdale, New York), vol. 15, no. 11, August 1990.

* * *

The versatility of actor Robert Downey Jr. seemed to emerge with each acting assignment. While early works featured his youthful spirit in juvenile roles, he graduated to more eccentric and eclectic roles about the time he spent a year on television as a comedian for Saturday Night Live (1985–1986). The range of his acting skills can be illustrated by noting that within a year’s time he played a pedophile in In Dreams, a closeted gay in Black and White, and a German ski instructor in Friends and Lovers.

While it appeared in the mid-1980s that Robert Downey Jr. would be best suited to light comedy films, he proved to be an eclectic actor who displayed an imagination that could embrace many genres: fantasy, adventure, crime, historical, and biographical. Of three fantasy works, Weird Science (1985), Chances Are (1989), and Heart and Souls (1993), the latter work became a brilliant exposition of the actor’s subtle mimicry and physical comedy. In Heart and Souls Downey has four souls who can only see and react with. They must complete a task to earn their way to the hereafter, and Thomas Reilly (Downey’s role) helps them with each assignment. Two men and two women must enter his body to complete the task. With adept body movements and voice changes, he takes on the characters of relatively straight personas: he becomes a middle-aged man and a young woman as they enter his body. On a more comic level he assumes the voices and body movements of a big city hood and an aggressive big city Afro-American woman.

A year earlier, 1992, his voice and physical mastery of one of the great film comedians of the 20th century, Charlie Chaplin, provided Downey a best actor Academy Award nomination and a win from the British Academy, Richard Attenborough, the director of Chaplin, had the audacity to incorporate clips from several of Chaplin’s films, including The Immigrant (1917), The Kid (1921), The Gold Rush (1925), Modern Times (1935), and The Great Dictator (1940). Nevertheless, Downey enacted a convincing Chaplin with his skilled suggestions of the famous comedian’s genius. The term “suggestions” is purposefully used because the Chaplin imitators, like Billy West, overstated the movements of this comic star. Downey handles a recreation of Chaplin’s turn as a pesky drunk watching a musical hall series of variety acts—a routine from the stage the silent screen comedian used for his 1915 film A Night in the Show. Downey comes very close to achieving the subtle, even graceful, humorous reeling and staggering employed by the silent screen comedian.

In the best sense of the word Robert Downey Jr. became the chameleon actor. On the one hand he was able to portray the span of Chaplin’s years, from his youthful music hall days to his final days when he was awarded an honorary Oscar at the age of 82. In marked contrast was his satirical portrayal of tabloid television host Wayne Gale, who preyed on psychopathic people in interviews for a sensational program called American Maniacs in Oliver Stone’s controversial Natural Born Killers (1994).

Once more the actor used his versatility to change the color and tone of a previous achievement. The chameleon actor became a sympathetic court physician to Charles II in the well-known historical drama Restoration (1994). Downey’s once rakish Dr. Robert Merivel eventually receives his own restoration amidst the political intrigues of 17th-century court life. Critics and the general audience applauded his effective British accent and courtly manners.

Restoration had many characteristics of a drama created by playwrights in the past, and Downey made some inroads as an actor who could handle parts in Shakespearean plays. He also executed his role effectively as an earl in the British production of Richard III (1996). While this was a small part in the film version of the play, he displayed an effective rendition of Hamlet confronting his mother, Gertrude, in an exhibit of his possible present-day problems with his own mother in writer-director James Toback’s Two Girls and a Guy (1997).

Toback gave the actor one of his first starring roles in the 1987 film, The Pick-Up Artist, a romantic comedy co-starring Molly Ringwald. For the next decade Downey proved he had a wide range of acting abilities when he embraced all genres from light comedy to serious dramas. Toback gave Downey a role as a closeted homosexual in the 1999 psychological drama Black and White. The writer director said of Downey: “The same reckless curiosity which has led him to court destruction has also elevated him to the highest level of creation.” Ironically, the actor who received praise for his depiction of a cocaine addict in Less Than Zero (1989) has had brushes with the law over his use of drugs.

Downey has produced outstanding portraits for a variety of directors. He has become the master of mavericks. For the 1999 In Dreams the actor handled the part of a pedophile with a flair for the bizarre. Dramatically convincing, he displays his ability to mimic sexual ambiguity with the facile use of both voice and body. San Francisco Chronicle critic Mike LaSalle wrote about the actor’s portrayal of book editor Terry Crabtree in Wonder Boys (2000): “[He] provides the one consistent point of light for the picture. . . In a movie in which every other character is vague, ambivalent, or drug-addled, Downey plays Crabtree with crispness and invention.” This solid performance as a manipulative gay editor of fictional books shows Downey’s growing authority as an actor. He becomes so confident with each part that he often transcends the leading actors in the film. In Wonder Boys he steals the focus from the older and more experienced Michael Douglas’s flawed portrait of a teacher-novelist on the skids—a former “wonder boy.”

—Donald McCaffrey
DREYFUSS, Richard

Films as Actor:
1967 The Graduate (Nichols) (bit role as Berkeley student); Valley of the Dolls (Robson) (bit role)
1968 The Young Runaways (Dreifuss) (as Terry); Hello Down There (Sub-A-Dub-Dub) (Arnold) (as Harold Webster)
1972 Two for the Money (Kowalski—for TV)
1973 Dillinger (Milius) (as Baby Face Nelson); American Graffiti (Lucas) (as Curt Henderson)
1974 The Second Coming of Suzanne (Barry) (as Clavius); The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz (Kotcheff) (title role)
1975 Jaws (Spielberg) (as Matt Hooper); Inserts (Byrum) (as Boy Wonder, + asso pr)
1976 Victory at Entebbe (Chomsky—for TV) (as Col. Netanyahu)
1977 Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Spielberg) (as Roy Neary); The Goodbye Girl (Ross) (as Elliott Garfield)
1978 The Big Fix (Kagan) (as Moses Wine, + co-pr)
1980 The Competition (Oliansky) (as Paul Dietrich)
1981 Whose Life Is It Anyway? (Badham) (as Ken Harrison); Jacqueline Susann’s Valley of the Dolls (Valley of the Dolls) (Grauman—for TV)
1982 SPFX 1140 (Balaban)
1983 The Buddy System (Glenn Jordan) (as Joe)
1986 Down and Out in Beverly Hills (Mazursky) (as Dave Whiteman); Stand by Me (Rob Reiner) (as The Writer)
1987 Stakeout (Badham) (as Chris Leece); Tin Men (Levinson) (as Bill “BB” Babowsky); Nuts (Ritt) (as Aaron Levinsky); Funny, You Don’t Look 200 (Michener) (presenter, + sc, pr)
1988 Moon over Parador (Mazursky) (as Jack Noah)
1989 Let It Ride (Pytka) (as Jay Trotter); Always (Spielberg) (as Pete Sandich)
1990 Postcards from the Edge (Nichols) (as Dr. Frankenthal)
1991 Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (Stoppard) (as The Player); Once Around (Hallstrom) (as Sam Sharpe); What about Bob? (Oz) (as Dr. Leo Marvin); Prisoner of Honor (Russell—for TV) (as George Piquart, + exec pr)
1992 Lincoln (Kanhard—for TV doc) (as voice of William T. Sherman)
1993 Lost in Yonkers (Coolidge) (as Louie); Another Stakeout (Badham) (as Chris Leece)
1994 Silent Fall (Beresford) (as Jake Reiner)
1995 The Last Word (Spielakis—for TV) (as Larry); The American President (Rob Reiner) (as Sen. Bob Rumson)
1996 Mr. Holland’s Opus (Herek) (as Glenn Holland); Night Falls on Manhattan; James and the Giant Peach (Selick) (as voice of the Centipede)
1998 Krippendorf’s Tribe (Holland) (as James Krippendorf)
1999 Lansky (McNaughton—for TV) (as Meyer Lansky)
2000 The Crew (Dinner) (as Bobby Bartelmeo); Fail Safe (Frears—for TV) (as President); The Old Man who Read Love Stories (de Heer)
2001 Cletis Tout (Ver Weil)

Other Film:
1994 Quiz Show (Redford) (exec pr)

Publications
By DREYFUSS: book—
The Two Georges (science fiction), with Harry Turtledove, New York, 1996.

By DREYFUSS: articles—

On DREYFUSS: articles—
Rogers, Michael, in Rolling Stone (Boulder, Colorado), 31 July 1975.
Photoplay (London), April 1982.
Stars (BE), Autumn 1993.

* * *
Richard Dreyfuss’s great success as a film actor can be attributed to a basic and archetypal need he fulfills in society. He is the representative of the little guy, who lives out the fantasies of the everyman for adventure, love, and heroic action. Dreyfuss does not have movie-star good looks—he is short, chunky, and appealing rather than handsome—but he makes it possible to believe that the dreams of the ordinary person are accessible and even possible.

Dreyfuss began his career in films, apart from bit or insignificant parts, as Baby Face Nelson in John Milius’s low-budget version of Dillinger (1973), in which he impressively erupted with psychotic energy and rage. But it was his next part, as the thoughtful, nerdy Curt in the surprise hit American Graffiti, filmed the same year and directed by George Lucas, that boosted Dreyfuss to international prominence. His affiliation with Lucas also initiated Dreyfuss’s association with the “New Hollywood,” or “The Movie Brats,” most especially with Steven Spielberg, with whom Dreyfuss achieved his most memorable and enduring fame. The year following Graffiti, Dreyfuss starred in the Canadian/U.S. co-production of The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz, in which he gives an exuberant and desperate portrait of Mordecai Richler’s eponymous Montreal hustler. The following year, Dreyfuss consolidated his international success, starring as ichthyologist Matt Hooper in Spielberg’s instant classic, Jaws. Much of the fun in Jaws is generated by witnessing smart-ass, university-trained, small-statured Dreyfuss more than holds his own against the manly “life-is-my-teacher” Robert Shaw. 1977 is perhaps the apogee of what might roughly be called the first part of Dreyfuss’s professional life. In that year he portrayed Roy Neary, the ordinary guy, consumed with trying to articulate his otherworldly experiences in Close Encounters of the Third Kind. This film perfectly captures the qualities Dreyfuss embodied at this stage of his career. When Neary builds and rebuilds the site of his alien encounter first with mashed potatoes, then with dirt and foliage from his landscaped garden—to the astonishment and then distress of his family—Dreyfuss is the personification of obsession, intensity, and concentration. The same year, Dreyfuss won an Academy Award for his role as Elliott, the determined actor in the Neil Simon-scripted The Goodbye Girl. Again he gets to play a character who seeks to fulfill his aspirations against all obstacles and naysayers. The Big Fix saw Dreyfuss not only starring, but also co-producing the film, his first foray into producing a major industry film. The roles Dreyfuss played in the 1970s—and into the early 1980s, with such films as The Competition and Whose Life Is it Anyway?—are remarkable for the actor’s almost manic energy, a driven quality leavened by copious quantities of charisma and talent.

The early to mid-1980s saw Dreyfuss sidelined by personal crises, some of which may have accounted for his surplus of energy. After resolving these difficulties, Dreyfuss starred in 1986 in what was considered his comeback role, as coat hanger manufacturer Dave Whiteman in Down and Out in Beverly Hills, a lighthearted, by far less interesting remake of Jean Renoir’s classic Boudu sauvé des eaux. During this period, in such films as Stakeout, Nuts, and Tim Men, one witnesses a more mature, contemplative actor. Although still vigorous, Dreyfuss had by now lost some of his trademark intensity. While a strong sense of commitment and truth was present in earlier works, it was sometimes masked by a frenetic level of intensity.

Dreyfuss is still capable of immense passion, as in his characterization of Pete, the doomed aviator, in Spielberg’s unjustly maligned 1989 film Always. It is not coincidental that this film was a remake of A Guy Named Joe, which starred Dreyfuss’ idol, Spencer Tracy. Like Tracy, Dreyfuss displays breezy charm as well as no-nonsense, no frills honesty. In one of the film’s key scenes, the dead Pete, returned temporarily to earth as a ghost, watches his beloved and bereaved, Holly Hunter, as she begins to let go of Pete’s memory and fall in love again. The emotion Dreyfuss conveys in this scene as he must watch the lovers, but do and say nothing, is deeply touching and sorrowful, in a way perhaps unavailable to Dreyfuss before.

1991 was another exceptional year for Dreyfuss, allowing him to display a full range of talents in such diverse items as Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, where he plays the declaring Player King; Once Around, in his role as the incredibly boorish, but ultimately sympathetic Sam Sharpe (who once again woos Holly Hunter); the beleaguered psychiatrist pestered by patient Bill Murray in What about Bob?; and a lawyer in the infamous Dreyfus case, in Prisoner of Honor, yet another Ken Russell misfire, executive-produced by the actor. Lately, Dreyfuss has divided his abilities among producing projects (with his own company, Dreyfuss-James), acting in films such as Silent Fall and Mr. Holland’s Opus, and engaging in a host of liberal political causes.

—Carole Zucker

DUNAWAY, Faye

Nationality: American. Born: Dorothy Faye Dunaway in Bascom, Florida, 14 January 1941. Education: Attended U.S. Army schools in Texas, Arkansas, Utah, and Mannheim, Germany; completed high school at Tallahassee, Florida; Florida State University, University of Florida, and Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts, graduated 1962; studied in training program of Lincoln Center Repertory Theatre. Family: Married 1) the rock musician Peter Wolf, 1974; 2) the photographer Terry O’Neill, one son. Career: 1962—replaced Olga Bellin as Margaret in Broadway production of A Man for All Seasons; 1964—with Lincoln Center company in After the Fall and But for Whom Charlie; 1966—first film role in The Happening; contract with Otto Preminger; 1971—in summer stock production of Candida and TV adaptation of Hogan’s Goat; 1993—in TV series It Had to Be You. Awards: Most Promising Newcomer, British Academy, for Bonnie and Clyde, 1967; Best Actress, Academy Award for Network, 1976. Agent: Sam Cohn, ICM, 40 W. 57th Street, New York, NY 10019, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

1966 The Happening (Silverstein) (as Sandy); Harry Sundown (Preminger) (as Lou McDowell)

1967 Bonnie and Clyde (Penn) (as Bonnie Parker)

1968 The Extraordinary Seaman (Frankenheimer) (as Jennifer Winslow); The Thomas Crown Affair (Jewison) (as Vicky Anderson); Amanti (Lestri) (as Alida) (De Sica) (as Julia)

1969 The Arrangement (Kazan) (as Gwen)

1970 Little Big Man (Penn) (as Mrs. Pendrake); Puzzle of a Downfall Child (Schatzberg) (as Lu Andreas Sand)

1971 Doc (Perry) (as Kate Elder); La Maison sous les arbres (The Deadly Trap) (Clément) (as Jill); The Woman I Love (Wendkos—for TV) (as Mrs. Wallis Simpson)

1973 Oklahoma Crude (Kramer) (as Lena Doyle); The Three Musketeers (The Queen’s Diamonds) (Lester) (as Lady de Winter)

1974 After the Fall (Cates—for TV); The Four Musketeers (The Revenge of Milady) (Lester) (as Lady de Winter); Chinatown (Polanski) (as Evelyn Mulwray); The Towering Inferno (Guillermín) (as Susan Franklin)

1975 Three Days of the Condor (Pollack) (as Kathy Hale)

1976 The Disappearance of Aimee (Harvey—for TV); Network (Lumet) (as Diana Christensen); Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg) (as Denise Kreisler)

1978 The Eyes of Laura Mars (Kershner) (title role)

1979 Arthur Miller—On Home Ground (Rasky— doc); The Champ (Zefferelli) (as Annie)

1980 The First Deadly Sin (Hutton) (as Barbara Delaney)

1981 Mommie Dearest (Perry) (as Joan Crawford); Evita Peron (Chomsky—for TV) (title role)

1983 The Wicked Lady (Winner) (as Lady Barbara Skelton)

1984 Supergirl (Szwarc) (as Selena); Ellis Island (London—for TV)

1985 13 at Dinner (Antonio—for TV); Cristoforo Colombu (Lattuada—for TV)

1986 Beverly Hills Madam (Hart—for TV); Cowgirls (Walker—for TV)

1987 Barfly (Shroeder) (as Wanda Wilcox); Casanova (Langton—for TV); Midnight Crossing (Holzberg) (as Helen Barton)

1988 Raspberry Ripple (Finch—for TV); Burning Secret (Birkin) (as Sonya Tuchman)

1989 Wait until Spring, Bandini (Deruddere) (as Mme. Effie Hildegarde); Up to Date (Wetmüller); Cold Saxy Tree (Tewkesbury—for TV)

1990 The Handmaid’s Tale (Schlondorff) (as Serena Joy); The Two Jakes (Nicholson) (voice of Evelyn Mulwray); Silhouettes (Schenkel—for TV) (as Samantha Kimball)

1992 Scorchers (Beard) (as Thais); Double Edge (Collek) (as Marie Italiano); Arizona Dream (Kusturica) (as Elaine Stalker)

1993 The Temp (Holland) (as Charlene Towne); Colombo: It’s All in the Game (for TV) (as Lauren Black)

1995 Don Juan DeMarco (Leven) (as Marilyn Mickler); A Family Divided (for TV) (as Karen Billingsly)

1996 Dunston Checks In (Kwapis) (as Mrs. Dubrow); The Chamber (Foley) (as Lee Bowen)
1997
Rebecca (O’Brien—for TV) (as Mrs. Van Hopper); Drunks (Cohn) (as Becky); The Twilight of the Golds (Ross Kagan Marks—for TV) (as Phyllis Gold)

1998
Fanny Hill (Getty); Gia (Cristofer—for TV) (as Wilhelmina Cooper); A Will of Their Own (Arthur—mini for TV) (as Margaret Sanger)

1999
The Thomas Crown Affair (McTiernan) (as the Psychiatrist); The Messenger: The Story of Joan of Arc (Besson) (as Yolande D’Aragon); Love Lies Bleeding (Tannen)

2000
Running Mates (Lagomarsino—for TV) (Meg Gable); Stanley’s Gig (Lazard) (as Leila); The Yards (Gray I) (as Kitty Olchin)

Publications

By DUNAWAY: book—

By DUNAWAY: articles—

Interviews, in Newsweek (New York), 4 March 1968.
Photoplay (London), September 1983.
Interview with Allan Hunter, in Films and Filming (London), September 1986.
Interview with Graham Fuller, in Interview, February 1993.
Interview with M.S. Malkin, in Premiere (Boulder), October 1996.

On DUNAWAY: books—

On DUNAWAY: articles—

*   *   *

From the moment Faye Dunaway suggestively sized up Warren Beatty as a one-way ticket out of Smalltown, U.S.A. in Bonnie and Clyde, she has dominated movie screens with a relentless drive and soigné sex appeal. When she launched a fashion frenzy with Bonnie and Clyde’s slick sixties take on thirties clothes for the well-dressed bandit, her stardom was clinched. After a brief period with the fledgling Lincoln Center Repertory Theater and several critically acclaimed off-Broadway appearances, she achieved international recognition in this, her third film. The odd conundrum about Dunaway’s career is that this diva has miscast herself as a studio-era movie star. Blessed with a firm director and a role that ignites her trademark turbulent angst, Dunaway is overpowering, a star by virtue of her instinctual talent. Unfortunately, such inspired occasions (Bonnie and Clyde, Chinatown, Network, Mommie Dearest, Barfly) are outnumbered by clotheshorse vehicles (Thomas Crown Affair, Puzzle of a Downfall Child), premature camp outings (Supergirl, Wicked Lady), or indifferent television forays (Disappearance of Aimée, Beverly Hills Madam).

Whereas stars often make concessions to unrewarding box-office gigs (e.g., Dustin Hoffman in Outbreak) to maintain the muscle to acquire dream roles, Dunaway sleepwalks through such compromises (Towering Inferno, Three Days of the Condor) as though in some low-key artistic rebellion. At times, she lets her cheekbones do her acting for her (Eyes of Laura Mars) but, fortunately, the acting triumphs are too impressive to ignore.

In a role earmarked for the totally unsuitable Ali McGraw, Dunaway employed her distancing haughtiness to suggest unfathomable mystery in Chinatown. As her carefully rehearsed illusions crumbled, Chinatown’s Evelyn Mulwray preserved a front of compose (prefiguring Dunaway’s Joan Crawford image-maintenance in Mommie Dearest). Subverting this facade, Dunaway subtly conveyed the trauma behind the Evelyn Mulwray mask her character wore to conceal her secrets.

Next, Oscar came calling with a stunning evocation of the soullessness of Network TV. In Chayefsky’s sour grapes diatribe, Dunaway’s barnstorming was in sync with the hyperbolic proselytizing and the actor-dominated mise-en-scène. In all her memorable roles, there is an element of playacting, of sizing up what men want from her and then jockeying for power once she has satisfied the fools. Nowhere was that practiced insincerity more chilling than when used to inhabit Diana Christensen, the ratings-mad media shark, who circles her rivals for the scent of blood.

The touchstone of Dunaway’s career, Mommie Dearest, a ferocious tribute to fellow warrior-star Joan Crawford, brought Faye celluloid immortality of sorts, a cool reception from Hollywood’s old guard, and a persistent case of role reverberation. Like that other victim of identification with one characterization—Tony Perkins/ Norman Bates—Dunaway has been handicapped by a diabolically acute impersonation that cemented her screen image: in her case, as though in some low-key artistic rebellion. At times, she lets her cheekbones do her acting for her (Eyes of Laura Mars) but, fortunately, the acting triumphs are too impressive to ignore.

In a role earmarked for the totally unsuitable Ali McGraw, Dunaway employed her distancing haughtiness to suggest unfathomable mystery in Chinatown. As her carefully rehearsed illusions crumbled, Chinatown’s Evelyn Mulwray preserved a front of compose (prefiguring Dunaway’s Joan Crawford image-maintenance in Mommie Dearest). Subverting this facade, Dunaway subtly conveyed the trauma behind the Evelyn Mulwray mask her character wore to conceal her secrets.

Next, Oscar came calling with a stunning evocation of the soullessness of Network TV. In Chayefsky’s sour grapes diatribe, Dunaway’s barnstorming was in sync with the hyperbolic proselytizing and the actor-dominated mise-en-scène. In all her memorable roles, there is an element of playacting, of sizing up what men want from her and then jockeying for power once she has satisfied the fools. Nowhere was that practiced insincerity more chilling than when used to inhabit Diana Christensen, the ratings-mad media shark, who circles her rivals for the scent of blood.

The touchstone of Dunaway’s career, Mommie Dearest, a ferocious tribute to fellow warrior-star Joan Crawford, brought Faye celluloid immortality of sorts, a cool reception from Hollywood’s old guard, and a persistent case of role reverberation. Like that other victim of identification with one characterization—Tony Perkins/ Norman Bates—Dunaway has been handicapped by a diabolically acute impersonation that cemented her screen image: in her case, as though in some low-key artistic rebellion. At times, she lets her cheekbones do her acting for her (Eyes of Laura Mars) but, fortunately, the acting triumphs are too impressive to ignore.
tagging Wanda as a loner who is damaged but who will not be messed with, Dunaway conveyed how this dipso was so pathologically fearful of being alone that she would go with any man who had a fifth of whiskey.

Stymied by Mommy Dearest identification syndrome, Dunaway survived a sitcom fiasco, It Had to Be You, in high style, only to be ignominiously fired from the Los Angeles company of Sunset Boulevard for singing deficiencies one would assume Andrew Lloyd Webber might have gauged in advance. Cursed by Joan Crawford and Norma Desmond, lesser stars might have capitulated, but Dunaway has exhibited more caginess than other aging actresses faced with career downtime.

Admittedly, Dunston Checks In is a regrettable nod toward family entertainment, but she doesn’t disgrace herself in any other later-career disappointments. Those fortunate enough to have basked in the glory of her national stage tour of ‘The Master Class’ witnessed Dunaway’s undiminished power; she’s in a holding pattern for the next juicy screen role. Taking matters into her own hands, she has purchased screen rights to this Terrence McNally play about Maria Callas, no stranger to star tantrums herself.

In the meantime, she dazzles fans with supporting turns in TV fare like Gia (a younger Dunaway could have shown Angelina Jolie a thing or two about playing that title role) and Twilight of the Golds (effortlessly moving in a Jewish mother role, one would have thought outside her range). In an ongoing variety of weather-beaten characterizations on the big screen, Dunaway never holds back from persuasive interpretations nor permits herself to look truly awful onscreen. That’s a star’s prerogative. As the high society alcoholic in Drunks, as the secretive barkeep in Albino Alligator, as the tragic witness in The Chamber, and as the flinty mother of a monarch in The Messenger; The Story of Joan of Arc, she feeds off our memories of her youthful glamour to suggest how far these characters have fallen from grace. Finally free of the Mommy Dearest stigma, she will probably never be free of that innate hauteur that rules out any chance of blowzy character work. Still smashing looking, Dunaway may have to redefine the way audiences view older women, so often interpreted by male writers as dried-up shrews or addle-pated biddies. Sadly, Hollywood extends opportunities to over-the-hill male icons, while gingerly treating a female legend like Blanche Dubois on the stage. Is Dunaway supposed to start looking for The Whales of August already? For a measure of her irreplaceable allure, check out the remake of The Thomas Crown Affair; the original was no great shakes, but McQueen and Dunaway were larger than life. Dunaway still is. The unapproachable cover girl beauty that made her a star will limit her choices as she grows older, unless male screenwriters start writing up to her seasoned level.

—Robert Pardi

DUNNE, Irene

Films as Actress:

1930 Leathernecking (Present Arms) (Cline) (as Delphine); Cimarron (Ruggles) (as Sabra Cravat)
1931 Bachelor Apartment (Sherman) (as Helene Andrews); Consolation Marriage (Married in Haste) (Sloane) (as Mary); The Great Lover (Beaumont) (as Diana Page)
1932 The Stolen Jools (The Slippery Pearls) (McGann and others—short) (as guest); Symphony of Six Million (Melody of Life) (La Cava) (as Jessica); Back Street (Stahl) (as Ray Schmidt); Thirteen Women (Archainhaud) (as Laura Stanhope)
1933 No Other Woman (Ruben) (as Anna Stanley); The Secret of Madame Blanche (Brabin) (as Sally); The Silver Cord
(Cromwell) (as Christina Phelps); Ann Vickers (Cromwell) (title role); If I Were Free (Behold We Live) (Nugent) (as Sarah Cazenove)

1934 This Man Is Mine (Cromwell) (as Toni Dunlap); Stingaree (Wellman) (as Hilda Bouverie); The Age of Innocence (Moeller) (as Countess Ellen Olenska)

1935 Sweet Adeline (LeRoy) (as Adeline Schmidt); Roberta (Seiter) (as Stephanie); Magnificent Obsession (Stahl) (as Helen Hudson)

1936 Show Boat (Whale) (as Magnolia Hawks); Theodora Goes Wild (Boleslawski) (as Theodora Lynn)

1937 High, Wide, and Handsome (Mamoulian) (as Sally Watterson); The Awful Truth (McCarey) (as Lucy Warriner)

1938 Joy of Living (Garnett) (as Margaret ‘‘Maggie’’ Garret)

1939 Love Affair (McCarey) (as Terry McKay); Invitation to Happiness (Ruggles) (as Eleanor Wayne); When Tomorrow Comes (Stahl) (as Helen)

1940 My Favorite Wife (Kanin) (as Ellen Arden)

1941 Penny Serenade (Stevens) (as Julia Gardiner Adams); Unfinished Business (La Cava) (as Nancy Andrews)

1942 Lady in a Jam (La Cava) (as Jane Palmer)

1943 A Guy Named Joe (Fleming) (as Dorinda Durston)

1944 The White Cliffs of Dover (Clarence Brown) (as Susan Dunn Ashwood); Together Again (Charles Vidor) (as Anne Crandall)

1945 Over 21 (Charles Vidor) (as Paula Wharton)

1946 Anna and the King of Siam (Cromwell) (as Anna)

1947 Life with Father (Curtiz) (as Vinnie Day)

1948 I Remember Mama (Stevens) (as Mama)

1950 Never a Dull Moment (George Marshall) (as Kay); The Mudlark (Negulesco) (as Queen Victoria)

1952 It Grows on Trees (Lubin) (as Polly Baxter)

McCourt, James, ‘‘Irene Dunne: The Awesome Truth,’’ in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1980.

‘‘Irene Dunne, Top-rank Film Star of the ’30s and ’40s, Dead at 88,’’ in Variety (New York), 10 September 1990.
Schickel, Richard, ‘‘We Remember Irene,’’ in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1991.

Irene Dunne is one of the most durable and delightful stars of Hollywood’s golden period. Although she is most often associated with a series of excellent screwball comedies she made in the 1930s, she starred with equal success in melodramas and musicals. Her five Oscar nominations indicate her versatility across a range of genres: Cimarron, Theodora Goes Wild, The Awful Truth, Love Affair, and I Remember Mama.

Dunne originally studied to be an opera singer, but a failed audition at the Metropolitan Opera resulted in her choosing a musical comedy career instead. She toured in Irene, played several roles on Broadway (both musical and nonmusical), and joined the Chicago company of Show Boat as Magnolia in 1929. Her enormous success in that Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein II favorite led to a Hollywood contract with RKO. From her film debut in Leathernecking to her retirement following It Grows on Trees, she played with equal grace and skill in musicals (the film version of Show Boat in 1936, High, Wide, and Handsome, Sweet Adeline, Roberta), comedies (Joy of Living, My Favorite Wife), and serious drama (Back Street, Magnificent Obsession, When Tomorrow Comes).

Dunne began freelancing early in her career, picking her roles with care, alternating between drama and comedy, and searching for as many chances to sing on film as she could find. Some of her musical performances are indelible: the ethereal ‘‘Smoke Gets in Your Eyes’’ from Roberta with Dunne in white fur, and the achingly sweet ‘‘Make Believe’’ or crowd-rousing ‘‘After the Ball’’ from Show Boat are highlights. Her persona was that of the lady, but always the modern lady, with a sharp wit, imagination, and independence. She could combine and make believable a remarkable range of behavior and seemingly contradictory characteristics. She wore clothes with grace and style, but was never considered an actress who was merely a clotheshorse. She looked fragile and delicate, with a truly feminine beauty, but she was never weak or trivial. She played women with virtue, but she was never a prig and she projected feeling and passion in great love stories; her performances in Back Street and Love Affair make them the most haunting versions of these oft-filmed stories. She had dignity on screen, yet could be incredibly funny in slapstick sequences, displaying impeccable timing and excellent physical control; her outrageous impersonation of a ‘‘vulgar’’ nightclub performer in The Awful Truth is one of screwball comedy’s funniest moments. Her screen personality has often been described by the word ‘‘captivating,’’ as she charmed male and female viewers alike with her beauty, unusual speaking voice, and personal style.

Publications

By DUNNE: articles—

‘‘Irene Dunne,’’ interview with John Kobal, in Focus on Film (London), no. 28, 1977.
Interview with J. Harvey, in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1980.

On DUNNE: books—

On DUNNE: articles—

Current Biography 1945, New York, 1945.

384
After Dunne retired from the screen in 1952, she appeared on television, on Ford Theatre and the Schlitz Playhouse of Stars. In 1957, she was appointed by President Eisenhower (Dunne was a lifelong Republican) as an alternate delegate to the United Nations 12th General Assembly, and remained active in Catholic charities, for which she was awarded Notre Dame’s Laetare Medal. In retrospect, Irene Dunne may be seen as an example of a type of actress that has almost disappeared from movies—a woman of intelligence and versatility who, no matter what the pressure, be it comic or tragic, keeps going with humor, elegance, and dignity.

—Jeanine Basinger, updated by Corey K. Creekmur

DURANTE, Jimmy

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1929</td>
<td>Roadhouse Nights (Henley)</td>
<td>(as Daffy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>The New Adventures of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford (Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford) (Wood) (as Schnozzle); The Cuban Love Song (Van Dyke) (as O. O. Jones)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>The Passionate Plumber (Sedgwick) (as McCracken); The Wet Parade (Fleming) (as Abe Schilling); Speak Easily (Sedgwick) (as James); The Phantom President (Taurag) (as Curly Cooney); Blondie of the Follies (Edmund Goulding) (as Jimmy)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>What! No Beer? (Sedgwick) (as Jimmy Potts); Hell Below (Conway) (as Ptomaine); Broadway to Hollywood (Van Dam); Meet the Baron (Walter Lang) (as Joe McGoo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Palooka (The Great Schnozzle); Joe Palooka (Stoloff) (as Knobby Walsh); George White’s Scandals (George White’s Scandals of 1934) (White) (as Happy McGillicuddy); Hollywood Party (Boleslawski, Dwan, and Rowland [uncredited]); Strictly Dynamite (Nugent) (as Moxie Slaight); Student Tour (Riesner) (as Hank)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Carnival (Walter Lang) (as Fingers)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Land without Music (Forbidden Music) (Forde) (as Jonah J. Whistler)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>Start Cheering (Rogell) (as Willie Gumbatz); Sally, Irene and Mary (Seiter) (as Jefferson Twitchell); Little Miss Broadway (Cummings) (as Jimmy Clayton)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Melody Ranch (Santley and Mackay) (as Cornelius J. Courtney)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>You’re in the Army Now (Seiler) (as Jeepers Smith); The Man Who Came to Dinner (Keighley) (as Banjo)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe) (as Billy Kipp); Music for Millions (Koster) (as Andrews)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>Two Sisters from Boston (Koster) (as “Spike”)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>It Happened in Brooklyn (Whorff) (as Nick Lombardi); This Time for Keeps (Thorpe) (as Ferdi Farro)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>On an Island with You (Thorpe) (as Buckley)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>The Great Rupert (Pichel) (as Mr. Amendola); The Milkman (Barton) (as Breezy Albright)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>Beau James (Shavelson) (as guest)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Pepe (Sidney) (as himself)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>Il giudizio universale (The Last Judgment) (De Sica)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Jumbo (Billy Rose’s Jumbo) (Walters) (as Pop Wonder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1963  It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (as Smiler Grogan)
1966 Alice through the Looking Glass (Handley—for TV) (as Humpty-Dumpty)

Publications

By DURANTE: books—

Night Clubs, with Jack Kofoed, 1931.
The Candidate (humor), 1952.

On DURANTE: books—

On DURANTE: articles—

Time (New York), 24 January 1944.
Variety (New York), 5 June 1946.

* * *

One of the most lovable of the eccentric comic actors, Jimmy Durante was paired with Buster Keaton in the early 1930s. This combination would appear to have given Keaton some hope of making a smoother transition to sound pictures; as a team their talents could have been complementary. Durante, however, had a role in What! No Beer? that pushed the famous silent screen comedian into the background. Urging Keaton to invest in a brewery just as Prohibition is about to be repealed, this lad with the Cyrano de Bergerac profile played the manic character with gusto, shouting the type of malapropism and mixed metaphor that would become typical of his characters: ‘‘A hundred-twenty million cracked lips are straining at the leach. Where’s your patronism? Here’s a chance to do something for your country.’’

Though Durante appeared to be headed for star billings in the early 1930s, he remained a likable eccentric who was more often the second banana. The most durable of old-timers, he provided excellent support for Donald O’Connor in The Milkman. When you look at this slight, contrived work today, you realize Durante stole the show from O’Connor without effort. The young comedian ‘‘knocked himself out’’ while the ‘‘Schnozzola,’’ as Durante was nicknamed, sailed through his own part with all the charm of an old pro (he was 60 when he made this film) who knew how to make the best of each comic situation. Appearing in movies, vaudeville, nightclubs, and radio at the time of his greatest popularity in the 1930s, Durante may have spread his talent too thin. Unfortunately, the comedian does not have a single movie to his credit that has the quality to be ranked with the best comedies. As it failed to utilize the comedy skills of Bert Lahr (now known only for his portrait of the Cowardly Lion in The Wizard of Oz), Hollywood never exploited Durante’s potential.

—Donald McCaffrey

DURBIN, Deanna

Nationality: American. Born: Edna Mae Durbin in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, 4 December 1921; family moved to southern California in 1923. Education: Studied singing with Andres de Segurola. Family: Married 1) Vaughn Paul 1941 (divorced 1943); 2) Felix Jackson, 1945 (divorced 1948); 3) the director Charles David, 1950. Career: 1936—appeared in Every Sunday, musical short for MGM with Judy Garland; upon seeing it, the head of the studio, Louis B. Mayer, decided to keep both youngsters, but through a misunderstanding, Durbin was dropped; she then signed with Universal

[Image of Deanna Durbin in Can’t Help Singing]
Studios where she made her first feature film Three Smart Girls, and signed a radio contract with Eddie Cantor; 1948—retired from screen acting; 1950—moved to France. Awards: Special Academy Award (with Mickey Rooney), “for their significant contribution in bringing to the screen the spirit and personification of youth and as juvenile players setting a high standard of ability and achievement,” 1938.

Films as Actress:

1936 Every Sunday (Every Sunday Afternoon) (Feist—short); Three Smart Girls (Koster) (as Penny Craig)
1937 100 Men and a Girl (Koster) (as Patricia Cardwell)
1938 Mad about Music (Taurog) (as Gloria Harkinsson); That Certain Age (Ludwig) (as Alice Fullerton)
1939 Three Smart Girls Grow Up (Koster) (as Penny “Mouse” Craig); First Love (Koster) (as Constance Harding)
1940 It's a Date (Seiter) (as Pamela Drake); Spring Parade (Koster) (as Ilonka Tolnay)
1941 Nice Girl? (Seiter) (as Jane Dana); It Started with Eve (Koster) (as Anne Terry)
1943 The Amazing Mrs. Holliday (Manning) (as Ruth); Hers to Hold (Ryan) (as Penelope Craig); His Butler's Sister (Borzage) (as Ann Carter); Show Business at War (De Rochemont—doc, short) (as herself)
1944 Christmas Holiday (Siodmak) (as Jackie Lamont/Abigail Martin); Can't Help Singing (Ryan) (as Caroline)
1945 Lady on a Train (David) (as Nikki Collins)
1946 Because of Him (Wallace) (as Kim Walker)
1947 I'll Be Yours (Seiter) (as Louise Ginglebusher); Something in the Wind (Pichel) (as Mary Collins)
1948 Up in Central Park (Seiter) (as Rosie Moore); For the Love of Mary (de Cordova) (as Mary Peppertree)

Publications

By DURBIN: articles—

On DURBIN: articles—

Picturegoer (London), 6 March 1937 and 2 April 1938.

Universal Outlook, Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter 1940, and Summer 1941, “the magazine for all interested in Deanna Durbin.”

Current Biography 1941, New York, 1941.

Photoplay Film Monthly (New York), May 1971.

* * *

Deanna Durbin’s appearance in an MGM short with Judy Garland is a precious document, highlighting two remarkable talents. (Louis B. Mayer was apparently furious when, after putting Garland but not Durbin under contract, Durbin became such a huge success so quickly, for another studio.) Garland went on to become a legend, her films frequently revived; Durbin, who when she grew up suffered from a weight problem, as did Garland, retired from the movies—from performing altogether—in her mid-twenties, and has none of the cult following of her teenage rival. Contemporary viewers are often puzzled to learn that Deanna Durbin is credited with having saved Universal from bankruptcy with her feisty adolescent nature and her sweet voice. In a series of films directed by Henry Koster, she was indeed sensationaly popular in the United States and England.

Durbin’s sweet voice and sound musical instincts take on particular value when she is compared to her 1940s counterparts, the “legit” sopranos Jane Powell and Kathryn Grayson. Like Garland, Durbin was also a very talented actress with an individual, recognizable style. That style, related to her musical discipline, is perceived in her fluent, rapid-fire, but utterly clear delivery of dialogue, in a diction with irresistible impetus and energy, in irony that never smacks of brattishness but rather, of real intelligence, and in a warmth of personality that echoes her singing/speaking voice. One of her first “grown-up” roles, in It Started with Eve, pits her against the formidable Charles Laughton, and the modulations of their relationship is one of the joys of this romantic comedy. Her dramatic roles in Christmas Holiday and Lady on a Train suggest that at a different studio—and perhaps with a different level of ambition on her part—Durbin’s career would not have been truncated so abruptly. Her pluckiness remains a significant image of America in the late 1930s.

—Charles Affron

DURYEA, Dan

Nationality: American. Born: White Plains, New York, 23 January 1907. Education: Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Family: Married Helen (Duryea) (died 1976), sons: Peter and Richard. Career: Early 1930s—worked in advertising, quit after heart attack;

Films as Actor:

1941 The Little Foxes (Wyler) (as Leo Hubbard); Ball of Fire (Hawks)
1942 The Pride of the Yankees (Wood); That Other Woman (Ray McCarey)
1943 Sahara (Zoltan Korda); Ministry of Fear (Lang)
1944 Man from Frisco (Florey); The Woman in the Window (Lang); Mrs. Parkington (Garnett); None but the Lonely Heart (Odet); Main Street after Dark (Cahn)
1945 The Great Flamarion (Mann); The Valley of Decision (Garnett); Along Came Jones (Heisler); Lady on a Train (David); Scarlet Street (Lang)
1946 The Black Angel (Neill); White Tie and Tails (Barton)
1948 Black Bart (Black Bart, Highwayman) (Sherman); Another Part of the Forest (Gordon); River Lady (Sherman); Larceny (Sherman); Criss Cross (Siodmak)
1949 Manhandled (Foster); Too Late for Tears (Haskin); Johnny Stool Pigeon (Castle)
1950 One Way Street (Fregonese); Winchester ’73 (Mann); The Underworld Story (The Whipped) (Endfield)
1951 Al Jennings of Oklahoma (Nazzaro); Chicago Calling (Reinhardt)
1953 Thunder Bay (Mann); Sky Commando (Sears); Thirty-Six Hours (Terry Street) (Tully); Ride Clear of Diablo (Hibbs)
1954 World for Ransom (Aldrich); Rails into Laramie (Hibbs); Silver Lode (Dwan); This Is My Love (Heisler)
1955 Foxfire (Pevney); The Marauders (Mayer); Storm Fear (Wilde)
1957 The Burglar (Wendkos); Battle Hymn (Sirk); Kathy O’ (Sher); Night Passage (Neilson); Slaughter on Tenth Avenue (Laven)
1959 Gunfight at Sandoval (Keller—for TV); Platinum High School (Rich, Young, and Deadly) (Haas)
1961 Six Black Horses (Keller)
1963 He Rides Tall (Springsteen); Do You Know This Voice? (Nesbitt); Walk a Tightrope (Nesbitt)
1964 Taggart (Springsteen)
1965 The Bounty Killer (Bennet); The Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich); Incident at Phantom Hill (Bellamy)
1966 Un fiume di dollari (The Hills Run Red) (Beaver, i.e. Carlo Lizzani)
1967 Winchester '73 (Daugherty—for TV); Five Golden Dragons (Summers); Stranger on the Run (Siegel—for TV)
1968 The Bamboo Saucer (Telford)

Publications

On DURYEA: articles—

* * * *

Dan Duryea’s fate as a film actor was sealed with his first role as Leo Hubbard in The Little Foxes. The tall, almost emaciated actor with the slicked-back blond hair and the ready smirk became the 1940s’ premier louse. Duryea made an art of selfish cynical opportunism. He developed a repertoire of understated shoulder shrugs, slight raisings of the eyebrow, a twitch of the mouth, and an almost imperceptible “suit-yourself, take-it-or-leave-it” movement of the hand. He became a master of the small signs of character that the camera could pick up, and he wielded his reedy, high voice like an irritating, cutting scimitar.

While his best known roles as the petty thief and blackmailer in Fritz Lang’s The Woman in the Window and Scarlet Street allowed him to display his skill, his presence is as memorable in his portrayal of the reporter in Pride of the Yankees. As the evil counterpart for the lanky heroes of the 1940s, particularly Gary Cooper in Along Came Jones, Duryea brought out the emerging attitude of disillusionment toward the end of World War II and in the years after. In the 1950s Duryea’s mocking image became less one to be faced and overcome by the hero than one which had to be accepted as part of the postwar world. As the neurotic, tubercular brother to Cornel Wilde in Storm Fear, Duryea was an uncomfortable alternative to the villain. As the tough sergeant in Battle Hymn, he portrayed a heroic cynic, and contributed to the character of the 1960s anti-hero. By 1965, Duryea’s persona had developed its final twist. In The Flight of the Phoenix, he played a bespectacled passenger on a crashed plane who nervously supports rather than mirrors the lanky hero played by Jimmy Stewart. However, Duryea’s mastery of the uncomfortable, deceitful, mocking and cynical villain had pioneered a new type of villainy carried on briefly by Richard Widmark, and finally turned to filmic art by Lee Marvin.

—Stuart Kaminsky

DUVALL, Robert

Films as Actor:

1962 To Kill a Mockingbird (Mulligan) (as Boo Radley)
1963 Nightmare in the Sun (Lawrence) (as motorcyclist); Captain Newman, M.D. (David Miller) (as Capt. Paul Cabot Winston)
1966 Fame Is the Name of the Game (Rosenberg—for TV); The Chase (Arthur Penn) (as Edwin Stewart)
1967 Costa Nostra: An Arch Enemy of the FBI (Medford—for TV)
1968 Countdown (Moonshot) (Altman) (as Chiz); The Detective (Gordon Douglas) (as Nestor); Bullitt (Yates) (as Weissberg)
1969 True Grit (Hathaway) (as Ned Pepper); The Rain People (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Gordon)
1970 M*A*S*H (Altman) (as Major Frank Burns); The Revolution- ary (Williams) (as Despard)
1971 Lawman (Winner) (as Vernon Adams); THX-1138 (Lucas) (title role)
1972 The Godfather (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Tom Hagen); The Great Northfield, Minnesota Raid (Kaufman) (as Jesse
Robert Duvall (left) in Apocalypse Now

James); Joe Kidd (John Sturges) (as Frank Harlan); Tomorrow (Anthony) (as Jackson Fently)
1973 Badge 373 (Koch) (as Eddie Ryan); Lady Ice (Gries) (as Ford Pierce); The Outfit (Flynn) (as Earl Macklin)
1974 The Conversation (Francis Ford Coppola); The Godfather, Part II (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Tom Hagen)
1975 Breakout (Gries) (as Jay Wagner); The Killer Elite (Peckinpah) (as George Hansen)
1976 Network (Lumet) (as Frank Hackett); The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (Ross) (as Dr. Watson); The Eagle Has Landed (John Sturges) (as Col. Max Radl)
1977 The Greatest (Gries) (as Bill McDonald)
1978 The Betsy (Petrie) (as Loren Hardeman III); Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Kaufman) (as guest)
1979 Apocalypse Now (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Lt. Col. Bill Kilgore); The Great Santini (The Ace) (Carlino) (as Bull Meechum)
1981 True Confessions (Grosbard) (as Tom Spellacy); The Pursuit of D. B. Cooper (Spottiswoode) (as Bob Gruen)
1983 Tender Mercies (Beresford) (as Max Sledge, + co-pr); The Terry Fox Story (Thomas—for TV)
1984 The Stone Boy (Cain) (as Joe Hillerman); The Natural (Levin) (as Max Mercy)
1986 Belizaire the Cajun (Pitre) (as Preacher); The Lightship (Skolimowski) (as Caspary)
1987 Hotel Colonial (Torrini) (as Carrasco); Let’s Get Harry (Smithee [Stuart Rosenberg]) (as Norman Shrike)
1988 Colors (Dennis Hopper) (as Bob Hodges); Convicts (Masterson); Roots in a Parched Ground (Masterson)
1990 The Handmaid’s Tale (Schlondorff) (as Commander); A Show of Force (Barreto) (as Howard Baslin); Days of Thunder (Tony Scott) (as Harry Hogge)
1991 Rambling Rose (Coolidge) (as Daddy Hillyer); Convicts (Masterson) (as Soll Gautier)
1992 Newsies (Ortega) (as Joseph Pulitzer); The Plague (La peste) (Puenzo) (as Joseph Grand); Stalin (Passer—for TV) (title role)
1993 Wrestling Ernest Hemingway (Haines) (as Walt); Fallin Down (Schumacher) (as Prendergast); Geronimo: An American Legend (Walter Hill) (as Al Sieber); Cachao . . . como su ritmo no hay dos (Like His Rhythm There Is No Other) (García—doc) (as himself)
1994 The Paper (Ron Howard) (as Bernie White)
1995 The Scarlet Letter (Joffé) (as Roger Chillingworth); Something to Talk About (Hallowsrom) (as Wyly King); The Stars Fell on Henrietta (Keach) (as Mr. Cox)
1996 A Family Thing (Richard Pearce) (as Earl, + co-pr); The Man Who Captured Eichmann (for TV) (as Adolf Eichmann/ Ricardo Clement, + co-pr); Phenomenon (Turteltaub); Sling Blade (Thorton) (as Karl’s Father)
1997 The Apostle (Duvall) (as Euliss ‘’Sonny’’ Dewey)
1998 Deep Impact (Leder) (as Spurgeon ‘’Fish’’ Tanner); A Civil Action (Zaillian) (as Jerome Facher); The Gingerbread Man (Altman) (as Dixon Doss)
2000 Gone in Sixty Seconds (Sena) (as Otto Halliwell); The 6th Day (Spottiswoods) (as Dr. Graham Weir)
2001 John Q (Cassavetes)

Films as Director:
1977 We’re Not the Jet Set (doc)
1983 Angelo, My Love (+ co-pr, sc)
1997 The Apostle (+sc, ex-pr, ro as Euliss ‘’Sonny’’ Dewey)

Publications
By DUVALL: books—

By DUVALL: articles—
Interview in Interview (New York), September 1977.
Interview with Laura Kern, in Interview (New York), October 1991.
Interview with E. Weitzman, in Interview (New York), March 1998.

On DUVALL: book—

On DUVALL: articles—
Bogre, M., ‘’The Filming of Angelo My Love,’’ in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), July 1981.
Robert Duvall Section of Positif (Paris), April 1984.

* * *

From his screen debut as silently staring Boo Radley, the antithesis of a childhood boogeyman, the skull-faced Duvall has often acted like the eye of a hurricane, unleashing his power upon spectators when they least expect it. His specialty is submerged violence that overheats and then steams out of simple souls, and he is an expert at playing self-controlled men who should not be pushed too far. Throughout his steady career as a character star on a par with Gene Hackman, Duvall has (until recently) never given a less than multifaceted performance in even the smallest roles.

With just a glance, he sums up Boo Radley’s entire solitary life as a child-man cut off from normal human experience in To Kill a Mockingbird. Psychologically damaged in Captain Newman, M.D., way too sure of himself in True Grit, and disarmingly clueless about Shirley Knight’s needs in The Rain People, Duvall never seemed like the same actor in any of these movies, and that invisible adaptability may have prevented him from coming to prominence sooner. Although he is a drolly funny born-again phony in M*A*S*H, Duvall never seemed like Tom Hagen, the buttoned-down Mafia facilitator in the Godfather movies. Always weighing his options and always loyally cleaning up after his colorful masters, Duvall’s outsider is a fully realized characterization, the compromised man blinded by forever looking the other way.

Over the years, Duvall continued painting his one-man gallery of regional types—luminous portraits of faceless Americans living lives of quiet desperation. Instead of repeating himself, Duvall broadened his artistry and reworked his stage performance as the hapless Jackson Fentry in a grim Tomorrow with an intuitive grasp of how to scale down the performance for the cinema. As vital a presence when he is a drolly funny born-again phony in M*A*S*H, Duvall’s key role is Tom Hagen, the buttoned-down Mafia facilitator in the Godfather movies. Always weighing his options and always loyally cleaning up after his colorful masters, Duvall’s outsider is a fully realized characterization, the compromised man blinded by forever looking the other way.

Bogre, M., ‘’The Filming of Angelo My Love,’’ in American Cinematographer (Los Angeles), July 1981.
Robert Duvall Section of Positif (Paris), April 1984.
Floundering in the Harlequin Romancing of Hawthorne’s The Scarlet Letter, Duvall is betrayed by the insipid writing and composition-conscious director into botching a part that he is temperamentally attuned to, the demented Roger Chillingworth, an avenging angel hiding behind a bible. In the comedy Something to Talk About, he makes his mint-julep patriarch dismayingly funny without softening the edges of this bullying father role. In the legal eagle thrillers, A Civil Action and The Gingerbread Man, he breathes fresh histrionic life into stale courtroom theatrics. Although he can be an imposing presence, Duvall can seamlessly ease himself into the gentle framework of domestic dramas like A Family Thing (as a white man improbably bonding with Afro-American relatives) and Stars Fell Over Henrietta (as a smoothie redeeming himself by making his pie-in-the-sky promises come true). In these films, Duvall manages to embody common folk while denying none of the force of his star personality. Like Thomas Mitchell or Claude Rains, Duvall is a great character actor, who is also a star. Unlike those supporting leads, however, Duvall can carry a movie on his own; when he steps into a tiny role, he usually steals the film from its nominal leads.

Taking time out from acting to direct personal projects (e.g. Angelo, My Love), Duvall wrote a juicy role for himself and elicited a great performance for himself in The Apostle, which took 13 years for this actor/director to bring to the screen. Although some critics noticed that he had stacked the plot decks too favorably in his character’s direction, Duvall is mesmerizing as an evangelist who brooks no questions of faith from his own family. In a shocking indictment of pride going before a fall, the hypnotic preacher flees prosecution for beating his wife’s lover, only to find he’s locked in a guilt-mode worthy of Raskolnikov.

Even in unmitigated blockbuster rubbish like Deep Impact, Duvall remains a tower of strength. When he cares about his material, he’s unforgettable. To move with such ease from gem-like cameos (Slingblade) to mass entertainments (Phenomenon) to star turns (The Apostle) is the mark of a singular talent. In the Duvall canon, the part may be that of an ordinary person, but Duvall always gives a face to anonymity. Other actors are in touch with their feelings; Duvall is in synch with the desires of the characters he inhabits.

—Robert Pardi
EASTWOOD, Clint

Films as Actor:

1955 Francis in the Navy (Lubin) (as Jonesy); Revenge of the Creature (Arnold) (as technician); Lady Godiva (Lubin) (as Saxon); Tarantula (Arnold) (as Air Force pilot)
1956 Never Say Goodbye (Jerry Hopper) (as lab assistant); The First Traveling Saleslady (Lubin) (as Jack Rice); Star in the Dust (Haas) (bit role)
1957 Escapade in Japan (Lubin) (as Dumbo); Ambush at Cimarron Pass (Copeland) (as Keith Williams); Lafayette Escadrille (Hell Bent for Glory) (Wellman) (as George Moseley)
1964 A Fistful of Dollars (Per un pugno di dollari) (Leone) (as The Stranger)
1965 For a Few Dollars More (Per qualche dollari in piu) (Leone) (as The Stranger); “Civic Sense” ep. of Le streghe (The Witches) (Visconti, Pasolini, Bolognini, Rossi, and de Sica) (as husband)
1966 Il buono, il brutto, il cattivo (The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly) (Leone) (as Joe)
1967 Hang 'em High (Post) (as Jed Cooper)
1968 Coogan’s Bluff (Siegel) (as Walt Coogan)
1969 Paint Your Wagon (Logan) (as Pardner)
1970 Kelly’s Heroes (Hutton) (as Kelly); Two Mules for Sister Sara (Siegel) (as Hogan)
1971 The Beguiled (Siegel) (as Joe McBurney); Dirty Harry (Siegel) (as Harry Callahan)
1972 Joe Kidd (John Sturges) (title role)
1973 Magnum Force (Post) (as Harry Callahan)
1974 Thunderbolt and Lightfoot (Cimino) (as John “Thunderbolt” Doherty)
1976 The Enforcer (Fargo) (as Harry Callahan)
1977 Every Which Way but Loose (Fargo) (as Philo Beddoc)
1978 Escape from Alcatraz (Siegel) (as Frank Morris)
1980 Any Which Way You Can (Van Horn) (as Philo Beddoc)
1984 Tightrope (Tuggle) (as Wes Block, + co-pr); City Heat (Benjamin)
1988 The Dead Pool (Van Horn) (as Harry Callahan)
1989 Pink Cadillac (Van Horn) (as Tommy Mowak)
1993 In the Line of Fire (Petersen) (as Frank Horrigan)
1994 Don’t Pave Main Street: Carmel’s Heritage (Cartwright and Ludwig—doc) (as narrator)

Clint Eastwood in High Plains Drifter
1995  Casper (Silberling) (uncredited cameo)
1996  Wild Bill: Hollywood Maverick (Robinson) (as himself)
1998  A Soldier’s Daughter Never Cries (uncredited; as John “Thunderbolt” Daugherty)

Films as Director:

1971  Play Misty for Me (+ ro as Dave Garland)
1973  High Plains Drifter (+ ro as the stranger); Brecy
1975  The Eiger Sanction (+ ro as Jonathan Hemlock)
1976  The Outlaw Josey Wales (+ title role)
1977  The Gauntlet (+ ro as Ben Shockley)
1980  Bronco Billy (+ ro as Bronco Billy McCoy)
1982  Honkytonk Man (+ pr, ro as Red); Firefox (+ pr, ro as Mitchell Gant)
1983  Sudden Impact (+ pr, ro as Harry Callahan)
1985  Pale Rider (+ pr, ro as Preacher)
1986  Heartbreak Ridge (+ pr, ro as Tom Highway)
1988  Bird (+ pr)
1990  White Hunter, Black Heart (+ pr, ro as John Wilson); The Rookie (+ ro as Nick Pulaski)
1992  Unforgiven (+ pr, ro as William Munny)
1993  A Perfect World (+ pr, ro as Red Garnett)
1995  The Bridges of Madison County (+ pr, ro as Robert Kincaid)
1997  Absolute Power (pr, + ro as Luther Whitney); Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil (+ pr)
1999  True Crime (+ro as Steve Everett)
2000  Space Cowboys (+ ro as Dr. Frank Corvin)

Other Films:

1989  Thelonious Monk: Straight No Chaser (Zwerin—doc) (exec pr)
1995  The Stars Fell on Henrietta (Keach) (pr)

Publications

By EASTWOOD: articles—

Interview with Arthur Knight, in Playboy (Chicago), February 1974.
Interview with David Thomson, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1984.
Interview with Michel Ciment and Hubert Niogret, in Positif (Paris), July/August 1988.

“The Padron” (Don Siegel), in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1991.

On EASTWOOD: books—

On EASTWOOD: articles—

Mailer, Norman, “All the Pirates and People,” in Parade Magazine, 23 October 1983.

It would be difficult to sustain a case for Clint Eastwood as a great actor. Competent, certainly, even polished within a limited range, but hardly a Marlon Brando or even a James Stewart. If comparisons have to be made, the obvious one is with John Wayne, another movie figure whose emblematic significance far outweighed his conventional thespian talents. Both, of course, owed their initial breakthrough to the Western, and both built cleverly on the generic image with which they were furnished.

Eastwood (then taking small parts in Hollywood) first came to public attention in the late 1950s, playing Rowdy Yates in the television Western series Rawhide. Lean, weather-beaten, and a man of few words but much integrity, he epitomized one strand in the classic image of the Westerner. It was this tradition which was to be extended almost into parody in the three massively successful Westerns that Eastwood made with director Sergio Leone: A Fistful of Dollars, For a Few Dollars More, and The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly. In all three films he had little to say, and what little there was was only just escaped in the wake of the cheroot that he continually rolled from one side of his mouth to the other. The Man with No Name (as the character came to be known) was founded on that mannerism, on Eastwood’s distinctive physical appearance, and on his role as the poncho-clad gunfighter who rides into town bringing vengeance and death. Like Leone’s films themselves, the Man with No Name was a distillation of a Western myth, and it turned Eastwood into top box-office.

It was a happy conjunction of man and image, and, recognizing that his talents lay here, Eastwood set about constructing a career that made the most of them. Simple variations upon the Man with No Name have served well in the likes of Hang ‘em High, Two Mules for Sister Sara, Joe Kidd, High Plains Drifter, and Pale Rider. A modern urban counterpart turned up in Coogan’s Bluff, the guise of a policeman from out West blundering none too appealingly through New York, and emerged fully fledged in another film made for Don Siegel, the controversial and highly successful Dirty Harry. Its central character, Harry Callahan, an obsessive, ruthless, and violent cop, became even more ruthlessly violent in its immediate sequels, Magnum Force and The Enforcer, rapidly joining the Man with No Name as a permanent fixture in the modern cinema’s chamber of action heroes.

It is on these two interrelated personae that Eastwood’s acting style has been built. Only rarely has he had the opportunity to stretch himself beyond these limits (in, for example, The Beguiled, Play Misty for Me, Tightrope, The Bridges of Madison County, and True Crime) and when he does so he generally produces performances even more understated than those he gives when fully in persona. To put it glibly, he does not so much rise to such parts as allow himself to lapse into them. As an actor, then, Eastwood is a product of his image. His success is based on recognizing that fact and ensuring that every performance uses it in some way. Thus, much of the apparent power of his performance in In the Line of Fire is a consequence of the skilfully wrought contrast (mostly achieved in the editing since they do not play scenes together directly) between Malkovich’s actorly skillfully wrought contrast (mostly achieved in the editing since they do not play scenes together directly) between Malkovich’s actorly... has found some balance between evoking the image and using it as a kind of comment upon itself. One such film is The Outlaw Josey Wales where he plays Josey Wales with the usual superhuman overtones, thus trading on the tension between persona-based expectations and the character’s actual behavior. Another case is Heartbreak Ridge, where the assertive masculinity of the Eastwood persona (here in a military version) is to some degree rendered insecure. And yet another instance is Unforgiven which works by allowing the classic persona to emerge slowly in the course of the film. William Munny, former gunman turned responsible single parent, is to be found at the film’s opening covered in mud and struggling with his hogs. By its culminating sequence he has recovered his classic guise as Western avenging angel, in the process turning the movie into a formidable expression of the genre’s romantic individualism.

These films, of course, are as much the products of Eastwood the director as Eastwood the actor, which may explain both their ambition and the fact that they do not quite pull it off. As a director Eastwood clearly learned well from both Leone and Siegel, the two filmmakers most responsible for his on-screen persona. It is a pity, therefore, that however well he has learned and he is a good director, the Eastwood image that they jointly created is now probably too strong to be overcome.

—Andrew Tudor

ELLIOTT, Denholm

Films as Actor:

1949 Dear Mr. Prohack (Freeland) (as Ozzie Morfrey)
1952 The Sound Barrier (Breaking the Sound Barrier) (Lean) (as Christopher Ridgefield); The Holly and the Ivy (O’Ferrall) (as Mick Gregory); The Ringer (Hamilton) (as John Lenley)
1953 The Cruel Sea (Frend) (as Morrell); The Heart of the Matter (O’Ferrall) (as Wilson)
1954 They Who Dare (Milestone) (as Sgt. Corcoran); Lease of Life (Frend) (as Martin Blake); The Man Who Loved the Redheads (French) (as Denis)
1955 The Night My Number Came Up (Norman) (as Flight Lt. McKenzie)
1956 Pacific Destiny (Rilla) (as Arthur Grimble)
1960 Scent of Mystery (Holidays in Spain) (Cardiff) (as Oliver Larker)
1962 Station Six-Sahara (Holt) (as Macey)
1963 Nothing but the Best (Clive Donner) (as Charlie Prince); The Leather Boys (Furie)
1964 The High Bright Sun (McGuire Go Home!) (Thomas) (as Baker)
1965 King Rat (Forbes) (as Lt. Col. Denholm Larkin); You Must Be Joking! (Winner) (as Capt. Tabasco)
1966 Alfie (Lewis Gilbert) (as abortionist); The Spy with a Cold Nose (Pietre) (as Pond-Jones)
1967 Maroc 7 (O’Hara) (as Inspector Barrada); Here We Go ’Round the Mulberry Bush (Clive Donner) (as Mr. Beauchamp)
1968 The Night They Raided Minsky’s (Friedkin) (as Vance Fowler); The Sea Gull (Lumet) (as Dorn)
1969 Too Late the Hero (Suicide Run) (Aldrich) (as Capt. Hornsby)
1970 The Rise and Rise of Michael Rimmer (Billington) (as Peter Niss); The House that Dripped Blood (Duffel) (as Charles)
1971 Percy (Thomas) (as Emmanuel Whitbread); Quest for Love (Thomas) (as Tom Lewis)
1972 Madame Sin (David Greene)
1973 A Doll’s House (Losey) (as Krogstad); “Drawn and Quartered” ep. of The Vault of Horror (Roy Ward Baker) (as Diltant)
1974 Percy’s Progress (It’s Not the Size that Counts) (Thomas) (as Emmanuel Whitbread); The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz (Kotchek) (as Friar)
1975 Russian Roulette (Lombardo) (as Commander Petapiece)
1976 Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg) (as Admiral Canaris); Robin and Marian (Lester) (as Will Scarlett); To the Devil a Daughter (Sykes) (as Henry Beddows); Partners (Don Owen) (as John Grey); The Signalman (Lawrence Gordon Clark—for TV) (title role)
1977 A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as RAF meteorological officer); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Morrisey) (as Stapleton); The Strange Case of the End of Civilisation as We Know It (McGrath—for TV) (as Henry Beddows)
1978 The Sweeney II (Clegg) (as Jupp); Watership Down (Rosen—animation) (as voice of Cowslip); The Boys from Brazil (Schaffner) (as Sidney Beynon)
1979 Saint Jack (Bogdanovich) (as William Leigh); A Game for Vultures (Fargo) (as Raglan Thistle); Caba (Lester) (as Skinner); Zulu Dawn (Hickox) (as Lt. Col. Pulleine)
1980 Rising Damp (McGrath) (as Seymour); “An Englishman’s Home” ep. of Sunday Lovers (Les Sédicteurs) (Forbes and others) (as Parker); Bad Timing (A Sensual Obsession) (Roeg) (as Stefan Vognic); Blade on the Feather (Deep Cover) (Loncraine)
1981 Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg) (as Marcus Brody)
1982 The Missionary (Loncraine) (as the Bishop of London); Brimstone and Treacle (Loncraine) (as Thomas Bates)
1983 Trading Places (Landis) (as Coleman); The Wicked Lady (Winner) (as Sir Ralph Skelton); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Hickox) (as Dr. Mortimer)
1984 The Razor’s Edge (Byrum) (as Elliott Templeton); Camille (Desmond Davis—for TV) (as Count de Nolly)
Denholm Elliott (right) with Harrison Ford in Raiders of the Lost Ark

1985  A Private Function (Mowbray) (as Dr. Swaby); Defence of the Realm (Drury) (as Vernon Bayliss); Past Caring (Eyre)
1986  A Room with a View (Ivory) (as Mr. Emerson); The Whoopee Boys (Byrum) (as Col. Hugh Phelps); Underworld (Transmutations) (Pavlou) (as Dr. Savary); Hotel du Lac (Giles Foster—for TV) (as Philip Neville); Mrs. Delafield Wants to Marry (Schaefer—for TV) (as George Parker)
1987  Maurice (Ivory) (as Dr. Barry); September (Woody Allen) (as Howard); Overindulgence (Devenish); Scoop (Millar—for TV) (as Mr. Salter)
1988  Hanna’s War (Golan); Keys to Freedom (Feke); Return from the River Kwai (McLaglen); The Bourne Identity (Roger Young—for TV) (as Washburn); Codename: Kyrii (Ian Sharp—for TV)
1989  Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg) (as Marcus Brody); Stealing Heaven (Clive Donner) (as Fulbert); Killing Dad (Austin) (as Monty Berg); Rude Awakening (Greenwalt and Russo); The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV)
1990  The Love She Sought (A Green Journey) (Sargent—for TV) (as James O’Hannon)
1991  Toy Soldiers (Petrie) (as the Headmaster); One against the Wind (Elikann—for TV) (as Father LeBlanc); Murder of Quality (Millar—for TV) (as George Smiley)
1992  Scorcher (Beaard) (as Howler); Noises Off (Bogdanovich) (as Selsdon Mowbray/the Burglar)

Publications

By ELLIOTT: articles—

Interview in Film Review (London), December 1979.
Interview in Radio Times (London), 26 November 1983.

On ELLIOTT: articles—

Obituary in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), December 1992.

* * *

Denholm Elliott is one of those British supporting/character actors whose presence in a film automatically guarantees that, if not of the highest quality, it at least will be watchable and well-acted. In this regard, Elliott may be categorized with the likes of John Mills, Trevor Howard, and Jack Hawkins as dependable British character players who appeared in both English and American-made films, small-scale dramas which emphasized character development, and occasional glitzy big-budget spectacles.

In his look and demeanor, Elliott had the air of coming from the lower levels of the British gentleman classes; he would fit snugly into the role of a clergyman’s son struggling to keep his head above the murky waters of the ‘‘shabby genteel.’’ Whatever his character’s trappings, he never truly could be classy, but rather would seem a poseur. This is effectively communicated in one of his best early roles: Morrell, the young naval officer/barrister turned barrack-room lawyer, in The Cruel Sea. At one point in the film, Morrell (whose wife is a bitchy actress) is on leave, and he answers her telephone only to hear a jovial caller ask if ‘‘that clot of a husband’’ is away.

With his quick nail-biter’s grin, Elliott could be corruptible. He was expert at playing the complainer, the clever loser, the resentful schemer, the failed gentleman pulled down by his own inherent pretension, who ends up conniving and clawing his way through shabby schemes and deals. His range also extends, however, to brave, despairing—and, ultimately, ill-fated—victims of duty.

Elliott was cast in some of the finer British films of the 1950s. In addition to The Cruel Sea, he was the doomed aviator forced to test-fly airplanes by his heartless airplane factory owner father (Ralph Richardson) in Breaking the Sound Barrier; the covetous clerk dogging Trevor Howard in The Heart of the Matter; and Michael Redgrave’s assistant in The Night My Number Came Up. Many of his earlier films were linked to World War II-related themes of sacrifice, but the increased affluence and social mobility of the 1960s (along with the arrival of John Osborne’s Angry Young Man) restored to the British cinema a certain cynicism, or worldly wisdom, about snobberies, one-upmanship, the rat race, and unabashed unworthiness. Elliott was suited to such films, and his knowing performance as Charlie Prince, the debased character who teaches manners to an ambitious, social climbing clerk (Alan Bates) in Nothing but the Best, closes off the first phase of his career and serves as a prelude to his future. A perfect follow-up was his distasteful, unorthodox abortionist in Alfie.

Elliott’s highest-profile roles were to come in the 1970s and 1980s. He was never better as Friar, the inebriated, unscrupulous filmmaker who creates the garish bar mitzvah movie, in The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz; and Mr. Emerson, the eccentric up-by-the-boots businessman, in A Room with a View. He was a solid addition to the cast of Robin and Marian, playing the role of Will Scarlett. All the while, he still gave exemplary performances in lesser-known films: Defence of the Realm, playing a veteran journalist whose mysterious death sets a Fleet Street tabloid reporter (Gabriel Byrne) on a quest for truth; and Bad Timing, as Theresa Russell’s wearily resigned Czech husband.

In his later years, Elliott’s international visibility increased as he began appearing in popular American films. In Raiders of the Lost Ark and Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, he is Harrison Ford’s professional associate. In Trading Places, he is Coleman, Dan Aykroyd’s valet, who ends up ministering to Eddie Murphy; his presence is a fine counterpose to John Gielgud’s waspish loftiness as another gentleman’s gentleman in Arthur.

Elliott’s roots are in middle-class Englishness, and he fashioned his characters with sympathy and without complacency. He may have been deprived of full-length, in-depth celluloid stardom, but this loss only enhances the importance of the gallery of types and attitudes he brought to the films in which he did appear.

—Raymond Durgnat, updated by Rob Edelman
FABRIZI, Aldo

Films as Actor:

1942 Avanti c’è posto (Zampa) (as Cesare, + co-story)
1943 Campo dei fiori (The Pedlar and the Lady) (Bonnard) (as Peppino); L’ultima carrozzella (Mattoli) (as Toto)
1944 Circo equestre (Mattoli)
1945 Roma, città aperta (Rome, Open City; Open City) (Rossellini) (as Don Pietro)
1946 Mio figlio professore (Professor My Son) (Castellani); Vivere in pace (To Live in Peace) (Zampa) (+ co-sc)
1947 Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo (Flesh Will Surrender) (Lattuada) (+ co-sc); Tombola, paradiso nero (Ferroni)
1948 Natale al campo I19 (Escape into Dreams) (Francisci) (+ co-sc)
1949 Antonio di Padova (Anthony of Padua) (Francisci)
1950 Prima comunione (Father’s Dilemma) (Blasetti); Francesco—giullare di Dio (Flowers of St. Francis) (Rossellini) (as Nikolai); Vita di cani (It’s a Dog’s Life) (Monicelli and Steno)
1951 Guardie e ladri (Cops and Robbers) (Monicelli and Steno) (+ sc); Parigi è sempre Parigi (Emmer); Signori in carrozza (Zampa) (+ sc; Tre passi a nord (Three Steps North) (W. L. Wilder); Cameriera bella presenza offresi (Pastina)
1952 ‘‘Il carrettino dei libri vecchi,’’ ep. of Altri tempi (Times Gone By); In Olden Days; Infidelity (Blasetti); Cinque poveri in automobile (The Lucky Five) (Mattoli); La voce del silenzio (Pabst)
1953 L’età dell’amore (De Felice); Siamo tutti inquilini (Mattoli); Cose da pazzi (Pabst)
1954 ‘‘Garibaldina’’ ep. of Cento anni d’amore (De Felice)
1955 Accadde al penitenziario (Bianchi); Carosello di varietà; I due comari (Borghesio); Io piaccio (Bianchi)
1956 Donatella (Monicelli); Guardia, guardia scelta, brigadiere e maresciallo (Bolognini); Mi permette, babbo? (Bonnard); I pappagalli (Paolinelli); Un po’ di cielo (Moser)
1957 Festa di maggio (Premier May) (Saslavsky)
1958 I prepotenti (Mattoli)
1959 Fernando I, re di Napoli (Franciolini); Prepotenti più di prima (Mattoli); I tartassati (The Overtaxed) (Steno); La sposa bella (The Angel Wore Red) (Johnson)
1960 Un militare e mezzo (Steno); Totò, Fabrizi e i giovani d’oggi (Mattoli)
1962 Gerarchi si muore (Simonelli); Le meraviglie di Aladino (The Wonders of Aladdin) (Levin) (as Sultan); Orazi e Curiazi (Duel of Champions) (Young and Baldi); I quattro monaci; Twist, ninfette e vitelloni (Firolami)
1963 I quattro moschettieri (Bragaglia); Totò contro i quattro (Vanzina)
1964 Fra Manisco cerca quai (Tamburella); ‘‘I quattro tassisti’’ ep. of La donna è una cosa meravigliosa (Bolognini)
1965 Made in Italy (Loy)
1966 Sette monaci d’oro (Rossi)
1967 Three Bites of the Apple (Ganzer) (as Doctor)
1971 Così di Cosa Nostra (The Godson) (Steno)
1973 La Tosca (Magni); Non toccate la donna bianca (Touche pas la femme blanche) (Ferreri)
1974 Permettete che ami vostre figlia? (Madam, Permit Me to Love Your Daughter; Claretta and Ben) (Polidoro); C’eravamo tanti amati (We All Loved Each Other So Much; Those Were the Years) (Scola); I baroni (Lomi)
1977 Il ginecologo della mutua (Ladies Doctor) (D’Amato)
1986 Giovanni Senzatensieri (Colli)

Films as Director:

1949 Emigrantes (+ sc, ro)
1950 Benvenuto reverendo! (+ sc, ro)
1951 La famiglia Passaguai (+ sc, ro)
1952 La Famiglia Passaguai fa fortuna (+ sc, ro); Papa diventa Mamma (+ sc, ro)
1953 Una di quelle (+ sc, ro)
1954 ‘‘Marsi stretta’’ ep. of Questa è la vita (Of Life and Love) (+ sc, ro)
1955 Hanno rubato un tram (+ sc, ro)
1958 Il maestro (The Teacher and the Miracle) (+ pr, co-sc, ro as Giovanni Merino)

Publications

By FABRIZI: article—

Interview in Cinémonde (Paris), 19 September 1952.

On FABRIZI: articles—

Worschech, Rudolf, ‘‘Aldo Fabrizi: 1.11.1905—2.4.1990,’’ an obituary in, EPD Film (Frankfurt), May 1990.
Obituary, in Skoop June 1990.
‘The End,’ an obituary in Film en Televisie + Video (Brussels), July/August 1990.

* * *

Aldo Fabrizi started out as a comedian in the variety theater in the 1930s. On radio and in the music hall, he specialized in dialect comedy, and this led to his first film efforts. These films, such as Avanti c’è posto, Campo dei fiori, and L’ultima carrozzena, were all comedies devoted to the everyday life of poor but honest folk. Fabrizi’s portrayal of a bus conductor, a market vendor, and a coachman, respectively, brought his sanguine persona and his ability at comic mugging to the attention of the public. The potential danger of becoming stereotyped by such roles was overcome by his dramatic and heartrending portrayal of Don Pietro in Open City. He plays a Catholic priest who fights in the Resistance and who displays unshakable faith, immense courage, and compassion towards both his companions and his torturers even until his execution. Not only was it a brilliant performance, the best of his career, but the film inaugurated the critical success of neorealism around the world, and broke box-office records. Fabrizi continued to exert an enormous influence over the development of Italian neorealist acting in Professor My Son and To Live in Peace, another international success. Alessandro Blasetti used him as the harried, inept father in Father’s Dilemma while, in the same year, Rossellini used Fabrizi’s corpulence and grotesque qualities for the tribal chieftain Nikolai in Flowers of St. Francis. In the 1950s, Fabrizi began directing and continued his scriptwriting career although films written or directed by him have not received much critical attention in Italy. Even his acting roles in the 1950s and 1960s were in films that were rarely distributed internationally. More recently, Fabrizi allowed himself to lose control over his delivery and often deteriorated into cheap and vulgar humor. Because of his enormous body, he tended to be cast as exaggeratedly grotesque characters. Ettore Scola paid homage to Fabrizi’s contribution to the Italian cinema in We All Loved Each Other So Much.

—Elaine Mancini

FAIRBANKS, Douglas

Nationality: American. Born: Douglas Elton Ulman in Denver, Colorado, 23 May 1883; mother reassumed the name of her first husband, Fairbanks, after divorcing Douglas’s father. Education: Attended Colorado School of Mines, until 1900; special student at Harvard University, 5 months. Family: Married 1) Anna Beth Sully, 1907 (divorced 1918), son: the actor Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; 2) the actress Mary Pickford, 1916 (divorced 1918); 3) Sylvia Ashley, 1936. Career: Made first stage appearance with Denver theatrical troupe at age 12; 1900—toured with Frederick Warde theatrical company; after traveling company failed, studied briefly at Harvard and worked at various jobs including Wall Street clerk; 1902—Broadway debut in Her Lord and Master; 1905—featured stage role in A Case of Frenzied Finance; 1906—first stage hit, The Man of the Hour; 1907—left stage briefly after marrying Anna Beth Sully to work in her family’s soap company; 1913—established as stage star with He Comes Up Smiling; 1915—last stage appearance in The Show Shop; 3-year contract with D. W. Griffith’s Triangle Film Corporation; film debut in The Lamb; 1916—first screen success in His Picture in the Papers; 1917—formed Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Corp., releasing through Artcraft, a subsidiary of Famous Players-Lasky (later Paramount); 1919—with Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, and D. W. Griffith, formed United Artists distribution company; 1927—first president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences; 1929—first sound film, The Taming of the Shrew, opposite Mary Pickford; 1936—announced retirement from acting; 1938—formed Fairbanks International production company. Died: 12 December 1939.

Films as Actor:

1915 The Lamb (Cabanne) (as Gerald); Double Trouble (Cabanne) (as Mr. Amidon/Mr. Brassfield)

1916 His Picture in the Papers (Emerson) (as Pete Prindle); The Habit of Happiness (Laugh and the World Laughs) (Dwan) (as “Sunny” Wiggins); The Good Bad Man (Passing Through) (Dwan) (as “Passin’ Thru,” + sc); Reggie Mixes In (Mysteries of New York) (Cabanne) (as Reginald Morton); Fitting with Fate (Cabanne) (as “Augy” Holliday); The Mystery of the Leaping Fish (Emerson—two reels) (as Coke Anneday); The Half Breed (Dwan)  rereleased in abridged version as Flames of ’49 (as Lo Dorman); Manhattan Madness (Dwan) (as Stever O’Dare); American Aristocracy (Ingraham) (as Cassius Lee); The Matrimoniac
(Powell) (as Jimmy Conroy); The Americano (Emerson) (title role); Intolerance (Griffith) (as extra)

1917 In Again, Out Again (Emerson) (as Teddy Rutherford); Wild and Woolly (Emerson) (as Jeff Hillington); Down to Earth (Emerson) (as Bill Gaynor, + story); The Man from Painted Post (Henabery) (as Fancy Jim Sherwood, + sc); Reaching for the Moon (Emerson) (as Alexis Caesar Napoleon Brown); War Relief (short)

1918 A Modern Musketeer (Dwan) (as Ned Thacker); Headin’ South (Rosson) (as “Headin’ South”); Mr. Fix-It (Dwan) (title role); Say! Young Fellow (Henabery) as “Young Fellow”; Bound in Morocco (Dwan) (as The Boy); He Comes Up Smiling (Dwan) (as Jerry Martin); Sic `em Sam! (Parker—short); Fire the Kaiser (Henabery—short)

1919 The Knickerbocker Buckaroo (Parker) (as Ned G. Thacker); Headin’ South (Rosson) (as “Headin’ South”); His Majesty, the American (One of the Blood) (Henabery) (as William Brooks, + co-sc as “Elton Banks”); When the Clouds Roll By (Fleming) (as Daniel Boone Brown, + co-sc); Arizona (Parker) (as Lt. Danton, + sc)

1920 The Mollycoddle (Fleming) (as Richard Marshall, + co-sc); The Mark of Zorro (Niblo) (as Don Diego/Zorro, + sc as “Elton Thomas”)

1921 The Nut (Reed) (as Charlie Jackson, + co-sc as “Elton Thomas”); The Three Musketeers (Niblo) (as D’Artagnan, + co-sc as “Elton Thomas”)

1922 Robin Hood (Dwan) (as The Earl of Huntingdon/Robin Hood, + sc as “Elton Thomas”)

1924 The Thief of Bagdad (Walsh) (as The Thief, + sc as “Elton Thomas”)

1925 Don Q, Son of Zorro (Crisp) (as Don César de Vega/Zorro)

1926 The Black Pirate (Parker) (as Michel, the Black Pirate)

1928 The Gaucho (Jones) (title role)

1929 The Iron Mask (Dwan) (as D’Artagnan, + sc as “Elton Thomas”); The Taming of the Shrew (Taylor) (as Petruchio)

1931 Reaching for the Moon (Goulding) (as Larry Dacy); Around the World in 80 Minutes (around the World with Douglas Fairbanks) (Fleming) (as himself, + sc)

1932 Mr. Robinson Crusoe (Sutherland) (as Steve Drexel, + story as “Elton Thomas”)

1934 The Private Life of Don Juan (Korda) (title role)

“Why Big Pictures?” in Ladies Home Journal (New York), April 1924; also May and September issues.

“The Magic Carpet of My Life as Told to Stuart Jackson,” in Pictures and Picturegoer, 18 March 1933–1 April 1933.

On FAIRBANKS: books—

Talmey, Allene, Doug and Mary, and Others, New York, 1927.

On FAIRBANKS: articles—

On FAIRBANKS: film—

Birth of a Legend, produced and directed by Matty Kemp, released 1966 to accompany widescreen, rerecorded, and rescored version of The Taming of the Shrew.

* * *

The significance of Douglas Fairbanks is linked to the development of early screen comedy and the later development of the star system in the American film industry. His early career parallels Chaplin’s—both began as silent comedians at approximately the same time and both succeeded in developing popular and distinctive screen personas. In 1919 they were both celebrities with sufficient autonomy to enter into a partnership with Mary Pickford and D. W. Griffith to form the United Artists Association, a very important precedent for movie stars, since its adjunct operation, the United Artists Corporation, was to give them control over the distribution of their films. No longer would stars of their rank necessarily be salaried employees. Of the “artists” involved, only Fairbanks was not bound by a long-term contract, and he was the first to complete films distributed by the new corporation, His Majesty, the American and When the Clouds Roll By, both in 1919. The following year would see a major shift in his style and his image, guaranteeing him continued popular success for the following decade.

Fairbanks had held a conventional desk job for a while before turning to Broadway and a serious theatrical career. By 1914 he was a popular success and under contract to make films for the Triangle Film Corporation, which offered him $2,000 per week for his services. By 1916 he had become one of Triangle’s top stars at double his original salary, after having made 13 films in 18 months. When Triangle balked at his demand for a $15,000 weekly salary, Fairbanks offered to form his own corporation that would produce eight features yearly to be purchased for $200,000 each. By March of 1917 the Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Corporation, centered in New York, had been set up, with the movies to be distributed by the Aircraft Corporation.

The first Fairbanks screen persona emerged out of his theatrical roles: a cheerful young man of natural good humor, capable of integrating rural and urban values, often a rich idler rendered through being challenged by the American wilderness. His early comedies tapped popular interests—the “social gospel” of Billy Sunday, for example, and the rugged individualism of Teddy Roosevelt. In The Mollycoddle, a picture that drew its title from a word Roosevelt had coined, the Fairbanks character is costumed to resemble Roosevelt. Both Fairbanks and Roosevelt were obsessed with physical culture and the “gospel of strenuousness.” The typical Fairbanks character of this period attempts to integrate the values of the east and the American west.

The great redefinition of the Fairbanks character came in 1920 with The Mark of Zorro, the first of his extremely popular costume films, but here and subsequently Fairbanks remained primarily a comedian in costume, a satirical swashbuckler inclined to laugh in the face of danger. Fairbanks managed to cover his popularity from several angles. He married Mary Pickford in 1920, making a business connection into a family tie, and the matinee idol was to reign over Hollywood with “America’s Sweetheart” from the palatial estate of Pickfair for about ten years. Singly, each was tremendously popular; together they were unbeatable, the very embodiment in the popular mind of “Hollywood happiness.” Fairbanks certainly knew how to attract and sustain the attention of the American public.

Oddly enough, however, Fairbanks and Pickford did not star in a picture together until 1929, when their marriage was on the verge of breaking up. The picture, Shakespeare’s Taming of the Shrew (with “additional dialogue by Sam Taylor”), was itself strangely ironic, with Fairbanks as Petruchio playing against Pickford’s Kate. By this time, however, Fairbanks had already peaked. No picture made after The Taming of the Shrew would match the artistry or popularity of his great costume films—The Black Pirate, The Thief of Bagdad, Robin Hood, or The Three Musketeers, though some very interesting work was also done towards the latter end of the decade in The Gaucho and The Iron Mask. None of the post-Pickford films—Reaching for the Moon, Around the World in 80 Minutes, Mr. Robinson Crusoe, or The Private Life of Don Juan—worked well for him. After his divorce from Pickford in 1936 (they had separated, finally, in 1933), and his third marriage to Lady Sylvia Ashley, his film career was in fact over, but he had managed to sustain a youthful and energetic image far longer than most men could have done.

—James M. Welsh

Bureau, Hartford; began acting with Mark Twain Maskers, Hartford; studied under Eva Le Gallienne, White Barn Theatre, Westport, Connecticut; 1955—moved to New York to pursue theatrical career; 1956—professional stage debut in Molière’s Don Juan, New York; studied acting with Jack Landau and Sanford Meisner; 1958—film acting debut in Wind across the Everglades; considered for Columbia contract but rejected because of glass eye; 1965–66—in TV series The Trials of O’Brien; mid-1960s—formed Mayo Productions; 1968—created character of Lieutenant Columbo in made-for-TV movie Prescription: Murder and starred in the TV series Columbo, 1971–77, also directed some of the episodes; 1970—co-financed and acted in John Cassavetes film Husbands (also helped finance A Woman under the Influence); late 1980s—Columbo character revived for TV movies. Awards: Five Emmy Awards for Outstanding Lead Actor, for Columbo; Chevalier of Arts and Letters, 1996. Address: 1004 North Roxbury Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1958 Wind across the Everglades (Nicholas Ray) (as writer)
1959 The Bloody Brood (Roffman) (as Nico)
1960 Pretty Boy Floyd (Leder) (as Shorty Walters); Murder, Inc. (Rosenberg and Burt Balaban) (as Abe “Kid Twist” Reles); The Secret of the Purple Reef (Witney)
1961 Pocketful of Miracles (Capra) (as Joy Boy)
1962 Pressure Point (Cornfield) (as young psychiatrist)
1963 It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (Kramer) (as second cab driver); The Balcony (Strick) (as police chief)
1964 Robin and the Seven Hoods (Gordon Douglas) (as Guy Gisborne); Italiani brava gente (Italiano brava gente; Attack and Retreat) (De Santis) (as medic captain)
1965 The Great Race (Edwards) (as Max)
1966 Too Many Thieves (Biberman—for TV, two Trials of O’Brien eps.); Penelope (Hiller)
1967 Luv (Clive Donner) (as Milt Manville)
1968 Lo sbarco di Anzio (Anzio; The Battle for Anzio) (Dmytryk) (as Cpl. Rabinoff); Gli intoccabili (Machine Gun McCain) (Montaldo) (as Charles Adamo); Prescription: Murder (Irving—for TV) (as Columbo)
1969 Castle Keep (Pollack) (as Sgt. Orlando Rossi)
1970 Husbands (Cassavetes) (as Archie); Operation Snafu (Situation Normal All Fouled Up; Rosolino paternò, soldato . . .) (Loy); Step Out of Line (McEveety—for TV)
1971 Ransom for a Dead Man (Irving—for TV) (as Columbo)
1972 The Politics Film (Millier—short) (as narrator)
1974 A Woman under the Influence (Cassavetes) (as Nick Longhetti)
1976 Mikey and Nicky (Elaine May) (as Mikey); Murder by Death (Robert Moore) (as Sam Diamond); Griffin and Phoenix: A Love Story (Today Is Forever) (Duke—for TV) (as Geoffrey Griffin)
1977 Opening Night (Cassavetes) (as guest)
1978 The Cheap Detective (Robert Moore) (as Lou Peckinpah); The Brink’s Job (Friedkin) (as Tony Pino)
1979 The In-Laws (Hiller) (as Vince Ricardo)
1981 The Great Muppet Caper (Henson) (as a tramp); . . . All the Marbles (The California Dolls) (Aldrich) (as Harry Sears)

Publications

By FALK: articles—

On FALK: articles—

Everything about the on-screen Peter Falk bespeaks lived-in disarray—his raspy voice, slumping posture, ill-fitting clothes, even his squinty, slightly cockeyed look (the result of losing an eye as a child). In combination with an ingratiatingly ironic style of delivery, Falk’s physiognomy makes him especially effective in comedies and in dramas with strong comedic undertones.

Bored with his career as an efficiency expert, Falk turned to stage acting in the 1950s, gaining valuable experience in several off-Broadway productions, including Eugene O’Neill’s The Iceman Cometh. Television and film work followed quickly, his feature debut coming in Nicholas Ray’s Wind across the Everglades. For his fourth film role, that of Abe Reles, the mob assassin who blew the whistle on the Organization’s professional hit squad Murder, Inc. only to become a victim of it himself before he could take the stand, he deftly combined the two aspects of his acting persona by making the weaselish Reles a confused and slightly comic figure who is nevertheless chilling given the nature of his job. Falk earned an Academy Award nomination as Best Supporting Actor for his standout performance in the otherwise undistinguished gangland docudrama. Years later, he showed similar acting dexterity in Friedkin’s gangland comedy-drama The Brink’s Job as the goofball mastermind behind the “crime of the century” who is done in by a pathetic, losing nature.

Falk’s hilarious performance as a Damon Runyon character in Frank Capra’s Pocketful of Miracles unwrapped his gift for comedy and paved the way for a string of farcical roles, many of which crossed over into slapstick—in Stanley Kramer’s It’s a Mad, Mad, Mad World, as a taxi driver; Gordon Douglas’s Robin and the Seven Hoods, as another Runyonesque hoodlum; Blake Edwards’s The Great Race, as the riotously inept assistant to frustrated villain Jack Lemmon; and The Cheap Detective, as a bumbling, Bogart-like gumshoe named “Peckinpaugh.”

By the 1970s Falk was elevated to starring or co-starring roles in such dramas as Husbands and A Woman under the Influence, written and directed by his close friend John Cassavetes, as well as various comedies. But he achieved actual stardom with the popular television series Columbo, the vehicle with which he is most closely associated. As the disheveled, dumb-like-a-fox police lieutenant of the title, a character the show’s creators Levinson and Link patterned after Charles Vanel’s detective in the classic Clouzot chiller Diabolique, he brought a sly, rumpled, earthy charm which was chiefly responsible for the series’ success and which remains its trademark. Falk continues to play the part in occasional made-for-television Columbo movies and shows up on the big screen now and then either in cameos or substantive character parts such as that of the irascible old guy who raises his orphaned grandson in Yates’s sentimental Roommates.

Bill Wine, updated by John McCarty

On FARMER: films—

Frances, directed by Graeme Clifford, 1982.

Will There Really Be a Morning?, for TV, 1982.

* * *

Some 50 years after her best work, Frances Farmer remains contemporary. A screen actress whose performances transcend her own time is rare; Farmer had that quality. No one seeing her on-screen will forget her deep voice and lovely eyes and no one learning of her life can dismiss her tragic story easily. Yet renewed interest in the actress’s life has drawn attention from her remarkable talent.

Farmer had a beauty and grace that the camera loved and she quickly gained box-office popularity. Whether costumed in sarongs (Ebb Tide, South of Pago-Pago), period clothes (Come and Get It, The Toast of New York, Son of Fury), or covered in mud (Flowing Gold), she exuded intelligence and honesty. Farmer’s talent, however, could not salvage inferior films that appeared designed to punish her for outspokenness and a preference for the stage. In World Premiere, for example, Farmer, a long black wig covering her blond hair, plays a loud egotistical actress. In one scene she is called upon to crawl on her knees down a train aisle. The result is unwatchable.

The climax of Frances Farmer’s brief career was Come and Get It in which she portrayed two characters: Lotta, a husky-voiced saloon singer, and Lotta’s daughter, a high-voiced delicate innocent. Though only 22 years old, Farmer is relaxed and confident, changing her voice pitch, the look in her eyes, and modifying her gestures for the two roles. While Lotta is sarcastic, knowing, and slow to reveal emotion or trust, her daughter is polite, with bright eyes that register each emotion without hesitation. The indestructible blood tie between the past and the present is represented by the song ‘‘Aura Lee’’ which both sing, but in their own individual styles.

Under Howard Hawks’s direction and care, Farmer blossoms and gives her best performance. It was typical of the curious circumstances of Farmer’s career that the one director who was attentive to the actress and her talent was replaced during production. Farmer’s performance, however, will be rediscovered by each successive generation, for it is as true as the day it was recorded on film.

—Alexa L. Foreman

FARROW, Mia

Careers:

Films as Actress:

1959 John Paul Jones (Farrow) (bit role)
1963 The Age of Curiosity (short)
1964 Guns at Batasi (Guillermin) (as Karen Erickson)
1967 Johnny Belinda (Bogart—for TV) (title role)
1968 A Dandy in Aspic (Anthony Mann) (as Caroline); Secret Ceremony (Losey) (as Cenci); Rosemary’s Baby (Polanski) (as Rosemary)
1969 John and Mary (Yates) (as Mary)
1970 Goodbye Raggedy Ann (Cook—for TV); Blind Terror (See No Evil) (Fleischer) (as Sarah); Follow Me! (The Public Eye) (Reed) (as Belinda Sidley)
1972 Docteur Popaul (Scoundrel in White; High Heels) (Chabrol) (as Christine)
1974 The Great Gatsby (Clayton) (as Daisy)
1976 Peter Pan (Hemion—for TV); Full Circle (Loncraine)
1978 Avalanche (Corey Allen) (as Caroline Brace); Death on the Nile (Guillermin) (as Jacqueline de Bellefort); A Wedding (Altman) (as Buffy)
1979 Hurricane (Troell) (as Charlotte Bruckner)
1981 The Haunting of Julia (Loncraine) (title role)
1982 A Midsummer Night’s Sex Comedy (Woody Allen) (as Ariel); The Last Unicorn (Rankin Jr. and Bass—animation) (as voice of Last Unicorn/Lady Amalthea)
1983 Zelig (Woody Allen) (as Dr. Eudora Fletcher)
1984 Broadway Danny Rose (Woody Allen) (as Tina Vitale); Sarah and the Squirrel (part animation); Supergirl (Szwarc) (as Alura Zor-El)
1985 The Purple Rose of Cairo (Woody Allen) (as Cecilia); Hannah and Her Sisters (Woody Allen) (as Hannah)
1986 Radio Days (Woody Allen) (as Sally White)
1987 September (Woody Allen) (as Lane)
1988 Another Woman (Woody Allen) (as Hope)
1989 ‘‘Oedipus Wrecks’’ ep. of New York Stories (Woody Allen) (as Lisa); Crimes and Misdemeanors (Woody Allen) (as Halley Reed)
1990 Alice (Woody Allen) (as Alice)
1992 Shadows and Fog (Woody Allen) (as Irmey); Husbands and Wives (Woody Allen) (as Judy Roth)
1994 Widows’ Peak (Irvin) (as Catherine O’Hare)
1995 Miami Rhapsody (Frankel) (as Nina); Reckless (René) (as Rachel)
1996 Angela Mooney (title role)
1997 Redux Riding Hood (Moore) (as voice of Doris/Mrs. Wolf); Private Parts (Thomas) (as herself-uncredited)
1998 Miracle at Midnight (Ken Cameron—for TV) (as Doris Koster)
1999 Coming Soon (Burson) (Judy Hodsell); Forget Me Never (Yelin, Longstreet) (as Diane McGowin)

Mia Farrow and Robert Redford in The Great Gatsby
Publications

By FARROW: books—

By FARROW: articles—

Interview in Films and Filming (London), June 1986.

On FARROW: books—

On FARROW: articles—

``Mia Farrow,’’ in Film Dope (London), September 1978.
Photoplay (London), September 1984.
Brown, Georgia A., ``Much Ado about Mia,’’ in American Film (Washington, D.C.), March 1987.

On FARROW: film—

Love and Betrayal: The Mia Farrow Story, for television, 1995.

* * *

Mia Farrow began her career in the successful television series Peyton Place playing Allison Mackenzie, a type of role that would become standard in her repertoire: the virginal and innocent waif—sensitive, vulnerable, and intelligent. Admired for her long, Alice-in-Wonderland hair, Farrow shocked Hollywood one day by cutting it all off, an independent act which, odd as it may seem now, made headlines across the country, and characterized Farrow as not just another pretty face content to follow the instructions of her male Hollywood bosses.

That Farrow’s boyish charm was a significant part of her attractiveness is clear; her slightly enigmatic grin, those fetching and luminous eyes, the short hair that sets off her features, and the thin body, recalling Audrey Hepburn. “Victim” roles followed: in a television adaptation of Johnny Belinda, in which she played a deaf mute who is raped; and in Rosemary’s Baby, in which she plays a contemporary New York City woman who is raped by the devil and subsequently gives birth to Satan’s son. Directed by Roman Polanski, Rosemary’s Baby was an incredible box-office and critical success. Farrow’s slight physical presence and vulnerability made her a believable victim. It seems ironic that at a time of emerging women’s liberation, an actress should appear whose persona was that of a woman apparently so in need of being taken care of.

Despite the popularity of Rosemary’s Baby, Farrow has never been especially admired by the critics or popular at the box office; that she failed to win an Academy Award nomination for this or any other film seems to reflect her lack of general appeal. John and Mary, Farrow’s first film after Rosemary’s Baby, was widely ridiculed, although today, while still rarely screened, it seems to be among the earliest American films of the 1960s to deal with sexual relationships in a relatively honest way. Another underrated performance was as Daisy in The Great Gatsby, a multimillion dollar film which cast her opposite Robert Redford. Here director Jack Clayton revealed Farrow’s innocence and beauty as a corrupt facade in a film that looks increasingly praiseworthy, as does her performance in it. Other Farrow roles seem either to perpetuate the waif/victim persona (such as See No Evil, in which she plays a blind woman who is terrorized by a killer, or in her theatrical and television performances as Peter Pan), or to manipulate and subvert the waif/victim persona by countering audience expectations (as in the Agatha Christie adaptation Death on the Nile, Robert Altman’s A Wedding, or Claude Chabrol’s Docteur Popaul). Yet if Farrow’s persona is often vulnerable, her offscreen image has about it a considerable element of independence: one thinks of her interest in social issues, her adoption of Vietnamese children, her visits to the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in the 1960s, and her highly publicized relationships with a variety of famous and talented men such as Frank Sinatra, André Previn, and Woody Allen.

Certainly the period of Farrow’s career with the highest profile comprises her numerous performances for director Woody Allen. While generally thought of as an instinctual, if mannered, actress, Farrow reveals herself in Allen’s films to be an actress of substantial technical skill; and before its termination, their collaboration acquired the stature of a Chabrol and Audran, a Fellini and Masina, a Bergman and Ullmann. Farrow played a liberated freethinker in A Midsummer Night’s Sex Comedy, a psychiatrist in the pseudodocumentary Zelig, and—most surprisingly—a vulgar Italian woman in Broadway Danny Rose, a key Allen film in which Farrow played il bruto to Allen’s Gelsomina in a contemporary comedy evoking Fellini’s La Strada. Her excellent work for Woody Allen has been judged surprising particularly by those critics who had already tended to underrate or dismiss her. Her totally luminous and sensitive performance as the forlorn movie fan in the 1985 The Purple Rose of Cairo seems already to be a key performance in the American cinema: the performance and film both extraordinary achievements largely ignored at their release, pushed aside by the Spielberg-inspired, special-effects spectaculars of the Reagan era. As the daughter in September (based loosely on Lana Turner’s relationship with her daughter in the aftermath of the Johnny Stompanato murder), Farrow shows the ability to eradicate her own charismatic personality within an intimate chamber drama in a way that recalls and rivals Liv Ullmann in Autumn Sonata, with which the film bears comparison: Farrow’s sniffing, whiny protagonist is both terrifyingly vulnerable and pitiable, as well as the temperamental opposite to Farrow’s spunky cigarette girl who becomes a star in Radio Days, in which Farrow offers a deft, comic turn.

Perhaps unfortunately, one cannot comprehensively discuss Farrow in the mid-1990s without some consideration of the extraordinary scandal that gripped tabloid America for over a year. The Allen-Farrow breakup, which included dismissed charges against Allen of child sexual abuse and revelations of an acknowledged affair between Allen and Farrow’s then-teenaged adopted daughter, Soon-Yi, put the Farrow-Allen collaboration under a microscope. A reevaluation of Allen’s use of Farrow reveals, perhaps surprisingly to some, that Farrow’s persona in Allen’s films (with the exception, perhaps, of Alice, which emphasizes the Roman Catholic, giving component of Farrow’s identity) was by no means a heroic or valorized one. In Hannah and Her Sisters, one of Allen’s most sustained works, shot largely in Farrow’s Manhattan apartment, Farrow played a role patterned upon her own life, allowing the spectator a kind of voyeuristic entrance into Farrow’s life with Allen. And yet, if barely commented upon at the time of the film’s release, Farrow’s Hannah—only apparently the stable, expressive center in Allen’s world—is relatively snug, and it is clear that the filmmaker expends much more narrative time and effort to interest her, as Allen’s surrogate (Hannah’s husband, played by Michael Caine) falls in love with a sister-in-law—an incestual precursor to Allen’s later disenchantment. In Crimes and Misdemeanors (arguably Woody Allen’s finest work), Farrow plays an archetype for our time: the amoral smiler—smart, attractive, talented, and sensitive, yet ultimately ambitious and pragmatic in ways which are all too recognizable. In retrospect it is clearer that in The Purple Rose of Cairo, September, and Another Woman (in which a very pregnant Farrow spends most of the film in therapy and tears), there is a profound element of masochism implicit in Farrow’s suffering, and sadness on the part of the director and/or the narrative.

Husbands and Wives, the Allen masterwork representing the last of their collaboration, in production while the scandal was unfolding, has Farrow and Allen playing a married couple whose marriage traumatically unravels, with Farrow presented as a woman who subtly uses her charm and passivity to manipulate those around her. In this film of vertiginous style and emotion, Farrow’s heartrending performance, for many, was so persuasive that the film was greeted (though to disappointing box office) as psychodrama in the Cassavetes style, too painful to watch. Even in the “Oedipus Wrecks” segment of New York Stories, the character played by Woody Allen ultimately rejects as his perfect match the fantasy of Mia Farrow in favor of the reality of Julie Kavner. Is any more evidence necessary that Allen has been no Sternberg elevating his Dietrich? As a last curious footnote to the scandal, one notes that even in non-Allen films, major roles in major productions, a trio of films released during and around the time of the film’s release, that Farrow threatened suicide. Coming Soon, which went straight to video as a result of the MPAA initially giving the film an NC-17 rating, boasted Farrow, Ryan O’Neal, and Spalding Gray in supporting roles in a feminist comedy centered on women’s orgasm. More successful for Farrow, certainly, were two movies made directly for TV. In Miracle at Midnight, a TV movie produced for The Wonderful World of Disney, Farrow plays a heroine from real life: Doris Koster, who together with her husband saved thousands of Jews in Nazi-occupied Denmark during World War II. Forget Me Never, broadcast in 1999, was even more successful—garnering Farrow a Golden Globe nomination for her poignant performance as a married forty-something attorney who is diagnosed with Alzheimer’s. Despite these recent successes, one suspects that Mia Farrow’s continuing performance work will continue to be too fine, subtle, and marginal for significant contemporary acclaim. And unlike other of her acting contemporaries (like Streisand or Nicholson), Mia Farrow—even in the midst of her biggest successes with Rosemary’s Baby and Hannah and Her Sisters—never particularly worked at capitalizing her potential as a movie star or as a Hollywood power player.

Ironically, Farrow’s most overwhelming public success has come not through her acting, but through her writing. Her extraordinary memoir, What Falls Away, which was published in 1997, joins that very rare company of actress memoirs (including Liv Ullmann’s Changing and Hildegard Kneff’s The Gift Horse) that rise to a literary quality. Dealing courageously with her own childhood polio, her complicated relationships, her unusual inter-racial family of fourteen children (many adopted, with multiple handicaps), and of course, the scandal involving Woody Allen, What Falls Away became a national best-seller as well as an elegant and poetic self-portrait of one of our most sensitive and unique film artists.

—Charles Derry

FÉLIX, María

Films as Actress:

1942 El peñón de las ánimas (The Crag of the Spirits) (Zacarías) (as María Angela Valdivia); María Eugenia (Castillo) (title role)

1943 Doña Barbara (de Fuentes) (title role); La mujer sin alma (Woman without a Soul) (de Fuentes); La china poblana (Palacios) (as Catarina de San Juan)
1944 Amok (Momplet) (as Señora Trevis/Señora Belmont); La monja alférez (Gómez Muriel) (as Catalina Eraso/Don Alfonso)
1945 El monje blanco (Bracho) (as Galata Orsina); Vértigo (Momplet) (as Mercedes Malheia); La mujer de todos (Everybody's Woman) (Bracho) (as Maria Romano)
1946 La devoradora (The Devourer) (de Fuentes) (as Diana de Arellano); Enamorada (A Woman in Love) (Fernández) (as Beatriz Peñañiel)
1947 Río escondido (Hidden River) (Fernández) (as Rosaura Salazar); La diosa arrodiillada (Gavaldón) (as Raquel Serrano); Que Dios me perdone (Tito Davison) (as Sofia/Lena Kovach)
1948 Mare Nostrum (Gil) (as Freya); Maclovia (Fernández) (title role)
1949 Doña Diabla (Tito Davison) (as Angela); Una mujer cualquiera (Gil) (as Nieves Blanco)
1950 La noche de sábado (Gil) (as Imperia); La corona negra (Saslasky) (as Mara)
1951 Messalina (The Affairs of Messalina) (Gallone) (title role); Incantesimo tragico (Hechizo tragico; Oliva) (Seguí) (as Oliva)
1952 Camelia (Gavaldón) (title role); La pasión desnuda (Naked Passion) (Amadori) (as Malva Rey); Reportaje (Fernández) (as María); El rapto (Fernández) (as Aurora Campos y Campos)
1954 La Belle Otéro (La bella Otéro) (Pottier) (title role); French Cancan (Only the French Can) (Renoir) (as Margot “La Belle Abbess”)
1955 Les Héros sont fatigués (Heroes and Sinners; The Heroes Are Tired) (Ciampi) (as Gabriella); La escondida (The Hidden Woman) (Gavaldón) (as Gabriela); Canasta de cuentos mexicanos (Bracho) (as Luisa Bravo)
1956 Tizoc (Amor Indio) (Rodríguez) (as Maria); Faustina (de Heredia) (title role)
1957 Flor de mayo (Beyond All Limits) (Gavaldón) (as Magdalena)
1958 Miércoles de ceniza (Gavaldón) (as Victoria Rivas); La cucaracha (The Soldiers of Puncho Villa) (Ismael Rodríguez) (title role); La estrella vacía (The Empty Star) (Gómez Muriel) (as Olga Lang); Café Colón (Alazraki) (as Mónica); Razzia sur la chnouf (Decoin)
1959 Sonatas (Bardem) (as La Niña Chole); Juana Gallo (Zacarías) (as Angela Ramos/Juana Gallo)
1960 La Fièvre monté à El Pao (Los ambiciosos; Republic of Sin) (Buñuel) (as Inés Rojas)
1962 La bandida (The Bandit) (Roberto Rodríguez) (as María Mendoza/title role); Si yo fuera millonario (Soler) (as herself)
1963 Amor y sexo (Alcoriza) (as Diana)
1965 La Valentina (González) (as Valentina Zuñiga)
1970 Le generala (Ibañez) (as Mariana San Pedro/title role); La Constitución (as María Guadalupe—for TV)

On FÉLIX: books—

García Riera, Emilio, Historia documental del cine mexicano, vols. 1–9, Mexico City, 1969–78.
Ramón, David, 80 años de cine en México, Mexico City, 1977.
Ayala Blanco, Jorge, La aventura del cine mexicano, Mexico City, 1979.
Taibo, Paco Ignacio, María Félix: 47 Pasos por el cine, Mexico City, 1985.
Ayala Blanco, Jorge, La búsqueda del cine mexicano, Mexico City, 1986.
Barajas Sandoval, Carmen, Una mujer llamada María Félix: historia no autorizada, Mexico City, 1993.

On FÉLIX: articles—

Castillo, Luciano, “La Dona,” in Film und Fernsehen, April 1990.

* * *

María Félix reportedly remarked, “Don’t call me a legend because it sounds to me like the past.” Yet, Félix was, in fact, one of the brightest of stars of the Mexican cinema’s “Golden Age,” appearing in more than 45 Mexican and European films. And despite rumors in the early 1980s of an imminent return to the screen, Félix the “legend” is part of the Mexican cinema’s rich past. Her celebrity caused her personal life and physical beauty to be fetishized: she was painted by artists such as Diego Rivera, Leonora Carrington, and Jean Cocteau; Agustín Lara wrote songs for his “María Bonita” (as she came to be known); poems about her beauty were composed by Efraín Huerta and Renato Leduc; Dior designed her gowns; and even a master such as Jean Renoir rendered homage to her pulchritude by filming her differently—in “Matisse’s style”—from the other actors in French Cancan.

In the title role of Doña Barbara, Fernando de Fuentes’s screen adaptation of the Rómulo Gallegos novel, Félix won a place as one of the primary figures in Mexican cinema and earned her lifelong nickname, “La Doña.” But it was in La mujer sin alma that Félix concretized the archetypal woman with whom she would be identified throughout her career—a strong woman, driven by love, whose independence and sexual appetite challenge the code of Mexican machismo.

“The most beautiful face in the history of Mexican cinema,” said one Mexican critic of Félix; but this star is also an example of the underdevelopment endemic to that nation’s films. Despite working with several of Mexico’s most renowned directors, Félix never really rose above her role of the vamp. She was a mediocre actress with atrocitys of the vamp, whose dramatic range was limited to raising an eyebrow or staring fixedly ahead. These “techniques” drew attention to her large, luminous eyes, while obscuring her thespian shortcomings.

From early in her career, the theme of a María Félix film was Félix herself, and her movies elevated her public image at the expense of story line or acting. The interest of El rapto, for example, lay in the recent marriage of its co-stars, Félix and Jorge Negrete, and in the fact that it was completed shortly before Negrete died. The title of other

Publications

By FÉLIX: book—

Todas mis guerras, Mexico, 1993.
Félix vehicles bespeak her femme fatale character: Doña Diabla (Mrs. Devil), La mujer de todos (Everybody’s Woman), La mujer sin alma (Woman without a Soul), and—in her preeminent characterization—La devoradora (The Devourer), promoted with this advertising pitch: ‘‘Three men burned in this woman’s flame, this devourer of lives.’’ Félix’s consumption of men, however, must be seen in the context of Mexican machismo. Her beauty threatened social convention and stability for, as one of her suitors says in Doña Diabla, ‘‘A beautiful woman can’t be the property of just one man.’’ Buffeted by the storms unleashed by her smoldering sexuality, the Félix character developed her femme fatale persona. From the beginning, Félix’s screen rebellions finally served only to prove the futility of such resistance. Thus, in a series of lavishly produced paeans to the Mexican Revolution—La cucaracha, Juana Gallo, La bandida, La Valentina—she represents powerful personifications of that process, culminating in La generela. Nonetheless, Félix’s cinematic combativeness functions essentially to make more appetizing her eventual subjugation. The role she played time and again was nothing more than that of the attendant to his needs. Félix’s screen rebellions finally served only to prove the futility of such resistance. As if to prove the force of her character, her later screen appearances were in the roles usually considered to be masculine. Félix’s consumption of men, however, must be seen in the context of Mexican machismo. Her beauty threatened social convention and stability for, as one of her suitors says in Doña Diabla, ‘‘A beautiful woman can’t be the property of just one man.’’ Buffeted by the storms unleashed by her smoldering sexuality, the Félix character developed the image of a strong woman; for example, as recently as 1980 she argued, ‘‘They want to portray the Mexican woman as docile, stupid and obedient. We aren’t like that; we’re strong and brave and dare to struggle.’’ As if to prove the force of her character, her later screen appearances were in the roles usually considered to be masculine. Félix’s cinematic combativeness functions essentially to make more appetizing her eventual subjugation. The role she played time and again was nothing more than that of the attendant to his needs. Félix’s screen rebellions finally served only to prove the futility of such resistance.

—John Mraz, updated by Ilene S. Goldman

FERNANDEL

Nationality: French. Born: Fernand Joseph Désiré Contandin in Marseilles, 8 May 1903. Military Service: Compulsory military service in the 1920s; French army, 1939–40. Family: Married Henriette Manse, 1925, children: Josette, Janine, Franck, and Gérard. Career: Stage debut at age five in melodrama, Théâtre Chave; while attending school, appeared at night with father and brother in Marseilles music halls; 1914—left school and worked in various jobs while continuing to perform; 1922—contract by Eldorado Theatre, Nice; contract on Paramount vaudeville circuit; 1930—offered first film role by director Marc Allégret; through 1930s continued to appear on stage in Marseille and Paris; 1934—first substantial film role as Saturnin in Marcel Pagnol’s Argède; 1942—directed children’s film Simperl; 1948—first tour of United States and Canada; 1950—began appearing in serious roles, in Sacharova and Les Gaités de l’escadron; 1967—in TV series L’Amateur. Awards: Chevalier of the Légion d’Honneur. Died: In Paris, 26 February 1971.

Films as Actor:

1930 La Meilleure Bobonne (Marc Allégret and Heymann) (as Lucien Pivoine); J’ai quelque chose à vous dire (Marc Allégret); Le Blanc et le noir (Florey) (as The Groom)

1931 Attaque nocturne (Marc Allégret and de Marguenat); Un purg bébé (Renoir) (as Horace Truchet); Vive la classe (Cammage); Coeur de Lilas (Litvak—French version of his The Mad Genius) (as le garçon d’honneur); La Fine combine (Chotin—short) (as valet); Pas un mot à ma femme (Chotin); Bric a Brac et Cie (Chotin); Paris-Beguin (Géline) (as Picelle)

1932 Cunegonde (short—filmed song); Elle disait non (short—filmed song); Le Rosier de Madame Hasson (He) (Deschamps) (as Isidore); Maruche (Péguy); Un Homme sans nom (L’Homme sans nom) (Ucicky—French version of Mensch ohne Namen) (as Jutol); Les Gaités de l’escadron (Maurice Tourneur) (as Venderague); La Claque (Péguy—short); Par habitude (Cammage—short); Quand tu nous tiens, amour (Cammage—short); Le Jugement de minuit (Esway and Charlot) (as Sam); Une Brune piquante (de Poligny); Ordonnance malgré lui (Cammage) (as chauffeur); Un Beau Jour de noces (Cammage—short); La Terreur de la Pampa (Cammage); Comme une carpe (Heymann—short); L’Idoire (Maurice Tourneur—short) (title role)

1933 Ça colle (Christian-Jaque—short); Le Coq du régiment (Cammage); Le Gros Lot (La Veine d’Anatole) (Cammage); L’Ordonnance (The Orderly) (Tourjansky); D’amour et d’eau fraîche (Gandéra); Adéma i aviateur (Tarride) (as Michelet); La Garnison amoureuse (de Vaucorbeil); Restez dinershort

1934 Une Nuit de folies (Cammage); Le Cheri de sa concierge (Glavanti); Le Train de 8 h 47 (Wulschleger) (as Croquebœf); L’Hôtel du libre échange (Marc Allégret); Argède (Pagnol) (as Saturnin); Les Bleus de la marine (Cammage) (as Lafraise); Le Cavaleur Lafleur (Ducis) (as Lafleur en activité); La Porteuse de pain (Sti)

1935 Ferdinand le noceur (Si) (as Ferdinand); Jim la houlette (Berthomieu) (as Moluchet); Les Gaités de la finance (Forrester)

1936 Un de la Légion (Christian-Jaque) (as Fernand Espitation); Josette (Christian-Jaque)

1937 Francois Ier (Frisco the First) (Christian-Jaque) (as Honorin); Les Degourdis de la onzième (Christian-Jaque); Ignace (Colombier) (as Ignace Boticaigou); Regain (Harvest) (Pagnol) (as Urbain Gedéms); Le Schpountz (Heartbeat) (Pagnol) (as Irené Fabre); Les Rois du sport (Colombier) (as Fernand); Un Carnet de bal (Life Dances on, Christine) (Duvivier) (as Fabien Coutissol); Hercule (L’Incorruptible) (Esway) (title role)

1938 Barnabé (Esway) (title role); Raphael et Cacolet (Colombier) (as Modeste Manosque); Ernest le rebelle (Christian-Jaque); Les Cinq sous de Lavardé (Cammage) (as Armand Lavardé)

1939 Berlingot et Cie (Rivers) (as François); Fric-Frac (Lehmann and Autant-Lara) (as Marcel); L’Héritier des Mondésir (Valentin)

1940 L’Acrobate (Boyer) (as Ernest Sauce); Monsieur Hector (Cammage) (as Hector); Un Chapeau de paille d’Italie (The Italian Straw Hat) (Cammage) (as Fadinard); La nuit merveilleuse (Paulin); La Fille du puisatier (The Well-Digger’s Daughter) (Pagnol) (as Felipe Rambert)

1941 Une Vie de chien (Cammage) (as Gustave Bourdillon); Les Petits Riens (Leboursier); Le Club des soupîrants (Gleize) (as Antoine Valoisir)
1942 La Bonne Étoile (Boyer) (as Auguste); Ne le criez pas sur les toits (Norman) (as Vincent Fleuret)
1943 La Cavalcade des heures (Noé) (as Antonin); Guignol, marionnette de France (short)
1945 La Mystère Saint-Val (Le Hénaff) (as Sagnarelle) (Berry) (as Tione); Les Gueux au paradis (Hoboes in Paradise) (Le Hénaff) (as Pons)
1946 Pétrus (Marc Allégret) (title role); L’Aventure de Cabassou (Grangier); La Caisse d’Epargne du Grand Café (short); Comedians ambulants (short); Coeur de coq (Cloche) (as Tulipe Barbaroux)
1947 Escale au soleil (Verneuil); Emile l’africain (Vernay) (as Emile)
1948 Si ça peut vous faire plaisir (norman) (as Martial Gonfaron); L’Armoire volante (The Cupboard Was Bare) (Rim) (as Alfred Puc)
1949 L’Héroïque Monsieur Boniface (Labro) (as Boniface); On demande un assassin (Neubach) (as Bob Laurent); Botta e risposta (Je suis de la revue) (Soldati)
1950 Casimir (Pottier) (title role); Muertres (Three Sinners) (Pottier) (as Noël Annaquin); Tu m’as sauvé la vie (Guitry) (as Fortuné Richard); Uniformes et grandes manoeuvres (Le Hénaff) (as Luc); Topaze (Pagnol) (title role); Boniface somnambule (Labro) (as Boniface)
1951 L’Auberge rouge (The Red Inn) (Autant-Lara) (as Le Capucin); La Table aux crêzes (Verneuil) (as Urbain Coindet)
1952 Le Petit monde de Don Camillo (The Little World of Don Camillo) (Duvivier) (title role); Coiffeur pour dames (The French Touch) (Boyer) (as Mario); Le Fruît défendu (Forbidden Fruit) (Verneuil) (as Charles Pellegrin); Le Boulanger de Valorgue (Verneuil) (as Félicien)
1953 Le Retour de Don Camillo (The Return of Don Camillo) (Duvivier) (title role); L’Ennemi public No. 1 (The Most Wanted Man) (Verneuil) (as Joé Calvet); Carnaval (Carnival) (Verneuil) (as Dardamelle); Maman Nitouche (Yves Allégret) (as Célestin-Floridor); Le Mouton à cinq pattes (The Sheep Has Five Legs) (Verneuil) (as Saint Forget/Alain/ Bernard/Charles/ Désiré/ Étienne); Ali Baba et les quatre voleurs (Ali Baba) (Jacques Becker) (as Ali Baba); Le Printemps, l’automne et l’amour (Grangier) (as Noël Sarrazin)
1955 Don Camillo e l’onorevole Peppone (La Grande Bagarre de Don Camillo) (Gallone) (title role); Don Juan (Pantaloons) (Berry) (as Sagnarell)
1956 Le Couturier de ces dames (Fernandel the Dressmaker) (Boyer) (as Antonin); Sous le ciel de Provence (The Virtuous Bigamist) (Soldati) (as Paul Verdier); Le Telephone (Régamey—short); Honoré de Marseilles (Régamey) (as Honoré); L’Homme à l’impermeable (The Man in the Raincoat) (Duvivier) (as Albert Constantine); L’Art d’etre Papa (short—for TV); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Parisian coachman)
1957 Sénéchal le magnifique (Sénéchel the Magnificent) (Boyer) (as Sénéchal); Le Chômeur de Clochemerle (The Easiest Profession) (Boyer) (as Paul Verdier); A Paris tous les deux (Oswald); Le Roi, c’est la loi (The Law Is the Law) (Christian-Jaque)
1958 La Vie à deux (Duhour); Les Vignes du seigneur (Boyer) (as Henri); Le Grand Chef (The Big Chief) (Verneuil) (as Antoine)
1959 Le Confident de ces dames (Boyer); La Vache et le prisonnier (The Cow and I) (Verneuil) (as Charles Bailly)
1960 C Crusus (Giono) (as Jules); Le Caïd (Borderie); Cocagne (Cloche) (as Marc-Antoine); Dynamite Jack (Bastia)
1961 Don Camillo, monsignore . . . ma non troppo (Don Camillo Monseigneur) (Gallone) (as Don Camillo); L’Assassin est dans l’annuaire (Joannon); Il giudizio universale (De Sica)
1962 Le Diable et les dix commandements (The Devil and the Ten Commandments) (Duvivier) (as God); En avant la musique (Avanti la musica) (Bianchi); Le Voyage à Biarritz (Grangier) (as Guillaume Dodut)
1963 Blague dans le coin (Labro); Le Bon Roi Dagobert (Chevalier) (as Dagobert); La Cuisine au beurre (My Wife’s Husband) (Grangier)
1964 Relaxe-toi, cheri (Boyer); L’Age ingrat (Grangier) (+ co-pr)
1965 Il compagnio Don Camillo (Don Camillo en Russie; Don Camillo à Moscou) (Comencini) (title role); La Bourse et la vie (Mocky) (as Migue)
1966 Le Voyage du père (de la Patellière) (as Quantin)
1967 L’Homme à la Buick (Grangier) (as Monsieur Jo)
1968 Palmares des chansons (Pradines—for TV)
1969 Heureux qui comme Ulysse (Colpi) (as Antonin)

Films as Actor and Director:

1942 Simples (title role, co-d with Carlo Rim)
1943 Adrien (title role)
1951 Adhemar (Le Jouet de la fatalité) (title role)

Publications

By FERNANDEL: article—

On FERNANDEL: books—

On FERNANDEL: articles—

‘Fernandel,’” in Films and Filming (London), May 1955.

Ecran (Paris), February 1978.

* * *

Attending so-called art movie theaters during the late 1940s and early 1950s, American audiences discovered the comic genius of Fernandel in such films as The Well-Digger’s Daughter, The Little World of Don Camillo, and The Sheep Has Five Legs. His physical features were pure caricature, as if a cartoonist had designed him, with an unusually long, hang-dog face, big eyes and thick lips, and a broad, horse-toothed smile. His head was set on a thick, short frame with arms and legs that moved awkwardly, as if attached to a much taller man.

Despite this nearly grotesque figure he was one of the most captivating international comic personalities. Usually an innocent, a “fall guy” for those much wiser than he, Fernandel projected a childlike warmth and high spirits that would cause a beautiful, young country girl to want him for a husband. Playing a suitor who is easily manipulated by the father of a wronged girl in The Well-Digger’s Daughter, the comedian achieved critical and popular attention. As a guileless country lad Fernandel was marvelously suited to play opposite the more seasoned Raimu. Fernandel’s fame increased in the 1950s when he appeared in the title role of The Little World of Don Camillo and its four sequels. The squabbles of a communist mayor and a mild village priest provided a strong comic base for the film as Fernandel blended seriousness with comedy. The Sheep Has Five Legs illustrated the comedian’s deftness in handling multiple roles, a feat comparable to that of Alec Guinness in Kind Hearts and Coronets. The French comedian played six roles, a father and his five sons, providing a study in all the types of characters this talented actor portrayed throughout his long career.

—Donald McCaffrey

FERRER, José

Films as Actor:

1946 Bolivia (short) (as narrator)
1948 Joan of Arc (Fleming) (as Dauphin)
1949 The Sydenham Plan (short) (as narrator); Whirlpool (Preminger)
1950 Crisis (Brooks); Cyrano de Bergerac (Gordon) (title role)
1951 Anything Can Happen (Seaton)
1952 Moulin Rouge (Huston) (as Toulou-Lautrec); Article Fifty-Five (Seltzer—short) (as narrator)
1953 Miss Sadie Thompson (Bernhardt)
1954 The Caine Mutiny (Dmytryk) (as Barney Greenwald); Deep in My Heart (Donen) (as Sigmund Romberg)
1961 Forbidden Them Not (Kimble) (as narrator)
1962 Lawrence of Arabia (Lean); Nine Hours to Rama (Robson); Progress for Freedom (Seltzer—short) (as narrator)
1963 Verspätung in Marienborn (Stop Train 349) (Haedrich); Cyrano et d’Artagnan (Gance)
1965 The Greatest Story Ever Told (Stevens); Ship of Fools (Kramer)
1966 Enter Laughing (Reiner)
1968 Le Avventure e gli amori di Miguel Cervantes (The Young Rebel); Cervantes (Sherman)
1969 The Little Drummer Boy (short)
1970 The Aquarians (McDougal—for TV)
1971 Cross Current (The Cable Car Murders) (Thorpe—for TV); Banyon (Day—for TV)
1973 El clan de los inmorales (Order to Kill) (Maessa); The Marcus-Nelson Murders (Kojak and the Marcus-Nelson Murders) (Sargent—for TV)
1975 E’ Lollipop (Forever Young, Forever Free) (Lazarus); Paco (O’Neill); The Missing Are Deadly (McDougal—for TV); Medical Story (Nelson—for TV); The Art of Crime (Roman Grey) (Irving—for TV)
1976 The Sentinel (Winner); The Big Bus (Frawley); Voyage of the Damned (Rosenberg)
1977 Zoltan . . . Hound of Dracula (Dracula’s Dog) (Band); Who Has Seen the Wind? (King) (as Ben); Crash (Band—for TV); Eco-Man (Irving—for TV)
1978 The Swarm (Allen) (as Dr. Andrews); The Amazing Captain Nemo (March—for TV); Fedora (Wildcr) (as Dr. Vando); The Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover (Cohen) (as Lionel McCoy)
1979 The Fifth Musketeer (Behind the Iron Mask) (Annakin) (as Athos); Natural Enemies (Kanew)

412
José Ferrer (right) in Cyrano de Bergerac

1980  The Big Brawl (Clouse) (as Dominici);  Pleasure Palace (Grauman—for TV);  The Murder That Wouldn’t Die (Satloff—for TV)
1981  Evita Peron (Chomsky—for TV);  Berlin Tunnel Twenty-One (Michaels—for TV)
1982  A Midsummer Night’s Sex Comedy (Woody Allen) (as Leopold);  Blood Tide (Jeffries)
1983  The Being (Kong);  This Girl for Hire (Jameson—for TV);  To Be or Not to Be (Mel Brooks) (as Professor Siletski);  Blood Feud (Bad Blood) (Newell)
1984  The Evil That Men Do (Thompson);  Dune (Lynch);  George Washington (Kulik—for TV);  Samson and Delilah (Philips—for TV)
1985  Seduced (Freedman—for TV);  Jacques Cousteau—The First 75 Years (for TV) (as narrator);  Hitler’s SS: Portrait in Evil (for TV)
1986  Bloody Birthday (Hunt) (as Doctor);  The Violins Came with the Americans (Conway)
1988  Strange Interlude (Wise—for TV)
1989  Hired to Kill (Mastovakis)
1990  Old Explorers (Pohlad)

Film as Composer:

1953  The Beautiful Stranger (Twist of Fate) (Miller) (music for song “Love Is a Beautiful Stranger”)

Films as Director:

1955  The Shrike (+ ro);  Cockleshell Heroes (+ ro)
1956  The Great Man (+ co-sc, ro)
1957  I Accuse (+ ro as Dreyfus)
1958  The High Cost of Loving (+ ro)
1961  Return to Peyton Place
1962  State Fair

Publications

By FERRER: article—

On FERRER: articles—

Obituary, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 4 February 1992.

* * *

It may be said of José Ferrer’s career in films that his prestige outweighs his success. While considered a major actor, and associated with many important films, some of them innovative milestones, others “message” films, Ferrer never enjoyed a consistently satisfying or secure career.

Far from denying the decline in his film work since his heyday in the early 1950s, Ferrer later commented, “My entire film career has been dominated by Cyrano de Bergerac and Moulin Rouge. I have learned to live with the situation, but I regret the form my career has taken.” In both films the character actor portrayed sensitive souls who had physical deformities. Cyrano was a complex interpretation of a hapless, ugly, unrequited lover who was also a brave iconoclast and sensitive poet. As Toulouse Lautrec, the brilliant Parisian painter who was a dwarf, Ferrer literally went on his knees. Cyrano earned Ferrer an Academy Award, yet some years later he mused that the honor was no assurance of success. He stated bluntly in 1961, “For three years there has been no call for my services as a film actor.”

Ferrer always preferred to have a strong hand in any production with which he was involved, and naturally turned to directing. He cast himself as the lead in films which he also directed, such as I Accuse, in which he played the persecuted French Jewish Oriccer, Dreyfus, and The Shrike, starring as the victimized husband. He was always attracted to films with a social message, and objected to the soft-pedaling of the Jewish issue in The Caine Mutiny, in which he was cast as naval lawyer Barney Greenwald. In Ship of Fools he portrayed the Nazi antagonist.

Ferrer’s quality on film has been perceived as serious, even dour, and he was usually typecast as a “heavy.” In the 1970s and into the 1980s Ferrer made several TV films. What others might term supporting roles, or at least “cameos,” Ferrer sarcastically called “bit parts, to earn a fast buck . . . the roles where I play the villain or I go up in flames in the end.”

Ferrer remained active in the theater, acting on and off Broadway and on the road in a broad range of roles; he also did musicals. He directed in New York, in stock and regional theaters, and even returned to work in his native Puerto Rico. Yet, in a 1983 interview he complained that he was reduced to doing TV voice-overs. Ironically, Ferrer’s voice and diction were so distinctive and so well known as to render anonymity an impossibility.

—Constance Clark

FEUILLÈRE, Edwige

Films as Actress:

1931 La Fine combine (Chotin—short); Cordon-bleu (Anton)
1932 La Perle (Guissart); Monsieur Albert (Anton); Une Petite Femme dans le train (Anton); Maquillage (Anton)
1933 Topaze (Gasnier) (as Coco); Les Aventures du Roi Pausole (Granowsky); Toi que j’adore (von Bolvary and Valentín—French-language version of von Bolvary’s Ich kenn’ dich nicht und liebe dich); Matricule 33 (Anton); Ces messieurs de la santé (Colombier)
1934 Le Miroir aux alouettes (Steinhoff and Le Bon—French-language version of Steinhoff’s Lockvogel)
1935 Lucrèce Borgia (Gance) (title role); Golgotha (Duvivier) (as Claudia); Barcarolle (Lamprecht and Le Bon—French-language version of Lamprecht’s Barcarole); Stradivarius (von Bolvary and Valentín—French-language version of von Bolvary’s Stradivari); Amore (Braggaglia); La Route heureuse (Lacombe—French-language version of Amore)
1936 Mister Flow (Compliments of Mister Flow) (Siodmak) (as Lady Helena Scarlett)
1937 Marthe Richard au service de la France (Marthe Richard, l’espionne au service de la France) (Bernard); Feu! (de Baroncelli); La Dame de Malacca (Marc Allègre)
1938 J’étais une aventurière (Bernard)
1939 L’Émigrante (Joannon)
1940 Sans lendemain (Max Ophüls); De Mayerling à Sarajevo (Mayerling to Sarajevo) (Max Ophüls) (as Sophie Chotkova)
1941 Mam’zelle Bonaparte (Maurice Tourneur); L’Honorable Catherine (L’Herbier); La Duchesse de Langeais (de Baroncelli)
1943 Lucrèce (Joannon)
1945 La Part de l’ombre (Blind Desire) (Delannoy) (as Agnes Noblet); Tant que je vivrai (de Baroncelli)
1946 L’Idiot (Lampin) (as Nastasia Filipovna); Il suffit d’une fois (Feix)
1947 L’Aigle à deux têtes (The Eagle with Two Heads) (Cocteau) (as the Queen)
1948 Woman Hater (Terence Young) (as Colette Marly)
1949 Julie de Carneilhan (Manuel)
1950 ‘La Statuette’ ep. of Souvenirs perdu (Christian-Jaque); Olivia (Audry)
1951 Le Cap de l’Espérance (Bernard)
1952 Adorables Créatures (Adorable Creatures) (Christian-Jaque) (as Denise)
1953 Le Blé en herbe (The Game of Love) (Autant-Lara) (as Mme. Dalleray)
1954 Les Fruits de l’été (Bernard)
1957 Quand la femme s’en mêle (Send a Woman When the Devil Fails; When the Woman Gets Confused) (Yves Allégret); Le Septième Commandement (Bernard)
1958 En cas de malheur (Love Is My Profession; In Case of Adversity) (Autant-Lara) (as Viviane Gobillot); La Vie à deux (Life as a Couple) (Duhour)
1961 ‘Les Comédiennes’ ep. of Amours célèbres (Boisrond)
1964 Aimez-vous les femmes? (A Taste for Women) (Léon) (as Aunt Flo)
1967 La Route d’un homme (Hacquard—short) (as narrator)
1968 Scusi, facciamo l’amore (Et si on faisait l’amour?; Listen, Let’s Make Love) (Caprioli) (as Giuditta Passani)
1970 Le Clair de terre (Gilles)
1974 La Chair de l’orchidée (Flesh and the Orchid; Flesh of the Orchid) (Chéreau) (as Madame Bastier-Wagener)
1981 Chef de famille (Companeez)
1984 Dames de la côte (Companeez); La Tueur triste (Gessner—for TV)
1987 Un château au soleil
1988 Cinéma
1993 La Dame de Lieu-dit

Edwige Feuillère is more famous as a stage actress than as a screen actress, but her many film roles in the 1930s and 1940s almost made her the acknowledged leading lady of French cinema.

Her first film and her acceptance into the Comédie Française in the early 1930s brought her attention from film producers, and Louis Gasnier cast her in the first film version of Topaze, based on the play by Marcel Pagnol; her charm and elegance opposite Louis Jouvet were widely appreciated. The role of Lucrezia Borgia in Abel Gance’s 1935 version solidified her popularity. Over the next few years her roles as elegant and often heartless women were displayed in Marthe Richard au service de la France (as a charming spy opposite Erich von Stroheim), J’étais une aventurière, La Dame de Malacca, and De Mayerling à Sarajevo (as the young Sophia Chotkova). Her triumph as Nastasia Filipovna in L’Idiot notwithstanding, she tended to make fewer films after the war, though her stage performances made her even more appreciated in films when she made them. She played in both the stage and film versions of Lucrèce, and her successful stage role in The Eagle with Two Heads (written for her by Cocteau) was also translated to the screen. Her role as the older woman introducing an adolescent to love in The Game of Love, based on Colette’s novel, was a scandal, even though Feuillère was brilliant in the role and the writer kept out any suggestion of prurience. She appeared later in the 1950s with Jean Gabin and Brigitte Bardot in Love Is My Profession.

—Karel Tabery

Publications

By FEUILLÈRE: books—

By FEUILLÈRE: articles—

On FEUILLÈRE: books—

On FEUILLÈRE: articles—

Films and Filming (London), December 1960.

FIELD, Sally

Nationality: American. Born: Pasadena, California, 6 November 1946. Education: Attended Birmingham High School, California; Actors Studio, New York, 1968 and 1973–75; studied acting with David Craig. Family: Married 1) Steve Craig, 1968 (divorced 1973), sons: Peter and Elijah; 2) the producer Alan Greisman, 1984 (divorced 1995), son: Sam. Career: 1964—enrolled in Columbia Pictures Workshop, a branch of Columbia Studios; 1965–66—in title role of TV series Gidget and The Flying Nun, 1967–70; 1971–73—in role as Clementine Hale in TV series Alias Smith and Jones; 1973–74—in title role of TV series The Girl with Something Extra; mid-1970s—studied acting and appeared in summer stock; 1984—formed Fogwood Films Ltd. production company; starred in and co-produced executive produced TV mini-series A Woman of Independent Means. Awards: Emmy Award, for Sybil, 1976; Academy Award for Best Actress, Best Actress, Cannes Festival, and Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Norma Rae, 1979; Academy Award for Best Actress, for Places in Sally Field in Places in the Heart, 1984. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

- 1967 The Way West (McLaglen) (as Mercy McBee)
- 1970 Marriage: Year One (Graham—for TV); Maybe I’ll Come Home in the Spring (Deadly Desire) (Sargent—for TV) (as Denise)
- 1971 Hitched (Westward the Wagon) (Sagal—for TV); Mongo’s Back in Town (Chomsky—for TV) (as Vikki)
- 1972 Home for the Holidays (Moxey—for TV)
- 1976 Stay Hungry (Rafelson) (as Mary Tate Farnsworth); Bridger (Rich—for TV); Sybil (Petrie—for TV) (title role)
- 1977 Smokey and the Bandit (Needham) (as Carrie); Heroes (Kagan) (as Carol)
- 1978 Hooper (Needham) (as Gwen); The End (Burt Reynolds) (as Mary Ellen)
- 1979 Norma Rae (Ritt) (title role); Beyond the Poseidon Adventure (Irwin Allen) (as Celeste Whitman)
- 1980 Smokey and the Bandit II (Smokey and the Bandit Ride Again) (Needham) (as Carrie)
- 1981 Back Roads (Ritt) (as Amy Post); Absence of Malice (Pollack) (as Megan)
- 1982 Kiss Me Goodbye (Mulligan) (as Kay Villano)
- 1984 Places in the Heart (Benton) (as Edna Spalding)

Publications

By FIELD: articles—

Interview in Films Illustrated (London), August 1979.
‘‘Table Talk,’’ interview with Nancy Griffin, in Premiere (New York), Winter 1993.

On FIELD: books—

On FIELD: articles—

Fields, W. C.

Films as Actor:

1915 Pool Sharks (Middleton); His Lordship’s Dilemma (Haddon)—short
1924 Janice Meredith (The Beautiful Rebel) (E. Mason Hopper) (as British sergeant)
1925 Sally of the Sawdust (D. W. Griffith) (as Prof. Eustace McGargle); That Royle Girl (D. W. Griffith) (as father)
1926 It’s the Old Army Game (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Elmer Prettywillie); So’s Your Old Man (La Cava) (as Samuel Bisbee)
1927 The Potters (Newmeyer) (as Pa Potter); Running Wild (La Cava) (as Elmer Finch); Two Flaming Youths (The Side Show) (Waters) (as Gabby Gilfoil)
1928 Tillie’s Punctured Romance (Marie’s Millions) (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Ringmaster); Fools for Luck (Reisner) (as Richard Whitehead)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director(s)</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1930</td>
<td>The Golf Specialist</td>
<td>Brice (short)</td>
<td>(+ story, uncredited)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1931</td>
<td>Her Majesty Love</td>
<td>Dieterle</td>
<td>(as Lia’s father)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1932</td>
<td>Million Dollar Legs</td>
<td>Cline</td>
<td>(as the President of Klopstokia); If I Had a Million (Taurgo or Humberstone) (as Rollo); The Dentist (Pearce—short) (title role, + story, uncredited)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1933</td>
<td>The Fatal Glass of Beer</td>
<td>Bruckman (short)</td>
<td>(as Mr. Snably, + story, uncredited); The Pharmacist (Ripley—short) (+ story); International House (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Prof. Quail); The Barber Shop (Ripley—short) (+ story); Hip Action (Marshall—no. 3 of series How to Break Ninety); Tillie and Gus (Francis Martin) (as Augustus Q. Winterbottom); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod) (as Humpty Dumpty)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1934</td>
<td>Six of a Kind</td>
<td>McCarey</td>
<td>(as Sheriff “Honest John” Hoxley); You’re Telling Me! (Kenton) (as Sam Bisbee); The Old-Fashioned Way (Beaudine) (as the Great McGonigle, + story); Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (Taurgo) (as Mr. C. Ensworth Stubbins); It’s a Gift (McLeod) (as Harold Bissonette, + story as “Charles Bogle”)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>David Copperfield</td>
<td>Cukor</td>
<td>(as Mr. Micawber); Mississippi (A. Edward Sutherland) (as Commodore Jackson); Man on the Flying Trapeze (The Memory Expert) (Bruckman) (as Ambrose Wollinger, + co-story as “Charles Bogle”)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1936</td>
<td>Poppy</td>
<td>A. Edward Sutherland</td>
<td>(as Prof. Eastace Megargle)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td>The Big Broadcast of 1938</td>
<td>Leisen</td>
<td>(as T. Frothingill/S. B. Bellows)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1939</td>
<td>You Can’t Cheat an Honest Man</td>
<td>George Marshall</td>
<td>(Fields sequences directed by Cline, uncredited) (as Larson E. Whipsnade, + story as “Charles Bogle”)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>My Little Chickadee</td>
<td>Cline</td>
<td>(as Cuthbert I. Twillie, + co-story); The Bank Dick (The Bank Detective) (Cline) (as Egbert Souse, + story as “Mahatma Kane Jeeves”)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941</td>
<td>Never Give a Sucker an Even Break</td>
<td>Cline (What a Man)</td>
<td>(as the Great Man, + story as “Otis Criblecoblis”)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td>Show Business at War (March of Time series)</td>
<td>De Rochemont</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944</td>
<td>Follow the Boys</td>
<td>A. Edward Sutherland</td>
<td>(as guest); Song of the Open Road (Simon) (as himself); Sensations of 1945 (Sensations) (Andrew L. Stone) (as guest)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>“The Dentist” ep. of Down Memory Lane</td>
<td>Karlson—compilation</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

W. C. Fields with Mae West in My Little Chickadee
A successful vaudeville juggler, W. C. Fields underwent a slow metamorphosis to become one of the outstanding comedians of the sound film. He seems a reincarnation of an ancient comic type: there is something of the braggart soldier from Roman comedy, the strutting capitan of the commedia dell’arte, or Shakespeare’s Falstaff. He is also the bungling husband, harassed by his wife—a comic type common to the classical Greek stage, the medieval tale, Restoration and 18th-century comedy, and modern times.

Fields’s introduction to the sound film proved to be a humble one. He had had prominent roles in 11 mediocre silent screen comedies, and a 20-minute two-reeler made in 1930, The Golf Specialist, merely lifted material from one of his vaudeville routines, a sketch about giving golf lessons to a beautiful girl. The full potentiality of Fields’s talent was not realized until he made four shorts for Mack Sennett in 1932 and 1933. He scripted them himself, and at least one film, The Barber Shop, containing a field of Fieldsian humor, paved the way for better things.

Fields began to gain more control of his material in the mid-1930s with such works as The Old-Fashioned Way, It’s a Gift, and The Man on the Flying Trapeze. These last two works featured the comedian as a dominated husband struggling against great odds to achieve peace of mind and modest success in a humble business venture. The Old-Fashioned Way, on the other hand, was a portrait of the con man trying his best not to give the sucker an even break. The pompous charlatan who quickly retreated when exposed is sometimes considered to be the most amusing character the comedian created, and is subsequently seen in Poppy (a remake of his 1925 silent film, Sally of the Sawdust), You Can’t Cheat an Honest Man, and My Little Chickadee. The bungling, harassed husband would continue to appear in such films as The Bank Dick.

The genius of Fields lies in his ability to effectively combine verbal and visual traits in his comic character. His three masterpieces, It’s a Gift, The Bank Dick, and The Man on the Flying Trapeze display this fusion at its best. Along with this he evolved a fully developed comic portrait of a mature man, and this creation proved to be unique not only for the golden age of sound comedy in the 1930s, but also for the great preceding decade of silent comedy. Most prominent in both these periods was the young man with traits of dumbness and naivety. Fields was the only actor to create comic middle-aged characters of enduring greatness.

Critics have long considered Fields the comic king of the 1930s because of his uniqueness, innovation, and many-faceted character. At the core of his personality there is the warmth and charm of a Falstaff even though he snarls and mutters insults. Even in weak films the power of his acting comes through. As with Chaplin, we have begun to associate the man with the character, and when that happens, the artist’s work becomes a permanent creation.

—Donald McCaffrey

FIENNES, Joseph

Joseph Fiennes in Shakespeare in Love

Films as Actor:

1995 The Vacillations of Poppy Carew (Jones—for TV) (as Willy)
1996 Stealing Beauty (Beauté Voleé (France), Io ballo da sola (Italy)) (Bertolucci) (as Christopher Fox)
1998 Martha, Meet Frank, Daniel and Laurence (The Very Thought of You (USA)) (Hamm) (as Laurence); Elizabeth (Elizabeth: The Virgin Queen) (Kapur) (as Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester); Shakespeare in Love (Madden) (as William Shakespeare)
1999 Forever Mine (Schrader) (as Manuel Esquema/Alan Riply)
2000 Rancid Aluminium (Thomas) (as Sean Deeny); Enemy at the Gates (Annaud) (as Danilov)

Publications:

By FIENNES: articles—

Interview with Justine Elias in Interview Magazine (New York), February 1999.
Interview with Ian Freer in Empire (London), February 1999.

On FIENNES: articles—

*   *   *
Until he shot to fame in 1998 as the young Will Shakespeare in Shakespeare in Love, Joseph Fiennes was best known as the younger brother of Ralph, who made his impressive big-screen debut in 1993, in Spielberg’s Schindler’s List. Helped along by Tom Stoppard’s clever script, Joseph charmed audiences with his light-hearted and dynamic performance as the love-struck bard, winning nominations for awards from the British Academy of Film and Television Arts and the Screen Actors’ Guild.

Born in England, but brought up in West Cork, Ireland, Fiennes left school at sixteen and worked for a while as a graphic designer. It was only after a stint helping to restore a villa in Italy that he returned to London in 1988 to join the Young Vic Youth Theatre, and from there secured a place at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama. After graduation, success came quickly: he spent two years with the Royal Shakespeare Company, based in Stratford, England, and made his first TV appearance in The Vacillations of Poppy Carew in 1995. A supporting role in Bertolucci’s stylish Stealing Beauty brought Fiennes limited critical success, but in 1998 he struck gold, appearing in three films, two of which were the movie highlights of the year.

Elizabeth is a low-budget production filmed almost exclusively in Durham cathedral, England, a setting of vast open spaces and gloomy chambers. Telling the story of the accession of Elizabeth I to the English throne the film is a dark, moody piece of work, essentially a showcase for Blanchett’s intense portrayal of the melancholy but triumphant Queen Bess. Playing a supporting role as her banished lover, Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, Fiennes measures up well to Blanchett’s remarkable performance, which earned her an Oscar nomination.

If Elizabeth allowed Fiennes to show his serious side, Shakespeare in Love furnished him with a reputation as a lively comic actor and a teen heartthrob. A tongue-in-cheek reconstruction of the writing of Romeo and Juliet, Shakespeare in Love opens with Will Shakespeare paralysed by writer’s block, unable to come up with a title better than ‘Romeo and Ethel the Pirate’s Daughter.’ Fiennes plays Shakespeare as an earnest but foolish young man, borrowing ideas from other writers, and struggling to keep his creditors happy. It is an image of the playwright quite unlike the serious figure familiar from school and college English courses. The love story between Shakespeare and the aristocratic Viola, played by Oscar winner Gwyneth Paltrow, who must impersonate a male actor in order to be allowed on stage, parallels the story of the star-crossed lovers. She provides the inspiration he needs to finish his manuscript, but the unhappy outcome of their affair leads him to discard its happy ending and make the play a tragedy.

Although Fiennes has shown himself to be a versatile actor, Shakespeare in Love remains his most successful work to date, with neither the romantic thriller Forever Mine or Rancid Aluminium making the impact expected of them. Filming of Enemy at the Gates, the most expensive film ever made in Europe began in January 2000. The story of the portentous German attack on Stalingrad at the end of World War Two, the film’s makers hope it will be a monument to the dead of both sides. For Fiennes, the project is a long way from Elizabathan England, and a long way from the romantic comedy for which he is best known. It remains to be seen whether he will live up to the promise of Shakespeare in Love.

—Chris Routledge

---

Films as Actor:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>A Dangerous Man: Lawrence after Arabia</td>
<td>(Menaul—for TV) (as T. E. Lawrence)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Wuthering Heights</td>
<td>(Kosminsky—for TV) (as Heathcliff)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Schindler’s List</td>
<td>(Spielberg) (as Amon Goeth); The Baby of Macon (Greenaway) (as the Bishop’s son); The Cormorant (Markham—for TV) (as John Talbot)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Quiz Show</td>
<td>(Redford) (as Charles Van Doren)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1995</td>
<td>Strange Days</td>
<td>(Bigelow) (as Lenny Nero)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>The English Patient</td>
<td>(Minghella) (title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Oscar and Lucinda</td>
<td>(Armstrong) (as Oscar Hopkins)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>The Prince of Egypt</td>
<td>(Chapman, Hickner) (as Rameses); The Avengers (Chechik) (John Steed)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1999</td>
<td>Sunshine</td>
<td>(Szabol) (as Ignatz Sonnenschein/Sors, Adam Sors, Ivan Sors/Sonnenschein); Onegin (Martha Fiennes) (as Evgeny Onegin (+ exec pr); The Miracle Maker (Hayes, Sokolov—for TV) (as Jesus); The End of the Affair (Jordan) (as Maurice Bendrix)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By FIENNES: articles—

---

FIENNES, Ralph

Nationality: British. Born: Suffolk, 22 December 1962; brother of the director Martha Fiennes, the actor Joseph Fiennes, the musician Magnus Fiennes, and the producer Sophie Fiennes. Family: Married the actress Alex Kingston, 1993 (divorced 1997). Education: Attended Bishop Woodworth Boys’ School; Chelsea College of Art & Design; was graduated from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London. Career: Joined the National Theatre, London, 1987; joined the Royal Shakespeare Company, and became a leading actor there, 1989; appeared in the TV mini-series Prime Suspect, 1991; earned international acclaim for his role in Schindler’s List, 1993; made his American stage debut in Hamlet, 1995. Awards: Best Supporting Actor British Academy Award, National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actor, Chicago Film Critics Association Best Supporting Actor, London Critics Circle British Actor of the Year, Best Supporting Actor Golden Globe, for Schindler’s List, 1993; Best Actor Tony Award, for Hamlet, 1995; Best Actor European Film Awards, for Sunshine, 1999. Agent: Bryan Lourd, Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

On FIENNES: books—

On FIENNES: articles—

Lane, Anthony, “The Play’s the Thing,” in New Yorker, 17 April 1995.

* * *

In 1993, Ralph Fiennes burst upon the international film scene with his riveting—and almost picture-stealing—performance as SS Commandant Amon Goeth in Steven Spielberg’s Holocaust drama, Schindler’s List. Certainly, Goeth was not the first despicably evil Nazi ever depicted on screen—just as Schindler’s List was not the first Hollywood film to portray the heroic actions of individuals caught up in the Nazi scourge.

But Fiennes made Goeth far more than the stereotypical stock Nazi villain found in scores of World War II films. His Goeth is a fascinatingly complex personality, a man of subtle, intrinsic evil. At one point in the story, as he is being driven through the Krakow Jewish ghetto, Goeth complains that he is freezing. He has no comment on the humanity around him. It is as if the Jews are non-human beings, incapable of feeling hunger or pain (let alone of being inconvenienced by inclement weather). In his eyes, they already are a mass of cadavers. As the Variety critic so aptly observed, ‘‘The extraordinary Fiennes creates an indelible character in Goeth. With paunch hanging out and eyes filled with disgust both for his victims and himself, he’s like a minor-league Roman emperor gone sour with excess, a man in whom too much power and debauchery have crushed anything that might once have been good.’’

While unfamiliar to movie audiences at the release of Schindler’s List, Fiennes was a known quantity in the acting world. For several years, he had been impressing London audiences in a variety of roles at the National Theatre and with the Royal Shakespeare Company. His performance as T. E. Lawrence in the television movie A Dangerous Man: Lawrence after Arabia led to Spielberg’s casting him in Schindler’s List.

In order to display his versatility as an actor and avoid typecasting as clones of Goeth, Fiennes chose for his follow-up screen role an altogether different character. In Robert Redford’s Quiz Show, he is Charles Van Doren, clean-cut all-American prince and offspring of a wealthy, renowned intellectual family, who compromises his ideals by cheating when he appears on the television quiz show Twenty-One. If Schindler’s List was overly hyped as a Holocaust film, Quiz Show, too, was highly overrated. The film is, in essence, a far-too-obvious exercise in self-righteousness.

But Fiennes’s performance transcends the film’s faults. His Charles Van Doren is an entirely believable character, as contemplative and compromised as Amon Goeth is psychotic and compromised. If Goeth is the victimizer of others, Van Doren is victimized by his own ingenuousness.

For his next screen role, Fiennes selected a part completely different from Goeth and Van Doren. Kathryn Bigelow’s Strange Days is an in-your-face combination sci-fi fantasy/mystery/police drama, set in the final days of the year 1999. Fiennes plays Lenny Nero, ex-Los Angeles vice cop who is the dealer of a new and altogether different kind of illegal drug: high-tech, state-of-the-art ‘‘virtual reality’’ tapes, on which are recorded real-life events. Those who ‘‘wire-trip’’ get to re-experience those events. In essence, Lenny—who is described as ‘‘the Santa Claus of the subconscious’’—peddles pieces of other peoples’ lives, with his customers ‘‘using the wire’’ and ‘‘getting off on tape.’’

Lenny also is a schemer who in his own way is strung out, as he lives from one score to the next. The core of the story focuses on what happens when he comes into possession of tapes on which are recorded horrible events, including the rape and murder of a prostitute and the murder of a rap artist who is one of the most powerful and controversial black men in America. Fiennes’ performance as Lenny is every bit as impressive as his work in Schindler’s List and Quiz Show. It is appropriately edgy, with the actor vividly expressing his character’s pain, confusion, and yearning.

Despite his celluloid success, Fiennes remained as much a stage actor as a budding movie star. In 1995, he brought his Hamlet from London to Broadway, earning respectful (and in some cases, superlative) reviews. Wrote John Lahr, ‘‘Fiennes radiates an elegance of spirit that rivets the audience with its sense of unspoken mystery. His performance is a stylish event.’’ Added Vincent Canby, ‘‘Mr. Fiennes . . . is in command at the Belasco from beginning to end. He’s a charismatic stage actor. He has a fine strong voice (and complete control of it) that never becomes monotonously distinctive.’’ Among his other post-Hamlet stage roles have been the lead characters in Chekhov’s Ivanov and Shakespeare’s Richard II and Coriolanus, all performed in England. Three of Fiennes’s subsequent screen roles have been variations of the same character: the genteel malcontent who becomes mired in a complex, unsatisfying romantic relationship.

In the highly acclaimed The English Patient, based on Michael Ondaatje’s novel, he is a Hungarian-born count who works as a linguist/explorer/map maker; in Onegin, an adaptation of Pushkin’s Eugene Onegin, he plays a St. Petersburg nobleman; in Graham Greene’s The End of the Affair, he is a British novelist. The English Patient has Fiennes offering a subtle performance as a character who hides as much as he is able to from those around him. However, in Onegin and The End of the Affair, his performances teeter on listlessness. In The Avengers, the ill-advised update of the fabled 1960s British TV series, he is sorely miscast as suave secret agent John Steed. And in Istvan Szabo’s Sunshine, an ambitious but overlong and overwrought multi-generational soap opera, Fiennes takes on three characterizations, all members of a Hungarian-Jewish family. Unfortunately, this tale of love, war, interpersonal relationships, and Jewish identity and self-loathing plays like an inferior cut-down of a TV mini-series. Fiennes and his fellow actors often look foolish as their characters lack shading, and spout slogans rather than speak dialogue.

At one point in Sunshine, one of Fiennes’s characters is incarcerated in a concentration camp, where he is humiliated and tortured. His nemesis in this sequence might well be Amon Goeth—and this irony serves to mirror the difference between a carefully conceived character in a lauded motion picture, who comes alive partly through the complexity of the writing, and a mere presence in a lesser-quality film.

Indeed, as the 1990s came to a close, the Fiennes who was winning the very best screen roles was kid brother Joseph, who earned stardom in Elizabeth and Shakespeare in Love.

—Rob Edelman

FINCH, Peter

Peter Finch in Network

Awards: Best British Actor, British Academy, for A Town Like Alice, 1956; Best British Actor, British Academy, for The Trials of Oscar Wilde, 1960; Best Actor, Berlin Festival, and Best Actor, British Academy, for No Love for Johnnie, 1961; Best Actor, British Academy, for Sunday, Blood Sunday, 1971; Best Actor Academy Award, and Best Actor, British Academy, for Network, 1976. Died: Of heart attack, in Beverly Hills, California, 14 January 1977.

Films as Actor:

1935  Magic Shoes (Fleming—unreleased)
1938  Dad and Dave Come to Town (The Rudd Family Goes to Town) (Hall) (as Bill Ryan)
1939  Mr. Chedworth Steps Out (Hall); Ants in His Pants (Freshman)
1941  The Power and the Glory (Monkman)
1944  The Rats of Tobruk (The Fighting Rats of Tobruk) (Chauvel) (as Peter Linton);  South West Pacific (Hall—Finch may appear only in footage taken from The Rats of Tobruk);  Jungle Patrol (Gurr—short) (as narrator)
1945  Red Sky at Morning (Escape at Dawn) (Arthur) (as Michael)
1946  A Son Is Born (Porter) (as Paul Graham); Indonesia Calling (Ivens—short) (as narrator); Native Earth (Heyer—short) (as narrator)
1949  Eureka Stockade (Massacre Hill) (Watt) (as John Humffray); ‘The Actor’ ep. of Train of Events (Dearden) (as Philip Mason); Primitive Peoples: Australian Aborigines (Heath—in three parts) (as narrator, + asst d)
1950  The Wooden Horse (Jack Lee) (as the Australian); The Miniver Story (Potter) (as Polish officer)
1952  The Story of Robin Hood and His Merrie Men (Annakin) (as Sheriff of Nottingham)
1953  The Story of Gilbert and Sullivan (Gilbert and Sullivan; The Great Gilbert and Sullivan) (Gilliat) (as Rupert D’Oyly Carte); The Heart of the Matter (O’Ferrall) (as Father Rank)
1954  Elephant Walk (Dieterle) (as John Wiley); Father Brown (The Detective) (Hamer) (as Flambeau); Make Me an Offer! (Frankel) (as Charlie)
1955  The Dark Avenger (The Warriors) (Levin) (as Count De Ville); Passage Home (Baker) (as Captain “Lucky” Ryland); Josephine and Men (Boulting, Harvey, and Balchin) (as David Hewer); Simon and Laura (Box) (as Simon Foster);
The Queen in Australia (Hawes—short) (as narrator);
Melbourne—Olympic City (pr: Hawes) (as narrator)
1956 A Town Like Alice (Rape of Malayia) (Jack Lee) (as Joe Harman); The Battle of the River Plate (Pursuit of the Graf Spee) (Powell and Pressburger) (as Captain Langsdorff); The Royal Tour of New South Wales (short) (as narrator)
1957 The Shiralee (Norman) (as Jim Macauley); Robbery under Arms (Jack Lee) (as Captain Starlight); Windom's Way (Neame) (as Alec Windom)
1959 The Nun's Story (Zimmann) (as Dr. Fortunati); Operation Amsterdam (McCarthy) (as Jan Smit); A Far Cry (Peet) (as narrator)
1960 Kidnapped (Stevenson) (as Alan Breck Stewart); The Sins of Rachel Cade (Rachel Cade) (Gordon Douglas) (as Colonel Henri Derode); The Trials of Oscar Wilde (The Man with the Green Carnation; The Green Carnation) (Hughes) (title role)
1961 No Love for Johnnie (Thomas) (as Johnnie Byrne)
1962 I Thank a Fool (Robert Stevens) (as Stephen Dane)
1963 Girl with Green Eyes (Desmond Davis) (as Eugene Gaillard); In the Cool of the Day (Robert Stevens) (as Murray Logan)
1964 First Men in the Moon (Juran) (as guest); The Pumpkin Eater (Clayton) (as Jake Armitage)
1965 Judith (Daniel Mann) (as Aaron Stein); The Flight of the Phoenix (Aldrich) (as Captain Harris)
1966 10:30 P.M. Summer (Dassin) (as Paul)
1967 Far from the Madding Crowd (Schlesinger) (as William Boldwood)
1968 The Legend of Lylah Clare (Aldrich) (as Lewis Zarkan)
1969 La tenda rossa (Krasnaya palata; The Red Tent) (Kalatozov) (as General Umberto Nobile)
1971 Sunday, Bloody Sunday (Schlesinger) (as Dr. Daniel Hirsch)
1972 Something to Hide (Shattered) (Reid) (as Harry Field)
1973 Lost Horizon (Jarrott) (as Richard Conway); A Bequest to the Nation (The Nelson Affair) (James Cellan Jones) (as Lord Horatio Nelson); England Made Me (Duffell) (as Erich Krogh)
1974 The Abdication (Harvey) (as Cardinal Azzolino)
1976 Network (Lumet) (as Howard Beale)
1977 Raid on Entebbe (Kirshner—for TV) (as Yitzhak Rabin)
1979 A Look at Liv (Kaplan—doc) (as himself)

Film as Director:
1961 Antonito (The Day) (short) (+ pr, sc)

Publications

By FINCH: articles—

“Peter, Peter, Pumpkin Eater,” in Films and Filming (London), June 1964.

On FINCH: books—

Finch, Yolanda, Finchy, New York, 1981.

On FINCH: articles—

‘Peter Finch,’” in Cinéma (Paris), March 1977.

Ecran (Paris), April 1978.

***

Dead at 61 of a heart attack induced by a life of drink, sex, and hard living, Peter Finch belongs on the roster of stars who were expert at projecting insecurity on screen. A confident Finch is indeed a contradiction: indecision, sexual confusion, the drag of ambition or the demands of good manners undermined his most memorable screen characters. The high, sloping brow would wrinkle and the sensitive eyes would narrow as he contemplated yet another painful choice in which no one would suffer more than himself.

The product of a broken Australian/English marriage, Finch initially was thrown into the desert of the prewar Australian film industry. He alternated featured film roles for Cinesound as scapegrace sons with stage work and radio acting that exploited his itinerant on the Australian roads forced to take along his young daughter like a “shiralee,” or blanket roll, helped Finch to define his role like a “shiralee,” or blanket roll, helped Finch to define his screen persona.

It was Finch’s stage work that attracted the attention of Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh during their 1948 Australian tour, and Olivier subsequently put him under personal contract. This was the beginning, Olivier was to claim, of the end of his marriage to Leigh, with whom Finch had one of his many calamitous affairs, culminating in her nervous breakdown while on Sri Lankan location with Finch for Elephant Walk. The film, however, earned Finch star status. He was an effective aristocratic thief pursued by Alec Guinness’s Father Brown, a peripatetic antique dealer in Make Me an Offer!, and the captain of the German battleship Graf Spee who exploits to scuttle the boat in Michael Powell’s The Battle of the River Plate. British companies’ increased use of Australia as an exotic location drew Finch back for Robbery under Arms, A Town Like Alice, and The Shiralee. His respective roles as a period bandit, an Australian soldier tortured by the Japanese for helping refugee Englishwomen, and an itinerant on the Australian roads forced to take along his young daughter like a “shiralee,” or blanket roll, helped Finch to define his screen persona.

It was evident his future lay with the international roles such as that in the Powell film rather than with the then-limping Australian industry. The Trials of Oscar Wilde is emblematic of this new stage of his career, with Finch building a vivid portrait of the homosexual playwright destroyed by hubris. His portrayal of a politician in No Love for Johnnie, choosing ambition over love, and films such as The Pumpkin Eater and Girl with Green Eyes, further established him with American studios as a compelling leading man. During this period, he was dividing his time between Europe and the United States, appearing opposite Audrey Hepburn in The Nun’s Story as an idealistic doctor, with Sophia Loren in the Israeli drama Judith, and for Robert Aldrich in the embarrassing flop The Legend of Lylah Clare as a film director reminiscent of Josef von Sternberg. Finch also tackled period dramas, with varying success. As the cuckolded farmer in Thomas Hardy’s Far from the Madding Crowd, he was superbly distraught, the model of wounded British rectitude. He played opposite Liv Ullmann in The Abdication, a gloomy account of the Queen Christina story, and was Nelson to Glenda Jackson’s Emma Hamilton in A Bequest to the Nation.

Sunday, Bloody Sunday and especially Network are the two films for which Finch is best-remembered. In the first, he is the model of world-weariness, with his Jewish homosexual doctor in love with a feckless bisexual boy a brilliantly credible portrait of well-man-nered urban desperation. In the second, he is the model of outrageous anger. In Network, Paddy Chayefsky’s caustic satire of television, Finch deservedly won a posthumous Best Actor Oscar for his performance as Howard Beale, the frenzied television anchorman turned “mad prophet of the airwaves.” His classic pronunciation—“I’m mad as hell, and I’m not going to take it anymore”—has become a symbolic rallying cry of those exasperated by the inanity of television programming (which serves to mirror the superficiality of contemporary materialist society).

—John Baxter, updated by Rob Edelman

FINNEY, Albert

Films as Actor:

1960 The Entertainer (Richardson) (as Mick Rice); Saturday Night and Sunday Morning (Reisz) (as Arthur Seaton)

1963 Tom Jones (Richardson) (title role); The Victors (Foreman) (as Russian soldier)

1964 Night Must Fall (Reisz) (as Danny, + co-pr)

1966 Two for the Road (Donen) (as Mark Wallace)

1970 The Picasso Summer (Dallin)—unreleased; Scrooge (Neame) (title role)

1971 Gumshoe (Fears) (as Eddie Ginley)

1972 Alpha Beta (Page)—for TV

1974 Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Hercule Poirot)

1975 The Adventure of Sherlock Holmes’ Smarter Brother (Gene Wilder) (as guest)

1977 The Duellists (Ridley Scott) (as Fouche)

1980 Loophole (Quested) (as Mike Daniels)

1981 Wolfen (Wadleigh) (as N. York); Looker (Crichton) (as Dr. Larry Rogers)

1982 Shoot the Moon (Parker) (as George); Annie (Huston) (as Daddy Warbucks)

1983 The Dresser (Yates) (as Sir)

1984 Under the Volcano (Huston) (as Geoffrey Firmin); Pope John Paul II (Wise—for TV) (title role)

1986 Looker (Crichton) (Dr. Larry Roberts)

1987 Orphans (Pakula) (as Harold)

1989 The Endless Game (Forbes—for TV) (as Alec Hillsden)

1990 Miller’s Crossing (Coen) (as Leo); The Image (Werner—for TV) (as Jason Cromwell)

1991 The Green Man (Moshinsky—for TV) (as Maurice Allington)

1992 The Playboys (MacKinnon) (as Constable Hegarty)

1993 Rich in Love (Beresford) (as Warren Odom)

1994 The Browning Version (Figgis) (as Andrew Crocker-Harris); A Man of No Importance (Krishnamma) (as Alfie Byrne)

1995 The Run of the Country (Yates) (as Father)

1996 Nostromo (Reid—for TV) (as Doctor Monygham); Karaoke (Rye—for TV) (as Daniel Feeld); Cold Lazarus (Rye—for TV) (as Daniel)

1997 Washington Square (Holland) (as Dr. Austin Sloper)

1998 A Rather English Marriage (Seed—for TV) (as Reggie Cun-ningham-Jarvis)

1999 Simpatico (Warchus) (as Simms); Breakfast of Champions (Rudolph) (as Kilgore Trout)

2000 Erin Brockovich (Soderbergh) (as Ed Masry); Delivering Milo (Castle)

Films as Director:

1996 Charlie Bubbles (+ title role)

1998 The Biko Inquest (co-d with Graham Evans—for TV, + ro as Kentridge)

Publications

By FINNEY: articles—

On FINNEY: book—

On FINNEY: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1995.

* * *

In the late 1950s and early 1960s Britain’s angry young men began appearing with increasing frequency on stage and screen, and Albert Finney was the perfect actor to embody the soulful working-class loner. He himself was the son of a bookie, and his combination of charm, energy, and roguish good looks enabled him to personify the angry young man and become one of Britain’s rising young talents. His first angry young man characterization came on stage in Billy Liar. But it was his casting in Karel Reisz’s Saturday Night and Sunday Morning which earned him his first attention among moviegoers. Finney’s Arthur Seaton is an alienated Nottingham factory worker who strikes out against his dreary working-class plight. He may defiantly declare, ‘‘Don’t let the bastards grind you down,’’ but he is destined to make no holes in the invisible wall separating the classes in England. The actor’s gritty performance remains as vital and touching today as in 1960.
Finney next peppered the rebellion of the angry young man with a delightful bawdiness in Tony Richardson’s Tom Jones, based on the Henry Fielding novel about a young man’s randy adventures in eighteenth-century England. Released in 1963, the film is more than just an entertaining, Oscar-winning. It is a landmark as a forerunner of the sexual revolution of the late 1960s. Finney’s performance is crammed with moxie, and is a major star turn. If Saturday Night and Sunday Morning had made him a name among more discerning filmgoers, Tom Jones secured his reputation as a popular movie star.

But Finney is a serious actor, and he chose not to exploit this fame. For the most part, he has carefully selected his screen projects. More often than not, he has given his most interesting performances as unhappy (if not deeply troubled) men whose lives are in a state of crisis. They may have attained a certain degree of material success, but their marriages have failed and their lives are characterized by boredom and indifference. He directed as well as starred in Charlie Bubbles, playing a fabulously successful but otherwise dead-to-the-world writer. In Shoot the Moon, he again is a famous writer whose marriage breaks up. In Two for the Road, he is one-half of a troubled couple who look back on their 12 years of marriage. In Under the Volcano, based on Malcolm Lowry’s autobiographical novel, he is especially fine in the complex and demanding role of a self-destructive former British consul, guilt-ridden over his life, who has been abandoned by his wife and is slowly drinking himself into oblivion. Finney also has played character parts: Ebenezer Scrooge in Scrooge, Hercule Poirot in Murder on the Orient Express, and Daddy Warbucks in Annie. Other important roles came in Gunsho, in which he gave a cleverly funny performance as a Liverpool bingo caller who finds himself playing detective in a murder case, and Miller’s Crossing, cast as a mobster and political boss.

In the latter stages of his career, Finney’s most poignant performances have come as deluded older men whose inner repressions have not allowed them to fully develop their potential as human beings. He is the entire show in The Browning Version, a middling updating of the Terence Rattigan play, which previously had been filmed in 1951 with Michael Redgrave. Finney offers an emotionally rich performance as Andrew Crocker-Harris, professor of languages at a staid British boys school. After almost two decades on the job, he is resigning because of ill health. It quickly becomes apparent, however, that he has been forced out of his job. He is held in disdain by his wife, resigning because of ill health. It quickly becomes apparent, however, that he has been forced out of his job. He is held in disdain by his wife, and is slowly drinking himself into oblivion.

Films as Actor:

(as Laurence Fishburne III)

1975 Cornbread, Earl and Me (Manduke) (as Wilford Robinson)
1979 Fast Break (Smight) (as street kid)

(as Larry Fishburne)

1979 Apocalypse Now (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Clean)
1980 A Rumor of War (Heffron—for TV) (as Lightbulb); Willie and Phil (Mazursky) (as Wilson)
1982 Death Wish II (Winner) (as Cutter)
1983 I Take These Men (Peerce—for TV) (as Hank Johnson); Rumble Fish (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Midget); For Us, the Living (Schultz—for TV)
1984 The Cotton Club (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Bumpy Rhodes)
1985 The Color Purple (Spielberg) (as Swain)
1986 Quicksilver (Donnelly) (as Voodoo); Band of the Hand (Glaser) (as Cream)
1987 A Nightmare on Elm Street 3: Dream Warriors (Chuck Russell) (as Max); Gardens of Stone (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Cpl. Flanagan)

Nationality: American. Born: Laurence Fishburne III in Augusta, Georgia, 30 July 1961. Family: Married Hajna Moss, 1985 (divorced); children: Langston Issa, Montana Isis. Career: Acted on the daytime soap opera One Life to Live while not yet in his teens, early 1970s; made screen debut in Cornbread, Earl and Me, 1975; lied about his age in order to be cast in Apocalypse Now, 1976; played the role of Cowboy Curtis on the TV show Pee-Wee’s Playhouse, and made guest appearances on the TV series M*A*S*H, Trapper John, M.D., and others, 1980s; altered his billing from Larry to Laurence, and appeared in the TV mini-series The Wild West, 1993. Awards: Tony Award for Two Trains Running, 1992; Outstanding Guest Actor in a Drama Series Emmy Award, for Tribece, 1993; Outstanding Supporting Actor in a Motion Picture Image Award, for Higher Learning, 1995; Outstanding Made for Television Movie Emmy Award (earned as co-executive producer), Outstanding Lead Actor in a Television Movie, Mini-Series or Drama Special Image Award, for Miss Evers’ Boys, 1997. Agent: Paradigm Talent Agency, 10100 Santa Monica Boulevard, 25th Floor, Los Angeles, CA 90067, U.S.A.

FISHBURNE, Laurence (Larry)
Laurence Fishburne (left) and Andy Garcia in Hoodlums

1988  School Daze (Spike Lee) (as Vaughn “Dap” Dunlap); Red Heat (Walter Hill) (as Lt. Stobbs); Cherry 2000 (De Jarrett) (as Glu Glu Lawyer)
1989  Cadence (Stockade) (Sheen) (as Stokes)
1990  King of New York (Ferrara) (as Jimmy Jump); Decoration Day (Markowitz—for TV) (as Michael Waring)
1991  Class Action (Apted) (as Nick Holbrook); Boyz N the Hood (Singleton) (as Furious Styles); Hearts of Darkness: A Filmmaker’s Apocalypse (Bahr and Hickenlooper—doc) (appearance)
1992  Deep Cover (Duke) (as Russell Stevens Jr./John Q. Hull)

(as Laurence Fishburne)

1993  What’s Love Got to Do with It? (Gibson) (as Ike Turner); Searching for Bobby Fischer (Innocent Moves) (Zaillian) (as Vinnie)
1995  Higher Learning (Singleton) (as Professor Maurice Phipps); Bad Company (Harris) (as Nelson Crowe); Just Cause (Glimcher) (as Tanny Brown); The Tuskegee Airmen (Markowitz—for TV) (as Hannibal Lee)
1996  Othello (Alan Parker) (title role); Fled (Kevin Hooks) (as Piper)
1997  Miss Evers’ Boys (Sargent—for TV) (as Caleb Humphries) (+ co-exec pr); Event Horizon (Anderson III) (as Captain Miller); Hoodlum (Duke) (as Ellsworth “Bumpy” Johnson) (+ co-exec pr)
1998  Welcome to Hollywood (Rifkin) (as Himself); Always Outnumbered (Apted—for TV) (as Socrates Fortlow) (+ co-exec pr)
1999  The Matrix (Andy Wachowski, Larry Wachowski) (as Morpheus)
2000  Michael Jordan to the Max (Kempf and Stern—doc) (as Narrator)

Films as Director:

1999  Once in the Life (+ sc, pr, ro as Riff Raff)

Publications

By FISHBURNE: articles—

Interview in Playboy (Chicago), April 1994.
Laurence Fishburne is a quietly powerful actor with a commanding screen presence who brings an earnestness and deep intensity to his roles. Essentially, he has played two character-types on screen. The first is analogous to a brutally psychotic time bomb ticking down and waiting to explode. Fishburne is an expert in such parts: witness his Oscar-nominated role as the physically and psychologically abusive Ike Turner opposite Angela Bassett’s Tina in What’s Love Got to Do with It? Fishburne’s scenes with Bassett are nothing short of electrifying as he controls her like a puppeteer manipulating a puppet, shrewdly exploiting her personality flaws while transforming her into his virtual prisoner.

One example of a variation on this character is in Just Cause, in which Fishburne is cast as Tanny Brown, a character who first comes off as a black redneck: a cocksure, chillingly ruthless small-town cop in the New South, where blacks in power can be as corrupt as whites. Brown has brutalized a young black man, accused of raping and murdering a child, into confessing to the crime. As the scenario unfolds, Brown is softened somewhat as he is proven to have been incorrect in his instincts. Still, this cop’s methods can in no way be justified, and getting them to think for themselves. He plays a variation of this character in an altogether different kind of film: The Matrix, a science fiction epic in which he is cast as the philosophical leader of a band of cyber-rebels. Fishburne manages to registers strongly amid all the eye-popping, state-of-the-art special effects.

In Deep Cover, Fishburne plays variations on both “good” and “bad” characters. He starts out the contemplative good guy: Russell Stevens, Jr., a cop who agrees to go undercover to ferret out some major-league drug dealers. Stevens, who as a child had seen his father shot to death while committing a robbery, has become a cop because of his desire to “make a difference.” Here, too, he plays role model to a boy, a next-door-neighbor whose mother is an irresponsible parent. But as the story develops and Stevens sees he is being lied to by his superiors, he goes over the edge, becoming a renegade—and in essence, becoming the other Fishburne character.

One of Fishburne’s first roles was in Francis Coppola’s Apocalypse Now, in which he was cast as Clean, a young GI serving in Vietnam. The actor was not of legal age when hired for the film; reportedly, he lied about his age so that he could win the role and go on location in the Philippines. Additionally, he has won parts that, scant years earlier, a black actor never could have played in Hollywood movies: the lover of a white woman (Ellen Barkin) in Just Cause, for example, and the Southern sheriff in Just Cause. Also in this category is Othello, with Fishburne in the title role opposite a white Desdemona (Irene Jacob). Old Shakespearean hand Kenneth Branagh co-stars as Iago, and he and Fishburne match each other scene-by-scene. The latter’s performance is at once tender and smoldering, and appropriately intense during his character’s more tormented moments.

At the same time, some of Fishburne’s more personal projects spotlight African-American history; they are fact-based stories featuring black characters as victims and heroes. These include the high-prestige made-for-TV movies Miss Evers’ Boys, detailing a U.S. government medical experiment that resulted in the withholding of medicine to black men afflicted with syphilis; and The Tuskegee Airman, an ode to the “Fighting 99th,” the initial squadron of black fighter pilots in World War II.

—Rob Edelman

FITZGERALD, Barry

Films as Actor:

1929 Juno and the Paycock (Hitchcock) (as Orator)
1936 When Knights Were Bold (Raymond) (as Barker)
1937 The Plough and the Stars (Ford); Ebb Tide (Rossen)
1938 Bringing Up Baby (Hawks); Marie Antoinette (Van Dyke); Four Men and a Woman (Ford); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding)
1939 The Saint Strikes Back (Farrow); Pacific Liner (Landers); Full Confection (Farrow)
1940 The Long Voyage Home (Ford)
1941 San Francisco Docks (Lubin); The Sea Wolf (Curtiz); How Green Was My Valley (Ford); Tarzan’s Secret Treasure (Thorpe)
1943 The Amazing Mrs. Holliday (Manning); Two Tickets to London (Marin); Corvette K-225 (Rossen)
1944 Going My Way (McCary); I Love a Soldier (Sandrich); None but the Lovely Heart (Odets)
1945 Incendiary Blonde (Marshall); Duffy’s Tavern (Walker); And Then There Were None (Clair); The Stork Club (Walker)
1946 Two Years before the Mast (Farrow)
1947 California (Farrow); Easy Come, Easy Go (Farrow); Welcome Stranger (Nugent); Variety Girl (Marshall)
1948 The Naked City (Dassin) (as lt. Muldoon); The Sainted Sisters (Russell); Miss Tatlock’s Millions (Hayden)
1949 Top o’ the Morning (Miller); The Story of Seabiscuit (Butler)

1950 Union Square (Maté)
1951 Silver City (Haskin)
1952 The Quiet Man (Ford); Il filo d’erba (A da veni . . . Don Calogero) (Vassarotti)
1954 Happy Ever After (Tonight’s the Night) (Zampi) (as Thady O’Heggarty)
1956 The Catered Affair (Brooks)
1958 Rooney (Pollock) (as Grandfather O’Flynn)
1959 Broth of a Boy (Pollock) (as Patrick Farrell); Cradle of Genius (Roetha—doc)

Publications

On FITZGERALD: articles—

Picturegoer (London), 3 February 1945.

* * *

If Sara Allgood was the stereotypical Irish stage mother then Barry Fitzgerald was the stereotypical Irishman, a whimsical character with a thick Irish brogue and a succession of quaint expressions that were closer to Hollywood in origin than to Dublin. Fitzgerald was the quintessential Irish character actor whose mere presence was guaranteed to steal any scene from a film’s star; indeed this subtle self-promotion from supporting player to star is best exemplified by Fitzgerald’s being nominated for Oscars for both Best Actor and Best Supporting Actor for his work in Going My Way.

When John Ford first brought Barry Fitzgerald over from Dublin’s Abbey Theatre to recreate the role of Fluther Good in Ford’s screen version of O’Casey’s The Plough and the Stars, Fitzgerald was still more an actor than a personality. He was quite a good actor, and as late as 1940 and 1941 Fitzgerald gave fine performances, under John Ford’s direction, as the nasty steward in The Long Voyage Home and even as a Welshman in How Green Was My Valley.

The Irish blarney took over with Going My Way, and Fitzgerald was permanently typecast. As he once remarked, “I have always said that no matter what nationality of character I am given to play, he turns out to be an Irishman.” However, Fitzgerald was not always cast as a lovable character; as he had demonstrated in The Long Voyage Home there could be a decidedly unpleasant side to his screen personality, a side on display in And Then There Were None and The Naked City among other films.

—Anthony Slide
FLYNN, Errol

1933 In the Wake of the Bounty (Chauvel) (as Fletcher Christian)
1935 Murder at Monte Carlo (Ince) (as Dyter, newspaper reporter); The Case of the Curious Bride (Curtiz) (as Moxley); Don’t Bet on Blondes (Florey) (as David Van Dusen); Captain Blood (Curtiz) (as Peter Blood)
1936 The Charge of the Light Brigade (Curtiz) (as Maj. Geoffrey Vickers); Pirate Party on Catalina Island (short)
1937 The Green Light (Borzage) (as Dr. Newell Paige); The Prince and the Pauper (Keighley) (as Miles Hendon); Another Dawn (Dieterle) (as Capt. Denny Roark); The Perfect Specimen (Curtiz) (as Gerald Beresford Wicks)
1938 The Adventures of Robin Hood (Curtiz and Keighley) (title role); Four’s a Crowd (Curtiz); The Sisters (Litvak) (as Frank Medlin); The Dawn Patrol (Goulding) (as Courtney)
1939 Dodge City (Curtiz) (as Wade Hatton); The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex (Curtiz) (as Robert Devereaux, Earl of Essex)
1940 Virginia City (Curtiz) (as Kerry Bradford); The Sea Hawk (Curtiz) (as Capt. Geoffrey Thorpe); Santa Fe Trail (Curtiz) (as Jeb Stuart)
1941  Footsteps in the Dark (Lloyd Bacon) (as Francis Warren);
   Dive Bomber (Curtiz) (as Lt. Doug Lee);
   They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh) (as Gen. George Armstrong Custer)

1942  Desperate Journey (Walsh) (as Flight Lt. Terrence Forbes);
   Gentleman Jim (Walsh) (as James J. Corbett)

1943  Edge of Darkness (Milestone) (as Gunnar Brogge);
   Thank Your Lucky Stars (David Butler);
   Northern Pursuit (Walsh) (as Steve Wagner)

1944  Uncertain Glory (Walsh) (as Jean Picard)

1945  Objective, Burma! (Walsh) (as Maj. Nelson);
   San Antonio (David Butler) (as Clay Hardin);
   Peeks at Hollywood (Applebaum—short) (appearance)

1946  Never Say Goodbye (Kern) (as Phil Gayley)

1947  Cry Wolf (Godfrey) (as Mark Caldwell);
   Escape Me Never (Godfrey) (as Sebastian Dubrok);
   Always Together (de Cordova) (as guest)

1948  Silver River (Walsh) (as Capt. Mike McCombs)

1949  The Adventures of Don Juan (Sherman) (title role);
   That Forsyte Woman (The Forsyte Saga) (Bennett) (as Soames Forsyte);
   It’s a Great Feeling (David Butler) (as Jerry Bushfinkle)

1950  Montana (Enright) (as Morgan Lane);
   Rocky Mountain (Keighley) (as Lafe Barstow);
   Kim (Saville) (as Mahub Ali)

1951  The Adventures of Captain Fabian (William Marshall) (title role)

1952  Mara Maru (Gordon Douglas) (as Gregory Mason);
   Against All Flags (Sherman) (as Brian Hawke)

1953  The Master of Ballantrae (Keighley) (as James Durrisdeer);
   Il maestro di Don Giovanni (Crossed Swords) (Krims) (as Renzo)

1955  Lilacs in the Spring (Let’s Make Up) (Wilcox) (as John Beaumont);
   The Dark Avenger (The Warriors) (Levin) (as Prince Edward);
   King’s Rhapsody (Wilcox) (as King Richard of Laurentic)

1957  The Big Boodle (Night in Havana) (Wilson) (as Ned Sherwood);
   Istanbul (Pevney) (as Jim Brennan);
   The Sun Also Rises (Henry King) (as Mike Campbell)

1958  Too Much, Too Soon (Napoleon) (as John Barrymore);
   The Roots of Heaven (Huston) (as Major Forsyte);
   Hello God (William Marshall—produced in 1951) (as man on Anzio beach)

1959  Cuban Rebel Girls (Assualt of the Rebel Girls) (Mahon) (as himself/narrator, + sc, co-pr)

Films as Director:

1952  Cruise of the Zaca (short) (+ appearance);
   Deep Sea Fishing (short) (+ appearance)

Publications

By FLYNN: books—

Beam Ends, New York, 1937.
Showdown, New York, 1946.

On FLYNN: books—

On FLYNN: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1993.
Norman, Barry, in Radio Times (London), 9 November 1996.

On FLYNN: film—

* * * *

It has been said of Errol Flynn that, although he played a variety of roles, he ultimately always portrayed himself. Like Douglas Fairbanks before him, he excelled in depictions of swashbuckling, virile heroes which seemed virtual prototypes of the idealized American male. The typical Flynn character as defined by his two favorite directors, Michael Curtiz and Raoul Walsh, embodied such qualities as moral courage, exuberance, and, above all, outstanding athletic ability.

Yet, as exemplified by the fact that he was turned down for service in World War II due to a combination of heart trouble, recurrent malaria, and a degree of tuberculosis, the image that he portrayed on the screen was based more than a little on solid acting ability and a desire to compensate for his physical maladies. His offscreen personality often seemed to be afflicted by a desire actually to become his larger-than-life persona, and his personal life was marred by excess: brawls, amorous adventures, and other assorted hedonistic activities. Like the author Ernest Hemingway, he seemed to wish to elevate the artistic self to the mythical status of his fictional creations.

In the end, his private life was viewed by filmgoers as virtually inseparable from his screen appearances, and added considerable believability to his performances, even when played “tongue in cheek” as in The Adventures of Don Juan.

In what many people consider his best performance, Gentleman Jim, Flynn delivered a complex performance that relied less upon acting for its great impact than on the subtle nuances of character the actor brought to the role. Projecting both high spirits and charm, Flynn turned James J. Corbett into a charismatic figure with a gift of the gab that, along with a good left jab, carried him to the top of San Francisco society. Although Flynn was purportedly no slouch with his fists, he worked hard to capture exactly Corbett’s style in the ring.

He even worked out with boxer Mushy Callahan and did his own fighting in the film. The result is an energetic performance that reflects the amount of effort the actor expended to achieve his screen image.

In the late 1940s, the strain on his personal life took its toll on his craft and he became increasingly less careful in preparing for his roles. By the 1950s, he had become tired of swashbuckling, and aspired to more serious parts. But with the exception of Mara Maru, which invites comparison with his earlier achievements, he did not find himself much in demand in Hollywood, even for adventure films. He tried to resurrect his career in Europe with little success and lost much of his money on an ill-fated production of William Tell.

After his return to Hollywood in 1956, Flynn played in three films of a relatively serious nature: The Sun Also Rises, an adaptation of Ernest Hemingway’s first novel, Too Much, Too Soon, the story of Diana Barrymore in which he played John Barrymore, and The Roots of Heaven. Again Flynn’s personal adventures detracted from the critical regard accorded these films. Though he had a reputation as a drunk and all three films featured heavy drinking, Flynn’s portrayals, particularly that in The Sun Also Rises, were finely delineated and deserve to be taken more seriously. His better films are part of an adventure genre that has all but disappeared, and no recent actor has been able to assume his mantle as one of the screen’s preeminent swashbuckling heroes.

Flynn still fascinates. His action films and swashbucklers continue to play to large audiences on television and remain top sellers in video stores. But it is his sometimes scandalous private life upon which most biographers have focused in recent years.

Especially scurrilous was Charles Higham’s Errol Flynn: The Untold Story. In addition to suggesting that the virile Flynn carried on affairs with men as well as women—the kind of shocking, albeit unsubstantiated, revelation which has become such a must in new biographies of deceased, former Hollywood sex symbols that it virtually borders on cliché—Higham posits the theory that the actor who won World War II singlehandedly on-screen was actually a Nazi sympathizer and spy offscreen. Perhaps Higham felt he needed another shocker to sell copies of his book, as rumors of homosexuality were no longer enough. The accusation generated considerable ink—as well as a strong rebuttal to the author’s less than weighty “evidence” of Flynn’s treasonous activities from film scholar Tony Thomas in a follow-up tome, Errol Flynn: The Spy Who Never Was.

—Stephen L. Hanson, updated by John McCarty FONDA, Henry

Films as Actor:

1935 The Farmer Takes a Wife (Fleming) (as Daniel Harrow); Way Down East (Henry King) (as David Bartlett); I Dream Too Much (Cromwell) (as Jonathan Street)
1936 Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Hathaway) (as Dave Tolliver); The Moon’s Our Home (Seiter) (as Anthony Amberton); Spenthrift (Walsh) (as Townsend Middleton)
1937 You Only Live Once (Fritz Lang) (as Eddie Taylor); Wings of the Morning (Schuster) (as Kerry); Slim (Enright) (title role); That Certain Woman (Goulding) (as Jack Merrick)
1938 I Met My Love Again (Ripley, Logan [uncredited], and Cukor) (as Ives); Jezebel (Wyler) (as Preston Dillard); Blockade (Dieterle) (as Marco); Spawn of the North (Hathaway) (as Jim Kimmerlee); The Mad Miss Manton (Jason) (as Peter Ames)
1939 Jesse James (Henry King) (as Frank James); Let Us Live (Brahm) (as “Brick” Tennant); The Story of Alexander Graham Bell (The Modern Miracle) (Cummings) (as Tom Watson); Young Mr. Lincoln (Ford) (as Abraham Lincoln); Drums along the Mohawk (Ford) (as Gil Martin)
1940 The Grapes of Wrath (Ford) (as Tom Joad); Lillian Russell (Cummings) (as Alexander Moore); The Return of Frank James (Fritz Lang) (as Frank James/Ben Woodson); Chad Hanna (Henry King) (title role)
1941 The Lady Eve (Preston Sturges) (as Charles Pike); Wild Geese Calling (Brahm) (as John); You Belong to Me (Good Morning Doctor) (Ruggles) (as Peter Kirk)
1942 The Male Animal (Nugent) (as Tommy Turner); Rings on Her Fingers (Mamoulian) (as John Wheeler); The Magnificent Dope (Walter Lang) (as Tad); Sequence B of Tales of Manhattan (Duvivier) (as George); The Big Street (Irving Reis) (as Little Pinks); The Ox-Bow Incident (Strange Incident) (Wellman) (as Gil Carter)
1943 The Immortal Sergeant (Stahl) (as Colin)
1946 My Darling Clementine (Ford) (as Wyatt Earp)
1947 The Long Night (Litvak) (as Joe Adams); The Fugitive (Ford) (title role); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger) (as Peter)
1948 On Our Merry Way (A Miracle Can Happen) (King Vidor and Fenton) (as Hank); Fort Apache (Ford) (as Colonel Owen Thursday)
1949 Jigsaw (Markle) (as nightclub waiter)
1950 Grant Wood (Sorkin/Knipis—short: included in compilation film Pictura, 1952) (as narrator); Home of the Hopeless (short) (as narrator)
1951 The Growing Years (Resnick—short, for Girl Scouts) (as narrator); Benjy (Zinnermann—short) (as narrator)
1952 The Impressionable Years (Elgar) (as narrator); Pictura (Du pont, Emmer, Hessens, and Resnais—doc) (as narrator)
1955 Mister Roberts (Ford and LeRoy) (as Lieutenant Roberts)
1956 War and Peace (King Vidor) (as Pierre); The Wrong Man (Hitchcock) (as Manny Balaesterro)
1957 The Tin Star (Anthony Mann) (as Morg Hickman); Twelve Angry Men (Lumet) (as Juror Number Eight, + co-pr)
1958 Stage Struck (Lumet) (as Lewis Easton); Reach for Tomorrow (Weissman—short) (as narrator)
1959 Warlock (Dmytryk) (as Clay Blaisdell); The Man Who Understood Women (Johnson) (as Willie Bauche)
1962 Advise and Consent (Preminger) (as Robert Leffingwell); The Longest Day (Annakin, Martin, Wicki, and Oswald) (as Brig. Gen. Theodore Roosevelt Jr.)
1963 “The Railroad” ep. of How the West Was Won (George Marshall) (as Jethro Stuart); Spencer’s Mountain (Daves) (as Clay Spencer); Rangers of Yellowstone (short) (as narrator)
1964 The Best Man (Schaffner) (as William Russell); Fail Safe (Lumet) (as the President); Sex and the Single Girl (Quine) (as Frank)
1965 The Rounders (Kennedy) (as Howdy Lewis); In Harn’s Way (Preminger) (as CINCPAC Admiral); Battle of the Bulge (Annakin) (as Lieutenant Colonel Kiley)
1966 One ep. of La Guerre secrète (La guerra secreta); Spione unter sich; The Dirty Game; The Dirty Agents (Terence Young, Christian-Jaque, and Lizzani) (as Kourlov); A Big Hand for the Little Lady (Big Deal at Dodge City) (Cook) (as Meredith)
1967 Welcome to Hard Times (Killer on a Horse) (Kennedy) (as Will Blue); Stranger on the Run (Siegel—for TV) (as Ben Chamberlin); The Golden Flame (Brown) (as narrator); All about People (for United Jewish Welfare Fund—doc)

435
Henry Fonda (center) with Jane Darwell and John Carradine in The Grapes of Wrath

1968 Firecreek (McEveety) (as Larkin); Yours, Mine and Ours (Shavelson) (as Frank Beardsley); Madigan (Siegel) (as Commissioner Anthony X. Russell); The Boston Strangler (Fleischer) (as John S. Bottomly); Born to Buck (Tibbs) (as narrator); C’era una volta il West (Once upon a Time in the West) (Sergio Leone) (as Frank)

1969 An Impression of John Steinbeck—Writer (Wrye—short) (as narrator)

1970 Too Late the Hero (Aldrich) (as Captain Nolan); There Was a Crooked Man (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Woodward Lopeman); The Cheyenne Social Club (Kelly) (as Harley Sullivan)

1971 Sometimes a Great Notion (Never Give an Inch) (Paul Newman) (as Henry Stamper); Directed by John Ford (Bogdanovich—doc) (as interviewee)

1973 The Red Pony (Totten—for TV) (as Carl Tiffin); Ash Wednesday (Peerce) (as Mark Sawyer); The Alpha Caper (Inside Job) (Robert Michael Lewis—for TV) (as Mark Forbes); Le Serpent (The Serpent) (Verneuil) (as Allan Davies); Film Making Techniques: Acting (Barr—doc) (as interviewee)

1974 Mussolini—ultimo atto (The Last Four Days; Last Days of Mussolini) (Lizzani) (as Cardinal Schuster); Il mio nome e nessuno (My Name Is Nobody) (Valeril) (as Jack Beauregard); Valley Forge (as narrator)

1975 Collision Course (Page—for TV)

1976 Midway (Battle of Midway) (Smight) (as Admiral Chester W. Nimitz); The Displaced Person (Glenn Jordan—for TV)

1977 Tentacles (Tencato) (Hellman, i.e., Sonia Assonitis); Rollercoaster (Goldstone) (as Simon Davenport); Il grande attacco (The Great Battle; The Biggest Battle; Battle Force; La battaglia di Mareth; The Battle of Mareth) (Lenzi) (as “Gen. Foster”); The World of Andrew Wyeth (Schwartz and Wallace—for TV) (introductory appearance); Alcohol Abuse: The Early Warning Signs (short) (as narrator)

1978 The Great Smokey Roadblock (The Last of the Cowboys; Elegant John and His Ladies) (John Leone) (as Elegant John); Fedora (Wilder) (as himself); Big Yellow Schooner to Byzantium (Stouffer—short) (as narrator); Home to Stay (Delbert Mann—for TV); The Swarm (Irwin Allen) (as Dr. Krim); America’s Sweetheart: The Mary Pickford Story (Edwards—for TV) (as narrator)
1979  Meteor (Neame) (as President of the United States); Wanda Nevada (Peter Fonda) (as Prospector); City on Fire (Rakoff) (as Fire Chief Albert Risley)

1980  Gideon’s Trumpet (Robert E. Collins—for TV) (as Clarence Earl Gideon); The Hitting of Granny Weatherall (Haines—for TV); The Oldest Living Graduate (Hofsis—for TV)

1981  On Golden Pond (Rydell) (as Norman Thayer Jr.); Summer Solstice (Rosenblum—for TV)

Publications

By FONDA: book—

My Life, as told to Howard Teichman, New York, 1981.

By FONDA: articles—

‘Reflections on Forty Years of Make-Believe,’’ interview with C. L. Hanson, in Cinema (Beverly Hills), December 1966.

Interview with Roberta Ostroff, in Take One (Montreal), March-April 1972.

On FONDA: books—

On FONDA: articles—

* * *

If one actor could be taken as the personification of liberal America, it would have to be Henry Fonda. In contrast to the two-fisted, redneck persona of John Ford’s other favorite protagonist, John Wayne, Fonda stood for a quiet, troubled decency. His was a figure of reasoned integrity, slow to anger, aiming always to overcome his opponents by persuasion rather than force, if humanly possible. Dreamy idealism emanated from his shy, gangling lope. Four years into his film career he played Young Mr. Lincoln; his Tom Joad aside, this portrait of Lincoln as a struggling, truth-seeking young lawyer is the definitive early Fonda performance.

Fonda’s acting, like his screen image, was built around an unpretentious honesty, a seemingly artless naturalism which concealed a good deal of hard work. “My goal,’’ he once remarked, “is that the audience must never see the wheels go round, not see the work that goes into this. It must seem effortless and real.’’ His achievement was to make goodness appear both likeable and credible, even if on occasion a touch priggish. There was a darker side to his character, which rarely appeared on screen, although he was now and again cast in unsympathetic roles and even, late in his career, as villains. Fonda himself was well aware of this less amiable aspect. “I don’t really like myself. Never have. People mix me up with the characters I play.’’ Perhaps for that reason, he was only really happy while working. “I was damn lucky I became an actor. . . . Acting to me is putting on a mask. The worst torture that can happen to me is not having a mask to get in back of.’’

John Ford supplied Fonda with several of his best masks. In addition to his Abe Lincoln, he was a serenely heroic Wyatt Earp in the mythopoetic My Darling Clementine, and the emotional power of his Tom Joad in The Grapes of Wrath—building skillfully on his own Midwest rural background—lent validity to that film’s populism. Ford also made shrewd use of Fonda’s stiffier side, casting him against type as the stiff-necked martinet to John Wayne’s easygoing subordinate in Fort Apache.

With his air of melancholy determination, Fonda was ideally fitted for those films in which a lone individual reluctantly but doggedly resists the consensus: the protagonist against a lynching in Wellman’s The Ox-Bow Incident, the dissenting conscience in Lumet’s archetypal jury-drama Twelve Angry Men. The downbeat, claustrophobic impact of Hitchcock’s The Wrong Man derived in great part from the intensity of Fonda’s central performance. He could also play comedy, though the roles that came his way were far from his best. Sturges’s The Lady Eve provided a sparkling exception, Fonda preserving an engaging solemnity in the face of Stanwyck’s protean and wily adventures.

Integrity can become boring, and so at times could Fonda—especially in a bad film, of which he was cast in far too many. Twice in his career he fled from Hollywood entirely: into the Navy during the war, and then from 1948 to 1955 returning to his first and lasting love, the theater. Only Ford’s insistence lured him back for the film of his Broadway hit, Mr. Roberts. Ironically, the two men then disagreed vehemently over interpretation, eventually coming to blows, and never worked together again.

Parts were never lacking, but the films got duller, with Fonda filling stolid cameos as authority figures. Sergio Leone, though, offered him the blackest role of his career, in Once upon a Time in the West. Fonda played it to the hilt, gunning down defenseless nine-year-olds with evident relish. His last feature film, On Golden Pond, brought his long-delayed Best Actor Oscar, and his first good role in years. The dignity of his performance, and that of Katharine Hepburn, rescued the movie from gross sentimentality, and turned it into a moving valedictory.

Fonda also is the senior member of one of Hollywood’s most celebrated acting families. Daughter Jane became a preeminent (and highly controversial) movie star of the 1960s and 1970s; son Peter’s participation in Easy Rider alone earns him more than an asterisk in the Hollywood history books; and commencing in the late 1980s, granddaughter Bridget (the daughter of Peter) became a star of Hollywood films. And since his death, Fonda (along with his family) has been the subject of several biographies.

—Philip Kemp, updated by Rob Edelman

FONDA, Jane

Nationality: American. Born: Jane Seymour Fonda in New York City, 21 December 1937; daughter of the actor Henry Fonda; sister of the actor Peter Fonda. Education: Attended Greenwich Academy, Connecticut; Emma Willard School, Troy, New York; Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, New York. Family: Married 1) the director Roger Vadim, 1965 (divorced 1970), one daughter; 2) Tom Hayden, 1973 (divorced 1989), one son; 3) Ted Turner, 1991 (separated 2000). Career: 1955—stage debut with her father in The Country Girl in Omaha; late 1950s—joined the Actors Studio, New York; 1960—Broadway debut in There Was a Little Girl; film debut in Tall Story; 1965—French film debut in La Ronde, directed by Vadim; 1971—toured Southeast Asia with Anti-War Troupe, and visited North Vietnam, 1972; 1976—formed own production company, IPC Films: series of commercial and critical film successes followed; 1981—marketed popular exercise program on record and videotape and in book; 1980s on—has made numerous aerobic and exercise videotapes. Awards: Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for They Shoot Horses, Don’t They?, 1969; Oscar for Best Actress, and Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Klute, 1971; Oscar for Best Actress, for Coming Home, 1978; Best Actress, British Academy, for Julia, 1978;

Best Actress, British Academy, for The China Syndrome, 1979. Address: c/o Fonda Films, Inc., P.O. Box 491355, Los Angeles, CA 90049–9355, U.S.A.

Films as Actress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
<th>Notes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>Tall Story (Logan)</td>
<td>(as June Ryder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Walk on the Wild Side (Dmytryk)</td>
<td>(as Kitty Twist); The Chapman Report (Cukor)</td>
<td>(as Kathleen Barclay); Period of Adjustment (Hill)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>In the Cool of the Day (Stevens)</td>
<td>(as Christine Bonner); Sunday in New York (Tewksbury)</td>
<td>(as Eileen Tyler)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>Les Félins (Joy House; The Love Cage) (Clément)</td>
<td>(as Melinda)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>La Ronde (Circle of Love) (Vadim)</td>
<td>(as the married woman); Cat Ballou (Silverstein)</td>
<td>(title role)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>The Chase (Arthur Penn)</td>
<td>(as Anna Reeves); Any Wednesday (Bachelor Girl Apartment) (as Ellen Gordon); La Curée (The Game Is Over) (Vadim)</td>
<td>(as Renee Saccard)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>Hurry Sundown (Preminger)</td>
<td>(as Julie Ann Warren); Barefoot in the Park (Saks)</td>
<td>(as Corie Bratter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Barbarella (Vadim)</td>
<td>(title role)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>“Metzengerstein” ep. of Histoires extraordinaires (Spirts of the Dead) (Vadim)</td>
<td>(as Countess Frederica); They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? (Pollack)</td>
<td>(as Gloria)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>Klute (Pakula)</td>
<td>(as Bree Daniels)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>F.T.A. (Foxtrot Tango Alpha; Free the Army; Fuck the Army) (Parker)</td>
<td>(+ co-pr, co-sc); Steelyard Blues (Myerson)</td>
<td>(as Iris)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1973 Tout va bien (Godard and Gorin) (as She); A Doll’s House (Losey—for TV) (as Nora)
1974 Introduction to the Enemy (doc) (appearance)
1976 The Bluebird (Cukor) (as Night)
1977 Julia (Zinnemann) (as Lillian Hellman); Fun with Dick and Jane (Kotchel) (as Hannah)
1978 Coming Home (Ashby) (as Sally Hyde); Comes a Horseman (Pakula) (as Ella Connors); California Suite (Ross) (as Hannah)
1979 The China Syndrome (Bridges) (as Kimberley Wells); The Electric Horseman (Pollack) (as Hallie Martin)
1980 Nine to Five (Higgins) (as Judy Barnly)
1981 On Golden Pond (Rydell) (as Chelsea Thayer Wayne); Rollover (Pakula) (as Lee Winters)
1982 The Dollmaker (Petrie—for TV) (as Gertie Knells, + co-pr)
1985 Agnes of God (Lewison) (as Dr. Martha Livingston)
1987 The Morning After (Lumet) (as Alex Sternbergen); Leonard Part 6 (Weiland) (as herself)
1989 Old Gringo (Puenzo) (as Harriet Winslow, + pr)
1990 Stanley and Iris (Ritt) (as Iris King)
1994 A Century of Cinema (Thomas) (as herself); A Century of Women (Kopple) (as Narrator)
1999 Cinéma Vérité: Defining the Moment (Wintonick—doc) (as herself)

Publications

By FONDA: books—

Jane Fonda Cooking for Healthy Living, Atlanta, 1996.

By FONDA: articles—

‘‘I Prefer Films That Strengthen People’: An Interview with Jane Fonda,’’ in Cineaste (New York), v. 6, no. 4, 1975.
‘‘Julia—Jane Fonda zu den Dreharbeiten,’’ interview with D. Seyrig, in Frauen und Film (Berlin), December 1978.
‘‘Never Play It Safe,’’ interview in Films (London), March 1981.

On FONDA: books—

On FONDA: articles—

Young, T., ‘‘Fonda Jane,’’ in Film Comment (New York), March-April 1978.
Pally, M., ‘‘Choice Parts,’’ in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1985.

* * *

Jane Fonda’s career has reflected her personal values and the political turmoil of her times. On the issue of Vietnam she acted in defiance of government constraints, risking surveillance and blacklisting, and at the expense of alienating her public. Years later, in 1984, conservative protesters picketed Marshall Field’s department store in Chicago when she appeared there to promote a new line of exercise clothing. In September 1984, on the other hand, she was honored by earning an Emmy for her role in The Dollmaker, an ABC television presentation which she had attempted for 12 years to get on the air. Because of her celebrity and her outspokenness, her life became a public affair, fully documented in the popular press.

Fonda was born to a life of wealth and privilege. Her father, Henry Fonda, was a successful movie star, her mother an heiress of substantial means. After studying art, she had pursued a successful modeling career (twice featured on the cover of Vogue), before taking up studies with Lee Strasberg at the Actors Studio. Her first movie contract was with her father’s friend, the director Josh Logan, for Tall Story in 1960, followed by Walk on the Wild Side and The Chapman Report. 439
On the basis of these early films, the critic Stanley Kauffmann was among the first to acknowledge her talent in “performances that are not only fundamentally different from one another but are conceived without acting cliché and executed with skill.” Ahead, however, were the consequences of her developing a political consciousness that would cause her to be variously described by others as a “late-blooming flower child” and an “all-American antiheroine.” (Notably, her father once commented with disdain on her tendency to champion every social issue imaginable, calling her “Jane of Arc.”)

In the next phase of her acting career the French director Roger Vadim transformed Fonda, after marrying her, into the sex goddess of his cartoonish Barbarella. About the same time, during the late 1960s, she became a social and political activist, dedicated to anties-establishment causes. A new seriousness was also reflected in her films, particularly They Shoot Horses, Don’t They? and Klute. Her political instincts drew her to the radical French director Jean-Luc Godard, who featured her in Tout va bien in 1973. Protesting the Vietnam War she founded in 1971 an antiwar troupe (Entertainment Industry for Truth and Justice) which toured Southeast Asia and went on to produce a film entitled F.T.A. (Fostrot Tango Alpha, Free the Army, Fuck the Army).

Her well-intentioned opposition to the war characterized her as a radical in the minds of many Americans and alienated her from viewers who were political conservatives, as did her marriage to Tom Hayden, an antiwar militant who had been a highly visible spokesperson for the radical Left. In movies her political commitment continued to surface in Coming Home (about the physical and psychological effects of the Vietnam experience), Julia (in which she portrayed Lillian Hellman), and The China Syndrome (concerning the danger of a meltdown at a nuclear plant, released, by coincidence, just before the near meltdown at the Three Mile Island plant in Pennsylvania, conservative critics of the film having foolishly judged the plot to be preposterous). Other films in her later career have also shown a continuing and genuine concern for important and timely issues. Nine to Five, for example, was a satire on the male-dominated world of business, which, despite its box-office success, was by no means a trivial picture. On Golden Pond was also a huge popular success, mainly because it offered nostalgic appeal by casting Henry Fonda (in his last film) opposite Katharine Hepburn; but it provided, at the same time, a thoughtful examination of the problems of old age.

By the mid-1980s the Fonda image had mellowed, though the actress still seemed seriously interested in the problems of women and in liberal causes. “I believe it’s important to make responsible films,” Fonda remarked at the time The China Syndrome was released. The marketing success of her exercise program indicated a degree of mainstream acceptance, and the Motion Picture Academy was surely impressed by the achievement of On Golden Pond, a film project that involved a substantial personal commitment for her in a production she had instigated. Winning the Emmy Award in 1984 was another demonstration of popular appeal, newly extended to television. In The Dollmaker she presented the struggle of a poor woman from the South, attempting to hold her family together through a unique dispute in a northern industrial city where her husband had gone to find work. The Dollmaker seemed more sincere than brilliant, but it was certainly superior to the usual television fare.

The later stage of Fonda’s career indicates a kind of withdrawal from the controversy that had marked much of her work. After her divorce from Hayden, she chose films that addressed social issues, but decidedly safe ones. The Morning After, for example, dealt with the issue of substance abuse, as Fonda portrayed an aging alcoholic. In Stanley and Iris, she dealt with an illiterate Robert De Niro, helping him learn to read. The issues here were safe and a far cry from Vietnam (who could possibly be in favor of illiteracy or alcoholism?). Many have seen Fonda’s mellowing and her apparent embracing of capitalism (with her fitness empire estimated to be worth tens of millions of dollars and her marriage to media mogul Ted Turner, from whom she is now separated) as a sign of hypocrisy; nevertheless, her melding of a political consciousness with an acting career has been hugely influential.

—James M. Welsh, updated by Matthew Hays

FONDA, Peter

Films as Actor:

1963  The Victors (Foreman) (as Weaver); Tammy and the Doctor (Keller) (as Dr. Mark Cheswick)

1964  Lilith (Rosen) (as Stephen Evshhevsky); The Young Lovers (Goldwyn Jr.) (as Eddie Slocum)

1966  The Wild Angels (Corman) (as Heavenly Blues)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Role</th>
<th>Other Information</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>The Trip (Corman)</td>
<td>(as Paul Groves)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>Certain Honorable Men (Segal—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Robbie Conroy); Tre passi nel delirio (Fellini, Malle, Vadim)</td>
<td>(as Baron Wilhelm)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>Easy Rider (Hopper)</td>
<td>(as Wyatt (Captain America)) (+ sc, pr)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>The Hired Hand (Chincher) (Hopper)</td>
<td>(as Young Sheriff)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>Two People (Wise)</td>
<td>(as Evan Bonner)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Dirty Mary Crazy Larry (Hough)</td>
<td>(as Larry Rayder); Los Cazadores (Open Season)</td>
<td>(as Ken)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Race with the Devil</td>
<td>(as Roger March); 92 in the Shade (McGuane)</td>
<td>(as Bradley)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>Futureworld (Heflron)</td>
<td>(as Chuck Browning); Fighting Mad (Dememe)</td>
<td>(as Tom Hunter)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Circus of the Stars #2</td>
<td>(Bregman—for TV) (as Performer); Outlaw Blues (Hefron)</td>
<td>(as Bobby Ogden)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>High-Ballin’ (Carter)</td>
<td>(as Rane)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>The Recon Game (Collinon); Wanda Nevada</td>
<td>(as Beaudray Demerille)</td>
<td>(+ d)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980</td>
<td>The Hostage Tower (Guzman—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Mike Graham)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>The Cannonball Run (Needham)</td>
<td>(as Chief Biker)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Split Image (Kotchell)</td>
<td>(as Kirklander)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td>Spasms (Death Bite)</td>
<td>(as Dr. Tom Brasilien); Daijoobu, Mai Furendo (Murakami) (as Gonzy)</td>
<td>(as Mr. Freedom)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>Certain Fury (Gyllenhaal)</td>
<td>(as Rodney); A Reason to Live (Levin—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Gus Stewart)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Hawken’s Breed (Pierce); Mercenary Fighters (Freedom Fighters) (Nissimoff) (Virelli)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1988</td>
<td>Indifferenti, Gli (Bolognini, mini—for TV)</td>
<td>(as Leo); Sonore (Sound) (Poietti—for TV)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1989</td>
<td>The Rose Garden (Der Rosengarten)</td>
<td>(Rademakers) (as Herbert Schluter)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Fatal Mission (Rowe) (+ sc); Flashing on the Sixties: A Tribal Document (Law)</td>
<td>(as Himself)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1991</td>
<td>Family Express (as Nick)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>South Beach (Williamson)</td>
<td>(as Jake)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Bodies, Rest &amp; Motion (Steinberg)</td>
<td>(as Motorcycle Rider); Deadfall (Coppola) (as Pete); Molly &amp; Gina</td>
<td>(Burnhill)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Peter Fonda and Vanessa Zima in Ulee's Gold
(Leder) (as Larry Stanton); Warren Oates: Across the Border (Thurman) (as Vergil Cheatham)
1994 Nadja (Almereyda) (as Dracula/Dr. Van Helsing); Love and a .45 (Talkington) (as Vergil Cheatham)
1996 Grace of My Heart (Anders) (as Guru Dave); Escape from L.A. (Carpenter) (as Pipeline); Don’t Look Back (Murphy—for TV) (as Mouse); Painted Hero (Shadow of the Past) (Benedict) (as Ray the Cook)
1997 Ulee’s Gold (Nunez) (as Ulysses “Ulee” Jackson)
1998 The Tempest (Bender—for TV) (as Guideon Prosper)
1999 The Limey (Soderbergh) (as Valentine); The Passion of Ayn Rand (Menaul) (as Frank); Keeping Time (Cain); Motorcycles: Born to Be Wild (for TV) (as Host/Narrator)
2000 Thomas and the Magic Railroad (Allcroft) (as Grandpa Burnett); Stone South of Heaven, West of Hell (Yoakam); Route 66: America’s Main Street (Baker—for TV) (as Host); Second Skin (Roodt) (as Merv Gutman)

Other Films:
1974 Idaho Transfer (Deranged) (d)

Publications

By FONDA: books—
Don’t Tell Dad (memoir), New York, 1998.

On FONDA: books—
Brough, James, Fabulous Fondas, McKay, 1970.

On FONDA: articles—
Miller, E., “Peter Fonda on His Own,” in Seventeen, August 1963.
“Thoughts and Attitudes about Easy Rider,” in Film Quarterly, Autumn 1969.

Most movie stars are either briefly famous or seem to have been around forever; an acting career with a “second act” is a rarity. But Peter Fonda is definitely an actor’s whose career has enjoyed a second act. After becoming internationally famous with his 1969 classic Easy Rider, it would be another 28 years before he received his first Academy Award nomination for the 1997 film Ulee’s Gold—and saw the rebirth of his career.

Peter Fonda is a member of one of filmdom’s most formidable Hollywood dynasties—the Fondas—and for much of his career he has had to work in the shadow of father Henry, sister Jane, and even daughter Bridget. Born in 1939, Peter was sent to live with an aunt and uncle in Nebraska following his mother’s suicide, and he studied acting at the University of Omaha. He made his Broadway debut in Blood, Sweat and Stanley Poole, for which the New York Drama Critics Circle named him the most promising actor of 1961. Following his screen debut in Tammy and the Doctor (1963), he made two more big-budget films—The Victors and Lillith (both 1964)—before a marijuana-influenced lifestyle and appearance change left him virtually unemployable in mainstream films.

Fortunately this was no impediment for his new-found friends at American International Pictures under Roger Corman, then the King of B movies. Fonda’s next two films, The Wild Angels (1966) and the Jack Nicholson-written The Trip (1967), were popular with the youth market, became cult favorites and familiarized Fonda with the basics of ‘guerrilla’ filmmaking—working extraordinarily cheaply outside the studio system. During a 1967 publicity tour for The Trip, after smoking some grass and drinking some beer in his Toronto hotel room filled with publicity photos he was expected to sign, Fonda kept stowing at a publicity still from The Wild Angels of himself and Bruce Dern on a motorcycle, and “I understood immediately just what kind of motorcycle, sex, and drug movie I should make next.” Instead of a hundred Hells Angels on their way to a funeral, it would be two bikers in search of America—a reverse Western, heading East. He knew how it would end and, after sketching out the beginning and middle, he called his friend Dennis Hopper and proposed that they both write and star in what would eventually become Easy Rider, with Fonda to produce and Hooper to direct. Writer Terry Southern also made major contributions to the script. Because Fonda had miscalculated when Mardi Gras started, the filmmakers were suddenly forced to film the Mardi Gras sequence first. While filming the graveyard scene where the two leads and their hooker dates (Karen Black and Toni Basil) drop acid, Hooper asked Fonda to climb up onto a statue scene where the two leads and their hooker dates (Karen Black and Toni Basil) drop acid, Hooper asked Fonda to climb up onto a statue and ask his mother why she had abandoned him by committing suicide. Fonda objected to using his personal life so publicly, but Hopper won out, and the final scene is quite effective.

Fonda as Wyatt (Captain America) is definitely the film’s central character; he is the one who inevitably realizes that he and Billy “blew it,” and according to The New York Times he also “embodies an entire culture—its heroes and its myths.” Playboy said not since...
James Dean’s Rebel Without a Cause or Brando’s The Wild One “has a movie actor so captured the imagination and admiration of a generation.” But Fonda’s acting is often overlooked because of the much flashier roles of his two main costars: Hopper as Billy, the ultimate egocentric hippie, and Nicholson as drunken attorney George Hanson, in a performance that would forever establish his film career. In fact, both Hopper (before Easy Rider in Giant, and after in Apocalypse Now, Blue Velvet, and Speed) and Nicholson (from Five Easy Pieces to As Good As It Gets) have long had distinguished film careers, while a 1984 Esquire article about Fonda was entitled “The Disappearance of Peter Fonda.” It concerned how he had directed a couple films and had appeared in dozens of low-budget and foreign flicks, some of which did quite well (Dirty Mary, Crazy Larry for example), “and twenty-odd films later I haven’t been offered a large-budget movie. Why aren’t I offered the good scripts, like my sister.”

That good script he hoped for in 1984 turned out to be for a no-budget film released in 1997: Victor Nuñez’s Ulee’s Gold, the story of a Florida beekeeper with a son in prison, a vanished daughter-in-law, and two granddaughters living with him with whom he barely connects. The plot begins when his son calls from prison telling Ulee he has to go collect his daughter-in-law, who is being held by two thugs. When Fonda read the script he knew, “This was the role for me. I was this man. The part of Ulee—short for Ulysses—demanded the kind of performance only actors like my father give. They must be played with the lightest touch. As a matter of fact, they must be played by being the part.” The New York Times’ Janet Maslin called his performance “quietly astonishing,” adding, “It would be accurate but barely adequate to call this the finest work of Mr. Fonda’s career. Lionized nearly 30 years ago as the epitome of hip complacency, then dormant for a long while, he emerges here as a figure of unexpected stature.” His performance earned him an Oscar nomination and more roles. In Steven Soderbergh’s The Limey (1999), Maslin said Fonda played his role “with what seems to be a sense memory of every Hollywood-style rich hipster he ever encountered, as if he says he gets right into the spirit of things.” And The New York Times’ Ron Wertheimer claimed that, in the Showtime film The Passion of Ayn Rand (1999), “only Peter Fonda, as Rand’s pathetic husband, Frank O’Connor, is really worth watching.” One gets the feeling Fonda will at last be given the opportunity to play more roles worth watching.

—Bob Sullivan

FONTAINE, Joan

Nationality: American. Born: Joan de Beauvoir de Havilland in Tokyo, Japan, to English parents, 22 October 1917; sister of the actress Olivia de Havilland; became U.S. citizen, 1943. Education: Attended Los Gatos High School in California; American School in Kami-Meguro, Japan; Max Reinhardt Drama School. Family: Married 1) the actor Brian Aherne, 1939 (divorced 1944); 2) the producer William Dozier, 1946 (divorced 1951), daughter: Deborah Leslie; 3) the film producer Collier Hudson Young, 1952 (divorced 1961); 4) Alfred Wright Jr., 1964 (divorced 1969). Career: 1935—stage debut in Kind Lady; film debut in No More Ladies, billed as Joan Burfield; 1936—briefly used name Joan St. John before settling on Joan Fontaine; signed seven-year contract with Jesse Lasky, who soon sold it to RKO; 1938—RKO drops contract; 1939—signed seven-year contract with David O. Selznick; 1947—formed Rampart Productions with husband William Dozier; 1954—on Broadway in Tea and Sympathy; 1981—host of syndicated TV talk show Joan Fontaine; 1986—in TV mini-series Crossings. Awards: Canadian Film Critics Award, for Rebecca, 1940; Best Actress Academy Award, and Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Suspicion, 1941.

Films as Actress:

1935 No More Ladies (Edward H. Griffith and Cukor) (as Caroline Rumsey, billed as Joan Burfield)
1937 Quality Street (Stevens) (as Charlotte Parratt); The Man Who Found Himself (Landers) (as Doris King); You Can’t Beat Love (Cabanee) (as Trudy Olson); Music for Madame (Blystone) (as Jean Clemens); A Damsel in Distress (Stevens) (as Lady Alice Marshmorton)
1938 Maid’s Night Out (Holmes) (as Sheila Harrison); A Million to One (Shores) (as Joan Stevens); Blond Cheat (Santley) (as Julie); Sky Giant (Landers) (as Meg); The Duke of West Point (Alfred E. Green) (as Ann Porter)
1939 Gunga Din (Stevens) (as Emmy Stubbins); Man of Conquest (Nicholls Jr.) (as Eliza Allen); The Women (Cukor) (as Peggy Day)
1940  Rebecca (Hitchcock) (as Mrs. de Winter)
1941  Suspicion (Hitchcock) (as Lina McLaedlaw)
1942  This Above All (Litvak) (as Prudence Cathaway)
1943  The Constant Nymph (Goulding) (as Teresa “Tessa” Sanger)
1944  Jane Eyre (Stevenson) (title role); Frenchman’s Creek (Leisen)
         (as Lady Dona St. Columb)
1945  The Affairs of Susan (Seiter) (as Susan Darell)
1946  From This Day Forward (Berry) (as Susan)
1947  Ivy (Wood) (title role)
1948  Letter from an Unknown Woman (Max Ophuls) (as Lisa Berndle); The Emperor Waltz (Wilder) (as Johanna Augusta Franziska von Stultztenberg); Kiss the Blood off My Hands (Blood on My Hands) (Norman Foster) (as Jane Wharton); You Gotta Stay Happy (Potter) (as Dee Dee Dillwood)
1950  Born to be Bad (Nicholas Ray) (as Christabel Caine); September Affair (Dieterle) (as Manina Stuart)
1951  Darling, How Could You! (Rendezvous) (Leisen) (as Alice Grey)
1952  Something to Live For (Stevens) (as Jenny Carey); Ivanhoe (Thorpe) (as Rowena); Othello (Welles) (as page)
1953  Decameron Nights (Fregonese) (as Fiammetta/Bartolomea/ Ginevra/Isabella); Flight to Tangier (Warran) (as Susan); The Bigamist (Lupino) (as Eve Graham)
1954  Casanova’s Big Night (McLeod) (as Francesca Bruni)
1956  Serenade (Anthony Mann) (as Kendall Hale); Beyond a Reasonable Doubt (Fritz Lang) (as Susan Spencer)
1957  Island in the Sun (Rossen) (as Mavis Norman); Until They Sail (Wise) (as Anne Leslie)
1958  A Certain Smile (Negulesco) (as Françoise Ferrand); South Pacific (Logan) (cameo)
1961  Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea (Irwin Allen) (as Dr. Susan Hiler)
1962  Tender Is the Night (Henry King) (as Baby Warren)
1966  The Witches (The Devil’s Own) (Frankel) (as Gwen Mayfield, + co-pr)
1978  The Users (Hardy—for TV) (as Grace St. George)
1985  Hitchcock: il brivido del genio (The Thrill of Genius) (Bortolini and Masenza)
1986  Dark Mansions (London—for TV) (as Margaret Drake)
1994  Good King Wenceslas (The Good King) (Tuchner—for TV)
         (as Queen Ludmilla)

Publications

By FONTAINE: book—

By FONTAINE: articles—

Interview with Carol Craig, in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), August 1937.
“This Must Be It,” interview with Bosley Crowther, in New York Times, 11 February 1940.
“These Above All,” interview with Lean Surmelian, in Photoplay (New York), April 1942.
“A Mistake I Wouldn’t Make Again,” in Photoplay (New York), May 1943.

Fontaine’s Fling,” interview with Adele Whitely Fletcher, in Photoplay (New York), December 1944.
“Come into the Kitchen, Darling,” in Photoplay (New York), May 1946.
Interview with P. Anthony, in Photoplay (New York), March 1962.
“Olivia and I,” in Good Housekeeping, August 1978.
Interview with C. P. Andersen, in People (New York), 20 November 1978.
Interview with Brian McFarlane, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), June 1982.
Interview in Cinémagraphe (Paris), November 1983.
Interview with Gregory Speck, in Interview (New York), February 1987.

On FONTAINE: books—

On FONTAINE: articles—

Current Biography 1944, New York, 1944.
Carlyle, John, “Joan Fontaine: Is as Believable as a Sophisticate as She Was as an Ingenue,” in Films in Review (New York), March 1963.
Ciné Revue (Paris), 1 September 1983.
Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1996.

* * *

Joan Fontaine established her screen persona in the early 1940s in Alfred Hitchcock’s Rebecca and Suspicion. In both films, she plays young Englishwomen but, interestingly, while the two characters are from opposite economic and social backgrounds, Fontaine projects a similar “passive” identity in each film—a quality she also brought to her title role in the non-Hitchcock Jane Eyre. In these and other films, Fontaine evidenced skill at playing characters who, because of the restrictions society places on the woman’s role, depend on the construction of romantic fantasies which they project onto an “active” male. In our society, since passivity is considered a feminine trait, it is best exemplified through a corresponding demeanor which reflects, as Fontaine’s screen persona does, such qualities as patrician beauty, elegance, and refinement. In the Hollywood cinema passivity is particularly associated with European female characters and, not surprisingly, Fontaine has most often appeared in such roles, as she does in Max Ophüls’s Letter from an Unknown Woman. Arguably, the film contains her finest screen performance and, even more so than Rebecca, Suspicion, and Jane Eyre, the film depends on Fontaine’s persona to elaborate its thematic concerns.

Fontaine was best used in the 1940s romance melodramas mentioned above which have directors who are sensitive to the social and sexual tensions these characterizations embody. Undoubtedly Fontaine was conscious of being typecast but her most notable attempt to expand her image by playing an assertive woman, in Mitchell Leisen’s Frenchman’s Creek, was an unfortunate choice. In particular, Leisen’s direction lacks the necessary delicacy and nuance that Fontaine’s persona demands. Another change of pace film (if not quite role) in the noir thriller Kiss the Blood off My Hands opposite producer-star Burt Lancaster failed to expand her image much either.

In the 1950s Fontaine was no longer contemporary in a cinema which distilled the images of woman into either Doris Day or Marilyn Monroe. Increasingly, under the circumstances, Fontaine had no recourse but to exploit her feminine demeanor by playing worldly and, by extension, self-centered women (characters anticipated in Sam Wood’s Ivy). The “bitch” implications of this persona are most fully realized in Anthony Mann’s Serenade, but are more interestingly employed in Fritz Lang’s Beyond a Reasonable Doubt and Henry King’s Tender Is the Night.

Unlike some of her contemporaries from Hollywood’s Golden Age—Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, and even her sister, Olivia de Havilland—Fontaine did not take advantage of her age and latter-day “bitch” persona to fashion a new career for herself by appearing in horror films, although she did make one for England’s Hammer Productions—The Witches; in it she played, not the harridan villain, but a patrician doctor of elegance and refinement in the vein of her earlier Hollywood roles. She also co-produced the film.

—Richard Lippe, updated by John McCarty

FORD, Glenn

Films as Actor:

1939 Heaven with a Barbed Wire Fence (Cortez) (as Joe); My Son Is Guilty (Crime’s End) (Barton) (as Barney)
1940 Convicted Woman (Grinde) (as Jim Brent); Men without Souls (Grinde) (as Johnny Adams); Babies for Sale (Barton) (as Steve Burton); The Lady in Question (It Happened in Paris) (Charles Vidor) (as Pierre Morestan); Blondie Plays Cupid (Strayer) (as Charlie)
1941 So Ends Our Night (Cromwell) (as Ludwig Kern); Texas (George Marshall) (as Tod Ramsey); Go West, Young Lady (Strayer) (as Tex Miller)
1942 The Adventures of Martin Eden (Salkow) (title role); Flight Lieutenant (Salkow) (as Danny Doyle)
1943 The Desperadoes (Charles Vidor) (as Cheyenne Rogers); Destroyer (Seiter) (as Mickey Donohue); Hollywood in Uniform (appearance)
1946 Gilda (Charles Vidor) (as Johnny Farrell); A Stolen Life (Bernhardt) (as Bill Emerson); Gallant Journey (Wellman) (as John Montgomery)
1947 Framed (Paula) (Wallace) (as Mike Lambert)
1948 The Mating of Millie (Levin) (as Doug Andrews); The Man from Colorado (Levin) (as Col. Owen Devereaux); The Loves of Carmen (Charles Vidor) (as Don José); The Return of October (Date with Destiny) (Joseph H. Lewis) (as Prof. Bassett); Make It Real (short for United Jewish Appeal) (as narrator)
1949 Undercover Man (Joseph H. Lewis) (as Frank Warren); Lied for Gold (For Those Who Dare) (Simon) (as Jacob Walz); Mr. Soft Touch (House of Settlement) (Douglas and Levin) (as Joe Miracle); The Doctor and the Girl (Bernhardt) (as Dr. Michael Corday); Hollywood Goes to Church (Staub—short)
1950 The White Tower (Tetzlaff) (as Martin Ordway); Convicted (One Way Out) (Levin) (as Joe Hufford); The Flying Missile (Levin) (as Cmdr. Bill Talbot); The Redhead and the Cowboy (Fenton) (as Gil Kyle)
1951 Follow the Sun (Lanfield) (as Ben Hogan); The Secret of Convict Lake (Michael Gordon) (as Canfield); Young Man with Ideas (Leisen) (as Maxwell Webster); The Green Glove (Le Gantelet vert) (Maté) (as Michael Blake)
1952 Affair in Trinidad (Sherman) (as Steve Emery); Time Bomb (Terror on a Train) (Tetzlaff) (as Peter Lyncourt)
1953 The Man from the Alamo (Boetticher) (as John Stoud); Plunder of the Sun (Farrow) (as Al Colby); The Big Heat (Fritz Lang) (as David Bannion); Appointment in Honduras (Jacques Tourneur) (as Steve Corbett)
1954 Human Desire (Fritz Lang) (as Jeff Warren); The Violent Men (Rough Company) (Maté) (as John Parrish); City Story (Beaudine) (as narrator)
1955 The Amerciano (Castle) (as Sam Dent); Blackboard Jungle (Richard Brooks) (as Richard Darid); Interrupted Melody

445
Glen Ford (center) and Sidney Poitier (right) in The Blackboard Jungle

1956
Ransom! (Segal) (as David G. Stannard); Jubal (Daves) (as Jubal Troop); The Fastest Gun Alive (Rouse) (as George Temple); The Teahouse of the August Moon (Daniel Mann) (as Capt. Fisby)

1957
3:10 to Yuma (Daves) (as Ben Wade); Don’t Go Near the Water (Walters) (as Lt. Max Siegel)

1958
The Sheepman (George Marshall) (as Jason Sweet); Cowboy (Daves) (as Tom Reece); Imitation General (George Marshall) (as M/Sgt. Murphy Savage); Torpedo Run (Pevney) (as Lt. Cmdr. Barney Doyle)

1959
It Started with a Kiss (George Marshall) (as Sgt. Joe Fitzpatrick)

1960
Cimarron (Anthony Mann) (as Yancey Cravet); The Gazebo (George Marshall) (as Elliott Nash); Cry for Happy (George Marshall) (as Andy Cypthers)

1961
Pocketful of Miracles (Capra) (as Dave “the Dude” Conway, + co-pr)

1962
Experiment in Terror (The Grip of Fear) (Edwards) (as John Ripley); The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Minnelli) (as Julio Desnoyers)

1963
The Courtship of Eddie’s Father (Minnelli) (as Tom Corbett); Love Is a Ball (All This and Money Too) (Swift) (as John Davis)

1964
Advance to the Rear (Company of Cowards?) (George Marshall) (as Capt. Jared Heath); Fate Is the Hunter (Ralph Nelson) (as McBane); Dear Heart (Delbert Mann) (as Harry Mork)

1965
The Rounders (Kennedy) (as Ben Jones); Seapower (as narrator)

1966
The Money Trap (Kennedy) (as Joe Baron); Rage (El mal) (Gazcon) (as Reuben); Paris brûle-t-il? (Is Paris Burning?) (Clément) (as Gen. Omar Bradley)

1967
The Last Challenge (Pistolero of Red River) (Thorpe) (as Marshal Don Blaine); A Time for Killing (The Long Ride Home) (Karlson) (as Maj. Charles Wolcott)

1968
Day of the Evil Gun (Thorpe) (as Warfield)

1969
Heaven with a Gun (Katzin) (as Jim Killian); Smith! (O’Herlihy) (title role)

1970
The Brotherhood of the Bell (Wendkos—for TV); The Gold Diggers (for TV)

1972
Santee (Gary Nelson) (title role)

1973
Jarrett (Shear—for TV)
1974  The Disappearance of Flight 412 (Jud Taylor—for TV); The Greatest Gift (Sagal—for TV) (as Rev. Holvak); Punch and Judy (Shear—for TV)
1976  Midway (Battle of Midway) (Smight) (as Rear Adm. Raymond A. Spruance)
1977  The Three Thousand Mile Chase (Mayberry—for TV) (as Dvorak/Staveck)
1978  Superman (Richard Donner) (as Jonathan Kent)
1979  The Gift (Don Taylor—for TV) (as Billy Devlin); The Sacketts (Totten—for TV); Beggarman, Thief (Doheny—for TV)
1980  Fukkatsu no hi (The Virus) (Fukasaku) (as Richardsson); Il Visitatore (The Visitor) (Paradisi) (as Detective)
1981  Happy Birthday to Me (J. Lee Thompson) (as Dr. David Faraday); Day of the Assassin (Trenchard-Smith) (as Christakis)
1989  Casablanca Express (Martino) (as Sheriff John Danahar)
1990  Border Shootout (McIntyre)
1991  Raw Nerve (Prior) (as Captain Gavin); The Final Verdict (Fisk—for TV) (as the Reverend Lowell Rogers)
1992  Our Hollywood Education (Beltrami—doc)

Publications

By FORD: book—

By FORD: articles—
Interview in TV Times (London), 11 August 1977.
On FORD: articles—
‘‘Glenn Ford in His House,’’ in Photoplay Film Monthly, May 1972.
‘‘The Many Loves of Glenn Ford,’’ in Photoplay Film Monthly, December 1972; see also January 1976.
Curreli, Joe, ‘‘Glenn Ford—America’s Real-Life Hero,’’ in Classic Images (Muscatine), August 1993.
Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1995.

Glenn Ford’s mouth is a scar of suffering, his eyes dim lights of introspection, and his voice expresses the cool, contemplative restraint of masculinity under control. In effect, he is somewhat drier than the heroes America wanted from the movies, and this may explain his secondary star status behind Gary Cooper, John Wayne, James Stewart, and others. His popularity took off with Gilda in the late 1940s, playing opposite Rita Hayworth—although it was George Macready to whom Ford observed, ‘‘I was born the night you met me.’’ Ford mainly stayed within the melodrama/film noir tradition and did his best work in these genres. His most successful portrayals were in two films by Fritz Lang, Human Desire and The Big Heat, because it is in these films that Ford came closest to portraying the type of role he was usually denied—the antihero, the tarnished hero, the role so much associated with Humphrey Bogart.

In Human Desire, Lang’s remake of Renoir’s La Bête humaine, Ford portrayed a man whose lust nearly leads him to commit murder. He steals for Gloria Grahame, and only the unexpected presence of a passerby prevents him from committing the act of murder—there is little moral choice involved. Ford is even more interesting in The Big Heat. Using his influence as a police officer and hiding behind the moral camouflage of a husband out to revenge the murder of his wife, Ford is responsible for more corpses than any of the film’s ‘‘real’’ criminals. In a brilliant piece of plotting, Ford persuades Gloria Grahame to kill Jeanette Nolan, neatly sidestepping the act of murder himself.

Unfortunately, after these efforts, Ford generally made what seemed to be bids for broader appeal and acceptance—The Americano, Cowboy, and The Gazebo with Debbie Reynolds. His appearances in a number of 1950s and 1960s Westerns bear some notice, though. In Delmer Daves’s 3:10 to Yuma Ford is effective as an outlaw playing mind games with captor Van Heflin, while both await the title train. He is also interesting in Richard Brooks’s The Blackboard Jungle, as a high school teacher in a tough New York classroom, and as a widower in The Courtship of Eddie’s Father, with Vincente Minnelli in charge. Pictures such as these, and the Lang films, make it easier for us to forgive a career otherwise dedicated to an overeagerness to make banal statements on the American situation.

—Don M. Short, updated by Frank Uhle

FORD, Harrison

Films as Actor:
1966  Dead Heat on a Merry-Go-Round (Girard) (as bellboy)
1967  A Time for Killing (The Long Ride Home) (Karlson) (as L. Shaffer); Love (Clive Donner)
1968  Journey to Shiloh (Hale) (as Willie Bill Beardon)
1970  Getting Straight (Rush) (as Jake); Zabriskie Point (Antonioni) (role edited out of final version); The Intruders (Graham—for TV) (as Carl)
1973  American Graffiti (Lucas) (as Bob Falfa)
1974  The Conversation (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Martin Stett)
1976  Dynasty (Philips—for TV) (as Mark Blackwood)
1977  The Possessed (Thorpe—for TV) (as Paul Winjam);  Star Wars (Lucas) (as Han Solo);  Heroes (Kagan) (as Kenny Boyd)
1978  Force 10 from Navarone (Hamilton) (as Lt. Col. Mike Barnsby)
1979  Hanover Street (Hyams) (as David Halloran);  The Frisco Kid (Aldrich) (as Tommy Lillard);  Apocalypse Now (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Colonel);  More American Graffiti (Norton) (as motocycle cop, unbilled cameo)
1980  The Empire Strikes Back (Kershner) (as Han Solo)
1981  Raiders of the Lost Ark (Spielberg) (as Indiana Jones)
1982  Blade Runner (Ridley Scott) (as Rick Deckard)
1983  Return of the Jedi (Marquand) (as Han Solo)
1984  Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom (Spielberg) (title role)
1985  Witness (Weir) (as John Book)
1986  The Mosquito Coast (Weir) (as Allie Fox)
1988  Frantic (Polanski) (as Dr. Richard Walker);  Working Girl (Mike Nichols) (as Jack Trainer)
1989  Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade (Spielberg) (title role)
1990  Presumed Innocent (Pakula) (as Rusty Sabich)
1991  Regarding Henry (Mike Nichols) (as Henry Turner)
1992  Patriot Games (Noyce) (as Jack Ryan);  L’Envers du Decor: Portrait de Pierre Guffroy (Salis—doc)
1993  The Fugitive (Andrew Davis) (as Dr. Richard Kimble);  Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (as voice)
1994  Clear and Present Danger (Noyce) (as Jack Ryan);  Jimmy Hollywood (Levinson) (as himself);  Mustang: The Hidden Kingdom (Tony Miller—doc) (as narrator)
1995  Les Cent et une nuits (A Hundred and One Nights) (Varda) (as Actor for a Day);  Sabrina (Pollack) (as Linus Larrabee)
1996  The Devil’s Own (Pakula) (as Tom O’Meara)
1997  Air Force One (Petersen) (as President James Marshall)
1998  Six Days Seven Nights (Reitman) (as Quinn Harris)
1999  From Star Wars to Star Wars: The Story of Industrial Light and Magic (Kroll) (as himself);  Random Hearts (Pollack) (as Dutch Van Den Broeck)
2000  What Lies Beneath (Zemeckis) (as Dr. Norman Spencer)
Publications

By FORD: articles—

Interview with R. Appelbaum, in Films (London), September 1981.
“Still Sane After All These Years,” interview with V. Campbell, in Movielne (Escondido), December 1995.
“I Make an Outrageous Amount of Money. No One Is Worth This Much,” interview in Radio Times (London), 20 January 1996.
“Off the Beaten Path,” interview with L. Grobel, in Movielne (Escondido), July 1997.

On FORD: books—

On FORD: articles—

Saying away from the Hollywood limelight has not hurt maverick superstar Harrison Ford’s career one iota. For a man who once cut back on making the acting rounds to concentrate on his carpentry sideline, the ever-practical Ford is now one of filmdom’s bona fide bankable stars. The same pragmatic bent that encouraged Ford to maintain a backup career informs his work as an actor. Reliable and forthright, Ford is a man’s man determined to do a good job and not about to suffer fools or slackers gladly. If a certain solemnity mars his dramatic work, he is a freewheeling force of nature in his rugged adventures and a champagne-class laugh-getter in his comedies.

After uncertain beginnings, Ford hit his stride with the megahit, Star Wars as his wise-guy persona blasted into space. Han Solo is a reluctant hero, but, once coerced or tricked into a galactic war, he out-battles the most accustomed saviors in orbit. Armed with a sarcastic wit, as well as space blasters or a bullwhip, Ford’s leading men zip beyond the legacy of Flynn and Power as this modern star ridicules the feats of derring-do expected of him, particularly as repackaged by Lucas and Spielberg to the nth power. Nudging his fans in the ribs, Ford seems to be saying, “How am I getting away with this?” but a task’s daunting impossibility never actually stops him from accomplishing it. If Ford’s Han Solo and Indiana Jones have a true progenitor, it is not so much the macho myth-makers of yesteryear but Burt Lancaster’s tongue-in-cheek daredevil in The Cimmerian Pirate. Taking into account the crushing weight of all the megalodons special effects in his movies, Ford’s light touch prevents the Lucas and Spielberg oeuvre from collapsing into tiresome, revisionist aging boys’ adventures. With jocular Ford at the center of these expensive diversions, the audience cares about how each of the cliffhangers laced through the films will turn out; he is indispensable to their success.

Forever kidding the image of the resolute American redhead in the Star Wars and Indiana Jones trilogies, Ford also expanded his dramatic range. In the thought-provoking futuristic noir, Blade Runner, he brings gravity to the part of an android-hunting Philip Marlowe type in a movie dismissed in its time, but now esteemed as a classic melding of the detective and sci-fi genres. Winning an Oscar nomination as the big city cop in awe of the Amish people he choose to protect (Witness), Ford followed this breakthrough performance with the flawed The Mosquito Coast, an acting challenge about an antisocial man who subjects his family to his own ramshackle Shangri-La in the jungles of Central America; unfortunately the box-office disappointment of this ambitious film may have caused Ford to retrench artistically. Increasingly, since Frantic, Ford has been more and more dramatically clenched in his performances in serious fare. Particularly in Presumed Innocent, his face is a mask of pain underlined by one expression of resigned perplexity. At least in the Jack Ryan espionage thrillers and in that update of Les Misérables, The Fugitive, Ford’s histrionic liabilities are camouflaged by a plethora of stunt-men heroics and unceasing physical action. Ford is much better when humor is part of the equation, and he can triumph wittily over his own wavering, save-your-own-skin philosophy. In prestige

449
In comedies, Ford's humanity shines through unabashed, and he is never as sexy in his he-man gambols as he is in effervescent romances. If he could bring just a bit of this casualness to his serious endeavors, he might blast through his rigidity and emerge as the actor he left behind on The Mosquito Coast. His ruffled dignity makes him a perfect foil in comedies, and he carries on the bloodline of an elegant tradition by doing his own modification of Gary Cooper in Working Girl. Despite the gaffe of remaking a Billy Wilder classic, Ford mined comic nuances untouched by Humphrey Bogart, the one weak link in the original Sabrina. If this updated soufflé refused to rise, Ford soared with the box office returns of Air Force One, which left audiences cheering for Ford's granite-faced president, not afraid to get his designer suit dirty in the battle to save his family and his official plane. Clearly, however, he was just marking time with a one-dimensional role as a proselytizer of patriotism in an A-budget film designed to open big. Although he's the supplest comedian among today's mega-stars, no one expects Ford to bury himself in the lightweight comedies at which he excels. Where can he find the role today?

In the underrated comedy, 6 Days, 7 Nights, Ford had a blast as a variant of the scruffy, half-tanked rascals played by Cary Grant in Father Goose and Bogart in The African Queen. Teamed affably with Anne Heche, he proved again that he's no slouch at both physical comedy and romantic badinage.

If fans basked in his oddball chemistry in that film, they must have been mystified by a lack of it in the somber passion play, Random Hearts. It ranks as the most frigid boy-meets-girl saga since Havana (also directed by Sydney Pollack, who needs a vacation from inflated epic love stories). As imposing as ever, Ford fearlessly tore into the role of a man bent on exploring his late wife's infidelity. Unfortunately, this grim exhumation of a marriage overshadowed the story's main attraction: the hero's affair with the widow of the man who'd been his wife's inamorata. Instead of two lost souls hungering for solace from grief and anger, Ford and Kristin Scott-Thomas nibbled at each other with a politeness fatal to the story's gimmicky concept.

Clearly, Ford needs to take a cue from Bruce Willis and challenge himself in occasional offbeat productions, particularly if his commercial choices are going to be soulless properties (e.g., The Devil's Own) designed to open big. Although he's the supplest comedian among today's mega-stars, no one expects Ford to bury himself in the lightweight comedies at which he excels. Where can he find the role to give his fans an action high, while allowing him to expand his maturing sensitivity? Perhaps, it's time to dust off Indiana Jones, a character that plays to all his strengths, instead of compartmentalizing his persona into the separate entities of the humorous Ford and the dour Ford.

—Robert Pardi

FOSTER, Jodie

Films as Actress:

1970 Menace on the Mountain (McEveety—for TV) (as Suellen McIver)
1972 Napoleon and Samantha (McEveety) (as Samantha); Kansas City Bomber (Freedman) (as Rita)
1973 Tom Sawyer (Taylor) (as Becky Thatcher); One Little Indian (McEveety) (as Martha); Rookie of the Year (Elikann—for TV)
1974 Alice Doesn’t Live Here Anymore (Scorsese) (as Audrey); Smile Jenny, You’re Dead (Thorpe—for TV) (as Liberty)
1976 Echoes of a Summer (The Last Castle) (Taylor) (as Deirdre Striden); Freaky Friday (Nelson) (as Annabel Andrews); Bugsy Malone (Alan Parker) (as Tallubah); Taxi Driver (Scorsese) (as Iris Steensman)
1977 The Little Girl Who Lives down the Lane (Gessner) (as Rynn Jacobs); Candleshoe (Tokar) (as Casey Brown); Il casotto (The Beach House) (Citti) (as Teresina)
1978 Mot, Fleur Bleue (Stop Calling Me Baby!) (Scorsese) (as Fleur Bleue)
1980 Foxes (Lyne) (as Jeanie); Carney (Kaylor) (as Donna)
1983 O’Hara’s Wife (Bartman) (as Barbara O’Hara); Le Sang des autres (The Blood of Others) (Chabrol) (as Hélène); Svangeli (Harvey—for TV) (as Zoe Alexander)
1984 The Hotel New Hampshire (Richardson) (as Franmy Berry)
1986 Mesmerized (Shocked) (Laughlin) (as Victoria, + co-pr)
1987 Siesta (Lambert) (as Nancy)
1988 Five Corners (Bill) (as Linda); The Accused (Kaplan) (as Sarah Tobias); Stealing Home (Kampmann) (as Katie Chandler)
1989 Backtrack (Catchfire) (Dennis Hopper—released in U.S. in 1991) (as Anne Benton)
1991 The Silence of the Lambs (Jonathan Demme) (as Clarice Starling)
1992 Shadows and Fog (Woody Allen) (as prostitute)
1993 Sommersby (Amiel) (as Laurel); It Was a Wonderful Life (Ohayon—doc) (as narrator)
1994 Maverick (Richard Donner) (as Annabelle Bransford); Nell (Apted) (title role, + co-pr)
1996 Contact (Zemeckis) (as Dr. Eleanor Ann Arroway)
1999 Anna and the King (Tennant) (as Anna Leonowens)

Films as Director:

1991 Little Man Tate (+ ro as Dede Tate)
1995 Home for the Holidays (+ co-pr)
Jodie Foster in Contact

Films as Producer:

1998 The Baby Dance
1999 Waking the Dead

Publications

By FOSTER: articles—

Interview in Ciné Revue (Paris), 1 July 1976.
Interview in Screen International (London), 8 October 1977.
Interview with Andy Warhol, in Interview (New York), June 1980.
Interview, by Foster, with Nastassia Kinski, in Film Comment (New York), September/October 1982.

Interview with Rod Lurie, in Empire (London), June 1991.

On FOSTER: books—

Kennedy, Philippa, Jodie Foster: A Life on Screen, New York, 1996.

On FOSTER: articles—

Sight and Sound (London), August 1996.

* * *

Chameleon-like Foster was so versatile and invested her star-power into so many different film genres, it was difficult to find a tidy critical pigeonhole for her. Elusive in interviews, the intensely private Foster turned her attention to directing as a natural offshoot of her precise acting; a few years ago, her style-in-progress was pristine and liberal-minded, and non-threateningly offbeat. Now, that style just seems non-threatening.

There was something strikingly quirky about Foster at the start—or at least from her fifth film appearance as the tomboyish Audrey in Alice Doesn’t Live Her Anymore. Since that cherishing feminist road show, Foster has taken acting risks but has steered clear of the androgyny that was so arresting in her early films as a child. Certainly, it was brave of this young actress to explore adult psychosexuality by impersonating a teen streetwalker in Taxi Driver. That she succeeded so unconditionally in evoking this callow runaway’s unblinking acceptance of hooking is a testament to Foster’s innate talent. Too original a presence as a youngster, Foster simply did not have it in her to become America’s sweetheart, although Disney tried. The subversiveness of her brand of innocence (corrupted in Taxi Driver, turned homicidal in The Little Girl Who Lives down the Lane), found fuller expression in the teenaged angst of Foxes, an underappreciated examination of drifting adolescents turned off by parental hypocrisy and societal pressures. At this point, Foster might have become fossilized as a symbol of teen anomic, but she broadened her horizons by attending Yale and expanded the intelligence that had informed her work since childhood. Surviving the terrifying public ordeal of being stalked by John Hinckley, who shot President Reagan to impress her, she exhibited grace under fire, graduated with honors from school, and resumed her career with honors, too.

Before her breakout role in The Accused, nothing Foster chose was conventional, and, even in such pretentious misfires as Five Corners and Carney and in bombs such as Siesta and The Hotel New Hampshire, she infused the roles with keen self-awareness, a quality that stamped her as much too independent a presence to be at home in standard girlfriend roles. If The Accused is really a politically correct television movie at heart, Foster was a revelation as the revelation that riding-trash hedonist filing rape charges in order to regain the self-respect stolen in the assault. A female buddy-buddy movie to boot, The Accused stands or falls on Foster’s performance as a survivor who refused to be further victimized by the courts or by the caveman ideology of her attackers. Winning an Oscar for this and for a second less flashy role in The Silence of the Lambs, Foster found her niche as a feminist role model with a specialty in playing against-all-odds heroines. Battling her own psychological demons in Silence of the Lambs (a film turned down by several Hollywood names including Michelle Pfeiffer), Foster’s Clarice Starling not only proved she was just as good as the FBI’s male professionals but also outwitted two men, Buffalo Bill and Hannibal Lechter, who happen to be serial killing monsters. Since starring in a movie that ranks among the scariest of modern times, Foster has belligerently acquitted herself in period costumes as the staunch widow in Sommersby and played the Hollywood shell game deftly in the big-budgeted Maverick, in which she tantalizingly revealed a glib, subtly sexy movie star presence.

Confident enough to breeze through Maverick on charm, she won another Oscar nomination as the wild child adjusting to civilization in Nell, a film that would have seemed preposterous without her conviction. Sensitively piloting her debut film Little Man Tate, she floundered with her helming of the more-frenetic than-funny Home for the Holidays.

When one reads about Foster nowadays, however, she’s either directing another well-intentioned movie, discussing motherhood, or listing reasons for rejecting the Silence of the Lambs sequel. Although one can’t blame her for criticizing “Hannibal,” a best-seller that trashed her beloved character, the roles she has chosen showcased a surprisingly reined-in demeanor. Has there ever been a more sanctimonious bore than Contact, a cosmos opera that tries to locate Heaven as if it were the Bermuda Triangle of outer space? Although this movie was another box office salvo for Foster, one cannot make nobility one’s trademark without sending audiences into the arms of fallen angels elsewhere; just ask Greer Garson or Norma Shearer.

Working sporadically, Foster turned her back on the unconventional roles that once defined her stardom. Foolishly stepping into the hoopskirts memorably tailored to Irene Dunne and Deborah Kerr, Foster remade Anna Leonowens’ memoirs, while struggling with an English accent and a porky vis-à-vis. Although never a powerhouse in the sexuality department, she was believably smitten in Sommersby and Maverick, vehicles that revealed an allure that her latest, disappointing films lack; all she transmitted in her recent work is the primness of a schoolmarm. Although no one would insist she go cannibal for Hannibal, she shouldn’t continue performing in a vein that seems more like lecturing than acting. Once an artistic gambler, Foster now seems to be hiding from herself in roles that limit her range. She acts like someone who’s already won a lifetime achievement award and doesn’t want to choose any films that might mar her record.

—Robert Pardi
FREEMAN, Morgan

Nationality: American. Born: Memphis, Tennessee, 1 June 1937; grew up in Greenwood, Mississippi. Family: Married 1) Jeanette Adair Bradshaw (divorced), daughter: Morgana, adopted Bradshaw’s daughter, Deena; 2) the costume designer Myrna Colley-Lee; has two sons, Alphonso and Saifoulaye, from other relationships. Education: Attended Los Angeles City College. Military Service: Served in the U.S. Air Force, 1955–59. Career: Took up acting while at college, 1960; had a small role in a touring company of The Royal Hunt of the Sun and worked with the Opera Ring, a San Francisco musical-theater troupe, 1960s; worked as dancer at the New York World’s Fair, 1964; made his off-Broadway debut in The Niggerlovers and his Broadway debut in all-black-cast production of Hello, Dolly!, with Pearl Bailey, 1967; made his film debut in small role in Who Says I Can’t Ride a Rainbow?, 1971; played the role of “Easy Reader” on the PBS TV series The Electric Company, 1971–76; continued acting on stage, 1970s; first came to prominence with his stage role in The Mighty Gents, 1978; had his first important screen role in Street Smart, 1987; returned to the stage as Petruchio opposite Tracey Ullman in The Taming of the Shrew, 1991; made his directorial debut with Bopha!, 1993. Awards: Obie Award for Coriolanus, 1979; Obie Award for Mother Courage and Her Children, 1980; Obie Award for The Gospel at Colonus, 1984; Obie Award for Driving Miss Daisy, 1987; Clarece Derwent and Drama Desk Awards, for The Mighty Gents, 1978; Best Supporting Male Independent Spirit Award, National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Supporting Actor, for Street Smart, 1987; National Board of Review Best Actor, Berlin Film Festival Best Acting Team (with Jessica Tandy), Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture-Comedy/Drama Golden Globe, for Driving Miss Daisy, 1989; London Critics Circle Actor of the Year, for Se7en, 1995; Outstanding Supporting Actor in a Motion Picture Image Award, for Amistad, 1997; Outstanding Supporting Actor in a Motion Picture Image Award, for Deep Impact, 1998; Brussels International Film Festival Crystal Iris, 1998; Acapulco Black Film Festival Career Achievement Award, 1998. Agent: William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Drive, Beverly Hills, CA 90210, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1965 The Pawnbroker (Lumet) (extra)
1971 Who Says I Can’t Ride a Rainbow? (Barney) (Edward Mann) (as Afro)
1978 Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry (Smight—for TV)
1979 Hollow Image (Chomsky—for TV) (as Sweet Talk)
1980 Brubaker (Rosenberg) (as Walter); Attica (Chomsky—for TV) (as Hap Richards)
1981 Eyewitness (The Janitor) (Yates) (as Lt. Black); The Marva Collins Story (Levin—for TV) (as Clarence Collins); Death of a Prophet (King Jr.)
1984 Teachers (Hillier) (as Lewis); Harry & Son (Paul Newman) (as Siemianowski)
1985 Marie (Donaldson) (as Charles Traughber); That Was Then . . . This Is Now (Cain) (as Charlie Woods); The Atlanta Child Murders (Erman—for TV) (as Ben Shelter)
1986 Resting Place (Korty—for TV) (as Luther Johnson)
1987 Street Smart (Schatzberg) (as Fast Black); Fight for Life (Silverstein—for TV) (as Dr. Sherard)
1988 Clean and Sober (Caron) (as Craig); Clinton and Nadine (Blood Money) (Schatzberg—for TV) (as Dorsey Pratt)
1989 Glory (Zwick) (as John Rawlins); Lean on Me (Avildsen) (as Joe Clark); Driving Miss Daisy (Beresford) (as Hoke Colburn); Johnny Handsome (Walter Hill) (as Lt. A. Z. Drones); The Execution of Raymond Graham (Petro—for TV)
1990 The Bonfire of the Vanities (DePalma) (as Judge Leonard White)
1991 Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves (Kevin Reynolds) (as Azeem)
1992 Unforgiven (Eastwood) (as Ned Logan); The Power of One (Avildsen) (as Geel Piet)
1994 The Shawshank Redemption (Darabont) (as Ellis “Red” Redding)
1995 Outbreak (Petersen) (as Gen. Billy Ford); Se7en (Fincher) (as Detective William Sommerser)
1996 Moll Flanders (Densham) (as Jimmy); Chain Reaction (Davis) (as Paul Shannon); Cosmic Voyage (Silleck) (doc) (short) (as Narrator)
1997 The Long Way Home (Harris) (as Narrator); Kiss the Girls (Fleider) (as Alex Cross); Amistad (Spiegelberg) (as Theodore Joadson)
1998 Screening (Cates Jr.) (short) (as himself); Deep Impact (Mimi Leder) (as President Tom Beck); Hard Rain (Salomon) (as Jim)
1999 Water Damage (Battle) (as Tom Preedy); Mutiny (Hooks—for TV) (ro + co-exec pr)
2000 Along Came a Spider (Tamahori) (as Alex) (+ exec pr); Long Way to Freedom (Kapur) (as Nelson Mandela); Rendezvous With Rama (Fincher) (as Commander William T. Norton); Under Suspicion (Hopkins) (+ exec pr); Nurse Betty (LaBute)

Film as Director:

1993 Bopha!

Publications

By FREEMAN: articles—

“Free Man,” interview with G. Fuller, in Interview (New York), June 1996.

On FREEMAN: books—
DeAngelis, Gina, Morgan Freeman—Actor, Broomall, 1999.

On FREEMAN: articles—

Farber, S., “Morgan Freeman in ‘Seven,’” in Movieline (Escondido), September 1996.

* * *

For years, Morgan Freeman was an award-winning stage actor who occasionally would appear in supporting roles in movies. While he may have been a known quantity to discerning theatergoers, he was barely a name (if not a face) to the public at large: His greatest mass exposure had come during the 1970s, when he played “Easy Reader” on the PBS children’s series The Electric Company. As late as 1983—even after winning two Obie Awards, Clarence Derwent and Drama Desk awards, and a Tony nomination—he seriously considered abandoning acting and becoming a taxi driver.

Freeman’s career went on the permanent upswing in 1987 when he riveted audiences as Fast Black, a vicious, slyly evil pimp, in the grade-B urban crime drama Street Smart. He was especially effective as his character segued from relaxed cordiality to menacing, frightening evil. Not all moviegoers immediately became aware of Freeman, because Street Smart is a genre film that appealed only to a narrow audience. Nevertheless, critics who otherwise might pass by such a film were taken by his memorable acting. Pauline Kael, one of the most influential of all American critics, asked point-blank in her review, “Is Morgan Freeman the greatest American actor?” As a result, Freeman earned a Best Supporting Actor Oscar nomination, a rare feat for a performance in a film like Street Smart.

One of Freeman’s most memorable characterizations came in a film that is strikingly dissimilar to Street Smart: Driving Miss Daisy, set in the pre-integration South, in which he plays Hoke Colburn, a modest, unpretentious black man hired as chauffeur to a petulant white lady (Jessica Tandy). Freeman, who also played the role on stage, makes Hoke likable and deeply sympathetic. His subtle performance also allows the viewer a peek into the soul of a black man who not only had come of age but had grown to maturity in a segregated Southern society. Freeman and Tandy's performances blend beautifully together, and both actors earned Oscar nominations. She, and not he, won the statuette, but his performance as Hoke nonetheless served as testimony that the actor was no Oscar nominee one-shot.

Freeman is capable of creating a wide range of characters. If he played a bad guy who was tough and satanic in Street Smart, he also could play good guys who are tough and dynamic (real-life high school principal Joe Clark in Lean on Me); tough and thoughtful (the grave digger who becomes a Civil War infantry recruit in Glory, the ex-addict who conducts a therapy group in Clean and Sober); and tough and world-weary (the veteran cop on the trail of a serial killer in Se7en). In Deep Impact, a disaster epic about a comet set to crash into Earth, he is a commanding and reassuring presence as a U.S. President: yet another role that is the direct opposite of the one that earned him celluloid stardom.

In Driving Miss Daisy, Freeman shined in a starring role; yet he also has had the sense to accept quality roles in quality films even if those parts are satellites of the scenario’s main character. This was the case in Unforgiven, in which Freeman plays Clint Eastwood’s cowboy buddy; and The Shawshank Redemption, in which he is cast as the wizened veteran convict who befriends falsely convicted Tim Robbins. For the latter film, Freeman netted his third Oscar nomination. One major film in which he was sorely underused is Amistad, Steven Spielberg’s pre-Civil War morality tale, in which Freeman plays a former slave/Boston abolitionist; Anthony Hopkins and Djimon Hounsou have the showy roles, and give the flashy performances. And he has emerged unscathed from his few unwise career choices, most notably his casting as the judge in the mega-bomb The Bonfire of the Vanities.

In 1993, Freeman made his directorial debut with Bopha!, a tense, politically savvy drama about Master Sergeant Micah Mangena (Danny Glover), a black policeman in a South African township. Mangena teaches his class of new recruits that their job is to “uphold the law, and maintain the peace.” To many, in particular South Africa’s political radicals, Mangena is little more than an Uncle Tom, a tool of the white ruling class, a cog in a system in which blacks are oppressed. His world is destined to crumble, and he will undergo a crisis of conscience, when his son, whom he expects to become a police officer, takes part in a rebellion against the discipline and curriculum of the local white-run school. This choice of projects serves as evidence that Freeman is fully aware of his role as an African-American artist, and that he is concerned with examining black characters in all their flaws and contradictions.

—Rob Edelman

FRESNAY, Pierre

Films as Actor:

1915 France d’abord (Pouctal)
1916 Quand même (Pouctal)
1920 L’Esor (Burguet)
1922 Les Mystères de Paris (Burguet) (as Prince Rodolphe); Le Diamant noir (Hugon); La Baillonnée (Burguet); Les Premières Armes de Rocambole (Maudru and de Marsan); Le Petit Jacques
1928 La Vierge folle (Morat)
1930 Ça aussi c’est Paris (Moure)
1931 Marius (Korda) (title role)
1932 Fanny (Allégret) (as Marius)
1933 Ame de clown (Noé and Didier) (as Jack)
1934 La Dame aux camélias (Camille) (Gance) (as Armand Duvall); The Man Who Knew Too Much (Hitchcock) (as Louis Bernard)
1935 Le Roman d’un jeune homme pauvre (Gance) (as le jeune homme pauvre)
1936 Koenigsmark (Tourneur) (as Raoul Vignette); Sous les yeux d’occident (Razumov) (Allégret) (as Razumov); César (Pagnol) (as Marius); Mademoiselle Docteur (Salonique; Nid d’espions; Street of Shadows) (Pabst) (as Capitaine Carrière)
1937 La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoin) (as Capitaine de Boeldieu); La Bataille silencieuse (Billon) (as René Bordier); Le Puritain (Musso) (as Le Commissaire de police); Chéri-Bibi (Mathot) (title role)
1938 Adrienne Lecouvreur (L’Herbier) (as Maurice de Saxe); Alerte en Méditerranée (SOS Mediterranean) (Joannon) (as Le
Pierre Fresnay (left) with Erich von Stroheim in La Grande Illusion

Commandant Lestailleur; Trois Valses (Three Waltzes) (Berger) (three roles)

1939 La Charrette fantôme (Duvivier) (as David Holm)
1941 Le Dernier des six (Lacombe) (as L’Inspecteur Wens); Les Inconnus dans la maison (Decoin) (as narrator); Le Briseur de chaînes (Mamouret) (Norman) (as Le Dompteur)
1942 Le Journal tombe à cinq heures (Lacombe) (as Le Reporter); L’Assassin habite au 21 (The Murderer Lives at Number 21) (Clouzot) (as Commissaire Wens); Les Inconnus dans la maison (Decoin) (as narrator); Le Briseur de chaînes (Mamouret) (Norman) (as Le Dompteur)
1943 Le Corbeau (The Raven) (Clouzot) (as Docteur Germain); Je suis avec toi (Decoin) (as François); Le Voyageur sans bagage (Anouilh) (as Gaston); L’Escalier sans fin (Lacombe) (as Le Mauvais Garçon)
1945 La Fille du diable (The Devil’s Daughter) (Decoin) (as Ludovic Mercier-Saget)
1946 Le Visiteur (Tainted) (Dréville) (as M. Sauval)
1947 Monsieur Vincent (Cloche) (title role); Les Condamnés (Lacombe) (as Jean Séverac)
1948 Barry (Pottier) (as Le Moine Théotime); Combourg, visage de pierre (de Casembroot—short) (as narrator)
1949 Au grand balcon (Decoin) (as Didier Daurat); Vient de paraître (Houssin) (as L’Editor Moscat); La Valse de Paris (The Paris Waltz) (Achard) (as Offenbach); Gisants (Noël—short) (as narrator)
1950 Ce siècle a cinquante ans (Tual) (as narrator); Dieu a besoin des hommes (God Needs Men) (Delannoy) (as Thomas Gourvenne); Justice est faite (Cayatte) (as voice); Vezelay (Zimmer—short) (as narrator); Le Pèlerin de la beauch (Chateau—short) (as narrator)
1951 Un Grand Patron (The Perfectionist) (Ciampi) (as Louis Delage); Monsieur Fabre (The Amazing Monsieur Fabre) (Diamant-Berger) (as Jean Henri Fabre); Voyage en Amérique (Voyage to America) (Lavorel) (as Gaston Fournier)
1952 Il est minuit, Docteur Schweitzer (Haguett)
1953 Le Défroqué (Joannon) (as Morand); La Route Napoléon (Delannoy) (as Edouard Martel)
1954 Les Évadés (Le Chanois) (as Le Lieutenant Pierre)
1955 Les Aristocrates (de la Patelliére) (as Marquis de Maubrun)
1956 L’Homme aux clefs d’or (Joannon) (title role); Fleuve Dieu (Jallaud—short) (as narrator)
1957 Les Fantatiques (A Bomb for a Dictator) (Joffé) (as Luis); Les Oeufs de l’autruche (The Ostrich Has Two Eggs) (de la Patelliére) (as Hippolyte Barjus)
1958 Et ta soeur? (Delbez); Tant d’amour perdu (Joannon) (as le père faible)
Pierre Fresnay was interested in being an actor from an early age, and was helped in his ambitions by his uncle, the actor Jules Dietz, a member of the Comédie Française (and a film actor under the name of Claude Garry). Fresnay made recitations on family occasions from the age of five, performed in a vaudeville of Jean Cocteau, and made his stage debut at 14 in a small part with the actress Réjane at her own theater. With his uncle’s help, and because of the mobilization of several actors during the war, Fresnay was able to make his debut at the Comédie Française at the age of 18, and to keep his position there after the war was over. Though he resigned from the Comédie Française in 1926 over its preferential treatment practices, and was fined for breaching his contract, his years there had confirmed his interest in stage acting. He continued to act on the stage, and from 1937 to co-manage his own company, until the end of his life.

Fresnay’s 60-year-long film acting career began with small parts in the 1910s and 1920s. His film “break” came with the arrival of sound, and his being cast in the title role of Marius. He had played the role in the stage version, though his co-star, Raimu, and even the author, Maurice Pagnol, had expressed doubts concerning Fresnay’s temperament and his over-distinguished theatrical demeanor. Yet the apprehensions proved unfounded, the play was a popular and critical success (reaching a record number of performances), and the film was also highly acclaimed. The sequels, Fanny and César (directed by Pagnol himself), were equally well-received.

Fresnay’s versatility was proved by the different roles he played in Ane de Clown, The Man Who Knew Too Much (a French spy), Sous les yeux d’occident (the counter-revolutionary Rasputin), and Cheri-Bibi (a convict). But what really solidified his film career was his role as a French officer in Renoir’s La Grande Illusion. He and von Stroheim represent two mutually antagonistic countries at war, yet they find mutual sympathy for one another on the basis of a common social class. In another group of films, Fresnay portrayed detectives: Puritain, Dernier des six, and L’Assassin habite au 21 (in the last two of which he played Inspector Wens, created by Georges Simenon).

Another group of films, in which he was cast in historical biographies, began with Monsieur Vincent, in which he played Saint Vincent de Paul; he played the pioneer flyer Didier Daurat in Au grand balcon, the composer Offenbach in La Valse de Paris, Schweitzer in Il est minuit, Docteur Schweitzer, and the scientist Henri Fabre in Monsieur Fabre.

His film work in the 1950s and after is generally thought to be outdated, but he made such interesting films as Le Défroqué and Les Évadés, and continued to work on television until his death.

—Karel Tabery
GABIN, Jean

Nationality: French. Born: Jean-Alexis Moncorgé in Paris, 17 May 1904; some sources give surname as Moncorgé and Morcorge; father a café entertainier who performed using the name Gabin. Military Service: Joined Free French, 1943; participated in Normandy invasion, 1944; received Croix de Guerre and Médaille Militaire; Family: Married 1) Gaby Basset, 1928 (divorced 1931); 2) Jeanne Susanne Mauchin, 1932 (divorced 1942); 3) Dominique Fournier, 1949, children: Florence, Valerie, and Mathias. Career: 1919—apprenticed to construction company, Chapelle; also worked as auto mechanic; 1920—through father’s friendship with impresario Fréjol, engaged at Folies Bergère; 1924–25—military service in French navy; 1926—performed in theater, cabaret, and vaudeville; 1930—engaged at Folies Bergère; 1924–25—military service in French navy; 1934—began collaboration with director Julien Duvivier on many; 1934—began working for 20th Century-Fox; 1954—career revived Maria Chapdelaine; 1967 Le Soleil des voyous (Action Man) (Delannoy); Le Pacha (Lautner)

Films as Actor:

1931 Chacun sa chance (La Chute dans le bonheur) (Steinhoff and Pujol—French version of Steinhoff’s Kopfbel der Glück); Mephisto (Debain and Winter—serial); Paris-bégain (Genina); Gloria (Behrendt and Noé—French version of Behrendt’s Gloria); Tant ça ne vaut pas l’amour (Jacques Tourneur); Cœurs de Lili’s (Litvak); Cœurs joyeux (Schwartz and de Vaucorbeil)

1932 La Belle Marinière (Lachman); Les Gâtés de l’Escadron (Maurice Tourneur); La Foule hurle (Daumery and Hawks—French version of Hawks’s The Crowd Roars)

1933 L’Étoile de Valencia (de Poligny—French version of Zeisler’s Stern von Valencia); Adieu les beaux jours (Meyer and Beucler—French version of Meyer’s Die schönen Tagen von Aranjuez); Le Tunnel (Bernhardt—French version of Der Tunnel); Du haut en bas (Pabst); Au bout de monde (Ucicky)

1934 Zouzou (Allégret); Maria Chapdelaine (Duvivier)

1935 Golgotha (Duvivier) (as Pontius Pilate); La Bandéra (Duvivier); Varrétés (Farkas)

1936 La Belle Équipe (Duvivier) (as Jean); Les Bas-fonds (Renoir) (as Pepel); Pépé le Moko (Duvivier) (title role)

1937 La Grande Illusion (Grand Illusion) (Renoir) (as Maréchal); Le Messager (Rouleau); Gueule d’amour (Grémillon)

1938 Le Quai des brumes (Carné); La Bête humaine (Renoir) (as Lantier)

1939 Le Récif de corail (Gleize); Le Jour se lève (Carné) (as François)

1941 Remorques (Grémillon)

1942 Moontide (Mayo)

1944 The Imposter (Strange Confession) (Duvivier)

1946 Martin Roumagnac (The Room Upstairs) (Lacombe) (title role)

1947 Miroir (Lamy)

1949 Au-delà des grilles (Le mura di Malapaga; The Walls of Malapaga) (Clément); La Marie du port (Carné)

1950 E pia facile che un cammello . . . (Pour l’amour du ciel) (Zampa)

1951 Victor (Heymann); La Nuit est mon royaume (The Night Is My Kingdom) (Lacombe); ‘La Maison Tellier’ ep. of Le Plaisir (Ophuls); La Vérité sur Bébé Donge (Decoin)

1952 La Minute de vérité (Delannoy); Buffle (Fille dangereuse) (Brignone); Echos de plateau (Knapp and Barrière—short)

1953 Leur Dernière Nuit (Lacombe); La Vierge du Rhin (Grangier); Touchez pas au grisbi (Becker) (as Max le menteur)

1954 L’Air de Paris (Carné); Napoléon (Guity); Le Port du désir (Gréville); French Cancan (Renoir); Razzia sur la chnouf (Decoin)

1955 Chiens perdus sans collier (Delannoy); Gas-oil (Grangier); Des gens sans importance (Verneuil); Voici le temps des assassins (Murder à la Carte) (Duvivier); Le Sang à la tête (Grangier)

1956 La Traversée de Paris (Four Bags Full) (Autant-Lara); Crime et châtiment (The Most Dangerous Sin) (Lampin); Le Cas du docteur Laurent (Le Chanois)

1957 Le Rouge est mis (Grangier); Maigret tend un piège (Delannoy) (title role); Les Misérables (Le Chanois)

1958 Le Désordre et la nuit (Grangier); En cas de malheur (Grangier); Les Grandes Familles (de la Patellière); Archimède le clochard (Grangier) (+ story); Maigret et l’affaire Saint-Fiacre (Delannoy) (title role)

1959 Rue des prairies (de la Patellière); Le Baron de l’écluse (Delannoy); Les Vieux de la vieille (Grangier)

1961 Le Président (Verneuil); Le Cave se rebiffe (Grangier)

1962 Un Singe en hiver (Monkey in Winter) (Verneuil); Le Gentleman d’Epsom (Les Grands Seigneurs) (Le Chanois)

1965 Le Tonnerre de Dieu (de la Patellière)

1966 Du Rififi à Paname (The Upper Hand; Rififi in Paris) (de la Patellière); Le Jardinier d’Argenteuil (Le Chanois)

1967 Le Soleil des voyous (Action Man) (Delannoy); Le Pacha (Lautner)
1968 Le Tatoué (de la Patellière); Le Clan des Siciliens (Verneuil)
1969 Sous le signe du taureau (Grangier)
1970 La Horse (Granier-Defere)
1971 Le Chat (Granier-Defere); De Drapeau noir flotte sur le marmite (Audiard)
1972 Le Tueur (de la Patellière); L’Affaire Dominici (Bernard-Aubert)
1973 Deux Hommes dans la ville (Giovanni)
1974 Verdict (Cayatte)
1975 L’Année sainte (Girault)

Publications

By GABIN: article—

‘‘Jean Renoir de Nana à La Grande Illusion,’’ interview by C. Gauteur in Image et Son (Paris), May 1975.

On GABIN: books—

On GABIN: articles—

Cowie, Peter, “‘Jean Gabin,’” in Films and Filming (London), February 1964.

* * *

Although rarely an actor of great inspiration or subtlety, Jean Gabin was never less than a dedicated, conscientious performer who brought to his roles a measured but compelling authority. Whether as the doomed romantic figure of his 1930s films or the embodiment of stoic calm and worldly wisdom in his later parts, Gabin possessed an extraordinarily powerful screen presence which successive directors, notably Carné, Duvivier, Grémillon, and Renoir, exploited.

After an invaluable if reluctant apprenticeship, Gabin established himself in films as the engaging, noble, and principled hero of humble origins (La Bandéra, La Belle Equipe, La Grande Illusion) and confirmed his popular image in a succession of darkly fatalistic roles that encapsulated the pessimistic mood prevalent in the France of the late 1930s. In Pépé le Moko Gabin played a hunted criminal trapped in the Casbah. Infatuated with a socially superior woman, he is tempted to leave his safe hiding place only to be gunned down as she sails for France. Quai des brumes reveals him as a cynical army deserter falling in love with a romantically idealistic young girl who is dominated by her vicious guardian. Impetuously he murders this tyrant before falling victim to violence himself. In La Bête humaine, based on Zola’s novel, he assumed the role of the train driver with a flawed heredity who commits suicide after impulsively killing his mistress. In Le Jour se lève he again takes his own life after murdering the despicable seducer of an innocent flower seller. Central to these highly commercial and artistically successful roles was Gabin’s cultivated image as the taciturn, uncompromising working-class male who, though well intentioned and possessing clear moral integrity, finds himself on the wrong side of society’s laws. Strong and resilient, yet revealing hidden depths of gentleness and generosity, he remains faithful to his ideals despite the adversity of circumstance. With his simple, honest, direct approach, Gabin embodied values which appealed to contemporary audiences: he was a hero of their stature, unassuming, vulnerable, essentially pure and noble, and facing a dark and menacing world.

In the postwar mood of optimism, Gabin’s image as the doomed proletarian hero was no longer fashionable. Although his performance as a blind tramp in La Nuit est mon royaume was well received, it was not until his role in Touchez pas au grisbi that he again captured the public imagination. Now cast as a retired gangster lured back to Paris for a final spectacular coup, he evolved a new image as the experienced, assured male firmly in control of his destiny and no longer vulnerable to female charms. In subsequent roles he combined a practical wisdom with the inherent humanity of his screen personality to uphold the notion that virtue and justice are rewarded. The former criminal, social outcast, and working-class hero of the 1930s became the respectable middle-class professional of the 1950s in the guise of doctor (La Minute de vérité), powerful industrialist (Le Sang à la tête), banker (Les Grandes Familles), lawyer (En cas de malheur), detective (Maigret tend un piège), and judge (Chiens perdus sans collier). These roles projected a new set of values and dispositions: pragmatism and intelligence rather than idealism and physical courage; mature reflection rather than impetuous commitment; serenity rather than a tortured soul.
In a period of renewed self-confidence and self-sufficiency Gabin once again reflected national attitudes. Comic roles were added to his repertoire as the anarchistic tramp in Archimède le clochard, the wily politician with a wicked sense of fun in Le Président, and the disruptive inmate of a retirement home in Les Vieux de la vieille (here co-starring with two long established film comedians, Bourvil and Funès). Co-starring became an important feature of Gabin’s later screen career, either appearing with his contemporaries, or in association with the younger generation of rising stars such as Brigitte Bardot in En cas de malheur and Jean-Paul Belmondo in Un Singe en hiver. Such was Gabin’s continuing popular appeal that his presence in a film was a virtual guarantee of commercial success and, apart from the temporary eclipse in the late 1940s, he is acknowledged as one of the enduring mainstays of the French film industry over a period of 30 years.

—R. F. Cousins

GABLE, Clark

Nationality: American. Born: William Clark Gable in Cadiz, Ohio, 1 February 1901. Education: Attended school in Hopedale, Ohio; Akron University in evening classes. Military Service: 1942–45—U.S. Army Air Corps: narrated several Air Corps films; discharged as major. Family: Married 1) Josephine Dillon, 1924 (divorced 1930); 2) Ria Langham, 1931 (divorced 1939); 3) the actress Carole Lombard, 1939 (died 1942); 4) Lady Sylvia Ashley, 1949 (divorced 1951); 5) Kay Speckles, 1955, son: John Clark. Career: Factory worker in Akron; 1919—callboy in Broadway theaters (for John and Lionel Barrymore in The Jest); worked in oil fields in Oklahoma for a year; 1920–22—utility man and actor with Jewell Players, a tent show repertory company; then joined theater group in Portland, Oregon; 1924—first appearance in bit part in Forbidden Paradise; on Los Angeles stage in Romeo and Juliet and What Price Glory, and with a Texas stock company; 1928—Broadway debut in Machinal, then other stage work in New York; 1931—debut in sound films, The Painted Desert; 1934—MGM contract; 1945—returned to films with Adventure; 1956—co-founder, Russ-Field Gabco production company. Awards: Oscar for Best Actor, for It Happened One Night, 1934. Died: Of heart attack, 16 November 1960.

Films as Actor:

1924 Forbidden Paradise (Lubitsch) (bit role); White Man (Gassner)
1925 The Merry Widow (von Stroheim) (bit role); The Pacemakers (Ruggles—serial); Declassée (The Social Exile) (Vignola) (bit role); The Plastic Age (Ruggles) (bit role); North Star (Powell)
1926 The Johnstown Flood (The Flood) (Cummings) (bit role); The Collegians (serial)
1931 The Painted Desert (Higgins) (as Brett); The Easiest Way (Conway) (as Nick); The Secret Six (Hill) (as Carl); The Finger Points (Dillon) (as Louis Blanco); Laughing Sinners (Beaumont) (as Carl Loomis); A Free Soul (Brown) (as Ace Wilfong); The Christmas Party (Jacque Cooper’s Christmas) (Reisner—short) (as himself); Night Nurse (Wellman) (as Nick); Sporting Blood (Brabin) (as Tip Scanlon); Dance, Fools, Dance (Beaumont) (as Jake Luva); Susan Lenox, Her Fall and Rise (The Rise of Helga) (Leonard) (as Rodney Spencer); Possessed (Brown) (as Mark Whitney); Hell Divers (Hill) (as Steve)
1932 Polly of the Circus (Santell) (as the Reverend John Hartley); Strange Interlude (Strange Interval) (Leonard) (as Ned Darrell); Red Dust (Fleming) (as Denis Carson); No Man of Her Own (Ruggles) (as Babe Stewart)
1933 The White Sister (Fleming) (as Giovanni Severi); Hold Your Man (Wood) (as Eddie Nugent); Night Flight (Brown) (as Fabian); Dancing Lady (Leonard) (as Patch Galagher)
1934 It Happened One Night (Capra) (as Peter Warne); Men in White (Boleslawski) (as Dr. George Ferguson); Manhattan Melodrama (Van Dyke) (as Blackie Gallagher); Chained (Brown) (as Mike Bradley)
1935 Forsaking All Others (Van Dyke) (as Jeff Williams); After Office Hours (Leonard) (as Jim Branch); The Call of the Wild (Wellman) (as Jake Thorton); China Seas (Garnett) (as Alan Gaskell); Matiny on the Bounty (Lloyd) (as Fletcher Christian)
1936 Wife versus Secretary (Brown) (as Dan Sanford); San Francisco (Van Dyke) (as Blackie Norton); Cain and Mabel (Bacon) (as Larry Cain); Love on the Run (Van Dyke) (as Michael Anthony); Parnell (Stahl) (title role)
1937 Saratoga (Conway) (as Duke Bradley)
1938 Test Pilot (Fleming) (as Jim Lane); Too Hot to Handle (Conway) (as Chris Hunter)
1939 Idiot’s Delight (Brown) (as Harry Van); Gone with the Wind (Fleming) (as Rhett Butler)
1940 Strange Cargo (Borzage) (as Verne); Boomtown (Conway) (as John “Big John” McMasters); Comrade X (King Vidor) (as McKinley Thompson)

1941 They Met in Bombay (Brown) (as Gerald Meldrick); Honky Tonk (Conway) (as Candy Johnson)

1942 Somewhere I’ll Find You (Ruggles) (as Johnny Davis); March of Dimes (Whitebeck—short)

1943 Hollywood in Uniform (short) (as himself)

1944 Aerial Gunner (Air Corp—short) (as narrator); Be Careful! (Air Corps—short) (as narrator); Wings Up (Air Corps—short) (as narrator); Combat America (Air Corps—short) (as narrator)

1945 Adventure (Fleming) (as Henry Patterson)

1947 The Hucksters (Conway) (as Vic Norman); Homecoming (LeRoy) (as Dr. Ulysses Johnson)

1948 Command Decision (Wood) (as Brigadier General K. C. Dennis)

1949 Any Number Can Play (LeRoy) (as Charley King)

1950 Key to the City (Sidney) (as Steve Fisk); To Please a Lady (Brown) (as Mike Brannon)

1951 Across the Wide Missouri (Wellman) (as Flint Mitchell); Callaway Went Thataway (The Star Said No) (Panama and Frank) (as himself)

1952 Lonely Star (Sherman) (as Deveraux Burke)

1953 Never Let Me Go (Daves) (as Philip Sutherland)

1954 Mogambo (John Ford) (as Victor Marswell); Betrayed (Reinhardt) (as Colonel Pieter Deventer)

1955 Soldier of Fortune (Dmytryk) (as Hank Lee); The Tall Men (Walsh) (as Ben Allison)

1956 King and Four Queens (Walsh) (as Dan Kehoe)

1957 Band of Angels (Walsh) (as Hamish Bond)

1958 Run Silent, Run Deep (Wise) (as Commander “Rich” Richardson); Teacher’s Pet (Seaton) (as James Gannon)

1959 But Not for Me (Walter Lang) (as Russel Ward)

1960 It Started in Naples (Shavelson) (as Mike Hamilton)

1961 The Misfits (Huston) (as Guy Langland)

Publications

On GABLE: books—

On GABLE: articles—

Current Biography 1945, New York, 1945.

Stars (Mariembourg), March 1990.

Farber, S., “Clark Gable in San Francisco,” in Movieline (Escondido, California), September 1997.

* * *

Crowned King of Hollywood in 1937, Clark Gable remains unchallenged American royalty. He is remembered as the man who made the pencil mustache de rigueur, a casual self-confidence, and an innate sense of humor. But it was what Joan Crawford described as his “sheer animal magic,” his magnetic and overt virility, which separated him from the rest, even offscreen; a recent tell-all by Judy Lewis, the daughter of Loretta Young, revealed the long-kept secret of a Gable/Young love affair that spawned Lewis herself. Gable’s only acknowledged child, John Clark Gable, the result of his union with Kay Speckles, was born shortly after Gable died.

Hailed as Valentino with a voice, Clark Gable embodied sex appeal. It was his “you’ll take it and like it” attitude towards Norma Shearer in A Free Soul that catapulted the 30-year-old actor into stardom and kept him among the top ten box-office stars for the next 12 years (1932–43); by 1939 he was earning $5,000 per week.

Gable signed the first in a series of long-term contracts with MGM in December 1930 and worked for the studio until he began freelancing in 1954. The vast majority of his Metro assignments were star vehicles (Chained, Saratoga, Test Pilot, and Honky Tonk). These were pictures whose commercial success depended almost entirely on his name and that of the studio’s top leading ladies, particularly Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy, and Lana Turner. In these films, Gable played the same role time and time again—a roué with a heart of gold.

During the 1930s his occasional opportunities to do something beyond formula material were more often fortuitous than calculated. His casting in a comedy on “Poverty Row” (Columbia’s Happened One Night) was designed as a punishment for uncooperative behavior; Call of the Wild was another loan-out; Mutiny on the Bounty and San Francisco were both films Gable himself resisted doing.

The undisputed pinnacle of his career was his role as Rhett Butler in Gone with the Wind, another part he initially resisted. Assisted by one of his favorite directors, Victor Fleming, Gable created perhaps the most popular romantic figure of the twentieth century. Offscreen, Gable lived out the myth of the great lover by marrying actress Carole Lombard. Her unexpected death in 1942 drastically changed the actor’s attitude towards his life and his work. He turned his back on Hollywood and joined the Army Air Corps. After a two-year absence from the screen, Gable returned with a new seriousness. Personal grief and depression, combined with the onset of middle age, deeply affected his off-screen persona. For many, the motion picture business seemed frivolous after the war; Gable concurred. Even the now-famous slogan for his first postwar film (Adventure), “Gable’s Back and Garson’s Got Him!,” struck the actor as frivolous.

Despite the relative infrequency of his screen appearances, Gable reclaimed his top ten box-office status in 1947, 1948, and 1949. His enormous popularity began to wane only in the last decade of his life, and his final performance, delivered with remarkable sensitivity and conviction, was his own heart attack, which, some maintained, was brought on by the strain of doing his own stunt work at Huston’s urging during the film’s climactic mustang roundup. It was Gable himself who insisted on doing many of his own stunts for the required close-ups. But, contrary to rumor, the real rough-and-tumble action was carried out in long shot by Gable’s double, a professional stuntman. This final performance, delivered with remarkable sensitivity and conviction, stands as a tribute, not only to a great star but to the accomplished actor Gable was not always given credit for being.

—Joanne L. Yeck, updated by John McCarty

GANZ, Bruno

Nationality: Swiss. Born: Zurich, 22 March 1941. Military Service: Served in military. Family: Married in 1965; one son. Career: After military service, joined the Student Theatre in West Germany; also acted in other theaters in Germany; 1961—film debut in Chikita; 1970—co-founder, Schaubühne, Berlin, and acted in productions there for the next six years, and later in title role of Hamlet, 1982; after 1978—lived in Zurich; 1982—co-directed the film Gedächtnis. Awards: Deutscher Filmpreis for Acting, for The Marquise of O, 1976; Official Screening Award, Barcelona Television Festival, for Richter in Angst, Ein, 1997; Adolf Grimme Award, for Gegen Ende der Nacht, 1999.

Films as Actor:

1961 Chikita (Wenn Männer Schlange stehen) (Suter)
1962 Es Dach überem Chopf (Früh)
1967 Der sanfte Lauf (Senft) (as Bernard Kral)
1975 Sommergäste (Summer Guests) (Stein) (as Yakov Schalimov); Die Marquise von O (The Marquise of O) (Rohmer) (as the Russian count)
1976 Lumièere (Moreau) (as Heinrich Grun); Die Wildente (The Wild Duck) (Geissendörfer) (as Gregor)
1977 Der Amerikanische Freund (The American Friend) (Wenders) (as Jonathan Zimmermann); Die linkshändige Frau (The Left-Handed Woman) (Handke) (as Bruno)
1978 Retour à la bienaimée (Adam); Schwarz und Weiss wie Tage und Nächte (Black and White Like Day and Night) (Petersen) (as Thomas Rosenmund); Messer im Kopf (Knife in the Head) (Hauff) (as Berthold Hoffmann); The Boys from Brazil (Schaffner) (as Prof. Bruckner)
1979 Nosferatu—Phantom der Nacht (Nosferatu—The Vampire) (Herzog) (as Jonathan Harker); 5% de risque (Pourtale); Oggetti smarriti (G. Bertolucci)
1980 La Provinciale (The Girl from Lorraine) (Goretta) (as Remy); La Dame aux camélias (Bolognini); Polenta (Simon); Der Erfinder (The Inventor) (Gloor) (as Yokob Nüssli)
1981 Die Fälschung (Circle of Deceit) (Schlöndorf) (as Georg Laschen); Etwas wird sichtbar (Farocki); Feminate Ema (Grüber); Geschichte einer Liebe (Damek—for TV)
1982 Logik des Gefühls (Kratsch) (as himself)
1983 Krieg und Frieden (War and Peace) (Schlöndorf and others—doc); Dans la Ville Blanche (In the White City) (Tanner) (as Paul); System ohne Schatten (Closed Circuit) (Thone) (as Faber); Killer aus Florida (Schaffhauser)
1985 De Ijsallon (Frank)
1986 El Rio del oro (Golden River) (Chavarrí) (as Peter); Der Pendler (Giger) (as Steiner)
1987 Der Himmel über Berlin (Wings of Desire) (Wenders) (as Damiel)
1988 Strapless (Hare) (as Raymond Forbes); Vater und Sonhe (Parents and Sons) (Sinkel—for TV)
1989 BANKOMAT (Merrmann) (as Bruno)
1991 Prague (Sellers) (as Josef); The Architecture of Doom (Untergangens Arkitektur) (Cohen) (as narrator); Erfolg (as Jacques Tuverlin); Born Natururanna (as Engeler)
1992 Last Days of Chez Nous (Armstrong) (as J. P.); Brandnacht (as Peter Keller)
1993 Especially on Sunday (Spartamente la Domenica) (Tomatore) (as Vittorio); The Absence (Handke) (as Gambler); Fara-way, So Close (In Weiter Ferne, So Nah!) (Wenders) (as Damiel)
1994 Bright Day (as Georg); Il Grande Fausto (as Cavanna)
1995 Lumière et compagnie (Lumière and Company) (Allouache, Angelopoulos); Il Grande Fausto (Sironi—mini for TV) (as Biagio Cavanna)
1996 Tödliches Schweigen (Böhlisch for TV) (Hans Plache); Ein Richter in Angst (Rödl) (as Crusiuss); Tatort-Schattenwelt (Rödl) (as Bombadil)
Bruno Ganz in Die Marquise von O

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
<th>Roles</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Saint-Ex (Tucker)</td>
<td>Antoine de Saint-Exupéry</td>
<td>(Antoine de Saint-Exupéry)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1998</td>
<td>Mia aiwniothta kai mia mera (Eternity and a Day)</td>
<td>Stortz</td>
<td>(as Alexander); Gegen Ende der Nacht (Stortz for TV) (as Fehleisen); You Can’t Go Home Again (van Esch) (as Narrator)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Panc e tulipani (Soldini)</td>
<td>(as Fernando Girasoli); WerAngstWolf (Klopfenstein)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Film as Co-Director:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Film Title</th>
<th>Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td>Gedächtnis: Ein Film für Curt Bois und Bernhard Minetti (doc) (+ co-ed, ro)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Publications

By GANZ: articles—

Interview with Walt R. Vian, in Filmbulletin, December 1980.

Interview with Albert Auster & Leonard Quart, in Cineaste (New York), vol. 12, no. 2, 1982.

On GANZ: articles—

Film a Doba (Parizska), December 1984.

There is a small scene in Wim Wenders’s film The American Friend, which reveals some of the particular talents of Swiss-German actor, Bruno Ganz. Ganz plays a picture framer; he is seated at a desk in his shop, and absentmindedly takes a sheet of gold leaf and carefully blows it into the palm of his hand so that it adheres completely to the surface. He then slams his palm onto a telephone receiver and makes a call. That moment—like all great moments in film acting—is a piece of behavior that reveals Ganz’s character. The action embraces both the delicacy and meticulous nature of Jonathan, the artisan, as well as his latent violence—by the film’s end Jonathan is responsible for the murder of several men. Ganz does not call attention to his activity—it is simple, subtle, and low-key. Ganz’s performance style is distinguished by an eloquence and precision of physical expression, as well as a bruised sensitivity that haunts his best work.

Ganz is one of the few actors to come to prominence in the heyday of the New German Cinema in the mid-1960s to late 1970s to make a successful and sustained leap to the international art cinema circuit. Before beginning his film career in earnest, Ganz was a mainstay of the West German stage, and a founding member of the Schaubühne, one of Germany’s most celebrated and vital theater companies. While still performing on stage in the mid-1970s, Ganz starred in Die Marquise von O, directed by Eric Rohmer, which brought him to prominence among art-house audiences. The following year he acted in the Jeanne Moreau-directed Lumière, as well as playing a leading role in Hans Geissendörfer’s film of Ibsen’s The Wild Duck. The American Friend featured a trilingual cast (French, German, English), and catapulted both Wim Wenders and Ganz to worldwide recognition. The actor’s next crucial role was as the mild-mannered scientist, Berthold Hoffmann, shot in the head by police, who mistake him for a radical activist. The film, Messer Im Kopf, was made at the height of left-wing paranoia and police surveillance in post-Baader-Meinhoff Germany. The part required Ganz to play a man who must completely relearn his cognition, speech, and motor skills. This physically and psychologically demanding portrayal is the result of arduous research combined with the observation and execution of myriad small details of behavior; it is a true, astonishing, and moving feat. Through the constraint of severe expressive limitations, the audience must feel the character’s growing anger, frustration, and finally, despair. Ganz, with his usual blend of precision and invention, beautifully delineates a life that is broken, and thrown off course forever. Even as the character’s capacity for violence develops in tandem with his faculties, Ganz manages to make his rendition of Hoffmann entirely sympathetic.

Ganz’s next interesting role was as Jonathan Harker in Werner Herzog’s perverse and beautiful version of Nosferatu—Phantom der Nacht. Although somewhat eclipsed by the delicious eccentricities of Klaus Kinski’s eponymous demon, Ganz brings depth and subtlety to Harker’s transformation from steadfast paramour to lunatic incarnation of evil, as he assumes Kinski’s role of über-vampire at the film’s end.

Although he continued to work with such directors as Claude Goretta (La Provinciale), Volker Schlöndorff (Circle of Deceit), and Alain Tanner (Dans la Ville Blanche), the 1980s proved less than exciting for Ganz’s career until he reteamed with Wenders for Wings of Desire in 1987, playing the angel, Daniel. As Daniel, one senses a quality of grace and peacefulness that tempers Ganz’s earlier angst-filled characterizations. Playing Daniel allows Ganz to deal some of his trump cards—vulnerability, tenderness, and an underlying sadness. When Daniel begins to fall in love with the earthbound trapeze artist, played by Solveig Dommartin, he touches the objects in her room that she has touched, and places his hand on her back. She cannot see or feel him, and the sense of longing that resonates from Ganz in this scene is painful, and deeply felt. When Daniel comes to earth and experiences the pleasures of the material world, the role gives Ganz the opportunity to relish his new physical sensations—drinking hot coffee, feeling cold, hunger, pain—an actor’s dream. Ganz returned as Daniel, now a secondary character, in Wenders less successful sequel to Wings of Desire, Faraway, So Close.

Ganz has remained on the international scene through the mid-1990s, continuing his policy of choosing interesting, if uncommercial projects. In Gillian Armstrong’s film, Last Days of Chez Nous, Ganz—with German accent intact—plays a homesick Frenchman enmeshed in a failing marriage in Australia. The part gives Ganz a chance to cut loose and display his humor—he has several scenes where he clumsily and delightfully joins in his family’s wacky freeform dances. His character is in full midlife crisis, yearning for “more life” in the company of younger women. Ganz’s distinctive mix of vulnerability, gentleness, and quiet longing mark this as one of his most fully realized recent performances.

—Carole Zucker

GARBO, Greta

Education: Attended Catherine Elementary School; Royal Dramatic Theatre School, Stockholm, 1922–24. Career: Worked as latherer in barber shop, clerk in Bergström’s department store, and model; appeared in advertising films for PUB and Cooperative Society of Stockholm; 1921—film debut as extra in A Fortune Hunter; 1923—cast by the director Mauritz Stiller in Gösta Berlings Saga; appeared in several other films by him, and went with him to Hollywood; 1925–41—contract with MGM, becoming leading Hollywood film actress, first in silent films, then, following Anna Christie, 1930, in sound films; 1941—last film, Two-Faced Woman. Awards: Best Actress, New York Film Critics, for Anna Karenina, 1935, for

Films as Actress:

1921 En lyckoriddare (A Fortune Hunter) (Brunius) (as extra); Herr och fru Stockholm (Mr. and Mrs. Stockholm; How Not to Dress) (Ring—short) (bit role); Our Daily Bread (Ring—short) (bit role)
1922 Luffar-Petter (Peter the Tramp) (Petschler) (as Greta Nordberg)
1924 Gösta Berlings Saga (The Atonement of Gösta Berling) (Stiller) (as Countess Elisabeth Dohna)
1925 Die Freudlose Gasse (The Joyless Street) (Pabst) (as Greta Rumfort)
1926 The Torrent (Ibañez’ Torrent) (Bell) (as Leonora); The Temptress (Stiller and Niblo) (as Elena); Flesh and the Devil
(Brown) (as Felicitas von Kletzingk)
1927 Love (Anna Karenina) (Goulding) (as Anna Karenina) 1928 The Divine Woman (Seastrom) (as Marianne); The Mysterious Lady (Niblo) (as Tania); A Woman of Affairs (Brown) (as Diana Merrick)
1929 Wild Orchids (Franklin) (as Lillie Sterling); A Man’s Man (Cruze) (as guest); The Single Standard (Robertson) (as Arden Stuart); The Kiss (Feyder) (as Madame Irène Guarry) 1930 Anna Christie (Brown—German and Swedish versions directed by Jacques Feyder) (title role); Romance (Brown) (as Rita Cavallini)
1931 Inspiration (Brown) (as Yvonne); Susan Lenox: Her Fall and Rise (The Rise of Helga) (Leonard) (title role)
1932 Mata Hari (Fitzmaurice) (title role); Grand Hotel (Goulding) (as Gruinskaya); As You Desire Me (Fitzmaurice) (as Zara)
1933 Queen Christina (Mamoulian) (title role)
1934 The Painted Veil (Boleslawski) (as Katrin)
1935 Anna Karenina (Brown) (title role)
1937 Camille (Cukor) (as Marguerite Gautier); Conquest (Marie Walewska) (Brown) (as Marie Walewska)
1939 Ninotchka (Lubitsch) (title role)
1941 Two-Faced Woman (Cukor) (as Karin Borg Blake/Katherine Borg)

Publications

By GARBO: articles—

Article by Greta Garbo and Ernst Lubitsch, in New York Times, 22 October 1939.

“Ma vie d’artiste,” reprinted from 1930 Ciné-Magazine, in Avant-

“Portion of memoirs,” in Avant-Scène du Cinéma (Paris), 15
March 1981.

On GARBO: books—

Palmberg, Rilla Page, The Private Life of Greta Garbo, New York, 1931.

Sands, Frederick, and Sven Broman, The Divine Garbo, New

On GARBO: articles—

Virgilia, S., “Greta Garbo,” in New Yorker, 7 March 1931.

Nordberg, Carl Eric, “Greta Garbo’s Secret,” in Film Comment (New York), Summer 1970.

Cohn, Lawrence, “Garbo, Screen’s Classiest Siren, Dies at 84,” obituary in Variety (New York), 18 April 1990.

Desjardins, Mary, “Meeting Two Queens: Feminist Film-making, Identity Politics, and the Melodramatic Fantasy,” in Film Quarterly (Berkeley), Spring 1995.

Nosferatu (San Sebastian), January 1997.

* * *

Peter Matthews describes, in “Garbo and Phallic Motherhood: A ‘Homosexual’ Visual Economy,” that a photograph reproduced in Photoplay in the early 1930s shows “Garbo’s face in enormous close-up, a white oval emerging from a field of undifferentiated blackness, disembodied... as a kind of iconic mask, an eerily suspended object of desire.” Her mystique, her unknowability, prevalent both on screen and in real life, daunts and haunts movie viewers long after her early retirement into absolute seclusion.

George Cukor recalled that Irving Thalberg visited the set of Camille during the first days of shooting, glanced around, and expressed himself as well satisfied with the young director’s skill in handling MGM’s premier star. “How could you know?” Cukor asked, and Thalberg, indicating the actress sitting silent and alone between takes, said “Look at her. She’s unguarded.”

Garbo unguarded was a rare commodity. For a decade, MGM strip-teased the star that her admirers saw as the epitome of restraint, dignity, and private emotion, selling Anna Christie with the slogan “Garbo Talks!” and Ninotchka with “Garbo Laughs!” When, years later, a publicist confessed his authorship of the latter slogan to her, she said moodily, “How can you forgive yourself?”

It is debatable as to what extent the Garbo taciturnity was a pose; she may have had nothing to say. She never married, and her relationships were limited and private. That she was, like most stars, a woman to whom sexual appetite was less important than fame, is clear enough. But long before the solipsism of meditation and the “Me Decade,” Garbo, a fanatic for health foods and ascetic living, found contentment in restraint.

Her strong following in Europe—always greater than in the United States—encouraged MGM to cast her in period roles. They obscure her standing as the first great modern of the cinema—the emancipated woman, surrendering to passion by choice, but resigned always to repentance at leisure. Her best films are set in this century. Wild Orchids, with its silky shadowed textures of a fantasy Asia, is a film of immediate eroticism, a living sculpture in Art Deco, and so successful that MGM tried to repeat the effect in The Painted Veil five years later.

Feyder’s courtroom melodrama The Kiss, and the splintered realism of Anna Christie, with Garbo’s burrow drawl successfully evoking the Strindbergian squalor of O’Neill’s original, perfectly express their time. Even seducing Ramon Navarro (in Mata Hari) into blowing out the votive candle that will signify his surrender, or prowling the nightclub stage, crop-haired and draped in black, for the travesty of Pirandello’s As You Desire Me, Garbo is as contemporary as Brando or Streep.

Of the period films, few stand the test of repeated viewing. Under the influence of New York stage directors such as Cukor, and emigrés such as Lubitsch and Garbo’s tame writer Salka Viertel, Garbo declined into a parody of the Continental heroine. Camille and Conquest offer little but elaborate tableaux morts, triumphs for decorators and the close-up director who scrutinized each shot for inappropriate indications of modernity or emotion. Garbo among the bimbos of Camille is a stranded fish gasping for life. In Conquest she faces Boyer’s Napoleon with an upper lip no less stiff than Clive Brook’s in Shanghai Express. Surrounded in these films by waxworks such as Henry Stephenson, an aging Lewis Stone, and the Prussian correctness of Basil Rathbone, the vivid, living Garbo was overshadowed, extinguished. She is better in the least of her modern films: despite being physically unsuited to the role as a ballerina in Grand Hotel, she achieves the poignancy of a woman betrayed at her most vulnerable.

Among the great absurdities of Garbo’s career is its ending. Allegedly horrified by poor notices for Cukor’s Two-Faced Woman, she retreated, never to return, not even at the prospect of starring in Proust’s À La Recherche du Temps Perdu. Ironically, then, that the film from which she retreats is at once her most modern, and, of all her contemporary performances, the least inhibited. To watch this stringy lady in her mid-thirties bluff her way through a nightclub slanging session, then, gaining confidence, lead the floor in a frenzied dance of her own devising, is to see acting no less skilled than that of such stars as Cagney and Davis who persisted into the 1980s with productive work. But if “Garbo Talks!” and “Garbo Laughs!” were unforgivable, “Garbo Dances!” is surely the last straw. As so often with Garbo in the films, one laments the loss but respects the impulse. Nothing so much became her career as the leaving of it.
But, “we love it, the mystery,” exhilarates Robert Horton about his bewilderment of Garbo in an almost cheerfully dazed tone after the screen goddess’s demise in 1990. It is only fitting that she received an honorary Oscar in 1954 for her “unforgettable screen performances.” Coming 13 years after she left the big screen, this recognition served not only as a token of her lasting presence immortalized on film, but also as a prophecy foretelling the ongoing fascination surrounding the hereafter all the more invisible actress. Garbo, an ultimate movie icon, as the disembodied face forever suspended larger than life, epitomizes an unreality that perhaps only exists in the world of cinema.

—John Baxter, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

GARDNER, Ava

Films as Actress:

1941 Fancy Answers (Wrangell—short); H. M. Pulham, Esquire (King Vidor) (as girl); Maisie Was a Lady (Marin)
1942 Joe Smith, American (Highway to Freedom) (Thorpe) (as girl); We Were Dancing (Leonard) (as girl); This Time for Keeps (Reiser) (as girl in car); Kid Glove Killer (Zinnemann) (as carhop); Sunday Punch (Miller) (as ringsider); Calling Dr. Gillespie (Bucquet) (as girl); Mighty Lak a Goat (Glazer—short); Reunion in France (Reunion; Mademoiselle France) (Dassin)
1943 Pilot No. 5 (Sidney) (as girl); DuBarry Was a Lady (Del Ruth) (as girl); Ghosts on the Loose (Ghosts in the Night) (Beaudine) (as Betty); Hitler’s Madman (Sirk) (as Katy Chotnik); Young Ideas (Dassin) (as girl); Swing Fever (Whelan) (as girl)
1944 Lost Angel (Rowland) (as hatchet girl); Three Men in White (Goldbeck) (as Jean Brown); Two Girls and a Sailor (Thorpe) (as Rockette girl); Maisie Goes to Reno (You Can’t Do That to Me) (Beaumont) (as Gloria Fullerton); Music for Millions (Koster); Blonde Fever (Whorf)
1945 She Went to the Races (Goldbeck) (as Hilda Spotts)
1946 Whistle Stop (Moguy) (as Mary); The Killers (Siodmak) (as Kitty Collins)
1947 The Hucksters (Conway) (as Jean Ogilvie); Singapore (Brahm) (as Linda)
1948 One Touch of Venus (Seiter) (title role)
1949 The Great Sinner (Siodmak) (as Pauline Ostrovski); The Bribe (Leonard) (as Elizabeth Hinton); East Side, West Side (LeRoy) (as Isabel Lorrison)
1951 My Forbidden Past (Stevenson) (as Barbara Beaurevel); Pandora and the Flying Dutchman (Lewin) (as Pandora Reynolds); Showboat (Sydney) (as Julie Laverne)
1952 Lone Star (Sherman) (as Martha Ronda); The Snows of Kilimanjaro (King) (as Cynthia)
1953 Ride, Vaquero! (Farrow) (as Cordelia Cameron); The Bandwagon (Minnelli) (as the Movie Star); Mogambo (Ford) (as Eloise Kelly); Knights of the Round Table (Therpe) (as Guinevere)
1954 The Barefoot Contessa (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Maria Vargas)
1955 Bhowno Junction (Cukor) (as Victoria Jones)
1956 The Little Hut (Robson) (as Lady Susan Ashlow); Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as spectator)
1957 The Sun Also Rises (King) (as Lady Brett Ashley)
1958 La maja desnuda (The Naked Maja) (Koster, Italian version directed by Mario Russo) (as Duchess of Alba)
1959 On the Beach (Kramer) (as Moira Davidson)
1960 The Angel Wore Red (La sposa bella) (Johnson) (as Soledad)
1962 55 Days in Peking (Nicholas Ray) (as Baroness Natalie Ivanoff)
1964 Seven Days in May (Frankenheimer) (as Eleanor Hollbrook); The Night of the Iguana (Huston) (as Maxine Faulk)
1966 La Bibbia (The Bible . . . in the Beginning; The Bible) (Huston) (as Sarah)

Ava Gardner and Richard Burton in Night of the Iguana
1968 Mayerling (Terence Young) (as Empress Elizabeth)
1971 Tam Lin (The Devil’s Widow) (McDowall) (as Michaela)
1972 The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean (Huston) (as Lillie Langtry)
1974 Earthquake (Robson) (as Remy Graff)
1975 Permission to Kill (Frankel) (as Katina Peterson)
1976 The Bluebird (Cukor) (as Luxury)
1977 The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) (as Nicole); The Sentinel (Winner) (as Miss Logan)
1979 City on Fire (Rakoff) (as Maggie Garyson)
1980 The Kidnapping of the President (Mendeluk) (as Beth Richards)
1981 Priest of Love (Miles) (as Mabel Dodge Luhan)
1982 Regina (Roma) (Prate)
1985 The Long Hot Summer (Cooper—for TV) (as Minnie)
1986 Harem (Hale—for TV) (as Kadin); Maggie (Hussein—for TV)

Publications

By GARDNER: book—

On GARDNER: books—

On GARDNER: articles—

Murphy, Kathleen, “Farewell My Lovelies,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1990.

“Kino Releases Crawford and Gardner 50s Movies,” in Classic Images (Muscatine), 10 January 1996.

Although Ava Gardner appeared in more than 25 films during the 1940s, her screen identity did not really emerge until the 1950s. A product of the studio system, Gardner was put under long-term contract at MGM in the early 1940s. After playing small roles in mostly minor films, she won acclaim in Robert Siodmak’s The Killers, emerging (along with Burt Lancaster) as a star, and she is a radiant presence in The Hucksters, Singapore, Pandora and the Flying Dutchman, and Showboat, among others. To an extent, the studio succeeded in promoting her as a sex goddess because of her extraordinary beauty and sensuality. Gardner, however, never fulfilled the expectation that she would become a sex symbol.

In fact, during the 1950s, Gardner undermined this status, specifically by not exploiting her physicality or attempting to develop identification with a cinematic stereotype that would make her accessible to the male audience. The feminist critic Marjorie Rosen (Popcorn Venus) asserts that Gardner embodied the “ideal fantasy creature” in several films, including Joseph L. Mankiewicz’s The Barefoot Contessa; but, on the contrary, Gardner refutes this concept of objectification in the film. The film’s tensions are produced through her sensitive characterization of a woman who insists in having a right to a subjective identity. She plays a similar “rebel” character in George Cukor’s Bhowani Junction. Cukor, aware that her potential had been undeveloped because she was treated by the studio as a beautiful object to be featured in mediocre films, encouraged Gardner to explore her emotional range through this challenging assignment. Her other outstanding performance is in John Ford’s Mogambo, which has the feel of a Hawks film in the construction of the central heterosexual relationship and the sense of ease in the narrative’s flow. In the film, Gardner, like the Hawksian heroine, displays “masculine” strength without losing her feminine appeal.

Unfortunately, by the end of the decade, Gardner already was appearing in films that required her to be a star presence projecting an image of ravaged beauty. When given a substantial role, however, she could offer a performance to match her character. Such was the case in George Cukor’s Barefoot Contessa. The film’s tensions are produced through her sensitive characterization of a woman who insists in having a right to a subjective identity. She plays a similar “rebel” character in George Cukor’s Bhowani Junction. Cukor, aware that her potential had been undeveloped because she was treated by the studio as a beautiful object to be featured in mediocre films, encouraged Gardner to explore her emotional range through this challenging assignment. Her other outstanding performance is in John Ford’s Mogambo, which has the feel of a Hawks film in the construction of the central heterosexual relationship and the sense of ease in the narrative’s flow. In the film, Gardner, like the Hawksian heroine, displays “masculine” strength without losing her feminine appeal.

As a star of the 1950s, Gardner’s screen identity was uncharacteristic of a period that attempted to equate women’s sexual desirability with the size of their physical endowments. Still, no more sublimely beautiful woman ever appeared on a movie screen. Like a number of her characters (such as Pandora Reynolds in Pandora and the Flying Dutchman and Lady Brett Ashley in The Sun Also Rises), Gardner became an American expatriate, living for many years in London. She died there of pneumonia after having completed her autobiography, which was published posthumously.

—Richard Lippe, updated by Rob Edelman
GARFIELD, John

Films as Actor:

1933 Footlight Parade (Lloyd Bacon, Keighley, and Berkeley) (bit role)
1938 Four Daughters (Curtiz) (as Mickey Borden)
1939 They Made Me a Criminal (Berkeley) (as Johnnie); Blackwell’s Island (McGann) (as Tim Hayden); Juarez (Dieterle) (as Porfirio Diaz); Daughters Courageous (Family Reunion) (Curtiz) (as Gabriel Lopez); Dust Be My Destiny (Seiler) (as Joe Bell); Saturday’s Children (Sherman) (as Rims O’Neill); Flowing Gold (Alfred E. Green) (as Johnny Blake); Four Wives (Curtiz) (as ghost of Mickey Borden)
1940 Castle on the Hudson (Years without Days) (Litvak) (as Tommy Gordon); East of the River (Alfred E. Green) (as Joe Lorenzo)
1941 The Sea Wolf (Curtiz) (as George Leach); Out of the Fog (Litvak) (as Harold Goff)
1942 Dangerously They Live (Florey) (as Dr. Michael Lewis); Tortilla Flat (Fleming) (as Danny)
1943 Air Force (Hawks) (as Sgt. Winocke); The Fallen Sparrow (Wallace) (as Kit); Thank Your Lucky Stars (David Butler) (as himself)
1944 Destination Tokyo (Daves) (as Wolf); Between Two Worlds (Blatt) (as Tom Prior); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as himself)
1945 Pride of the Marines (Forever in Love) (Daves) (as Al Schmid)
1946 The Postman Always Rings Twice (Garnett) (as Frank Chambers); Nobody Lives Forever (Negulesco) (as Nick Blake); Humoresque (Negulesco) (as Paul Boray)
1947 Body and Soul (Rossen) (as Charley Davis); Gentleman’s Agreement (Kazan) (as Dave); Daisy Kenyon (Preminger) (as man in Stork Club)
1948 Force of Evil (Polonsky) (as Joe Morse)
1949 Jigsaw (Gun Moll) (Markle) (bit role as street loiterer); We Were Strangers (Huston) (as Tony Fenner)
1950 Under My Skin (La Belle de Paris) (Negulesco) (as Dan Butler); The Difficult Years (Zampa—English-language version of Anni difficile) (as narrator); The Breaking Point (Curtiz) (as Harry Morgan)

1951 He Ran All the Way (Berry) (as Nick Robey)

Publications

On GARFIELD: books—

On GARFIELD: articles—

* * *

Before Marlon Brando, before James Dean, and before Paul Newman, Robert De Niro, and Al Pacino there was John Garfield, an actor of intensity and sensitivity who embodied the rebel/antihero character. In fact, he was the first actor to consistently play such roles on screen, beginning his career over a decade before Brando. For Garfield the rebel/antihero role was more than a method of acting: he was a New York City street kid who keenly understood his characters’ motivation. While no profound political thinker, he was a man of deep emotion and intense loyalty, and his progressive/left-wing contacts made him a target of the Hollywood witch-hunts of the McCarthy era. In his films Garfield represented the socially underprivileged, the common man who clashed with the system. He showed ambition and hard work; he was sensual and strong and exhibited a certain vulnerability. He portrayed a good boy who got all the wrong breaks, but whose rebellious spirit enabled him to battle back against the inequities of his society.

The authenticity of Garfield’s alleged initial screen appearance, as an extra in the “Shanghai Lil” sequence of the Warner Brothers...
John Garfield (left) in Air Force

musical Footlight Parade, is debated to this day. More significantly, in the early 1930s, the playwright Clifford Odets recommended him for membership in the newly formed Group Theater, the legendary and influential theater company/collective whose members included Elia Kazan, Lee Strasberg, and Harold Clurman. After losing the lead role in Odets’s Golden Boy—a part the writer penned with Garfield in mind—to Luther Adler, Garfield left the theater for Hollywood.

He signed a seven-year Warner Brothers contract and his first role, a supporting turn in Michael Curtiz’s Four Daughters, made him a star. His character, streetwise pianist/composer Mickey Borden, utters such lines as “Talking about my tough luck is the only fun I get” and “I guess when you’re used to standing on the outside looking in, you can see things that other people can’t.” In Four Daughters, Garfield offered his definitive portrayal of the sympathetic iconoclast: a role that was to sustain him throughout his career. Another significant aspect of this film was Garfield’s unique acting style, with his moody, soulful sexuality standing out among the more conventional actors of the period.

Upon the success of Four Daughters, Warner Brothers chose to recast Garfield in inferior films that recycled the Mickey Borden character. And so the actor found himself playing moody poor boys, if not outright criminals, in such generically titled features as They Made Me a Criminal, Dust Be My Destiny, and Nobody Lives Forever. Garfield’s most significant films while under contract were Pride of the Marines, a fact-based drama in which he played a soldier blinded while fighting at Guadalcanal; Humoresque, cast as a poor but determined violinist; and James M. Cain’s The Postman Always Rings Twice (made on loan to MGM), in the role of a drifter who falls for a married woman and plots to murder her husband.

After choosing not to renew his studio contract, Garfield formed his own production company. His first independent feature arguably is the best of his career: Body and Soul, in which he played an up-from-the-slums prizefighter who is misled by his own ego, forgetting his family and friends for material possessions and a fast lifestyle. Between 1947 and 1950 Garfield did some of his finest screen acting in some of his most interesting films. He had a small but significant part in Gentleman’s Agreement, a film about anti-Semitism. In the highly regarded film noir Force of Evil, the lone film directed by Abraham Polonsky prior to being blacklisted, he played a crooked lawyer. In We Were Strangers, he was an American fighting on the side of Cuban revolutionaries. In The Breaking Point, based on Hemingway’s To Have and Have Not, he was a troubled, financially strapped fishing boat captain. His final feature is He Ran All the Way, in which he played a doomed criminal who takes a working-class family hostage.

In 1951 Garfield was subpoenaed by the U.S. Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities. He answered all questions, describing himself as a Democratic Party member and political liberal. He told the committee, ‘I have always hated communism. It is a tyranny which threatens our country and the peace of the world. Of course, then I have never been a member of the Communist party, or a sympathizer with any of its doctrines. I will be pleased to cooperate with the committee.’ But he would not ‘name any names,’’ as his street boy’s sense of honor would not allow him to rat on his friends. The committee was unhappy with his testimony. An FBI investigation of Garfield was ordered, and the actor found himself blacklisted. In early 1952, Garfield appeared on Broadway in a revival of Golden Boy. But he was destroyed by his committee ordeal, and subsequent expulsion from Hollywood. He died of a heart attack that spring, having not reached his 40th birthday.

An actor undoubtedly ahead of his time, Garfield not only played antiheroes but thoroughly immersed himself in his characters. If he was a prizefighter, as in Body and Soul, he would train in the ring; for Tortilla Flat, he learned how to fish; for Air Force, he learned how to operate a machine gun; and for Humoresque, he learned how to play the violin. While not as famous as the actors who followed him, Garfield was the prototype of the celluloid antihero. One only can imagine the stage and screen roles he might have created had his life not been cut so tragically short.

—Maryann Oshana, updated by Rob Edelman

---

GARLAND, Judy

Nationality: American. Born: Frances Ethel Gumm in Grand Rapids, Minnesota, 10 June 1922. Education: Attended elementary school in Los Angeles; Lawler’s Professional School, 1929–31; Bancroft Junior High School and University High School, Los Angeles. Family: Married 1) the musician David Rose, 1941 (divorced 1942); 2) the director Vincente Minnelli, 1945 (divorced 1952), daughter: the actress Liza Minnelli; 3) the producer Sid Luft, 1952 (divorced 1965), daughter: the singer Lorna Luft; 4) Mark Herron, 1965 (divorced 1969); 5) Mickey Deans. Career: 1929—film debut as a child singer, with her sisters, as The Gumm Sisters, in the Meglin Kiddie Revue; also toured with the act, later called The Garland Sisters; 1935—contract with MGM; followed by a series of musical films; 1938—roles in the Andy Hardy series and in The Wizard of Oz; brought her wide popularity; also acted and sang on radio, and made recordings; 1945—straight dramatic role in The Clock; 1950—health problems led to MGM not renewing her contract; 1951—great success in cabaret performances at the London Palladium and the Palace Theatre in New York; later film successes in A Star Is Born, 1954, and Judgment at Nuremberg, 1961; also continued touring in cabaret and recording; 1963–64—star of The Judy Garland Show on television. Awards: Special Academy Award, ‘for her outstanding performance as a screen juvenile during the past year,’’ 1939. Died: In London, England, 22 June 1969.

---

Films as Actress:

1929 The Meglin Kiddie Revue (one of the Gumm sisters)
1930 A Holiday in Storyland (one of the Gumm sisters); The Wedding of Jack and Jill (one of the Gumm sisters)
1936 La fiesta de Santa Barbara (one of the Gumm sisters); Pigskin Parade (The Harmony Parade) (David Butler) (as Saavy Dodd); Every Sunday (Feist—short)
1937 Broadway Melody of 1938 (Del Ruth) (as Betty Clayton); Thoroughbreds Don’t Cry (Alfred E. Green) (as Cricket West)
1938 Everybody Sing (Marin) (as Judy Billaire); Love Finds Andy Hardy (Seitz) (as Betsy Booth); Listen, Darling (Marin) (as Pinkie Wingate)
1939 The Wizard of Oz (Fleming) (as Dorothy Gale); Babes in Armes (Berkeley) (as Patsy Barton)
1940 Andy Hardy Meets Debutante (Seitz) (as Betsy Booth); Strike Up the Band (Berkeley) (as Mary Holden); Little Nellie Kelly (Taurog) (title role)
1941 Ziegfeld Girl (Leonard) (as Susan Gallagher); Life Begins for Andy Hardy (Seitz) (as Betsy); We Must Have Music (short—unused sequence from Leonard’s Ziegfeld Girl, part of series A Romance of Celluloid) Babes on Broadway (Berkeley) (as Penny Morris)
1942 For Me and My Gal (Berkeley) (as Jo Hayden)
1943 Presenting Lily Mars (Taurog) (title role); Girl Crazy (Taurog) (as Ginger Gray)*; Thousands Cheer (Sidney) (as guest)
1944 Meet Me in St. Louis (Minnelli) (as Esther Smith)

---

---

Judy Garland, Jack Haley, and Ray Bolger in The Wizard of Oz
1945  The Clock (Under the Clock) (Minnelli) (as Alice Mayberry)
1946  The Harvey Girls (Sidney) (as Susan Bradley); Ziegfeld Follies (Minnelli); Till the Clouds Roll By (Whorl; Garland sequences directed by Minnelli) (as Marilyn Miller)
1948  The Pirate (Minnelli) (as Manuela); Easter Parade (Walters) (as Hannah Brown); Words and Music (Taurog) (as guest)
1949  In the Good Old Summertime (Leonard) (as Veronica Fisher)
1950  Summer Stock (If You Feel Like Singing) (Walters) (as Jane Falbury)
1954  A Star Is Born (Cukor) (as Esther Blodgett/Vicki Lester)
1960  Pepe (Sidney) (as voice)
1961  Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer) (as Irene Hoffman)
1962  Gay Purr-ee (Levitow—animation) (as voice of Mewsette)
1963  A Child Is Waiting (Cassavetes) (as Jean Hansen); I Could Go on Singing (Neame) (as Jenny Bowman)

Publications

On GARLAND: books—

On GARLAND: articles—

“Star Turn: Judy Garland,” in Sight and Sound (London), June 1951.
Stars (Mariembourg), Winter 1993.

In his book Heavenly Bodies: Film Stars and Society, Richard Dyer offers both an insightful discussion of Judy Garland’s star image and an in-depth account of why gay men were so strongly attracted to Garland and particularly her post-1950 image. Yet, as Dyer points out, Garland’s image and persona are open to other readings since her appeal was not limited to a subculture and Garland had mass appeal that embraced devoted female fans. Since Garland’s death, well-researched books such as Judy Garland: The Secret Life of an American Legend have come out of the closet about Garland’s bisexuality; how much light these revelations shed on her genius is open to question. Certainly, Garland toyed with sexual ambiguity throughout her career—the tramp number from Easter Parade, the newsboy number “Lose That Long Face” and boyish run-through of “Somewhere There’s a Someone” in Till the Clouds Roll By which was resurrected for her concert appearances. What revisionist critics cannot lose sight of is that whether Garland was trucking down the Yellow Brick Road or looking for the Man that Got Away, her appeal was universal.

In his discussion of Garland’s image, Dyer emphasizes the change that occurs in the perception of her image after 1950, the year in which she was fired by MGM and allegedly attempted suicide. If the MGM studio image celebrating her girl-next-doorness contrasts strongly with her post-1950s image as androgynous camp avatar, the one constant in Garland’s persona is an overwhelming psychological need for affection that audiences always wanted to fill. Summer Stock, Meet Me in St. Louis, The Clock, and The Pirate draw strength from scenes in which vulnerable Judy becomes very emotional, frequently in response to a man’s assertion of dominance. In many of her MGM films, Garland is on the brink of womanhood but nevertheless acts in a refreshingly direct and immediate manner; while her outbursts suggest the childlike, it challenges her co-stars to consider a greater equality of the sexes. In a complex manner, Garland plays off aspects of what are deemed feminine characteristics, but contrary to expectations, her transparent honesty does not make her appear helpless nor does it resort to a masculinizing of her image or a denial of heterosexual desire. Perhaps in the heady intensity of the movie musical, Garland did not have to play games. But unlike other American sweethearts such as Durbin, Allyson, and Powell, Garland grew into a heart-on-her-sleeve star with a persona more complex than the peaches-and-cream MGM image could support.
GARSON ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

474

As Dyer says: ‘‘Garland works in an emotional register of great intensity which seems to bespeak equally suffering and survival, vulnerability and strength, theatricality and authenticity, passion and irony.’’ Although these components emerge most forcefully in A Star Is Born, it is arguably Garland’s emotional complexity that always distinguishes her work from that of more conventional musical comedy performers—in a standard backstage musical such as Summer Stock, Garland brings a raw dramatic depth to aspects of her characterization which threatens to unbalance the movie and take it in another generic direction, toward melodrama. In the later stages of her career, she blurred the division between personal and professional identity, which led to criticism regarding her willingness to exploit herself and her audience. Yet, Garland’s insistence on being intimately emotional in public had a liberating effect on spectators, as occurs at times with melodramas and the experience they offer. Each Garland concert became a soap opera in song.

What else but the burned-out attitudes of the 1990s could explain why this dynamic entertainer has yet to be rediscovered after her death; in a climate where audiences seem determined to feel nothing but superficial sensation, she has not become an icon like the flashier, superficial sensation, she has not become an icon like the flashier Monroe, Dean, or Presley, three Holly-

Garland brought a raw dramatic depth to aspects of her characterization which threatened to unbalance the movie and take it in another generic direction, toward melodrama. In the later stages of her career, she blurred the division between personal and professional identity, which led to criticism regarding her willingness to exploit herself and her audience. Yet, Garland’s insistence on being intimately emotional in public had a liberating effect on spectators, as occurs at times with melodramas and the experience they offer. Each Garland concert became a soap opera in song.

Garland entered her last phase of entertaining, the personal and the professional were increasingly conflated in the realm of keeping alive the myth of the Little Girl Lost; she pumped up her concert crowds on a high of snappy-pattered Hollywood horror stories and a frozen repertoire of torch songs functioning as mini-biographies. A performance artist before that term was coined, Garland may have sustained her career by taking advantage of her audiences’ ongoing desire to fly with her over the rainbow while their own lives seemed mundanely stuck in the mud. No other singer enjoyed this sort of transcendent transference with devotees. Fittingly, she died in the midst of a concert tour— and what other performer can claim to have sung in a voice which millions felt was a dubbed-in expression of their own inner torment.

In recent years, there has been a concentration of critical writing on stars who defiantly challenged gender dictates (Dietrich, Davis, Hepburn, and others), but their accomplishments should not be lionized at the expense of the irreplaceable Garland whose image as star was highly complicated and deserving of recognition as such.

—Richard Lippe, updated by Robert Pardi

GARSON, Greer

Greer Garson with Laurence Olivier in Pride and Prejudice in very early BBC television production of Shaw’s How He Lied to Her Husband; 1940s—numerous radio performances; 1954—Her Twelve Men last film for MGM; 1955—began appearing in TV dramas, in Reunion in Vienna on Producers’ Showcase; 1958—replaced Rosalind Russell in Auntie Mame on Broadway; 1990—completion of Greer Garson Communications Center and Studio, College of Santa Fe, New Mexico, part of her charitable legacy. Awards: Best Actress Academy Award for Mrs. Miniver, 1942; Commander of the Order of the British Empire, 1993; honorary doctorate of arts, Southern Methodist University. Died: Of congestive heart failure, in Dallas, 6 April 1996.

Films as Actress:

1939 Goodbye, Mr. Chips (Wood) (as Katherine Ellis); Remember? (McLeod) (as Linda Bronson)
1940 Pride and Prejudice (Leonard) (as Elizabeth Bennet)
1941 Blossoms in the Dust (LeRoy) (as Mrs. Edna Gladney); When Ladies Meet (Leonard) (as Claire Woodruff)
1942 Mrs. Miniver (Wyler) (title role); Random Harvest (LeRoy) (as Paula)
1943 Madame Curie (LeRoy) (title role); The Youngest Profession (Buzzell) (as guest); A Report from Miss Greer Garson (Whitebeck—short for March of Dimes)
1944 Mrs. Parkinton (Garnett) (title role); The Miracle of Hickory (short for March of Dimes)
1945 The Valley of Decision (Garnett) (as Mary Rafferty); Adventure (Fleming) (as Emily Sears)
1947 Desire Me (Cukor and others, all uncredited) (as Marise Aubert)
1948 Julia Misbehaves (Conway) (as Julia Packett)
1949 That Forsyte Woman (The Forsyte Saga) (Bennett) (as Irene Forsyte)
1950 The Miniver Story (Potter) (as Mrs. Miniver)
1951 The Law and the Lady (Knopf) (as Jane Hoskins)
1953 Scandal at Scourie (Negulesco) (as Mrs. Patrick McChesney); Julius Caesar (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Calpurnia)
1954 Her Twelve Men (Leonard) (as Jan Stewart)
1955 Strange Lady in Town (LeRoy) (as Dr. Julia Winslow Garth)
1960 Pepe (Sidney) (as guest); Sunrise at Campobello (Donehue) (as Eleanor Roosevelt)
1963 The Invincible Mr. Disraeli (Schaefier—for TV)
1966 The Singing Nun (Koster) (as Mother Prioreess)
1967 The Happiest Millionaire (Tokar) (as Mrs. Cordelia Biddle)
1968 The Little Drummer Boy (Nakamura—animation for TV) (as voice)
1968 The Little Drummer Boy Book II (Bass and Rankin Jr.—animation for TV) (as voice of Our Story Teller)
1978 Little Women (Rich—for TV) (as Kathryn March)
1986 Directed by William Wyler (Slesin—doc) (as herself)

Publications

On GARSON: articles—

Current Biography 1942, New York, 1942.

---

GASSMAN, Vittorio

---

Obituary by Rainer Heinz, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 23 April 1996.
Obituary, in Classic Images (Muscatine), May 1996.

---

* * *

The personification of Louis B. Mayer’s ideal of British refinement and beauty, Greer Garson was the queen of MGM during the World War II years. She inherited the mantles of Garbo and Norma Shearer and therefore starred in the most prestigious films produced by the most prestigious studio in Hollywood.

Having had mild success in the English theater, Garson was spotted by Mayer and given an impressive cameo debut in MGM’s very popular Goodbye, Mr. Chips, produced in England. This role established her screen personality of warmth, good sense, and good humor. If these qualities were appropriate to the heroine of Pride and Prejudice, they emerged with particular impact to define Garson’s ultimate persona, at just the right moment, in the film that brought her the ultimate honor of Hollywood, the Oscar. Mrs. Miniver seemed to sum up the bourgeois nobility of the English in the face of the war and the blitz, and that sum was reflected in the unflappable spirit (and luminous complexion) of Garson, a woman able to cope with a Nazi flier in her kitchen, the fears of her children in a bomb shelter, and the death of her daughter-in-law during a raid. Her next great success, Random Harvest, made a bit of fun of Garson’s dignity by having her perform a music hall number, but for the body of the film, she reverts to her pristine, classy identity.

The importance of Garson at MGM can be seen in the memorable slogan publicizing Clark Gable’s first postwar film, Adventures—“‘Gable’s Back and Garson’s Got Him.’” A disappointment to everyone, this marks the beginning of the decline of Garson’s popularity, which seemed to fade as quickly as it materialized. The title of Julia Misbehaves shows the effort to alter her image. In one of her last films, Sunrise at Campobello, she portrays Eleanor Roosevelt, and there, her beautiful face deformed by buck teeth, her mellifluous voice distorted into a semblance of Mrs. Roosevelt’s speech impediment, Garson sheds her persona with a virtuosity not always apparent during her years of stardom.

—Charles Affron, updated by Kelly Otter
Vittorio Gassman and Carroll Baker in The Miracle debut; 1946—film debut in Preludio d’amore; 1952—contract with MGM; made several films in Hollywood; 1956—directed the film Kean; 1958—59—in TV series Il mattatore (and wrote some episodes); 1960—founded his own theater company Teatro Popolare Italiano; has also acted in his own one-man show; 1982—acted in his own Italian version of Othello. Awards: Best Actor, Cannes Festival, for Profumo di donna, 1974; Nastro d’argento Award for Best Actor, for Lo zio indegno, 1989; Golden Lion Award, 1996. Died: 29 June 2000.

Films as Actor:

1946 Preludio d’amore (Paolucci) (as Davide); Daniele Cortis (Soldati) (title role)
1947 La figlia del capitano (Camerini) (as Svabrin); Le avventure di Pinocchio (Guardone); L’Ebreo errante (The Wandering Jew) (Alessandrinii) (as Mathieu Blumenthal)
1948 Il cavaliere misterioso (Freda) (as Casanova); Riso amaro (Bitter Rice) (De Santis) (as Walter)
1949 Il lupo della Sila (Coletti) (as Pietro); Una voce nel tuo cuore (A Voice in Your Heart) (d’Aversa) (as Paolo Baldini); I fuorilegge (Vergano) (as Turi); Ho sognato il paradiso (Pastina) (as Giorgio); Lo sparviero del Nilo (Gentilomo) (as Yusef)
1950 Il leone di Amalfi (Francisci) (as Mauro)
1951 Il tradimento (Freda) (as Renato Salvi); Anna (Lattuada) (as Vittorio); Il sogno di Zorro (Soldati) (as Don Antonio)

1952 La corona negra (La caronna nera) (Saslavsky) (as Mauricio); La tratta delle bianche (Comencini) (as Michele)
1953 Sombbrero (Norman Foster) (as Alejandro Castillio); Cry of the Hunter (Joseph H. Lewis) (as Jory); The Glass Wall (Shane) (as Peter)
1954 Rhapsody (Charles Vidor) (as Paul Bronte); Mambo (Rossen) (as Mario Rossi)
1955 La donna più bella del mondo (Beautiful but Dangerous) (Leonard) (as Prince Sergio)
1956 Difendo il mio amore (Defend My Love); I’ll Defend You My Love (Sherman, Italian version directed by Giulio Macchi) (as Giovanni); Giovanni delle Bande Nere (Grieco) (as Giovanni d’Medici; War and Peace (Guerra e pace) (King Vidor) (as Anatole Kuragin)
1957 La ragazza del palio (The Love Specialist) (Zampa) (as Prince Piero)
1958 I soliti ignoti (Big Deal on Madonna Street; Persons Unknown) (Monicelli) (as Peppe); La tempesta (The Tempest) (Lattuada) (as Pubblico Accusatore)
1959 La grande guerra (The Great War) (Monicelli) (as Giovanni Busacca); La cambiale (Mastrocinque) (as Michele); Audace colpo dei soliti ignoti (Fiasco in Milan; Hold-up à la Milanaise) (Loy) (as Peppe); Le sorprese dell’amore (Comencini) (as guest); The Miracle (Rapper) (as Guido)
1960 Il mattatore (Love and Larceny) (Risi) (as Gerardo); Fantasmi a Roma (Pietrangeli) (as Caparra); Crimen (... And Suddenly It’s Murder; Killing in Monte Carlo) (Cameroni) (as Remo)
1961 I briganti italiani (Camerini) (as O’Caporale); Barabba (Barabbas) (Fleischer) (as Sahak); Il giudizio universale (de Sica) (as Cimino); Una vita difficile (Risi) (as guest)
1962 Anima Nera (Rossellini) (as Adriano); La marcia su Roma (Risi) (as Domenico Rocchetti); “L’avaro” ep. of L’amore difficile (Lucignani) (as L’Avvocato); Il sorpasso (The Easy Life) (Risi) (as Bruno Cortona)
1963 Lo smanio addosso (Eye of the Needle) (Andrei) (as Mazzano); Il successo (Morassi) (as Giulio Ceriani); I mostri (Opiate ‘67; 15 from Rome) (Risi); Frenesia dell’estate (Zampa) (as Capt. Nardoni)
1964 Se permettete parliamo di donne (Let’s Talk about Women) (Scalà) (as Proteiforme Adamo); Il gauchito (Risi) (as Mario Ravicchio); La congiuntura (One Million Dollars) (Scola) (as Don Giuliano)
1965 Slalom (Salce) (as Luci Ridolfi); Una vergine per il principe (A Maiden for the Prince; A Maiden for a Prince) (Festa Campunile) (as Prince don Vincenzo Gonzaga)
1966 One ep. of La Guerre secrète (La guerra segreta; Spione unter sich; The Dirty Game; The Dirty Agents) (Lizzani) (as Perego); L’armata Brancaleone (Monicelli) (as Brancalone da Norcia); Il diavolo innamorato (The Devil in Love; L’arcidiavolo) (Scalà) (as Belfager Arcidiavolo); Le piacevoli notti (Crispini and Lucignani) (as Bastiano da Sangallo)
1967 Il tigre (The Tiger and the Pussy-cat) (Risi) (as Francesco Vincenzi); Lo scatenato (Catch as Catch Can) (Indovina) (as Bob Chiaramonte); Questi fantasmi (Lights, Italian Style; Three Ghosts) (Castellani) (as Pasquale Lojaco); “Linda” and “Two against One” eps. in Woman Times Seven (Sette volta donna; Sept fois femme) (de Sica) (as Cenci); Il profeta (Risi) (as Pietro Breccia)
1969  Dove vai tutta nuda? (Festa Campanile) (as Rafus); L’arcagelo (Capitanio) (as Fulvio Bertuccia); Una su tredici (Twelve Plus One) (Gessner) (as Mario “Mike” Beretti); La pecora nera (Salce) (as Filippo/Giulio)

1970  “La bomba alla televisione” ep. in Contestazione generale (Zampa) (as Riccardo); Il divorzio (Guerrieri) (as Leonardo); Brancalonne alle Crociane (Monicelli) (title role); Scipione detto anche l’Africano (Magni) (title role)

1971  Il nome delle popolo italiano (Risi) (as Lorenzo Santenocito); L’udienza (Ferreri) (as Prince Donati)

1972  Che c’entriamo noi con la rivoluzione? (Corbucci) (as Guido Guidi)

1973  La Tosca (Magni) (as Scarpia)

1974  C’eravano tanto amati (Scotto) (as Gianni); Profumo di donna (Scent of a Woman) (Risi) (as Capt. Fausto Censolo)

1975  A mezzanotte va la ronda del piacere (De Santis) (as Andrea Sansani)

1976  Telefoni bianchi (Risi) (as Franco Denza); Come una rosal al neso (Pure as a Rose) (Risi) (as Antonie Mancuso); “La bomba” ep. of Signore e signori, buonanotte (Monicelli) (as Tuttunpezzo); Le désert des Tartares (Le désert des Tartares) (Zurlini) (as Filimore); Anima persa (Risi) (as Fabio Stolz)

1977  “‘Tantum Ergo,”’ “‘Like a Queen,”’ and “‘The Inn’” ep. of I nuovi mostri (Viva Italia!; The New Monsters) (Monicelli, Risi, and Scota) (several roles)

1978  A Wedding (Altman) (as Luigi Corelli)

1979  Quintet (Altman) (as Sun Cristoforo); Due pezzi di pane (Citti) (as Pippo Mifa); Caro papà (Risi) (as Albino Millozza); La terrazza (Scola) (as Mario)

1980  Camera d’albergo (Monicelli) (as Achille Mengaroni); The Nude Bomb (Clive Donner) (as Nino Salvatore Sebastiani); Sono fotogenico (Risi)

1981  Il turno (Cerio) (as Ciro Coppa); Sharkey’s Machine (Burt Reynolds) (as Victor)

1982  Tempest (Mazursky) (as Alonzo)

1983  Benvenuta (Delvaux) (as Livio Carpi)

1984  La Vie est un roman (Life Is a Bed of Roses) (Resnais) (as Walter)

1985  Le Pouvoir du mal (The Power of Evil; Paradigma) (Zanussi) (as Gottfried); I soliti ignoti vent’anni dopo (Big Deal on Madonna Street—Update) (Todina) (as Peppe the Panther)

1986  La famiglia (The Family) (Scota) (as Carlo/Carlo’s Grandfather); I picari (The Picaros) (Monicelli) (as Baron)

1987  Lo zio indegno (The Sleazy Uncle) (Brusati) (as Uncle Lucca)

1988  Mille et une nuits (Sheherazade) (de Broca) (as Sinbad); Tolgo il disturbo (Risi) (as Peppe the Panther)

1989  Dimenticare Palermo (The Palermo Connection) (Rosi) (as Prince)

1990  Quando eravamo repressi (When We Were Repressed) (Quartullo) (as the sexologist); El Largo Invierno (The Long Winter) (Camino) (as Claudio)

1991  Tutti Gli anni una volta l’anno (Once a Year, Every Year) (Lazzoli) (as Giuseppe); Abraham (Sargent—for TV)

1992  Sleepers (Levinson) (King Benny)

1993  Deserto di fuoco (Castellari—for TV) (as Tarek)

1994  La Cena (Scota) (as Maestro Pezzullo)

1995  Luchino Visconti (Lizzani) (as himself); Astérix et Obélix contre César (Zidi); La Bomba (Base) (as Don Vito Bracalone)

Films as Actor and Director:

1956  Kean (title role, + co-sc)

1959  L’albi (co-d, role as Vittorio, + co-sc)

1972  Senso famiglia, nullatenenti, cercano affetto... (as Armando, + co-sc)

1982  Di padre in figlio

1988  L’Altro enigma (Gassman/Tuzii)

Publications

By GASSMAN: books—

Un grande avvenire dietro le spalle, Milan, 1981.

By GASSMAN: articles—

Interview with Dan Yakir, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1983.

On GASSMAN: books—

On GASSMAN: articles—

Lane, J. F., “‘Italy’s Man of a Thousand Faces,’” in Films and Filming (London), April 1959.

CinemAction (Conde-sur-Noireau, France), March 1987.

Rocco, N., “‘La ‘cattiveria’ di Dino Risi,’” in Quaderni di Cinema (Florence), April/June 1993.

As of Austrian and Italian parentage, Vittorio Gassman appeared in dozens of stage plays before making his movie debut in Preludio d’amore. Another of his early films, *Giuseppe De Santis’s Riso amaro, with Gassman opposite Silvana Mangano in what was considered a shockingly erotic work, was a box-office success, focusing on Gassman’s considerable international attention. After playing the role of Casanova in Il cavaliere misterioso—and while doing intermittent stage roles, many of them classical—he was again teamed with Mangano in Alberto Lattuada’s Anna, another commercial success.

His handsome looks and casually arrogant manner suggested him as a leading man, and he did eventually become a matinee idol in Italy. After marrying the American actress Shelley Winters, he signed a contract with MGM and made four U.S. films, all at least respectable, though none really caught on. So Gassman returned to Italy, starring in Robert Rossen’s Mambo, Robert Z. Leonard’s La donna più bella del mondo, and as Anatole in King Vidor’s War and Peace.

After acting in and co-directing (with Francesco Rosi) Kean, a film about the great English actor, and appearing in Lattuada’s Tempest, Gassman starred in Mario Monicelli’s entertaining caper satire, I soliti ignotti, playing a slaphappy ex-boxer and incompetent crook. From that point on, he specialized in comedy, garnering better reviews as a comedian than in roles as a dramatic leading man, for which he had been criticized frequently for overacting.

His favorite director has been Dino Risi, and he has worked in 15 of his films. Other directors he has publicly acknowledged his indebtedness to are Mario Monicelli, who helped Gassman change the direction of his career from strained dramatic lead to deft comedian by offering him his first comic role in I soliti ignotti; and Ettore Scola, who cast him in each of the first four feature films he directed. Gassman also acted in two late-1970s films by American director Robert Altman, A Wedding and Quintet.

Perhaps his most triumphant performance was in Dino Risi’s comedy-drama, Profumo di donna, which earned Gassman the Best Actor Award at the 1975 Cannes Film Festival for his performance as a blind rogue forced to rely on his other senses. A comeback of sorts for Gassman—critically, that is, for his career had never floundered commercially—Profumo di donna was yet another demonstration that Gassman’s forte remains comedy, which brings out his joie de vivre and light touch, and short-circuits his occasional tendency to overact.

—Bill Wine

GAYNOR, Janet

Films as Actress:

1926 The Johnstown Flood (The Flood) (Cummings); The Shamrock Handicap (Ford); The Midnight Kiss (Cummings); The Blue Eagle (Ford); The Return of Peter Grimm (Schartzinger)

1927 Seventh Heaven (Borzage) (as Diane); Sunrise (Sunrise—A Song of Two Humans) (Murnau) (as the Wife); Two Girls Wanted (Alfred E. Green)

1928 Street Angel (Borzage) (as Angela); Four Devils (Murnau) (as Marion); Fox Talent Movietone (short)

1929 Christina (William K. Howard) (title role); Lucky Star (Borzage) (as Mary Tucker); Sunny Side Up (David Butler) (as Molly Carr)

1930 Happy Days (Stoloff) (as guest); High Society Blues (David Butler) (as Eleanor Divine); The Man Who Came Back (Walsh) (as Angie)

1931 Daddy Long Legs (Santell) (as Judy Abbott); Merely Mary Ann (Henry King) (title role); Delicious (David Butler) (as Heather Gordon)

1932 The First Year (William K. Howard) (as Grace Livingston); Tess of the Storm Country (Santell) (as Tess Howland)

1933 State Fair (Henry King) (as Margy Frake); Adorable (Dieterle) (as the Girl); Paddy, the Next Best Thing (Lachman) (title role); La ciudad de carton (Cardboard City) (King)

1934 Carolina (The House of Connelly) (Henry King) (as Joanna); Change of Heart (Blystone) (as Catherine Furness); Servants’ Entrance (Lloyd) (as Hedda Nilsson)
1935 One More Spring (Henry King) (as Elizabeth Cheney); The Farmer Takes a Wife (Fleming) (as Molly Larkins)
1936 Small Town Girl (Wellman) (as Kay Brannan); Ladies in Love (Edward W. Griffith) (as Martha Kerenye)
1937 A Star Is Born (Wellman) (as Esther Victoria Blodgett/ Vicki Lester)
1938 Three Loves Has Nancy (Thorpe) (as Nancy Briggs); The Young in Heart (Wallace) (as George-Ann Carleton)
1937 Bernardine (Levin) (as Mrs. Wilson)

Publications

By GAYNOR: article—

‘‘My Life—So Far—Told to Dorothy Spensley,’’ in Photoplay (New York), December/January 1928–29.

On GAYNOR: book—

On GAYNOR: articles—

Parsons, Harriet, ‘‘Janet Goes to War,’’ in Photoplay (New York), August 1930.
Albert, Katherine, ‘‘Janet Is Back on the Job,’’ in Photoplay (New York), November 1930.
Burke, Randolph Carroll, ‘‘The Gentle Art of Janet Gaynor,’’ in Pictures and Pictuagreeo, 8 August 1931.
D’Arne, Wilson, ‘‘Janet Gaynor’s Life Story,’’ in Pictures and Pictuagreeo, 6–20 April 1935.
Bailey, Kent, ‘‘A Star Is Born Again,’’ in Photoplay (New York), July 1937.
Roud, R., ‘‘People We Like: Janet Gaynor,’’ in Film Comment (New York), January/February 1974.
Lambert, Gavin, ‘‘Janet Gaynor and Adrian: Nominee for A Star is Born and Her Costume Designer Husband,’’ in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1992.

* * *

In Movies in the Age of Innocence, Edward Wagenknecht writes, ‘‘It would be hard to say whether Janet Gaynor is better remembered for her silent or her sound films, but her spirit was that of the silent years, and nobody could possibly have ended them more pleasantly.’’ Gaynor did star for slightly longer in talkies than she did in silent features, but her characterizations were quite definitely formed during the earlier period; she was sweet and sentimental as only a silent ingenue could be, and was a perfect type for Depression-era audiences. She embodied cuteness, but it was never cloying or offensive. Perhaps appropriately, her last screen appearance (after many years of retirement) was in Bernardine, which starred the 1950s idea of cuteness in the form of Pat Boone.

Gaynor’s persona suggested the child-woman image which Mary Pickford had created, and, indeed, Janet Gaynor remade two of Pickford’s silent features as talkies: Daddy Long Legs and Tess of the Storm Country. Yet Gaynor’s characters were a little more sophisticated than Pickford’s, a little more worldly-wise. As the director Victor Schertzinger once commented, ‘‘She has the maturity of the ages, and yet is singularly youthful.’’

Under Murnau’s direction in Sunset, Gaynor is subdued, very much the German Hausfrau, with a blond wig complementing the harsh makeup she wears. This is perhaps the most untypical Gaynor performance in that Murnau gives the majority of the emotional scenes to her leading man, George O’Brien. The same is not true of Gaynor’s films for Frank Borzage, Seventh Heaven and Street Angel, in which the actress is given free rein for her emotional outbursts.

In Seventh Heaven she reaches the height of happiness in the symbolic wedding sequence with Charles Farrell, and the peak of angry emotion as she takes a whip to Gladys Brockwell, running her out of the home she and Farrell have created for themselves. Both Seventh Heaven and Street Angel illustrate the range of Gaynor’s acting ability; in both she grows from a weak, frightened, disillusioned girl into a woman who knows love and experiences an inner strength.

Another key Gaynor-Farrell teaming came in the touching and at times profound part-talkie melodrama, Lucky Star, which was rediscovered and theatrically rereleased in the early 1990s. She plays a poor drudge who loves Farrell, who has been paralyzed from the waist down during the war. Gaynor brings to the role a freshness, a hopeful quality in the face of adversity.

Gaynor’s first all-talkie, Sunny Side Up, is delightful for its songs—‘‘If I Had a Talking Picture of You,’’ ‘‘I’m a Dreamer,’’ and the title number—but it is also embarrassing because of the babylike voices emanating from its stars, Gaynor and Farrell. That they were featured together in seven more films is extraordinary, but that Gaynor and Farrell managed to remain so overpoweringly popular is even more remarkable. In fact, Janet Gaynor settled into a comfortable niche as a talkie star. Who else, for example, could have played Will Rogers’s daughter in State Fair? The actress’s last great screen role was as Esther Blodgett in the first version of A Star Is Born, and it is curious that she should portray an actress reaching the pinnacle of her fame just as her own career was reaching its end.

—Anthony Slide, updated by Audrey E. Kupferberg

GERE, Richard

Films as Actor:

1975  Report to the Commissioner (Operation Undercover) (Katselas) (as Billy); Strike Force (Shear—for TV)
1976  Baby Blue Marine (Hancock) (as marine raider)
1977  Looking for Mr. Goodbar (Richard Brooks) (as Tony Lopanto)
1978  Days of Heaven (Malick) (as Bill); Bloodbrothers (Mulligan) (as Thomas Stony DeCoco)
1979  Yanks (Schlesinger) (as Matt)
1980  American Gigolo (Schrader) (as Julian Kaye)
1981  Reporters (Depardon)
1982  An Officer and a Gentleman (Hackford) (as Zack Mayo)
1983  Breathless (McBride) (as Jesse Lujack); Beyond the Limit (Mackenzie) (as Dr. Eduardo Plarr)
1984  The Cotton Club (Francis Ford Coppola) (as Dixie Dwyer); The Honorary Consul (Mackenzie)
1985  King David (Beresford) (title role)
1986  Power (Lumet) (as Pete St. John); No Mercy (Pearce) (as Eddie Jilette)
1988  Miles from Home (Farm of the Year) (Sinese) (as Frank Roberts Jr.)
1990  Internal Affairs (Figgis) (as Dennis Peck); Pretty Woman (Garry Marshall) (as Edward Lewis)
1991  Rhapsody in August (Kurosawa) (as Clark)
1992  Final Analysis (Joanou) (as Isaac Barr, + co-exec pr)
1993  Sommersby (Amiel) (as Jack, + co-exec pr); Mr. Jones (Figgis) (title role, + co-exec pr); And the Band Played On (Spottiswoode—for TV) (as choreographer)
1994  Intersection (Rydell) (as Vincent Eastman); Unzipped (as himself)
1995  First Knight (Zucker) (as Lancelot)
1996  Primal Fear (Hoblit) (as Martin Vail)
1997  Red Corner (Avnet) (as Jack Moore); The Jackal (Caton-Jones) (as Declan Mulqueen)
1999  Runaway Bride (Marshall) (as Homer Eisenhower ’Ike’ Graham); Autumn in New York (Chen) (as Will); Dr. T. and the Women (Altman) (as Dr. T.)

Publications

By GERE: articles—

Interview with B. Riley, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1980.
‘‘Shifting Geres,’’ interview with L. Grobel, in Moveline (Escondido), November 1997.

On GERE: book—

On GERE: articles—

‘‘In Camera: Richard Gere,’’ in Films and Filming (London), March 1980.
Harvey, S., ‘‘Star Quality, Star Power,’’ in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1980.
Elia, M., ‘‘Gere,’’ in Séquences (Montreal), May 1993.
Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1993.
Johnson, H., ‘‘Be Holy Now,’’ in Premier (Boulder), November 1996.

* * *

Whether raising consciousness about his Buddhist religion or treating an Academy Awards telecast as a political platform for his views, sincere Richard Gere is an adventurous soul open to a wide range of experiences. That is why it is so surprising that many of his screen performances suffer from a certain opaqueness, as if his emotions were something he chose to selectively instill in his work; such rationing does not culminate in memorable screen acting but rather in his followers felt capable of melting the beautiful control freak’s reserve. Only since the liberating role of an utter rotter in Internal Affairs has Gere begun to flower as film actor rather than superstardom.

From the outset, despite his Method Acting fireworks in Looking for Mr. Goodbar (where he is clearly outclassed histrionically by the less showy Tom Berenger), Gere became a star because of animal magnetism. Yet, judging from the evidence of his unconventional projects, Gere was never interested in pretty-boy immortality. Whether sublimating his love for Brooke Adams in order to secure a fortune in Days of Heaven or abnegating his family’s traditions in Bloodbrothers, Gere registers as a passionate driving force in offbeat projects, but the audience is never sure exactly what he is driving at. After the dizzying career momentum of An Officer and a Gentleman and American Gigolo, the rebel continued to thumb his nose at what was expected of him. In Officer, he rises above the horrendously dated man’s-man stereotypes and beyond Debra Winger’s stridency. Having demonstrated the old-fashioned charisma this military soap hungered for, he then replaced John Travolta in the glistening tribute to eighties narcissism, American Gigolo, a preposterously arty film in which Gere’s sangfroid complemented the movie’s sleek superficial surfaces. He seemed to have found a specialty: arctic-blooded social misfits thawed out by man-hungry dames.

Having lulled his fan club into a false sense of security, however, the matinee idol risked his mainstream status by daring to appear ridiculous in a biblical epic, King David (just as he had earlier defied conventional wisdom by starring as a gay concentration camp victim in Broadway’s Bent). Trashed by critics for his next few outings, Gere seemed to sleepwalk through such movies as The Cotton Club; in a way he was David Duchovny before there was a David Duchovny, but the Gere deep-freeze started turning people off. After a flawed but wrenchingly well-acted power-to-the-people tract called Miles from Home, Gere found his footing again as a crooked boy in blue. Matured somewhat by a pepper-gray hair color in Internal Affairs, Gere revealed an icy core of self-interest that not only fit the bastard he was playing but also made the actor more seductive than ever.

After penetrating the shell of law-and-order infected by sociopathy, Gere was easy on the eyes in the blockbuster, Pretty Woman—ceding the film to Julia Roberts in a fluffy but retrogressive glorification of streetwalkers. Risking his neck to reactivate the stalled HBO property And the Band Played On, Gere was also willing to lend his box-office clout to a gentle Kurosawa drama, Rhapsody in August. An actor with a conscience, Gere remained a force to be reckoned with as a leading man. He shone with undiminished star-power in both the faux-Hitchcock, Final Analysis, and the glossy male weepie, Intersection, a remake of a French film that lost something in translation. Sadly, while these vehicles benefited from his dashing movie star flair, the clumsy First Knight returned him to square one with his ludicrous Yankee in King Arthur’s Court. Sometimes, Gere’s time-travel could be rewarding, however. In a role that took full advantage of his nineties pliability, a less uptight Gere dazzled in Sommersby, the Civil War revamp of The Return of Martin Guerre. As a rootless opportunist willing to sacrifice his life to give a false identity credibility, Gere assumed the mantle of the idealized, quixotic lover, a screen image that one hopes to see him specialize in.

After this high-point as a romantic wayfarer, Gere seemed in danger of becoming a dilettante viewing his career as a means to support his political and spiritual causes. In the 90’s, a regrettable lack of commitment surfaced in his genre choices. For every stylish Primal Fear, in which the Grey Fox matched wits with a sociopath, he would plunge half-heartedly into hawking conventional movie heroes. One can understand his attraction to the convoluted Chinise-baiting thriller Red Corner, because it provided a forum for addressing human rights issues. However, this improbable odyssey squeezed a Ugly American protagonist into an expose of Commie corruption. If this movie was well intentioned but compromised, another star vehicle pitted him against Bruce Willis in The Jackal, which was as close to sheer summer escapism as Gere has ventured in his career. Uncomfortable in the macho hero spotlight, Gere floundered in this testosterone-drenched remake of Fred Zinneman’s cerebral spine-tingler, Day of the Jackal. Scrambling to give two stars equal import, this thriller became a house divided against itself.

Fortunately Gere was able to bask in the refracted glory of his Pretty Woman co-star in the enchanting Runaway Bride. Once again, Roberts brought out the mischief in him and enabled Gere to relax onscreen. Of all Roberts’ romantic comedy co-stars, Gere is the vis-à-vis with whom she generates the most chemistry. Although another re-union would be welcome, in the meantime, this maturing matinee idol needs to find a balance between projects that appeal to his interests and traditional entertainments that could bolster his stardom. Sometimes, Gere’s spirituality can register as mere plaidity onscreen, and it would behoove him to rediscover the drive that led him to acting in the first place.

—Robert Pardi

GIBSON, Mel

Films as Actor:

1977 Summer City (Fraser) (as Scollop)
1979 Tim (Pate) (title role); Mad Max (George Miller) (title role)
1980 Attack Force Z (Burstill) (as Captain Paul G. Kelly)
1981 Gallipoli (Weir) (as Frank Dunne)
1982 The Road Warrior (Mad Max 2) (George Miller) (title role); The Year of Living Dangerously (Weir) (as Guy Hamilton)
1984 The Bounty (Donaldson) (as Fletcher Christian); The River (Rydell) (as Tom Garvey); Mrs. Soffel (Dear Hearts) (Gillian Armstrong) (as Ed Biddle)
1985 Mad Max: Beyond Thunderdome (Mad Max 3) (George Miller and George Ogilvie) (title role)
1987 Lethal Weapon (Richard Donner) (as Martin Riggs)
1988 Tequila Sunrise (Towne) (as Dale McKussic)
1989 Lethal Weapon 2 (Richard Donner) (as Martin Riggs)
1990 Bird on a Wire (Badham) (as Rick Jarmin); Hamlet (Zeffirelli) (title role); Air America (Spottiswoode) (as Gene Ryack)
1992 Lethal Weapon 3 (Richard Donner) (as Martin Riggs); Forever Young (Miner) (as Daniel)
1993 Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (as voice)
1994 Maverick (Richard Donner) (title role)
1995 Pocahontas (Gabriel and Goldberg—animation) (as voice of Captain John Smith); Casper (Silerling) (cameo)
1996 Ransom (Ron Howard) (Tom Mullen)
1997 Fairy Tale: A True Story (Sturridge) (as Frances’ Father—uncredited); Father’s Day (Reitman) (cameo); Conspiracy Theory (Donner) (as Jerry Fletcher)
1998 Lethal Weapon 4 (Donner) (as Martin Riggs)
1999 Forever Hollywood (Glassman and McCarthy) (as himself); Payback (Helgeland) (as Porter); The Million Dollar Hotel (Wenders) (Skinner)
2000 Chicken Run (Lord /Park) (as Rocky the Rooster); The Patriot (Emmerich) (as Colonel Benjamin “The Ghost” Martin); What Women Want (+ pr)

Films as Actor and Director:

1993 The Man without a Face (as Justin McLeod)
1995 Braveheart (as William Wallace, + co-pr)

Other Films

2000 Ordinary Decent Criminal (O’Sullivan) (pr); The Three Stooges (Franxley) (exec. pr—for TV)

Publications

By GIBSON: articles—

Interview with M. Smith, in Cinema Papers (Melbourne), March 1983.
Interview with B. Hadleigh, in Film Monthly (Berkhamsted, England), January 1991.
Interview with Lawrence Grobel, in Playboy (Chicago), July 1995.
“Mel Gibson’s Great Scot,” in DGA (Los Angeles), March/April 1996.

On GIBSON: books—

Hanrahan, John, Mel Gibson, St. Peters, New South Wales, 1986.
McKaye, Keith, Mel Gibson, Garden City, New York, 1986.
Carrick, Peter, Mel Gibson, Jersey City, 1999.
Noble, Sandy, Mel Gibson, Broomall, 1999.

On GIBSON: articles—

American-born, Australian-raised, Mel Gibson is a throwback to the chiseled-featured cinema gods of Hollywood’s Golden Age. Like Errol Flynn, Tyrone Power, and Robert Taylor, he is comfortable time-traveling through any historical period to save the downtrodden, but this hero-for-all-seasons is a more accomplished actor than any of his predecessors.

After crafting an uncluttered performance as a low IQ youth smitten with an older woman in Tim, Gibson reversed sensitivity gears in a series of macho Australian adventures that put him on the international movie public’s map (the conventional military rescue mission in Attack Force Z, the antiwar soldier boy ode of Gallipoli, the apocalyptic survival guide of Mad Max). In the Mad Max sequel, The Road Warrior, Gibson finished construction on the earlier blueprint of his persona: the glowering man-of-action ready with a quip or a fist, as need be. But he savvily broadened his range in The Year of Living Dangerously to include a weakness for women and a streak of self-serving practicality. Looking every inch the packaged star whether behind the prow (The Bounty) or behind the plow (The River), Gibson floundered a bit from trying to fit generic heroic molds until he picked up a Lethal Weapon, charged by a newfound affinity for danger which tagged him as not only daring but reckless. When his outlaw restaurateur dreamily wooed Michelle Pfeiffer in atomic-powered charismatic splendor in Tequila Sunrise, audiences cheered a rarity who could be accepted as both action maven and matinee idol. Immensely likable, the quick-witted Gibson aimed his own secret weapon, those baby-blue eyes of his, to melt the defenses of Hollywood’s reigning female stars, but the Lethal Weapon movies revealed something more distinctive than his sex appeal. Out Mad-Maxing Mad Max himself, megastar Gibson sailed past being a dependable righter-of-wrongs and became a rash vigilante who had an intuitive Elrick, Ted. “Gibson, Radford Talk Shop,” in DGA (Los Angeles), May/June 1996.

Stars (Mariembourg), vol. 27, 1996.

* * *
grasp of criminal minds. There but for the grace of God went his Martin Riggs, and that element of surprise (contemplating suicide is practically a hobby), lent these flics a cutting black-comedy edge before the formula grew stale. As a maestro of drawing moviegoers into theaters, Gibson only misjudged his fans’ tolerance levels with Air America, a no-brainer comedy about CIA smugglers.

More felicitously, his other crowd-pleasers meshed the character of the brawling loose cannon with the image of poetic connoisseur of women; it is unlikely any of Gibson’s contemporaries could have stopped the frozen-in-time romance of Forever Young from becoming cloying. In addition to his smooth-as-velvet turn as a confidence man in Maverick in which he has to match wits with cardsharps James Garner and Jodie Foster while severely straining his imperturbability, Gibson offered irrefutable evidence that he was more than an extremely pretty face with a multidimensional Hamlet that should have won him an Oscar nomination. More than a case of just silencing dumbfounded critics by not tripping over the iambic pentameter, Gibson grasped the Prince of Denmark’s moody intransigence fluctuating with angry impatience; Hamlet and Martin Riggs are soulmates.

Acclaimed also as debuting director for his male weepie, The Man without a Face, Gibson demonstrated a shrewdness for adding texture to his established image and a true gift for eliciting performances from his cast—even if the film itself was a case of “Mr. Chips Says Goodbye to the Beauty and the Beast.” Even more worrisome than the thick sentimentality is a streak of homophobia which snaked through Man without a Face (and had earlier reared its ugly head in Bird on a Wire, in which Mel tosses off a cruel, dated impersonation of a hairdresser). In his incredibly popular Braveheart, the antitype rumblings get lost amidst the power-to-the-people sloganning. Gibson was applauded for starring in and directing this clodhogg spectacle because it allegedly revived the Hollywood Epic, but any second-unit director can give you scope and panorama. Tedium surging with self-importance, Braveheart lets Mel do his double-dare-you dance in kilts, but as the extras’ limbs keep getting lopped off, the film registers less as a historical chronicle than as a medieval slash film. More noteworthy as an affable player than a moviemaker, Gibson should make certain his movie-star savoir faire is rationed in roles that do not reduce his gallery to the swelled-headed heroics of a star hogging everything including the camera. And isn’t it time to stop legitimizing the vanity of actors-turned-directors such as Gibson and Kevin Costner simply for not getting flustered when confronted with casts of thousands?

—Robert Pardi

GIELGUD, (Sir) John

Films as Actor:

1924 Who Is the Man? (Summers) (as Daniel)
1929 The Clue of the New Pin (Maude) (as Rex Trasmere)
1932 Insult (Lachman) (as Henri Dubois)
1933 The Good Companions (Saville) (as Inigo Jollifant)
1934 Fall Fathom Five (Lye—short) (as voice)
1936 Secret Agent (Hitchcock) (as Edgar Brodie)
1939 Hamlet (Boisen—doc) (title role)
1941 The Prime Minister (Dickinson) (as Disraeli); An Airman’s Letter to His Mother (Powell—short) (as voice)
1943 Unfinished Journey (Cezalski—short)
1944 Shakespeare’s Country (Lawrence—short) (as voice)
1946 A Diary for Timothy (Jennings)
1948 Hamlet (Olivier) (as voice of Ghost)
1953 Julius Caesar (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Cassius)
1954 Romeo and Juliet (Gielietta e Romeo) (Castellani) (as narrator of prologue)
1955 Richard III (Olivier) (as Clarence)
1956 Around the World in Eighty Days (Anderson) (as Foster)
1957 Saint Joan (Preminger) (as Warwick); The Barretts of Wimpole Street (Franklin) (as Mr. Barrett)
1958 The Immortal Land (Wright—doc) (as narrator)
1964 Becket (Glenville) (as Louis VII); Hamlet (Collaran—for TV, filmed record of Gielgud’s New York theater production) (as voice of the ghost)
1965 The Loved One (Richardson) (as Sir Francis Hinsley)
1966 Campanadas a Medianoche (Chimes at Midnight; Falstaff) (Welles) (as Henry IV)
1967 Assignment to Kill (Sheldon Reynolds) (as Curt Valayan); To Die in Madrid (English-language version of Mourir à Madrid) (Rossif) (as narrator); October Revolution (English-language version of Revolution d’Octobre) (Rossif) (as narrator)
1968 Mr. Sebastian (Sebastian) (David Greene) (as Head of British Intelligence); The Charge of the Light Brigade (Richardson) (as Lord Raglan); The Shoes of the Fisherman (Anderson) (as the Elder Pope)
1969 Oh! What a Lovely War (Attenborough) (as Count Berchtold)
1970 Eagle in a Cage (Cook) (as Lord Sissal); Julius Caesar (Burge) (title role)
John Gielgud

1972 Lost Horizon (Jarrott) (as Chang); Probe (Search) (Mayberry—for TV)
1973 Frankenstein: The True Story (Smight—for TV)
1974 11 Harrowhouse (Avakian) (as Meecham); Gold (Hunt) (as Farrell); Murder on the Orient Express (Lumet) (as Beddoes); Galileo (Losey) (as Cardinal)
1976 Aces High (Gold) (as Headmaster); Joseph Andrews (Richardson) (as Doctor)
1977 A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (Strick) (as Preacher); Providence (Resnais) (as Clive Langham)
1978 Murder by Decree (Clark) (as Lord Salisbury); Caligula (Gore Vidal’s Caligula) (Brass) (as Nerva); Les Misérables (Glenn Jordan—for TV) (as Valjean’s father)
1979 The Conductor (Wajda) (title role); The Human Factor (Preminger) (as Brigadier Tomlinson)
1980 The Elephant Man (Lynch) (as Carr Gomm); The Formula (Avildsen) (as Dr. Esau); Priest of Love (Miles) (as Herbert G. Muskett)
1981 Arthur (Gordon) (as Hobson); Sphinx (Schaffner) (as Abdu); Lion of the Desert (Omar Mukhtar) (Akkad—produced in 1979) (Akkad) (as Sharif el Gariani); Chariots of Fire (Hudson) (as Master of Trinity); The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Tuchner—for TV) (as Torturer); Inside the Third Reich (Chomsky—for TV) (as Speer’s father)
1982 Gandhi (Attenborough) (as Lord Irwin); The Vatican Pimpernel (as Pope Pacelli)
1983 The Wicked Lady (Winner) (as Hogarth); Wagner (Palmer—for TV) (as Pfistermeister); The Scarlet and the Black (London—for TV)
1984 Scandalous (Cohen) (as Uncle Willie); The Shooting Party (Bridges) (as Cornelius Cardew); Buddenbrooks (Wirth—for TV) (as narrator); Camille (Desmond Davis—for TV); Frankenstein (Ormerod—for TV); Ingrid (Feldman—for TV); Invitation to the Wedding (Joseph Brooks) (as the Rev. Clyde Ormiston); The Far Pavilions (Duffell—for TV)
1985 Romance on the Orient Express (Clark—for TV); Plenty (Schepisi) (as Sir Leonard Darwin); Leave All Fair (Reid) (as John Middleton Murry); Time after Time (Hays) (as Jasper Swift)
1986 Theban Plays by Sophocles (for TV); The Whistle Blower (Langton) (as Sir Adrian Chapple); The Canterville Ghost (Bogart—for TV)
Quartermaine’s Terms (Hays—for TV); Barbablu, Barbablu (Bluebeard, Bluebeard) (Carpi)

Appointment with Death (Winner) (as Colonel Carbury); Arthur 2: On the Rocks (Yorkin) (as Hobson); A Man for All Seasons (Charlton Heston—for TV) (as Wolsey)

Getting It Right (Kleiser) (as Sir Gordon Munday); Summer’s Lease (Friend—for TV)

A TV Dante (Greenaway and Phillips); Strike It Rich (James Scott) (as Herbert Drether)

Prospero’s Books (Greenaway) (as Prospero)

Shining Through (Seltzer) (as Konrad Friedrichs, “Sunflower”); The Power of One (Avidsen) (as Headmaster St. John); Swan Song (Branagh—short) (as Svetlovidov)

Lovejoy: The Lost Colony (for TV) (as Wakering); Hand in Glove (for TV) (as Percival Pike Period); The Best of Friends (for TV) (as Sydney Cockerell)

First Knight (Zucker) (as Oswald)

galliver’s Travels (Sturridge—for TV); Hamlet (Branagh) (as Priam); Looking for Richard (Pacino); Shine (Hicks) (as Cecil Parkes); The Leopard Son (Van Lawick) (as Narrator); The Portrait of a Lady (Campion) (as Mr. Touchett); Hamlet (Branagh) (Priam)

A Dance to the Music of Time (Morahan, Rakoff—for TV) (as St. John Clarke)

The Tichborne Claimant (Yates) (as Cockburn); Elizabeth (Kapur) (as Pope Paul IV); Merlin (Barron) (as King Constant); Quest for Camelot (Du Chau) (as Merlin)

Catastrophe (Mamet—for TV)

Publications

By GIELGUD: books—

On GIELGUD: books—

On GIELGUD: articles—

Ecran (Paris), December 1979.

Classic Images (Indiana, Pennsylvania), April 1984.

Sir John Gielgud belongs to a dynastic acting family that goes back through the nineteenth century, and included his great-aunt Ellen Terry, whose work with Henry Irving illuminated the later nineteenth-century theater in Britain and America. He was therefore destined by family connections to go on the stage, and he was blessed with romantic good looks and a uniquely beautiful voice. Trained at Britain’s leading drama school, the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art (RADA), he started his stage career in 1921. By the 1930s, he and Laurence Olivier had become the leading Shakespearean actors of their generation. Indeed, Gielgud, Olivier, and Ralph Richardson are considered by many to be the three best English actors, ever. Gielgud never played romantic leads in movies as a youth, as he registered better on stage. Nevertheless, he has always given his all to whatever role he is cast in. Even playing the butler in Arthur, Gielgud brought depth to his character.

The theater was always to remain his principal artistic outlet, as his best film appearances have tended to be in Shakespearean adaptations—as an incisive Cassius in Joseph Mankiewicz’s Julius Caesar, as a benign Clarence in Olivier’s Richard III, as a coldly formal Henry IV in Orson Welles’s Chimes at Midnigh, and as a proudly imperious Caesar in Stuart Burge’s Julius Caesar. His work for the screen dates back to the silent film Who Is the Man?, but belongs essentially to sound film. He made an effective young lead in the adaptation of J. B. Priestley’s The Good Companions, appeared in Hitchcock’s Secret Agent, played the autocratic father in Sidney Franklin’s version of The Barretts of Wimpole Street, and was nominated for an Oscar for his Louis VII of France in Becker. He has claimed that he learned the hard way to recast his image from the new generation of theater-film directors, notably Lindsay Anderson. “You need a young public to strip your work of its affectations,’’ he said in 1979. As a whole, his later films have scarcely been distinguished, with the exception of cameo appearances in The Charge of the Light Brigade, The Shoes of the Fisherman, Murder on the Orient Express, and Joseph Strick’s A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, but he gave a masterly performance as the elderly and disillusioned writer in Alain Resnais’s Providence.

In more recent years, Gielgud made appearances on PBS’s Mystery series. Even in his advancing age, he did not let his acting lapse into “cruise control” — he gave a brilliant, intense performance every time.

—Roger Manvell, updated by Linda J. Stewart
GIRARDOT, Annie

Films as Actress:

1955 Treize à table (Hunebelle)
1956 Reproduction interdite (Grangier); L’Homme aux clefs d’or (Joannon)
1957 Le Rouge est mis (Grangier); L’Amour est en jeu (Ma femme, mon gosse, et moi) (Marc Allègre); Le Desert de Pigalle (Joannon); Maigret tend un piège (Maigret Lays a Trap) (Inspecteur Maigret) (Delannoy) (as Yvonne Maurin)
1960 La Corde raide (Lovers on a Tightrope) (Dudremont) (as Cora); Recours en grâce (Benedek); “Le Divorce” ep. of La Français et l’amour (Love and the Frenchwoman) (Christian-Jaque) (as Anna); Rocco e i suoi fratelli (Rocco and His Brothers; Rocco et ses frères) (Visconti) (as Nada)
1961 “Les comédiennes” ep. of Amours célèbres (Boisrond); Le Rendez-vous (Delannoy)
1962 Le Bateau d’Emile (Rossi) (as Fernande); La Donna scimmia (Rossi) (as Anna); Le Coeur à l’envers (Geralsimov) (as guest); Smog (Rossi) (as Gabriella)
1963 La donna scimmia (The Ape Woman) (Ferreri) (as Maria); I compagni (The Organizer; The Strikers; Les Camarades) (Monicelli) (as Nibbe); I fuorilegge del matrimonio (Orsini, Vittorio Taviani, and Paolo Taviani) (as Margherita)
1964 La Bonne Soupe (The Good Soup) (Thomas) (as young Marie-Paule); L’Autre Femme (La Otra Mujer; Quella terribile notte) (Villiers); Un Monseigneur de compagnie (Male Companion) (de Broca) (as Clara); “Il Principe Azzurro” ep. of Le Belle famiglie (Gregoretti)
1965 La ragazza in prestito (Engagement Italiano) (Gianetti) (as Clara); Déclic et les claques (Clair); Trois chambres à Manhattan (Carné) (as Kay); L’Ore de Duc (Baratier) (as guest)
1966 “Dijbouti” ep. of La Guerre secrète (La guerra segreta; Spione unter sich; The Dirty Game; The Dirty Agents) (Christian-Jaque) (as Nanette/Monique); Una voglia da morire (Tessari); Zhurnalist (Journalist) (Gerasimov) (as guest)

1967 “La strega bruciata viva” (“The Witch Burned Alive”) ep. of Le streghe (The Witches) (Visconti) (as Valeria); Vivre pour vivre (Live for Life) (Lelouch) (as Catherine Colomb); Les Anarchistes ou la Bande à Bonnot (Fourastié)
1968 Erotissimo (Piétris) (as Annie); Les Gauloises bleues (Cournot) (as Mother); Bice skoro proprast sveta (It Rains in My Village) (Petrovic); La Vie, l’amour, la mort (Love Life (Death) (Lelouch) (as woman in film); Dillinger è morto (Dillinger Is Dead) (Ferreri) (as maid)
1969 Metti, una sera a cena (Disons, un soir à dîner) (Patroni Griffi) (as Giovanna); Un Homme qui me plait (Love Is a Funny Thing; Again a Love Story; Un Tipo che mi piace) (Lelouch) (as Françoise); Il senso dell’uomo (The Seed of Man) (Ferreri) (as Anna); Storia di una donna (Story of a Woman) (Bercovici) (as Liliana Cardini)
1970 Le Clair de terre (Gilles); Les Novices (Casaril) (as Mona Lisa); Elle doit pas, elle fume pas, elle drague pas... mais elle cause (Audiard); Mourir d’aimer (Cayatte)
1971 Les Feux de la grandeur (Korber)
1972 La Mandarine (Molinaro) (as Sévérine); La Vieille Fille (Blanc) (as Muriel Buchon); Elle cause plus... elle finge (Audiard) (as Rosemonde); Traitements de choc (Shock Treatment) (Jessua) (as Hélène); It n’y a pas de fumée sans feu (Cayatte)
1973 Ursule et Grelu (Korber) (+ pr); Juliette et Juliette (Forlani)
1974 La Gifle (The Slap) (Pinoteau) (as Hélène Douleau)
1975 Il sospetto (Maselli); D’amour et d’eau fraîche (Blanc); Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie); Il pleut sur Santiago (Soto); Docteur Françoise Gaillard (No Time for Breakfast) (Bertuccelli) (title role)
1976 Cours après moi que je t’attrape (Autopsie d’un monstre; Jedem sein Hölle) (Cayatte)
1977 Le Dernier Baiser (Grassian); Jambon d’Ardenne (Lamy); Le Point de mire (Tramont)
1978 La zizanie (Zidi); Vivre car je profite (Boisset) (as Magda)
1979 La guerra segreta (Silvera) (as Marthe); Io e il duce (Jeannot Szwarc) (as Beatrice); La Giovine (Pinoteau) (as Valeria); Storia di una donna (Storia di una donna) (as Valeria)
1980 It Rains in My Village (Petrovic); Le Désert de Pigalle (Audiard) (as Rosemonde); Le Désert de Pigalle (Audiard) (as Mona Lisa)
1981 Le Crime ne paie pas (Dillinger Is Dead) (Ferreri) (as Liliana Cardini)
1982 All Night Long (Tramont) (as French teacher)
1983 Adieu Blaireau (Oury) (as Gabrielle)
1984 Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
1985 Il gisepett (Maselli); D’amour et d’eau fraîche (Blanc); Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
1986 Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
1987 Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
1988 Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
1989 Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
1990 Il faut vivre dangereusement (Makovski); Le gitan (Giovanni) (as Ninie)
GIRARDOT ACTORS AND ACTRESSES, 4th EDITION

1991 Merci la vie (Thanks for Life) (Blier) (as the Old Mother)
1993 A Cry in the Night (Spry) (as Reine)
1994 Les Braqueuses (Girls with Guns; The Hold-up Girls) (Salome) (as Mere Cecile)
1995 Les Misérables (Lelouch) (as farmer’s wife)
1996 Shangai 1937 (Patzak); Les Bidochons (Serge Korber); L’Âge de braise (When I Will Be Gone) (Leduc) (as Caroline Bonhomme)
1997 Nuda proprietà vendesi (Oldoini—for TV) (as Costanza)
1998 Préférence (Delacourt) (as Blanche)

Publications

By GIRARDOT: book—

Paroles de femmes, with Marie-Therese Cuny, Paris, 1981.

By GIRARDOT: articles—

Interview with A. Ignatov, in Soviet Film (Moscow), July 1983.
‘‘Nesmotria ni na chto, ia schastliva,’’ interview with A. Braginskii, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), no. 8, 1989.

On GIRARDOT: books—

On GIRARDOT: articles—

Pietzsch, I., ‘‘Faszination,’’ in Film und Fernsehen (Berlin), December 1979.

* * *

Annie Girardot launched her acting career at the Paris Conservatoire where she studied for stage performance and maintained a successful apprenticeship in the theater for several years. Brought up in the dark days of the German occupation, she won a place in the Comédie Française where Jean Cocteau called her ‘‘The finest dramatic temperament of the postwar period.’’ But her inability to contain her need to take risks and experiment within the rigid dictates of the Comédie propelled Girardot toward the cinema. She received immediate attention for her performance in L’Homme aux clefs d’or as a blackmailing vamp, and in his sentimental Le Désert de Pigalle as a hardened prostitute redeemed by love but stabbed to death. She performed the role of the prostitute in routine police dramas Le Rouge est mis and Reproduction interdite, a deceptive wife in Maigret tend un piège, a scheming adulteress in Le Crime ne paie pas, and a Gestapo general’s mistress in Le Vice et la vertu. Although never less than competent in these limited parts, her true potential was revealed as Nadia, the gangland harlot of Visconti’s Rocco e i suoi fratelli. Her depiction of the reformed but sexually abused prostitute suffering in her humiliation was both poignant and compelling.

In the 1960s and 1970s she continued to work extensively with Italian directors in both serious and comic roles. In France her performances have been associated with the directors Philippe de Broca, André Cayatte, and Claude Lelouch, and the actor Philippe Noiret. With de Broca her talent for comedy flourished. After the early Un Monsieur de compagnie, she was Lucienne in the broad sexual farce Le Cavaleur, and her success as the female detective Lise Tanquerelle, comically caught between personal and professional roles, in Tendre Poulet led to the sequel On a volé la cuisse de Jupiter. In the two latter films she was partnered by Philippe Noiret with whom she has also appeared in more dramatic roles: in Le Rendez-vous as the female detective; in La Vieille Fille as the withdrawn spinster Muriel Buchon falling in love with an equally shy bachelor; and in La Mandarine as Sévérine deserting her boring husband for an attractive teenager. For Cayatte there were socially, or morally conscious roles, particularly in Mourir d’aimer as the middle-aged teacher, ostracized and driven to suicide after an affair with a pupil. Lelouch also drew on her talents for emotionally charged roles. She gave a reserved, dignified performance as the deceived but forgiving wife Catherine Colomb in Vivre pour vivre; she was the vivacious Françoise destined to finish unhappily with Belmondo in the sentimental melodrama Un Homme qui me plaît; and in Partir, revenir she was the jealous mother Hélène Rivières, who commits suicide after denouncing her daughter to the Nazis.

Other more notable roles were as Anna, a career woman torn between her husband and her lover in La Proie pour l’ombre; as a vulnerable woman of fading beauty murdering a corrupt, exploitative doctor inTraitement de choc; as the neurotic Kay discovering love in Trois chambres à choc; as a lonely woman finding companionship with a telephone caller in Cause toujours . . . tu m’intéresses!; as Colette the unhappy mistress of a gangster in Adieu Blaireau; and again as a desperately lonely woman on the point of breakdown in Il y a des jours . . . et des lunes. Maternal roles are found in Le Coeur à l’envers, where she struggles with incestuous desires; in Listero, where she seeks to avenge her daughter’s death at the hands of gangsters; and in Souvenirs, souvenirs, where she has to cope with a difficult teenage daughter.

It is perhaps in her lighter roles as an exuberant comic actress that Annie Girardot has enjoyed most popular appeal. In Les Novices she was Mona Lisa, a kindly but cynical prostitute using an ambulance as a traveling brothel; in La Bonne Soupe she was Marie-Paule, the irrepressible orphan who seduces her way to the top; and in Erotissimo she portrayed the inventive housewife Annie rekindling her husband’s flagging sexual interest. Furthermore, her verve and professionalism have frequently rescued indifferent films.

Girardot has appeared in more than 60 films and has become one of France’s few box-office stars on a popularity level with Belmondo, Delon, and Montand, and as critically acclaimed as Moreau or Signoret. Equally adept at strong social drama (as evidenced by her work with Cayatte and Visconti) and light distinctive comedy (as in her work for de Broca), she is the epitome of a French star.

488

—R. F. Cousins, updated by Kelly Otter

GISH, Lillian

Nationality: American. Born: Lillian Diana Gish in Springfield, Ohio, 14 October 1896 (some sources say 1893). Education: Briefly attended Ursuline Academy, East St. Louis, Illinois. Career: About 1902—stage debut in Rising Sun, Ohio, in The Little Red Schoolhouse; 1903—04—with mother and sister Dorothy, toured in Her First False Step; 1905—danced with Sarah Bernhardt production in New York City; 1908—11—lived with aunt in Massillon, Ohio, and with mother in East St. Louis, and briefly with father in Oklahoma; 1912—film debut as featured player, with sister, in The House Built upon Sand (Morrissey); 1913—in Belasco production of A Good Little Devil starring Mary Pickford; collapsed during run of play with pernicious anemia; 1920—directed Dorothy Gish in Remodeling Her Husband; 1921—last film under Griffith’s direction, Orphans of the Storm; joined Inspiration Films; 1924—$800,000 contract with MGM; 1930—first talkie, One Romantic Night; resumed stage career in Uncle Vanya; 1930s—began working in radio; 1948—TV debut in Philco Playhouse production The Late Christopher Bean; 1969—began giving film lecture “Lillian Gish and the Movies: The Art of Film, 1900–1928.” Awards: Honorary Oscar, “for superlative artistry and for distinguished contribution to the progress of motion pictures,” 1970; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute, 1984; D. W. Griffith Award, for “an outstanding career in motion pictures,” 1987. Died: In New York City, 27 February 1993.

Films as Actress:

1912 An Unseen Enemy (Griffith); Two Daughters of Eve (Griffith); In the Aisles of the Wild (Griffith); The One She Loved (Griffith); The Musketeers of Pig Alley (Griffith); My Baby (Frank Powell); Gold and Glitter (Frank Powell); The New York Hat (Griffith); The Burglar’s Dilemma (Griffith); A Cry for Help (Griffith)

1913 Oil and Water (Griffith); The Unwelcome Guest (Griffith); The Stolen Bride (O’Sullivan); A Misunderstood Boy (Griffith); The Left-Handed Man (Griffith); The Lady and the Mouse (Griffith); The House of Darkness (Griffith); Just Gold (Griffith); A Timely Interception (Griffith); Just Kids (Henderson); The Mothering Heart (Griffith); During the Round Up (Griffith); An Indian’s Loyalty (Frank Powell); A Woman in the Ultimate (Griffith); A Modest Hero (Griffith); So Runs the Way (Griffith); The Madonna of the Storm (Griffith); The Blue or the Gray (Cabanne); The Conscience of Hassan Bey (Cabanne); The Battle at Elder Bush Gulch (Griffith)

1914 The Green-Eyed Devil (Kirkwood); The Battle of the Sexes (Griffith); The Hunchback (Cabanne); The Quicksands (Cabanne); Home, Sweet Home (Griffith); Judith of Bethulia (Griffith) (as the young mother); Silent Sandy (Kirkwood); The Escape (Griffith); The Rebellion of Kitty Belle (Cabanne); Lord Chumley (Kirkwood); Man’s Enemy (Frank Powell); The Angel of Contention (O’Brien); The Wife; The Tear that Burned (O’Brien); The Folly of Anne (O’Brien); The Sisters (Cabanne); His Lesson (Crisp) (as extra)

1915 The Birth of a Nation (Griffith) (as Elsie Stoneman); The Lost House (Cabanne); Enoch Arden (As Fate Ordained) (Cabanne); Captain Macklin (O’Brien); Souls Triumphant (O’Brien); The Lily and the Rose (Paul Powell)

1916 Daphne and the Pirate (Cabanne) (as Daphne); Sold for Marriage (Cabanne); An Innocent Magdalene (Dwan); Intolerance (Griffith); Diane of the Follies (Cabanne) (title role); Pathways of Life; Flirting with Fate (Cabanne); The Children Pay (Ingram)

1917 The House Built upon Sand (Morrissey)

1918 Hearts of the World (Griffith) (as the Girl, Marie Stephenson); The Great Love (Griffith); Liberty Bond short (Griffith); The Greatest Thing in Life (Griffith); The Romance of Happy Valley (Griffith)

1919 Broken Blossoms (Griffith) (as Lucy Burrow); True Heart Susie (Susie) (Griffith) (title role); The Greatest Question (Griffith)

1920 Way Down East (Griffith) (as Anna Moore)

1921 Orphans of the Storm (Griffith) (as Henriette Girard)

1923 The White Sister (Henry King) (as Angela Chiaromonte)

1924 Romola (Henry King) (title role)

1926 La Bohème (King Vidor) (as Mimi); The Scarlet Letter (Seastrom) (as Hester Prynne)

1927 Annie Laurie (Robertson) (title role); The Enemy (Niblo)

1928 The Wind (Seastrom) (as Letty Mason)

1930 One Romantic Night (Stein) (as Alexandra)

1933 His Double Life (Hopkins and William B. DeMille) (as Mrs. Alice Hunter)

1942 The Commandos Strike at Dawn (Farrow) (as Mrs. Bergesen)

1943 Top Man (Man of the Family) (Lamont) (as Beth Warren)

1946 Miss Susie Slagle’s (Berry) (title role); Duel in the Sun (King Vidor) (as Mrs. Laura Belle McCanes)

1948 Portrait of Jennie (Jennie) (Diettere) (as Mother Mary of Mercy)

1955 The Cobweb (Minnelli) (as Victoria Inch); The Night of the Hunter (Laughton) (as Rachal); Salute to the Theatres (supervisor; Loud—short) (appearance)

1958 Orders to Kill (Asquith) (as Mrs. Summers)

1960 The Unforgiven (Huston) (as Mattilda Zachary)

1963 The Great Chase (Kilham—doc)

1966 Follow Me, Boys! (Tokar) (as Hetty Seiber)

1967 Warning Shot (Kulik) (as Alice Willows); The Comedians (Glenville) (as Mrs. Smith); The Comedians in Africa (short) (appearance)

1970 Henri Langlois (Hershon and Guerra) (as guest)

1976 Twin Detectives (Day—for TV)

1978 A Wedding (Altmann) (as Nettie Sloan)

1981 Thin Ice (Aaron—for TV)

1983 Hobson’s Choice (Cates—for TV)

1984 Hambone and Hillie (Watts) (as Hillie)

1986 Sweet Liberty (Alda) (as Cecelia Burgess); The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Hunt)

1987 The Whales of August (Lindsay Anderson) (as Sarah Webber)

Film as Director:

1920 Remodeling Her Husband (+ co-sc with Dorothy Gish as “Dorothy Elizabeth Carter”)

489
Lillian Gish and Lars Hanson in The Scarlet Letter

Publications

By GISH: books—

An Actor’s Life for Me, as told to Selma Lane, New York, 1987.

By GISH: articles—

“Dorothy Gish, the Frankest Girl I Know,” in Filmplay Journal, April 1922.
“We Interview the Two Orphans,” by Gladys Hall and Adele Whitely Fletcher, in Motion Picture Magazine (New York), May 1922.
“Birth of an Era,” in Stage, January 1937.

On GISH: books—

Early in her career Gish demonstrated the restraint and subtlety that adds such depth to her performances. Even before her famous role in Birth of a Nation (1915), Gish had developed many of her characteristic poses: in The Musketeers of Pig Alley (1912) she cradles her cheek with her hand, a gesture that she later adapts by moving her pinky finger over to her mouth and chewing on her fingernail. Other early poses include the indignant thrust of an elbow as her fist goes to her hip, a head thrown down onto her arms in despair, and the prim pressing of her hands and pursing of her lips as she rebuffs an overzealous lover. Gish, under Griffith’s encouragement, often improvised these “details” that came to define her ingenuous style. In Broken Blossoms (1919) she created the famous gesture of lifting the corners of her mouth with two fingers when her abusive father berates her for not smiling enough. She also suggested trailing her hair and her hand in the freezing water as she lay collapsed on the ice in Way Down East.

Gish studied literature and philosophy, fencing and dancing to prepare her mind and her body for acting. She practiced with the Denishawn Company of Los Angeles, which produced Martha Graham among other famous modern dancers. Similar to Bogart’s expressive face, however, Gish’s eyes and mouth were her primary instruments of communication. Upon hearing that her lover has been killed, in The White Sister (1923), she delivers the gaze that is found in so many of her films: wide-eyed, vulnerable, distant, and tragic. (The intertitle describes her as being in “a trance-like state of dry-eyed despair.”) Some of Gish’s most powerful moments on film occur when her stoic suffering gives way to an expressive panic. In the climactic scene of Broken Blossoms, she flings her body around a tiny room and expresses on her face all of the fear and terror of someone who is about to be beaten brutally. In a similar scene from The Wind (1928), Gish is shown clawing at a window pane, eyes wide in horror as she watches the wind uncover the dead body of her rapist.

Too often Gish’s acting abilities have been undervalued because they are associated with the stereotype of the “simplistic” moral universe of melodramas. Rarely does Gish express any singular emotion; happiness is tinged with wistfulness, envy with irony, grief with hope. If there is any continuity in her roles it would have to be that her characters are always thoughtful. Gish allows the viewer to watch as her characters progress from one emotion to another, so one can follow as her True Heart Susie first feels disbelief, then horror, then irony touched by hysterical laughter and, finally, a weary acceptance when she discovers her lover plans to wed another; or, again, in Way Down East, when Anna baptizes her dying child, the grief, desperation, and loneliness of her character are all discreetly visible in her facial expression and bodily action. Gish’s characters are never entirely predictable. Unlike the tableau poses of earlier melodramatic acting, Gish’s emotional moments flow together realistically and logically while still retaining an element of surprise.

While Gish’s reputation has been established primarily on the basis of her extensive silent film career, she found equal fame on the stage and in sound film and television. After studying voice lessons, her speaking characters appear as natural and as unpretentious as her silent performances. She eased quite gracefully into “older” roles, such as the tough-as-nails, shotgun-toting mother of orphans in The Night of the Hunter (1955), or the self-sacrificing sister to a bitter Bette Davis in The Whales of August (1987). These final film performances demonstrate Gish’s talent for refining and adapting her... craft, even as film technology and trends in film acting styles changed radically during her prodigious career.

—Elizabeth Coffman

GLOVER, Danny

Films as Actor:

1979 Escape from Alcatraz (Siegel) (as Inmate)
1981 Chu Chu and the Philly Flash (Rich) (as Morgan); Oscar Micheaux, Film Pioneer (as Oscar Micheaux)
1982 Out (Deadly Drifter) (Holland)
1983 Memorial Day (Sargent—for TV) (as Willie Monroe); “Chiefs” (London—mini, for TV) (as Marshall Peters); The Face of Rage (Wrye—for TV) (as Gary)
1984 Iceman (Schepisi) (as Loomis); Places in the Heart (Benton) (as Moze)
1985 And the Children Shall Lead (Pressman—for TV); Silverado (Kasdan) (as Mal); The Color Purple (Spiegel) (as Albert);Witness (Weir) (as McFee)
1987 Mandela (Saville—for TV) (as Nelson Mandela); Lethal Weapon (Donner) (as Roger Murtaugh)
1988 Bat*21 (Markle) (as Captain Bartholomew Clark)
1989 Lethal Weapon 2 (Donner) (as Roger Murtaugh); Dead Man Out (Dead Man Walking) (Pearce—for TV) (as Alex); Lonesome Dove (Wincener—mini, for TV) (as Joshua Deets); A Raisin in the Sun (Duke—for TV) (as Walter Lee)
1990 Flight of the Intruder (Milius) (as CDR Frank “Dookie” Camparelli); To Sleep with Anger (Burnett) (as Harry Mention) (+ exec pr); Predator 2 (Hopkins) (as Lt. Mike Harrigan)

1991 Grand Canyon (Kasdan) (as Simon); Pure Luck (Tass) (as Raymond Campanella); A Rage in Harlem (Duke) (as Easy Money)
1992 The Talking Eggs (Sporn) (as Narrator); Lethal Weapon 3 (Donner) (as Roger Murtaugh)
1993 Bophi! (Freeman) (as Micah Mangena); The Saint of Fort Washington (Hunter) (as Jerry); Queen (Erman—mini, for TV) (as Alec Haley)
1994 Maverick (Donner) (as Bank Robber [uncredited]); Angels in the Outfield (Dear) (as George Knox)
1995 Operation Dumbo Drop (Wincer) (as Capt. Sam Cahill)
1996 America’s Dream (Barclay, Duke, Sullivan) (as Silas) (+ exec pr)
1997 Can’t You Hear the Wind Howl? The Life & Music of Robert Johnson (doc) (Meyer) (as Narrator); Buffalo Soldiers (Haid—for TV) (as Sergeant Wyatt) (+ exec pr); The Rainmaker (Coppola) (as Judge Tyrone Kipler [uncredited]); Switchback (Stuart) (as Bob Goodall); Wild America (Dear) (as Mountain Man [uncredited]); Gone Fishin’ (Cain) (as Gus Green)
1998 The Prince of Egypt (Chapman, Hickner, Wells) (as voice of Jethro); Beloved (Dennme) (as Paul D); Antz (Darnell, Johnson, Guterman) (as voice of Barbatus); Lethal Weapon 4 (Donner) (as Roger Murtaugh)
1999 The Monster (as Henry Johnson); Our Friend, Martin (Smiley, Trippetti) (as voice of Train Conductor); Wings Against the Wind (Palcy); Scared Straight! 20 Years Later (Shapiro—for TV) (as voice of Narrator)
2000 Freedom Song (Robinson—for TV) (as Will Walker) (+ exec pr); Boesman and Lena (John Berry) (as Boesman)

Other Films:

1994 Override (for TV) (d)
1996 Deadly Voyage (Mackenzie—for TV) (exec pr)

Publications

By GLOVER: articles—

On GLOVER: articles—

Ebony (Chicago), March 1986.

Premiere (Boulder), 10 February 1992.

* * *

During the last two decades, American filmgoers have found great amusement in movies that, for humorous effect, contrast conventional black and white styles. In the Beverly Hills Cop and 48 Hours series, to take the best known examples, comedian Eddie Murphy runs his numbers on a succession of stolid and humorless ofay types, either middle-class cops and villains from the whitest of white suburbs or a not very classy (or clean) detective with no more wit or style than a can of pork and beans. The most memorable scenes in these films are the ones in which Murphy’s ghetto moves and verbal jive help him negotiate what might be difficult, even dangerous moments. Confronted by suspicious smugglers, hassled by a bar full of racist rednecks, or confronted by an uppity hotel clerk, Murphy always slips through with verbal pyrotechnics or guile that would make Odysseus jealous.

The Lethal Weapon films offer similar enjoyments provided by the narrative excuse of a meaningless thriller plot, but with a twist. Here it is the white guy, self-destructive, impulsive Mel Gibson, who plays off the unruffled and very professional aplomb of his detective partner, a restrained Danny Glover who is constantly amazed by the zany antics of the unpredictable Gibson. It isn’t just that Glover easily incarnates the conventional values of the black middle class—a strong desire for success, unwavering commitment to family, and a deeply felt respect for the ethical code of his profession. Glover also exudes a gentleness that makes him the perfect victim of such shenanigans. He never gets angry, only exasperated.

It is this gentleness that allows Glover to do well with roles that might seem more suited to Gene Wilder’s brand of whimsical, unthreatening masculinity. In Angels in the Outfield, Glover plays an apparently hard-bitten baseball manager frustrated with his team’s incompetent athletes; an unsuspected heavenly intervention, revealed at first to the children who are these losers’ biggest fans, soon makes him a believer in undeserved benevolence, for which he becomes a passionate spokesman. Operation Dumbo Drop (a Walt Disney Vietnam film) succeeds because Glover’s warmhearted officer, who is concerned for the Montagnard villagers who have lost their elephant, is able to convert career-officer Ray Liotta into an animal lover willing to jump out of an airplane to save an errant pachyderm. In The Saint of Fort Washington, he is a lovable derelict (shades of Wilder’s Quaker Fortune has a Cousin Living in the Bronx) who does an affecting and melodramatic turn with, of all people, Matt Dillon.

As a supporting actor, Glover regularly turns in a competent performance: as an almost sympathetic murdering cop in Witness; as a bank robber in Maverick; as a southern judge in The Rainmaker; as a kind-hearted family man who rescues Kevin Kline in Grand...
Canyon; as the complex Mr. B, wife-beater and love slave, in The Color Purple; as a cowboy in Lonesome Dove; and so on. He has proven somewhat inept at both comedy (Gone Fishin’) and darker featured roles (playing a serial killer he is chillingly friendly but not scarily charismatic in Switchback).

He has been most impressive, however, in roles that enable him to make a statement about race. Dispossessed and rejected, he refuses to surrender to bitterness and comes to life as a cotton farmer in order to save the farm for Sally Field in Places in the Heart. His dedicated police officer in Bopha must abandon his unhinging cooperation with the system that oppresses his own people. In the Chester Himes adaptation, A Rage in Harlem, he is effective as a city slicker, the hustler Easy Money, providing depth and dramatic contrast in a well-directed ensemble cast. The surprisingly unpopular Beloved finds him as an ex-slave victimized by a white man, a dramatic foil to Oprah Winfrey’s Sethe. He is excellent as Walter Lee in a TV production of A Raisin in the Sun, though less intense and more vulnerable than Sidney Poitier’s defining interpretation of the character.

Though he has worked steadily and with competence throughout his long career, Danny Glover, however, has not yet found roles that could showcase his not inconsiderable acting talent. It is ironic, and revealing of the racial dynamics of the New Hollywood, that he has had his greatest popular success playing the straight man to Mel Gibson’s berserker.

—R. Barton Palmer

GODDARD, Paulette

Nationality: American. Born: Pauline Marion Goddard Levee in Whitestone Landing, New York, 3 June 1911. Education: Attended Mount Saint Dominic’s Academy, Caldwell, New Jersey. Family: Married 1) Edgar James, 1927 (divorced 1929); 2) the actor Charlie Chaplin, 1936 (divorced 1941); 3) the actor Burgess Meredith, 1944 (divorced 1949); 4) the writer Erich Maria Remarque, 1958 (died 1970). Career: 1925—model from age 14; 1926—stage debut in Ziegfeld’s No Fooling; 1929–32—short contracts with Roach and Goldwyn; 1933–36—studied with Chaplin prior to starring with him in Modern Times; 1938—contract with Chaplin prior to starring with him; 1939–79—seven-year contract with Paramount; began acting in radio productions; 1944—five-month USO tour of Far East; Paramount renewed contract for seven years; 1947—in Winterset at Abbey Theatre, Dublin; 1950s—occasional TV appearances. Died: Near Ronco, Switzerland, 23 April 1990.

Films as Actress:

1929 The Locked Door (Fitzmaurice); Berth Marks (Lewis R. Foster—short) (as train passenger)
1931 City Streets (Mamoulian); The Girl Habit (Cline) (as lingerie salesgirl)
1932 The Mouthpiece (Flood and Nugent) (as girl at party); Show Business (White—short); Young Ironsides (Parrott—short); Pack Up Your Troubles (George Marshall and McCarey); Girl Grief (Parrott—short); The Kid from Spain (McCarey) (as “Goldwyn” girl)
1933 Roman Scandals (Tuttle)
1934 Kid Millions (Del Ruth)
1936 Modern Times (Chaplin) (as gamine); The Bohemian Girl (Horne and Rogers)
1938 The Young in Heart (Wallace) (as Leslie Saunders); Dramatic School (Sinclair) (as Nana)
1939 The Women (Cukor) (as Miriam Aarons); The Cat and the Canary (Nugent) (as Joyce Norman)
1940 The Ghost Breakers (George Marshall) (as Mary Carter); The Great Dictator (Chaplin) (as Hannah); Northwest Mounted Police (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Louvette Corbeau); Second Chorus (Potter) (as Ellen Miller)
1941 Pot o’ Gold (The Golden Hour) (George Marshall) (as Molly McCorkle); Hold Back the Dawn (Leisen) (as Anita Dixon); Nothing but the Truth (Nugent) (as Gwen Saunders)
1942 The Lady Has Plans (Lanfield) (as Sidney Royce); Reap the Wild Wind (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Loxie Claiiborne); The Forest Rangers (George Marshall) (as Celia Huston); Star Spangled Rhythm (George Marshall)
1943 The Crystal Ball (Nugent) (as Toni Gerard); So Proudly We Hail (Sandrich) (as Lt. Joan O’Doul)
1944 Standing Room Only (Lanfield) (as Jane Rogers); I Love a Soldier (Sandrich) (as Eva Morgan)
1945 Daffy’s Tavern (Walker) (as guest); Kitty (Leisen) (title role)
1946 Diary of a Chambermaid (Le Journal d’une femme de chambre) (Renoir) (as Celestine)
1947 Suddenly It’s Spring (Leisen) (as Mary Morely); Variety Girl (George Marshall) (as guest); Unconquered (Cecil B. DeMille) (as Abigail Martha “Abby” Hale); An Ideal Husband (Korda) (as Mrs. Cheveley)
1948 On Our Merry Way (A Miracle Can Happen) (King Vidor and Fenton) (as Martha Pease); Hazard (George Marshall) (as Ellen Crane)
1949 Bride of Vengeance (Leisen) (as Lucretia Borgia); Anna Lucasta (Rapper) (title role)
1950 Del odio nace el amor (The Torch; Bandit General) (Fernández) (as María Dolores, + assoc pr)
1952 Babies in Bagdad (Ulmer) (as Kyra)
1953 Vice Squad (The Girl in Room 17) (Laven) (as Mona); Paris Model (Alfred E. Green) (as Betty Barnes); Charge of the Lancers (Castle) (as Tanya); Sins of Jezebel (Le Borg) (title role)
1954 The Stranger Came Home (The Unholy Four) (Fisher) (as Angie Vickers)
1964 Gli indifferenti (A Time of Indifference) (Maselli) (as Maria Grazia Ardengo)
1972 The Snoop Sisters (Female Instinct) (Leonard Stern—for TV) (as Norma Treet)

Publications

On GODDARD: books—

Paulette Goddard (front row, right) with John Litel, Claudette Colbert, Lynn Walker, Lorna Gray, Kitty Kelly, Helen Lynd, Mary Treen, and Dorothy Adams in So Proudly We Hail

On GODDARD: articles—

* * *

Paulette Goddard began her career at age 14 as a Ziegfeld girl billed as “Peaches.” Although she retired in her teens to wed a timber magnate, Edgar James, she embarked for Hollywood when her marriage failed and moved from bit parts in the 1930s to become one of Paramount’s leading ladies in the 1940s. Goddard never allowed herself to be typecast, and variety best characterizes both her choice of roles and of husbands. Her pictures ranged from comedies to musicals and serious drama, and she played everything from the gamine to the frightened heroine and the siren.

After a series of very minor roles, she met Charles Chaplin (whom she eventually married), who gave her the part of the beautiful waif in his last silent release Modern Times. Her performance was fresh, seemingly spontaneous, and was widely praised. Her appearance almost netted her the part of Scarlett O’Hara, and she was under contract to Selznick until she was sold to Paramount. With the latter she had her first starring role in The Cat and the Canary, opposite Bob Hope. At Paramount and on loan to other studios she was to appear in a wide range of films, including musicals with Fred Astaire (Second Chorus) and James Stewart (Pot o’ Gold), another Hope film (Nothing but the Truth) and, with Ray Milland, a spy film (The Lady Has Plans), a comedy (The Crystal Ball), and a hit costumer (Kitty). She received her only Oscar nomination, as best supporting actress, for her performance in a war drama (So Proudly We Hail), with Claudette Colbert and Veronica Lake. Goddard also appeared in Chaplin’s The Great Dictator, their second and last film together (they later divorced).

Of all her roles, critics usually deem one of her best to have been in Diary of a Chambermaid, co-produced by Jean Renoir and Goddard’s third husband, Burgess Meredith, and directed by Renoir. Goddard starred as an outspoken maid in a 19th-century French household, in what is often regarded as one of Renoir’s best American films. Her career was in decline by the 1950s, however, and she appeared in a number of B pictures such as Babes in Bagdad, The Sins of Jezebel, and The Charge of the Lancers. With her marriage to Erich Maria Remarque in 1958, she ceased working, appearing only in the Italian Gli indifferenti (based on an Alberto Moravia novel) in 1964 and making a rare television appearance in The Snoop Sisters in 1972.

—Frances M. Malpezzi, updated by Frank Uhle

GOLDBERG, Whoopi

Whoopi Goldberg

—Oscar for Best Supporting Actress, for Ghost, 1990.

Films as Actress:

1985 The Color Purple (Spielberg) (as Celie)
1986 Jumpin’ Jack Flash (Penny Marshall) (as Terry Doolittle)
1987 Burglar (Wilson) (as Bernice Rhodenbarr); The Telephone (Torn) (as Vashti Blue); Scared Straight: 10 Years Later (doc) (as host)
1988 Fatal Beauty (Holland) (as Rita Rizzoli); Clara’s Heart (Mulligan) (as Clara Mayfield)
1989 Homer and Eddie (Konchalovsky) (as Eddie Cervi); Beverly Hills Brats (Sotos); The Long Walk Home (Pearce) (as Odesa Cotter); Kiss Shot (London)
1990 Ghost (Zucker) (as Oda Mae Brown)
1991 Soapdish (Hoffman) (as Rose Schwartz); House Party 2 (Jackson) (as Professor)
1992 Wisecracks (Singer—doc); Sister Act (Ardolino) (as Deloris Van Cartier/Sister Mary Clarence); Sarafina! (Rooldt) (as Mary Masembuko); The Player (Altman) (as Detective Avery); The Magical World of Chuck Jones (Daugherty)
1993 Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit (Duke) (as Deloris Van Cartier/ Sister Mary Clarence); National Lampoon’s Loaded Weapon I (Quintano) (as Sergeant York); Made in America (Benjamin) (as Sarah Matthews)
1994 The Lion King (Minkoff) (as voice of Shenzi the Hyena); Naked in New York (Algrant) (as Tragedy Mask); Libération (Schwartzman—doc) (as narrator); The Pagemaster (Hunt and Johnston) (as Fantasy); Corrina, Corrina (Jessie Nelson) (title role); The Little Rascals (Speeris) (as Buckwheat’s mom); The Celluloid Closet (Epstein and Friedman—doc) (as interviewee); Star Trek: Generations (David Carson) (as Guinan)
1995 Moonlight and Valentino (Anspaugh) (as Sylvie Morrow); Boys on the Side (Herbert Ross) (as Jane DeLuca); T. Rex (Betuel) (as Kate)
1996 The Associate (Petrie); Bogus (Jewison); Eddie (Rash) (as Edwina “Eddie” Franklin)
1997 In & Out (Oz) (as Herself); An Alan Smithee Film: Burn Hollywood Burn (Hiller, Smithee) (as Herself); In the Gloaming (Reeve—for TV) (as Myrna); Destination Anywhere (Pellington) (as Cabbie); Cinderella (Iscove—for TV) (as Queen Constantina)
1998 How Stella Got Her Groove Back (Kovalyov, Young—doc) (as Vivien Morgan); The Rugrats Movie (Kovalyov, Virgjen) (as Ranger Margaret)
1999 Girl, Interrupted (Mangold) (as Nurse Valerie); Get Bruce (Kuehn) (as herself); Alice in Wonderland (Willing—for TV) (as Cheshire Cat); The Deep End of the Ocean (Grosbard) (as Candy Bliss); Jackie’s Back (Townsend) (as Nurse Ethyl Washington Rue Owens); Leprechauns (Henderson—for TV) (as The Grand Banshee); Our Friend Martin (Smiley and Trippetti) (as Mrs. Peck)

Address:

CAA, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.
the film is a stirring ode to African-American sisterhood which was controversial for its depiction of black males as inept, womanizing brutes and its many Academy Award nominations (including one for Goldberg, but excluding one for director Steven Spielberg) without earning a single statue. Goldberg offers a sensitive performance as the passive, much-abused Celie, a deceptively simple, multifaceted character who is “black . . . poor . . . ugly . . . (and) a woman (which means that she’s) nothing at all.” It is a difficult role, which Goldberg pulls off with the aplomb of a screen veteran.

After this promising debut, Goldberg found herself wasted in a series of uniformly dreadful features: Jumpin’ Jack Flash, Burglar, Fatal Beauty, Clara’s Heart, The Telephone, and Homer and Eddie. In each, her performance borders on self-caricature, with her character either being poorly defined or an overbearing know-it-all.

Goldberg’s screen career was headed for oblivion when it was salvaged by her Oscar-winning turn in Ghost, the surprise smash of 1990. Nevertheless, her character—Oda Mae Brown, a storefront medium who conveys messages from a recently deceased Manhattanite (Patrick Swayze) to his grieving widow (Demi Moore)—is a throwback to an ill-informed earlier era. Oda Mae is little more than a slimmed-down Hattie McDaniel: a sassy, bossy contemporary mammy whose role within the scenario is dependent upon those of the hero and heroine. She is an African-American stereotype, an enlightened picture of a black woman for white moviegoers.

Fortunately for Goldberg, her success in Ghost did not lead to her being forever cast as a comical caricature. First she offered a solid performance in The Long Walk Home as a domestic in the American South in the 1950s; she later was to play a not-dissimilar role in Corrina, Corrina. After a fine turn as a police detective in Robert Altman’s The Player—she was one of the few stars who appeared in the film playing a character, rather than in a cameo—Goldberg was perfectly cast in the smash-hit comedy Sister Act as an on-the-lam lounge singer who hides in a convent after witnessing a murder. The film was so successful that it inspired a sequel, Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit, and Goldberg has since had her pick of projects. The most impressive of these are: The Lion King, in which she is the voice of Shenzi, and the female buddy movies Boys on the Side and Moonlight and Valentino. The latter films serve in marked contrast to Ghost in that her characters—Jane in Boys on the Side and Sylvie Morrow in Moonlight and Valentino—are central to, rather than satellites of, the dramatic action, equal to, not subordinates of, her co-stars. Furthermore, they have come full circle from Celie in that they are anything but physically and psychologically beaten down by men; Jane and Sylvie are fully independent, modern, and contemporary—and Jane even is a lesbian.

Offscreen, Goldberg has found herself at the center of controversy. Her recipe for “Jewish American Princess Fried Chicken,” published in a book titled Cooking in Litchfield Hills, offers instructions to “send a chauffeur to your favorite butcher shop for the chicken,” “watch your nails” while shaking the chicken in a brown paper bag, and “have cook prepare rest of meal while you touch up your makeup.” During her brief romance with Ted Danson, which began when they co-starred in Made in America, he showed up at a Friar’s Club function in blackface and delivered an epithet-laden monologue intended, as he explained, “to amuse my dear friend Whoopi.” Yet, observed an attendee, “Whoopi was the only one laughing.”

But Goldberg has emerged unscathed. Furthermore, while a full-fledged movie star, she is not averse to appearing on the small screen.

---

Publications

By GOLDBERG: book—

By GOLDBERG: articles—

Interview in Inter/View (New York), December 1984.
Interview in American Film (Washington, D.C.), December 1985.

On GOLDBERG: book—

On GOLDBERG: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), Summer 1996.
Premier (Boulder), July 1996.
Horst, Sabine, “Eine ganz normale Heldin,” in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), August 1997.

Whoopi Goldberg is a spunky, likable African-American character actress/comedienne whose many talents have transcended the industry’s initially sorely underutilizing her.

Her debut performance in The Color Purple was proof of Goldberg’s celluloid abilities. Based on Alice Walker’s acclaimed novel,
She has been a regular on the television series Bagdad Cafe and Star Trek: The Next Generation, appeared on numerous musical and comedy specials, and even hosted her own syndicated talk show.

—Rob Edelman

GOLDBLUM, Jeff

Films as Actor:

1974 Death Wish (Winner) (as Attacker #1); California Split (Altman) (as Lloyd Harris)
1975 Nashville (Altman) (as Tricycle Man)
1976 Next Stop, Greenwhich Village (Mazorsky) (as Clyde Baxter); Special Delivery (Wendkos) (as Snake); St. Ives (Thompson) (as Hood #3)
1977 Annie Hall (Allen) (Party Guest); Between the Lines (Silver) (as Max Arloft); The Sentinel (Winner) (as Jack)
1978 Thank God It’s Friday (Klane) (Tony Di Marco); Remember My Name (Rudolph) (as Mr. Nudd); Invasion of the Body Snatchers (Kaufman) (as Jack Bellicec)
1980 The Legend of Sleepy Hollow (Schellerup—for TV) (as Ichabod Crane)
1981 Threshold (Pearce) (as Aldo Gehring)
1983 The Big Chill (Kasdan) (as Michael); The Right Stuff (Kaufman) (as Recruiter)
1984 The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the Eighth Dimension (Richter) (as New Jersey); Into the Night (Landis) (Ed Okin); Ernie Kovacs: Between the Laughter (Johnson—for TV) (as Ernie Kovacs)
1985 Transylvania 6–5000 (DeLuca) (as Jack Harrison); Silverado (Kasdan) (as Slick)
1986 The Fly (Cronenberg) (as Seth Bundle)
1987 Beyond Therapy (Altman) (as Bruce); Race for the Double Helix (Jackson—for TV) (as Jim Watson)
1988 Vibes (Kwapis) (as Nick Deezey)
1989 Earth Girls Are Easy (Temple) (as Mac); The Tall Guy (Smith) (as Dexter King)
1990 Mr. Frost (Setbon) (as Mr. Frost); El Sueño del mono loco (Twisted Obsession) (Trueba) (as Dan Gillis); Framed (Parisot—for TV) (as Wiley)
1992 The Favor, The Watch and The Very Big Fish (Lewn) (as Pianist); Shooting Elizabeth (Taylor) (as Howard Pidgeon); The Player (Altman) (as himself); Father and Sons (Mones) (as Max); Deep Cover (Duke) (as David Jason)
1993 Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Ian Malcolm); Lush Life (Elias) (as Al Gorky)
1995 Nine Months (Columbus) (Sean Fletcher); Powder (Saluka) (as Donald Ripley); Hideaway (Leonard) (as Hatch Harrison)
1996 Mad Dog Time (Bishop) (as Mickey Holiday); Independence Day (Emmerich) (as David Levinson); The Great White Hype (Hudin) (as Mitchell Kane)
1997 The Lost World: Jurassic Park (Spielberg) (as Ian Malcolm)
1998 Holy Man (Herek) (Ricky Hayman); The Prince of Egypt (Chapman/Wells/Hickner) (as voice of Aaron)
2000 One of the Hollywood Ten (Francis—for TV) (as Herbert Biberman); Chain of Fools (Taktor) (as Avnet); Auggie Rose (Tabak) (as John C. Nolan); Perfume (Rymer); Like Cats & Dogs (Guterman) (as Brody)

Films as Director:

1996 Little Surprises

Publications

On GOLDBLUM: books—

On GOLDBLUM: articles—

Seidenberg, Robert, “The Tall Guy: Jeff Goldblum Plays the Fool,” in American Film (Hollywood), September 1990.

Blair, Iain, “Roland Emmerich: The Visionary Director Takes on Effects, Budgets and Alien Invasions for Fox’s Independence Day,” in Film and Video (Los Angeles), July 1996.

Svetkey, Ben, “The Lizard King: Jeff Goldblum Has Already Headlined in the Two Top-Grossing Films of All Time. If This Summer’s The Lost World Turns out to Be Another Prehistoric Powerhouse, The Actor May Evolve into a Bona Fide Brontosize Star,” in Entertainment Weekly, 23 May 1997.

***

To contend that American actor Jeff Goldblum is possibly the hardest working performer in Hollywood might raise an eyebrow or two. However, a quick perusal of his biography reveals a remarkably long and respectable career in stage, television, and motion pictures, and a list of film credits reminiscent of the old-time movie stars of Hollywood’s golden age.

Jeffrey Lynn Goldblum is a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Goldblum confirms in Entertainment Weekly that both his parents “toyed with show business.” He was smitten with acting fever in the 1960s when as a starry-eyed young boy, he spent many hours at the neighborhood picture show. These were the days when movie houses were motion picture palaces with balconies were filled with the noise of unescorted kids; the time of Cinema-Scope epics Godzilla and end-of-the-world disaster tales very much like the ones in which Goldblum would eventually earn featured roles. The experience affected him profoundly, he confessed: “All I know is that early on, it was this wild, feverish kind of call for me, I was like, ‘I’ve got to do this.’”

He received training in acting, studying with the legendary Sanford Meisner at New York’s Neighborhood Playhouse. He honed his skills in live theatre appearing with the New York Shakespeare Festival, the Phoenix Theatre Company, and others. In 1974, he made his first film appearance as a crazed rapist in the New York vigilante tale Death Wish. This role presents quite a contrast for a man who in real life is seen by many and described by Svetky in Entertainment Weekly as a charming, “smart, likeable oddball.” Indeed, Goldblum has earned a reputation as being an outsider of sorts, a eccentric who prefers to wear black and is known for his scattered speech—quirks that show up in one way or another in many of his film characters, rendering even decidedly small roles more memorable.

Throughout the 1970s Goldblum made creditable appearances in such films as Robert Altman’s well-received Nashville (1975), Woody Allen’s Annie Hall (1977), Thank Good It’s Friday (1978), and the remake of the 1950s horror classic Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1978).

In 1980, Goldblum co-starred in the short-lived television drama, Tenspeed and Brown Shoe. The detective drama, as described by Tim Brooks and Earle Marsh, featured entertainer Ben Vereen as Lionel “E. L. Turner” (Tenspeed), a “charming hustler of disguise” and Goldblum as “Lionel Whitney” (Brown Shoe) as Turner’s tomied and “somewhat naive foil.” The two men ran a detective agency in the swank Sunset Boulevard section of Los Angeles. The program garnered praise but not enough ratings points and was cancelled after only a few episodes. Among other film productions of that decade, Goldblum appeared in the made-for-television movie, Rehearsal for Murder (1982), The Right Stuff (1983) The Big Chill (1983), and the 1984 cult classic, The Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the Eighth Dimension. He earned the leading role as pioneer television comic Ernie Kovacs in the television movie, Ernie Kovacs: Between the Laughter (1984).

Goldblum attracted public attention with his portrayal of the “slightly crazed scientist!” in the 1986 remake of the 1950s horror film, The Fly. He endured five-hour make-up sessions to coordinate his metamorphosis into an insect...”Goldblum has created one of the most sympathetic man-monsters ever seen on screen,” wrote Jack Matthews of the Los Angeles Times, “and the best work under this much latex since John Hurt’s Oscar-nominated performance in The Elephant Man.”

Goldblum played another scientist to much acclaim in 1996 when he was cast as Dr. Ian Malcolm in the Steven Spielberg directed blockbuster hit of the year, Jurassic Park. Though Goldblum had portrayed scientists many times, he suffused this role with personal touches. Instead of wearing a white lab coat and khaki trousers, Goldblum donned gold chains, biker boots, wrap-around shades, and a black, leather jacket. Goldblum oozed suavity and coolness as the consummate “anti-hero,” noted Francesca Riveire in Smoke. The role catapulted him into true stardom.

Goldblum followed this success with another blockbuster hit in 1997. Goldblum, alongside popular actor and rap singer Will Smith, battles aliens who seek control of the Earth in Independence Day. The film is replete with a magnificent display of computer-generated special effects but manages to tell an interesting and compelling story. Like Jurassic Park, Independence Day surpassed box office records. to become one of the highest earning films of all time. Therefore, in the annals of American film history, notes Svettsky, Jeff Goldblum holds the distinction of having starred in two of top-grossing motion pictures of the twentieth century.

As the pages of the calendar open to the second century in the history of filmmaking, one can only surmise what the legacy will be for Goldblum who is young and presumably has many decades of filmmaking ahead. His recent projects include production of a film about the Hollywood Ten, the true story of McCarthy-era blacklisted director, Herbert Biberman. And, there are hints of a third sequel to Jurassic Park, a fitting undertaking for a well-established and popular actor seen as perhaps as one of Hollywood’s more unique personalities.

—Pamala S. Deane

GONG Li

Films as Actress:

1987 Hong gaoliang (Red Sorghum) (Zhang Yimou) (as Nine, the Grandmother)
1989 The Empress Dowager (Li Hanhsiang); Daidao Meizhoubao (Operation Cougar) (Zhang Yimou); Qin Yong (A Terracotta Warrior) (Ching Siutung) (as Hon Tong)
1990 Ju Dou (Zhang Yimou) (title role)
1991 Duhong Denglong Gaogao Gao (Raise the Red Lantern) (Zhang Yimou) (as Songlian); Back to Shanghai; Haomen Yeyan (The Banquet) (Clifton Ko and Hark Tsui)
1992 Munding sifan (Mary from Beijing) (Sylvia Chang) (as Ma Li); Qiu Ju Da Guansi (The Story of Qiu Ju) (Zhang Yimou) (as Wan Qiu Ju)
1993 Ba Wang Bie Ji (Farewell My Concubine) (Chen Kaige) (as Juxian); The Flirting Scholar (Richard Lee); Semi-Devils
1994 To Live (Zhang Yimou) (as Jiazhen); Xi chu hawang (The Great Conqueror’s Concubine) (Stephen Shin) (as Lu Zhi); La Peintre (Hua Hun; Soul of a Painter) (Huang Shuquin) (as Pan Yuliang)
1995 Yao ayaoyao dao waipo qiao (Shanghai Triad) (Zhang Yimou) (as Ziao Jingbao); Temptress Moon (Shadow of a Flower) (Chen Kaige)
1996 Feng yue (Temptress Moon) (Kaige Chen) (as Pang Ruyi)
1997 Chinese Box (Wang) (as Vivian)
1999 Jing ke ci quin wang (The Assassin) (Chen) (as Lady Zhao); Piao liang ma ma (Breaking the Silence) (Zhou Sun) (as Sun Liying)

Publications

By GONG LI: articles—

On GONG LI: articles—

“China’s Screen Siren,” in New Yorker, 28 November 1994.
Hooper, Joseph, ‘‘Raise the Red Curtain,’’ in Esquire (New York), December 1994.
Feldvoss, Marli, ‘‘Weltstar aus China,’’ in EPD Film (Frankfurt/Main), June 1997.

By any standard, Chinese fifth-generation director Zhang Yimou—whose credits include Ju Dou, Raise the Red Lantern, The Story of Qiu Ju, To Live, and Shanghai Triad—is a world-class filmmaker. And by any standard, Gong Li, his favorite star and leading lady, is a world-class actress. Whether playing simple rural peasants or sophisticated urban temptresses, Gong remains an eminently watchable screen presence. When she is cast in stories set in precommunist China, her roles most often reflect the manner in which women have been treated within traditional Chinese society. When her films are set during or after the 1949 revolution, she plays a woman who suffers, along with her loved ones, at the whims of a callous political state.

Raise the Red Lantern, set in the 1920s, is arguably the best of the actress’s “pre-revolution” films made with her mentor. Gong plays Songlian, a pretty 19-year-old university student whose father has just died and who is pressured by her stepmother into marrying a rich man. She thus becomes a concubine, the “fourth mistress” in the house of a wealthy feudal nobleman who is addressed by servants and wives alike as “Master.” Zhang’s primary interest is not this character, but rather Songlian—how she is affected by this marriage, and her relationships with the other mistresses. Gong offers a subtly revealing performance. From the film’s opening shot, the various emotions that register on her face speak volumes about her character.

Gong plays a similar role in Ju Dou—a young peasant woman coerced into marrying an aged, embittered, and abusive dye mill owner during the 1920s. In Red Sorghum, her screen debut, she also is a peasant who is supposed to wed a much older man, this one a winemaker, but ends up as the partner of a man who is closer to her in age.
Gong Li

Shanghai Triad, the most recent Zhang-Gong collaboration, is quite a departure for the pair. Set in the 1930s, it tells the story of a 14-year-old boy who is “fresh from the country,” and who is a distant relative of the most powerful gang boss in Shanghai. The teen is brought to the city to work as servant to Ziao Jingbao (Gong), the mobster’s glamorous but crass and ill-fated nightclub singer-mistress. Shanghai Triad is not Zhang’s best film, as it lacks the urgency of his better earlier works. Nevertheless, Gong is ever-resplendent as Ziao Jingbao, a woman who despite her surface toughness is revealed to be a sex object and a victim.

Gong’s two “postrevolution” films with Zhang are equally potent. To Live is a forceful drama about the fortunes of one Chinese family and how its members become swept up in the events of recent history. Gong plays Jiazhen, wife of the son of a prominent family in a small village. The lives of Jiazhen, her husband, and children undergo much turmoil after the revolution, with the scenario mirroring Zhang’s clear and sobering censure of the hypocrisy of life under Mao. Gong is especially fine as she responds with raw emotion to the crises in Jiazhen’s life, and in the lives of her children. In The Story of Qiu Ju, Gong plays Wang Qiu Ju, an unsophisticated but resolute Chinese farm woman who goes to all lengths to obtain an apology after her husband is brutalized by her village’s stubborn leader. This story of a woman’s quest for fairness is an adroit examination of government hypocrisy, with Gong a tower of strength.

The sole Zhang-Gong collaboration little known in the West is Operation Cougar, the saga of an airline hijacking in which the actress has a supporting role as a stewardess. Her one major role in a film not directed by Zhang is Chen Kaige’s Farewell, My Concubine, an epic that emphasizes the same political concerns found in Zhang’s work. Farewell, My Concubine features a trio of main characters who share a complex bond. The first two are Chinese opera stars, “stage brothers” who were students at the same acting school and who have become famous for playing the king and his concubine in the title opera. The third is the feisty yet vulnerable prostitute (Gong) who marries one of them.

Farewell, My Concubine was released a scant five years after Gong had made her screen debut in Red Sorghum. Yet she had already developed into one of the international cinema’s premier actresses.

—Rob Edelman
GRABLE, Betty

Nationality: American. Born: Ruth Elizabeth Grable in St. Louis, Missouri, 18 December 1916. Education: Attended Mary Institute, St. Louis; Hollywood Professional School; Ernest Belcher Academy; Albertina Rasch School. Family: Married 1) the actor Jackie Coogan, 1938 (divorced 1941); 2) the musician Harry James, 1943 (divorced 1965), daughters: Victoria, Jessica. Career: Child vaudeville singer and dancer; 1929—her mother arranged for her film debut at age 13, in Let’s Go Places; Fox contract annulled when her age is discovered; 1930–32—contract with Goldwyn; 1932—member of Ted Fiorita’s Band as vocalist; worked for RKO and Paramount during the remainder of the 1930s; 1935—toured with Jackie Coogan in vaudeville show; 1940—in featured role on stage in Du Barry Was a Lady; 1940–53—contract with 20th Century-Fox; on television in Twentieth Century; 1960s—on stage in various productions, including Hello, Dolly!, 1965–67. Died: 2 July 1973.

Films as Actress:

1929 Let’s Go Places (Mirth and Melody) (Strayer)
1930 Happy Days (Stoloff); Fox Movietone Follies of 1930 (The New Movietone Follies of 1930) (Stoloff); Whoopee! (Freeland) (as chorus girl)
1931 Kiki (Taylor); Palmy Days (Sutherland) (as chorus girl); Ex-Sweeties (Neilan—short); Crashing Hollywood (Arbuckle—short)
1932 The Greeks Had a Word for Them (Sherman); Lady! Please! (Lord—short); Hollywood Luck (Arbuckle—short); Probation (Second Chances) (Thorpe); The Flirty Sleepwalker (Lord—short); Hollywood Lights (Arbuckle—short); Hold ’em Jail (Taurog); Over the Counter (Cummings—short); The Kid from Spain (McCayre)
1933 Cavalcade (Lloyd); Sweetheart of Sigma Chi (Girl of My Dreams) (Marin) (as orchestra member); Melody Cruise (Sandrich) (as stewardess); Child of Manhattan (Buzzell); What Price Innocence? (Shall the Children Pay?) (Mack); Air Tonic (White—short)
1934 Hips, Hips, Hooray! (Sandrich); Love Detectives (Gottler—short); Business Is a Pleasure (Cline—short); The Gay Divorcee (The Gay Divorce) (Sandrich); Student Tour (Reisner) (as Cayenne); By Your Leave (Corrigan)
1935 The Spirit of 1976 (Jason—short); The Nitsuits (Stevens) (as Mary); A Night at the Biltmore Bowl (Goulding—short); Old Man Rhythm (Ludwig) (as Sylvia); A Quiet Fourth (Guil—short)
1936 Collegiate (The Charm School) (Murphy) (as Dorothy); Follow the Fleet (Sandrich); Don’t Turn ’em Loose (Stoloff); Pigskin Parade (The Harmony Parade) (Butler) (as Laura Watson)
1937 This Way Please (Florey) (as Jane Morrow); Thrill of a Lifetime (Archainbaud) (as Gwen)
1938 College Swing (Swing, Teacher, Swing) (Walsh) (as Betty); Give Me a Sailor (Nugent) (as Nancy Larkin); Campus Confession (Fast Play) (Archainbaud)
1939 Man about Town (Sandrich) (as Susan); Million Dollar Legs (Grinde); The Day the Bookies Wept (Goodwins)
1940 Down Argentine Way (Cummings) (as Glenda Crawford); Tin Pan Alley (Lang) (as Lily Blane)
1941 Moon over Miami (Lang) (as Kay Latimer); A Yank in the R.A.F. (King); Hot Spot (I Wake Up Screaming) (Humberstone)
1942 Song of the Islands (Lang) (as Eileen O’Brien); Footlight Serenade (Ratoff) (as Pat Lambert); Springtime in the Rockies (Cummings) (as Vicky)
1943 Coney Island (Lang) (as Kate Farley); Sweet Rosie O’Grady (Cummings) (as Madeleine Marlowe)
1944 Four Jills in a Jeep (Seiter) (as guest); Pin Up Girl (Humberstone) (as Larry Jones)
1945 The All-Star Bond Rally (Audley—short); Billy Rose’s Diamond Horseshoe (Diamond Horseshoe) (Seaton) (as Bonnie Collins); The Dolly Sisters (Cummings) (as Jenny Dolly)
1946 Do You Love Me? (Ratoff) (as guest); The Shocking Miss Pilgrim (Seaton) (title role); Hollywood Park (short) (as guest)
1947 Mother Wore Tights (Lang) (as Myrtle Burt)
1948 That Lady in Ermine (Lubitsch) (as Francesca/Angeline); When My Baby Smiles at Me (Lang) (as Bonnie Kane)
1949 The Beautiful Blond from Bashful Bend (Sturges) (as Freddie Jones)
1950 Wabash Avenue (Koster) (as Ruby Summers); My Blue Heaven (Koster) (as Molly Moran)
1951 Call Me Mister (Bacon) (as Kay Hudson); Meet Me after the Show (Sale) (as Delilah)
1953 The Farmer Takes a Wife (Levin) (as Molly Larkin); How to Marry a Millionaire (Negulesco)
1954 Three for the Show (Potter) (as Julie Lowndes)
1955 How to Be Very, Very Popular (Johnson)

Publications

On GRABLE: books—

On GRABLE: articles—

Stars (Mariembourg), March 1989.
Golden, Eve, “All This and World War Two,” in Classic Images (Muscatine), January 1993.

* * *

Betty Grable was truly a potent force in 1940s Hollywood. For 11 consecutive years (1941–51), she ranked among the film industry’s top stars. During the 1940s there was no more popular female movie star in the world. Grable’s most successful films were lavish formula Technicolor musicals, beginning with Down Argentine Way in 1940. In all, she appeared in some 22 of these color spectacles, all for Twentieth Century-Fox, including Song of the Islands, Springtime in the Rockies, Coney Island, Sweet Rosie O’Grady, Diamond Horse-shoe, and Mother Wore Tights. All ranked among the most popular films at the box office for their respective years of release.

One cannot overemphasize the economic importance of Betty Grable during the 1940s. Except for Tyrone Power in 1940, and Gregory Peck in 1947, no other Fox player ever made it into the annual poll of the film industry’s top ten stars. Grable’s Technicolor musicals, with their high and consistent revenues, powered Fox from years in the red in the late 1930s to a position just behind Paramount Pictures in the film industry’s race for profits.

More than any film star of the 1940s, Grable was able to move beyond her films to become a universally popular icon. Few, even in this day and age, have not seen her picture in the pose as the attractive blond in a white bathing suit coyly peeking over her shoulder, flashing a million-dollar smile. Hers was the image of a woman sexy enough to satisfy the longings of homesick soldiers, yet wholesome enough not to cause protest by their fathers and mothers. Grable’s face appeared everywhere: on the covers of Time and Life, spread across the pages of countless movie fan magazines, and adorning the sides of B-22 bombers and PT boats.

Twentieth Century-Fox’s publicity flacks contributed to and created an image of the girl next door, always struggling to make do. She was viewed as an actress without much natural talent. Fox always took the opportunity to point out her limitations—not a very good dancer, an adequate singer, and even a not-so-classic beauty. But in retrospect, the talent was always there. She could dance well; see, for example, her athletic romp with Gwen Verdon in Meet Me after the Show. As a singer, she could sell a song with her small, but clear voice. She generated her share of popular songs, including the classic “I’m Always Chasing Rainbows.” As an actress, she stuck to what she could do well, avoiding roles that clashed with her image.

In 1945 she ranked among the highest salaried individuals in the United States; a decade later she was a has-been. In 1951, Twentieth Century-Fox abandoned her and moved to another sex symbol, Marilyn Monroe. Grable turned to the dinner theater circuit, only emerging again into the national spotlight with a replacement role on Broadway in Hello Dolly! during the late 1960s before her tragic death at age 56 of lung cancer.

—Douglas Gomery

GRAHAME, Gloria

Nationality: American. Born: Gloria Hallward in Pasadena, California, 28 November 1925. Education: Attended Hollywood High School. Family: Married 1) the actor Stanley Clements, 1945 (divorced 1948); 2) the director Nicholas Ray, 1948 (divorced 1952); 3) the director Cy Howard, 1954 (divorced 1957); 4) Anthony Ray, 1961. Career: 1935—first appeared on stage with Pasadena Community Playhouse; 1943—Broadway debut in A Highland Fling; 1944—film contract with MGM, and debut in Blonde Fever; 1960s—returned to stage, including tour with The Time of Your Life; 1976—in TV mini-series Rich Man, Poor Man; 1978—on London stage. Awards: Best Supporting Actress Academy Award for The Bad and the Beautiful, 1952. Died: 5 October 1981.

Films as Actress:

1944 Blonde Fever (Whorff)
1945 Without Love (Bucquet)
1947 It’s a Wonderful Life (Capra); It Happened in Brooklyn (Whorff); Merton of the Movies (Alton); Crossfire (Dmytryk); Song of the Thin Man (Buzell)
1949 A Woman’s Secret (Ray); Roughshod (Robson)
1950 In a Lonely Place (Ray)
1952 The Greatest Show on Earth (DeMille); Macao (von Sternberg); Sudden Fear (Miller); The Bad and the Beautiful (Minnelli)
1953 The Glass Wall (Shane); Man on a Tightrope (Kazan); The Big Heat (Lang); Prisoners of the Cashbah (Bare)
1954 The Good Die Young (Gilbert); Naked Alibi (Hopper); Human Desire (Lang)
1955 The Cobweb (Minnelli); Not as a Stranger (Kramer); Oklahoma! (Zinnemann) (as Ado Annie); The Man Who Never Was (Neame)
1957 Ride Out for Revenge (Girard)
1959 Odds against Tomorrow (Wise)
1965 Ride Beyond Vengeance (McEveety)
1970 Blood and Lace (Gilbert); The Todd Killings (Shear)
1971 Escape (Moxey—for TV); Black Noon (Kowalski—for TV); Chandler (Magwood) (as guest)
1972 The Loners (Roley); Tarots (Angela) (Forqué)
1974 Mama’s Dirty Girls (Hayes); The Girl on the Late Late Show (Nelson—for TV)
1975 Mansion of the Doomed (The Terror of Dr. Chaney) (Potaki)
1979 Head over Heels (Chilly Scenes of Winter) (Silver) (as Clara)
1980 Melvin and Howard (Demme); A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square (The Biggest Bank Robbery) (Thomas)
1981 The Nesting (Weston) (as Florinda)

Publications

On Grahame: books—

On Grahame: articles—

* * *

No American actress epitomizes the Hollywood stereotype of the bad girl better than Gloria Grahame. With her pouting lips, inviting eyes, and seductive physical presence, she played every variation on the fallen woman: the unfaithful wife, the bar tramp, the prostitute with mob connections, the femme fatale. It is the intelligence and depth of characterization that Grahame brings to each of these seemingly clichéd roles that enabled her to transcend a one-dimensional sexual stereotype.

Crossfire was the first of several postwar thrillers that established Grahame as the ideal film noir icon. As Ginny, the pathetic cafe hostess who lives in a night world of bars and casual pick-ups, Grahame embodies the disillusionment and cynicism inherent in this genre. More decadent and sexually aggressive versions of the Ginny character would surface later in dark melodramas such as Sudden Fear, Human Desire, and Odds against Tomorrow. In Sudden Fear Grahame goads Jack Palance into a murder scheme and at the same time demands that he crush her when they kiss. In Human Desire she taunts her cuckolded husband with sordid details of her sexual exploits until he explodes with murderous rage. In Odds against Tomorrow, as a prelude to sex with Robert Ryan, she begs him to describe how it feels to kill someone. In these films, her sexuality is used as a corrupting influence and accents the mood of fatalism.

Possibly her finest work in the film noir cycle is in Fritz Lang’s The Big Heat and Nicholas Ray’s In a Lonely Place. In the Lang film, Grahame gives an unforgettable performance as a streetwise prostitute who is disfigured by her hoodlum boyfriend for associating with a policeman. Her transformation from the vain call girl to the horribly scared mob informer is made all the more moving by her realization that she will never be totally accepted into any social order. Her only salvation is death, thus completing the metamorphosis from whore to martyr and confirming once again the 1950s Hollywood dictum that the only road to respectability for a sexual outlaw is oblivion.

Similar to The Big Heat in its harsh, sleazy atmosphere, In a Lonely Place also represents a cold and hostile universe where the basic goodness in the main characters is often negated by their destructive impulses. Grahame gives a brilliant performance, alternating between passionate longing and paranoia, as a secretive woman without romantic illusions who finds herself reaching out to a man who may be a murderer (Humphrey Bogart). The unbearable sexual tension that grows between Grahame and Bogart as their romance crumbles into a nightmare of distrust and futility is used to great advantage by director Ray, then her husband. As in most of Ray’s films, he was able to find tenderness and love in the midst of alienation and despair but without a victory for the former values.

Apart from Grahame’s invaluable contributions to the film noir, she is probably most familiar to filmgoers as the unfaithful wife. Although she played this role to perfection in major films such as The Greatest Show on Earth and Man on a Tightrope, her best rendition of the married hussy was in Vincente Minnelli’s The Bad and the Beautiful, for which she won an Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress.

Unfortunately, Grahame’s sultry looks proved to be a dubious asset for her Hollywood career. Blessed with the makings of a great actress, she was given few opportunities to broaden her range. It is evident that she had the potential to become a great comedienne, judging from her early work in Without Love, Merton of the Movies, and particularly Frank Capra’s It’s a Wonderful Life. In the Capra film Grahame shows delightful comic timing and spunk in her few scenes as a small town flirt. It was not until someone had the inspired idea to cast her as Ado Annie in Fred Zinnemann’s Oklahoma! that Grahame was able to live up to the promise of those early performances and prove that she had a natural affinity for musical comedy.

After 1959 Grahame went through a disappointing 20-year period of accepting roles in low-budget horror films and thrillers; the nadir of her career may have been Mama’s Dirty Girls in 1974. It was her appearance on television in Rich Man, Poor Man in 1976 that revived her screen career. After 1979, Grahame appeared in two critically acclaimed features, Melvin and Howard (in which she has an odd nonspeaking role) and Chilly Scenes of Winter. Her witty performance in the latter film veers from black comedy to gentle pathos, Grahame flaunting her blond seductress image and intimating that she was capable of more than she was ever allowed to be. As the neurotic, sexy mother of John Heard, Grahame sits fully clothed in a full bathtub, threatening to commit suicide and muttering, “I’m not dead yet!”

—Jeff Stafford
GRANGER, Farley

Films as Actor:

1943 The North Star (Milestone) (as Damian)
1944 The Purple Heart (Milestone) (as Sergeant Howard Clinton)
1948 Rope (Hitchcock) (as Phillip Morgan); Enchantment (Reis) (as Pilot Officer Pax Masterson)
1949 They Live by Night (Ray) (as Bowie); Roseanna McCoy (Reis) (as Johnse Hatfield)
1950 Side Street (Mann) (as Joe Norson); Edge of Doom (Robson, Vidor) (as Martin Lynn); Our Very Own (Miller) (as Chuck)
1951 Strangers on a Train (Hitchcock) (as Guy Haines); Behave Yourself! (Beck) (as Bill Denny); I Want You (Robson) (as Jack Greer)
1952 ‘The Gift of the Magi’ segment of O. Henry’s Full House (Full House) (King) (as Jim); Hans Christian Andersen (Vidor) (as Niels)
1953 ‘Mademoiselle’ segment of The Story of Three Loves (Equilibrium) (Minnelli, Reinhardt) (as Thomas Campbell Jr.); Small Town Girl (Kardos) (as Rick Belrow Livingston)
1954 Senso (The Wanton Countess) (Visconti) (as Lieut. Franz Mahler)
1955 The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing (Fleischer) (as Harry K. Thaw); The Naked Street (The Mobster) (The Brass Ring) (Shane) (as Nicky Bradna)
1961 The Heiress (Daniels—TV)
1968 Rogues’ Gallery (Horn)
1970 Qualcosa striscia nel buio (Shadows in the Dark) (Something Creeping in the Dark) (Colucci) (as Spike); The Challengers (Martinson—for TV) (as Nealy)
1971 Lo chiamavano Trinità (My Name is Trinity) (Barboni) (as Major Harriman)
1972 Alla ricerca del piacere (Maniac Mansion) (Leather and Whips) (Amuck) (Amadio); Lo chiamavano Mezzogiorno (The Man Called Noon) (Collinson) (as Judge Niland); Rivelazioni di un maniaco sessuale al capo della squadra mobile (The Slasher Is the Sex Maniac) (Confessions of a Sex Maniac) (So Sweet, So Dead) (So Naked, So Dead) (Slasher) (Bad Girls) (Montero); La Rossa dalla pelle che scotta (The Red Headed Corpse) (Russo); Le Serpent (The Serpent) (Verneuill) (as Computer Programming Director)
1973 Arnold (Fenady) (as Evan Lyons)
1974 Infamia (Moglie giovane, La) (d’Eramo); Polizia chiede aiuto, La (Coed Murders) (Dallamano)
1975 The Lives of Jenny Dolan (Jameson) (as David Ames)
1976 Widow (Thompson—for TV) (as Martin Caine)
1978 Black Beauty (Haller—mini, for TV) (as Enos Sutton)
1981 The Prowler (Rosemary’s Killer) (Graduation) (Zito) (as Sheriff George Fraser)
1984 Deathmask (Friedman) (as Douglas Andrews)
1985 Hitchcock: il brivido del genio (The Thrill of Genius) (Bortolini, Mazenza—for TV)
1986 The Imagemaker (Weiner) (as The Ambassador); The Whoopee Boys (Byrum) (uncredited); Very Close Quarters (Rif) (as Pavel)
1995 The Celluloid Closet (Epstein and Friedman) (as Interviewee)

Publications

On GRANGER: books—

On GRANGER: articles—

Lilley, Jessie, “Granger on a Train,” in Scarlet Street (Glen Rock, New Jersey), no. 21, Winter 1996.

Even before emotive, sexually ambiguous male stars—Marlon Brando and James Dean chief among them—emerged into prominence and surprising popularity during a time of industry crisis in the 1950s, the classic Hollywood cinema of the previous decade often found itself deeply invested in presenting a variety of masculine styles or, perhaps more radically, in problematizing that most conventional of stereotypes, the strong, indisputably heterosexual man of action. Gregory Peck, for example, incredibly handsome if somewhat short on brawn and aggressiveness, often found himself cast successfully in a variety of roles that suited a somewhat feminized display of pathos: as the amnesiac needing the ministrations of a woman psychiatrist in Spellbound; as the conscience-stricken colonel enduring battle fatigue in Twelve O’Clock High; as the gentle of good faith pained by racial prejudice in Gentleman’s Agreement. Peck is even riveting as Lewt, the gorgeously reptilian object of Jennifer Jones’s excessive desire in Duel in the Sun. Similarly endowed with good looks and charisma, Farley Granger began his career in Hollywood much like Peck. Both were introduced to the public in wartime epics about Russia as youthful romantic and Slavic figures, Granger in North Star and Peck in Song of Russia. Peck, however, could project sufficient strength and resolve to play more conventionally masculine roles in such films as Pork Chop Hill and To Kill a Mockingbird. Granger’s screen persona suggested neither confidence nor the power to lead, and thus he found himself limited to either subordinate roles as a romantic presence or, more interestingly, in parts that went beyond narrow masculine and heterosexual formulas.

505

In North Star, Granger’s youthful partisan is transformed into an object of pity by the German grenade that blinds him, with the result that he spends the rest of the battle with the women, resupplying the men. The Purple Heart offered him another small part that tests his manhood. Part of a bomber crew captured and put on trial by venefugal Japanese, Granger is tortured like the other men, at least ostensibly. He returns from his “interrogation” unable to speak, but bearing no physical signs of mistreatment; surprised, his buddies are led to question whether he cooperated. Though it turns out that he did not, his “hysterical” wound, so unlike those suffered by his maimed comrades, marks him out as different. In Side Street, he plays an unsuccessful newly married man who finds himself unable to resist stealing a huge amount of money, which is already stolen property, when the opportunity unexpectedly presents itself; Granger becomes the archetypal noir protagonist, weak, ineffective, a prisoner of circumstance and his own lack of character. The Naked Street offered him a similar role as a petty criminal whose ill-planned robbery of an old man puts him on death row, from which he is extricated by a powerful gangster only through his own foolishness to wind up there again, this time to be executed for a crime he did not commit. In Nicholas Ray’s They Live by Night, Granger’s youthful robber is a complex mixture of venality and innocence, the perfect vehicle for Ray’s sociocultural analysis of the criminal subculture. Strikingly, in The Story of Three Loves he convincing portrays a young man, who is actually a boy whose “magic wish” brings him to life so that he can romance the woman who was infatuated him. These performances, which are often strikingly original, contrast with Granger’s more conventional work as a second male lead in such films as Our Very Own and I Want You. Eventually, Granger went into television as his film career peters out in the 1950s; other generations became familiar with him in middle and advanced middle age because of a long term part on a famous American soap opera. Before leaving film acting, however, he appeared in several films that exploited the sexual ambiguity or maladjustment his persona suggested. The Girl in the Red Velvet Swing offered him the opportunity, of which he took full advantage, to play one of the century’s most famous sexual psychopaths, Harry K. Thaw. Granger passionately evokes Thaw’s jealousy, perverse attractiveness, and unhealthy maternal attachment, serving as the perfect foil to Ray Milland’s more contained but equally overwhelming obsession for a beautiful young girl. Visconti’s Senso gave Granger the opportunity to play a character similarly driven and destroyed by desire.

Granger’s most famous work, however, was done for Alfred Hitchcock, in two films of the late 1940s that, in different ways, probed, without naming it, the nature of homosexual attraction and its connection to vengeful violence. In Strangers on a Train, Granger is the cuckolded husband of a predatory woman, but cannot persuade her to grant him a divorce so that he can marry the more normal Ruth Roman. Approached by the somewhat swish Bruno Anthony on a train, Granger finds himself seduced by the plot of exchanged murders he proposes. Though his own wife is murdered as per the agreement that Granger neither accepts nor rejects, he is unwilling to go through with the killing that Bruno insists upon, but it is unclear if this is a decision motivated by a moral imperative or the desire for self-preservation. Granger’s character is exonerated in the end only when the more powerful Anthony proves unable to finish implicating him in his wife’s murder. The psycho-sexual developmental failure that characterizes both “strangers” is neatly symbolized by Hitchcock’s staging of their final confrontation on an amusement park merry-go-round.

In Rope, a fictionalized re-telling of the Leopold/Loeb murder case, Granger plays the weaker partner of the young male pair of college students, influenced by Nietzsche, who plot and then carry out the thrill murder of a friend. The narrative traces the gradual disintegration of their resolve to flaunt the crime. A victim of his own fearfulness and guilty conscience, Granger’s character eventually dissolves into a hysteria not unlike that from which his tortured airman suffers in The Purple Heart.

—R. Barton Palmer

GRANGER, Stewart

Films as Actor:

1933 A Southern Maid (Hughes) (bit role)
1934 Give Her a Ring (Woods) (as diner)
1939 So This Is London (Freeland) (as Laurence)
1940 Convoy (Tennyson) (as Sutton)
1942 Secret Mission (French) (as Lt. Jackson)
1943 Thursday’s Child (Ackland) (as David Penley); The Man in Grey (Arliss) (as Peter Rokey); The Lamp Still Burns (Arliss) (as Larry Rains)
1944 Fanny by Gaslight (Man of Evil) (Asquith) (as Harry Somerford); Love Story (A Lady Surrenders) (Arliss) (as Kit Firth); Madonna of the Seven Moons (Crabtree) (as Nino Barucci; Waterloo Road (Gilliat) (as Ted Purvis); Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal) (as Apollodorus)

1946 Caravan (Crabtree) (as Richard Darrel); The Magic Bow (Knowles) (as Paganini)

1947 Captain Boycott (Lauder) (as Hugh Davin); Blanche Fury (Marc Allégret) (as Philip Thorn)

1948 Saraband for Dead Lovers (Saraband) (Dearden) (as Count Philip Koenigsmark); Woman Hater (Terence Young) (as Lord Terence Datchett)

1949 Adam and Evelyne (Adam and Evelyn) (French) (as Adam Black)

1950 King Solomon’s Mines (Bennett and Marton) (as Allan Quatermain)

1951 Soldiers Three (Garnett) (as Pvt. Archibald Ackroyd); The Light Touch (Richard Brooks) (as Sam Conride); The Wild North (Marton) (as Jules Vincent)

1952 Scaramouche (Sidney) (as Andre Moreau/Scaramouche); The Prisoner of Zenda (Thorpe) (as Rudolph Rassendyll/King Rudolph V)

1953 Salome (Dieterle) (as Commander Claudius); Young Bess (Sidney) (as Thomas Seymour); All the Brothers Were Valiant (Thorpe) (as Mark Shore)

1954 Beau Brummell (Bermhardt) (title role); Green Fire (Marton) (as Rian X. Mitchell)

1955 Moonfleet (Fritz Lang) (as Jeremy Fox); Footsteps in the Fog (Lubin) (as Stephen Lowry); Bhowani Junction (Cukor) (as Col. Rodney Savage); The Last Hunt (Richard Brooks) (as Sandy McKenzie)

1956 The Little Hut (Robson) (as Sir Philip Ashlow)

1957 Gun Glory (Rowland) (as Tom Early)

1958 The Whole Truth (Guillermin) (as Max Poulton); Harry Black (Harry Black and the Tiger) (Fregonesi) (title role)

1960 North to Alaska (Hathaway) (as George Pratt); The Secret Partner (Dearden) (as John Brent)

1963 Sodom e Gomorra (Sodom and Gomorrah) (Aldrich and Leone) (as Lot); Marcia o crepa (Legion’s Last Patrol; Commando) (Wisbar) (as Capt. Le Blanc); Lo spadaccino di Siena (La congiura dei dieci; Swordsman of Siena) (Périer) (as Thomas Stanswood); Il giorno più corto (Corbucci) (as guest)

1964 The Secret Invasion (Corman) (as Maj. Richard Mace); The Crooked Road (Chaffey) (as Duke of Orgagna); Unter Geiern (La dove scenda il sole; Among Vultures; Frontier Hellcat) (Vohrer) (as Old Surehand)

1965 Das Geheimnis der drei Dschunken (A 009 Mission to Hong Kong; Red Dragon) (Hofbauer) (as Michael Scott); Der Ölprinz (Rampage at Apache Wells) (Philipp) (as Old Shatterhand); Flaming Frontier (Vohrer) (as Old Surehand)

1966 Das Geheimnis der gelben Mönche (Wie tötet man eine Dame; Tiro a segno per uccidere; Target for Killing) (Köhler); Spie contro il mondo (Gern hab’ ich die Frau’ gekillt; Spy against the World; Killer’s Carnival) (“Albert Cardiff,” i.e., Cardone, Lynn, and Reynolds); The Trygon Factor (Frankell) (as Supt. Cooper-Smith)

1967 Requiem per un agente segreto (Consigna: Tanger 67; Der Chef schickt seinen besten Mann; Requiem for a Secret Agent) (Sollima) (as John “Bingo” Merrill); The Last Safari (Hathaway) (as Gilchrist)

1969 Any Second Now (Levitt—for TV) (as Paul Dennison); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Crane—for TV) (as Sherlock Holmes)

1978 The Wild Geese (McLaglen) (as Sir Edward Malherson)

1982 The Royal Romance of Charles and Diana (Levin—for TV) (as Prince Philip)

1987 A Hazard of Hearts (Hough—for TV) (as Old Vulcan); Story of a Recluse (Reid—for TV); Code Name Alpha (Hofbauer)

1988 Hell Hunters (Von Theumer) (as Martin Hoffmann)

1989 Chameleons (Glen A. Larson—for TV) (as Jason)

1990 Fine Gold (D. J. Anthony Loma—for TV) (as Don Miguel)

Publications

By GRANGER: book—

On GRANGER: article—

Obituary, in Film-Dienst (Cologne), 31 August 1993.

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1994.

Stewart Granger’s reputation as a motion picture actor rests largely on his swashbuckling roles in a series of sumptuous costume epics made for MGM in the 1950s, the waning days of this once very popular film genre. He was a throwback to the 1930s and 1940s hero epics made for MGM in the 1950s, the waning days of this once very popular film genre. He was a throwback to the 1930s and 1940s hero roles of Errol Flynn, whose mantle he assumed (on screen at least), matching Flynn’s athleticism and romantic derring-do, but adding a wry touch of world-weary self-deprecation and cynicism all his own, most notably in Scaramouche, the film for which he remains most famous.

Born James Stewart, he left premed school at the bidding of his friend, actor Michael Wilding, who suggested he try working as a film extra. He decided to accept Wilding’s advice, and attended the Webber-Douglas school, then worked with the Hull and the Birmingham repertory companies. He achieved matinee idol status with the Old Vic playing opposite Vivien Leigh in Serena Blanfush in 1939.

He had a number of small parts in films previously but stardom really came with So This Is London in 1940. In the hopes that Hollywood would beckon, he decided to change his name at this time to Stewart Granger, so as to avoid confusion with the well-known Hollywood actor James Stewart, the star of numerous MGM films, the studio where Granger was eventually placed under contract as well.

After the war Granger signed a seven-year contract with J. Arthur Rank. His 6' 3" physique and resonant voice at once made him romantic lead material, and he reached box-office stardom in a series of romantic leads, most notably opposite Phyllis Calvert in such films as The Man in Grey, in which he was a dashing Cavalier, and in Madonna of the Seven Moons, in which he villainously menaced Calvert. He was Apollodorus in Gabriel Pascal’s Caesar and Cleopatra, from the play by George Bernard Shaw, and the draft-dodging profiteer in Waterloo Road. His last film for Rank was Adam and Evelyne starring Jean Simmons, whom he later married.

MGM finally beckoned in 1950 and he signed with them to play Allan Quartermain in a remake of King Solomon’s Mines, shot in color on location in Africa. This expensive Technicolor epic was the first of nearly 20 adventure/costume films for which Granger’s physique and handsome features were ready-made. He soon became a favorite of American audiences in such films as Scaramouche, The Prisoner of Zenda (opposite his King Solomon’s Mines co-star, Deborah Kerr), Young Bess (opposite Jean Simmons), Beau Brummell (opposite Elizabeth Taylor), Moonfleet, Bhowani Junction, and The Little Hut (the last two opposite Ava Gardner).

Granger’s MGM contract expired in 1957 with a dismal Western called Guo Glory directed by Roy Rowland. He moved to Twentieth Century-Fox to make Harry Black and the Tiger and North to Alaska with John Wayne, then headed to Europe where he appeared in a series of mostly forgettable costume epics throughout the 1960s. Two of the better ones were Robert Aldrich’s Sodom and Gomorrah, in which he played Lot opposite Pier Angeli’s pillar of salt, and Swordsmen of Sienna, an enjoyable CinemaScope throwback to his halcyon days at MGM.

Granger returned to the United States in Henry Hathaway’s The Last Safari and, while now white of hair, he was still more physically fit than most of his contemporaries. In 1970 he took the lead in the popular television series, The Virginian (renamed The Men from Shiloh), but after a one-year stint the series ended. He played a dapper Sherlock Holmes opposite Bernard Fox’s Dr. Watson in the television film The Hound of the Baskervilles and was Sir Edward Malherson in the worldwide 1978 hit The Wild Geese, co-starring Richard Burton, Roger Moore, and Richard Harris. Three years later, he published his autobiography, Sparks Fly Upwards, in which he recounted his life up until the year 1960. His memoirs revealed him to be a literate man with a self-deprecating sense of humor much like the romantic heroes he had played on-screen. He maintained that he was not proud of one of his films, always found film acting torture, and if he had been lucky enough to star in just one film like Inherit the Wind, he would have immediately retired with pride.

Granger briefly returned to the stage in 1989, making his Broadway debut in a revival of the Somerset Maugham comedy of manners The Circle opposite Rex Harrison and Glynnis Johns. The play was scheduled to move to London’s West End the following year, but closed following its Broadway run when Harrison suffered a stroke and died. Granger followed Harrison in death three years later, never having completed the eagerly awaited volume two of his autobiography.

—Ronald Bowers, updated by John McCarty

---

GRANT, Cary

Nationality: American. Born: Alexander Archibald Leach in Bristol, England, 18 January 1904; early work in vaudeville and on stage as Archie Leach. Education: Attended Fairfield Academy, Somerset. Family: Married 1) the actress Virginia Cherrill, 1934 (divorced 1935); 2) Barbara Hutton, 1942 (divorced 1945); 3) the actress Betsy Drake, 1949 (divorced 1962); 4) the actress Dyan Cannon, 1965 (divorced 1968), daughter: Jennifer; 5) Barbara Harris, 1981. Career: 1919–20—ran away from school to join the Bob Pender Troupe of comedians and acrobats; toured with them to the United States, and decided to stay; then worked as Barker on Coney Island, still walker at Steeplechase Park, and in vaudeville as straight man; 1927—first role on legitimate stage, Golden Dawn; followed by roles in musicals including Boom, Boom, 1929, with Jeanette MacDonald, a summer season at the St. Louis Municipal Opera, 1931, and in Nikki, 1931, with Fay Wray; 1932–37—contract with Paramount: film debut in Singapore Sue (short), 1932; 1937—freelance actor; entertained the armed forces during World War II; 1959—formed his own production company Grantart. Awards: Honorary Academy Award, “for his unique mastery of the art of screen acting with the respect and affection of his colleagues,” 1969; Life Achievement Award, American Film Institute. Died: Of a stroke, in Davenport, Iowa, 29 November 1986.

Films as Actor:

- 1932 Singapore Sue (Robinson—short) (as Archie Leach); This Is the Night (Tuttle) (as Stephen); Sinners in the Sun (Hall) (as Ridgeway); Merrily We Go to Hell (Arzner) (as stage leading man); Devil and the Deep (Gering) (as Lt. Jacques); Blonde Venus (von Sternberg) (as Nick Townsend); Hot Saturday (Seiter) (as Romer Sheffield); Madame Butterfly (Gering) (as Lt. Pinkerton)
- 1933 She Done Him Wrong (Sherman) (as Capt. Cummings); The Woman Accused (Sloane) (as Jeffrey Baxter); The Eagle and the Hawk (Walker) (as Henry Crocker); Gambling Ship (Gasnier and Marcin) (as Ace Corbin); I’m No Angel (Ruggles) (as Jack Clayton); Alice in Wonderland (McLeod) (as Mock Turtle)
- 1934 Thirty-Day Princess (Gering) (as Porter Madison); Born to Be Bad (Sherman) (as Malcolm Trevor); Kiss and Make Up (Thompson) (as Dr. Maurice Lamar); Ladies Should Listen (Tuttle) (as Julian de Lussac)
- 1935 Wings in the Dark (Flood) (as Ken Gordon); The Last Outpost (Gasnier and Barton) (as Michael Andrews); Sylvia Scarlett (Cukor) (as Jimmy Monkley); Enter Madame (Nugent) (as Gerald Fitzgerald)
- 1936 Pirate Party on Catalina Island (short); Big Brown Eyes (Walsh) (as Danny Bart); Suzy (Fitzmaurice) (as Andre); Wedding Present (Wallace) (as Charlie); The Amazing Quest of Ernest Bliss (Zeisler) (as Ernest Bliss)
Cary Grant (under tanker) in North by Northwest

1937 When You're in Love (For You Alone) (Riskin) (as Jimmy Hudson); Topper (McLeod) (as George Kerby); The Toast of New York (Rowland V. Lee) (as Nick Boyd); The Awful Truth (McCary) (as Jerry Warriner)

1938 Bringing Up Baby (Hawks) (as David Huxley); Holiday (Free to Live; Unconventional Linda) (Cukor) (as Johnny Case)

1939 Gunga Din (Stevens) (as Sgt. Archibald Cutter); Only Angels Have Wings (Hawks) (as Geoff Carter); In Name Only (Cromwell) (as Alec Walker); His Girl Friday (Hawks) (as Walter Burns)

1940 My Favorite Wife (Kanin) (as Nick Arden); The Howards of Virginia (The Tree of Liberty) (Lloyd) (as Matt Howard); The Philadelphia Story (Cukor) (as C. K. Dexter Haven)

1941 Penny Serenade (Stevens) (as Roger Adams); Suspicion (Hitchcock) (as Johnnie Aysgarth)

1942 The Talk of the Town (Stevens) (as Leopold Dilg); Once upon a Honeymoon (McCary) (as Pat O'Toole)

1943 Mr. Lucky (Potter) (as Joe Adams)

1944 Destination Tokyo (Daves) (as Capt. Cassidy); Once upon a Time (Hall) (as Jerry Flynn); Arsenic and Old Lace (Capra) (as Mortimer Brewster); None but the Lonely Heart (Odets) (as Ernie Mott); The Road to Victory (short); The Shining Future (Prinz—short)

1946 Without Reservations (LeRoy) (as guest); Night and Day (Curtiz) (as Cole Porter); Notorious (Hitchcock) (as Devlin)

1947 The Bachelor and the Bobby-Soxer (Bachelor Knights) (Reis) (as Dick Nugent); The Bishop’s Wife (Koster) (as Dudley)

1948 Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House (Potter) (title role); Every Girl Should Be Married (Hartman) (as Dr. Madison Brown)

1949 I Was a Male War Bride (You Can’t Sleep Here) (Hawks) (as Capt. Henri Rochard); Polio and Communicable Diseases Hospital Trailer (Hoffman—short)

1950 Crisis (Richard Brooks) (as Dr. Eugene Ferguson)

1951 People Will Talk (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Dr. Noah Praetorius); Room for One More (The Easy Way) (Taurgo) (as George “Poppy” Rose)

1952 Monkey Business (Hawks) (as Barnaby Fulton)

1953 Dream Wife (Sheldon) (as Clemson Reade)

1954 To Catch a Thief (Hitchcock) (as John Robie)
1957 The Pride and the Passion (Kramer) (as Anthony Trumbull); An Affair to Remember (McCarey) (as Nickie Ferrante); Kiss Them for Me (Donen) (as Andy Crewson)

1958 Indiscreet (Donen) (as Philip Adams); Houseboat (Shavelson) (as Tom Winston)

1959 North by Northwest (Hitchcock) (as Roger Thornhill); Operation Petticoat (Edwards) (as Matt Sherman)

1960 The Grass Is Greener (Donen) (as Victor Rhyall)

1962 That Touch of Mink (Delbert Mann) (as Philip Shayne)

1963 Charade (Donen) (as Peter Joshua/Alexander Dyle/Adam Canfield/Brian Cruickshank)

1964 Father Goose (Nelson) (as Walter Eckland)

1965 Ken Murray's Hollywood (Murray)

1966 Walk Don't Run (Walters) (as William Rutland)

1970 Elvis: That's the Way It Was (Sanders—doc)

1977

Publications

On GRANT: articles—

Mattlin, Everett, “. . . And Cary,” in Film Comment (New York), November/December 1989.

Buford, Kate, “A Death in the Family,” in Film Comment (New York), May/June 1992.

Clarke, Gerald, “Cary Grant and Randolph Scott,” in Architectural Digest (Los Angeles), April 1996.

* * *

Cary Grant is one of a handful of actors whose personalities so captivate the moviegoing public that their names become synonymous with the qualities they embody on the screen. Just as John Wayne has come to represent a certain brand of rugged masculinity, or Marilyn Monroe a blend of sexuality and childlike innocence, so Cary Grant has become the enduring cinematic personification of elegance, wit, and sophistication. A master of light comic acting, his much-imitated style is the yardstick by which others who attempt this difficult technique are measured, yet Grant’s seemingly effortless performances remained unequalled. His talent, grace, and good looks have earned him a place among Hollywood’s most popular male stars.

Grant’s polished persona seems the antithesis of his working-class background, yet his unmistakable style was already much in evidence... in his earliest film roles. His credentials as a traditional leading man were established with his appearances opposite Marlene Dietrich in Blonde Venus and Mae West in She Done Him Wrong and I’m No Angel, but it was his work with the directors George Cukor, Howard Hawks, and Leo McCarey which revealed the full measure of his abilities.

The fast-paced screwball comedies of the 1930s proved to be the perfect format for displaying Grant’s verbal and physical agility. His romantic sparring with Irene Dunne in Mccarey’s The Awful Truth, Rosalind Russell in Hawks’s His Girl Friday, and Katharine Hepburn in Cukor’s Holiday and Hawks’s Bringing Up Baby displayed Grant’s deft comic touch in films that served to define the genre. His role as the daredevil flyer in Only Angels Have Wings, and his Oscar-nominated performances in Penny Serenade and None but the Lonely Heart showed him to be a capable dramatic actor as well, but it was in sophisticated comedy that his real strength lay. Grant continued to mine the successful image he had created in these early films throughout his career, and his performance in Stanley Donen’s Charade—one of his final films—demonstrates the undiminished appeal of his debonair charm.

Although Grant’s comedies represent the majority of his best remembered roles, his work with Alfred Hitchcock in several classic films offers a departure from his usual image. As he does with James Stewart in Rear Window and Vertigo, Hitchcock plays against Grant’s familiar persona by incorporating into his characters psychological twists that are in startling contrast to the actor’s smooth surface elegance. To Catch a Thief is perhaps closest to his characteristic style, with Grant portraying an infamous jewel thief, while Suspicion finds him cast as a seemingly loving husband who may or may not be plotting to murder his wife. In North by Northwest Grant’s wisecracking character is subtly shown to be a man whose charm hides a basically selfish nature and whose only lasting relationship with a woman is his amusing but obsessive bond with his mother.

It is in Notorious, however, that Hitchcock fully utilizes this conflict between Grant’s image and his character’s personality. As Devlin, a misogynistic, emotionally repressed American agent, he sends the woman he has unwillingly come to love (Ingrid Bergman) into the arms of a Nazi collaborator (Claude Rains). Devlin’s struggle against his attraction to the high-living Bergman nearly causes her death when he blindly ignores signs that she may be in danger. The bizarre love triangle in the film hinges on Bergman’s attraction to Grant in spite of his consistently callous behavior, and his performance is both fascinating and disturbing.

In David Thomson’s essay, “Charms and the Man,” he discusses at length the Notorious kiss between Grant and his co-star, Ingrid Bergman. The engineered intimacy and the “links between universal voyeurism and filmmaking” are perhaps best expressed by the director in an interview conducted by Truffaut. Hitchcock confesses, “I felt [the kiss] was indispensable that they should not separate, and I also felt that the public, represented by the camera, was the third party to this embrace. The public was given the great privilege of embracing Cary Grant and Ingrid Bergman together. It was a kind of temporary menage à trois” (quoted by Thomson). One sees in this an ultimate working of the Hollywood star system and the ideology manipulated by the machine: if only in illusion do we embrace the unattainable glamour of the stars, so be it only in illusion.

Grant’s charms and wits may linger larger than life on screen, but it is also his spirit of camp that transcends beyond and steps outside of the frame. If we feel his speech is fast, we are experiencing the thrill of a possibility that his speech is going to be too fast to be restrained on film. In his handsome smiles that also hint at a touch of coyness and conceit and the physical as well as mental agility and quickness when “suddenly gone gay,” it is tempting to look at Grant not only as a star but also as a star looking back at us and, perhaps, at filmmaking itself.

—Janet E. Lorenz, updated by Guo-Juin Hong

GRANT, Hugh

Education: Attended Oxford University, BA in English Literature with honors, 1982. Career: Appeared with the Oxford University Dramatic Society; 1982—film debut in Privileged, student film produced by the Oxford Film Foundation; 1982–85—wrote ad copy for radio commercials; 1985—stage debut at Nottingham Playhouse (repertory work); co-founded comedy troupe Jockeys of Norfolk; in TV mini-series The Last Place on Earth; 1986—acted in British TV series The Demon Lover and Ladies in Charge; 1987—first role in major film, Maurice; formed production company, Simian Films.

Awards: Volpi Cup for Best Actor, Venice Film Festival, for Maurice, 1987; Golden Globe Award for Best Performance by an Actor in a Motion Picture—Comedy/Musical, British Academy Award for Best Actor, for Four Weddings and a Funeral, 1995; Golden Slate for Best Actor in a Leading Role, Caspinvalo Awards (Budapest), 2000. Agent: Creative Artists Agency, 9830 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1982 Privileged (Hoffman—not released) (as Lord Adrian, billed as Hughie Grant)
1985 Jenny’s War (Gethers—for TV) (as Peter Baines)
1987 Maurice (Ivory) (as Clive Durham); Lord Elgin and Some Stones of No Value (for TV) (as William Hamilton); White Mischief (Radford) (as Hugh Dickinson)
1988 The Dawning (Knights—released in U.S. in 1993) (as Harry); Nuit Bengali (Bengali Night) (as Allan); The Lair of the White Worm (Russell) (as Lord James D’Ampton); Remando al Viento (Rowing with the Wind) (Suares) (as Lord Byron)
1989 Till We Meet Again (Jarrott—for TV) (as Bruno de Lancel); The Lady and the Highwayman (Hough—for TV) (as Lord Lucius Vyne); Champagne Charlie (Eastman—for TV) (as Charlie Heidseick)
1990 Impromptu (Lapine) (as Frederic Chopin)
Hugh Grant and Andie MacDowell in Four Weddings and a Funeral

1991 The Big Man (Crossing the Line) (Leland) (as Gordon); Our Sons (Too Little, Too Late) (Erman—for TV) (as James)

1993 The Remains of the Day (Ivory) (as Cardinal); Night Train to Venice (Quinterio) (as Martin)

1994 Sirens (Duigan) (as the Rev. Anthony Campion); Four Weddings and a Funeral (Newell) (as Charles); The Changeling (Simon Curtis—for TV) (as Alsemero)

1995 An Awfully Big Adventure (Newell) (as Meredith Potter); The Englishman Who Went Up a Hill but Came Down a Mountain (Monger) (title role); Nine Months (Columbus) (as Samuel Faulkner); Sense and Sensibility (Ang Lee) (as Edward Ferrars)

1996 Restoration (Michael Hoffman) (cameo as a painter, Elias Finn); Extreme Measures (Apted) (as Dr. Guy Luthan)

1999 Notting Hill (Michell) (as William Thacker); Mickey Blue Eyes (Makin) (as Michael Felgate); Comic Relief: Doctor Who and the Curse of the Fatal Death (Henderson) (as The Handsome 12th Doctor)

2000 Small Time Crooks (Allen) (as David)

2001 Bridget Jones Diary (Maguire) (as Daniel Cleaver)

Publications

By GRANT: articles—

On GRANT: books—

Tresidder, Jody, Hugh Grant, New York, 1996.

On GRANT: articles—

Lane, Anthony, “It Had to Be Hugh: The On-Screen and Off-Screen Adventures of a Young British Actor,” in New Yorker, 24 July 1995.

* * *

In the wake of his big international success with the romantic comedy Four Weddings and a Funeral, the press began evoking comparisons between this young British actor and another cinema Grant, the immortal Cary. Like the latter, Hugh Grant’s screen persona is that of the intelligent, but somewhat tongue-tied and befuddled nice guy masquerading as a charming, striving-to-be-in-charge sophisticate. And like Cary Grant, Hugh Grant has attracted a large, mostly female following—although Hugh’s fans are more apt to describe him as “cute and cuddly” rather than elegantly handsome.

Stuck (so far) with playing mostly one-note roles as polished but sexually repressed Brits or effete, often homosexual, aristocrats (sometimes both at once), Hugh Grant has yet to demonstrate the dramatic or comic range of Cary Grant, however. He is more akin to Roger Moore—a resemblance the producers of the James Bond series took note of as well when they considered him for the 007 role before settling on the suave but enervating Pierce Brosnan. Another Moore role, that of Simon Templar in a big screen version of The Saint, had at one time also been offered to Hugh Grant, but went to Val Kilmer instead.

Hugh Grant made his screen debut in the student film Privileged (1982) filmed at Oxford, where he attended school and was referred to by friends as Hughie Grant, the cute and cuddly name under which he is billed in the unreleased movie. After graduation, he worked in advertising, writing comic radio commercials for which he occasionally supplied the voices as well. He joined the Nottingham Playhouse in 1985 for a season in repertory, but grew dissatisfied with the nondescript roles he was assigned and formed his own comedy troupe shortly thereafter.

Grant left the troupe in 1987 when he won his first role in a major film, the Merchant-Ivory production of E. M. Forster’s once-scandalous novel of homosexual awakening among the student upper crust at Cambridge, Maurice. As the aristocratic Clive Durham who forges his homosexuality for the straight life in order to pursue a career in politics, Grant earned critical raves and a best actor award at the Venice Film Festival (which he shared with actor James Whilby, who played Maurice).

A slew of roles followed in British television and barely released, independently-made movies—the most memorable of which was Ken Russell’s horror spoof The Lair of the White Worm, based on the last published novel of Dracula author Bram Stoker, who was dying of “brain disease” when he wrote the feverish piece. Grant again played a somewhat tongue-tied aristocrat: Lord James D’Ampton, whose ancestor dispatched the legendary D’Ampton Worm, a snake god worshipped by the once-pagan Brits of the shire. History repeats itself when the Worm returns thanks to snake goddess Amanda Donohoe, whose beguiling charms Grant almost succumbs to before dispatching both her and the Worm at the film’s high-camp conclusion.

Grant segued from the Russell scream and laugh fest to the more serious Rowing with the Wind, an Italian-made biopic about the tempestuous relationship between Lord Byron (Grant), Percy and Mary Shelley, and Dr. John Polidori that led to Mary’s writing Frankenstein. Ironically, the same subject was dealt with by director Ken Russell in the 1986 film Gothic with Gabriel Byrne as Byron. Subsequently Grant played in several more biopics and docudramas, including White Mischief, a true tale of murder among the British upper crust in Kenya during World War II; the PBS mini-series The Last Place on Earth about the ill-fated Scott expedition to beat Amundsen to the Pole; and Improvistu, James Lapine’s Ken Russell-like chronicle of the love affair between writer George Sand (Judy Davis) and the consumptive composer Chopin (Grant).

The turning point year for Grant was 1994. Three of his films were released concurrently in the United States: Bitter Moon, Sirens, and Four Weddings and a Funeral. The most potent, but least well received commercially and critically, of the trio was Polanski’s Bitter Moon, which had actually been made in 1992 but did not make its way to U.S. shores until two years later. Grant again played a tongue-tied, sexually repressed Brit, Nigel, whose shipboard encounter with a kinky couple (Peter Coyote and Emmanuelle Seigner) spells trouble for his own marriage. Duigan’s eroticly charged Sirens (with Grant as tongue-tied, sexually repressed cleric) fell in between in terms of popular success, though the critics liked it. But Newell’s Four Weddings and a Funeral (with Grant as cynical, upscale bachelor turned tongue-tied bumbler when he falls for Andie MacDowell) was an unexpected smash hit with everyone. It catapulted Grant to stardom; he had two other small British films virtually in the can to take advantage of his newfound fame—including a follow-up with Newell, An Awfully Big Adventure (Grant as manipulative, gay stage manager) and the lengthy title The Englishman Who Went Up a Hill but Came Down a Mountain (Grant as tongue-tied, befuddled, sexually repressed Brit). The big time beckoned and Grant made his major Hollywood film debut in the Chris Columbus comedy Nine Months, playing a befuddled, soon-to-be-parent, his most Cary Grant-like role (and performance) to date.

Then scandal struck. Grant was pinched in a compromising position with a Sunset Strip hooker by the Los Angeles cops. Many believed the tabloid controversy that ensued would finish him with female fans and destroy Nine Months, then on the eve of release, at the box office. The embarrassed Grant countered by making the rounds of the late night television talk shows in public apology, and succeeded in defusing the situation with his ingratiatingly self-deprecating humor. Nine Months gained from this and was a minor hit, something studio executives no doubt appreciated and will likely remember. Once the “Hugh-and-cry” simmered down, Grant was back on the screen in the kind of small British film that made him, actress Emma Thompson’s adaptation of Jane Austin’s comedy of sexual manners, Sense and Sensibility (Grant as shy, sexually repressed aristocrat).

Notting Hill reunited Grant with the writer (now turned writer-director) of the surprise hit Four Weddings and a Funeral. The film was an obvious attempt to make box office lightning strike twice. It did, although Notting Hill is by no means the charmer the earlier film was. Grant plays a London book store owner who “cute-meets” a Hollywood superstar played by Julia Roberts when she drops into his shop one day while in town shooting a movie. The duo clicks, but because of a host of emotional and other differences (“I’m from Notting Hill, and you’re from Beverly Hills,” he tells her), the film takes 90-plus minutes of boy-meets-girl-boy-loses-girl-boy-gets-girl plot complications for them to finally get together. Grant uses his persona as the befuddled, tongue-tied, can’t-seem-to-commit Lothario to welcome effect in order to make this romantic comedy work—since Roberts’ character is (for much of the film anyway) quite off-putting, even obnoxious. Grant followed it up with another romantic comedy, Mickey Blue Eyes, which uses his screen persona as the foundation for its one-joke premise: A reserved Englishmen falls for the daughter of an American mobster; in order to be accepted by her Family, he must undergo a crash course in how to act like a hood by, among other things, losing his (tongue-tied) British accent.

—John McCarty

GREENSTREET, Sydney

NATIONALITY: American. BORN: Sydney Hughes Greenstreet in Sandwich, Kent, England, 27 December 1879. EDUCATION: Attended Dane Hill Preparatory School, Margate, Kent. FAMILY: Married Dorothy Marie Ogden, 1918, son: John Ogden. CAREER: 1899–1901—worked as tea planter in Ceylon; 1901–02—agency manager, Watneys Coombes and Reed’s Brewery, Harrow, Middlesex; 1902—joined Ben Greet School of Acting: debut in Sherlock Holmes in Ramsgate, Kent; 1904—toured with the Ben Greet company in the United States, and stayed; then acted in Shakespeare for five years; subsequently acted for several groups, including the Harry Davis Stock Company, Pittsburgh, the Henry W. Savage company, the Margaret Anglin company; 1941—film debut in The Maltese Falcon. DIED: 18 January 1954.

Films as Actor:

1941 The Maltese Falcon (Huston) (as Kasper Gutman); They Died with Their Boots On (Walsh) (as General Scott)
1942 Across the Pacific (Huston) (as Dr. H. F. C. Lorenz); Casablanca (Curtiz) (as Ferrari)

1943 Background to Danger (Walsh); Conflict (Bernhardt) (as Dr. Mark Hamilton)
1944 Passage to Marseille (Curtiz) (as Commandant Duval); Between Two Worlds (Blatt) (as Thompson); The Mask of Dimitrios (Negulesco) (as Mr. Peters); The Conspirators (Negulesco) (as Riccardo Quintanilla); Hollywood Canteen (Daves) (as guest)
1945 Pillow to Post (Sherman) (as Col. Otley); Christmas in Connecticut (Indiscretion) (Godfrey)
1946 Three Strangers (Negulesco) (as Jerome K. Arbutney); Devotion (Bernhardt) (as W. M. Thackeray); The Verdict (Siegel)
1947 That Way with Women (de Cordova) (as James P. Alden); The Hucksters (Conway)
1948 Ruthless (Ulmer); The Woman in White (Godfrey) (as Count Fosco); The Velvet Touch (Gage) (as Capt. Danbury)
1949 Flamingo Road (Curtiz) (as Titus Semple); It’s a Great Feeling (Butler) (as guest); Malaya (East of the Rising Sun) (Thorpe)

Publications

On GREENSTREET: book—

On GREENSTREET: article—

* * *

Sydney Greenstreet’s merrily monstrous screen persona sprang belatedly forth in the actor’s 61st year with his first film role as Kasper Gutman in The Maltese Falcon. His decade as a screen villain (1941–49) stood in contrast to a 40-year stage career in England and America which nurtured his outlandish presence in Warner Brothers films.

His 285-pound bulk filled the frame, often in low angle shots (such as those in The Maltese Falcon) that magnified the impression he gave of looming menace. Clever as well as corrupt, charmingly dandified when sybaritic, Greenstreet’s typical villain mocked his victims with throaty laughter that seemed to detach him from the awful deeds he plotted to commit. He took obvious pleasure in playing cat-and-mouse, and satisfaction in his own greedy amorality. Concerned only with financial gain, he remained unflinchingly objective, able to appreciate his adversaries (Sam Spade in The Maltese
Sydney Greenstreet (left) with Humphrey Bogart and Mary Astor in Across the Pacific

_Falcon_ and _Rick_ in _Casablanca_, for example) and to acknowledge it when outfoxed in the end.

Such physical distortion in a film character reassures the viewer of his own comparative inadequacy, and may elicit revulsion or mirth. Greenstreet at his best elicited both responses simultaneously. But his villains never became buffoons, remaining sinister by contrast with the weasels played by Peter Lorre, Greenstreet’s foil in eight Warners films, even as he exploited the comic possibilities of his dialogue with a knowing delivery. “As leader of all illegal activities in _Casablanca_, I am an influential and respected man,” boasts his fly-swatting black marketeer Ferrari. Moments later, moved by the plight of Ilsa Lund and her freedom-fighter husband, Ferrari suggests a possible way for them to escape, and seems as surprised by his grand gesture as they are, since, he almost apologetically declares, “it cannot possibly profit” him.

Greenstreet vainly sought to display on film the acting range he had earlier demonstrated in the theater, where he performed a variety of classic and contemporary roles (including, triumphantly, numerous Shakespearean clowns), toured America with the Lunts for the Theatre Guild, and even played a feature part in Jerome Kern’s Broadway musical _Roberta_. Among his few permitted forays into screen comedy, only _Christmas in Connecticut_ (where he’s cast as a circulation-crazy magazine publisher) reveals the Greenstreet talent for mischief. He played detectives (_The Verdict, The Velvet Touch_), the novelist Thackeray (_Devotion_), a celestial interrogator (_Between Two Worlds_), and General Winfield Scott in a Western (_They Died with Their Boots On_), but Greenstreet’s fame rests on his gallery of desperate schemers which made him one of the great movie villains.

—Mark W. Estrin

---

GREENWOOD, Joan

Nationality: British. Born: Chelsea, London, 4 March 1921. Education: Attended St. Catherine’s School, Bramley, Surrey; Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, London. Family: Married André Morell, 1960

Films as Actress:

1940 John Smith Wakes Up (Weiss—short) (as herself)
1941 My Wife’s Family (Mycroft) (as Irma Bagshott); He Found a Star (Carstairs) (as Babe Cavour)
1943 The Gentle Sex (Howard) (as Betty)
1945 They Knew Mr. Knight (Walker) (as Ruth Blake); Latin Quarter (Sewell) (as Christine Minetti)
1946 A Girl in a Million (Searle) (as Gay)
1947 The Man Within (Knowles) (as Elizabeth); The October Man (Baker) (as Jennie Carden); The White Unicorn (Knowles) (as Lottie Smith)
1948 Saraband for Dead Lovers (Dearden) (as Sophie/Dorothea)
1949 The Bad Lord Byron (Mackendrick) (as Peggy Maccroom); Kind Hearts and Coronets (Hamer) (as Sibella)
1950 Garou-Garou, le passe-muraille (Mr. Peek-a-boo) (Boyer)
1951 Flesh and Blood (Kimmens) (as Wilhelmina Cameron); Young Wives’ Tale (Cass) (as Sabina Pennant); The Man in the White Suit (Mackendrick) (as Daphne Birnley); The Importance of Being Earnest (Asquith) (as Wilhelmina Cameron)
1954 Knave of Hearts (Monsieur Ripois); Lovers, Happy Lovers, Lover Boy (Clément) (as Norah); Father Brown (The Detective) (Hamer) (as Lady Warren)
1955 Moonfleet (Lang)
1958 Stage Struck (Lumet)
1959 Horse on Holiday (English-language version of Danish film Hest på sommerferie) (Henning-Jensen) (as voice)
1962 Mysterious Island (Endfield) (as Lady Mary Fairchild); The Amorous Prawn (Playgirl and the War Minister, The Amorous Mr. Prawn) (Kimmens) (as Lady Fitzadam)
1963 Tom Jones (Richardson) (as Lady Bellaston)
1964 The Moon-Spinners (Neilson) (as Frances Ferris)
1971 Girl Stroke Boy (Kellett)
1977 “London, 1912” ep. of The Uncanny (Héroux); The Hound of the Baskervilles (Morrissey)
1978 The Water Babies (Jeffries)
1983 Country (Eyre)
1984 Ellis Island (London—for TV)
1985 Wagner (Palmer)
1988 Melba (Fisher)

Publications

On GREENWOOD: articles—

‘‘People of Talent: Joan Greenwood,’’ in Sight and Sound (London), Spring 1956.

* * *

And how, Dennis Price inquires of Joan Greenwood on her return from abroad, did she enjoy her honeymoon? ‘‘Not at all.” ’‘Not at all?’’ ‘‘Not—at all.” By means of the briefest possible pause, Greenwood invests the line with an infinite wealth of sexual innuendo.

Being at once sexy and witty was Greenwood’s forte. Petite and graceful, she moved with a delicate feline sensuality; her breathily husky voice, accentuating unexpected vowels, hovered always on the verge of self-parody. She countered questionable situations with an exquisitely inquiring stare, poised somewhere between amusement and mock outrage. When she was given the chance—which happened nowhere near often enough—she brought to her roles a quality of playful eroticism all too rare in British cinema.

Kind Hearts and Coronets (in which the above dialogue occurs) provided one of her finest opportunities. As the hero’s mistress, Sibella, her stylish playing was perfectly attuned to the ironic elegance of Hamer’s wit. She was well used by Mackendrick, too, in Whisky Galore! and The Man in the White Suit—displaying in the latter a delectable subtext of inflexion when attempting, half-reluctantly and half-willingly, to seduce Alec Guinness. Near-mandatory casting for Gwdolend in The Importance of Being Earnest, she almost rivaled Edith Evans for Wildean hauteur, and was equally well chosen as Lady Caroline Lamb in The Bad Lord Byron; unfortunately, the film was abysmal.

Hollywood seemed even less capable than Britain of knowing what to do with an actress of Greenwood’s style and individuality. Perhaps the French might have given her the films she deserved. In Monsieur Ripois her performance as one of Gérard Philipe’s victims revealed unexpected depths of pathos, though her only other French film, Le Passe-Muraille, proved disappointing. After the mid-1950s, perhaps discouraged, she devoted herself largely to the stage, and to married life, only occasionally turning up in small cameo roles to suggest what we had been missing.

—Philip Kemp

GRIFFITH, Melanie

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 9 August 1957; daughter of the actress Tippi Hedren. Education: Attended Hollywood Professional School, California; studied acting with Stella...

Films as Actress:

1973 The Harrad Experiment (Ted Post) (as extra, uncredited)
1975 Night Moves (Arthur Penn) (as Delly Grastner); The Drowning Pool (Stuart Rosenberg) (as Schuyler Devereaux); Smile (Ritchie) (as Karen Love/‘Miss Simi Valley’)
1977 Joyride (Joseph Ruben) (as Susie); One on One (Lamont Johnson) (as hitchhiker)
1978 Daddy, I Don’t Like It Like This (Adell Aldrich—for TV) (as girl in hotel room); Steel Cowboy (Laidman—for TV) (as Johnnie)
1980 Underground Aces (Robert Butler)
1981 Roar (Noel Marshall) (as Melanie); The Star Maker (Antonio—for TV) (as Dawn Bennett); She’s in the Army Now (Averback) (as Sylvie Knoll); Golden Gate (Wendkos—for TV)
1984 Body Double (DePalma) (as Holly); Fear City (Abel Ferarra) (as Loretta)
1985 Cherry 2000 (DeJarnatt) (as E. Johnson)
1986 Something Wild (Jonathan Demme) (as Audrey ‘‘Lulu’’ Hankel)
1988 The Milagro Beanfield War (Redford) (as Flossie Devine); Stormy Monday (Figgis) (as Kate); Working Girl (Mike Nichols) (as Tess McGill)
1990 Pacific Heights (Schlesinger) (as Patty Palmer); The Bonfire of the Vanities (DePalma) (as Maria Ruskin); In the Spirit (Seacat) (as Lureen); Women and Men: Stories of Seduction (Raphael, Richardson, and Russell—for TV) (as Hadley)
1991 Paradise (Donoghue) (as Lily Reed)
1992 Shining Through (Seltzer) (as Linda Voss); A Stranger among Us (Lumet) (as Emily Eden)
1993  Born Yesterday (Mandoki) (as Billie Dawn)
1994  Milk Money (Richard Benjamin) (as V); Nobody’s Fool (Benton) (as Toby Roebuck)
1995  Now and Then (Glatter) (as Tina)
1996  Mulholland Falls (Tahmohri); Lolita (Lyne) (as Mother); Two Much (Trueba) (as Betty Ferner)
1998  Celebrity (Allen) (as Nicole Oliver); Another Day in Paradise (Clark) (as Sid); Shadow of Doubt (Kleiser) (as Kitt Devereux)
1999  Crazy in Alabama (Banderas) (as Lucille); RKO 281 (Ross—for TV) (as Marion Davies)
2000  Ljuset håller mig sällskap (Light Keeps Me Company) (Carl-Gustav Nykvist—doc) (as herself); Cecil B. De Mented (Waters) (as Honey Whitlock); Forever Lulu (John Kaye) (as Lulu McAfee); Tart (Christina Wayne)

Publications

By GRIFFITH: articles—

On GRIFFITH: book—

On GRIFFITH: articles—

Avins, Mimi, “Melanie Griffith’s Adversity with Style,” in New Woman (New York), 1 September 1994.

Stars (Mariembourg), Autumn 1995.

* * *

By the turn into the 21st century, Melanie Griffith had been called the reincarnation of Jean Harlow, Judy Holliday, and Marilyn Monroe, but seems to have been none of these re-incarnations. More than anything else, Melanie Griffith is a late twentieth-century Hollywood original. Mike Nichols, her director on her most successful performance, Working Girl (1988), alone seemed able to harness her considerable talents, and temporarily make her a major movie star. Yet within any of her performances, throughout her 20 year career, Griffith’s face, and eyes, always seem transparent; you can see right into her feelings, yet the audience never knows what her character is thinking. She is able to harness an intense power yet not seem to be acting, but just being “herself”: profane and virginal, street-smart and gossamer, completely spontaneous while totally in control.

Sadly, the Hollywood system seemed unable to utilize her skills. To the public she remained more famous for her frequent appearances in gossip columns, as the daughter of a 1960s star, the child companion of television star Don Johnson at age 14 (he was 22), with a life filled with drugs, automobile accidents, and alcohol. Her latest exploits to be captured by tabloids involved her public marriage to another star, Antonio Banderas.

Melanie Griffith’s career has been built on roles that call upon her to encompass contradictions. Not quite a child actress, she made her feature film debut before she would have been graduated from high school, as the promiscuous neglected daughter of an actress in Arthur Penn’s Night Moves (1975). That same year, she played Miss Simi Valley in Michael Ritchie’s Smile before proceeding to specialize in playing precocious teens who were less innocent than they appeared. But then her personal problems overwhelmed her and she did not return to important roles until Brian DePalma’s Body Double (1984). Impressed by her work, director Jonathan Demme cast Griffith as the adventurous lead of Something Wild (1986). The crest of this period of accomplishment came with Working Girl (1988), which earned her not only stardom, but praise as an actress.

But follow-up proved difficult. Through the early 1990s Melanie Griffith was surely busy, but none too successful in such films as Paradise (1991), and Bonfire of the Vanities (1990). In 1992 Griffith began the unsuccessful process of attempting to expand her screen image. She endured two back-to-back failures with her performances as a legal secretary turned World War II spy in Shining Through, and a tough New York City cop in love with a Hassidic Jewish man in Sidney Lumet’s A Stranger Among Us. Later came re-makes with Lolita, and Shadow of a Doubt. By 1999 she was making movies with her new husband in Crazy in Alabama, and for cable television with RKO 281. Like other actresses and actors of the late twentieth century, she began to be seen more frequently on television than on the theatrical screen. Her television appearances include a score of television movies, both network and HBO, one modestly successful series, and more failed pilots than she surely would like to remember.

Only occasionally during the 1990s did one glimpse Griffith’s considerable talents. For example, the remake of a classic screwball comedy Born Yesterday (1993) should have been her hit, but while her performance as ex-show girl Billie Dawn was highly praised, the public was lukewarm. Born Yesterday was the vehicle that made Judy Holliday a household name in 1950; Griffith redid Billie in her own fashion, sassy but hip, never as dumb as one might think. But in the end, Born Yesterday seemed more a sequel to Working Girl than any faithful recreation of a role Judy Holliday made famous before Melanie Griffith was born. Born Yesterday has at the core the comedic mocking of the ways and woes of Washington, D.C. Perhaps in the cynical final decade of the twentieth century, the remake of Born Yesterday represented too much a tale of optimism, a celebration of the people over corrupt powers of money and influence.

Yet in Born Yesterday, Melanie Griffith did a wonderful send-up of Washington pretension. In a delightful scene Cynthia Schreiber (played by Nora Dunn), ace reporter for National Public Radio, interviews the guileless Billie as a representative of everything that is hick outside the beltway. But the joke turns out to be on Schreiber, for Billie has actually read Democracy in America while the National Public Radio host only knows it is important. Here is a use of her brilliant comedic ability.

In retrospect, audiences can only hope that before Griffith retires she can find another Working Girl. In this classic genre tale, Griffith played a classic rags to riches climber with a feminist twist. Her Tess McGill from the wrong side of New York City, working class, gains access to a top job on Wall Street through smarts and some luck. With all the contradictions of the fabled work of Frank Capra and Jimmy Stewart two generations earlier, Working Girl tapped into the myths of upward mobility in the United States, with a rare power. One can not help liking Tess McGill, even if one can see the cracks and contradictions in the story logic. One sees those breaks only after the film is over and Tess is in her Manhattan high-rise, seeming to start her climb to the top of making money. Working Girl is a formula film, but Melanie Griffith proved a great actress in this great conventional movie.

—Douglas Gomery

GUINNESS, (Sir) Alec

Films as Actor:

1934 Evensong (Saville) (as extra)
1946 Great Expectations (Lean) (as Herbert Pocket)
1948 Oliver Twist (Lean) (as Fagin)
1949 Kind Hearts and Coronets (Hamer) (as eight members of the d’Ascoyne family); A Run for Your Money (Frend) (as Whimple)
1950 Last Holiday (Cass) (as George Bird); The Mudlark (Negulesco) (as Disraeli)
1951 The Lavender Hill Mob (Charles Crichton) (as Henry Holland); The Man in the White Suit (Mackendrick) (as Sidney Stratton)
1952 The Card (The Promoter) (Neame) (as Edward Henry “Denny” Machin)
1953 The Captain’s Paradise (Paradise) (Kimmins) (as Capt. Henry St. James); Malta Story (Hurst) (as Flight Lt. Peter Ross); The Square Mile (Pine—short) (as narrator)
1954 Father Brown (The Detective) (Hamer) (title role); To Paris with Love (Hamer) (as Col. Sir Edgar Fraser); Stratford Adventure (Parker—short) (as guest)
1955 The Prisoner (Glenville) (as the Cardinal); The Ladykillers (Mackendrick) (as Prof. Marcus); Rowlandson’s England (Hawkesworth—short) (as narrator)
1956 The Swan (Charles Vidor) (as Prince Albert)
1957 The Bridge on the River Kwai (Lean) (as Col. Nicholson); Barnacle Bill (All at Sea) (Frend) (as William Horatio Ambrose)
Interview with John Russell Taylor, in American Film (Los Angeles), April 1989.

On GUINNESS: books—
Hunter, Allan, Alec Guinness on Screen, Glasgow, 1982.

On GUINNESS: articles—
Kennedy, Harlan, “Sir Alec,” in Film Comment (New York), July/August 1983.
Stars (Mariembourg), Spring 1995.
“Man of a Thousand Masks,” in Statesman (India), 14 August 2000.

* * *

The consummate chameleon, Alec Guinness successfully portrayed a timid but larcenous bank clerk, a brashly eccentric artist, a tortured Cardinal, the villainous Fagin, a fiery Scottish braggart, and a sad-eyed Arab prince of great cunning. According to Harlan Kennedy: “Almost alone among film actors, Guinness can assume the paraphernalia of makeup and funny voices and eccentric walks without losing a molecule of credibility. He never allows the weight of disguise to panic him into a matching hyperbole of voice and gesture.” Guinness once admitted: “I try to get inside a character and project him—one of my own private rules of thumb is that I have not got a character unless I have mastered exactly how he walks . . . It’s not sufficient to concentrate on his looks. You have got to know his mind—to find out what he thinks, how he feels, his background, his mannerisms.”

Publications

By GUINNESS: book—

My Name Escapes Me; The Diary of a Retiring Actor, New York, 1997.

By GUINNESS: articles—

“The Artist Views the Critics,” in Atlantic (New York), March 1953.
Throughout his long career, Guinness rarely succumbed to excess. This probably had more to do with his naturally withdrawn and reflective character, his passion for anonymity. One cannot imagine Olivier stating, for example, that he became an actor to escape himself, which is precisely the reason Guinness has given. Guinness's artistic goals ("learning to pare down one's performance: learning to cut the flourishes") reflected that personal reserve.

It is to another great British actor, John Gielgud, that Guinness owed his beginnings. Gielgud recommended him as a student to actress-teacher Martita Hunt (with whom Guinness would later co-star in Great Expectations) who, after several lessons, gave Guinness back his money: "I'm afraid you're wasting your time. You'll never be an actor." Luckily, Guinness persevered, winning a two-year scholarship to the Fay Compton Studio of Dramatic Art, where he was awarded (by Gielgud) the school's annual prize at graduation. Later, Gielgud offered him the part of Osric in his production of Hamlet. It was the turning point in Guinness's career. He worked for Gielgud and at the Old Vic until the outbreak of World War II, registering most strongly as a modern-day Hamlet at the Old Vic.

Guinness's film career began after he returned from the war, when he played Herbert Pocket in David Lean's Great Expectations, a role he had played in his own stage version of the Dickens novel. Guinness then pestered Lean into allowing him to play Fagin in Oliver Twist. Despite the elaborate makeup, he made the role completely credible—a full-blooded, pathetic Victorian monster. In the United States, critics deemed the performance anti-Semitic, and the film was heavily cut. It was his fourth film, Kind Hearts and Coronets, that made him a star. Beginning a long association with Ealing Studios, he appeared as eight characters, ranging from a doddering parson to a militant suffragette, whom the ninth in line to a duchy (Dennis Price) has to prune from the family tree. He received an Oscar nomination for The Lavender Hill Mob (as an obsequious bank clerk who succumbs to temptation). His reputation as a serious actor came with The Prisoner, a harrowing drama in which he played a persecuted cardinal behind the iron curtain.

Guinness's next important role was as the arrogant Colonel Nicholson, obsessed with his own code of rules and conventions in The Bridge on the River Kwai, a performance that garnered him several major awards. Ironically, it was a role director David Lean had to persuade him to take on because Guinness had a difficult time getting a grip on the character. Although memorable in The Horse's Mouth (his screenplay for the film was nominated for the Oscar), his next great role was in Tunes of Glory. Eschewing the more familiar role of a rigid martinet outsider (effectively portrayed by John Mills), he opted for the role of Jock Sinclair, an insensitive, hotheaded braggart whose outrageously clannish behavior brings about Mills's suicide and his own character's ultimate downfall.

His next leading role was the first one for which Guinness received unfavorable reviews. As the widowed Japanese diplomat Koichi Asano in A Majority of One, his only possible consolation was that Rosalind Russell, as the Yiddish widow Erma Jacoby, was as badly miscast as he. In the years that followed, Guinness played a number of supporting roles, the most significant of which were Prince Feisal in Lawrence of Arabia, Charles I in Cromwell, Ben Obi-Wan Kenobi in Star Wars, and Professor Godbole in A Passage to India, David Lean's comeback film after almost 16 years of directorial inactivity.

Over the years, Guinness has also turned in some outstanding performances on television—most notably in Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy and Smiley's People, based on the espionage novels of John Le Carré; Little Lord Fauntleroy; and Monsignor Quixote, from the novel by Graham Greene. Guinness returned to the big screen, and to Dickens country, in the epic length Little Dorrit in 1987. He also had a small role in Kafka, released in 1991.

—Catherine Henry, updated by John McCarty
HACKMAN, Gene

Nationality: American. Born: Eugene Alden Hackman in San Bernardino, California, 30 January 1931. Education: Studied journalism, University of Illinois, Urbana, for six months; studied at a New York school for radio; studied acting at the Pasadena Playhouse. Military Service: Served in the U.S. Marine Corps, 1947–50; disc jockey and newscaster for unit’s radio station. Family: Married 1) Fay Maltese, 1956 (divorced 1985), children: Christopher, Elizabeth, Leslie; 2) Betsy Arakawa. Career: Worked briefly for civilian radio and TV stations, 1953; made his off-Broadway debut in Chaparral, 1958; made his television debut, 1959; made his film debut in Mad Dog Coll, 1961; made his Broadway debut in Children from Their Games, 1963; formed a production company, Chelly Ltd., 1970. Awards: National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actor, for Bonnie and Clyde, 1967; Best Actor Academy Award, National Board of Review Best Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Actor, Best Motion Picture Actor–Drama Golden Globe, for The French Connection, 1971; Best Actor British Academy Award, for The French Connection and The Poseidon Adventure, 1972; National Board of Review Best Actor, for The Conversation, 1974; National Board of Review Best Actor, Berlin Film Festival Best Actor, for Mississippi Burning, 1988; Best Supporting Actor Academy Award, Best Actor in a Supporting Role British Academy Award, National Society of Film Critics Best Supporting Actor, Los Angeles Film Critics Association Best Supporting Actor, New York Film Critics Circle Best Supporting Actor, Best Performance by an Actor in a Supporting Role in a Motion Picture Golden Globe, for Unforgiven, 1992. Address: c/o Guttmann, 118 South Beverly Drive, #201, Beverly Hills, CA 90212, U.S.A.

Films as Actor:

1961 Mad Dog Coll (Balaban) (as cop)
1964 Lilith (Rossen) (as Norman)
1966 Hawaii (Hill) (as the Rev. John Whipple)
1967 A Covenant with Death (Johnson) (as Harmsworth); First to Fight (Nyby) (as Sgt. Tweed); Bonnie and Clyde (Arthur Penn) (as Buck Barrow); Banning (Winston) (as Tommy Del Gaddo)
1968 Shadow on the Land (Sarafian—for TV); The Split (Fleming) (as Lt. Walter Brill); Riot (Kulik) (as Red Fletcher)
1969 The Gypsy Moths (Frankenheimer) (as Joe Browdy); Downhill Racer (Ritchie) (as coach); Marooned (John Sturges) (as Buzz Lloyd); I Never Sang for My Father (Cates) (as Gene Garrison)
1970 Doctors’ Wives (Schaefer) (as Dr. Dave Randolph); Confrontation (Hiller—short)
1971 The Hunting Party (Medford); The French Connection (Friedkin) (as Jimmy “Popeye” Doyle)

1972 Prime Cut (Ritchie) (as ‘Mary Ann’); Cisco Pike (Norton) (as Holland); The Poseidon Adventure (Neame) (as the Rev. Frank Scott)
1973 Scarecrow (Schatzberg) (as Max)
1974 The Conversation (Coppola) (as Harry Caul); Zandy’s Bride (Troell) (as Zandy); Young Frankenstein (Mel Brooks) (as guest)
1975 Night Moves (Arthur Penn) (as Harry Moseby); Bite the Bullet (Richard Brooks) (as Sam Clayton); French Connection II (Frankenheimer) (as Jimmy “Popeye” Doyle); Lucky Lady (Donen) (as Kibby)
1976 The Domino Principle (The Domino Killings) (Kramer) (as Roy Tucker)
1977 A Bridge Too Far (Attenborough) (as Maj. Gen. Sosabowski); March or Die (Richards) (as Maj. William Sherman Foster); A Look at Liv (Liv Ullmann’s Norway) (Kaplan) (appearance)
1978 Formula I, febbre della velocità (Speed Fever) (Orefici and Morra) (as interviewee); Superman (Donner) (as Lex Luthor)
1980 Superman II (Lester) (as Lex Luthor); The Making of Superman: The Movie (Johnstone—doc) (appearance)
1981 All Night Long (Tramont) (as George Dupler); Reds (Beatty) (as Pete Van Wherry)
1983 Under Fire (Spottiswoode) (as Alex); Superman III (Lester) (as Lex Luthor); Uncommon Valor (Kotcheff) (as Col. Rhodes)
1984 Misunderstood (Schatzberg) (as Ned); Eureka (Roeg—produced in 1982) (as Jack McCann)
1985 Twice in a Lifetime (Yorkin) (as Harry Mackenzie); Target (Arthur Penn) (as Walter Lloyd)
1986 Hoosiers (Best Shot) (Anspaugh) (as Coach Norman Dale); Power (Lumet) (as Wilfred Buckley)
1987 No Way Out (Donaldson) (as David Brice, Secretary of Defense); Superman IV: The Quest for Peace (Furie) (as Lex Luthor)
1988 Another Woman (Woody Allen) (as Larry); Bat 21 (Markle) (as Lt. Col. Icel Hambleton); Full Moon in Blue Water (Masterson) (as Floyd); Split Decisions (Kid Gloves) (Dry) (as Dan McGuinn); Mississippi Burning (Parker) (as Anderson)
1989 The Package (Davis) (as Johnny Gallagher); Loose Cansons (Clarke) (as Mac)
1990 Narrow Margin (Hyams) (as Robert Caulfield); Postcards from the Edge (Nichols) (as Lowell); Class Action (Apted) (as Jedediah Tucker Ward)
1991 Company Business (Meyer) (as Sam Boyd); Class Action (Apted) (as Jedediah Tucker Ward)
Gene Hackman (left) with Marcel Bozzuffi in The French Connection

1992 Unforgiven (Eastwood) (as Sheriff “Little Bill” Daggett)
1993 Geronimo: An American Legend (Walter Hill) (as Brig.Gen. George Crook); The Firm (Pollack) (as Avery Tolar); Earth and the American Dream (Couturie—doc) (voice only)
1994 Wyatt Earp (Kasdan) (as Nicholas Earp)
1995 Crimson Tide (Scott) (as Captain Frank Ramsey); The Quick and the Dead (Raimi) (as Herod); Get Shorty (Sonnenfeld) (as Harry Zimm)
1996 The Birdcage (Mike Nichols) (as Senator Kevin Keeley); The Chamber (Foley) (as Sam Cayhall); Extreme Measures (Apted) (as Dr. Lawrence Myruick)
1997 Absolute Power (Eastwood) (as President Richmond)
1998 Enemy of the State (Scott) (as Brill); Antz (Darnell, Guterman) (as voice of General Mandible); Twilight (Benton) (as Jack Ames)
1999 Hitchcock, Selznick and the End of Hollywood (Epstein) (as Narrator)
2000 The Replacements (Deutch) (as McGinty); Breakers (Mirkin); Under Suspicion (Hopkins)
2001 Pearl Harbor (Bay)

Publications

By HACKMAN: articles—

Interview with N. Mills, in Stills (London), April 1986.
Interview with John C. Tibbetts, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), January 1993.

By HACKMAN: book—

On HACKMAN: book—

Gene Hackman is one of that rare breed of actor whose star status has been built on talent alone. He may not be the handsomest or sexiest performer in the picture; his romantic roles have been infrequent, and mostly marginal to the plot. But you cannot stop watching him whenever he is on screen, even when the film in which he is appearing is run-of-the-mill. Hackman is an instinctive, intensely physical actor, as much at home playing loud-mouthed bullies and cunningly manipulative bad guys as stalwart or brooding heroes. He is especially adept at expressing himself by modulating his voice and subtly altering his expression, both of which communicate more to the audience than any dialogue. Few actors are more expert at giving ordinary people shadings of psychological complexity, and making larger-than-life characters seem more vulnerable and believable.

The first phase of Hackman’s career commenced in the late 1960s. He had made his screen debut in a bit part as a cop in Mad Dog Coll, when he already had turned 30; six years were to pass before his appearance in Bonnie and Clyde, the first film in which he earned critical and audience attention. His performance as the genial but dimwitted older brother of Clyde Barrow won him an Oscar nomination, and instant stardom. He cemented his fame four years later with a relatively advanced age—he was past 40 when he made The French Connection—that compelled him to be less selective in his choice of roles.

The second phase of Hackman’s career started in the mid-1980s, when he began accepting juicy co-starring and supporting roles as corrupted authority figures. Some have been downright villainous: the scheming Secretary of Defense, who tries to cover up his murder of his mistress and in so doing makes an imposing foil for hero Kevin Costner, in No Way Out; a strikingly similar role in Absolute Power, only here he is a duplicitous U.S. President and his nemesis is Clint Eastwood; and, most memorable of all, the ruthless outlaw-turned-sheriff, who hides his viciousness beneath a folksy demeanor, in Eastwood’s Unforgiven (for which he earned a second Oscar). Other, similar characters have been more complexly twisted and deluded: the high-powered attorney who becomes mentor to hero Tom Cruise, and proves to be anguished and regretful, in The Firm; and the crusty, set-in-his-ways nuclear submarine commander, whose faulty judgment is challenged by hero Denzel Washington, in Crimson Tide. He also is excellent at playing understated drama, working smoothly with Paul Newman and Susan Sarandon as a terminally ill actor who manipulates Newman’s retired private detective in Twilight. But you always can expect a curve ball from Hackman. Once viewers became used to seeing him as foils for the hero, he offered an equally impressive performance in Get Shorty as a schlock movie producer who becomes comically involved with gangsters while attempting to finance his next project. In Get Shorty, actors other than Hackman—John Travolta, Delroy Lindo, Dennis Farina—get to be the tough guy. In The Birdcage, he proved adept at playing farce in his role as a moralistic, ultra-conservative U.S. Senator. And on occasion, he even was a good guy: in Enemy of the State, he is a hermit-like renegade surveillance expert who offers key assistance to hero Will Smith.

Despite his frequent lapses in judgment in selecting his film projects, Hackman has over the course of four decades appeared in an impressive list of exceptional films. In each, he has proved time and again to be a rock-solid actor, and a master of his craft.

—Fiona Valentine, updated by Rob Edelman
HANKS, Tom

Education: Attended California State University, Sacramento. Family: Married 1) Samantha Lewes, 1978 (divorced 1985), two children; 2) the actress Rita Wilson, 1988, sons: Chester, Truman Theodore.

Films as Actor:

1980 He Knows You’re Alone (Mastrioanni) (as Elliot)
1982 Mazes and Monsters (Stern—for TV)
1984 Splash (Ron Howard) (as Allan Bauer); Bachelor Party (Israel) (as Rick Gasko); The Dollmaker (Petrie—for TV)
1985 The Man with One Red Shoe (Dragoti) (as Richard); Volunteers (Meyer) (as Lawrence Bourne III)
1986 The Money Pit (Benjamin) (as Walter Fielding); Nothing in Common (Garry Marshall) (as David Basner); Everyday We Say Goodbye (Mizrahi) (as David)
1987 Dragnet (Mankiewicz) (as Pep Streebek)
1988 Big (Penny Marshall) (as Josh Baskin); Punchline (Seltzer) (as Steven Gold)
1989 The ‘Burbs (Dante) (as Ray Peterson); Turner and Hooch (Spottiswoode) (as Scott Turner)
1990 The Bonfire of the Vanities (De Palma) (as Sherman McCoy); Joe versus the Volcano (Shanley) (as Joe Banks)
1992 Radio Flyer (Donner) (as narrator); A League of Their Own (Penny Marshall) (as Jimmy Dugan)
1993 Sleepless in Seattle (Ephron) (as Sam Baldwin); Philadelphia (Jonathan Demme) (as Andrew Beckett)
1994 Forrest Gump (Zemeckis) (title role)
1995 Apollo 13 (Ron Howard) (as Jim Lovell); Toy Story (Lasseter) (as voice of Woody); The Celluloid Closet (Epstein and Friedman—for TV)
1997 I Am Your Child (doc) (Reiner—for TV)
1998 From the Earth to the Moon (Carson, Field—mini) (as Jean-Luc Despont); Saving Private Ryan (Spielberg) (as Captain John Miller); You’ve Got Mail (Ephron) (as Joe Fox III)
1999 Toy Story 2 (Brannon, Lasseter) (as voice of Woody); The Green Mile (Darabont) (as Paul Edgecomb)

Films as Director:

1989 Tales from the Crypt
1993 A League of Their Own: “The Monkey’s Curse” (for TV); Fallen Angels: “I’ll Be Waiting” (for TV)

1996 That Thing You Do (+ ro, sc)
1998 From the Earth to the Moon, Part 1 (for TV + pr +sc on parts 6,7,11,12)

Publications

By HANKS: articles—

Interview, in Photoplay (London), September 1984.
Interview with Beverly Walker, in Film Comment (New York), March/April 1989.
‘‘An Interview with Geena Davis,’’ in Interview (New York), March 1992.
Interview with Brendan Lemon, in Interview (New York), December 1993.
‘‘Peaking Tom,’’ interview with Brian D. Johnson, in Maclean’s (Toronto), 11 July 1994.
‘‘I Wonder, How Did This Happen To Me?’’ interview with Andrew Duncan, in Radio Times (London), 16 September 1995.
‘‘What on Earth Do I Do Next?’’ interview with Jane E. Dickson, in Radio Times (London), 1 February 1997.

On HANKS: books—

McAvoy, Jim, Tom Hanks, Broomall, 1999.

On HANKS: articles—

Troy, C., “It’s a Cool Gig,” in American Film (Hollywood), April 1990.

* * *
It is a cliché of press-agentry that comedians are always looking for a “stretch,” seeking to redefine themselves as serious actors. Much rarer is the remarkable transformation of Tom Hanks from moderately successful television sitcom co-star to one of America’s most beloved actors, matching only Spencer Tracy in winning two consecutive Oscars for Best Actor. Having firmly established his own comic persona, Hanks went on to roles that seemed to play deliberately against his type, or used it as a subtext, while in certain recent roles, notably his kindly country prison guard in The Green Mile, he seems to have abandoned it altogether. Less a comedian with acting ability than an actor with a wry sensibility that lends itself to comic roles, Hanks managed better than any comic actor of his generation to make a transition to dramatic leads.

Looking back on the 1984 Splash, which gave the young actor his first leading role and immediate stardom, one finds that he does not give an “apprentice” performance, one that affords mere glimpses of his future screen persona, but rather a fullblown Tom Hanks performance. Already in evidence is the distinctive combination of shyness and a cool knowingness. He makes full use of his slightly pudgy boyish face with its crooked, impish smile; in particular he has mastered a great variety of facial reactions to others’ bizarre or obnoxious behavior (a brother’s outrageous schemes, a scientist’s rudeness, a mermaid eating a lobster, shell and all), as if he were engaged in an inner dialogue with himself. In the scene where the mermaid rejects the youth’s marriage proposal, one sees a glimpse too of the petulant sarcastic anger that he will display more prominently in dramatic roles in Nothing in Common and Punchline. He is often funniest when his character is unhappiest, as in the wedding scene, where the guests’ queries about his absent fiancee (who has just rejected him) provoke increasingly exasperated reactions. Splash also establishes a favorite situation for a Tom Hanks comedy: a relatively normal, reasonably sophisticated person reacting with surprisingly little hysteria to the most preposterous situations: here a mermaid, later a collapsing house, spooky neighbors, an insufferable dog, a human sacrifice to a volcano, or the vicissitudes of the Peace Corps. With the special exception of Big, the light comedies do not develop the Hanks persona so much as reprise it; indeed, they offer only a pale reflection of the original when the writing and direction are weak, as in The ‘Burbs.

Hanks’s boyish looks and, sometimes, air of mischief suited him for roles in which an immature youth, not so much callow as heedless or self-centered, must grow up. In Volunteers the involuntary Peace Corps hero must (however perfunctorily) shape up; in Nothing in Common a self-characterized “childish, selfish” advertising executive has not yet become a “bona fide adult” because his estrangement from his parents has left him emotionally arrested; and in Punchline, a would-be comedian is (again) estranged from his father and capable only of an Oedipal crush upon an older woman. Even in Sleepless in Seattle, where the older Hanks is a widower with a small son and none of the impishness, the role calls for him to replay those anxious boyish days of having to learn the “rules” for dating all over again.

The maturity issue is treated most interestingly in Big, which critiques the perennial appeal of the American child-man to American women and to popular film audiences (while capitalizing upon that appeal at the same time). To portray a 13-year-old inside a man’s body Hanks must eliminate the hip side of his persona altogether, but a surprising amount of the Hanks manner remains: the shyness, the wary alertness, the moments of exuberance and playfulness. Perhaps the really new dimension in this role is the occasional moment of naked vulnerability, notably in the moving scene of the man-child’s first night in a sinister hotel.

Released the same year as Big, Punchline features one of Hanks’s most complex dramatic performances. Here, besides successfully handling several virtuoso scenes, such as the on-stage emotional breakdown and the comic-pathetic “Sing’in in the Rain” number, Hanks is able to make something consistent, scene by scene, of an extremely mercurial character, not to mention creating some sympathy for a frequently rude egotist. Of his performance as a gay lawyer with AIDS in the didactic Philadelphia, the cynical could argue that much of his physical decline is accomplished with makeup, and that much of the power of his “Maria Callas” monologue, virtually an aria in itself, comes from the diva’s own voice and the director’s near-expressionistic lighting and high camera angles. But certainly the actor must be credited for conveying the character’s moments of overwhelming terror, determination to achieve justice, sardonic bitterness, and, with a touch of the Hanks boyish smile in the scene on the witness stand, an idealistic love for the law. Of his other pre-Gump dramatic roles, only in The Bonfire of the Vanities, valiantly sporting an upper-crust accent but sabotaged by an ill-conceived script (and incidentally by his own nonpatrician looks), does Hanks fail to create a coherent character, although he at least gets to do a splendid display of outrage in the scene where he drives away the party guests.

As for his incarnation of the “simpleton” Forrest Gump, it must suffice to say that behind the American-Gothic frown and near-monotone delivery, Hanks finds a remarkably subtle range of voice tones and glances to suggest an inner life for a fantasy character—one who is already “old” in suffering but never crushed by sorrow, an Ancient Mariner with a story to tell America but no guilt to expiate. The weight behind each reiteration of “That’s all I have to say about that”; the merest hint of knowing disapproval in references to Richard Nixon; the rare outbursts of glee in reunions with Lieutenant Dan; these and countless other details add shadings to what could have been a stiffly allegorical figure.

It is indicative of Hanks’ post-Gump status as an all-American icon that his decent, solid performance as a decent, solid astronaut in Apollo 13 was widely touted as deserving yet another Oscar, and he did receive a nomination for what might be called a study in heroic decency, in Saving Private Ryan. It is instructive to compare his performance with that of, say, Lee Marvin in Samuel Fuller’s The Big Red One (1980), another WWII story of a man leading a small group of soldiers through combat. Marvin’s grizzled veteran, equally decent but the essence of the tough Sarge, is worlds (but really just a generation) away from Hanks’ and the screenwriters’ dryly ironic but close-to-cracking Captain Miller. Firm enough to be plausibly in command, sensitive enough to break down weeping when the other soldiers can’t see him, capable of outrage when one of his men disobeys orders to “rescue” a little girl, and also of ironic banter with his men, Miller is one of Hanks’ richer roles. It allows him big speeches, as when he tries to justify the number of men he has lost under his command, and subtle moments, as when—in quite different ways, with different inflections—he tells two different Pvt. Ryans (the first the wrong man) that all of his brothers have been lost in action. When the first Ryan realizes that a mistake has been made, and tearfully says, “Well, does that mean that my brothers are OK?” Miller’s reply, “Yeah, I’m sure they’re fine,” is pure Hanks, without breaking character, in its irony verging upon sarcasm and disgust over the whole situation.

Hanks’ only altogether “light” roles in recent films have been the voice of Woody in the Toy Story films. Of course, You’ve Got Mail is a romantic comedy, but rather than replay the character in Sleepless in Seattle, his previous outing with Meg Ryan, he is refreshingly (in the character’s own words) an arrogant, spiteful and condescending “Mr. Nasty,” a megabookstore entrepreneur who relishes the opportunity to drive Ryan’s genteel neighborhood shop out of business. The plot calls for the character’s underlying decency to surface in the anonymous e-mail friendship he shares with Ryan, and for a change of heart after his initial outrage that his electronic penpal is his insufferable business foe; but fortunately Hanks never turns smarmy, and never calls upon his old boyish cuteness, when his character becomes a pursuing lover. (He also never reminds us of James Stewart, another all-American icon, who played the original role in The Shop Around The Corner in 1940.) Indeed, he remains a little snotty even to the end.

While convincingly saintly and low-key American heroes are always in short supply on the screen, one can hope that Hanks doesn’t choose too many such roles. He remains most memorable when he takes a risk in parts with curious mixtures of comedy and drama, like his comedian in Punchline, his Gump, or—a true character role—his drunken baseball coach in A League of Their Own.

—Joseph Milicia

HARA, Setsuko

Films as Actress:

1937 Atarashiki tsuchi (Die Tochter des Samurai; Die Liebe der Mitzu; The New Earth) (Franck and Itami)
1938 Denen Kogyogaku (Pastoral Symphony) (Yamamoto)
1942 Boro no kesshi (Suicide Troops of the Watchtower) (Imai)
1943 Kessen no ozura e (Toward the Decisive Battle in the Sky) (Watanabe); Neppu (Hot Wind) (Yamamoto)
1946  Hikaritokage (Light and Shadow); Waga seishun ni kai nashi (No Regrets for My Youth; No Regrets for Our Youth) (Kurosawa)

1947 Anjoke no butokai (A Ball at the Anjo House; The Ball of the Anjo Family) (Yoshimura); Onna dake no yaro (Ladies of the Night)

1948 Katug nogenkai; Yawaku (Temptation) (Yoshimura)

1949 Banshun (Late Spring) (Ozu) (as Noriko, the daughter); Oojesan kampai (Here’s to the Girls) (Kinoshita); Aoi sannmyaka (Blue Mountains) (Imai)

1951 Hakuchi (The Idiot) (Kurosawa) (as Taeko Nasu); Bakushu (Early Summer) (Ozu) (as Noriko); Meshi (Repast) (Naruse) (as Michiyo Okamoto)

1953 Tokyo monogatari (Tokyo Story) (Ozu) (as Noriko); Hakugy

1954 Yama no oto (Sounds from the Mountains) (Naruse)

1956 Shuu (Shower) (Naruse)

1957 Chieko-sho (The Chieko Story) (Kumagai); Tokyo boshoku (Tokyo Twilight) (Ozu) (as Takumo Numata); Joshua to tomoni (Women in Prison) (Hisamatsu)

1958 Onnade arukoto (Women Unveiled) (Kawashima); Tokyo no kyujitsu (Holiday in Tokyo) (Yamamoto)

1959 Onna-gokorau (Woman’s Heart) (Maruyama); Fujikai no himitsu (A Woman’s Secret) (Yoshimura)

1960 Robo no ishi (The Wayside Pebble) (Hisamatsu) (as Oren Aikawa); Kibo no aozora (Hope of Blue Sky) (Kurata); Musume tsuna haha (Daughters, Wives, and a Mother) (Naruse); Kikibiyori (Late Autumn) (Ozu) (as Akiko Miwa, the mother); Fundoshi isha (The Country Doctor; Life of a Country Doctor) (Inagaki) (as Ikku, his wife)

1961 Bojo no hito (Love and Fascination) (Maruyama); Kohayagawake no aki (The End of Summer; Early Autumn; Last of Summer) (Ozu) (as Akiko)

1962 Chushingura (Loyal 47 Ronin; 47 Samurai) (Inagaki) (as Riku); Musume to watashi (My Daughter and I) (Horikawa) (as Mari’s mother)

Publications

On HARA: books—

Richie, Donald, Five Pictures of Yasujiro Ozu, Tokyo, 1962.

Ozu Yasujiro to Shigoto [Yasujiro Ozu—The Man and His Work], edited by Jun Satomi and others, Tokyo, 1972.

Richie, Donald, Ozu, Berkeley, California, 1974.

On HARA: articles—

Gillett, J., “Setsuko Hara,” in Film Dope (London), September 1981.

* * *

Although her career was prolific and her roles diverse, Setsuko Hara is known in the West primarily as a self-effacing character in six films of Yasujiro Ozu. Her range was far broader than the films made with Ozu would imply; her changes in behavior and appearance just within Kurosawa’s No Regrets for Our Youth, for example, are astonishing. Nevertheless, Ozu captured the essence of her roles; feminine but strong, often traditional in dress but attracted to modern ways; part of a family unit but independent in spirit. For Ozu, Hara effectively embodies the complex position of modern Japan between its rich cultural heritage and its central role in the post-World War II global economy.

In Currents in Japanese Cinema Tadao Sato wrote, “Setsuko Hara had the image of a modern and intelligent woman, qualities that endeared her to Japanese audiences.” (Comparisons to American stars such as Katharine Hepburn and Joan Crawford were common.) Perhaps her most representative role apart from her work with Ozu was as the persecuted widow in No Regrets for Our Youth, where, through her perseverance, she shows herself to be stalwart and indomitable. In many films she played characters who had careers or who were able to retain their own identities—and often to assert themselves—within the male-dominated society.

For Ozu, Setsuko Hara played a considerably more subtle version of the independent woman. In each of the six films she is without a husband, and her relationship with the family is predicated to a degree on their desire for her not to remain single. In Late Spring she is reluctant to marry and leave her widowed father; a decade later in Late Autumn Ozu cast her in the widowed role, as a mother whose daughter is similarly reluctant to leave home. In The End of Summer, Hara, again a widow, remains unmarried despite her family’s concern. Choosing essentially to do what she wishes, she also advises her younger sister to marry for love rather than by arrangement. The independence never alienates her from her relatives. Indeed, Hara’s characters are often the core of loving care within the family structure; in Tokyo Story, for example, Hara plays Noriko, a widowed daughter-in-law (again with no desire to remarry) whose affection for her husband’s parents is greater than that of their own children. Hara’s portrayal of Noriko (her role in three Ozu films, which critic Robin Wood has identified as a loose trilogy built around her) finally stands as one of the great portraits of human generosity and selflessness in world cinema.

Ozu captured Setsuko Hara in certain recurrent images. Most familiar is the enigmatic smile, often as she looks straight into the camera, in response to another character’s solicitousness: in Tokyo Story, after a character asks her “Isn’t life disappointing?,” Hara’s reply, “Yes, it is,” is followed by just that smile, deepening the moment immeasurably. Ozu also contrasted her, particularly as she grew older, in formal, traditional kimono with another character wearing a dress (the younger sister in The End of Summer, the daughter in Late Autumn). That contrast is especially pointed during one scene in The End of Summer as the two sisters kneel by the water while discussing the differences in their lives. Although Ozu’s films are commonly considered restrained, in the special moments when Hara’s characters cry, after otherwise accepting all of life’s misfortunes, the effect of emotional release for the audience can be devastating. For Ozu, Setsuko Hara must have been the perfect actress to play the genuinely loving daughter; it was only fitting that she chose to retire when he died, apparently also retiring her stage name to live in seclusion in Kamakura.

—Jerome Delamater, updated by Corey K. Creekmur

HARLOW, Jean

See LAUREL, Stan and Oliver HARDY

HARLOW, Jean

Films as Actress:

1928 Moran of the Marines (Strayer); Liberty (McCary—short)
1929 Fugitives (Beaudine); Close Harmony (Cromwell and Sutherland); Double Whoopee (Foster—short); The Unkissed Man (Roach—short); Bacon Grabbers (Foster—short); This Thing Called Love (Stein); New York Nights (Milestone); The Saturday Night Kid (Sutherland) (as Hazel)
1930 Hell’s Angels (Hughes) (as Helen); The Love Parade (Lubitsch)
1931 City Lights (Chaplin) (as extra); The Public Enemy (Enemy of the People) (Wellman) (as Gwen Allen); The Iron Man (Browning) (as Rose); The Secret Six (Hill) (as Anne); Goldie (Stoloff) (title role); Platinum Blonde (Capra) (as Anne); Three Wise Girls (Beaudine) (as Cassie Barnes)
1932 The Beast of the City (Brabin) (as Daisy); Red-Headed Woman (Conway) (as Lil Andrews); Red Dust (Fleming) (as Vantine)
1933 Hold Your Man (Wood) (as Ruby Adams); Dinner at Eight (Cukor) (as Kitty); What the Scotch Started (short); Bombshell (Blonde Bombshell) (Fleming) (as Lola Burns)
1934 The Girl from Missouri (100% Pure) (Conway) (as Edie)
1935 Reckless (Fleming) (as Mona Leslie); China Seas (Garnett) (as China Doll); Rififi (Ruben) (as Hattie)
1936 Wife vs. Secretary (Brown) (as Whitey Wilson); Suzy (Fitzmaurice) (title role); Libeled Lady (Conway) (as Gladys Benton)
1937 Personal Property (Van Dyke)

Publications

On HARLOW: books—

On HARLOW: articles—

Hackett, Pat, “Jean Harlow, the Woman Who Made the World Believe Blonds Have More Fun,” in Interview, September 1993.
Reed, George, “Fan Mail,” in Movie Advertising Collector, August 1996.
Stars (Mariembourg), no. 29, 1997.

On HARLOW: film—

* * *

Jean Harlow remains one of the more tragic instances of a talented star whose career was cut short by intense personal problems and ill health. Like Marilyn Monroe (in many respects both her psychological and artistic successor), Harlow died prematurely, in her case from kidney failure at the age of 26, after three failed marriages and a bittersweet affair with co-star William Powell. The scandalous rumors surrounding both Harlow’s death (could her Christian Scientist mother have intervened sooner to save her life?) and her second husband Paul Bern’s suicide (did he kill himself to be free of his unhinged common-law wife Dorothy Milette?) resurface periodically in well-researched books such as Platinum Girl (1991). Although these regurgitated tragedies keep Harlow’s name alive, they do little to shed light on her contradictory screen image of joyous sexuality.
Jean Harlow (left) with Anita Loos

Her entrance into films was an uncertain one, as an extra in such movies as Love Parade and Chaplin’s City Lights, and in supporting roles in shorts appearing, for example, with Laurel and Hardy in Double Whoopee. After she secured a part in the 1929 feature film, The Saturday Night Kid, the maverick producer-director Howard Hughes put a nineteen-year-old Harlow under contract when he was converting his silent World War I aviation movie, Hell’s Angels, into sound. Hughes, in effect, exploited her and her initial, more notorious image of the sluttish peroxided siren in loan-outs such as Public Enemy.

The next stage in Harlow’s career came in 1932 when, parallel with her brief marriage to Paul Bern, MGM took over her contract, and permitted her to extend her image in the direction of satirical comedy. Harlow at last revealed herself to be a good actress with a subtle sense of humor, giving her public at once the glamorous image to which they were accustomed while developing a burlesque “send-up” of platinum blondes and their ways.

In Jack Conway’s Red-Headed Woman, Harlow put her own irrepressible spin on the good-time girl image popularized by Clara Bow, the ‘It’ Girl of the 1920s. This film, as well as Victor Fleming’s Red Dust, with Harlow seductive and funny opposite Gable, and his saucy screwball farce Blonde Bombshell were made before the censorship code of the Hays office came into force. In the highly entertaining all-star comedy Dinner at Eight, Harlow outshone the veteran players.

In congenial vehicles (Libeled Lady, Girl from Missouri), lovable Harlow registers as a tomboy sidetracked by her own curves. Despite the persona of a boudoir goddess, Harlow seemed ill at ease as a maraboued mantrap in her early talkies. Allowed to reveal a bubbly sense of humor about her own voluptuousness, she hit her stride as a star. And even then, it is not oomph that lands her a dreamboat such as Clark Gable (China Seas) or Robert Taylor (Personal Property) or Spencer Tracy (Riff-Raff), but tenacity. Surprisingly touching in dramatic fare (ripping off Libby Holman’s life in Reckless and playing seriocomic con games in Hold Your Man), Harlow displays a defensive vulnerability that illuminates all her memorable performances. The platinum hair, penciled eyebrows, and slinky wardrobe are just female drag Harlow donned as bait; what her co-stars and adoring fans discover is that she is sexiest when she reveals the soft allure under the Max Factor war paint. What gives the Harlow oeuvre a contemporary kick is her self-awareness, the sense that playing this role of shimmering vamp is a hoot for her and that she is forever trick-or-treating us in the costume of a seductress. Harlow was proud of her evident sex appeal, boasting that she never wore a bra even under her most revealing costumes. Her virtue as an actress lay in her innate sense of comedy, seeing through the artificial glamour by means of which she had originally gained her stardom, while at the same time fully appreciating its value.

—Roger Manvell, updated by Robert Pardi

HARRIS, Ed

Films as Actor:

1977 The Amazing Howard Hughes (William A. Graham—for TV) (as Russ)
1978 Coma (Michael Crichton) (bit role)
1979 The Seekers (Hayes—for TV) (as Lt. William Clark)
1980 Borderline (Freedman) (as Hotchkiss); The Aliens Are Coming (Harvey Hart—for TV) (as Chuck Polchek)
1981 Knightriders (George Romero) (as Billy); Dream On (Harker)
1982 Creepshow (George Romero) (as Hank)
1983 The Right Stuff (Philip Kaufman) (as John Glenn); Under Fire (Spottiswoode) (as Oates)
1984 Places in the Heart (Benton) (as Wayne Lomax); A Flash of Green (Nuñez) (as Jimmy Wing); Swing Shift (Jonathan Demme) (as Jack Walsh)
1985 Alamo Bay (Malle) (as Shang); Code Name: Emerald (Sanger) (as Gus Lang); Sweet Dreams (Reisz) (as Charlie Dick)
1987 Walker (Alex Cox) (title role); The Last Innocent Man (Spottiswoode—for TV) (as Harry Nash)
1989 To Kill a Priest (Agnieszka Holland) (as Stefan); Jacknife (David Jones) (as Dave); The Abyss (James Cameron) (as Bud Brigman)
1990 State of Grace (Joanou) (as Frankie Flannery)
1991 Paris Trout (Gyllenhaal—for TV) (as Harry Seagraves)
1992 Glengarry Glen Ross (Foley) (as Dave Moss); Running Mates (Dirty Tricks) (Lindsay-Hogg—for TV) (as Hugh Hathaway)
1993 Needful Things (Fraser C. Heston) (as Sheriff Alan Pangborn); The Firm (Sydney Pollack) (as Wayne Tarrance)
1994 China Moon (John Bailey) (as Kyle Bodine); Milk Money (Richard Benjamin) (as Tom Wheeler)
1995 Apollo 13 (Ron Howard) (as Gene Kranz); Just Cause (Glenn) (as Blair Sullivan); Nixon (Oliver Stone) (as E. Howard Hunt)
1996 Eye for an Eye (Scheinsiger) (as Mack McCann); The Rock (Bay) (General Francis X Hummel); Riders of the Purple Sage (Haid—for TV) (as Jim Lassiter + pr)
1997 Absolute Power (Eastwood) (as Seth Frank); Big Guns Talk (The Story of the Western) (Morris—for TV) (as Interviewee)
1998 Stepmom (Columbus) (Luke Harrison); The Truman Show (Weir) (as Christof)
1999 The Third Miracle (Holland) (as Frank Shore)
2000 Waking the Dead (Gordon) (as Jerry Carmichael); Enemy at the Gates (Annaud) (as Major Konig)

Films as Director

2000 Pollock (+ title role)

Publications

By HARRIS: articles—

On HARRIS: articles—

* * *

As the twentieth century ended, Ed Harris’s more than two decade acting career could best be seen as falling into three distinctive parts. First, he started on stage, beginning in 1975. After studying acting at the California Institute of the Arts, for a half dozen years his life became an almost nonstop whirl of theater activity in California (both Los Angeles and San Francisco), culminating in an acclaimed performance in Sam Shepard’s Fool for Love. This staging was subsequently transferred to New York’s Circle Repertory Company, signaling Harris’s off-Broadway debut. In this intense period his stage appearances also include roles in A Streetcar Named Desire, Sweet Bird of Youth, Julius Caesar, Hamlet, Camelot, The Time of Your Life, and The Grapes of Wrath. But then—to begin his second career unit—Hollywood called and Harris answered. His casting as astronaut John Glenn in The Right Stuff (1983) changed his whole life. With this blockbuster, Harris became a movie star. In a mid-1980s poll, Harris was named, with Jack Nicholson, as one of the sexiest balding men in America. Certainly this was just another silly testing of public opinion, but it was praise bequeathed only on true movie stars, and by 1985 Harris was—temporarily, it turned out—ranked among them. On the screen, his powerful magnetism made him a lock for top roles in seemingly hot movies such as Places in the Heart (1984), Swing Shift (1984), and Sweet Dreams (1985). Yet lost in the fine film work of this middle period—with which Harris remains proudest of in rare interviews—is the virtually unseen A Flash of Green, a PBS American Playhouse project which had a limited theatrical release.

Then, stardom ended, almost as quickly as it had come. Harris’s third period had him settle in as a Hollywood reliable. During the late 1980s, one after another of Harris’s films bombed, or, if they made money, as with The Abyss, the take came in well below expectations. It was not that Harris could not select moneymaking filmmakers with whom to work. His agent, CAA, tops in Hollywood at the time, helped him find roles in Glengarry Glen Ross (1992), The Firm (1993), Apollo 13 (1995), Nixon (1995), The Rock (1996), and The Truman Show (1998). All did well with either the public, the critics, or both. Yet Harris was never a star again, only a reliable character actor.

By nature a quietly intense man, Ed Harris worked best as a Hollywood journeyman, playing the role of a baffled Middle American working stiff trying to liberate himself from the chains of stoic masculinity. But by 1990, Ed Harris began to rethink his career, setting aside a desire to become famous or make a lot of money, and seeking to do projects he cared about. Indeed at times through the 1990s Harris placed his film career on hold and returned to the theater. In 1992 he starred in Murray Mednick’s play Scar, marking Harris’s return to Los Angeles stages where he started. He also appeared regularly in television movies.

Dedicated to his craft, be it on stage or in front of the camera, he is nonetheless often wasted. For example in Milk Money, he did a fine job in a small role as a pro-environmentalist, bashful widower. His work is tops, but minor in the blockbuster The Firm, in which Tom Cruise and Gene Hackman star while Harris did his usual first-rate job as an FBI investigator. His range as a supporting performer has rarely been surpassed and so Ed Harris seems forever stuck in this rut as a character actor.

Historians will look back to the middle 1980s when Harris was a star. In central roles in Hollywood narratives, he could shine and occasionally glow. As abusive husband Charlie Dick in Sweet Dreams, the story of the life of country music legend Patsy Cline, Ed Harris is chilling, loving, and dangerous all at the same time. Only time and perspective will allow us to appreciate such contributions to Hollywood’s history.

—Douglas Gomery

HARRIS, Richard

Films as Actor:

1958 Alive and Kicking (Frankel) (as lover)
1959 Shake Hands with the Devil (Michael Anderson) (as Terence O’Brien); The Wreck of the Mary Deare (Michael Anderson) (as Higgins)
1960 A Terrible Beauty (Night Fighters) (Garnett) (as Sean Reilly
1961 The Long and the Short and the Tall (Jungle Fighters) (Norman) (as Cpl. Johnstone); The Guns of Navarone (Thompson) (as Barsby); Mutiny on the Bounty (Milestone) (as John Mills)
1963 This Sporting Life (Lindsay Anderson) (as Frank Machin); Major Dundee (Peckinpah) (as Capt. Benjamin Tyreen
1964 Il deserto rosso (The Red Desert) (Antonioni) (as Corrado Zeller)
1965 I tre volti (Antonioni and Bolognini); The Heroes of Telemark (Anthony Mann) (as Knut Straud)
1966 Hawaii (George Roy Hill) (as Rafer Hoxworth); The Bible . . . in the Beginning (The Bible) (Huston) (as Cain)
1967 Caprice (Tashlin) (as Christopher White); Camelot (Logan) (as King Arthur)
Richard Harris with Vanessa Redgrave in Camelot

- 1968 The Molly Maguires (Ritt) (as James McParlan/McKenna)
- 1970 A Man Called Horse (Silverstein) (title role); Cromwell (Hughes) (title role)
- 1971 Man in the Wilderness (Sarafian) (as Zachary Bass); The Snow Goose (for TV)
- 1973 The Deadly Trackers (Shear) (as Kilpatrick)
- 1974 99 and 44/100 Per Cent Dead (Call Harry Crown) (Frankenheimer) (as Harry Crown); Juggernaut (Lester) (as Fallon)
- 1976 Echoes of a Summer (Taylor) (as Eugene Striden, + exec pr, mus); Robin and Marian (Lester) (as King Richard)
- 1977 Gulliver's Travels (Hunt) (title role); The Cassandra Crossing (Cosmatos) (as Chamberlain); Orca (Michael Anderson) (as Capt. Nolan); Golden Rendezvous (Lazarus) (as John Carter)
- 1979 The Wild Geese (McLaglen) (as Rafer Janders); The Ravagers (Compton) (as Falk); The Last Word (Boulting) (as Danny Travis)
- 1980 A Game for Vultures (Fargo) (as David Swansey)
- 1981 Your Ticket Is No Longer Valid (Kaczender); Tarzan, the Ape Man (Derek) (as Parker)
- 1982 Triumphs of a Man Called Horse (Hough) (title role)
- 1984 Highpoint (Carter) (as Louis Kinney)
- 1985 Martin's Day (Gibson) (as Martin Steckert)
- 1988 Matigret (Paul Lynch—for TV)
- 1989 Mack the Knife (The Threepenny Opera) (Golan) (as Mr. Peachum); King of the Wind (Duffell) (as King George II)
- 1990 The Field (Sheridan) (as “Bull” McCabe)
- 1992 Unforgiven (Eastwood) (as English Bob); Patriot Games (Noyce) (as Paddy O’Neil); Silent Tongue (Shepard) (as Prescott Roe)
- 1993 Wrestling Ernest Hemingway (Haines) (as Frank)
- 1994 Abraham (Sargent—for TV) (title role); This Is the Sea (McGuckian)
- 1995 Cry, the Beloved Country (Roodt) (as James Jarvis); Savage Hearts (Ezra) (as Sir Roger Foxley); The Great Kankinsky (Winsor—for TV) (title role)
- 1996 Trojan Eddie (MacKinnon) (as John Power)
- 1997 Smilla’s Sense of Snow (August) (as Tork Hviid); The Hunchback (Medak—for TV) (as Dom Frollo)
- 1998 Sibirskij tsiryulnik (The Barber of Siberia) (Mikhalkov) (as Douglas McCracken); This is the Sea (McGuckian) (as Old
Richard Harris’s career is linked to a pair of his contemporaries: Peter O’Toole (who, like Harris, is an Irishman), and South Wales-born Richard Burton. All three were outstanding actors who burst onto the international film scene in a flash and were heralded for their ability to command movie screens. And similarly, all three dissipated themselves by carousing and dallying with spirits, in the process dulling their talents and losing their looks. But of the three, Harris’s career has never quite equalled that of Burton or O’Toole.

After acting on stage during the 1950s as a member of Joan Littlewood’s Theatre Workshop Company, Harris appeared in supporting roles in various, mostly British-made features. More often than not he is the macho Irishman, representing the lower ranks against effete officers and higher-billed movie stars in the likes of Shake Hands with the Devil and A Terrible Beauty (in which he serves in the Irish Republican Army), The Guns of Navarone and The Long and the Short and the Tall (in which he grunts through World War II), and The Wreck of the Mary Deare and Mutiny on the Bounty (in which he is a mutinous scoundrel). His key early career performance came in a starring role, as one of the classic angry young men of early 1960s British cinema. In Lindsay Anderson’s This Sporting Life, Harris offers a soul-rattling performance as a rugged, discontented Yorkshire coal miner who becomes a fiercely brutal professional rugby player. The actor perfectly conveys his character’s masochistic tendencies as he takes his physical and emotional knocks on and off the playing field.

As the years passed, however, Harris became known more for his headline-grabbing bouts of public drunkenness than for his work on screen. He had become established as a name actor, and he traded in on his fame to earn paychecks by appearing in a variety of international productions. Several were action and historical dramas, including The Heroes of Telemark, The Bible, and Cromwell; his performances became ever more hammy, as evidenced by his work in major Dundee and The Molly McGuires. On rare occasion, he fully succeeded in a role: he had his best part since This Sporting Life in the violent back-to-nature cult hit A Man Called Horse, playing a nineteenth-century English aristocrat who is seized by the Sioux and suffers through torture to demonstrate his worth. But this success did not propel him upward. Rather, he repeated himself in two shabby sequels, The Return of a Man Called Horse and Triumphs of a Man Called Horse, and covered similar terrain in Man in the Wilderness and The Deadly Trackers. Unlike Little Big Man and Dances with Wolves, there is no attempt at liberal political correctness in any of these films; their chief ingredient is suffering, for the sake of suffering.

Harris did enjoy several offscreen successes. His song “MacArthur’s Park” was a freak hit, and he played King Arthur on stage in the musical Camelot (earlier, he had appeared in the role in the ill-conceived screen version). But Harris mostly bounced around the movies. He co-wrote the screenplay of a dull thriller with a colorful title, The Lady in the Car with Glasses and a Gun. He executive produced and wrote a song for Echoes of a Summer, in which Jodie Foster has a fatal illness. He even turned to direction with Bloomingfield, a drama about a battered soccer player which harkens desperately back to This Sporting Life. He appeared in a pair of wry potboilers, 99 and 44/100 Per Cent Dead and Juggernaut (in which he is reduced to self-parody). Ultimately, he was content to accept any old role in any old action picture he was offered, wearily plodding without commitment through the hijacks, escapes, shootouts, and travelogue locations in The Cassandra Crossing, Golden Rendezvous, The Wild Geese, and Highpoint. Perhaps his low points were appearances in

HARRIS

***

Man Jacobs); To Walk with Lions (Schultz) (as George Adamson)

1999 To Walk With Lions (Schultz) (as George Adamson);
Grizzly Falls (Raffill) (as Old Harry)

2000 Gladiator (Scott) (as Marcus Aurelius)

Film as Director:

1969 Bloomfield (+ ro as Eitan)

Film as Producer:

1976 The Return of a Man Called Horse (Kershner) (title role + pr)
1997 That Darn Cat

Other Film:

1970 La Dame dans l’auto avec des lunettes et un fusil (The Lady in the Car with Glasses and a Gun) (Litvak) (co-sc)

Publications

By HARRIS: book—

Honor Bound (novel), 1982.

By HARRIS: articles—

Interview, in Films and Filming (London), April 1965.
Interview with T. Perlmutter, in Cinema Canada (Montreal), February 1986.
Interview with Lynn Barber, in the Independent on Sunday (London), 1 July 1990.
Interview with John C. Tibbetts, in Literature/Film Quarterly (Salisbury), January 1993.
Interview with Evgenij Cymbal, in Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), February 1998.

On HARRIS: books—

On HARRIS: articles—

Iskusstvo Kino (Moscow), September 1993.

* * *
a couple of standing-joke movies with Bo Derek, Orca (in which he snaps at Charlotte Rampling, “I resent it when a pretty and intelligent woman tells me I’m dumber than a fish”) and Tarzan, the Ape Man (playing Jane’s put-upon explorer father). Had his stature been greater, he might have been cast opposite Audrey Hepburn in Robin and Marian; instead, Sean Connery got the role, with Harris reduced to a cameo as Richard the Lion-Hearted. In the early 1980s, with his career languishing, he semiretired to Paradise Island in the Bahamas, where he rid himself of his drinking and embraced a more simple lifestyle.

In the 1990s, well into middle age, Harris enjoyed a celluloid renaissance. This was sparked by his Academy Award-nominated performance in The Field, in which he has his best role in years: ‘‘Bull’’ McCabe, a charismatic Irish tenant farmer who has spent his life toiling his land. Conflict arises when the acreage is made available for auction, and it appears that the highest bidder will be a rich American planning to pave it and make it into an access road. Harris gives a resounding, commanding performance as the self-respecting farmer, a relic of a more uncomplicated era, who perceives that divinity and nature are one in the same.

He later made a brief but colorful appearance in Unforgiven as the insolent railroad gunman English Bob. Most recently, he has been paired in star turns with equally powerful actors whose characters outwardly have virtually nothing in common but who come to bond in the course of the story. In Wrestling Ernest Hemingway, he is an Irish ex-sea captain—a character he was born to play—whose need for camaraderie links him with Robert Duvall’s Cuban barber. Cry, the Beloved Country, a remake of the 1951 film of Alan Paton’s esteemed novel of South Africa, is the story of two fathers, one black and the other white, who know each other only by sight but become united in tragedy. Harris is quietly effective as a conservative South African reformer son, whose killer so happens to be the son of an elderly Zulu priest (James Earl Jones). Despite these recent successes, Harris’s career will forever be characterized not by what was, but by what might have been.

—Kim Newman, updated by Rob Edelman

HARRISON, (Sir) Rex

Nationality: British. Born: Reginald Carey Harrison in Huyton, Lancashire, 5 March 1908. Education: Attended Birkdale Preparatory School; Liverpool College. Military Service: Royal Air Force, 1942–45: flight lieutenant. Family: Married 1) Marjorie Noel Collette Thomas, 1934 (divorced 1942), son: the actor Noel; 2) the actress Lilli Palmer, 1942 (divorced 1957), son: Carey; 3) the actress Kay Kendall, 1957 (died 1959); 4) the actress Rachel Roberts, 1962 (divorced 1971); 5) Elizabeth Harris, 1971 (divorced); 6) Mercia Mildred Palmer, 1942 (divorced 1957), son: Carey; 3) the actress Kay Kendall, 1938 (died 1959); 4) the actress Rachel Roberts, 1962 (divorced 1971); 5) Elizabeth Harris, 1971 (divorced); 6) Mercia Mildred Tinker, 1978. Career: 1924–27—member of Liverpool Playhouse; 1927—toured in Charley’s Aunt; 1931—West End debut in Getting George Married; 1931–35—alternated touring with London stage appearances; 1936—Broadway debut in Sweet Aloe; contract with Alexander Korda, began making films for Denham Studios; 1945—seven-year contract with 20th Century-Fox; 1950s—worked principally in theater; 1956–58—in My Fair Lady on Broadway; continued stage work through 1980s. Awards: Best Actor Academy Award and Best Actor, New York Film Critics, for My Fair Lady, 1964; Order of Merit (Italy), for The Agony and the Ecstasy, 1965; knighted, June 1989. Died: Of pancreatic cancer, in New York City, 2 June 1990.

Films as Actor:

- 1930 The School for Scandal (Elvey) (bit role); The Great Game (Raymond) (as George)
- 1934 Get Your Man (George King) (as Tom Jakes); Leave It to Blanche (Harold Young) (as Ronnie)
- 1935 All at Sea (Kimmins) (as Aubrey Bellingham)
- 1936 Men Are Not Gods (Reisch) (as Tommy Stapleton)
- 1937 Storm in a Teacup (Saville and Dalrymple) (as Frank Burdon); School for Husbands (Marton) (as Leonard Drummond); Over the Moon (Freeland and William K. Howard) (as Dr. Freddie Jarvis)
- 1938 St. Martin’s Lane (Sidewalks of London) (Whelan) (as Harley Prentiss); The Citadel (King Vidor) (as Dr. Lawford)
- 1939 The Silent Battle (Continental Express) (Herbert Mason) (as Jacques Sauvin); Ten Days in Paris (Missing Ten Days; Spy in the Pantry) (Whelan) (as Bob Stevens)
- 1940 Night Train to Munich (Night Train) (Reed) (as Gus Bennett)
- 1941 Major Barbara (Pascal) (as Adolphus Cusins)
- 1945 Journey Together (John Boulting) (bit role); I Live in Grosvenor Square (A Yank in London) (Wilcox) (as Major David Bruce); Blithe Spirit (Lean) (as Charles Condomine); The Rake’s Progress (Notorious Gentleman) (Gilliat) (as Vivian Kenway)
1946
Anna and the King of Siam (Cromwell) (as King Mongkut)

1947
The Ghost and Mrs. Muir (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as the Ghost of Capt. Daniel Gregg); The Foxes of Harrow (Stahl) (as Steven Fox)

1948
Escape (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Matt Denant); Unfaithfully Yours (Preston Sturges) (as Sir Alfred de Carter)

1951
The Long Dark Hall (Bushell and Beck) (as Arthur Groome)

1952
The Four Poster (Reis) (as John)

1953
The Charm of Life (Grémillon and Kast—short, English-language version of Les Charmes de l’existence) (as narrator); Main Street to Broadway (Garnett) (as guest)

1954
King Richard and the Crusaders (David Butler) (as Emir Ilderim/Saladin); The Constant Husband (Gillian) (as Charles Hathaway)

1956
This Is London (Jago—short) (as narrator)

1957
The Reluctant Debutante (Minnelli) (as Jimmy Broadbent)

1959
Midnight Lace (David Miller) (as Tony Preston)

1962
The Happy Thieves (George Marshall) (as Jimmy Bourne)

1963
Cleopatra (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Julius Caesar)

1964
My Fair Lady (Cukor) (as Professor Henry Higgins); “England” ep. of The Yellow Rolls-Royce (Asquith) (as Marquess of Frinton)

1965
The Agony and the Ecstasy (Reed) (as Pope Julius II); Flashes Festivals (Gérard—short)

1967
The Honey Pot (It Comes Up Murder) (Joseph L. Mankiewicz) (as Cecil Fox); Dr. Doolittle (Fleischer) (as Duke of Norfolk)

1968
A Flea in Her Ear (Charon) (as Victor Chandelier/Poche)
Staircase (Donen) (as Charlie Dyer)

1973
The Adventures of Don Quixote (Rakoff—for TV) (title role)

1975
The Gentleman Tramp (Patterson)

1977
Behind the Iron Mask (The Fifth Musketeer) (Annakin) (as Colbert)

1978
Shalimar (Deadly Thief) (Shah); Crossed Swords (The Prince and the Pauper) (Fleischer) (as Duke of Norfolk)

1993
The Kingfisher (James Cillian Jones—for TV); A Time to Die (Seven Graves for Rogan) (Cimber) (as Von Osten)

1998
Anastasia: The Mystery of Anna (Chomsky—for TV) (as Grand Duke Cyril Romanov); Heartbreak House (Page—for TV)

Publications

By HARRISON: books—

By HARRISON: article—

On HARRISON: books—

On HARRISON: articles—

Ferguson, K., obituary in Film Monthly (Berkhamsted, England), August 1990.

* * *

Although Rex Harrison was such a commanding presence on screen, and seemed to have been a star for an incalculable number of years, in reality he did not make his mark until the 1940s. Given co-starring or featured roles in British films of the 1930s, Harrison always appeared to be overshadowed or out-acted by his colleagues, particularly Vivien Leigh in Storm in a Teacup and St. Martin’s Lane, two films that should have helped the actor’s career. As the King in Anna and the King of Siam, and as the jealous symphony conductor in Unfaithfully Yours, Harrison at last gained a substantial audience, but gossip concerning the suicide of Carole Landis, with whom he had had an affair, effectively ended his first Hollywood career.

This tragedy, rather than hurting Harrison, helped in the long run, for it allowed him to refine his acting on stage, and to recreate the image of the suave, urbane Englishman suggested by some of the actor’s early films, such as Blithe Spirit and The Rake’s Progress, but never fully developed. Harrison’s portrayal of Professor Henry Higgins in My Fair Lady, of course, epitomized the new characterization, and it was further developed in The Yellow Rolls-Royce. Nevertheless, one should not categorize Harrison. Cleopatra gave him, out of everyone in the cast, an opportunity to dominate the scene as Caesar, and to rise above the banal script and production (and his first Oscar nomination). Yet again, in The Agony and the Ecstasy, as Pope Julius II, he was able to overcome the poor script, while Staircase presented him with a rare opportunity for “camp” comedy.

Following Staircase until his death in 1990, Harrison appearing only infrequently in films and only in supporting roles, including two swashbuckling failures, Behind the Iron Mask and Crossed Swords. He found more success on the stage in this period, however, including another go at Caesar in George Bernard Shaw’s Caesar and Cleopatra, touring revivals of My Fair Lady, and up to a month before his death a lead role on Broadway in W. Somerset Maugham’s The Circle. Over a 65-year career, Harrison had established himself as a top-notch performer of sophisticated roles on stage and on screen, and had secured a permanent place in the film pantheon as Professor Henry Higgins.

—Anthony Slide, updated by David E. Salamie
HARVEY, Laurence

Films as Actor:

1948 Man on the Run (Huntington) (as Detective Sergeant Lawson); House of Darkness (Mitchell) (as Francis Merryman); The Dancing Years (uncredited) (bit part)
1949 The Man From Yesterday (Mitchell) (as John Matthews); Landfall (Annakin) (as P/O Hooper)
1950 Othello (Sheldon—for TV) (as Cassio); Cairo Road (MacDonald) (as Lieutenant Mourad); The Black Rose (Hathaway) (as Edmund)
1951 There Is Another Sun (Gilbert) (as Mag Maguire); The Scarlet Thread (Gilbert) (as Freddie)
1952 A Killer Walks (Drake) (as Ned); Innocents in Paris (Parry) (as Francois); I Believe in You (Dearden) (as Jordie)
1953 Women of Twilight (Parry) (as Jerry Nolan); Knights of the Round Table (Thorpe) (bit part); As You Like It (Ebert—for TV) (as Orlando)
1954 The Good Die Young (Gilbert) (as Miles Ravenscourt); King Richard and the Crusaders (Butler) (as Sir Kenneth); Romeo and Juliet (Castellani) (as Romeo)
1955 I Am a Camera (Cornelius) (as Christopher Isherwood); Storm Over the Nile (Young) (as John Durrance)
1956 Three Men in a Boat (Annakin) (as George)
